Whatsoever is not of faith, is sinne.

LONDON,
¶ Printed by IOHN LEGATT., 1631.

TO THE RIGHT HONOVRABLE, EDWARD Lord DENNIE Baron of Waltham, &c.

RIght Honourable: There is no one Doctrine revealed in the Word of God, or dispensed by the Prophets and Apostles, of greater use and consequence in the life of man, than is that which prescribeth a forme of releeving and rectifying the Conscience.

The benefit which from hence issueth unto the Church of God, is unspeakable. For first, it serveth to discover the cure of the dangerousest sore that can be, the wound of the Spirit. Which how great a crosse it is, the Wise man reporteth out of a true experience, when he saith, that the Spirit of a man will sustaine his infirmitie, but a wounded Spirit who can beare it? Prov. 18. 14.

And his meaning is, that no outward griefe can fall into the nature of man, which will not be with patience endured to the utmost, so long as the minde is not troubled or dismayed. But when once the Spirit is touched, and the heart (which being well apayed, is the very fountaine of peace to the whole man,) smitten with feare of the wrath of God for sinne; the griefe is so great, the burden so intolerable, that it will not by any outward meanes be eased or asswaged.

Secondly, it giveth for all particular cases, speciall and sound direction; whether man be to talke with God in the immediate performance of the duties of his service; or to converse with man, according to the state and condition of his life, in the Family, Church, or Common-wealth. The want of which direction, of what force it is to turne the actions of men, which are good in themselves, to sinnes, in regard of the agents, Saint Paul affirmeth in that generall conclusion, Whatsoever is not of faith, is sinne. Wherein he would teach us, that whatsoever is done or undertaken by men in this life, whether it concerne the knowledge and worship of God, or any particular duty to be performed by vertue of their callings, for the common good; whereof they have not sufficient warrant and assurance in conscience, grounded upon the Word, that it is to be done, or not to bee done; to them it is a sinne. Rom. 14. 23.

Thirdly, it is of all other doctrines, (being rightly used) the most comfortable. For it is not founded in the opinions and variable conceits of men, neither doth it consist of conclusions and positions, which are onely probable and conjecturall: (for the conscience of the doubting or distressed party cannot be established and rectified by them;) but it resteth upon most sufficient and certaine grounds, collected and drawne out of the very Word of God, which as it is mighty in operation, piercing the heart, and discerning the thoughts and ments thereof; so is it alone available and effectuall to pacifie the minde, and to give full satisfaction to the conscience. Heb. 4. 12.

And as the benefit is great, so the want of this doctrine, together with the true manner of applying the same, it and hath beene the cause of many and great inconveniences. For even of those that feare God, and have received to beleeve, there be many, who in the time of their distresses, when they have considered the weight and desert of their sinnes, and withall apprehended the wrath of God due unto them, have beene brought unto hard exigents, mourning, and wailing, and crying out, as if God had forsaken them, untill they have beene releeved by the Spirit of Christ, in the meditation of the Word, and promise of God. But those especially, who have not beene instructed in the knowledge of the truth, nor acquainted with the course of Gods dealing with his distressed children, by reason of ignorance and blindnesse in matters of Religion and pietie, when the Lord hath let loose the cord of their consciences, and set before their eyes both the number of their sinnes committed, and the just anger of God purchased thereby, what have they done? Surely despairing of the mercy of God, and their owne salvation, they have either growne to phrensie and madnesse, or else forted unto themselves fearefull ends, some by hanging, some by drowning, others by embruing their hands in their owne blood. And if not in regard of griefe and trouble of minde, yet for want of better resolution in particular cases, within the compasse of their generall or personall callings, (though otherwise, men endued with some measure of knowledge and obedience) they have either abused, or else quite relinquished and forsaken their callings, and thereby become scandalous and offensive unto others. Psal. 6. 2. and 32. 3. 4. Psal. 118. 95. 96.

Now then, as by these and sundry other instances of proofe, the matter it selfe appeares to bee of great weight and importance, so it is most meet, that the best and fittest course should bee taken in the teaching and enforcing of the same. In which regard, wee have just cause to challenge the the Popish Church, who in their Case-writings have erred, both in the substance and circumstances of this doctrine, as shall appeare in the sequell.

First, because the duty of releeving the conscience, is by them commended to the sacrificing Priest, which though according to their owne Canons [b] he should be a man of knowledge, and free from imputation of wickednesse, yet oft times it fals out, that he is either unlearned, or else wicked and lewd of conversation, and consequently unfit for such a purpose.

Secondly, they teach, that the Priests appointed to be comforters and releevers of the distressed, are made by Christ himselfes [c] Iudges of the Cases of Conscience, having in their owne hands a iudiciarie power and authority, truly and properly to binde and to loose, to remit or retaine sinnes, to open or to shut the kingdome of heaven. Whereas the Scripture uttereth a contrarie voyce, that Christ onely hath the keyes of David, which properly and truly openeth, and no man shutteth, and properly and truly shutteth, and no man openeth. And the Ministers of God are not called to be absolute Iudges of the conscience, but onely Messengers and Embassadours of reconciliation; whereupon it followeth, that they cannot be [d] the authors and givers of remission of sinnes, but onely the Ministers and dispensers of the same.

Thirdly, the Papists in their writings have scattered here and there sundry false and erroneous grounds of doctrine, much prejudiciall to the direction or resolution of the conscience in time of need, as namely, I. That a man in the course of his life, may build himselfe upon the faith of his teachers, and for his salvation, rest contented with an implicite and unexpressed faith. Which doctrine, as it is an onely meane to keepe men in perpetuall blindnesse and ignorance, so it serveth to no other purpose in the time of temptation, but to plunge the heart of man into the pit of despaire, it being uncapable of comfort, for want of particular knowledge and understanding of the word and promise of God. II. That every man ought to stand in feare and doubt of the pardon of his sinnes, and that no man can be assured by the certaintie of faith, either of the present favour of God, or of his owne salvation. True it is, that in respect of our owne unworthinesse and indisposition, we have just cause, not only to doubt and feare, but to despaire and be confounded before the judgement seat of God. Yet that a man should not be certainly resolved by faith of the mercy of God, in and for the merit of Christ, is a comfortlesse doctrine to a distressed soule, and contrary unto the saving [e] word of the Gospell, which teacheth, that certaintie floweth from the nature of faith, and not doubting. III. That every man is bound in conscience, upon paine of damnation, to make speciall confession of his mortall sins, with all the particular circumstances thereof, once every yeere to his Priest. This position and practice, besides that it hath no warrant of sacred writ, nor yet any ground of orthodox antiquitie, for 800. yeares, more or lesse after Christ; it maketh notably to the disturbing of the peace of conscience in time of extremitie, considering that it is impossible either to understand or remember all, many being hidden and unknowne. And the minde being in this case informed, that forgivenesse dependeth upon such an enumeration, may thus be brought into doubt and distrust, and will not be able to rest by faith in the sole mercy of God, the only soveraigne medicine of the soule. Againe, the griefe of the minde doth not alwayes arise from all the sinnes that a man hath committed, neither doth the Lord see before the sinners eyes whatsoever evill hath beene done by him, but some one or more particulars: and these are they that doe lie heavie upon the heart; and to be eased of them, will be worke enough, though he doth not exhibite unto the Confessor a Catalogue of all the rest. IV. That some sinnes are veniall, because they are only besides the Law of God, not against it, and because [f] they binde over the sinner only to temporall, and not to eternall punishments. This conclusion first is false; for though it be granted, that some offences are greater, some lesser, some in a higher degree, others in a lower; againe, that sinnes in regard of the event, being repented of, or in respect of the person sinning, being in Christ, and therefore accounted just, are pardonable, because they are not imputed to condemnation; yet there is no sinne, of what degree soever, which is not simply and of it selfe mortall, whether we respect the nature of the sinne, or the measure and proportion of divine justice. For in nature it is an anomie, that is to say, an aberration from the perfect rule of righteousnesse, and therefore is subject to the curse both of temporall and eternall death. It is an offence against the highest Majestie, and consequently, man standeth by it ingaged to everlasting torment. Secondly, it is a weake and insufficient ground of resolution to a troubled conscience. For whereas true and lively joy is the daughter of sorrow, and the heart of man cannot be lifted up, in assurance of Gods favour, to the apprehension and conceit of heavenly comforts, unlesse it be first abased, and by true humiliation brought to nothing in it selfe; the remembrance of this, that the offence committed is veniall, may in some cases too much inlarge the heart, and give occasion to presume, when haply there will be a reason to the contrary. And if not that, yet in case of falling by infirmitie after grace received, the minde being forestalled with this erroneous conceit, that the sinne is lesse than it is indeed, because veniall, may in the issue be lesse quieted, and more perplexed. V. That a man may satisfie the justice of God, for the temporall punishment of his sinnes committed. To omit the untruth of this position; How it maketh to the easing of the heart, or the asswaging of the griefe of minde in temptation, I appeale to common experience. For when a man, being assured of the pardon of his sins, shall yet consider, that there is something more behinde to be done on his part, how can he in probabilitie relie himselfe wholly upon Christs satisfaction? How can he reape unto himselfe from thence any assurance rance of reconciliation to God, whom he formerly offended? If we may and must doe something in our owne persons, whereby to appease the wrath of God, why hath our Saviour taught us for our hearts releefe, wholly and only to make the plea of pardon for our sinnes? True it is indeed, that Popish Confessors doe teach their penitents, when they feele the wrath of God upon them for sinne, to stop the mouth of conscience, by performance of a formall humiliation, and repentance, yea to offer unto God some ceremoniall duties in way of satisfaction. But when sorrow seizeth upon the soule, and the man fals into temptation, then it will appeare that these directions were not currant; for notwithstanding them, he may want found comfort in Gods mercy, and run into despaire without recovery. And for this cause, upon experience it hath beene proved, that even Papists themselves in the houre of death have beene content to renounce their owne works, yea the whole body of humane satisfactions, and to cleave only to the mercy of God in Christ for their salvation.

By these instances, and many more that might be alleaged to this purpose, it is apparant, upon how weake and unstable grounds the Case-divinitie of the Popish Church standeth, and how indirect a course they take, for the resolution and direction of the troubled conscience.

Now by the benefit and abuse of this doctrine, we see how necessary it is, that in Churches which professe Christian religion, it should be more taught, and further inlarged than it is. And to this purpose it were to be wished, that men of knowledge in the Ministerie, that have by the grace of God attained unto the Tongue of the learned, would imploy their paines this way; not only in searching into the depth of such points as stand in bare speculation, but in annexing thereunto the grounds and conclusions of practice, whereby they might both informe the judgement, and rectifie the conscience of the hearers. By this meanes it would come to passe, that the poore distressed soule might be releeved, pietie and devotion more practised, the kingdome of Sinne, Satan, and Antichrist weakned and impaired, and the contrary kingdome of Christ Jesus more and more established.

What the Author and Contriver of the Discourse ensuing hath done in this behalfe, it is evident by the whole course of his writings that he hath left behinde him: all which, as they doe openly shew into the world how great a measure of knowledge and understanding, with other endowments both of nature and grace, the Lord had inriched him withall; so they doe carry with them the sweet favour of pietie and sanctification, wherewith he approved his heart unto God, and his life unto men. Wherein also upon occasion, he hath propounded, and explained sundry notable rules of direction and resolution of the conscience, as will appeare to the view of the learned and well advised Reader.

To let passe all the rest; this present Treatise giveth very sufficient testimonie of his knowledge and dexteritie in that kinde, which could not be attained unto, without great paines, much observation, and long experience. A labour which commendeth it selfe to the Church of God in two respects principally. One, because his grounds and principles are drawne either directly, or by just consequence out of the written word, and so are of greater force, to convince the conscience, and to give satisfaction to the minde, either doubting or distressed. The other, for that it is delivered with such perspicuitie, and disposed in such order and method, as fitteth best for the understanding and memorie of any, whosoever shall peruse it.

Now this whole Treatise of the Questions I have made bold to present unto your Lordship, and to publish abroad under your protection. First, because God, who vouchsafeth speciall favour to them that honour him, hath adorned your estate with honour, your person inwardly with many rich graces of the Spirit, and outwardly with the profession and practice of true Religion; a thing directly confirmed by your unfained love of the truth, and continuall favours to the Teachers of the same, the Ministers and Dispensers of the Gospell. Secondly, because as the Author of these Cases was himselfe in many respects bound unto your Honour while he lived; so his wife and children (for his sake) have received much kindnesse at your hands since his death: a manifest proofe of the truth and sincerity of your affection towards him in the Lord. And in the last place, it was my desire, by setting them forth under your name, to give some testimonie of dutie to your Honour, presuming that as you loved the Author, so you will be pleased to patronize the Worke, and favourably to interpret of the paines and good intention of the publisher. And thus craving pardon for my boldnesse, I humbly take my leave, and commend your Lordship to the grace and favour of God in Christ. From Emanuel College in Cambridge.

Your Honours in all dutie to be commanded.

TO THE GODLY AND well-affected Reader whosoever.

I Doe now at the length offer unto thy view (Christian Reader) the whole Treatise of Case divinitie, so farre as the Author proceeded in the deliverie thereof before his death. If thou hast beene longer held in expectation thereof, than either thy selfe desirdst, or was meet, I must intreat thy favourable interpretation of my forbearance, partly in regard of many private distractions, and sundry occurrents wherewith I was detained from this duetie, and partly also in respect of my desire to publish it in such sort to thy contentment, that it might afterward require no further filing or furbishing by secondary Corrections.

Touching the Treatise it selfe, I have dealt as faithfully as I could, keeping close to the Preachers owne words, without any materiall addition, detraction, or amplification. His method remaines the same in the body of the discourse, not admitting the least alteration. Only it was thought convenient to distinguish it into bookes, according to the severall distinct parts; the bookes into chapters; the chapters thereof into sections, as they were most capable of divisions; and my meaning therein was to helpe the memory of the Reader, and to avoid tediousnesse the daughter of long some discourses.

Now if in the perusing thou either finde any thing amisse, or thy selfe haply not fully satisfied in particular, then remember what is the lot of learned mens works which are Scripta posthuma, (whereof these latter times have yeelded many examples) to be left after a sort naked and imperfect, when the Authors themselves are gone, who might have brought them to perfection. Consider againe, that unregarded of the weight of this worthy Argument, it were much better, kindly and thankefully to accept and enioy these labours, howsoever imparted, than by their suppressing to be wholly deprived of such a benefit. And withall rest with mee in hope, that as himselfe hath first traced the way, and walked by the banke of this mayne Sea, so others upon this occasion will be encouraged to attempt the like course, or at least to inlarge this Worke by addition of more particulars. Meane while, not doubting of thy Christian acceptance of my paines for thy good, I commend them to thy love, thy selfe unto God and the word of his grace. Eman. Coll. Novemb. 28. 1606.

THE FIRST BOOKE OF THE CASES OF CONSCIENCE,

Concerning man simply considered in himselfe, without relation to another.

The Preface declaring the Ground and Order of the Treatise following.

ISAIAH 50. vers. 4.

The Lord God hath given mee the tongue of the learned, that I should know to minister a word in due time to him that is wearie.

IN the part of the Prophesie which goeth before, the Holy Ghost foreseeth downe and foreshadowes the calling of the Gentiles; which was to beginne at the death of Christ; and from thence to continue vnto the last day: and to consequently to the end of the world. In the former verses of this Chapter, there is mention made of the rejection of the Iewes; I meane not generally, but a particular rejection, namely, then when they were in affliction in the dayes of Isaiah. Now in this, and so in all other Prophecies of the like kinde, which treat of this point, Christ himselfe is brought in speaking in the owne person; and the words of this Chapter, from the beginning to this present verse, are the very words of Christ the Mediatour.

In the verse going before, he disputes the cause of their rejection: and the summe of the whole disputation is, that their sinnes, or they themselves were the cause thereof, but he was not the cause: and therefore they themselves by their sinne. The reason which he yeelds why they themselves were the cause, he setteth downe in this sort: God Iewes cannot bring any writing of bill of divorce, wherein I have rejected you: therefore I appeale vnto you as vnto two sorts of sinners, which have no excuse in this iudgement: that you will not beare with me, verse 2. On the other side, the reason, why God was not the cause, is drawne from the part called them in the same verse, & love vnto when he called, you would not obey, verse 2. Now in the words of the second verse he setteth forth an answer to a secret reply, that some obiect: Is not God able to deliver? Yes, he is able, saith God, he hath not bene the cause of hindering and delivering: but we are blinded in former times: it is not for want of power in him, that we are not delivered from him, and there when shall we do it? Behold, saith he, I worke this Lord himselfe makes answer, v. 2, 3, 4. that his hand is not shortned, nor his power lessened, in regard of greater workes, much lesse in respect of their deliverance; and though the present affliction which they endured, was great and tedious, yet they were not to be overmuch dismayed in themselves, but rather to be comforted, because God had given him the tongue of the learned, to minister a word in season to the wearie and distressed; and consequently, that he had power to ease and refresh what their wearinesse and affliction.

In this text then, there is set downe the principall dutie of Christs prophetical office, by allusion to the practicers of the Prophets in the old Testament, especially those which belonged to the schooles of Elias and Elisha, who are here termed the learned. And out of the words thereof, one speciall point of instruction may be gathered briefly, That the true & certaine knowledge & skill in the revelation of the word of God, whereby the consciences of the weake may be rectified and pacified: I gather it thus. Now one speciall dutie of Christ as prophetical office, to give comfort to the consciences of those that were distressed, the Prophet here recordeth. Now as Christ had all power to execute and perform such a dutie, so he hath committed the dispensation thereof to the Ministers of the Gospell. For we may not think that Christ in his owne person ministred & spake words of comfort to the weary in the time of the Prophets, because he was not then exhibited in our nature, and yet he did then speake, but how? in the persons of the Prophets. So likewise, because Christ is in the new Testament spoken not unto, but of, figured in his owne proper person, it remaineth therefore, that he performes this great worke in the Ministerie of Pastors and Teachers upon earth, to whom he hath given knowledge and other gifts to this end and purpose. That point and doctrine therefore he is certaine and infallible doctrine propounded and taught in the Scriptures, whereby the conscience of men distressed may be quieted and relieved. And this doctrine is not attained unto by extraordinarie revelation, but must be drawen out of the written word of God.

The point therefore to bee handled is, What this doctrine should bee? It is no matter of ease and at hand, but full of labour and difficultie; yea verie large, like unto the maine sea. I will only (as it were) walke by the bankes of it, and propound the heads of doctrine, that thereby I may at least occasion others, to consider and handle the same more at large.

That I may proceed in order: First, I am to lay downe certaine Grounds or Preambles, which may give light and direction to the things that follow: and in the next place, I will propound and answer the maine and principall questions of Conscience.

CHAP. I.

Of the two first Grounds of Cases, Confession, and the degrees of Goodnesse.

THe Grounds or Preambles are specially foure. The first, touching confession. The second, touching the degrees of goodnesse in things and actions. The third, touching the degrees of sinne. The fourth and last, concerning the subjection and power of conscience. Of these in order.

The first Ground is, That in the troubles of Conscience, it is meet and convenient, there should alwayes bee used a private confession. For James saith, Iam. 5.16. Confesse your faults one to another, and pray one for another: thereby signifying, that confession in this case is to be used as a thing most requisite. For in all reason, the Physitian must first know the disease before he can apply the remedie; and the griefe of the hart will not be discerned, unlesse it be manifested by the confession of the party diseased: and, for this cause also in the griefe of conscience, the scruple, that is, the thing that troubleth the conscience, must be knowen.

Neverthelesse, in private confession, these caveats must be observed. First, it must not be urged, as a thing simply or absolutely necessarie, without which there can be no salvation. Againe, it is not fit that confession should be of all sins, but only of the scruple it selfe, that is, of that or those sins alone, which do trouble and molest the conscience. Thirdly, though confession may be made to any kinde of man; (Confesse one to another, saith James) yet is it especially to bee made to the Prophets and Ministers of the Gospell. For they in likelyhood, of all other men, in respect of their places and gifts, are the fittest and best able to instruct, correct, comfort, and informe the weake and wounded conscience. Lastly, the person to whom it is made, must be a man of trust and fidelitie, able and willing to keepe secret things that are revealed, yea to burie them (as it were) in the grave of oblivion, for Love covereth a multitude of sinnes.

Sect. 2.

The next ground is touching the degrees of goodnesse in humane things and actions. Goodnesse in things is two-fold; uncreated, and created. Uncreated is God himselfe, who never had beginning, and who is Goodnesse it selfe, because his nature is absolutely and perfectly good, and because hee is the author and worker thereof, in all things created. Created goodnesse, is that whereby the creature is made good; and it is nothing else, but the fruit of that goodnesse, that is essentially in God. Now the degrees thereof are these. There is a generall or naturall goodnesse in creatures, and a more speciall or morall goodnesse.

Generall goodnesse is that, whereby all creatures are accepted and approved of God, by whom they were both created and ordained. Thus everie creature is good, partly by creation, and partly by ordination. By creation it is, that the substance of each creature, as of the Sunne, the Moone, the Earth, Water, Meat, Drinke, &c. is good, having the being thereof from God. Hence also the essentiall properties, quantities, qualities, motions, actions, and inclinations of the creatures in themselves considered, with all their events, are good. By the same generall goodnesse also, even the Devill himselfe and his actions, as hee is a substance, and as they are actions, having their being from God, are good. Things againe doe take unto them the condition of goodnesse, not onely by creation, but also by Gods ordination, whereby they are directed and appointed to some certaine uses and ends. Thus the evill Conscience, Hell, and Death are good, because they are ordained of God, for the execution of his justice, howsoever in themselves, and to us they be evill.

Besides this generall and naturall goodnes, there is also a speciall or morall goodnes, properly so called; and it is that which is agreeable to the eternall and unchangeable wisdome of God, revealed in the Morall Law; wherein it is commanded; and things as they are therein commanded to bee done by God are good morally. Now of actions morally good, there be two degrees: for they are either good in themselves alone, or good both in themselves, and in the doer. In themselves alone some things are morally good: for example, when a wicked man giveth almes, it is a good worke onely in it selfe, but not good in the doer, because it is not done in faith, and from a good conscience: and so are all the vertues of the heathen morally good in themselves, but they are not good in those heathen men; for in them they are but [a] beautifull sinnes. The next degree of goodnesse is, when both things things & actions are both good in themselves & in the doer also. Of this sort were the prayers & almes of Cornelius, good in themselves, and in him also, because he was a beleever. (Acts 10.3.4.)

Now opposite to things and actions morally good or evill, are actions and things of a middle nature, commonly termed Indifferent, which in themselves being neither good nor evill, may be done or not done without sin; In themselves, I say; for in their circumstances they are, & may be made either evill or good. And here wee must remember to put a difference betweene convenience and inconvenience, which ariseth from the nature of indifferent things. Convenience is, when a thing or action is fitted to the circumstances, and the circumstances fitted to it, that thereby it becomes a thing convenient. On the other side, Inconvenience is when a thing or action is done in unmeet circumstances, which bring some hurt or losse to the outward man, or stand not with decencie: and therefore doe make it to be inconvenient. And by this that hath beene said, wee may discerne when an action is good, evill, indifferent, convenient, or inconvenient.

CHAP. II.

Of the nature and differences of sinne.

THe third ground is touching the degrees or differences of sinne. And here we must first of all search what is sinne properly, and what is properly a sinner.

Sinne in his proper nature (as Saint Iohn saith, 1 Ioh. 3.4.) is an anomie, that is, a want of conformitie to the Law of God. For the better understanding whereof, we must know, that there were in Adam before his fall three things not to be severed one from the other: the substance of his bodie and soule, the faculties and powers of his bodie and soule: and the image of God, consisting in a straightnesse and conformitie of all the affections and powers of man to Gods will. Now when Adam fals, and sinnes against God, what is his sinne? Not the want of the two former, (for they both remained,) but the verie want and absence of the third thing, namely, of conformitie to Gods will. I make it plaine by this resemblance; In a musicall instrument, there is to bee considered, not only the instrument it selfe, and the sound of the instrument, but also the harmonie in the sound. Now the contrarie to harmonie, or the disorder in musicke, is none of the two former, but the third, namely the discord, which is the want or absence of harmonie, which wee call disharmonie. In the same manner, the sin of Adam is not the absence either of the substance, or of the faculties of the soule and the bodie, but the want of the third thing before named, and that is, conformitie or correspondencie to the will of God, in regard of obedience. But some may say, the want of conformitie in the powers of the soule is not sinne properly; because in sinne there must be not only an absence of goodnesse, but an habit or presence of evill. I answer, that this verie want of conformitie is not only the absence of goodnesse, but also the habit or presence of evill. For as this want entereth, and is received into the nature, it is properly a want or absence of goodnesse; againe, after it is received into the nature of man, it continues and abides in the powers and faculties thereof, and so it carries the name of an habit.

It may be said againe, that lust and concupiscence, that is, originall sinne, drawes the heart away from the service of God, and entices it to evill. Now to entice or draw away is an action, and this action cannot proceed of a meere privation or want. Ans. We must consider originall sin two wayes: first jointly with the thing or subject in which it is: secondly, by it selfe in his owne nature. If we consider it with his subject, it is an evill inclination or action: but if we consider it simply in it own nature, it is no inclination, or action, but a want. And the like consideration is to be had of actuall sin. For example; In murther there are two things: one is the action of moving the body, and of holding up the weapon, &c. which is no sin properly, if it be considered as an action; because everie action comes from God, who is the first cause of all things and actions. Againe, in murther there is a second thing, namely, killing or slaying of the man, which is the disorder or aberration in the action, whereby it is disposed to wrong use and end: and thus the action is a sinne, namely, in respect it wants conformitie to the will of God. The nature then of the sin lies not in the action, but in the manner of doing the action: and sin properly is nothing formally subsisting, or existing, (for then God should be the author of it, inasmuch as hee is the Creator and ordainer of everie thing and action) but it is an ataxie, or absence of goodnesse and uprightnesse, in the thing that subsisteth. Whereupon it is well and truly said in Schooles, In sin there is nothing positive, but it is a want of that which ought to be or subsist, partly in the nature of man, and partly in the actions of nature. Thus we see what sin is. (In peccato nihil positiuum.)

Sect. 2.

The second thing to be considered, is, what is a sinner properly: For the knowledge hereof, we must consider in everie sin foure things: first, the fault whereby God is offended: then, the guilt whereby the conscience is bound over unto punishment: thirdly, the punishment it selfe, which is eternall death. Of these three, not the guilt or punishment, but the fault or offence makes a man a sinner.

1. Culpa. 2. Reatus. 3. Pœna.

Howbeit here is a further difficultie. When a man hath committed some offence, and the the said offence is done and past, it may bee some ewentie or thirtie yeeres: yet the partie offending doth not therefore cease to bee a sinner. Now then I demand, what is the verie thing, for which he is damned and termed still a sinner in the time present, the offence being past? The answer is, that everie actuall sinne, beside the three former, must bee considered with a fourth thing, to wit; a certaine staine, or blot, which is imprinted and leaves in the offender as a fruit, and that is an inclination, or evill disposition of the heart, whereby it becomes more apt & prone to the offence done, or to any other sinne. For looke as the dropsie man, the more he drinkes, the drier he is, and the more hee still desires to drinke: even so a sinner, the more he sinnes, the apter is hee to sinne, and more desirous to keepe still a course in wickednesse. And as a man that lookes upon the Sunne, if hee turne his face away, remaines turned until he turne himselfe againe: so hee that turnes from God by any sinne, makes himselfe a sinner, and so remaines untill hee returnes himselfe againe by repentance. Thus David was a sinner, not only in the verie act of his adulterie and murther; but even when the act was done and past, he remained still a murtherer and an adulterer; because a new, or rather a renewed proneneſſe to these, and all other sinnes, tooke place in his heart by his fall, and got strength, til he returned to God by repentance, upon the admonition of the Prophet. The thing then, whereby a sinner is termed a sinner, is the fault together with the fruit thereof, namely, the blot imprinted in the soule, so oft as men doe actually offend.

Vses. 1

The Use of this doctrine touching sinne is two-fold. First, by it we learne and see, what is originall sin; whereby an infant in the first conception and birth is indeed a sinner. Everie infant must be considered as a part of Adam, proceeding of him, and partaking of his nature: and thereby it is made a sinner, not only by imputation of Adams offence, but also by propagation of an aptnesse & proneneſſe unto everie evill, received together with nature from Adam. And thus ought we to conceive originall sinne, not to bee the corruption of nature alone, but Adams first offence imputed, with the fruit thereof the corruption of nature, which is an inclination unto everie evill, derived together with nature from our first parents. Secondly, by this we are taught to take heed of all and everie sinne, whether it be in thought, word, or deed: because the committing thereof, though in respect of the act it passeth away in doing, yet it doth breed and increase a wicked disposition in the heart, (as hath been said) to the offence done or any other sinne. Men deceive themselves, that thinke all the evill of sinne to be only in the act of sinning, and to go no further; whereas indeed everie offence hath a certaine blot going with it, that corrupteth the heart, and causeth man to delight and lie in his offence; which lying in sin is a greater cause of damnation, than the verie sin it selfe. This therefore, must admonish us to take heed, lest we continue in any sin, and if it fall out, that through infirmitie we be overtaken by any temptation, we must labour to rise againe, and turne from our sinne to God, by new and speedie repentance.

Sect. 3.

Thus much of sinne it selfe. Now follow the differences thereof, which are manifold. The first fore are to be gathered from the causes and beginnings of sinne in man, which are three-fold; Reason, Will, and Affection.

The differences of sinne in respect of Reason are these: First, some are sinnes of knowledge, some of ignorance. A sinne of knowledge is, when a man offends against his knowledge, doing evill when he knoweth it to be evill: and this is greater than a sinne of ignorance; for he that knoweth his masters will, and doth it not, shall be beaten with many stripes, Luke 12.47. A sinne of ignorance is, when a man doth evill, not knowing it to bee evill. Thus Paul was a blasphemer, an oppressour, and prosecuted the Church of Christ ignorantly, and in a blinde zeale, not knowing that which he did to be evill. Now by ignorance here, I meane an ignorance of those things which ought to be knowen; and this is two-fold: simple, or affected. Simple ignorance is, when a man after diligence and good pathes taking, still remaines ignorant: this ignorance will not excuse any man, if it be of such things as he is bound to know: for it is said, He that doth not his masters will, by reason he knew it not, shall be beaten with fewer stripes, though fewer.

And in this regard, even the heathen which knew not God, are inexcusable, because they were bound to have knowen him. For Adam had the perfect knowledge of God imprinted in his nature, and lost the same through his owne default, for himselfe and his posteritie. And it is the commandement of God, whereunto everie man is bound to performe obedience, that man should know him, that is, his will and word.

But some may say then, how can any man be saved, seeing everie man is ignorant of many things which he ought to know? Ans. If we know the grounds of religion, and be carefull to obey God according to our knowledge, having withall a care and desire to increase in the knowledge of God and his will, God will hold us excused: for our desire and endevour to obey, is accepted for obedience it self. And the greater this simple ignorance is, the lesser is the sinne. For hereupon it was that Peter Acts 3.17. lessened, and (in some sort) excused the sin of the Jewes, in crucifying Christ, because they did it through ignorance: and so doth Paul his sin in persecuting the Church, when he alleageth, that it was done ignorantly in unbelefe. 1 Tim. 1.13.

But

But howsoever this sinne by such means may be lessened, yet remaines it still a sinne worthy condemnation. Affected ignorance is, when a man takes delight in his ignorance, and will of purpose be ignorant; not using, but contemning the meanes, whereby to get and increase knowledge: and that carelesly and negligently, because hee will not leave sinne which hee loveth, nor forsake the evill trade of life wherein hee delighteth. This is the sin of those whereof Iob speaketh, who say unto God, Depart from us: for we desire not the knowledge of thy waies, Iob 21.14. And of whom David complaines, that they flatter themselves in their owne eyes, and have left off to understand and to doe good, Psalme 36.2,3. This ignorance is damnable and devillish: it excuseth no man, but doth rather aggravate and increase his sinne: yea is is the mother of many grievous enormities.

Againe, ignorance is two-fold: of the [a] Law, or of the thing the Law requireth. Ignorance of the Law is, when a man knowes not the Law of God written, nor the law of nature. This ignorance may some what lessen the sinne, but it excuseth no man, because it is naturall, and every man is bound to know the Law. Ignorance of the thing the Law requireth, is the ignorance of the [b] fact: and that is, either with the fault of the doer, or without the fault.

[a] Ignorantia juris.

C

Faultie ignorance is, the ignorance of a fact which hee might have prevented. As when a man in his drunkennesse killeth another; in this fact, not knowing what he doth, he also knoweth not that hee hath offended: and yet because he might have prevented his drunkennesse, therefore he is faulty and sinneth. Faultlesse ignorance is, when a fact is done, which could not be either knowne, or avoided before hand. For example: if a man bee lopping a tree, and his axe head fall from the helve, out of his hand, and kils another passing by; here is indeed manslaughter, but no voluntarie murther, because it was a thing that could not be avoided, and did not fall out through his default. And this ignorance is excusable.

The second fountaine of sinne is the Will, from whence arise these three differences of sinnes: some are from the will immediately, some besides the will, and some are mixt, partly with the will, and partly against the will.

Sinnes proceeding from the will, are properly tearmed voluntarie; such as the doer mooved by his owne will commits, though he knew them to be evill. And here, the more free the will is, the greater is the sinne: for will added to knowledge, makes the sinne the greater. Under voluntarie sinnes, are comprehended all such as proceed from stirred affection, as when a man tels a lye for feare, or striketh another in anger: and the reason is, because these offences, though they are not done upon deliberation, but arise from the violence of affection, yet they do not exclude consent. Hither also wee may reserre sinnes committed by compulsion: as when a man is forced to deny his religion, his offence in deed and truth is voluntary, (though some otherwise thinke it to be a mixt action.) For compulsion doth not reach to the will, but to the outward man, and serves to draw forth a consent: and when consent is yeelded, he denies his religion voluntarily: for the will cannot be constrained. Voluntas non cogitur.

In the next place, sinnes beside the will are such as are neither directly from the will, nor against it. Of this sort are the first sudden motions unto sinne, conceived in the heart with some inward pleasure and delight: and these are truly sinnes, though in respect little sins, condemned in the last commandement. And they are not from the will, because they goe without and before consent: neither yet are they against the will, because then the heart would not take delight in them.

Here by the way wee are to note, against the doctrine of the Papists, that all sinnes are not voluntarie; for whatsoever wanteth conformitie to the Law of God, is sinne, whether it be with consent of wil or no. But many such desires & delights arise suddenly in the heart of man, which are not according to the Law of God, and have no consent or approbation of will. In like manner, when one man kils another, thinking that he killeth a wild beast; if the same man remembreth afterwards what he hath done, and is not grieved for the fact, in this case he hath sinned, because his not grieving is offensive unto God, though the fact were meerely besides his will.

Mixt sinnes are partly from the will, partly against it. Of this sort are the workes of the man regenerate, which are done partly with his will, & partly against his will, being partly good, and partly evill. The reason hereof is this: There are in man after regeneration two contrary grounds or beginnings of actions, to wit, naturall corruption, or the inclination of the mind, wil, and affections, to that which is against the Law, called the Flesh; and a created quality of holinesse, wrought in the said faculties by the holy Ghost, tearmed the Spirit. And these two are not severed, but joyned and mingled together, in all the faculties and powers of the soule. Now between these there is a continuall combat, corruption fighting against grace, and grace against corruption. Hence it is, that there being even in one and the same will contrary inclinations, there must necessarily flow from the man regenerate contrary actions; the flesh in every action willing that which is evill, and the Spirit on the other side that which is good. This Paul confessed and acknowledged, upon his owne experience, after his conversion, when he said, To will is present with mee, but I finde no meanes [perfectly] to doe that which is good, Rom. 7.18. Againe, verſ. 22.23. I delight in the Law of God, concerning the inner man; but I see another law in my members, rebelling against the law of my minde, and leading me captive to the law of sinne, which is in my members.

The third ground or fountaine of sinne in man, is Affection, from whence doe proceed two kindes, namely, sinnes of Infirmitie, and sinnes of Presumption.

Sinnes of Infirmitie are such as proceed from the sudden passions of the minde, and the strong affections of the heart, as from hatred, griefe, anger, sorrow, and such like. These sinns are commonly thought to be in all men: but the truth is, they are properly incident to the regenerate. For Infirmitie cannot bee said properly to be in them, in whom sin hath firmitie or strength, & where there is no power of grace at all. Againe, the man that is regenerate, sinneth neither when hee would, because he is restrained by the grace of God that is in him: nor in what manner he would, partly because hee sinneth not with all his heart, the strength of his flesh being abated by the Spirit; and partly for that being fallen, he lies not still, but recovers himselfe by speedie repentance. An evident argument that the sins whereinto he falleth, are not presumptuous, but are ordinarily of weaknes and infirmitie.

Sinnes of Presumption are such as proceed from pride, arrogancie, wilfulnesse, and hautinesse of mans heart. Against these David prayeth, saying, Let not presumptuous sinnes have dominion over me, Psal. 19.13. And of them there be three degrees.

The first is, when a man wilfully goeth on in his sinnes, upon an erroneous perswasion of Gods mercie, and of his owne future repentance; this is the sinne of most men.

The second is, when a man sinneth wilfully, in contempt of the Law of God: this is called by Moses, a sinne with an high hand, and the punishment thereof was, by present death to be cut off from among the people. Numb.15.30.

The third, when a man sinneth, not only wilfully and contemptuously, but of malice and spite against God himselfe, and Christ Jesus. And by this we may conceive what is the sin against the Holy Ghost: which is not, everie sinne of presumption, or against knowledge and conscience: but such a kind of presumptuous offence, in which true religion is renounced, and that of set purpose and resolved malice, against the verie Majestie of God himselfe and Christ, Heb. 10.29.

Now follow other differences of sinne in regard of the object therof, which is the Law. In respect of the Law, sin is two-fold; either of Commission, or of Omission. I say, in respect of the Law, because God hath revealed in his Law two sorts of precepts: the one wherein some good thing is commanded to bee done, as to love God with all our hearts, and our neighbour as our selves: the other wherein some evill is forbidden to bee done, as the making of a graven image, the taking the name of God in vaine, &c.

Now a sinne of Commission is, when a man doth any thing that is flatly forbidden in the Law & word of God: as when one man kils another, contrary to the Law, which saith, Thou shalt not kill. A sin of omission is, when a man leaveth unperformed some dutie which the Law requireth: as for example, the preserving of his neighbours life, or good estate, when it lieth in his power so to do. These also are truly sins, and by them as wel as by the other, men shall be tried in the last judgement. Matt.25.42,43.

Sinnes of omission have three degrees. First, when a man doth nothing at all, but omits the dutie commanded, both in whole and in part; as when having opportunitie and abilitie, hee doth not move so much as one finger, for the saving of his neighbours life.

Secondly, when a man performes the dutie enjoyned, but failes both in the manner & measure thereof. Thus the Heathen failed in doing good works, in that the things which they did, for substance and matter were good and commendable, being done upon civill and honest respects, and referred to the common good; yet in truth their actions were no better than sinnes of omission, inasmuch as they issued from corrupted fountaines, hearts void of faith: and aimed not at the maine end, and scope of all humane actions, the honour and glorie of God.

Thirdly, when a man doth things in a right manner, but failes in the measure therof. And thus the children of God doe sinne in all the duties of the law. For they do the good things the law commandeth, in loving God & their neighbour: but they cannot attaine to that measure of love which the law requireth. And thus the best men living do sin in everie good worke they do, so as if God should enter into judgement, deale with them in the rigour of his justice, & examine them by the strict rule of the Law, he might justly condemne them, even for their best actions. And in this regard, when wee pray daily for the pardon of our sins, the best works we doe, must come in the number of them: because we faile, if not in substance & manner, yet at the least in the measure of goodnesse that ought to bee in the doing of them. We must also have care to repent us, even of these our sinnes of omission, as well as of the other of commission: because by leaving undone our dutie, we do offner offend, than by sinnes committed: and the least omission is enough to condemne us, if it should be exacted at our hands.

Sect. 5.

The next difference of sinnes may be this: some are crying sinnes, some are sinnes of toleration.

Crying sins I call those, which are so hainous, and in their kinde so grievous, that they hasten Gods judgements, and call for speedie vengeance downe upon the sinner. Of this this kinde there are sundry examples in the Scriptures, principally foure. First Cains sinne in murthering his innocent brother Abel; whereof it was said, The voice of thy brothers blood crieth unto me from the earth. The next is the sinne of Sodome and Gomorrha, which was pride, fulnes of bread, abundance of idlenesse, unmercifull dealing with the poore, and all manner of uncleannesse, *Ezech.*16. and of this the Lord said, that the crie of Sodome and Gomorrha was great, and their sinnes exceeding grievous. The third is the sinne of Oppression, endured by the Israelites in Egypt, at the hand of Pharao, and his task-masters. The fourth is mercilesse Injustice in wrongful withholding and detaining the labourers hire. Gen.4.10. Gen.18.20. Exod.3.7. & alias. Exod.22.23, 27. Iam.5.4.

Now they are called Crying sinnes, for these causes. First, because they are now come to their full measure & height, beyond which God will not suffer them to passe, without due punishment. Againe, the Lord takes more notice, and inquires further into them, than into others, by reason that they exceed, and are most eminent where they bee committed. Thirdly, they call for present helpe of the afflicted and wronged, and consequently for speedie execution of vengeance upon the authors and committers of them. And lastly, because God is wont to give eare unto the cryes of those that endure so heavie measure at the hands of others, and accordingly to helpe them, and reward the other with deserved punishment.

Next unto these are sinnes of Toleration, lesser than the former: which though in themselves they deserve death, yet God in his mercy shewes his patience and long sufferance upon the committers thereof, either deferring the temporall punishment, or pardoning both temporall and eternal to his Elect. Such a sinne was the ignorance of the Gentiles before Christs comming: which God deferred to punish, and (as we say) winked at it. Act.17.30. *Vpriδων.

More especially, there bee three sorts of sinnes of Toleration: the first is Originall sin, or concupiscence, in the regenerate after regeneration, and the fruits thereof: for it is not quite abolished by regeneration, but remaines more or lesse molesting and tempting a man till death. And yet if we carrie a constant purpose not to sinne, and endevour our selves to resist all tentations, this concupiscence of ours shall not be imputed unto us, nor we condemned for it. And to this purpose the holy Apostle saith, There is no condemnation to them that are in Christ. Yet saith he not, There is nothing worthy condemnation in them: for Originall sin remaines till death, truly deserving damnation, though it be not imputed. Rom.8.1.

The second kind of sinnes of Toleration are secret, unknowne, and hidden sinnes in the regenerate. For who can tell how oft he offendeth? saith David. When a man that is the childe of God, shall examine his heart, and humble himselfe even for all his particular sinnes, which he knoweth by himselfe: there shall yet remaine some unknowne sinnes, of which he cannot have a particular repentance; and yet they are not imputed, when there is repentanse for knowne sinnes. As for example, David repents of his murther and adultery, and yet afterwards (erring in judgement, by reason of the corruption of the times,) he lived to his death in the sinne of polygamy, without any particular repentance, that wee heare of. In like manner did the Patriarkes, who may not altogether bee excused: yet they were not condemned therefore: neither were they saved without repentance for this sinne, but God in mercie accepted a generall repentance for the same. And the like is the case of all the Elect, in regard of their secret and hidden faults: for unlesse God should accept of a general repentance for unknowne sinnes, few or none at all should be saved. And herein doth the endlesse mercie of God notably appeare, that hee vouchsafeth to accept of our repentance when we repent, though not in particular as we ought to doe. Nevertheless, this must not incourage or imbolden any man to live in his sinnes, without turning unto God. For unlesse we repent in particular of all the sins we know, not only our knowne offences, but even our secret sinnes shall condemne us. Many sinnes are committed by men, which afterwards in processe of time are quite forgotten: Others are committed, which notwithstanding are not knowne, whether they bee sinnes or no. And in doing the best duties we can, we offend often, and yet when we offend, we perceive it not: and all these in the regenerate, through the mercy of God, are sinnes of Toleration, in respect of particular repentance. Psal.19.

The third kinde of sinnes of Toleration, are certaine particular facts of men not approoved of in Scripture, and yet remitted in respect of punishment. Such was the fact of Zipporah, in circumcising her childe, in presence of her husband, he being able to have done it himselfe, and shee having no calling to doe that which shee did. For though the hand of God was against him, yet was he not sicke, (as some would excuse the matter) neither is there any such thing in the text: but it is rather to be thought, that shee her selfe circumcised her sonne in haste, to prevent her husband: for the deed was done in some indignation, and shee cast the fore-skin at his feet. And yet because this fact was some manner of obedience, in that the thing was done which God required, (though not in the manner that hee required) God accepted the same, and stayed his hand from killing Moses. Thus God accepted of Ahabs humilitie, though it were in hypocrisie, because it was a shew of obedience: and for that deferred a temporall punishment, till the daies of his posteritie. God Exod.4.25. 1 King.21. 2 King.17.

sent Lyons to destroy the Assyrians, that dwelt in Samaria, for their idolatrie: yet so soone as they had learned to feare the Lord after the manner of the God of Israel, though they mingled the same with their owne idolatrie, God for that halfe obedience suffered them to dwell in peace.

Sect. 6.

The sixt distinction of sinnes may be this: Some are sinnes against God, some against men. This distinction is grounded upon a place in Samuel, 1 *Sam.*2.15. If one man sinne against another, the Iudge shall iudge it: but if a man sinne against the Lord, who shall pleade for him?

Sinnes against God are such as are directly and immediatly committed against the majestie of God. Such are Atheisme, Idolatrie, Blasphemie, Perjurie, Profanation of the Sabbath, and all the breaches of the first Table.

Sinnes against men, are injuries, hurts, losses, and dammages, wherby our neighbour is in his dignity, life, chastity, wealth, good name, or any other way justly offended, or by us hindered. And such actions must be considered two waies. First, as they are injuries and hurts done unto our neighbour: and secondly, as they are anomies, or breaches of Gods law, forbidding us to doe them: and in this second respect they are called sinnes, because sinne is properly against God: and therefore by sinnes against men, we are to understand injuries, losses, or dammages done unto them. In this sense must that place in Matthew be expounded, *Matth.*18.15. If thy brother sinne against thee, &c.

Sect. 7.

The seventh difference of sinnes is noted by S. Paul, where he saith, 1 *Cor.*6.10. Every sinne that a man doth, is without the body; but hee that commits fornication, sinneth against his owne body. In which place it is implyed, that some sinnes are without the body, and some against a mans owne bodie.

Sinnes without the body, are such sinnes as a man committeth, his body being the instrument of the sinne, but not the thing abused. Such are Murther, Theft, and Drunkennesse: for in the committing of these sins, the bodie is but a helper, and onely a remote instrumentall cause, and the thing abused is without the bodie. For example: in drunkennesse, the thing abused by the drunkard, is wine or strong drinke: in theft, another mans goods: in murther, the instrument whereby the fact is committed. The body indeed conferres his helpe to these things, but the injurie is directed to the creatures of God, to the body and goods of our neighbour. And such are all sinnes, adulterie onely excepted.

Sinnes against the body, are those in which it selfe is not onely the instrument, but the thing abused also. Such a sinne is adulterie onely, and those that are of that kind, properly against the body: first, because the body of the sinner is both a furthering cause of the sinne, and also that thing which he abuseth against his own selfe. Secondly, by this offence he doth not onely hinder, but lose the right, power, and property of his body, in that he makes it the member of an harlot. And lastly, though other sinnes in their kinde doe bring a shame and dishonour upon the body, yet there is none that sitteth so nigh, or leaveth a blot so deeply imprinted in it, as doth the sin of uncleanesse.

Sect. 8.

The eighth distinction of sinnes is grounded upon Pauls exhortation to Timothie, 1 *Tim.*5.22. Communicate not with other mens sins. Sins are either other mens sinnes, or communication with other mens sinnes. This distinction is the rather to be knowne and remembred, because it serves to extenuate or aggravate sinnes committed.

Communication with sinne is done sundry waies. First, by counsell: thus Caiphas sinned when he gave counsel to put Christ to death. Secondly, by commandement: so David sinned in the murther of Urias. Thirdly, by consent, or assistance, *Rom.*1.32. Thus Saul sinned in keeping the garments of them that stoned Stephen, *Act.*12.20. & 7.58. Fourthly, by provocation: thus they sinne that provoke others to sinne: and hereof Paul speaketh when he saith, Fathers must not provoke their children to wrath, *Eph.*6.4. Fifthly, by negligence or silence. This is the sin of the Minister, when men are called to reproove sinne, and doe not. Sixtly, by flattery, when men sooth up others in sinne. Seventhly, by winking at sinnes, or passing them over by slight reproofe, Eph. 5.11. Thus Eli sinned in rebuking his sonnes, and thereby brought a temporall judgement upon himselfe and his family, 1 Sam. 2. chap. and 4. Eightly, by participation, *Eph.*5.7. and thus they doe sinne, that are receivers of theeves. Ninthly, by defending another man in his sinne: for he that justifieth the wicked, and condemneth the just, even they both are an abomination to the Lord.

Sect. 9.

The ninth distinction followeth. Some mens sinnes (saith Paul) are open before hand, some follow after. Which place by some is expounded thus: Some mens sinnes are kept secret till the last judgement, and some are revealed in this life, before that day. This I thinke is a truth, but not the meaning of the text. For in the 23. verse, the Apostle spake of Ordination, giving charge to Timothie, that he should not suddenly admit any into Ecclesiasticall offices, left hee did partake with their sinnes. Now in this 24. verse he rendereth a reason thereof, saying, Some mens sinnes are open before hand: that is, some mens faults and wants are knowne before their ordination to Ecclesiasticall offices, and of such the

the Church may know what to iudge and say. But some againe follow after, that is, they are not reuealed till after their Ordination: and thus Iudas his wickednesse did not appeare at the first, but was reuealed after he was called to be an Apostle.

A

And thus we see, what be the Differences of Sins touching all which, this must be held and remembred for a Ground, That euery sinne, in what degree soeuer it be, is mortall of it selfe: and no sinne is veniall in it owne nature. For the wages of euery sinne is death. Rom. 6. 23. And, Cursed is euery one, that continueth not in all things that are written in the booke of the Law, to doe them, Gal. 3. 10. This ground must be holden against the Church of Rome, who in her Case-diuinitie, vseth to pacifie the conscience, by teaching men, that sundry sinnes are veniall.

B

Sect. 10.

Now though euery sinne of it selfe be mortall, yet all are not equally mortall: but some more, some lesse. For the better vnderstanding whereof, it is to be remembred, that in sinne there be sundry steps and degrees, whereby one and the same sinne, may be lessened or increased, and so become more or lesse hainous before God.

If it be asked, how can this be? I answer; that Sinne may admit aggrauation, or extenuation, sundry waies: first, by the circumstances, which are principally seauen.

C

The first, is the subiect, or person sinning. For example: The sinne of a publike person, is more hainous, yea more mortall, then the sin of a priuate man, because he is in eminent place, and his actions are more exemplarie and scandalous, then the actions of inferiour men. The seruant that knowes his masters will, if he doth it not, is the greater sinner, and shall endure a greater punishment, then he that neglects the same vpon simple ignorance, Math. 10. 15. The Minister and Dispenser of the Word, if he be vnfaithfull and vnprofitable, his offence, and consequently his punishment, is farre greater then other mens, Math. 5. 13.

D

The second is, the obiect or partie which is offended. In this respect it was that the Iewes did more hainously sin in crucifying Christ the Sonne of God, the Lord of glorie, then did their fathers which persecuted and killed the Prophets. Againe, the word of God teacheth, that the iniurie that is done vnto those whome God tenderly loueth, is farre more displeasing vnto him, then if it were done to others. He that toucheth you, (saith the Prophet, meaning the Iewes his chosen and beloued people) toucheth the apple of his eye, Zach. 2 8. The man that deuiseth mischiefe against his harmelesse brother that dwelleth peaceably by him, committeth a sinne most odious vnto God and man, Prou. 3. 29 Psal. 7. 4. He that is called and conuerted vnto God and Christ, and maketh not honest prouision for his owne which are of his family, is so notorious an offender, that Saint Paul holds him a denyer of the faith, and worse then an infidell, 1. Tim. 5. 8. The person that shall raile vpon the Iudge, or speake euill of the Ruler of his people, is a greater transgressour of Gods commaundement, then he that reuileth, or abuseth an ordinarie man, Exod. 22. 28.

The third is, the thing done in which the offence is committed. Thus to falsifie the word of God, and to prophane his worship and seruice, is much more abhominable in his sight, then is the falsifying of the word of a man, or the abuse of humane lawes and ordinances. Thus again, the hurting and indamaging of the person and life of our neighbour, is a more odious offence, then is the diminishing of his goods and outward estate: and the hurt that redoundeth by our default vnto his soule, is more offensiue euery way, then the wrong that is offered vnto his bodie.

The fourth, is the place where it is done. According to this Circumstance, if a man shall either speake or do any thing, that comes vnder the name of a breach of pietie or iustice, in publike place, as in the congregation, in open court, or generall assembly, and that with publike and generall scandall; he is a greater offendour, than if he spake or did the same at home, in his house or closet.

The fift is the End; In regard hereof, he that stealeth from another, that whereby he may satisfie his hunger, and saue his life, being driuen to extreame necessitie, offendeth in a lower and lesser degree, then the theefe that robbeth by the high way side, for this end, to enrich himselfe by the losses of other men.

The sixt is the Manner how? Thus he that committeth vncleanenes in the outward act, doth more grieuously sinne, and with greater scandall, then if he onely entertained an vncleane thought into his heart. And he that sinneth of set purpose and presumption, or of obstinate and resolued malice against God, hath proceeded vnto a higher degree of iniquitie, then if he had fallen vpon ignorance, infirmitie, or disordered and distempered affection. In like manner, the sinne of the Iewes, in forcing Pilate by their threatning tearmes (as that he was an enemie to Cæsar, &c.) to the vniust condemnation of Christ Iesus, was an higher degree, then the sinne of Pilate himselfe, who yeelding vnto their importunitie pronounced sentence against him, Ioh. 19. 11. The last is the time, which also serues to aggrauate the sinne. For ordinarie disobedience in the time of grace, and wilfull neglect of Gods calling in the aboundance of meanes, is a great deale more damnable, then the commission of sinne, in the dates of ignorance and blindnesse, when the like meanes are wanting. 2. Pet. 2. 21.

The second way to aggrauate sinne, is by addition of sinne to sinne: and that is done sundry waies: First, by committing one sin in the necke of another; as David sinned, when he added murther to adulterie. Secondly, by doubling and multiplying of sinne, that is, by falling often into the same sinne. Thirdly, by lying in sinne without repentance. And here it must bee remembred, that men of yeares living in the Church are not simply condemned for their particular sinnes, but for their continuance and resídence in them. Sins committed make men worthy of damnation; but living and abiding in them without repentance is the thing that brings damnation. For as in the Militant Church men are excommunicate, not so much for their offence, as for their obstinacie; so shall it bee in the Church triumphant; the kingdome of heaven shall be barred against men, not so much for their sin committed, as for their lying therein without repentance. And this is the manner of Gods dealing with those that have lived within the precincts of the church; they shall be condemned for the very want of true faith and repentance. This should admonish every one of us to take heed, lest wee lie in any sinne: and that being any way overtaken, wee should speedily repent, lest wee aggravate our sinne by continuance therein, and so bring upon our selves swift damnation.

Thirdly, the same sinne is made greater or lesser foure waies: according to the number of degrees in the committing of a sinne, noted by S. Iames, Iam. 1. 15. Temptation, Conception, Birth, and Perfection. Actuall sinne in the first degree of tentation, is, when the minde upon some sudden motion is drawne away to think evill, and withall is tickled with some delight thereof. For a bad motion cast into the minde, by the flesh & the Devill, is like unto the bait cast into the water, that allureth and delighteth the fish, and causeth it to bite. Sinne in conception, is when with the delight of the mind there goes consent of will to doe the evill thought on. Sinne in birth is when it comes forth into an action or execution. Sin in perfection is when men are growne to a custome and habit in sinne, upon long practice. For the often committing of one and the same sinne leaves an evill impression in the heart, that is, a strong or violent inclination to that or any other evill, as hath beene taught before. And sinne thus made perfect, brings forth death: for custome in sinning brings hardnesse of heart; hardnesse of heart, impenitencie; and impenitencie, condemnation. Now of these degrees, the first is the least, and the last is the greatest. One and the same sin is lesser in tentation, than in conception; and lesse in conception, than in birth; and greater in perfection, than in all the former.

Sect. 11.

Now from this doctrine of the increasing and lessening of sinne in these respects, wee may gather, that all sinnes are not alike or equall, as the Stoicks of anciente times, and their followers have falsely imagined. For it hath beene proved at large, by induction of sundry particulars, that there are degrees of sinnes, some lesser, some greater: some more offensive and odious to God and man, some lesse. And that the circumstances of time, place, person, and manner of doing, doe serve to enlarge or extenuate the sinne committed.

If it be here alleaged, that sin is nothing but the doing of that which is unlawfull to be done, and that this is equall in all men that sin; and therefore by consequent, offences are equall: I answer, that in every sinne, men must not consider the unlawfulnesse thereof onely, but the reason why it should be unlawfull: and that is properly, because it is a breach of Gods law, and repugnant to his will revealed in his word. Now there is no breach of a divine Law, but it is more or lesse repugnant unto the will of the Law-giver, God himselfe. And many transgressions are more repugnant thereunto than fewer: for the more sin is increased, the more is the wrath of God inflamed against the sinner upon his due desert.

If it be said againe, that the nature of sinne stands onely in this, that the sinner makes an aberration from the scope or marke that is set before him, and doth no more than passe the bounds of dutie prescribed by God, and that all are alike in this respect: The answer is, that it is a falsehood to affirme, that he which makes the lesse aberration from the dutie commanded, is equall in offence to him that makes the greater. For the same sinne for substance hath sundry steps and degrees, in respect whereof, one man becommeth a more heinous offender than another. For example, in the seventh commandement when God forbids the committing of Adulterie, hee forbiddeth three degrees of the same sinne; to wit, adulterie of the heart, consisting of inordinate and uncleane affections; adulterie of the tongue, in corrupt, dishonest, and unseemly speeches; and the very act of uncleanesse and filthinesse committed by the body. Now it cannot be said, that he which breaks this commandement onely in the first degree, is as great a transgressour as he that hath proceeded to the second, and so to the third. And therefore it remaines for an undoubted truth, that sins committed against the Law of God are not equall, but some lesser, some greater.

Sundry other distinctions there are of sinnes, as namely, That the maine sins of the first Table are greater than the maine sinnes of the second Table. And yet the maine sins of the second are greater than the breach of ceremoniall duties, against the first table. But this which hath beene said shall suffice.

The use of this doctrine is manifold. First, by it we learne, what the heart of man is by nature: namely, a corrupt and uncleane fountaine, out of which issueth in the course of this this life, the streames of corruptions infinite in number, no y some in qualities, hainous in degrees, dangerous in effects. For from thence doe flow all the differences of sinnes before named, with their severall branches, and infinite many more, that cannot bee rehearsed. This must move us humbly to sue unto God, and earnestly to intreat him, to wash us thoroughly from our wickednesse, and cleanse us from our sinnes: yea to purge and to rinse the fountaine thereof, our uncleane and polluted hearts. And when by Gods mercie in Christ, apprehended by faith, our hearts shall be purified, then to set watch and ward over them, and to keepe them with all diligence. Secondly it teacheth us, that miserable and frail man is not guiltie of one or more sinnes, but of many and sundry corruptions, both of heart and life. Who can understand his faults? saith David, Psal. 19. 12. Now the allowance of sinne being death by Gods ordinance, and God being iustice it selfe; answerably to the number of our offences, must we needs be liable to many punishments, yea to death it selfe, both of the body and of the soule. This being, our woefull estate, in this cause is there that any man should thinke himselfe to be in good case, or precious of Gods mercie, in regard of the small number of his sinnes: And much lesse cause hath he to fondly to imagine with the Popish sort, that he can merit the favour of God by any worke done by him, above that which the Law requireth, considering that it is impossible for him to know either the number, or the nature, or the measure of his sinnes. Lastly, the consideration of this point, must be a bare to keepe us in, that we be not too secure or presumptuous of our owne estate: for as much as we learne out of the word of God, that in respect of the multitude of our corruptions, this our life is full of much evill, & many difficulties, that we have whole armies of enemies to encounter withall, not only out of us in the world abroad, but within us, lurking even in our owne flesh. And upon this consideration, that we should be at continuall defiance with them, using all holy meanes to get the victorie over them by the daily exercise of invocation and repentance, & by a continual practice of new obedience unto all the laws & commandements of God, according to the measure of grace received. And so much of the third Ground.

CHAP. III.

Of the subjection and power of Conscience.

THe fourth and last Ground is, concerning the subjection and power of Conscience. Wherein wee are to remember two things: what Conscience is, and what is the ordinary condition of it in every man. For the first, the name of Conscience will give light unto the thing it selfe. For it is a knowledge joyned with a knowledge, and is so named in two respects. First, because when a man knowes or thinkes any thing, by meanes of Conscience, he knowes what he knowes and thinkes. Secondly, because by it, man knowes that thing of himself, which God also knowes of him. Man hath 2. witnesses of his thoughts; God, and his owne conscience; God is the first and chiefest, & Conscience is the second, subordinate unto God, bearing witnesse unto God, either with the man, or against him. Therefore it is nothing else but a part of the understanding, whereby a man knowes what he thinkes, what he willeth or desires, as also in what manner he knoweth, thinketh or willeth either good or evill. Whereunto this must be added, that as conscience knowes our thoughts, wills, and actions, so it testifies them unto God, either with us, or against us.

In the second place. The naturall condition or propertie of every mans conscience is this; that in regard of authoritie and power, it is placed, as it were, in the middle betweene man and God, so as it is under God, and yet above man. And this naturall condition hath two parts: The first is, the subjection of conscience to God, and his word. Concerning which subjection we have this rule: That God alone by his word doth only binde the conscience, by causing it in every action either to excuse for well doing, or accuse for sinne. And this God doth properly. For first, he is the only Lord of the conscience, which created it, and governeth it. 2. Againe, he is the only Law-giver, that hath power to save or destroy the soule: for she keeping and breaking of his Lawes; Iam. 4. 12. 1. 3. And further, mans conscience is knowne to none, besides himselfe, but to God: What man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? 1 Cor. 2. 11. And it is God only that gives libertie to the conscience, in regard of his owne lawes. Upon this it followeth, that no mans commandement or law can of it selfe, and by it owne soveraigne power binde conscience, but doth it only by the authoritie and vertue of the written word of God, or some part thereof. And therefore, if it be alleaged, that subjection is due to the Magistrate for conscience sake; Rom. 13. 5. the Answer is at hand; that subjection is indeed to bee performed to civill authoritie ordained by God, and obedience also to the Lawes of the Magistrate for feare of wrath, and for avoiding of punishments; but not for conscience of the Ordinance it selfe, or lawes properly and directly, but for conscience of Gods commandement, which appointeth both Magistracie, and the authoritie thereof. This is it that binds the conscience immediately; that by vertue of a superiour Law, whereby it standeth in force, namely, the Law of God.

The second part of the naturall condition of conscience, is the power which it hath over man, to excuse or, accuse him in respect of things done. And this is plaine by Saint Pauls

Con-

Conclusion, Rom. 14.23. Whatsoever is not of faith, that is, whatsoever man doth, wherof he is not certainely perswaded in judgement and conscience out of Gods word, that the thing may be done, it is sinne. More plainely: a thing may bee said not to bee done of faith three waies. First, when it is done with doubting, and unresolved conscience, as in those that are weak in knowledge. Of which sort were some in the Primitive Church, who notwithstanding they heard of the doctrine of Christian libertie; yet they were of opinion, that after Christs ascension, there was a difference to be made of meats, and thereupon thought they might not eat of some kinde of meats. Suppose now, that these persons (by accident) should have beene drawn to eat swines flesh, which themselves had holden a thing forbidden: these men upon this very fact had sinned, because that which they did was upon an unresolved conscience. So saith the Apostle, Rom. 14.23. He that doubteth, is condemned if he eat, because hee eateth not of faith. Secondly, when a thing is done upon an erroneous conscience, it is not of faith, and therefore it is a sinne. Thus the Masse priest sinneth in saying Masse, though he thinke in his conscience, the thing hee doth is the ordinance of God. And thus Heretikes doe die Heretikes, though when they die, they be fully perswaded their opinions be the truth. Againe, in the same manner, Put the case a man should bee of opinion, that fornication, or theft, were things arbitrarie and indifferent, and hereupon his conscience should tell him, he might take opportunitie, and commit either of these sinnes: whether is this action in the parties thus perswaded, a sinne, or no? I answer, the case is plaine, that the fact is done upon an erroneous conscience, and therefore must bee a sinne in the doer. For the error of the judgement cannot take away the nature of that which is simply evill. Sinne is sinne, and so remaineth, notwithstanding any contrary perswasion of the conscience. The reason is, because though the conscience erreth, and is misinformed, yet is he bound so farre forth, as that if a man judge a thing to be evill, either simply, or in some respect, (though falsly) and yet afterward doth it, he hath sinned and offended the Majestie of God, as much as in him lieth. Thirdly, when a thing is done with a repugning, or gain-saying conscience, though upon error and false judgement of the conscience, it is in the doer a sin. Thus an Anabaptist, that holdeth it unlawfull to sweare, sinneth, if hee take an oath; not in sweareing simply, for that is Gods ordinance, but because he swears against the perswasion of his conscience.

1. Dubitante conscientia.

2. Errante.

3. Repugnante.

CHAP. III.

Of the distinction of Cases.

THus much touching the Preambles, or Grounds of this doctrine. Now it remaineth, that we come to the Questions of Conscience.

These Questions may be fitly divided, according to the matter or subject of them, which is man. Now as man is considered diverswaies, that is to say, either apart by himself, or as he stands in relation to another, and is a member of a societie; so the Questions of Conscience are to bee distinguished: some concerning man simply considered by himselfe: some agitie, as he stands in relation to another.

Man standeth in a two-fold relation: to God, or to man. As he stands in relation to God, he beares the name of a Christian, that is, a member of Christ, or a sonne of God, whose dutie is to know and to worship God, according to his will revealed in his word. As he stands in relation to man, hee is a part of a bodie, and a member of some societie. Now the Questions that concerne him, as a member of a societie, are of three sorts, according to three distinct kinds of societies. For every man is either a member of a Family, or of the Church, or of the Common-wealth. And answerably, some Questions concerne man as a member of a family: some, as he is a member of the Church: some, as he is a member of the Common-wealth.

In a word therefore, all Questions touching man may be reduced to three generall heads. The first whereof is, concerning man simply considered as he is a man. The second, touching man as he stands in relation to God. The third, concerning man as hee is a member of one of the three societies, that is, either of the Family, or of the Church, or of the Common-wealth.

QUestions of the first sort, concerning man simply considered in himself, as hee is man, are especially three.

The first, What a man must do, that he may come into the favour of God, and be saved?

The second, How hee may be assured in conscience of his owne salvation?

The third, How he may recover himselfe, when he is distressed or fallen? Of these in order.

CHAP. V.

Of the first maine Question touching man.

I. Question.

What must a man doe, that he may come into Gods favour, and be saved?

FOr answer to this Question, some Grounds must be laid downe before hand. The first is this: That we must consider and remember, how, and by what meanes, God brings any man to salvation. For looke how God saveth others, so hee that would know how to be saved, must use the meanes whereby God saveth them.

In the working and effecting of mans salvation, ordinarily there are two speciall actions of God: the giving of the first grace, and after that, the giving of the second. The former of these two workes hath ten severall actions. I. God gives man the outward meanes of salvation, specially the ministerie of the Word: and with it hee sends some outward or inward crosse, to breake and subdue the stubbornnesse of our nature, that it may bee made plyable to the will of God. This wee may see in the example of the Jaylor, Act. 16. and of the Jewes that were converted at Peters Sermon, Acts 2. II. This done, God brings the minde of man to a consideration of the Law, and therein generally to see what is good, and what is evill, what is sin, and what is not sin. III. Upon a serious consideration of the Law, hee makes a man particularly to see and know his owne peculiar and proper sins, whereby hee offends God. IV. Upon the sight of sin, he smites the heart with a legall feare, whereby when man seeth his sins, hee makes him to feare punishment and hell, and to despaire of salvation, in regard of any thing in himselfe.

Now these foure actions are indeed no fruits of grace, for a Reprobate may goe thus farre; but they are only works of preparation, going before grace; the other actions which follow, are effects of grace. V. The fifth action of grace therefore is, to stirre up the minde to a serious consideration of the promise of salvation, propounded and published in the Gospell. VI. After this, the sixth is, to kindle in the heart some seeds or sparkes of faith, that is, a will and desire to beleeve, and grace to strive against doubting and despaire. Now at the same instant, when God beginnes to kindle in the heart any sparkes of faith, then also he justifies the sinner, and withall begins the worke of sanctification. VII. Then, so soone as faith is put into the heart, there is presently a combat: for it fighteth with doubting, despaire, & distrust. And in this combat faith shewes it selfe, by fervent, constant, and earnest invocation for pardon: and after invocation followes a strength and prevailing of this desire. VIII. Furthermore, God in mercie quiets and settles the Conscience, as touching the salvation of the soule, and the promise of life, whereupon it resteth and stayeth it selfe. IX. Next after this settled assurance and perswasion of mercie, followes a stirring up of the heart to Evangelicall sorrow, according to God, that is, a griefe for sin, because it is sin, and because God is offended: and then the Lord workes repentance, whereby the sanctified heart turnes it selfe unto him. And though this repentance bee one of the last in order, yet it shewes it selfe first: as when a candle is brought into a roome, wee first see the light before we see the candle, and yet the candle must needs bee before the light can bee. X. Lastly, God giveth a man grace to endevour to obey his Commandements by a new obedience. And by these degrees doth the Lord give the first grace.

The second worke of God tending to salvation, is the giving of the second grace: which is nothing else but the continuance of the first grace given. For looke as by creation God gave a being to man and all other creatures, and then by his providence continued the same being, which was as it were a second creation: so in bringing a man to salvation, God gives the first grace, for example, to beleeve and repent; and then in mercie gives the second, to persevere and continue in faith and repentance to the end. And this, if wee regard man himselfe, is verie necessarie; For as fire without supply of matter, whereby it is fed and continued, would soone goe out; so unlesse God of his goodnesse should follow his children, and by new and daily supplies continue his first grace in them, they would undoubtedly soone lose the same, and finally fall away.

The second Ground for the answer of this Question, is taken from some speciall places of Scripture, where the same is moved and resolved. The men that were at Peters Sermon, being touched with the sense of their owne miserie, upon the doctrine which had beene delivered, as the Holy Ghost saith, were pricked in their hearts, & cried unto the Apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we doe? Acts 2. 38. Peter moved by the Spirit of God, answers them, Repent, and be baptized for the remission of your sins. The like was the case of the Jaylor, who after that the stubbornnesse of his heart was beaten downe, by feare of the departure of the prisoners, he came trembling, and fell downe before Paul and Silas, and moved this question unto them; Sirs, What must I doe to be saved? Acts 16.33. to whom they gave answer; Beleeve in the Lord Jesu, and thou shalt be saved & thine household. The young man in the Gospell sues to Christ; and askes him, What shall I doe to bee saved? Mark. 10. vers. 17. &c. Christ answers him, Keepe the Commandements. When he replied, that he had kept them from his youth, Christ tels him, that hee must goe yet further, and sell all that he hath, and give to the poore. And John tels the Scribes and Pharises, who came unto his Baptisme, and confessed their sinnes, that if they would flie from the wrath to come, they must repent, and bring forth fruits worthy amendment of life, Matth. 3.8. From these places then I frame this answer to the question in hand. The man that would stand in the favour of God, and be saved, must doe foure things: first, humble himselfe before God: secondly, beleeve in Christ: thirdly, repent of his sinnes: fourthly, performe new obedience unto God.

Sect. 2.

Humiliation. For the first, Humiliation is indeed a fruit of faith: yet I put it in place before faith, because in practice it is first. Faith lieth hid in the heart, and the first effect whereby it appeares, is the abasing and humbling of our selves. And here wee are further to consider three points: first, wherein stands humiliation: secondly, the excellencie of it: thirdly, the Questions of Conscience that concerne it.

Touching the first point, Humiliation stands in the practice of three things. The first is, a sorrow of heart, whereby the sinner is displeased with himselfe, and ashamed in respect of his sinnes. The second is, a confession to God, wherein also three things are to be done: first, to acknowledge all our maine sinnes originall and actuall: secondly, to acknowledge our guiltinesse before God: thirdly, to acknowledge our just damnation for sinne. The third thing in Humiliation, is supplication made to God for mercie, as earnestly as in a matter of life and death: and of these three things wee have in Scripture the examples of Ezra, Daniel, and the prodigall sonne, Ezra 9. Dan. 9. Luk. 15.18.

The second point is, the excellencie of Humiliation, which stands in this, that it hath the promises of life eternall annexed to it. Esa. 57.15. I dwell in the high and holy place: with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to give life to them that are of a contrite heart. Psalm. 51.17. A contrite and a broken heart, O God, thou wilt not despise. Prov. 28.13 He that hideth his sins shall not prosper: but he that confesseth and forsaketh them, shall finde mercie. 1 Joh. 1.9. If wee acknowledge our sins, hee is faithfull and just to forgive us our sinnes, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousnes. By all these, and many other places, it is manifest, that in the verie instant, when a sinner begins truly in heart and conscience to humble himselfe, he is then entred into the state of salvation. So soone as David said, 2 Sam. 12.13. I have sinned, Nathan pronounceth in the name of the Lord, that his sins were put away. And David himselfe saith, alluding to the former place; I said I will confesse my sin, and loe thou forgavest the wickednesse of my sin. Psal. 32.5. When the prodigall sonne had but said, I will goe to my father, &c. Luk. 15.18. even then, before he humbled himselfe, his father meets him, and receives him.

The third point is, touching the Questions of conscience, concerning Humiliation, all which may be reduced to foure principall Cases.

I. Case. What if it fall out, that a man in humbling himselfe, cannot call to minde either all, or the most of his sins? Answer; A particular humiliation indeed is required, for maine and knowen sinnes: but yet there are two cases, wherein generall repentance will be accepted of God for unknowen sins. One is, when a man hath searched himselfe diligently, and by a serious examination passed thorow all the Commandements of God, and yet after such examination and search made, his particular offences are yet hidden, and not revealed unto him, so as hee cannot call them to remembrance; then the generall repentance is accepted. For this is answerable to Davids practice, who after long search, when hee could not attaine to the knowledge of his particular slips, then hee addresseth himselfe to a generall humiliation, saying, Who knoweth the errors of this life? cleanse me Lord from my secret faults, Psal. 19.21. and upon this hee was no doubt accepted. Again, when a man humbleth himselfe, and yet is prevented by the time, so as hee cannot search his heart and life as hee would; his generall repentance will bee taken and accepted of God. The truth hereof appeares in the theefe upon the crosse, who having no time to search himselfe, made no speciall humiliation, yet upon his generall confession he was accepted. Now the ground of this doctrine is this; He that truly repents of one sinne, in this case when he is prevented, is as if he repented of all.

II. Case. What must a man doe, that findes himselfe hard hearted, and of a dead spirit, so as hee cannot humble himselfe as he would? Answ. Such persons, if they humble themselves, they must bee content with that grace which they have received. For if thou be truly and unfainedly greeved for this, that thou canst not bee greeved, thy humiliation shall bee accepted. For that which Paul saith of almes, may be truly said in this case, that if there be a readie minde, a man shall be accepted according to that he hath, and not according to that he hath not, 2 Cor. 8.12.

III. Case. Whether the partie that is more greeved for losse of his friend, than for offence of God by his sinne, doth or can truly humble himselfe? Answ. A man may have a greater greefe for an earthly losse, than for the other, and yet bee truly greeved for his sinnes too. The reason is, because that is a bodily, naturall, and sensible losse, and accordingly sorrow for it is naturall. Now the sorrow for the offending of God, is no sensible thing, but supernaturall and spirituall; and sensible things doe more affect and urge the minde, than the other. David did notably humble himselfe for his sins, and hee did exceedingly mourne for the losse of his son Absalom, yea and more too than for his sinnes, Would God I had died for thee Absalom, O Absalom, my son, my son, &c. 2 Sam. 18.33. Again, I answer, that the sorrow of the minde must be measured by the intention of the affection, and by the estimation of the thing for which we sorrow. Now sorrow for sinne, though it bee lesse in respect of the intention thereof, yet is it greater in respect of the estimation of the minde: because they which truly mourn for their sinnes, grieve for the offence of God, as the greatest evill of all; and for the losse of the favour of God, as for the losse of the most precious thing in the world.

IV. Case. Whether it be necessary in Humiliation, that the heart should bee smitten with a sensible sorrow? Answ. I. In sorrow for sinne there are two things: first, to bee displeased for our sinnes: secondly, to have a bodily moving of the heart, which causeth crying and teares. The former of these is necessarie, namely, in heart to bee deeply displeased with our selves; the latter is not simply necessary, though it bee commendable in whomsoever it is, if it bee in truth: for Lydia had the first, but not the second. II. In falleth out oftentimes, that the greatnesse of the griefe taketh away the sensible paine, and causeth a numnednesse of the heart, so that the party greeveth not. III. Sometimes the complexion will not afford teares: and in such there may bee true humiliation, though with drie cheekes.

Sect. 3.

Faith in Christ. The second thing to bee done for the attaining of Gods favour, and consequently of salvation, is to beleeve in Christ. In the practice of a Christian life, the duties of humiliation and faith cannot bee severed; yet for doctrines sake, I distinguish them. In faith there are two things required, and to be performed on our behalfe. First, to know the points of religion, and namely, the summe of the Gospell, especially the promise of righteousnesse and life eternall by Christ. Secondly, to apprehend and apply the promise and withall the thing promised, which is Christ, unto our selves: and this is done, when a man upon the commandement of God, sets downe this with himselfe, that Christ and his merits belong unto him in particular, and that Christ is his wisdome, justification, sanctification, and redemption. This doctrine is plaine out of the sixth of John: for Christ is there propounded unto us, as the bread and the water of life. Therefore faith must not be idle in the braine, but it must take Christ, and apply him unto the soule and conscience, even as meat is eaten.

The Questions of Conscience touching Faith are these. First, how we may truly apply Christ, with all his benefits unto our selves. For wicked men apply Christ unto themselves falsely, in presumption, but few doe it truly as they ought to doe. I answer, that this may be done, wee must remember to doe two things. First, lay downe a foundation of this action, and then practise upon it. Our foundation must bee laid in the word, or else wee shall faile in our application; and it consists of two principles: The one is, As God gives a promise of life eternall by Christ, so hee gives Commandement, that every one in particular should apply the promise to himselfe.

The next is, that the Ministery of the Word is an ordinary meanes, wherein God doth offer, and apply Christ with all his benefits to the hearers, as if hee called them by their names; Peter, John, Cornelius, Beleeve in Christ, and thou shalt be saved. When we have rightly considered of our foundation: the second thing is to practise upon it, and that is, to give our selves to the exercises of faith and repentance; which stand in meditation of the Word, and prayer for mercy and pardon: and when this is done, then God gives the sense and increase of his grace. When Lydia was hearing the Sermon of Paul; then God opened her heart, Act. 16.14.

Secondly, it is demanded: When faith begins to breed in the heart, and when a man begins to beleeve in Christ? Answ. When he begins to be touched in conscience for his owne sinnes, and with all hungers and thirsts after Christ and his righteousnesse, then begitteth faith. The reason is plaine. As faith is renewed, so it is begun: but it is renewed when a man is touched in conscience for his sinnes, and begins anew to hunger after Christ; therefore when these things first shew themselves, then faith first begins. For these were the things that were in David, when he renewed his repentance.

Sect. 4.

Repentance. The third dutie necessary to salvation is Repentance. In which two things are to bee considered; the beginning, namely, a godly Sorrow, which is the beginning of Repentance, 2 Corinth. 7. and upon this sorrow a Change, which is indeed repentance it selfe. In sorrow wee consider, first, the nature of it; secondly, the properties of it. Touching the nature of sorrow, it is either inward or outward. The inward sorrow is, when a man is displeased with himselfe for his sinnes. The outward, when the heart declares the griefe thereof by teares, or such like signes. And sorrow in this case, called a godly sorrow, is more to be esteemed by the first of these, than by the second. The property of this sorrow is to make us to bee displeased with our selves for our sinnes directly, because they are sinnes and doe displease God. It there were no judge, no hell, nor death, yet wee must bee grieved, because we have offended so mercifull a God, and so loving a Father. And as godly sorrow wil make us thus to doe, so is it the next cause of repentance, and by this is repentance discerned.

The next thing in repentance is the change of the minde and whole man in affection, life, and conversation. And this standeth in a constant purpose of the minde, and resolution of the heart, not to sinne, but in every thing to doe the will of God. Hereupon Paul exhorteth them, to whom hee wrote, to continue in the love of God, and in the obedience of his Word, Act. 11.23. Barnabas when hee came to Antioch, and had seene the grace of God was glad, and exhorted all, that with purpose of heart they should cleave unto God, or continue with the Lord. So the Prophet Ezekiel saith, If the wicked will turne from all his sinnes, and keepe all my statutes, and doe that which is lawfull and right, he shall surely live, and shal not die, Ezech. 18.21. In this purpose stands the very nature of repentance, and it must be joyned with humiliation and faith, as a third thing available to salvation, and not to be severed from them: so a man may have many good things: as for example, he may be humble, and seeme to have some strength of faith; yet if there bee in the said man a want of this purpose and resolution not to sinne, the other are but dead things and unprofitable, and for all them he may come to eternall destruction. Furthermore, wee must distinguish this kinde of purpose from the minde and purpose of carnall men, theeves, drunkards, harlots, usurers; for they will confesse their sinnes, and be sorry for them, yea, and shed some teares, wishing they had never sinned as they have. In these men indeed there is a wishing will for the time, but no setled purpose. And it is a property of nature to avoid evill; but to have a constant resolution of not sinning is a gift of grace, and for this it is, that wee must labour, otherwise our repentance is no true and found repentance.

New obedience.

The fourth and last duty is to performe new obedience unto God in our life and conversation. In this new obedience three things are required. First, it must be a fruit of the Spirit of Christ in us: for when wee doe any good thing, it is Christ that doth it in us, Ioh. 15.5. to this purpose David prayes unto God, Psalme. 143.10. Let thy good Spirit leade me forth into the land of righteousnesse. And Paul exhorts the Galatians to walke in the Spirit; and then mark what follows: so shall not fulfill the lusts of the flesh. Gal. 5.16. Secondly, this new obedience must bee the keeping of every Commandement of God: for as S. Iames saith, Ia. 2.10. He that breaketh one Commandement is guilty of all: that is, hee that doth willingly and wittingly break any Commandement, and makes not conscience of some one, makes not conscience of any, and before God he is as guilty of all, as if he had broken all. Thirdly, in new obedience, the whole man must endevour to keepe the whole law in his minde, will, affections, and all the faculties of soule and body. As it is said of Iosiah, that he turned to God according to all the lawes of Moses, with all his heart, 2 King. 23. 25. This last point added to the rest, is the very forme and life of new obedience, and from hence it followes: first, that the repentant person must not live in the practice of any outward sin. Secondly, that there must be in him an inward resisting and restraining of the corruption of nature, and of the heart, that he may truly obey God, by the grace of the spirit of God. The heart of Ioseph was ready prest to resist the evill request of Potiphars wife, Gen. 39.9, 10. And David staid his affection from revenging himself upon Shemei, when he cursed him, 2 Sam. 16.10. Thirdly, that hee ought to stirre up and exercise the inward man, by all spirituall motions of Faith, Joy, Love, Hope, and the praise of God.

Now touching this point, there are two principall Questions propounded. First, How may a man frame this life to be in New obedience.

Answ. Though all the bookes of the old and new Testament are directon sufficient for a good life; yet a more special answer may be made out of the same, plainly, and briefly; That there are three maine grounds or rules of New Obedience. The first is laid downe by our Saviour Christ, Luke 9.23. If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his crosse, and follow me. The meaning is this: Every one that will become a scholler in the Schoole of Christ, and learne obedience unto God, must denie himselfe, that is, hee must in the first place exalt and magnifie the grace of God, & become nothing in himselfe, renouncing his owne reason, will, and affections, and subjecting them to the will dome and will of God in all things; yea, esteeming all things in the earth, even those that are deerest unto him, as drosse and dung in regard of the kingdome of Christ. Againe, hee must take up his Crosse, that is, hee ought always to make a fore-hand reckoning, even of private crosses, & particular afflictions: and when they come, to beare them with cheerefulnesse. This done, hee must follow Christ, by practising the vertues of meeknesse, patience, love, and obedience, and by being conformable to his death, in crucifying the body of sinne in himselfe. The second rule is propounded by Paul, Act. 24.14. To beleeve all things that are written in the law and the Prophets: and that is, to hold and embrace the same faith, which was embraced by the Saints and servants of God in ancient times, and which was written by Moses and the Prophets. Againe, in all reverence to subject himselfe to the true manner of worshipping and serving God, revealed in his word: and not to depart from the same doctrine and worship, either to the right hand, or to the left. The third and last rule is, to have and to keepe faith and a good conscience, 1 Tim. 1.19. Now faith is preserved by knowledge of the doctrine of the Law and the Gospell, by yeelding assent unto the same doctrine, beleeving it to bee true, and by a particular application of it unto a mans selfe, specially of the promise of righteousnesse, and life everlasting, in and by Christ. Againe, that a man may keepe a good conscience, he must doe 2. things. First, in the course of his life; hee must practise the duties of the generall Calling in the particular: so as as though they be two distinct in nature; yet they may be both one in use and practice. Secondly, in all events that come to passe, evermore in patience and silence he must submit himself to the good will and pleasure of God. Thus it is said of Aaron, that when God had destroyed his sonnes for offering up strange fire before him, he held his peace, Levit. 10.3. And David sheweth that it was his practice, when being afflicted, he saith, I was as dumbe, and opened not my mouth, because thou Lord didst it, Psal. 39.9. Thirdly, if at any time he falleth, either through infirmitie, the malice of Satan, or the violence of some temptation, he must humble himselfe before God, labour to breake off his sinne, and recover himselfe by repentance. And these three be the principall and maine grounds of New-obedience.

The second Question. Considering that all good works are the fruits of a regenerate person, and are contained under New obedience; how may a man doe a good worke, that may be accepted of God, and please him?

For resolution whereof, it is to be carefully remembred, that to the doing of a good worke, sundry things are required; whereof some in nature doe goe before the worke to be done, some doe accompany the doing thereof, and some againe doe follow the worke, being required to be done when the worke is done.

Before the worke there must goe Reconciliation, whereby the person is reconciled unto God in Christ, and made acceptable to him. For it is a cleare case, that no worke of man can be accepted of God, unlesse the person of the worker be approved of him. And the workes of men (of what dignitie soever) are not to be esteemed by the shew and outward appearance of them, but by the minde and condition of the doer. Againe, before wee doe any good worke, we must by prayer lift up our hearts unto God, and desire him to inable us by his spirit to doe it, and to guide us by the same in the action which wee are about to doe. This did the Prophet David oftentimes, as we may reade in the Psalmes, but especially in Psal. 143.10. when he saith, Teach me to doe thy will, O God; for thou art my God; let thy good Spirit leade me unto the land of righteousnesse. And oftentimes in the 119. Psalme: Teach mee, O Lord, the way of thy statutes, verse 33. Give me understanding, 34. Direct mee in the path of thy commandements, 35. Againe, Teach mee judgement and knowledge, 66. Let my heart be upright in thy statutes, 80. Stablish mee, according to thy promise, 116. Direct my steps in thy word, and let none iniquitie have dominion over mee, 133.

In the doing of the worke wee are to consider two things; the matter, and the manner or forme of doing it. For the manner, it must be a worke commanded in the word of God, either expresly or generally: for it is commands perfect obedience, no man can possibly doe a good worke.

Furthermore, touching the manner, it must be done to good and lawfull ends. The ends of a good worke are manifold: First, the honour and glory of God. Whether yee eat or drinke, or whatsoever ye doe, doe all to the glory of God, 2 *Cor.*10.31. Secondly, the testification of our thankfulnesse unto God, that hath redeemed vs by Christ. The third is, to edifie our neighbour, and to further him in the way to life everlasting. *Matt.*5.16. Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good workes, and glorifie your Father which is in heaven. The fourth is, to exercise and increase our faith and repentance, both which bee much strengthned and confirmed by the practice of good works. Fiftly, that we may escape the punishment of sinne, the destruction of the wicked; and obtaine the reward of the righteous, life everlasting. This was the end that Paul aimed at in the course of his calling; to which purpose hee saith, From henceforth there is laid up for mee the crowne of righteousnesse, which the Lord, the righteous Iudge, shall give mee at that day, 2 *Tim.*4.8. Sixtly, that wee may be answerable to our calling, in doing the duties thereof, and in walking as children of light, redeemed by Christ Iesus. When David kept his fathers sheepe, he behaved himselfe as a shepheard; but when he was anointed King over Israel, God gave him an heart and resolution, to carrie himselfe as a King and Governour of his people. Looke then as David did, so ought wee even by our works to be answerable to our callings. Seventhly, that wee may pay the debt which wee owe unto God: for wee are debters to him in sundry regards; as wee are his creatures, as we are his servants, as wee are his children; in a word, as wee are redeemed by Christ: and our whole debt is, our dutie of praise and thanksgiving.

After the worke is done, then comes the acceptation of it. God accepts of our works divers wayes. First, in that he pardoneth the fault which comes from us. Secondly, in that hee approves his owne good worke in us. Thirdly, in that he doth give unto the doers of them a crowne of righteousnesse and glorie, according to his promise, 2 *Tim.*4.8. *Rev.*2.10. Wee then, after wee have done the worke, must humble our selves, and intreat the Lord to pardon the want of our works, and say with *David, Lord enter not into iudgement with thy servant, Psal.*143.2. and with *Daniel, Lord, unto us belongeth open shame and confusion; but to thee righteousnesse, compassion, and forgivenesse, Dan.*9.8,9. And the reason is plaine, because in us there is no goodnesse, no holinesse, no righteousnesse, nor any thing that may present us acceptable in his sight: and for this cause Paul saith, I know nothing by my selfe, yet am I not thereby justified. Great reason then, that we should humble our selves before God for our wants, and pray unto him, that he will in mercy accept our endevour, and confirme the good worke begun in us by his holy Spirit.

CHAP. VI.

Of the second maine Question touching assurance of salvation.

II. Question.

How a man may be in conscience assured of his owne salvation?

Before I come to the Question it selfe, this conclusion is to be laid downe as a maine Ground; That election, vocation, faith, adoption, justification, sanctification, and eternall glorification, are never separated in the salvation of any man, but like inseparable companions, goe hand in hand; so as he that can be assured of one of them, may infallibly conclude in his owne heart, that he hath, and shall have interest in all the other in his due time. This is plaine by the words of *S. Paul, Rom.*8.30. Whom he predestinate, them also he called; whom he called, them also he justified; whom he justified, them also he glorified. In which place, the Apostle compares the causes of salvation to a chaine of many links, whereof every one is so coupled to the other, that he which taketh hold of the highest, must needs carry all the rest with him. Againe, amongst these links, Faith is one, a principall grace of God, whereby man is ingrafted into Christ, and thereby becomes one with Christ, and Christ one with him. *Ephes.*3.17. Now whosoever is by faith united unto Christ, the same is elected, called, justified, and sanctified. The reason is manifest. For in a chaine the two extremes are knit together by the middle links; and in the order of causes of happinesse and salvation, faith hath a middle place, and by it hath the childe of God assured hold of his election, and effectuall vocation, and consequently of his glorification in the kingdome of heaven. To this purpose saith Saint John, chap.3.verf.36. He that beleeveth in the Sonne, hath everlasting life. And ch.5.v.24. He that beleeveth in him that sent mee, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but hath passed from death to life. This is the Ground.

Now for answer to the question, divers places of Scripture are to be scanned, wherein this case of conscience is fully answered and resolved.

Sect. 1.

The first place is *Rom.*8.16. And the Spirit of God testifieth together with our spirits, that wee are the sonnes of God. In these words are two testimonies of our adoption set downe: The first is the Spirit of God dwelling in us, and testifying unto us, that wee are Gods children. But some will haply demand, How Gods spirit gives witnesse, seeing now there are no revelations? Ans. Extraordinary revelations are ceased, and yet the holy Ghost in and by the word, reveleth some things unto men: for which cause he is called truly the *Spirit of Revelation, Eph.*1.5. Againe, the holy Ghost gives testimonie, by applying the promise of remission of sinnes, and life everlasting by Christ, particularly to the heart of man, when the same is generally propounded, in the ministerie of the word. And because many are ready presumptuously to say, they are the children of God, when they are not, and that they have the witnesse of Gods Spirit, when in truth they want it; therefore we are to put a difference betweene this carnall conceit and the true testimonie of the Spirit. Now there be two things, whereby they may be discerned one from the other. The first is, by the meanes. For the true testimonie of the holy Ghost is wrought ordinarily by the preaching, reading, and meditation of the word of God; as also by prayer, and the right use of the Sacraments. But the presumptuous testimonie ariseth in the heart, and is framed in the braine, out of the use of these meanes; or though in the use, yet with want of the blessing of God concurring with the meanes. The second is, by the effects and fruits of the Spirit: for it stirres up the heart to prairer and invocation of the name of God, *Zach.*12.10. yea it causeth a man to crie and call earnestly unto God, in the time of distresse, with a sense and feeling of his owne miseries; and with deepe sighs and groanes which cannot be uttered, to crave mercy and grace at his hands, as of a loving Father, *Rom.*8.26. Thus did Moses crie unto heaven in his heart, when he was in distresse at the red sea, *Exod.*14.15. And this gift of praier is an infallible testimonie of Gods Spirit, which cannot stand with carnall presumption.

The second testimonie of our adoption is our spirit, that is, our conscience sanctified and renewed by the Holy Ghost. And this also is knowne and discerned, first, by the griefe of the heart for offending God, called godly sorrow, 1 *Cor.*7.10. secondly, by a resolute purpose of the heart, and endevour of the whole man in all things to obey God: thirdly, by savouring the things of the Spirit, *Rom.*8.5. that is, by doing the works of the Spirit, with joy and cheerefulnesse of heart, as in the presence of God, and as his children and servants.

Now put the case that the testimony of the Spirit be wanting: then I answer, that the other testimony, the sanctification of the heart, will suffice to assure us. Wee know it sufficiently to be true, and not painted fire, if there be heat, though there be no flame.

Put the case againe, that the testimony of the Spirit be wanting, and our sanctification be uncertaine unto us, how then may wee be assured? The answer is, that we must then have recourse to the first beginnings and motions of sanctification, which are these: First, to feele our inward corruptions. Secondly, to be displeased with our selves for them. Thirdly, to begin to hate sin. Fourthly, to grieve so oft as wee fall and offend God. Fifthly, to avoid the occasions of sin. Sixtly, to endevour to doe our dutie, and to use good meanes. Seventhly, to desire to sin no more. And lastly, to pray to God for his grace. Where these and the like motions are, there is the spirit of God, whence they proceed: and sanctification is begun. One apple is sufficient to manifest the life of the tree; and one good and constant motion of grace is sufficient to manifest sanctification. Againe, it may be demanded, what must be done, if both be wanting? Ans. Men must not despaire, but use good meanes, and in time they shall be assured.

Sect. 2.

The second place is the 15. Psalme: in the first verse whereof this question is propounded, namely, Who of all the members of the Church shall have his habitation in heaven? The answer is made in the verses following: and in the second verse he sets downe three generall notes of the said person. One is, to walke uprightly in sinceritie, approving his heart and life to God: the second is, to deale justly in all his doings: the third is for speech, to speake the truth from the heart, without guile or flatterie. And because wee are easily deceived in generall sinnes, in the 3, 4, and 5 verses there are set downe seven more evident & sensible notes of sinceritie, justice, and truth. One is in speech, not to take up or carry abroad false reports and slanders. The second is, in our dealings, not to doe wrong to our neighbour, more than to our selves. The third is, in our company, to contemne wicked persons worthy to be contemned. The fourth is, in our estimation we have of others, and that is, to honour them that feare God. The fifth is in our words, to sweare & not to change: that is, to make conscience of our word and promise, especially if it be confirmed by oath. The sixth is, in taking of gaine, not to give money to usury, that is, not to take increase for bare lending, but to lend freely to the poore. The last is, to give testimony without bribery or partiality. In the fifth verse is added a reason of the answer: he that in his endevour doth all these things, shall never be moved, that is, cut off from the Church as an hypocrite.

Sect. 3.

The third place of Scripture is the first Epistle of John: the principall scope whereof, is to give a full resolution to the conscience of man, touching the certainty of his salvation. And the principall grounds of assurance, which which are there laid downe, may be reduced to three heads.

The first is this; He that hath communion or fellowship with God in Christ, may be undoubtedly assured of his salvation. This conclusion is propounded, chap.1.v.3,4. where the Apostle tels the Church, that the end of the preaching of the Gospell unto them was, that they might have fellowship not onely mutually among themselves, but also with God the Father, & with his Son Iesus Christ. And further, that having both knowledge & assurance of this heavenly communion, to be begun in this life, and perfected in the life to come, their joy might be full, that is, they might thence reape matter of true joy and sound comfort unto their soules and consciences. Now whereas it may be haply demanded by some beleevers, how they should come to this assurance; S. Iohn answers in this Epistle, that the certaintie thereof may be gathered by foure infallible notes. The first is, Remission of sins. For though God be in himselfe most holy and pure, and no mortall man (being uncleane and polluted by sin) can have fellowship with him, yet God hath shewed his mercy to those that beleeve in him, and hath accepted of the blood of Iesus Christ his Son, whereby they are cleansed from all their corruptions, v. 7. If here it be asked, how this pardon and forgiveneſſe may be knowne; It is answered, by two signes: One is humble and hearty confeſſion of our sins unto God; for so saith the Apoſtle, If wee confeſſe our sins, he is faithfull and juſt to forgive us our sins, and to cleanſe us from all iniquitie, v. 9. The other is the pacified conſcience; for being juſtified by faith, wee have peace with God: and, If our heart condemne us not, (that is, if our conſcience in reſpect of sin doth not accuſe us) then have wee boldneſſe towards God, chap.3. v. 21. The second note of fellowship with God is the ſanctifying ſpirit, whereby we are renewed in holineſſe and righteouſneſſe: Hereby wee know that he abideth in us, even by the Spirit which hee hath given us, chap.4.v.24. The third is holineſſe and uprightneſſe of heart and life. To this end the Apoſtle ſaith, If wee ſay that wee have fellowſhip with him, and walke in darkneſſe, wee lie, and doe not truly: but if wee walke in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowſhip one with another, &c. chap.1.6,7. The fourth is, perſeverance in the knowledge and obedience of the Goſpel. So the ſame Apoſtle exhorteth the Church: Let therefore abide in you that ſame doctrine concerning Chriſt, which yee have heard from the beginning. If that which yee have heard from the beginning remaine in you, that is, if yee believe and obey it) you ſhall alſo continue in the Sun, and in the Father, chap. 2.24.

The ſecond Ground: He that is the adopted ſonne of God, muſt undoubtedly be ſaved. This point the Apoſtle plainly declareth, when he ſaith, Beloved, now are wee the ſonnes of God. And wee know (that is, wee are undoubtedly aſſured by faith) that when Chriſt ſhall appeare in glory, wee ſhall be like unto him: for wee ſhall ſee him as he is. That the latter part of theſe words is thus to be expounded, I gather out of chap.2.28. as alſo by comparing this text with that of S. Paul, where he ſaith, When Chriſt which is our life ſhall appeare, then ſhall wee alſo appeare with him in glory. And againe, If wee be ſons, wee are alſo heires, even the heires of God, and heires annexed with Chriſt, if ſo be that wee ſuffer with him, that wee may alſo be glorified with him. Now put the caſe, that the conſcience of the beleever will not reſt in this, but deſires to be further reſolved touching the certaintie of his adoption: Then I anſwer, that he muſt have recourſe unto the ſignes whereby a ſonne of God may be diſcerned from a childe of the deuill: and theſe are principally three. The firſt is, truly to beleeve in the name of the Son of God: for thoſe that have God for their Father, are made the ſons of God by faith in Ieſus Chriſt. And this faith ſhewes it ſelfe by obedience: for hereby wee are ſure that wee know Chriſt, (that is, that wee beleeve in him and apply him with all his benefits unto our ſoules) if wee keepe his commandements. Nay further, He that ſayes, I know him, and keepes not his commandements, is a lier, and the truth is not in him, chap.2.34. The ſecond ſigne is, a heartie deſire and earneſt endevour to be cleanſed of his corruptions. Every ſon of God that hath this hope, purifieth himſelfe, even as a Chriſtian is pure, chap.3.v.3. The third is, the love of a Chriſtian, becauſe he is a Chriſtian: for hereby (ſayes the Apoſtle) are the children of God knowne from the children of the devill, becauſe the ſons of Satan doe hate their brethren (as Cain did his brother Abel) even for the good works which they doe. On the other ſide, Gods adopted ſons may hereby know themſelves to be tranſlated from death to life, becauſe they love the brethren, chap.3. 10, 11, 12, &c.

The third Ground: They that are aſſured of the love of God to them in particular, may alſo be certainly aſſured of their owne ſalvation. This doctrine followes neceſſarily upon the Apoſtles words, chap.4.v.9. For thoſe whom God hath loved from all eternitie, to them he hath manifeſted his love, by ſending his onely begotten Son into the world, that they might live through him eternally. But how may a man be aſſured of Gods ſpeciall love and favour? The ſame Apoſtle anſwers, By two notes; The firſt is, the love of our brethren, and that according to Gods commandement, wherein it is commanded, that he that loves God ſhould love his brother alſo, 4.21. And if any man ſay, I love God, and hate his brother, he is a lier. For how can he that loveth not his brother whom he hath ſeene, love God whom he hath not ſeene? 4. 20. Now, that that a man deceive not himſelfe in the love of his brother, S. Iohn gives three rules: One, that Chriſtian brotherly love ſhould not be for outward reſpects or conſiderations, but principally becauſe they are the ſons of God, and members of Chriſt. Every one that loveth him which did beget, doth love God the Father, loveth him alſo which is the partner of him, 5.1. Another is, that it muſt not be outward in ſhew only; but inward in the heart. Let us not love in word or in tongue only, but in deed and in truth. 3. 18. Laſtly, that it be not only in time of proſperitie, but when he ſtands in moſt need of our love. For whoſoever hath this worlds good, and ſeeth his brother have need, and ſhutteth up the bowels of compaſſion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? 3.17. The ſecond note of Gods love unto us is our love to God. For thoſe whom God loveth in Chriſt, to them he giveth the grace to love him againe. And this loving of him againe is an evidence taken of that love wherewith he loveth them. So ſaith the Apoſtle, We love him becauſe he loved us firſt, 4. 19. If it be demanded, how a man may be aſſured that hee loveth God; the anſwer is, he may know it by two things; Firſt, by his conformity to him in holineſſe. The childe that loves his father, will be willing to tread in the ſteps of his father: and ſo in like manner, he that loveth God, will endevour even as he is ſo to begin this world, 4.17. But how is this? not in equalitie and perfection, but in ſimilitude and conformitie, ſtriving to be holy as he is holy, and endevouring to doe his will in all things. Secondly, by the weaning of his affections from the things of this world, yea from all pleaſures and delights of this preſent life, ſo farre forth as they are ſevered from the feare and love of God. Love not this world, nor the things that are in the world: if any man love this world, the love of the Father is not in him, 2.15.

Sect. 4.

The fourth place is in 2 Tim. 2.19. The foundation of God remaineth ſure, and hath this ſeale, The Lord knoweth who are his, and let every one that calleth upon the name of the Lord, depart from iniquitie. In theſe words, Paul goeth about to cut off an offence, which the Church might take by reaſon of the fall of Hymenæus and Philetus, who ſeemed to bee pillars and principall men in the Church: And to confirme them againſt this offence, he ſaith; The foundation of God, that is, the decree of Gods election, ſtandeth firme and ſure: ſo as thoſe which are elected of God ſhall never fall away, as theſe two have done. And this he declares by a double ſimilitude: Firſt of all he ſaith, the election of God is like the foundation of an houſe which ſtandeth faſt, though all the building be ſhaken. Secondly he ſaith, that election hath the ſeale of God, and therefore may not bee changed, becauſe things which are ſealed, are thereby made ſure and authenticall. Now this ſeale hath two parts: the firſt concerns God, in that every man's ſalvation is written in the booke of life, and God knoweth who are his. And becauſe it might be ſaid, God indeed knowes who ſhall be ſaved, but what is that to us? we know not ſo much of our ſelves: Therefore Saint Paul to anſwer this, lets downe a ſecond part of this ſeale which concernes man, and is imprinted in his heart and conſcience: which alſo hath two branches; the gift of invocation, and a watchfull care, to make conſcience of all unrighteouſneſſe, in thoſe words, and let every one that calleth upon the name of the Lord, depart from iniquitie. Whereby hee ſignifieth, that thoſe that can call upon God, and give him thanks for his benefits, and withall in their lives make conſcience of ſin, have the ſeale of Gods election imprinted in their hearts, and may aſſure themſelves they are the Lords.

Sect. 5.

A fifth place of Scripture touching this queſtion is; 2 Pet. 1.10. Give all diligence to make your election ſure; for if you doe theſe things ye ſhall never fall. Which words contains two parts: firſt, an exhortation to make our election ſure, not with God, for with him both it and all other things are unchangeable; but to our ſelves in our owne hearts and conſciences. Secondly, the meanes whereby to come to this aſſurance, that is, by doing the things before named, in the 5, 6, 7. verſes, and that is nothing elſe, but to practiſe the vertues of the morall Law: theſe ſeverally I will briefly ſhew what they are, and why I lie in the text.

To ſtuffe adde vertue. By faith, he meaneth true religion and that gift of God, whereby we put our truſt and confidence in Chriſt. By vertue, hee meaneth no ſpeciall vertue, but (as I take it) an honeſt and upright life before men, ſhining in the vertues and workes of the morall Law. By knowledge, he means a gift of God, whereby a man may judge how to carry himſelfe warily and uprightly before men. By temperance, is underſtood a gift of God, whereby we keepe a moderation of our naturall appetite, eſpecially about meat, drink, and attire. By Patience, is meant a vertue, whereby we moderate our ſorrow in enduring affliction. Godlineſſe is another vertue, whereby we worſhip God in the duties of the firſt table. Brotherly kindneſſe is alſo that vertue, whereby wee embrace the Church of God, and the members thereof with the bowels of love. And in the laſt place, Love is that vertue, whereby we are well affected to all men, even to our enemies. Now having made a rehearſall of theſe vertues, in the tenth verſe hee ſaith, If ye do theſe things ye ſhall never fall, that is to ſay, If yee exerciſe your ſelves in theſe things, you may hereby be well aſſured and perſwaded of your election and ſalvation.

CHAP.

CHAP. VII.

Of the third maine Question, touching distresse of minde; and generally of all distresses, and their remedies.

III. Question.

How a man being in distresse of minde, may be comforted and relieved?

Answ. Omitting all circumstances (considering that much might be spoken touching this Question) I will onely set downe that which I take to bee most materiall to the doubt in hand.

Distresse of minde in generall. Prov. 18. 14.

Distresse of minde (which Salomon cals a broken or troubled spirit) is, when a man is disquieted and distempered in conscience, and consequently in his affections, touching his estate before God. This distresse hath two degrees, the lesse and the greater. The lesse is a single Feare or griefe, when a man standeth in suspense and doubt of his owne salvation, and in feare that he shall be condemned. The greater distresse is Despaire, when a man is without all hope of salvation in his own sense and apprehension. I call Despaire a greater distresse, because it is not a distinct kinde of trouble of minde, (as some doe thinke) but the highest degree in every kinde of distresse. For every distresse in the minde is a feare of condemnation, and comes at length to desperation, if it be not cured.

In speciall.

All distresse of minde ariseth from temptation, either begun or continued. For these two doe so necessarily follow, and so inseparably accompanie each the other, that no distresse of what kinde soever, can be severed from temptation. And therefore according to the divers sorts of temptations that doe befall men, must the distresses of the minde be distinguished.

Now Temptations be of two sorts; either of triall, or seducement. Temptations of triall are such as doe befall men, for the triall and proofe of the grace of God which is in them. The Temptations of triall are two-fold: the first is a comfort of the conscience directly and immediately with the wrath of God; which being the most grievous temptation that can be, it causeth the greatest and deepest distresse of conscience. The second is the Triall of the Crosse, that is, of outward affliction, whereby God maketh proofe of the faith of his children; and not onely that, but of their hope, patience, and affiance in his mercie for their deliverance.

Temptations of seducement bee such, as wherein men are enticed to fall from God and Christ, to any kinde of evill. And these are of three kindes. The first is immediately from the Devill; and it is called the temptation of Blas-

A phemies, or the Blasphemous temptation. The second is, from a mans owne sinnes, originall and actuall; and this also hath sundry branches, as wee shall see afterward. The third proceeds from Imagination corrupted and depraved. Now answerable to these severall kindes of Temptations, are the severall kindes of Distresses. And as all temptations may be reduced to those five which have beene before named, so may all distresses be reduced to five heads arising of the former temptations.

Sect. 2.

The Generall Remedie of all Distresses.

Before I come to handle them in particular, we are to consider in the first place, what B is the best and most sure Generall Remedie, which may serve for all these, or any other kinde of temptation that is incident to man: and by this, the curing of any particular distresse will be more easie and plaine.

This generall Remedie is the Applying of the promise of life everlasting, in and by the bloud of Christ. For no Physicke, no art or skill of man, can cure a wounded and distressed conscience, but only the bloud of Christ. And that this is the soveraigne remedie of all other, no man doubteth. The maine dificultie is, touching the manner of proceeding, in the application of the promise. Herein therefore three things must be performed.

C First of all, the partie must disclose the cause of his particular distresse, that the remedie may the better be applyed. For the truth is, that the very opening of the cause is a great ease to the minde, before any remedie be applyed. Yet by the way, this care must be had, that the thing to be revealed be not hurtfull to the partie to whom it is made knowne. For the distresse may haply arise of some confederacie in the matters of Treason, by the concealing whereof, the partie to whom they are revealed may intangle himselfe in the same danger.

D Secondly, if the cause may be knowne, (for sometime it is hid from the party distressed) then triall must be made, whether the said partie be fit for comfort yea or no? For if he be found to be unfit, the word of God shall be misapplyed and consequently abused. His fitnesse for comfort may be found out, by searching whether he be humbled for his sinnes, or not: for men may be in great distresse, and yet not touched at all for their sinnes. This humiliation stands in sorrow for sinne, with confession of the same unto God, and in earnest prayer for the pardon thereof, with an heartie desire of amendment of life. But if on the other side, the partie be unhumbled, then the first and principall care must bee to worke in him some beginning of humiliation. This may be done in a friendly and Christian talke and conference, whereby he must first be brought to see, and well to consider his owne sins: secondly, to grieve, and to be sorrie sorrie for them, at the least, for some of the principall.

A And touching this Sorrow, two things must be remembred: first, that the nature of worldly sorrow must be altered, by being turned, and changed into sorrow according to God. If a man be in some danger of his life, by bleeding at the nose, experience teacheth, the counsell of thy Physitian is, to open a veine, and let the partie blood in the arme, that the course thereof may bee turned another way: The like order is to be taken with men that are troubled with worldly sorrow in their distresse; and that is, to turne the course of their griefe, by causing them to grieve, not for worldly respects, or onely in consideration of the punishment due unto them for their sins, but principally for the very offence of God, in and by their sinnes committed.

B This done, a second care must be had, that this sorrow for sin bee not confused, but a distinct sorrow. The man that is in sorrow must not be grieved only, because hee is as other men are, a sinner; but more especially for his and that particular sinne, by which it comes to passe, that he is such, or such a sinner; that so his sorrow in respect of sinne, may be distinct, & brought as it were to some particular head. And men in this case must deale with the partie distressed, as Surgeons are wont to doe with a tumor or swelling in the body, whose manner is, first to apply drawing and ripening plaisters to the place affected, to bring the sore to an head, that the corruption may issue out at some one place: and then afterward healing plaisters, which are of great use to cure the same: Even so confused griefe must be reduced to some particulars: and then, and not before, is a man fit for comfort, when his conscience is touched in special, in regard of some one or more distinct and severall offences. And he that is grieved for one sinne truly and unfainedly from his heart, shall proportionally be grieved for all the sinnes that hee knoweth to be in himselfe.

C The third thing required in applying this remedie is, the ministring and conveying of comfort to the mind of him that hath confessed his sinnes, and is truly humbled for them: and it is a point of the greatest moment of all. Where if the Question bee, how this comfort should be ministred; the answer is, it may be done, by bringing the party troubled, within the compasse of the promise of life. And there be two waies of doing this: the one false, and the other true.

The false way of ministring comfort.

D Some thinke, that men may bee brought within the Covenant, by the doctrine of Universall grace and redemption. But this way of perswading a man that hee hath title in the Covenant of grace, is both false and unfit. False it is, because all the promises of the Gospel are limited with the condition of Faith and Repentance, not being universall to all, but made only to such persons as repent and beleeve: therefore they are indefinite in regard of whole mankind, and to beleevers only they are universall.

It is objected, that God would have all men to be saved. 1 Tim. 2. 3.

Answ. The Apostle is the best expounder of himselfe, and hee saith in Acts to the same effect, The time of ignorance God regarded not, but NOW hee admonisheth all men every where to repent. Act. 17. 30. In which words, Paul addes this circumstance of time [now,] to limit this good will of God to the last age of the world, after the comming of Christ in the flesh, and not to inlarge the same to all the posteritie of Adam. And so must hee be understood in the place to Timothie, God would have all men to bee saved, that is, now in this last age of the world. And thus the same Apostle, 2 Cor. 6. 2. expounds a certaine prophecie of Isai. concerning the acceptable time of grace. Now, saith he, is the acceptable time: behold, [Now] is the day of salvation: Meaning the time of the new Testament. And, Col. 1. 26. The mystery hid from the beginning is now made manifest to the Saints. And Rom. 16. 26. The revelation of the secret mysterie is now opened. Esa 49. 8. All which, and many other places about the same matter, having this circumstance of time [Now,] must needs bee limited to this last age of the world. As for the note of universalitie, 2 All, it must not be understood of all particulars, but of all kinds, sorts, conditions, and states of men, as may be gathered out of the former words: I would that prayers be made for all men, not for every particular man: (for there be some that sinne unto death, for whom we may not pray,) but for all states of men, as 1 Joh. 5. 16. wel Princes as subjects, poore as rich, base as noble, learned as unlearned, &c.

But the saying of Paul is urged, 2 Corin. 5. 18. God was in Christ, reconciling the World unto himselfe: therefore the promise in Christ belongs to the whole World, and consequently to every one. Answ. The same Apostle shall againe answer for himselfe, Rom. 11. 15. The casting away of the Iewes is the reconciling of the world, that is, of the Gentiles in the last age of the world: for so hee said before more plainly, The falling away of the Iewes is the riches of the world; and the diminishing of them, the riches of the Gentiles. And so must that place to the Corinths be understood, namely, not of all and every man, that lived in all ages and times; but of them that were (by the dispensation of the Gospel) to be called out of all kingdomes, and nations, after the death and ascension of Christ.

Thus then the promise of salvation is not universall, without exception, or restraint: and therefore application made by the universalitie of the promise admits some fallshood.

Secondly, this way of applying is also unfit. For the reason must be framed thus: Christ died for all men: but thou art a man: therefore Christ

Christ died for him. The partie distressed will grant all, and say, Christ indeed died for him, if hee would have received Christ; but he by his sinnes hath cut himselfe off from his owne Saviour, and hath forsaken him, so as the benefit of his death will doe him no good.

The grounds of comfort.

The right way of ministring Comfort to a partie distressed followeth. In the handling whereof, first, I will lay downe the Grounds, whereby any man that belongs to God, may bee brought within the Covenant. And then I will shew the right way how they must be used and applyed.

For the first, Recourse must not bee had to all graces, or to all degrees and measure of grace; but only such, as a troubled Conscience may feele and reach unto. For those that be the true children of God, and have excellent measure of grace, when they are in distresse, feele little or no grace at all in themselves. The graces then, that serve for this purpose, are three: Faith, Repentance, and the true Love of God, which is the fruit of them both. And that wee may the more easily and truly discerne of them, and not to be deceived, inquirie must be made, what be the seeds and beginnings of them all.

The first Ground of grace is this; A desire to repent, and beleeve, in a touched heart and conscience, is faith and repentance it selfe; though not in nature, yet in Gods acceptation. I prove it thus. It is a principle granted and confessed of all men, that in them which have grace, God accepteth the will for the deed. If there bee a willing minde (saith the Apostle) it is accepted, not according to that a man hath not, but according to that hee hath. Againe, God hath annexed a promise of blessednesse, and life everlasting to the true and unfained desire of grace. Whence it is, that they are in Scripture pronounced blessed, which hunger and thirst after righteousnesse. And who are they but such as feele themselves to want all righteousnesse, and doe truly and earnestly desire it in their hearts. For hunger and thirst argues both a want of some thing, and a feeling of the want. And to this purpose the holy Ghost saith, To him that is athirst will I give to drinke the water of life freely. Now this thirstie soule, is that man which feeles himself destitute of all grace and Gods favour in Christ, and withall doth thirst after the blood of Christ, and desires to bee made partaker thereof. God is woont mercifully to accept of the desire of any good thing, when a man is in necessity, and stands in want thereof. The Lord (sayes David) heares the desire of the poore, that is, of them that are in distresse, either of body or minde: Yea, he will fulfill the desire of them that feare him.

Rev. 21. 6.

Psal. 10. 17.

Psal. 145 19.

It will be said, that the desire of good things is naturall: and therefore God will not regard mens desires.

I answer, Desires be of two sorts; Some be of such things as men by the meere light of nature know to be good: for example, the desire of wisedome, of civill vertue, of honour, of happinesse, and such like: and all these nature can desire. Others be above nature, as the desire of remission of sinnes, reconciliation, and sanctification: and they which seriously desire these, have a promise of blessednesse and life everlasting. And hence it followes, that desire of mercy, in the want of mercy, is mercie it selfe; and desire of grace, in the want of grace, is grace it selfe.

A second Ground is this; A godly sorrow whereby a man is grieved for his sinnes, because they are sinnes, is the beginning of repentance, and indeed for substance is repentance it selfe. The Apostle Paul rejoyced that he had in the worke of his Ministerie wrought this godly sorrow in the hearts of the Corinthians, calling it sorrow that causeth repentance not to be repented of. This sorrow may bee discerned in this sort: The heart of him in whom it is, is so affected, that though there were no conscience, nor devill to accuse, no hell for condemnation, yet it would be grieved in it selfe, because God by sinne is displeased and offended.

2 Cor. 7. 9.

If it bee alleaged, that every one cannot reach to this beginning of repentance, thus to sorrow for his sinne; then I adde further: If the partie bee grieved for the hardnesse of his heart, whereby it comes to passe, that he cannot grieve, hee hath undoubtedly received some portion of godly sorrow. For it is not nature that makes us to grieve for hardnesse of heart, but grace.

The third ground is, that A setled purpose, and willing minde to forsake all sinne, and to turne unto God, (though as yet not worne and conversion appeare,) is a good beginning of true conversion, & repentance. I thought (saith David) I will confesse against my selfe my wickednesse unto the Lord, and thou forgavest the punishment of my sinne. And to this is added (Selah,) which is not only a musicall note, but, as some thinke, a note of observation, to moove us to marke the things that are set downe, as being of speciall weight & moment. And surely this is a matter of great consequent, that upon the very unfained purpose of confession of sinne, God should give a pardon thereof. Take a further proofe of this in the prodigall sonne, whome I take not for one that was never called, or turned to God, (though some doe so and seeme to have warrant for their opinion:) but rather for him that is the Child of God, and afterward fals away. Now this man being brought (by some outward crosses & afflictions) to see his owne miserie, purposeth with himselfe to returne to his father againe, and to humble himselfe, and confesse his iniquitie: and upon this very purpose, when he had said, I will goe to my father, and say unto him, Father, I have sinned, &c. at his returne a farre off, his father receives him as his childe againe, and after acceptation followes his confession. The like is to bee seen in David, who being reproved

Luk. 15. 17, 18.

by the Prophet Nathan, for his sinnes of adultery and murther, presently made confession of them, and at the very same time, received by the Prophet sentence of absolution, even from the Lord himselfe, whereon he could not erre.

The fourth Ground, To love any man because he is a Christian, and a childe of God, is a sensible and certaine note of a man that is partaker of the true love of God in Christ. Hereby (saith S. John) wee know that wee are translated from death to life, because we love the brethren, 1 John 3. 14. Love here is not a cause, but only a signe of Gods love to us. And our Saviour Christ saith, Mat. 10 41. He that receiveth a Prophet in the name of a Prophet shall receive a Prophets reward.

Now that wee bee not deceived in these grounds; it must bee remembred, that these beginnings of grace (be they never so weake) must not bee flittering and fleeting, but constant and setled, not stayed or stopped in the way, but such as daily grow and increase: and then they are indeed accepted of God. And hee that can finde these beginnings, or any of them truly in himselfe, he may assure himselfe thereby, that he is the childe of God.

Sect. 5.

The true way of bringing a man within the covenant.

Having thus laid downe the Grounds of comfort: I come now to the Way, by which the party in distresse may be brought within the compasse of the promise of salvation. This way stands in two things: in making triall, and in applying the promise.

First, then triall must bee made, whether the person distressed have in him as yet, any of the fore-named Grounds of grace or not. This triall may bee made by him that is the comforter, in the moving of certaine Questions to the said person. And first, let him aske, whether hee beleeve and repent? The distressed party answers, no, he cannot repent nor beleeve. Then we must further aske, whether he desire to beleeve and repent: to this he wil answer, he doth desire it with all his hart. In the same sort is he to make triall of the other grounds. When a man is in the fit of tentation; he will say resolutely, he is sure to be damned. Aske him in this fit, of his love to God, he will give answer, he hath none at all; but aske him further, whether he love a man because he is a Christian, and a childe of God, then will hee say, he doth indeed. Thus after triall made in this manner, some beginnings of faith and repentance wil appeare, which at the first lay hid. For God useth out of the time of prosperity, by, and in distresse and affliction to worke his grace.

The second point followeth. After that by triall some of the foresaid beginnings of grace, bee found out, then comes the right Applying of the promise of life everlasting to the partie distressed. And that is done by a kinde of reasoning: the first part whereof is taken from the Word of God; the second, from the testimonie of the distressed conscience; and the conclusion is the applying of the promise on this manner: He that hath an unfained desire to repent and beleeve, hath remission of sinnes, and life everlasting: But thou hast an earnest desire to repent and beleeve in Christ. Therefore remission of sinnes and life everlasting is thine.

Conclusio.

And here remember, that it is most convenient, this Application bee made by the Minister of the Gospell, who in it must use his minister-all authoritie given him of God, to pronounce the pardon. For in distresse, it is as hard a thing to make the conscience yeeld to the promise, as to make fire and water agree. For though men have signes of grace and mercy in them, yet will they not acknowledge it, by reason of the extremitie of their distresse. In this manner, upon any of the former grounds, may the troubled and perplexed soule bee assured, that mercie belongs to it. And this I take to be the onely general and right way, of comforting a distressed conscience.

Now that the promise thus applyed may have good successe, these six rules must necessarily be observed.

1. One is, that the comfort which is ministred, be allayed with some mixture of the law; that is to say: the promise alone must not bee applyed, but withall mention is to be made of the sinnes of the partie, and of the grievous punishments due unto him for the same. The reason is, because there is much guile in the heart of man; in so much, as oftentimes it falleth out, that men not throughly humbled, being comforted either too soone, or too much, doe afterward become the worst of all. In this respect, not unlike to the yron, which being cast into the fire vehemently hot, and cooled againe, is much more hard than it would have beene, if the heat had beene moderate. And hence it is, that in the ministring of comfort, wee must somewhat keepe them downe, and bring them on by little and little to repentance. The sweetnesse of comfort is the greater, if it be delaied with some tartnesse of the law.

11. Another rule is this: If the distressed party; be much possessed with griefe of himselfe, hee must not be left alone, but always attended with good companie. For it is an usuall practice of the devill, to take the advantage of the place and time, when a man is solitary and deprived of that helpe, which otherwise hee might have in societie with others. Thus hee tempted Eve, when shee was apart from her husband. And in this regard Salomon pronounceth a woe to him that is alone, Eccl. 4. 10. But herein doth his malice most appeare, in that hee is alway readiest, when a man is in great distresse, and withall solitarie, then upon the sudden to tempt him to despaire, and and to the making away of himselfe.

III. Thirdly, the partie in distresse must be taught not to rest upon his own judgment, but alwaies to submit himselfe, and be content to be advised by others that are men of wisdome, judgement, and discretion. A thing to be observed the rather, because the very neglect thereof hath caused sundry persons to remaine uncomfortable for many yeares.

IV. Fourthly, the party distressed must never heare tell of any fearefull accidents, or of any that have been in like, or worse case than himselfe is. For upon the very report, the distressed conscience will fasten the accident upon it selfe, and thereby commonly will be drawn to deeper griefe or despaire. The minde afflicted is prone to imagine fearefull things, and sometime, the very bare naming of the devill, will strike terrour and feare into it.

V. Fifthly, the partie that is to comfort, must beare with all the wants of the distressed; as with their frowardnesse, peevishnesse, rashnesse, and with their distempered and disordered affections and actions: yea, he must put upon him, as it were) their persons, being affected with their miserie, and touched with compassion of their sorrowes, as if they were his owne, grieving when hee seeth them to grieve, weeping when they doe weep and lament.

VI. Sixthly, he that is the comforter, must not be discouraged, though after long labour and paines taking, there follow smal comfort and ease to the party distressed. For men will often bewray their stiffnesse in temptation, and usually it is long before comfort can bee received: and why? surely, because God hath the greatest stroke in these distresses of mind, and brings men through all the temptations, that hee hath appointed, even to the last and uttmost, before hee opens the heart to receive comfort. The Church in the Canticles seekes for her beloved, but before shee can finde him, shee goes about in the city, through the streets and by open places, passing by the Watchmen themselves, and after shee hath used all meanes without helpe or hope, at length, and not before, shee finds her beloved, him on whom her soule delighteth, Cant. 3.4.

Thus much for the generall remedy of all Distresses, now I come to the particular Distresses themselves.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the first sort of all Distresse, Arising of a divine temptation.

THe first Distresse ariseth of a divine temptation, which is a combat with God himselfe immediately. And this Distresse is, When the conscience speakes some fearefull things of God, and withall the party distressed feels some evident tokens of Gods wrath.

Examples hereof wee shall finde many in the Word of God. One is, the example of righteous Iob, who having beene long in outward afflictions, was withall exercised with the apprehension of the anger of God, and in that state he saith, Job 6.4. that the arrowes of the Almighty were in him, that the venom thereof did drink up his spirit, that the terrors of God did fight against him. Yea, further he addeth, Job 13.26. that God was his enemie, and wrote bitter things against him: and made him to possesse the sins of his youth. And at another time he complaineth, Job 16.9. that Gods wrath had torne him, that he hated him, gnashed upon him with his teeth, and had sharpened his eies against him: yea that he had taken him by the neck, and beaten him, and set him as a mark for himselfe. In all which, and divers other places it appeares, that his conscience was exercised with the sense of the wrath of God, which had now even seazed upon his soule. Examples.

Another example wee have in David, who also was exercised with this temptation and trouble of minde, as the first words of the 6. Psalme, and the whole tenor thereof doe evidently shew: For first, he desires the Lord, not to rebuke him in his wrath, and afterward complaineth, that his griefe was so great, that his very flesh consumed, his bones were vexed, and his body brought to such a state, as no sicknesse could have brought him unto. And it is not unlike, that the same Prophet did often fall into the like kind of distresse of mind, as may be gathered out of Psalm. 77. and sundry other places. Psal. 6.

Now as it fared with these, and divers other servants of God, in ancient times, so are wee not without some instances thereof in our dayes. Amongst many, that worthy man M. Luther writes of himselfe, that he was in this particular temptation, and that he learned in it the doctrine of the justification of a sinner, by the meere mercy of God, without any merit of workes: and upon the sense and experience of the nature and properties of this distresse, he wrote a notable exposition of the sixth Psalme of David, the scope and intent whereof, he writeth to be nothing else, but a soveraigne remedy of this, and the like distresses of the minde and conscience.

If it bee demanded, what is the Occasion of this kinde of temptation? I answer, that it ariseth sometimes upon the committing of some notorious sin, which doth wound the conscience, as in Cain, Iudas, and Saul, who for their great and capitall sinnes, that stinged and wounded their consciences, grew to a fearefull state, and consequently perished in this temptation. Sometimes againe, it comes when The occasion.

when there is no sinne committed, but obedience to God performed: and then there cannot bee rendred any reason of it, either in man, or out of man, save this, that God will have it so to be. And the truth hereof is plaine by the examples of Iob and David before mentioned.

Sect. 3.

The effects of this temptation. The effects of this temptation are many, and very strange. For outwardly it workes a change and alteration in the body, as it were a burning ague, and it causeth the intrals to rise, the liver to rolle in the body, and it fets a great heat in the bones, and consumes the flesh more than any sicknesse can doe. And that it is so as I say, beside experience, it is cleare in the word of God. David in this distresse affirmeth, that his eyes were eaten as it were with worms, and sunk into his head, Psa. 6. 7. that his moysture became as the drought in summer, Psa. 32.4. and Iob saies, Job 30.30. that his skin was black upon him, his bones were burnt with heat; yea, that by meanes of this distresse, he was now full of wrinkles, and his leannesse did rise upon him. Job 16.8. It is a principle which Physitians do hold, that the minde follows the temperature of the body, and is affected according to the good or evil constitution thereof: which though it be true, yet withall it is as manifest on the other side, that the bodie doth often follow the state and condition of the minde: For a distressed heart must of necessitie make a fainting and a languishing body.

Sect. 4.

The remedy. But the principall thing to be sought for in this temptation, is the Remedie thereof; whereunto there be five things required, which are to be practised as occasion shall be offered.

First, choice must bee made of the most fit and present remedie, and that must bee used in the first place.

Now the most fit and present remedie is, to bring the partie troubled to the personall exercises of faith and repentance, by and in himselfe. For this end, hee must examine his conscience most straitly and narrowly of all the sinnes of his heart and life. Secondly, he must humbly confesse against himselfe, all his knowne sinnes: and withall acknowledge the due condemnation that hee thereby hath deserved. Thirdly, he must cry to heaven for mercy, intreating the Lord most instantly for pardon, and for the restraint of his wrath due unto him for his sinne. David being in this distresse, performed all these duties, as we may reade in the sixth Psalme: and he saith further of himselfe, Psalm. 32.5. that whilest he concealed his sins, the hand of God was heavy upon him: but upon his earnest confession, & deprecation, he received mercy. And if we reade the booke of Iob, we shall finde that the principall scope thereof is this, namely, to shew unto us, that Iob was throughly exercised with this temptation, and that in the end having beene rebuked both by his friends, and by God himselfe, his recovery was made by humbling himselfe, when he saith, Job. 39.27. Behold I am vile: againe, Now I abhor my life and repent in dust and ashes.

Some may here demand: If it fall out, that the person himselfe cannot performe any good duty of himselfe, by reason of his distraction in soule and body, what must then bee done? Answ. If the party can but sigh, and sob unto God for mercy and comfort, it is no doubt a worke of Gods spirit, and a practice both of faith and repentance. We know not (saith S. Paul, Rom. 8.26.) what to pray as we ought, (namely, in our distresses) but the Spirit it selfe makes request for us, with sighs that cannot be expressed: and therein lies our comfort. Thus Moses at the red sea being in great distresse, Exod. 14.15. and not knowing what to say or do, sighed and groaned inwardly in his soule unto the Lord, for help and protection: and his very desire was in stead of a loud crie in the eares of the Lord.

The second thing is, that triall must bee made, whether the party hath in him any tokens of grace, or not?

These tokens are the small beginnings of grace, which before I have declared. As for example: a griefe because wee cannot grieve for sinne as wee should: a serious will and desire to beleeve and repent: a purpose to sinne no more, and such like. If these bee found in the party, then by them, as by sure pledges, hee may bee assured of the favour of God towards him: and where any of these be found, the saying of God to Saint Paul must bee urged, 2 Cor. 12.9. My grace is sufficient for thee: and therewith must the distressed party stay his minde. Yea, we are to be content with any condition in this life, bee it never so miserable, so long as wee are in the favour of God, though he should lay upon us even the paines of hell, till the time of our death. So did David, who when hee was pursued by his owne sonne, uttered these words unto God, Behold, if I please thee not, doe with me what thou wilt, 2 Sam. 15.26. And the like was the minde of Paul, who being assured of the favour of God, was content for his glory, and the salvation of the Israelites (if it had beene possible) to bee separated from Christ, and to endure the very pangs of hell, Rom. 9.3.

The third thing in this cure is, to apply to the said distressed partie such promises of God made unto afflicted persons, as are most large and comfortable.

For example, that the Lord is neere to them that are of a contrite heart, and will save such as be afflicted in spirit, Psal. 34.18. Againe, I came not (saith our Saviour Christ) but to the lost sheepe of the house of Israel, Matth. 15.24. He sayes not, to the straying sheepe, but to such as are now in the pit, ready to be drowned, or in the Lions mouth, ready to bee devoured. Againe, The spirit of the Lord is upon me, therefore he hath anointed me, that I should preach Luke 4.18.

the Gospel to the poore: that is, to such as are distressed in conscience, and poore in spirit: hee hath sent me that I should heale the broken hartted, that I should preach deliverance to the captives. These and many other such like promises are in this case to be urged, and the party moved to endevour to beleeve them, and to hold them, and rest himselfe upon them, though he lose all things else.

Fourthly, the partie must be brought to a serious consideration of his owne life past, and of Gods mercifull dealing with him and others in this case in former times, and therewith is hee to be comforted for the time present. For if aforehand hee hath received any tokens of the favour and love of God, by them he is now to stay and to settle his mind. The reason is plaine: the gifts of God are without repentance; whom hee loveth once, hee loveth to the end, and whom hee chuseth he calleth, justifieth, and sanctifieth, and will also in time glorifie. David being in such affliction, that hee could hardly thinke upon God, yet he took this course, praied to the Lord for comfort, communed with his owne heart, and called to remembrance how God had formerly dealt with him, Ps. 77. 10. and with this meditation of the continual course of Gods mercy in his preservation, he confirmed his faith, and staied his heart in his greatest troubles.

Removall of doubts.

The fifth and last thing to bee done, is the removall of such reasons and doubts, as the partie distressed usually makes against himselfe, for his owne overthrow. For it is the manner of those that are troubled in minde, to dispute against themselves; and commonly they are wont to alleage three things.

First, being instructed how to humble themselves, and to depend on Gods mercie, they will grant, that all these indeed are good things, but they belong not to them; for they neither doe, nor can feele any thing, but the tokens of Gods anger, and that they are already entred into some degrees of condemnation.

This objection may be taken away, by informing them of the manner of Gods dealing in all his workes. For commonly hee workes all things in his creatures, in and by contraries, if we could know the whole frame of them.

Thus in the creation every creature had his being of that which had no being, and something was made, not of something, but of nothing. After the flood, the signe of Gods covenant, for the preservation of the world from destruction by raine, is the Rainbow, which indeed is a natural signe of raine. When Elias was to prove the Lord to bee the onely true God, against the idolatrous Priests of Baal, and that by burnt offerings, he powred water upon the sacrifice, and filled a trench with water round about, and in this contrarie meanes was the sacrifice burnt up. Christ for the curing of a blinde man, tempers spittle and clay together, which in all reason is a fitter meanes to put out the eyes, than to cause the blinde to see.

Thus in the worke of our Redemption Christ gives life, not by life, but by death, and he sends men to heaven by the gates and suburbs of hell: he shewes his greatest power in the greatest weaknesse; nay, his power is made perfect through weaknesse, 2 Cor. 12. 19. he will not build upon an old foundation, but hee puls downe and destroyes all, that man may have no hope at all in himself, but that all the hope he hath may be in God. First, hee kils, and then he makes alive, as Anna speakes: first he woundeth, and then he healeth. Hee makes man to sow in teares, that afterward he may reape in joy. And hee that knowes Gods dealing to bee this, must herewith rest content and satisfied, because in wrath God useth to remember his mercy: yea, his mercy is never sweet unto the palate of the soule, untill it be seasoned with some taste of his wrath. The Paschall Lambe was eaten with sowre herbs, to signifie, that wee can feele no sweetnesse in the blood of Christ, till we first feele the smart of our owne sinnes and corruptions.

Exod. 12. 18.

Secondly, these persons use to alleage against themselves, that if they could feele any comfort at all, then they would stay their mindes, and yeeld to good perswasions and exhortations.

To this the answer is; That there is a rule of grace, (which wee must follow) gathered out of the Word of God, and the experience of Gods children, contrary to the rule of nature, and above the light of reason: and it is this, that in case of affliction we must not live by feeling, but by faith.

This rule is grounded upon the speech of the Lord by the Prophet, the just man shall live by his faith, Hab. 2. 4. When we have neither sight, nor sense, nor any taste of Gods mercie, but onely apprehend his wrath, even then we must labour to lay hold of mercy in his word and promise. Sense and feeling are not alwayes fit directions for the time of this life: For he may be the deare childe of God, that in present feeleth nothing but his wrath and indignation. This indeed is the true triall of our faith, when even above and against reason wee relie on the mercy of God, in the apprehension of his anger. So did David, Out of the deepe, (saith he) that is, being now deeply plunged into the pangs of a distressed conscience, have I called upon thee, O Lord, Ps. 130. 1. And Iob in the like case; Lord, though thou kil me, yet will I trust in thee. Abraham is commended by the holy Ghost, amongst other things, for this, that he beleeved in God above hope, Rom. 4. 18. that is, against all matter of hope, that might possibly be conceived, upon the consideration of the strength of naturall causes. The theese upon the crosse, feeling nothing but woe, and seeing nothing in Christ but but miserie and contempt, yet he beleeved in Christ, and was saved. In a word, Christ himselfe, when hee was forsaken of all men, and voyd of all worldly comfort, and felt nothing but the depthof the wrath of God, in his agonie and passion; yet by the faith of his manhood he staied himselfe, and said, My God, my God.

Thirdly, they use to plead, that their case is desperate, that never any was in such a state as they are, never any touched with the like distresse of minde.

Answ. It is false: for the holy Ghost hath penned three notable places of Scripture, the booke of Iob, and two Psalmes of David, Ps. 6. and 77. wherin are propounded unto us the examples of Iob and David, Gods owne deare servants, who were in as great distresse, as ever they, or any other have beene. And they may not thinke, that they ever could be able to endure greater paines than Christ, who notwithstanding in the anguish of his soule upon the Crosse, cried out, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?

And thus much touching the first kinde of trouble of conscience, called the divine temptation.

CHAP. IX.

Of the second speciall Distresse arising from outward afflictions.

THe second kind of distresse, is that which ariseth from outward afflictions. By Afflictions I understand, all manner of miseries and calamities in this life, from the least to the greatest, from the paine of the little finger, to the very pangs of death.

Now the Question is, how the Trouble of minde, arising by afflictions, may be remedied. For the answer of which Question, two things are required of the partie distressed; Practice, and Meditation.

Practice in case of affliction.

The Practice is that, which is to be used in all distresses of minde whatsoever. And it is a diligent examination of the conscience in regard of sinne: an earnest and hearty confession thereof unto God: and deprecation, that is, earnest prayer unto him for the pardon of the same. These three things being done truly and unfainedly from the heart, are a present remedy against this trouble, and bring with them much comfort.

2 Chr. 33. 11, 12.

Manasses the King of Juda, that had committed much wickednesse, when hee was carried captive to Babely, and there put in chaines, hee humbled himselfe, acknowledged his sinnes, and prayed earnestly unto the Lord; and the issue was good, for God was entreated of him, and gave him deliverance. Iob being long in outward affliction, humbled himselfe in like manner, and at length received comfort. Daniel humbled himselfe before God, for his owne sinnes, and for the sinnes of Gods people, making request unto God earnestly for them, and even when he was in the act of praying, the Lord sent his Angel Gabriel, to give him notice of deliverance. Lastly, the Church of God, under the crosse, performed the like dutie: Let us search and try our wayes, and turne to the Lord, and God in mercy gave an eare unto her mourning and lamentation. By all these places it is apparant that there is no better remedy in the world, for the minde of man, grieved by meanes of outward afflictions, than the practice of the duties before named.

Meditations in case of affliction.

The next thing unto Practice, is the Meditation of the comfortable doctrines that are set downe in the word of God, touching afflictions. All which doctrines may bee reduced to five principall and maine grounds of comfort, and shall bee laid downe in their order.

Grounds. 1. Gods providence.

The first Ground is, that all afflictions from the least to the greatest, doe come to passe not by accident, chance, or fortune, but by the speciall providence of God. I explaine it thus: In every particular crosse and affliction, there is the hand of Gods particular providence, and that in three regards.

First, because God decreeth, and foreappointeth every particular crosse. Marke the words of Paul, Rom. 8. 28. Whom God hath foreknown them he hath predestinate, to be made like unto the image of his son; and what is this image? nothing else but a conformitie unto Christ in afflictions for this life, and in glory for the life to come. Now if God hath decreed that those whom hee foreknew, should bee conformable unto his Sonne in these respects, then hath hee also decreed the afflictions themselves.

Secondly, God doth not onely barely permit afflictions to be, but also he effecteth them and brings them into execution, as they are crosses, corrections, trials, and punishments. I make peace (saith the Lord, Esa. 45. 7.) and I create evill, that is, not the evill of sinne, but of punishment, which is evill in our sense and feeling. For things are termed evil two waies: some are evil indeed, some are evil not indeed, but in regard of our sense, apprehension, and estimation; and of this latter sort are afflictions, which God is said to create. And to this purpose is the saying of the Prophet Amos, shall there be evil in the city, and the Lord hath not done it? Amos 3. 6.

Thirdly, as God causeth afflictions, so hee ordereth and disposeth them, that is, he limiteth and appointeth the beginning, the end, the measure or quantitie, and the continuance thereof. Yea, hee also ordereth them to their right ends, namely, his owne glory, the good of his servants, and the benefit of his Church. Thus God is said to correct his people in judgment, that is, so as he will have the whole ordering of the correction in his owne hand. Iosephe is his brethren, that when they intended evill against him, in selling him to the Ishmaelites for silver, God disposed it for good, Gen.50.19,20. when Shemei cursed David, he forbad his servants, so much as to meddle with him, and why? because (saith he) the Lord bade him to curse; and who then dare say unto him, why hast thou done so? 2 Sam.16.10. And to this purpose the Prophet David saith, I held my peace and said nothing: why? Because thou Lord hast done it, Psal.39.9.

Here some will say, if afflictions did come only from God, it were somewhat, but oftentimes they come from men that beare us no good will; and therefore no marvell though we be impatient. Ans. When crosses doe come from men, God useth them as instruments, to execute his judgements upon us; and in this worke, God is the chiefe doer, and they are as tooles in the hand of the workman. And the Lord inflicteth them upon us by men, to try our patience under the crosse. Ioseph, though he knew well the bad dealing of his brethren towards him, yet hee looked not to them alone, but to an higher cause, namely, the Lord himselfe, who executeth his owne good will by them: God (saith he) disposed it to good. And againe, Gen.45.5. and 50.20. God did send me before you into Egypt for your preservation.

II. Gods commandement.

The second ground is, The Commandement of God touching the crosse, and obedience unto him therein. This Commandement is expressed, Luk.9.23. where we are commanded to take up our crosse every day, and follow Christ. Abraham was commanded with his owne hands to sacrifice his only sonne Isaac; and to this Commandement (though otherwise a great crosse unto him) he addresseth himselfe to yeeld obedience. And in the prophecie of Micha, the Church saith, Shee will beare the wrath of the Lord, that is, thee will performe obedience to him in the crosse, because she had sinned against him. And S. Peter saith, that God resisteth the proud, & giveth grace to the humble: therefore humble your selves under the mighty hand of God. And this being the commandement of God, that we should yeeld obedience to him in every affliction, we ought to be no lesse carefull to obey it than any one Commandement of the morall Law.

1 Pet.5.5,6.

III. Gods pretence

The third ground is, that God will be present with his servants in their afflictions. Upon this ground, David comforts himselfe, because God had promised to beare him, to bee with him in trouble, and to deliver him. Psal.19.15. And in another place, Though I should walke in the shadow of death, I would feare none ill: for thou art with me, &c. Psal.23.4.

Now that wee may the better understand this doctrine, we are to consider what be the ends, or effects of Gods being with us in affliction, whereby he testifieth his presence; and they are three.

A The first is, to worke our deliverance from the crosse: Call upon me (saith the Lord) in the time of thy trouble, & I will deliver thee, Ps.50.15. This promise must not bee understood simply, but with an acception, so far forth as it shall be for our good. For all promises of temporall deliverance are conditionall, and must be conceived with this limitation of the Crosse and chastisement, if God please to impose it.

Some may say, how if God will not deliver us, but leave us in the affliction, what comfort shall we then have?

Ans. In the second place therefore we must remember, that God will temper and moderate our afflictions, so as wee may bee able to beare them. Habakuk prayeth unto God, in the behalfe of the Church, That hee would in wrath remember mercy, Hab. 3.2. And Paul saith, that the Lord will not suffer us to be tempted above that we are able to beare, but will give an issue with the temptation, 1 Cor.10.13.

Thirdly, put the case that God doth not moderate our afflictions, but suffer them to remaine upon us, not onely for some time of our life, but to the very death; yet then will he testifie his holy presence another way, namely, by giving the partie distressed, power and strength to beare his affliction. Vnto you it is given (saith Paul) for Christ, that not onely yee should believe in him, but also suffer for his sake.

Phil.1.29.

IV. Goodnesse of afflictions.

The fourth ground of comfort in affliction is, that every affliction upon the servants of God hath some special goodnesse in it, Rom.8.28. We know that all things work together for good unto them that love God. And in regard hereof, the crosses which are endured by the children of God, are so farre from being prejudiciall to their salvation, that they are rather helps and furtherances of the same. Now this goodnesse is perceived two wayes. First, by the fruit and effect of it, and then by the qualitie and condition thereof. In both which respects afflictions are good.

Touching the fruits of afflictions, because they are manifold, I will reduce them to seven principall heads.

Fruits of Affliction.

Consideration.

I. Afflictions doe make men to see and consider their sinnes. Iosephs brethren for twenty yeares together were little or not at all troubled for their wickednesse, in selling their brother; yet upon their affliction in Ægypt, they began to consider what they had done: We have (say they) verily sinned against our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soule, when he besought us, & we would not heare him: therfore is this trouble come upon us. Manasses in the time of his peace, gave himselfe to witchcraft, and the worshipping of strange Gods: but when he was captive in Babylon, then was he brought to the light of his sinnes, and moved to humble himselfe before God for them.

Humiliation.

II. Afflictions serve to humble men in their soules before God. The young unthrift in the Gospell, called the prodigall childe, while his portion lasted, he spent liberally & was grieved for nothing: but when he came to be pinched with hunger, and that through his owne folly, then he humbled himselfe before his father, and returned home unto him. David saith of himselfe, that in his prosperity he thought he should never be moved, because the Lord of his goodnesse had made his mountain to stand strong: but (saith he) thou didst hide thy face, & I was troubled, then cried I unto the Lord.

Amendment.

III. They serve to worke amendment of life. No chastising (saith the author to the Hebrewes) for the present seemeth to be joyous, but afterward it bringeth the quiet fruit of righteousnesse to them that are therby exercised; that is, afflictions and chastisements that seaze upon Gods children, doe leave after them amendment of life, as the needle passeth thorow the cloth, and leaveth the thread behind it. When we are judged (saith the Apostle) we are nurtured of the Lord, that we might not be condemned with the world. And David confesseth. Ps.119. It is good for me that I have been afflicted, that I might learne thy statutes. And the good husbandman purgeth and pruneth the vine, that it may bring forth more and better fruit.

1 Cor.11.32.

Iob.15.

Abnegation.

IV. They cause men to denie themselves and to relie wholly on the mercie of God. Thus Paul received the sentence of death in himselfe, that he should not trust in himselfe, but in God that raiseth the dead, 2 Cor. 1.9.

Invocation.

V. The fifth is invocation. For afflictions make us cry heartily and fervently unto God, to bring our selves into his presence, and there to abase our selves before him. Thus the Lord said of the old Israelites, that when he slue them, then they returned, and sought him early, Psal.78.34. And else-where he saith of his children, that in their affliction they will seeke him diligently.

Patience. Rom.5.3.

VI. The sixth is Patience. Affliction bringeth forth patience, patience experience, &c. As if hee should say; because the love of God is shed in our hearts, therefore in afflictions we are patient. Now whilst we patiently beare the crosse, we have experience of the mercy and love of God towards us: and having once in some notable deliverance tried and tasted the mercy of God, wee doe by hope (as it were) promise to our selves the said favour and mercie for time to come.

Obedience.

VII. The last fruit is Obedience. This the holy Ghost teacheth to have beene the fruit of the suffering of Christ, when he saith, Though he were the Sonne, yet learned he obedience, by the things which he suffered.

Heb. 5.8.

In the next place, afflictions are good in regard of their quality and condition, which is, that they are tokens & pledges of our adoption, when we make the best use of them. If ye endure chastening, (saith the holy Ghost) God offereth himselfe unto you as unto sons: that is, he comes to you in the crosse, not as a judge and revenger, but a kinde and loving father: and the crosse imposed, is as it were his fatherly hand, where with he chastiseth us: and therefore Iob praiseth God for his affliction, saying, God hath given, and God hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord, Iob 1.21.

The fifth Ground of comfort is, that the party distressed hath partners in the crosse. For first, he hath Christ to be his partner, because he hath fellowship with him, in that he is afflicted, and is willing to obey God therein. Paul accounteth it happinesse, to know the fellowship of Christs afflictions, and to bee made conformable unto his death, *Phil.*3.10. And Saint Peter exhorteth believers to rejoyce in as much as they are partakers of Christs suffering. 1 *Pet.*4.13. Secondly, if the party afflicted repent, Christ communicateth with him in all his crosses, and accounts them as his owne. The Apostle in this regard would have no man thinke it strange, no not when he is in the fierie triall, but rather to rejoyce because he is partaker of Christs sufferings, 1 Pet. 4.12. And Christ saith to Saul persecuting his Church, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? Thirdly, he that is afflicted, hath other fellowmates of God, partakers with him in all his afflictions. The Apostle Peter wisheth the Church of God to resist Satan by faith, knowing, saith he, that the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren that are in the world, 1 Pet. 5.9.

V. Partakers in the Crosse.

Thus much generally of Afflictions, and of Comfort in them. It were a long and tedious worke to set all downe in particular, together with their proper and distinct comforts: therefore I will passe them over, and speake only of three kinds of Afflictions, with their remedies.

Sect. 2.

Deferring of Deliverance.

The first is, the Deferring of deliverance: a great affliction, if it be considered. And touching it, I propound one Question, namely, How the wonder of the partie distressed may be stayed when as the Lord deferres deliverance.

For the answer hereof, three especiall points are to be considered.

I. First, that God hath in his wisdome set downe certaine and unchangeable times for the accomplishment and issue of all things that are. There is a time appointed to every thing under the Sunne, Eccl.3.1. The speech of Salomon is generall, and the meaning of it is this: Whatsoever there is in the world, either done or suffered, or enjoyed by man, whether it be of the number of naturall things, or of those which are voluntarily undertaken, or necessarily endured, God hath in his providence forted unto them a set time and season, whereof dependeth the successe of them all. And this time, himselfe most freely ordereth and ruleth at his owne good pleasure, which as no man can hinder or stay, so is it not in the power of any to hasten or prevent.

This point, the holy Ghost in Scripture proveth by two instances, of the threatnings and promises of God, which himselfe accomplisheth, at some certaine and unchangeable times.

When the old world in the daies of Noah

had growne to much impietie, and wickednesse, the Lord appointed a certaine ſpace of Gen 6 3. 120. yeares for their repentance and converſion; at the very end and terme whereof, hee brought the flood upon them, and not before. For if wee compare the particular circumſtances of time noted in the 7. of Geneſis with that which S. Peter writeth, 1 Pet. 3. 20. we ſhall finde, that the inundation of waters came upon the earth at the very point of time before determined.

Againe, God threatned by Ieremie, that Ier 25 11. the Jewes for their ſinnes ſhould be led captive, and ſerve the King of Babel 70. yeares. Now if we take the juſt computation of time, it will appeare, that ſo ſoone as ever thoſe yeares were expired, the foreſaid threat was
B accompliſhed. And therfore Daniel, alluding to Ieremies prophecies, exactly ſetteth it downe, when hee ſaith, The ſame night was
Dan. 5. 30. Belſhazzar king of the Chaldeans ſlain, that is, the very night wherein thoſe 70. yeares came to their full period.

And as there are ſet times allotted by God for the execution of his threatning ſentences; ſo alſo hath he determined certainely the accompliſhment of all and every of his promiſes.

An example hereof wee have in the Iſraelites, of whom the Lord ſaid to Abraham, Gen. 15. 13. that they ſhould bee in affliction in a ſtrange land 430. yeares, and then be delivered. This promiſe of God was expreſly fulfilled, as we reade in the booke of Exodus. For before the
C end and terme of theſe yeares, they had no deliverance at all: but when that time was expired, even that ſelfe ſame day departed all the Exod. 12. 41. hoſt of Iſrael out of the land of Egypt. And though Moſes, fortie yeares before this time, tooke in hand the worke of their deliverance: yet hee did it without ſucceſſe; and upon a certaine accident, being himſelfe conſtrained to flie into Madian, he lived there as
Act. 7. 35. a ſtranger with Iethro his father in law, til the ſaid time of foure hundred and thirty yeares was accompliſhed; toward the end whereof, being called of God to that office, he proſpered, and not before. And in the ſame manner hath God ſet downe a certain period of time within which hee will exerciſe his children more or leſſe, and at the end whereof, and not before, hee will releeve and comfort them againe.

Now as the certaintie of the accompliſhment of Gods threatning word ſerves to terrifie all wicked livers from ſinne: ſo the unchangeable performance of his promiſes, at the very time prefixed, and not before, teacheth the children of God ſundry things.

Firſt, that when they are in any diſtreſſe, and have not preſent or ſpeedie deliverance, according to their deſire, they ſhould wait the Lords leaſure, and expect with patience till the time come, which is appointed by him for their eaſe and releeſe; and in the meane while
A ſtay their hearts, by hope and aſſiance in his mercy. The reaſon is plaine. God is ſure in his Word, therefore though heavineſſe may endure for a night, yet joy will returne in the morning, Pſal. 30. 5.

Thus the Lord comforteth the Jewes in a particular diſtreſſe, as wee may reade in the prophecie of Habakuk, where the Prophet Hab. 2. 2, 3. in the name of the Jewes complaineth and expoſtulateth the matter with God, why his owne people ſhould bee ſo lamentably afflicted, by a terrible and furious Nation, and why they ſhould bee led away captives by the Chaldeans the enemies of God? To this the Lord makes anſwer, that as hee had certainely determined that judgement to come upon them, ſo certainly he had appointed a ſet time, wherein they ſhould bee delivered. In the meane while, hee bids them to comfort themſelves in this, that though the affliction ſhould reſt upon them for a ſeaſon, yet undoubtedly they ſhould bee eaſed at the length: and therefore, that they ſhould in patience wait for the viſion, that is, the accompliſhment of the viſion touching their deliverance.

Secondly, hence we learne, that wee muſt not only beleeve the promiſes of God in generall, that God is true and faithfull in them, and that he is able and willing to fulfill them, even as he made them: but wee muſt beleeve them in particular, that is, with application to
C their proper and ſeveral circumſtances which are the particular meanes, places, and times, wherby, and wherein he hath given his word as touching our freedome and exemption from the croſſe.

Take an inſtance hereof in the Prophet Daniel, who knew well by the ſpirit of Prophecie, that the Lord had determined to bring upon the Jewes 70. yeares captivitie in Babylon. He knew alſo, that God had promiſed to put an end to that captivitie, at the end and terme of thoſe yeares. Now what
Dan. 9. did Daniel in this caſe? Upon knowledge of the will of God in that point, during the ſaid time, he prayed not unto the Lord for deliverance of his people: But when he underſtood
D that the time drew neere, wherein it was the will of God, that the Jewes ſhould returne
Verſe 3. out of captivitie, then by faith applying the promiſe of God to that particular time, he beſought the Lord in prayer and ſupplication, with faſting in ſackcloth and aſhes, and the Lord gave care unto his praiers, and yeelded him a gracious anſwer.

II. The ſecond point is, that God, when hee deferres deliverance, doth it upon great and weighty cauſes and conſiderations, beſt knowne to himſelfe.

The firſt whereof is, that thereby he might humble men throughly, and bring them to an utter denial of themſelves, and conſequently cauſe them to learne patience in affliction, which they would not learne, if they might might be their owne carvers, and have ſpeedy deliverance from the croſſe at their owne wils and pleaſures.

Secondly, that being afflicted, they may acknowledge whence their deliverance comes; yea, whence they doe receive not only that, but every other good benefit which they enjoy: namely, not from themſelves, or any creature, but only from the Lord; and accordingly may learne to value and prize his gifts at their deſerved excellencie. For it is a true ſaying, and often verified in affliction and want, that benefits eaſily obtained, are lightly regarded, and ſoone forgotten.

Thirdly, that by the continuance of the croſſe without intermiſſion, hee may make them to diſtaſte the world, and conſequently draw them to the meditation of the life to come, wherein all matter of mourning ſhall ceaſe, Revel. 21. 4. And all teares ſhall be wiped from their eyes.

Fourthly, the Lord deferreth deliverance from affliction, that he might prevent greater evils and dangers, whereinto thoſe that are afflicted might runne, if they had their hearts deſire, and were eaſed, not at his will, but at their owne wiſhes. When the children of Iſrael came into Canaan, they were informed, that they ſhould dwell together with the Canaanites, and Moſes rendreth a reaſon thereof, Deuter. 7. 22. Leſt (ſaith he) the wild beaſts of the field multiply againſt thee. And for the preventing of this evill, the Iſraelites muſt endure ſome annoyance by the Canaanites, Exod. 23. 29. Even ſo the Lord keepeth his ſervants under the croſſe, for the preventing of greater ſins and offences. This ſhould ſtay the mindes of men, and make them content to wait upon God for deliverance, when they are afflicted.

III. The third and laſt point is, that God alwayes hath and doth exerciſe his beſt ſervants with long and continued croſſes. Abrahams was childleſſe till he was 70. yeares of age, and at thoſe yeares the Lord promiſed him iſſue. But this promiſe was not accompliſhed till a long time after, when he was an hundred yeares old. David had a promiſe to D be king of Jeruſalem, and Iuda: but the Lord exerciſed him by many and grievous afflictions, before he came to the crowne, in ſo much that he faies of himſelfe, Pſal. 119. 82. that his eyes failed with waiting upon his God. Zacharie and Elizabeth prayed to God, both of them in their youth, and many yeares after for iſſue, but the Lord granted not their requeſt till they were old, Luk. 1. 13.

To adde no more examples; by theſe wee ſee the Lords dealing, even with holy men and women his owne deare ſervants, that he doth not alwaies grant their requeſts, nor condeſcend to their deſires at the firſt, but as it were holds them off, and ſuſpends his grace and favour for a time. And therfore if it ſhall pleaſe him thus to deale with any of us, wee
A muſt from theſe examples bee taught to poſſeſſe our ſoules with patience, reſting contented in his will, and waiting on his good pleaſure to the end.

To conclude this point: Suppoſe that the condition of Gods ſervants be ſuch as that they finde no end of their afflictions, but that they doe continue even unto death, what ſhall they doe in this caſe?

Anſwer. Beſides that which hath been ſaid Pag. 30. before, for the reſolution of this Queſtion, I anſwer further, that firſt, they muſt ſtill, even unto death live by faith; and ſay with holy Iob, Lord, though thou kill me, yet will I truſt in thee.

Secondly, they muſt ſtay and releeve their ſoules in the meane time, with theſe and ſuch like meditations.

I. That it is the will and pleaſure of God, that we ſhould through many afflictions enter into the kingdome of God, Act. 14. 22. Now it is the propertie of a true childe of God, to reſt content in his Fathers good will and pleaſure, even when he is afflicted, Prov. 3. 11. My ſonne—be not grieved at thy correction: that is, let it not be tedious unto thee, be content to beare it. Our duty therefore is, meekly to ſubject our ſelves unto the hand of God, as the child doth unto the correction of his father.

II. That though afflictions bee long and tedious, yet God will at length give a joyfull
C and comfortable iſſue. For ſo himſelfe hath promiſed, Matth. 5. 4. Bleſſed are they that mourne, for they ſhall be comforted, Pſal. 34. 19. Great are the troubles of the righteous. but the Lord will deliver him out of all, Pſalm. 37. 37. Marke the upright man, and behold the juſt, for the end of that man is peace.

III. Afflictions, be they never ſo heavie in regard of continuance, yet they are in no ſort comparable to the ſe eternall joyes, that God hath prepared for them that love him. This was Pauls meditation, who indured the croſſe, even to his dying day. Our light affli-
2 Cor. 4. 17. ction (ſaith he) which is but for a moment, worketh unto us an exceeding and eternall weight of D glory. And elſe-where he profeſſeth, that he did not count the afflictions of this preſent time anſwerable in value to the glory which ſhall be revealed unto Gods children, Rom. 8. 18. Saint Peter tels them to whom he wrote, that in regard of their aſſured hope of eternall life, they ſhould rejoyce, though now for a ſeaſon they were in heavineſſe through manifold tentations, 1 Pet. 1. 6. Laſtly, the Author to the Hebrewes comforteth the Church by this reaſon, becauſe it is yet a very little while, and he Heb. 10. 37.
that ſhall come, will come, and will not tarrie.

IV. Though God withholdeth his hand, in reſpect of deliverance, even to death, yet his love is conſtant and unchangeable, and the croſſe which we undergoe, cannot ſeparate us from that love wherewith he hath loved us in Chriſt, Rom. 8. 35. And thus much of the firſt parti-particular distresse of minde, arising of outward afflictions.

Sect. 3.

Temporall death.

The second particular distresse, is bodily and temporary Death, which consisteth in the separation of the soule from the body. And touching this affliction, it is demanded, How any servant of God may be able to indure with comfort the paines of death?

1 Preparation to death.

For the answer hereof, two things are required: a preparation to death, and helps in the time of death.

Concerning preparation, there are three duties to be performed.

Psal. 39. 4.

The first and most principall is commended unto us in the booke of Psalmes, where Dauid prayes unto God, Lord make me to know mine end, and the measure of my dayes. And Moses in like manner, Lord teach me to number my dayes, that I may apply my heart unto wisdome. In which places is remembred a notable duty of preparation, to wit, that a man should resolve himselfe of death continually, and beforehand number his dayes. This is done by esteeming of every day as the day of his death, and accordingly doing alwaies that which he would do if he were now to give up the ghost.

Psal. 90. 12.

Secondly, in way of preparation, we must endevour to disarme and weaken death, who is as an armed man, that hath his weapons, whereby he seekes to destroy us. And in this case, we must deale with death as the Philistims dealt with Sampson. They saw by experience, that he was a mightie man, and by his power and strength had given them many foyles: and therefore they laboured to know in what part of his body his strength did lie. And after inquirie, finding it to bee in the haire of his head, they never rested till they had spoiled him thereof. And questionlesse, the time will come, when we all must encounter with this strong and powerfull Sampson, Death: In the meane while, it is a point of wisdome, to inquire wherein his power & might consisteth. When this search hath been made, we shall finde that his weapons are our manifold sinnes and corruptions, both of heart and life. For as Paul saith, 1 Cor. 15. 56. The sting of death is sinne. Therefore, that we may spoile him of this his furniture, we must exercise our selves in the practice of two duties.

Account death present.

First, use all meanes for the cutting off of the locke of our sinnes, whereby alone Satan hath the vantage of us; and these meanes are the duties of humiliation, invocation, and true repentance. We must therefore humble our selves before God, be instant in prayer, for the pardon of our sinnes past and present, and in this point give the Lord no rest untill we have obtained in our consciences the sweet certificate of his favour and mercie in Christ, whereby our mindes may be staied and comforted.

This done, it stands us in hand to turne unto God, to be carefull to leave sinne, to entertaine in our hearts a resolved purpose and intention of new obedience, and conformitie to the will and commandement of God in all things. And this is the only way in the world to bereave this our enemie of his armour, to pul the sting out of the mouth of this serpent, and consequently, even in death to prevaile against him.

Thirdly, in way of preparation our duty is, even before-hand (while we live in this world) to endevour to have some true taste of life everlasting, and the joyes of heaven. The due consideration wherof will be of great use. For it will stirre up in our hearts a desire and love of perfect happinesse in heaven, yea a fervent expectation of Christs comming to judgement, and it will further cause us to say with Simeon; Lord, now let thy servant depart in peace: and with the Apostle, I desire to bee dissolved, and to be with Christ.

Touching this spirituall joy and comfort in the holy Ghost, these Questions of Conscience are moved.

I. First, how may we in this life have and nourish in our hearts a true taste of eternall happinesse, and of the joyes of the world to come?

Answ. First, by a serious consideration of the evils that doe hinder or prejudice our happinesse: and they are principally foure.

One is, the miserie of our lives, in respect of sinne, and the consequents thereof. For there is no man in the world, bee he never so righteous, that can truly say of himselfe, I am cleane from my sinne. Prou. 20. 9. Yea even the regenerate, that have received grace to beleeve, to turne unto God, and to live according to the Spirit, doe finde by experience corruption and rebellion in their minds, wils, and affections, which daily affordeth matter of sinning against God: and on the other side, hindreth and quencheth all the good motions of the Spirit, that are in them. Againe, such is the irreconciliable malice of Satan, that hee takes vantage of mans corruption, and neglects no time or opportunitie, to intrap the children of God in the snares of his temptations. And hence it is, that man by reason of his owne corruption, and the wicked suggestions of the Devill, is at continuall strife with himselfe, hath daily occasion of sorrow, worketh out his salvation with feare and trembling, wading (as it were) even while he liveth, in a sea of many miseries.

Rom. 7. 14. 23. &c.

The second evill, is the Vanitie of all things that are in the world. For whether we cõsider the world it selfe, or the things therin contained, done or suffered, there is nothing so sure and steady, whereunto man having attained, can possibly rest fully satisfied, and contented, or which in the end will not prove to be most vaine vanitie. And the truth hereof appeareth in the experience of Salomon himselfe, who (being king over Israel) wanted neither authoritie, nor abilitie, and opportunitie, to take knowledge and triall of all worldly things in all estates and conditions. And having even of set purpose, carefully and earnestly searched into them all, at length hee concludes, that the issue of all was unprofitable vanitie, and vexation of minde, as wee may read in his Ecclesiastes.

1 Pet. 2. 11.

The third evill is, the Changeable condition of our life in this world, wherby it comes to passe, that we are alway in a fleeting and transitorie state. For wee are (as Saint Peter speaketh) but strangers and Pilgrimes, that wander to and fro in the earth, as in a strange country, and still are making forward to our own home. We have here no abiding city, Heb. 13. 14. The houses wherein we dwell, are but Innes, in which we sojourne for a time: yea, the bodies which we have, are but tents and tabernacles, alway ready to be shifted, and our selves to be translated into another place.

Fourthly, by remembring, that Christ our Head being now in heaven, and we his members upon the earth; during our life, we are in presence separated from our Head, and consequently, from that happie and glorious fellowship which we shall enjoy with him, and all the Saints our fellow-members, in the kingdome of heaven. This S. Paul noteth, when he saith, 2 Cor. 5. 6. Whilst wee are at home in the bodie, we are absent from the Lord: and thereupon himselfe desired to be dissolved, and to be with Christ, Phil. 1. 23.

Apoc. 22. 4. 1 Ioh. 3. 2.

Having thus entred into the due consideration of the fore-said evils, we must in the second place exercise our selves in the frequent meditation of the blessed estate of Gods chosen, in the kingdome of glorie: who being translated out of this life, into the bosome of Abraham, are fully and perfectly freed from sinne, from Satan, from vanitie and misery: have all teares wiped from their eies: doe behold the face of God; are made like unto Christ in holinesse and honour: and doe with him inherit the kingdome prepared for them from the foundation of the world.

Mat. 25. 34.

In the third place, having thorowly considered of these things, wee must compare the estate of this present life, in the respects before named, with the estate of that which is to come in the kingdome of heaven: and laying them in a parallel together, we shall finde the one infinitely farre to excell the other, in regard of true joy and comfort. And this will make us, though living in the world, yet to use it, as if we used it not: to have our conversation in heaven: to thinke with Paul, that to be loosed, and be with Christ, is best of all for us: to have a true and lively taste of the joyes of the world to come, and accordingly with Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, to looke for a city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God.

1 Cor. 7. 31. Phil. 3. 20. Phil. 1. 23.

Heb. 12. 10.

II. Secondly, it is demanded, how a man may truly discerne, whether this joy of the Spirit be in him yea or no? For answer hereunto, it is to bee remembred, that there are sundry properties whereby it differeth from carnall joy. And these are principally five.

Ioh. 16. 20.

First, this joy is brought forth (as it were) of sorrow for sinne, and for the want of Christ. Ye shall sorrow, saith our Saviour Christ to his Disciples, meaning for his departure, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy. These words are not only meant of his Disciples, but of all beleevers, who upon consideration of their sins, and the spirituall want of Christ Jesus, doe mourne and lament. For not onely they, but all true beleevers, are there opposed unto the world. Againe, Matth. 5. 4. Blessed are they that mourne: that is, being touched with causes of exceeding griefe, do withall mourne for their sinnes: for they shall be comforted. On the other side, carnall joy, as it hath his beginning from the flesh, and arising of things pleasing thereunto, so it ends in sorrow and heavinesse. In the end rejoycing is turned into mourning, saith Salomon, Prov. 14. 13. And Woe be to you that now laugh, for ye shall weepe, Luke. 6. 25.

Rom. 14. 17.

Secondly, the joy of the Spirit is a fruit of righteousnesse: that is, it ariseth and floweth from Christ known and beleeved, to be made unto us of God, wisdome, righteousnesse, sanctification, and full redemption. For from hence follows peace of conscience, and from peace comes joy in the holy Ghost. Contrariwise, the joy of the flesh ariseth onely from the sudden feeling of some worldly delight: and therefore cannot bring any sound peace unto the conscience of the man possessed of it.

Thirdly, spirituall joy is founded in the holy use of the Word, Sacraments and Prayer: and in the practice of Christian fruits of mercie, love, justice, &c. The other is not so. For the world conceives a joy besides the word, out of the exercise of invocation and repentance: which stands in the practice of cruelty, malice, oppression, injustice, and all manner of impietie. And hence it is, that having spent their dayes in matter of rejoycing, at length in a moment they goe downe to the grave, Iob 21. 13. 14. 15.

Fourthly, heavenly joy is so fixed and rooted in the heart, that it cannot bee removed: thence. Your joy shall no man take from you, saith Christ. Ioh. 16. 22. It must needs therefore be true and sound, yea able to swallow up all matter of griefe and heavinesse: whereas the other is never sincere, but with the sweetnesse thereof, hath alwayes mingled some bitternesse. Even in laughter (saith Salomon, speaking thereof) the heart is heavie. Prov. 14. 13. When the face of the wicked man shineth, and his countenance is pleasant, even then is he inwardly sorrowfull, and his minde troubled.

Lastly, the joy of the Spirit is eternall, abiding in the minde of man, not onely for the terme of this life, but for ever in the world to come. So is not the rejoycing of the world in earthly things: for it is fading and deceitfull.

as the things themselves be, wherein it is placed: it hath the beginning in corruption, and endeth with this present life. The example of the two rich men in the Gospell doe manifest this truth. And to this purpose, is the speech of Zophar, in the booke of Iob, that the rejoycing of the wicked is very short, and the joy of hypocrites is but a moment, &c.

Luk. 12. 20. and 16. 22. Iob. 20. 5.

By these five properties, may we put a true difference, betweene earthly and heavenly rejoycing, and consequently discerne of them, even in our selves. And if we perceive this joy of the Spirit, (rightly conceived and grounded in the right use of the Word and Sacraments; as also in the exercises of invocation, faith, and repentance,) to take place in our soules and consciences, wee shall finde it of force, to moderate and allay the very terrours of death. And so much of Preparation.

II. Helpes in time of death.

Now the helpes to bee used in the time of death, are manifold: the summe of all may be reduced to two heads; Meditations and Practices.

Touching Meditations, we must in the first place consider Death in a double respect, one, as it is in it owne nature, and another, as it is changed and qualified by the death of Christ. Death in it owne nature is a Curse, or fore-runner of condemnation, the very gates and suburbs of hell it selfe: but being qualified by Christ, it is a blessing, and end of all miseries, a full freedome from all dangers, a short passage unto joy, an entrance into everlasting life, a quiet sleepe void of all annoyance by dreams and fantasies: And the grave a resting chamber, yea, a bed perfumed by the death of Christ, for the bodies of all the Elect; out of which when they awake, they shall be admitted and received into the presence of God in heaven.

Secondly, we are to consider, that there be three degrees of eternall life. The first whereof is in this world before we die; and it is then, when wee begin to repent and beleeve in Christ, and to be assured in conscience, that God the Father is our Father, Christ our Redeemer, and the holy Ghost our Comforter. For this is eternall life, to know God, and him whom he hath sent Iesus Christ. Ioh. 17. 3. The next degree is in death: for death cuts off all sin, originall and actuall; death frees us from all worldly miseries: death prepareth the bodie, that it may be fit to enter into eternall happinesse together with the soule, which is already in heaven. The last degree is, when bodie and soule re-united goe both together into eternall and everlasting glory.

Our third meditation is, that there is a mysticall union and conjunction, between Christ and every beleever, and that not onely in regard of soule, but of bodie also; which being once knit, shall never be dissolved, but is eternall. Whereupon the dying, dead, rotten, and consumed body remaineth still a member of Christ, abideth within the covenant, and is, and shall be ever a temple of the holy Ghost. Thus Adam, and Abraham, which was dead so many thoutand yeares agoe, yea every true beleever, from them to the end of the world, shall arise at the last day in body to glory, by the power of their conjunction with Christ. In the winter season, we see the most trees void of leaves, buds, and blossomes: so as they seeme to us to be dead, and yet nevertheless there is a sap in the root of them, which in the Spring will ascend, and revive the decayed branches. Even so it is with our bodies, which though they bee corrupted, rotten, burnt, or eaten with wormes, or devoured by wilde beasts, so as they may seeme to be utterly perished; yet there is (as it were) a secret and hidden sap in them, (by reason of their union with Christ) by which they shall bee raised, revived and quickned, being made like unto the glorious body of Christ their head, with whom they shall reigne, and live for evermore.

Helps in practice are two; First, he that will beare with comfort the pangs of death, must labour that he may die in faith: and that is done, by laying hold of the promise of God, touching forgivenesse of sinnes, and life everlasting by Christ. All these (saith the Holy Ghost, Heb. 11. 13.) died in faith, namely, Abel, Enoch, Noe, Abraham, and Sarah, all laying hold on the promise of life by Christ. When Iacob on his death-bed was blessing of his children, he brake forth into this heavenly speech, O Lord, I have waited for thy salvation, Gen. 49. 18. In which words it is plain, that his faith rested on the mercie of God, and by hope he waited for his salvation: and our Saviour Christ saith: Iob. 3. 14, 15. As Moses lift up the serpent in the wilderness, so must the Son of man be lift up, that whosoever beleeveth in him, might not perish, but have life everlasting. Out of which words the forenamed duty may be learned; that like as the children of Israel, being stung with fierie serpents, and that unto death, were healed by looking up to the brasen serpent erected by Moses: so when we are stung with sinne and death, we must ever remember by faith to looke upon Christ. But especially when wee are dying, then it is our part to fix the eyes of our soules by faith upon him; and therby shall we escape death, and be made partakers of eternall life and happinesse. Notable is the example of Christ, who as he was a man, al wayes fixed his trust and confidence in his Fathers word, especially at hand. For when he was dying, & the pangs of death seazed unto him, he cries unto the Lord, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me! and againe, Father, into thy hands I comend my spirit: which words are full of faith, and do bewray what great affiance he placed in his Fathers love, &c. When David in an extremitie, saw nothing before his eyes but present death, the people intending to stone him, at the very instant (as the text saith) he comforted himselfe in the Lord his God: but how? by calling to mind the mercifull promises that God had made unto him, and by applying them unto his heart by faith. And Paul saith of himselfe, and the rest of the faithfull, that they received the sentence of death in themselves, that they might not trust in themselves, but in God.

2 Cor. 1. 9.

From these examples it followes, that they which desire with comfort to beare the pangs of death, must die by faith, that is, they must set before their eyes the promise of remission of sinnes, and life everlasting, and depend upon it, wrapping (as it were) and infolding themselves in it, as in a close and warme garment, that will keepe them safe and sure against the winde and weather of temptation.

The second practice in the time of death is, to die in obedience; which is nothing else but willingly, gladly, and readily, without murmuring, to submit our selves unto Gods will, in bearing the paines of death. A most worthy president of this obedience wee have in our Saviour Christ, when he said unto his Father, Not my will, but thy will be done; therby submitting his will to his Fathers will, touching the death which hee then suffered. Yea, when he was dying, it is said of him, that he gave up the Ghost: that is, he did most willingly surrender up his soule into the hands of God his Father. And this his example at the time of his departure, must be a rule of direction unto us, upon the like occasion. Hence it is, that in the third petition of the Lords prayer, amongst other things, we pray for obedience to the will of God in suffering afflictions, yea even in the last and greatest, which is death it selfe: true it is, that obedience to God in death, is against corrupt nature; and therefore our dutie is the more to inure our selves to the performing of it: and that which the blessed Apostle said of himselfe, I die daily, ought to bee continually our resolution and practice.

If we shall inquire, how this may be done? the answer is, when God laieth afflictions upon us in our life time, then by endevouring to beare them with patience, meeknesse, and lowlinesse. For every affliction is (as it were) a pettie death: and if we doe in it subject our selves to the hand of God, we shall the better obey him in the great death of all: and thus doing whensoever God strikes us with death, we shall with comfort endure the same.

Sect. 4.

Satanicall molestation.

The third particular affliction or distresse, is satanicall molestation, wherby both persons, and places of mansion or abode, are either possessed, or otherwise molested by the malice of the devill.

I. Touching this affliction, the question of Conscience is, How such persons as are possessed, or feare possession, or else endure molestations by the devill in their houses, may have their mindes quieted and stayed: and consequently in that case bee remedied? And here two things are generally to be considered in way of answer.

First, it is to be remembred, that possession is knowne by two signes. The one is, when the Devill is evidently present, either in the whole body, or in some part of it. The other, when hee hath rule of the said body, either in whole or in part: so as the partie himselfe hath not that use of his body which he would. As for example: when the Devill possesseth the instruments of the voyce, as the tongue, and makes a man to speake Latine, Greeke, Italian, or other tongues, which hee understandeth not. Both these things were found in them that were possessed in the time of our Saviour Christ.

Secondly, wee must consider, it falleth out oftentimes, that strange diseases doe seaze upon men, arising from corrupt humours in the body; yea, men and women may have strange passions upon naturall causes unknowne; and these will sometimes have strange and extraordinary effects in them, which the art of Physicke neither can search out nor cure: and yet they are neither acts of Witch-craft, nor reall possessions. As when God laid extraordinary diseases on the Corinthians, for the contempt of his word and Sacraments, 1 Cor. 11. 30. Like unto which hee worthily inflicts upon men in these dayes, for the same and other sinnes.

Now to stay the minde in this case, these Rules are carefully to be thought upon.

First of all, it is to be remembred, that though Satans malice and power bee very great and large, yet he cannot practise the same against the children of God, when, where, and how he listeth. The malice which Satan doth beare to mankinde, and principally to the members of Christ, appeares in this, because he is said, Revel. 12. 10. to accuse them before God day and night: and, as a roaring lion, to walke about the world, seeking whom he may devoure, 1 Pet. 5. 8. Againe, the Scripture notes him to be a powerfull Spirit, whose strength farre exceedeth and surpasseth the might of any man or creature, that is not of an angelical nature, as himselfe is. For hee is termed a Prince of the ayre, and the god of this world; his power reacheth even to the spirits and soules of men, wherby hee worketh in the children of disobedience, Eph. 2. 2. His principalitie is so great, that no strength, no defence of man is able to withstand it, unlesse man take unto himselfe the whole armour of God, Eph. 6. 10.

Now although the devill bee so malicious an enemy of mankinde, that he ceaseth not to devise whatsoever may be hurtfull unto them, and withall so powerfull in his attempts, that no man by his owne proper strength is able to resist him; yet hee cannot put the least part of his power in execution, in what time, place, or manner he desireth. The reason is, because God hath determined his power, by certaine bounds and limits, which he cannot passe: and they are especially two.

The one is, his owne nature, whereby he is a creature, and therefore finite. Hence it is, that he can neither know, nor do any thing that is beyond the reach or capacity of his nature or above the power and skill of a creature. For example, he cannot directly and immediatly know the deepe things of God, unlesse they bee revealed unto him: nor yet the secrets of mans heart. None knoweth the things of a man save the spirit of a man which is in him: even so the things of God knoweth none, but the spirit of God. 1 Cor. 2. 11. Againe, he cannot doe that which is truly and properly a miracle, the cause wherof is hidden and utterly unknown, and which comes not within the power and order of nature. For this is proper unto God, who onely doth things simply wonderfull, Psal. 77. 14.

The second thing whereby Satans power is restrained, is the will of God. For looke as the sea, being by nature apt to overflow the whole earth, is kept in, and shut up within the shore, (as it were) with dores or gates, that it cannot breake forth: and that by the Lord himselfe, who hath established his decree upon it, Iob 38. So though Satan be by nature strong, and his malice great, yet can hee doe nothing at all, no not execute his naturall power, to the hurt and prejudice of any man, without the will and permission of God. Thus the evill spirit could not goe forth to deceive Ahab, untill the Lord had said unto him, Goe, and thou shalt prevaile, 1 King. 22. 22. Thus the Devill could not touch the body, children, goods, or friends of righteous Iob, whilest he was fenced and fortified by the power and providence of God. But when the Lord in regard of Iobs outward estate, had given leave and said, Loe, all that he hath is in thine hand, then did he exercise his power to the utmost: yet so farre only as he was permitted, and no further, Job. 1. 12.

The consideration of this first point, that Satans power is determined by God, will serve to stay the mindes of those, whose persons, houses, or friends, are molested by him. For hereupon it followeth, that God, who hath the Devill bound up (as it were) in chaines, will not suffer his power to bee enlarged against his owne children, to their destruction and confusion: but so farre forth alone, as shall be expedient for their good and salvation. Againe, that God being their Father in Christ Jesus, they may in the time of such affliction, have accesse unto him, and call upon him, for the restraint of Satans power and malice, and consequently, for the deliverance of them and theirs.

A second rule is this: Such persons must have recourse to God in his Word, in which hee promiseth his presence and protection to his children, in their greatest danger: & namely, that there shall no evill come unto them, neither any plague shall come neere their dwelling: because he wil give his Angels charge over them to keepe them in all their waies. Againe, that he will be a wall of fire round about his people, Zac. 2. 5. that he wil extend peace over her like a flood, Isa. 66. 12. And that there shal be no forceree against Iacob, nor soothsaying in Israel, Num 23. 22. And yet if God sees it to bee good for his children to bee tryed by possessions or witch-craft, in this case the promise freeth them not. For all temporall blessings are promised conditionally, so far forth as they may stand with Gods good will and pleasure, and withall may make for the good of his children. Howbeit, herein lies the comfort, that though such calamities befall them, yet they shall turne to their good, rather than to their hurt. This point well considered by the way, bewrayeth the great presumption of some, who are not afraid to say, their faith is so strong, that the Devill cannot touch them.

Thirdly, it must bee considered, that the best servants of God have been in their times molested by the devill. Christ in his second temptation was carried by the devil from the wildernesse to a wing of the Temple in Jerusalem, Matth. 4. 5. The children of Iob were destroyed by the devill, and he himselfe was filled with botches and sores. A certaine woman, even a daughter of Abraham, that is, one following the faith of Abraham, was troubled with a spirit of infirmitie, eighteene years together, Luk. 13. 16. And the daughter of the woman of Canaan was grievously vexed with a devill, Mat. 15. 21, 22.

Fourthly, men in this case ought by faith to lay fast hold upon the promise of life everlasting, & wait the Lords leasure, not limiting him in respect of time, or meanes of deliverance. This was the practice of Iob, Though he kill me, yet wil I trust in him Job 13. 15. And of holy Abraham, Heb. 11. 17. who did not limit God, but was content to doe with Isaac what the Lord would: and though it was in likelihood a meanes to bereave him of all posteritie, yet still he kept himselfe to the promise.

Lastly, men must in this case seeke and sue unto God by prayer, either for deliverance, if it may stand with his good will and pleasure, or else for patience, that they may meekely and patiently beare that particular affliction.

II. In the molestation and annoyance of houses by spirits, two things are to be remembred.

First, men must not consort together, and abide there, where it is certainely knowne, that the Lord hath given the Devill power and liberty; lest in so doing, they tempt the Lord. Our Saviour Christ, did not of his owne private motion and will betake himselfe into the wildernesse, but by the direction of the holy Ghost, Matthew 4. In Paul in like manner did not of his owne head goe to Jerusalem, but upon the motion of the Spirit, Act. 20. 22. In the light of these examples men are taught, not to cast themselves into any places of apparant danger: much lesse to frequent those which God hath delivered up up into the power of Satan. And this condemnes the rash and heady conceits of some persons, who upon confidence of their owne strength, doe put themselves into needlesse dangers, having neither extraordinary calling from God, nor any sufficient warrant out of his word.

Gen. 12.

Gen. 23. 3.

Gen. 35. 7.

If it be asked, what men are to doe in this case? I answer, First, that they ought rather to flie to God by prayer, and to draw neere unto him in their hearts: and he in mercy will draw neere unto them.

Secondarily, that which wee doe in meats and drinkes, is also to bee done in the houses and places where we dwell. And what is that? Wee must sanctifie them to our use, by the word and prayer. Noah at Gods Commandement, went into the Arke, abode in it, and came out againe: and when hee came forth of it, into the earth afterward, it is said of him, Gen. 8. 20. that he built an Altar, gave thanks to God for his deliverance, and prayed the Lord to vouchsafe him the use of the earth, as he had before. Though Abraham had a promise of the land of Canaan, to him and his posterity for ever, yet hee went not out of his country toward it, till the Lord commanded him: and when he was come thither, he built an Altar for the worship and service of God. The like he did afterward at Bethel. And many yeares after did Iacob offer sacrifice unto God, in the same Bethel, when hee came to dwell there. And for this very end, in the law by a speciall ordinance, the first fruits of the harvest were offered to sanctifie the rest of the corne. And so much touching the second distresse.

CHAP. X.

Of the third special distresse, arising of the Temtation of Blasphemie.

Tentatio fœda.

THe third kinde of trouble of minde, is that which ariseth of the Temtation of Blasphemy, which in regard of the vilenesse, and uglinesse thereof, is not amisse termed by some, the foule temtation. And it is when a man is troubled in his minde with blasphemous cogitations, and thoughts, directly against the Majesty of God, the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost. As for example, to thinke that God is not just, or mercifull; that he accepteth mens persons: that he hath not knowledge of things that are done here below, or at least, that he doth not regard them: that God cannot doe this or that: that he is injurious to some men, and partiall to others, &c. These, and such like blasphemous thoughts there be, which are not fit to be uttered amongst men, forasmuch as they are most horrible, and execrable, as any can be conceived.

The cause and danger.

That we may the better know this Temptation, let it be considered, what are the forerunners thereof, and by what meanes it takes place in the heart possessed of it.

Sometime it commeth meerely and onely of the suggestion of the Devill; which troubleth the phantasie, even of those which are in that regard innocent, and casteth into their hearts impure and ungodly thoughts. Sometimes againe it comes upon men by an evill custome: when as they willingly lend their eares to lewd and cursed speeches, that immediately tend to the dishonour of God, or the wilfull abuse of his word, his judgements, and mercies; and upon the hearing, either give their applause and approbation, though not expressly: or doe not hinder or stay them, as much as in them lieth. Otherwhiles it creepes into the heart of man by degrees, when hee begins to wax cold in Gods service, to make little conscience of those duties that immediately concerne his worship, and consequently inures himselfe to the taking of the name of God in vaine, by often and causelesse swearing, forswearing, cursing, &c. By these and such like meanes, is this foule and horrible temptation conveied into the minde of man.

Now the danger of it, whether it ariseth from these, or any other causes, is exceeding grievous, specially to those that have begun to chuse the way of truth, and to apply their hearts to serve God, and to feare his name. For it bringeth forth strange and fearefull effects; as namely, desperation, and manifold horrours and troubles of minde. Yea, divers persons have hereupon beene astonished in such sort, that they have been moved to make dispatch of themselves, being in their owne judgement no better than the very firebrands of hell.

The remedy.

Sect. 2.

Now for the curing of this wonderfull trouble and distraction of Conscience, two things are to be done: to wit, Inquirie must be made into the next causes, whence this Temtation should arise: and after that, the Remedie is to be applied.

For the first: Inquirie is to be made, whether the present Distresse had his beginning from the thoughts of a mans owne minde, or from the suggestion of the Devill. For this is in all likelihood the next way to minister comfort to the afflicted party.

It may be said, How shall a man discerne the thoughts that are from the Devill, from his owne thoughts? Ans. He shall know them by sundry notes.

First, by the entrance of them into the minde. For those that come from the Devill, come speedily, as lightning into a house: and they are after a sort forced into the minde by violence, so as the party cannot avoid them; and they come into the mind again & againe, yea, a thousand times in a day, so as by their often comming, they weaken the memorie, dul the senses, weary and confound the brain. These are thoughts that come from the devil, and by him are conveyed from without, into the minde of man. And if such cogitations were from a mans owne selfe, they would not come with so great vehemency and celerity, but with leasure; and they would rise with more moderation and lesse violence. Yea, further, the frequent use of them would not produce so many and so fearefull effects as it doth.

Secondly, such thoughts may bee discerned to come from the devill, by this signe; because they are directly against the very light of nature, the sparkes whereof are not quite extinct in us by sinne. For everie man thinkes reverently of God by nature. But these cogitations are most wicked and devillish, fastning upon God things that are most vile and monstrous: whereas commonly the thoughts that arise from our selves, are not against the light of nature, though they bee most corrupt.

The third signe is, that at the first conceiving of them, the party is smitten with an extraordinarie feare, his flesh is troubled; and oftentimes, sicknesse and fainting doe follow. But the thoughts that men conceive of themselves, cause neither feare, nor faintings, nor sicknesse.

Fourthly, blasphemous thoughts cannot come ordinarily from the heart of any, save of those alone that are of reprobate mindes. But the parties that are thus distressed, are honest, civill, and such as professe the Gospel, at least in shew; yea sometimes they befall such as are the true members of Christ. Therfore it is manifest, that they come from without, even from the Devill casting them into the minde, and not from within a mans owne selfe.

In the next place inquirie must bee made, whether the party doth approve, love, and like these and such like thoughts, or no? To this hee will answer, if hee be asked, that hee abhorres them as the devill and hell it selfe. Thus even naturall men will answer, and that truly.

After inquirie thus made, the remedy is to bee applyed. And the first and principall remedie pertaines to doctrine, and instruction: in which the partie is to bee informed of his or her estate; namely, that the foresaid blasphemies are not their sinnes, but their crosses. For they are the devils sinnes, and he shall answer for them: and they are not ours, till we entertaine, receive, approve, and give consent unto them.

For proofe hereof, let this bee considered, That uncleane thoughts which have their residence in the minde of man, are of two sorts: Inward, and Outward. Inward are such as have their originall from the flesh; and arise of the corruption of mans nature, though stirred up by the Devill. And these at the very first conceiving, are our sinnes, though they have no long abode in our mindes: And they are directly forbidden in the tenth commandement. Outward thoughts are those which have relation to an outward cause or beginning: Of which sort are those evill thoughts that be conveyed into the mind by the devill: and if we take no pleasure in them, nor yeeld consent unto them, they are not to bee accounted our sinnes, but the Devils, by whom they are suggested. The truth hereof appeares in Christs example; into whose mind the Devill cast this blasphemous Tentation, thereby moving him to infidelity, covetousnesse, and idolatry: which nevertheless were not his sinnes, because his holy heart gave not the least approbation to them, but abhorred and repelled them, and therfore was free from any taint of sinne, in or by them.

This distinction of thoughts must bee remembred. From hence it follows, that blasphemous thoughts, not consented to by us, are not our sinnes, but the Devils. Even as in like case, when one wickedly disposed, sollicites another to treason, or murther: if the said partie listen not, nor yeeld thereto, hee cannot be holden guilty of those crimes. Therefore men must not feare those kinde of thoughts overmuch; at least, if they please not themselves overmuch in them: because though they bee indeed their crosses, yet are they not their personall sinnes, for which they shall incurre the wrath and displeasure of God. Againe, they must let them goe as they come: they are not to strive against them, for the more they labour to resist them, the more shall they bee intangled with them.

The second thing to bee used in way of remedy, for the staying of the minde in this tentation, is, that though it should bee granted, that the fore-said evill and blasphemous thoughts are our sins, yet we are to remember, that they may through the mercie and goodnesse of God be pardoned, if they be heartily and unfainedly repented of: as Iea, further, that neither they, nor any other sins (except that against the holy Ghost) doe condemne him that prayeth against them, and is heartily sorrowy for them.

It was Pauls complaint, Rom. 7. 19. I finde in me, and not the good which I would doe, speaking of the inward endevour of his heart: and againe, that he did the evill which he would not, meaning in respect of the corruption of his nature. Now upon this, that hee endevoured to doe that which was agreeable to the will of God, that he loathed and detested the contrarie, and strove against his corruption; how did hee comfort himselfe? Marke the words following, v. 20. If I doe that I would not, that is to say, against my generall purpose, I sinne against God; if I bee sorry for it, if I be displeased displeased with my selfe, because I cannot obey God in that perfection I desire, It is no more I that doe it, but sinne that dwelleth in me. From this example of Paul I gather, that if a man have in his minde evill thoughts, and doth (as Paul did) grieve, because he hereby offendeth God; if hee doe abhorre them and pray against them; hee shall not be condemned for them; they shall never be laid to his charge. The partie then that is troubled with these thoughts, may upon these grounds stay his minde; and comfort himselfe. For if hee shal not be condemned for them, then let him not feare them above measure.

The third point to bee remembred is, that the party must not be alone. For this Tentation begins, and is confirmed and increased by solitarinesse; and the parties thus distressed, love to bee apart by themselves from the society of others. And for that cause, in case they be lyable to this distresse, they must use to converse with such company, as may affoord them matter of speech and conference meet for them, and may exercise their mindes with heavenly meditations in the Word, and singing of Psalmes, and such like fit and convenient recreations. Our first parent Eve was tempted by Satan, when she was apart from Adam: and our Saviour Christ, when hee was alone out of company and society, then did the devill most maliciously assault him with strong and powerfull tentations in the wilderneese.

The fourth point to be remembred of the party troubled, is, that hee must as heartily and earnestly repent him of those his evil thoughts, as of evill words and deeds. For the truth is, because men are loose-minded, and have no more care of their thoughts, than commonly they have; therefore the Lord justly suffers the devil to plague and torment them, by conveying into their hearts most vile and damnable cogitations. Furthermore, the said party must labour to be renewed in the spirit of his minde, that is, to have his minde inlightened by the Spirit, whereby hee may know and understand the will of God in his Word. After repentance for evill thoughts, there must follow watchfulnesse, and a carefull circumspection over all his waies; but principally hee must have an eye unto his heart, the fountaine of all: Keep thine heart with all diligence, saith Salomon. Prov. 4. 23. that is, above all things, see that thou counterguard thy thoughts, desires, motions, and affections.

Eph. 4. 23, 24.

That the heart of a man may be guarded, two rules are to bee observed. First, that the word of God dwel plentifully in it, Col. 3. 16 by daily meditation of the Commandements, promises & threatnings revealed in the same. It is noted by David, as a property of a blessed man, that hee exercised himselfe in meditation of Gods law day and night, Psal. 1. By this means the heart will be cleansed, and purged from uncleane and polluted motions, and so guided and directed, that it swarve not from God. This rule is of speciall use. For therefore do men hatch, and breed evil thoughts in their hearts, because they are not taken up with holy meditations: and hence it is, that the heart of man is made even a prey unto the devill, because Gods word is not lodged therin. Excellent was Davids practice in this case, who kept the word of God in his heart, that he might not sinne against him, Psal. 119. 11.

The second Rule of the keeping of the hart, is to establish our thoughts by counsell. It is the wise mans advice in so many words, Pro. 20. 18. wherin he would teach us, that it is the property of a worldly wise man, in matters of weight, not to trust to his own wit, but to follow the direction and counsel of wise and skilfull men. And if this bee a sound course in matters of the world, much more ought it to be taken in the maine matters of religion, and conscience, concerning the heart and soule of man. And therefore by the law of proportion, it gives us direction, not once to thinke or conceive so much as a thought, but upon advice and direction taken at God and his word. Thy testimonies (saith David, Psa. 119. 24.) are my delight, and my counsellers. And what benefit had he by taking such a course? Surely by the word of God, which was his continuall meditation, he got understanding, he became wiser than the ancient; it made him to hate all the wayes of falshood: it kept him from declining from God, either to the right hand, or to the left. The same rule must bee practised of us, in the use of our senses, our speeches, and actions, and then shall the heart be kept cleane, and free from these temptations.

And seeing this temptation is so dangerous and fearefull, as hath beene said, and doth often befall men, our duty is to make conscience of practising the fore-said rules. And thus much concerning the third kinde of distresse of Conscience.

CHAP. XI.

Of the fourth speciall Distresse, arising from a mans owne sinnes.

THe fourth distresse of mind, is that which ariseth from a mans owne sinnes, or rather from some one speciall sin committed. And this kinde of Tentation is two-fold: For either it is more violent, and lesse common; or lesse violent, and more common.

Sect. 1.

The violent Distresse of minde, shewes it selfe by feare and terrours of the Conscience, by doubtings of the mercie of God, by lamentable and fearefull complaints made to others. The violent Distresse.

Now Question is moved, How this violent distresse of mind, arising from our owne sinnes, is to be cured? Answ. That it may be cured The cure.

cured by the blessing of God, three things must be done.

First, that particular sinne must be knowne which is the cause of this violent distresse. And here we are to know by the way, that it is an usuall thing with the parties thus distressed, to dissemble and cloake their sinnes: and therefore they will alleage, that their trouble ariseth from some evill thoughts, from wicked affections, and from the corruption of nature: whereas commonly men are not distressed in violent manner, for evill thoughts, affections, &c. but the violent distresse commeth from some actuall and odious sinne or sins done, which wound the conscience, and are the causes of great distraction of minde: and they are many, which having beene upon occasion before rehearsed, I will not now repeat them. Onely this must bee remembred, that the greater sinnes against the third, sixth, and seventh commandements, are the maine and proper causes of violent distresses: And the more secret the sinne is, in regard of the practice thereof, the greater horror of Conscience it bringeth; and open offences doe not give so deep a wound unto it, as secret and hidden sinnes.

Quo occultius peccatum, eò majus judicium.

Secondly, the particular sin being knowne, inquirie must bee made, as much as possibly may be, by signes, whether the party distressed repenteth, yea, or no. For except he hath repented, he cannot be fitted to receive comfort, and unlesse hee bee first fitted to receive comfort, hee cannot bee releeved in Conscience. Now if it bee found out, that the partie hath repented, then care must bee had in the next place, that his repentance may be renued for the particular sinne committed.

Thirdly, having thus done, the comfort must bee ministred for the moderating or taking away of the distresse. And here remember by the way, that the comforts ministred usually and ordinarily, must not go alone, but be mingled and tempered with some terrours of the Law: that being thereby feared with the consideration of sin, and of the wrath of God due unto the same, the comfort may appeare to be the sweeter. The ministring whereof, in case of this distresse, would not be direct and present, but by certaine steps and degrees, except onely in the point of death, for then a directer course must be used. These degrees are two:

First, the partie is to be informed of a possibilitie of pardon, that is, that his sinnes are pardonable, and though in themselves they bee great and hainous, yet by the mercy of God in Christ they may bee remitted. Now put the case, that the afflicted apprehendeth onely the odiousnesse of his sinnes, and the wrath of God due to the same, and in this fit, put off the pardon from himselfe, and cannot bee perswaded that his sinne may bee forgiven, what then is to be done? Ans. Then for the effecting of this first degree, certaine Grounds are to bee laid downe, whereupon assurance in that case may bee built up in his heart.

Grounds of possibilitie of pardon.

The first Ground of possibilitie of pardon is, That the mercy of God is infinite, yea, over all his workes, Psal. 145.9. That the death of Christ is of infinite price, merit, and value, before God. That God is much in sparing, Isa. 55.7. That with the Lord is mercie, and with him is plenteous redemption, Psal. 130.7. That Christs satisfaction is not onely a (b) price, but a(c) counterprice, 1 Tim. 2.6. able to satisfie for the sinnes of all men, yea, for them that have sinned against the holy Ghost. For that sinne is not therefore unpardonable, because the offence thereof is greater than the merit of Christ, but because the partie offending, neither doth, nor can apply the merit of Christ unto himselfe. An ancient Father upon Cains words, saith, My punishment is greater than I can beare. Thou hast cast Cain: for Gods mercy is greater than the sinnes of all men. The mercy of God was very great to Manasses, to Salomon, to Peter, and to many others, though they were great offenders.

2 Chro. 33. 13, 14, 15.

The second ground. Men of years, living in the Church of God, and knowing the doctrine of salvation, shal not be condemned simply for their sinnes, but for lying in their sinnes. Upon this ground I say, that men distressed must bee grieved, not so much for committing of sinne, as for lying and continuing in sinnes committed.

A third ground. It pleaseth God many times to leave men to themselves, and suffer them to commit some sin that woundeth conscience. It is true and cannot be denied. But we must withall remember, that sins committed do not utterly take away grace, but rather make it the more to shine and shew it selfe. For God in mercy turneth all things, even sinne it selfe, to the good of them that be his: and therefore sinne committed, cannot either wast, or extinguish grace received, but by divine dispensation, serves to amplifie and inlarge the same; so as where sin aboundeth, there grace aboundeth much more, Rom. 5.20. And the Lord said to Paul, being in great extremity, 2 Cor. 12.9. my grace is sufficient for thee: for my power is made perfect through weakenesse. Hence it appeareth, that Gods grace is not utterly lost, but appeareth lively in the time of distresse.

The fourth Ground is this: The promises of God touching remission of sins, and life eternall in respect of beleevers, are general, and in regard of all and every man indefinite: that is, they do not define or exclude any person, or any sinner, or any time; only they admit one exception or finall impenitencie. Here a question may bee moved, How long hee that ministreth comfort, must stand upon the possibilitie of pardon? I answer, untill hee hath brought the partie distressed to some measure of true repentance: and this being done, then he is to proceed to the second degree of comfort.

The

The second degree of comfort is, to teach, that the sinne, or sinnes of the partie distressed, are indeed pardoned. But it may be asked, upon what signes may this comfort bee applied? I answer, upon these two. First, if the partie distressed confesse, that hee or shee is heartily grieved, that by their sinne or sinnes, they have offended so loving and so mercifull a God. Secondly, if they professe, that they desire with all their heare to bee reconciled unto God in Christ: and at least doe desire to repent for their sinnes; and withall doe carry in heart a purpose to sinne no more, but in all things (as much as in them lyeth) to performe new obedience unto God, Luk. 15.11. &c. Now for the better enforcing of this comfort, some texts of Scripture fitting this purpose must be rehearsed; as for example, Matth. 9.12, 13. I came not to call the righteous, that is to say, those that judge themselves righteous, but sinners, that is, those which are grieved, because in their owne conscience they are vile and heinous offenders, to repentance. Againe, Matth. 11.28. Come unto me all ye that are weary, and heavie laden, and I will refresh you. And Christ saith, it was the end of his coming, to preach deliverance to the Captives, and to set at libertie them that are bruised, Luk. 4.18.

The Case of Residivation.

To conclude this point, there remaines yet a further question to be resolved, and that is this. A man after repentance for some grievous sinne, falls into it againe, and is distressed more than before: It is a case somewhat grievous. For wee know that if a man be recovered of an ague, and through distemper in diyet or otherwise, makes a relapse into it againe, his case is often desperate, and he hardly escapeth with his life. In the same manner it is a dangerous case, if after repentance, men make a relapse into the same sin againe. It may then be asked, how such persons may be recovered after a relapse?

I answer, though we finde not any one particular example in Scripture, of any one person, that was restored againe after a relapse: yet nevertheless there is some comfort for such persons. Upon what grounds may some say? Answ. Men that have not so much as a drop of mercie, in comparion of God, must forgive their brethren often and many times, yea, as our Saviour Christ saith to Peter, till seventy times seven times, if they returne and say, it repents them. Now God is infinite in all his attributes. He is much in sparing: with him is plenteous redemption: and therefore hee will question lesse, upon true repentance, often forgive and forget, even the same sinne iterated againe and againe.

Now these persons are to bee releeved in this sort. First, they must have their Consciences settled in this point, that their relapse is pardonable, though very dangerous. For proofe hereof, read Esay 1.18. where mention is made of divers Apostates, that were by God called to repentance, with promise of pardon if they turned unto him. And in Luke 15. the prodigall childe, by whom I understand one that after grace received, fell from his repentance and obedience to God) when he did purpose in his heart to returne againe, was pardoned, and receved into favour. In the 2 Cor. 5.20. Paul saith to the Corinths, that were fallen away, We pray you in Christs stead that ye be reconciled unto God.

Secondly, being thus settled in conscience, they must againe repent them of their sinnes.

Thirdly and lastly, they are to be comforted, with the promise of remission of sinnes, after that some signes of renewed repentance for sinnes past have beene given.

Sect. 2.

The second kinde of this Tentation or trouble of mind, which is more common and lesse violent, befalls the children of God: and it is a griefe of heart, more or lesse, whereby men are troubled in respect of the want of grace in their hearts, and defects of obedience in their lives. Paul the deare servant of God, was possessed with this trouble of minde, as we may read, Rom. 7.23. And indeed there is no child of God, but more or lesse, one time or other, he feeles the stings of sin, and the bufferting of Satan, which cause griefe in his heart. But this griefe is a notable grace of God, and therefore they which want it, must labour to have it, and they which have it, must not seeke to put it out, but to keepe it in measure and order.

The moderate distresse.

And the Grounds of comfort, whereby the heart may be staied in this sorrow, that it be not immoderate, may be these.

1. Ground. It is Gods will, that the worke of sanctification, or regeneration, should be imperfect in this life, and remaine unfinished till death. This point needs no proofe, it is manifest both in the Word of God, and in daily experience. The reasons for which God will have it to be so, may be these.

First of all, God gives grace, according to the measure and manner of our receiving of it, which in this life is imperfect. Some gifts of God in Christ, bestowed on his servants, as remission of sinnes by his death, and justification by his obedience, are not put into us, but are only applied and made ours by imputation. Some other gifts there be, which are infused and put into us, as namely, sanctification, regeneration, the love of God and man: and by one of these two meanes, to wit, either by imputation, or infusion, are all the gifts of God in Christ made ours. Yet before wee can have them, we must receive them, and the meanes whereby wee receive them is faith, which God hath ordained, to be the hand of our soules, to receive his benefits bestowed on us. Which faith because it is weake and imperfect in this life, therefore the gifts which we receive thereby, are also imperfect. For though Gods benefits be like a bottomlesse lesse ses, yet the faith whereby we lay hold of them, is like unto a vessell with a narrow necke, which though it be cast into the great Ocean, receives but a little water at once, and that by degrees, drop by drop, according to the wideneesse of the mouth. And hence it is, that though the gifts of God without us, which are ours by imputation, be perfect; yet all such graces as are put into us are weake and imperfect.

Secondly, if any servant of God should be perfectly regenerate, and made absolutely holy in this life; then he should fulfill the morall law, and so become a Saviour to himselfe: and by the tenour of the law have life, and so should not Christ be a Saviour properly, but only an instrument, to dispose us to the keeping of the law, whereby we might save our selves. But there is one onely al-sufficient Saviour, Christ Jesus, and the beginning, the middle, and the accomplishment of our salvation, is to be ascribed to him alone.

Thirdly, it is the will of God, that his owne children, with whom hee is well pleased in Christ, should be brought to nothing in themselves, that they might bee all in all out of themselves in Christ: being, as it were, emptied of selfe-love, and of all confidence in their owne goodnesse. But if sanctification should be perfect at the first, then a man should not goe out of himselfe, but would rather stay as he is, and rest contented in his owne goodnesse. For this cause Paul, after his exaltation, was buffeted by Satans temptations, that he might not be exalted out of measure, 2 Cor. 12. 7. but should content himselfe with this, that he was in the love and favour of God in Christ.

II. Ground is; To consider, what makes a man professing Christ, accepted of God: and how much he himselfe must doe for this end? The substance of all things to be done of us for this end, that wee may become the children of God, may be reduced to three heads.

First of all, we must heartily bewaile our sinfull lives past, and seriously humble our selves in regard of our owne sinnes, both of heart and life: and if by occasion wee fall into any sin, we must not lie therein, but by speedie repentance, recover our former estate.

Secondly, in regard of the sinfulnesse of our hearts and lives, in times past, wee must rest our selves on Gods mercie alone, flying to the throne of mercie for the pardon of them all.

Thirdly, we must endevour in the course of our lives afterward to performe obedience to God in all his Commandements; that thereby we may shew our selves thankfull to him for his mercie, and profit in our obedience.

For proofe hereof; First, consider the examples of this practice in Gods children. All that David, that worthy servant of God could doe, after his sinnes committed, to bring himselfe againe into the favour of God, whom he had offended, consisted of these very heads, which have beene named; Repentance, Confidence, and Affiance in Gods mercy, and Performance of new obedience. And this his practice was verified, amongst many other places, specially in the 116. Psalme, and in all the Psalmes commonly called penitentiall. Againe, the Prophet Daniel was accepted of God only for the doing of these things, Dan. 9. And in like manner was Paul. and the rest of the Apostles, Rom. 7. 1 Tim. 1. 12. Againe, for further proofe, let it be considered, what it is that makes a man to become a Christian and servant of God: not this, that he is pure from all sinnes, and never slides or swarves from obedience unto God; but because when he sinneth and falleth, he is grieved with himselfe, and labooreth every day to mortifie his corruptions, which are the matter of sinne, in his heart, and life, and sufferreth not sinne to reigne in his mortall bodie, but crucifieth the flesh, with the affections and lusts thereof.

Yet here remaines a great difficultie. Many a good servant of God may, and doth truly say of himselfe, I bewaile my sins, and doe in some sort rest on Gods mercie, and with all I endevour to performe new obedience: but alas, here is my griefe, I cannot doe these things as I would. In matter of sorrow and griefe, I am troubled with hardnesse of heart; in occasions of boldnesse and confidence, with doubtings: endevour to obey, with many slips, and sundry falls. For the staying and moderating of this griefe, these rules may further be remembred.

The first Rule. If there be in the minde a purpose not to sinne: in the will, a desire to please God: and in the whole man, an endevour to performe the purpose of the minde, and the desire of the will: marke what followes upon this: God in mercy accepteth the purpose & will to obey, for obedience it selfe. Yea, though a man faile in the very act, and doe not so well as he should, the Lord accepteth the affection and endevour for the thing done. Excellent is the saying of an ancient father, God accepteth that which is his, and forgives that which is thine. His is the grace whereby we are enabled to endevour to obey in the want of obedience, and that he accepteth: ours is the sinne and weaknesse in performance of the duty which he requireth, and that hee doth in mercy forgive. Herein appeareth the great goodnesse of God unto us, and we can never be sufficiently thankfull for the same. But yet that we may not here delude our hearts with conceits, and blesse our selves in vaine; we must know, that God doth not alwaies accept the will for the deed, unlesse there be a constant purpose in heart, a true desire in wil, and some resolved endevour suitable in the life. Malach. 3. 17. God spares them that feare him, as a father spares his owne child.

How

Accipit fuum, & remittit tuum.

How is that? Though the sicke or weak child being commanded some businesse, goeth about it very unhandsomely, and so the deed be done to little or no purpose, yet the father accepts it as wel done, if he see the child yeeld unto his Commandement, and doe his endevour to the uttermost of his power. Even so will God deale with those that be his children, though sicke and weake in obedience.

But how, will some say, can God accept a worke of ours that is imperfect? Ans. So farre forth as the obedience is done in truth; so far forth God accepts it, because it is his owne worke in us: and as it is ours, he pardons it unto us, because we are in Christ.

A second Rule is laid downe, Rom. 7. 19. where Paul saith to this purpose, the good which I would doe, I doe not, and the evill which I would not, that doe I. In these words is set downe the state of all regenerate men in this life: and the meaning is this: The good things which God hath commanded, I doe them, but not as I would; and the evill forbidden I avoid, but not as I would. This we shall see to be true by comparing the voices of three kinds of men together. The carnall man saith, I doe not that which is good, neither will I doe it; and that which is evill I doe, and I would doe it. Contrariwise, the man glorified, he saith, That which is good I doe, and will doe it; and that which is evill I doe not, neither will I doe it. The regenerate man in a middle betweene them both, he saith, The good things commanded I doe, but not as I would; the evill things forbidden I avoid, but not as I would.

And this is the estate of the childe of God in this life, who in this regard is like unto a diseased man, who loves his health, and therefore observes both diet and physicke: and yet he often falls into his fit againe (though he be never so carefull to observe the rules of the Physitian) by reason of the distemperature of his body: and hereupon is faine to goe to the Physitian the second time for new counsell: in like manner, Gods children have indeed in their hearts a care to please and obey God; but by reason of sinne that dwelleth in them, they faile often, and so are faine to humble themselves againe before him, by new repentance. Againe, the servants of God are likened to a man, by some sudden accident cast into the sea, who in striving to save himselfe from drowning, puts to all his strength to swim to the shore, and being come almost unto it, there meets him a wave or billow, which drives him cleane backe againe, it may be a mile or further; and then the former hope and joy conceived of escape, is sore abated, yet he returnes againe, and still labours to come to the land, and never rests till he attaine unto it.

III. Ground. He that is indeed regenerate, hath this priviledge, that the corruption of nature is no part of him, neither doth it belong to his person in respect of divine imputation. Paul saith of himselfe, Rom. 7. 17. It is no more I, but sinne that dwelleth in me. In which words, he distinguisheth betweene his owne person, and sinne that is in him. For in man regenerate, there be three things, the bodie, the soule, and the gift of Gods image restored againe. Now touching the corruption of nature, that is in his person, and so may be said to be his; but it belongs not to the man regenerate: it is not his, because it is not imputed to him, and so indeed is, as though it were not in him. The Apostle, 1 Thess. 5. 23. prayes for the Thessalonians, that God would sanctifie them throughout, and praies for their whole spirit, soule, and body. Of which place (amongst many) this exposition may be given: The Apostle speaking of men regenerate, and sanctified, makes three parts in them; bodie, soule, and spirit: and by spirit, we are to understand not the conscience, but the gift of regeneration, & sanctification, which is the whole new man in body and soule, opposed to the flesh, which in a naturall man is called the old man, Rom. 7. And the prayer which Paul makes in the behalfe of the Thessalonians, teacheth us in effect thus much, that though corruption remaine in the regenerate, after regeneration, yet in respect of divine acceptation, he is accounted as righteous, and so continueth; his sinne (by the mercie of God in Christ) not being imputed to him to condemnation. And so much for that point.

Now these Grounds of comfort, and rules of the like nature, may serve to sustaine and uphold the hearts of the children of God, when they shall be pressed and troubled, in consideration of their estate in this life, which cannot till death bee fully freed from much weaknesse and manifold imperfections.

CHAP. XLI.

Of the fifth speciall Direction, arising from a true view of the body.

THe fifth and last kinde of Temptation or Trouble of minde, ariseth from a vaine view of our owne body.

Before I enter to speake thereof, one Question, in the case and rule, must be answered, namely, how the body being an earthly substance, should trouble or annoy the minde, considering that the minde is not bodily, but spirituall: for nothing can worke above it owne power; and it is against reason, that that which is bodily, should either alter or trouble a spirit. For answer hereunto, these things must be considered:

Sect. 1. How the body troubles the minde.

First of all, the actions of man, though they be sundry, yet they all proceed from one onely fountaine, and common cause, as before; and are done by the power thereof. The body of it selfe is not an agent in any worke, but as it were a dead instrument, and by which the soule produceth all actions whatsoever.

Secondly,

Secondly, though all the actions of men come from the soule, yet the most of them are such as be performed by the body, and the parts thereof, and by the spirits that are seated in the body, as by instruments. Indeed some actions of the soule and minde are done without the helpe of the body, but I say that the most of them are wrought by the body, and spirits therein contained. And yet notwithstanding the spirits in themselves are no agents at all: but the onely agent in any worke is the soule it selfe. For example, the using of the outward senses, as of sight, hearing, tasting, touching, smelling, as also of the inward, as imagination, memory, &c. all this is done by the braine, and the parts of the braine, as proper instruments. All affections both good and bad come from the soule, but yet they are done and acted in and by the meanes of the heart and vitall spirits. So also the powers of life and nourishment proceed from the soule; and yet they are done and wrought by the liver, and other inward parts, as instruments whereby the soule nourisheth the bodie. In a word, there is no naturall action in man, but for the effecting thereof, the parts of the body are used as it were the hands and instruments of the soule; and all this comes by reason of the union of the body with the soule, whereby they make one person.

Hence it followes, that when the bodie is troubled, the soule is also troubled. Now the body affecteth and hurteth the soule & mind, not by taking away, or diminishing any part thereof: for the soule is indivisible: nor by depriving it of any power or faculties given it of God: for as the soule it selfe, and the parts thereof, so also all the faculties of the same remaine whole and entire without abating or diminishing: But by corrupting the action of the minde, or more properly, by corrupting the next instrument, whereby the mind worketh, and consequently the action it selfe.

This may bee conceived by a comparison. A skilfull artificer in any science, having an unfit toole to worke withall, though his skill be good, and his ability sufficient, yet his instrument wherewith he worketh being bad, the worke which he doth must needs bee an imperfect worke. Howbeit, the coole takes not away the skill of his workmanship, nor his power of working; onely it hinders him from shewing his skill, and doing that well, which otherwise he should and could doe well. In like manner; the bodie being corrupted, hinders the worke of the soule; not by taking away the worke of the soule, or the ability of working: but by making it to bring forth a corrupt worke, because the instrument which it useth is corrupt and faulty. And thus we must conceive of all the annoyances of the soule by the body.

The Temptation followeth. The bodie causeth the trouble of mind two waies, either by Melancholy, or by some strange alteration in the parts of the body, which oftentimes befall men: in what sort we shall see afterwards. For troubles of minde thus caused, are more common, and as noysome as the most of the former.

Sect. 2.

Melancholy.

Touching that which comes by Melancholy, sundry things are to be considered for our instruction, and for the remedie of that evill.

1. And first of all, if it be asked what Melancholy is? I answer, it is a kinde of earthly and blacke bloud, specially in the spleene, corrupted and distempered; which when the spleene is slope, convaies it selfe to the heart, and the braine; and there partly by his corrupt substance, and contagious qualitie, and partly by corrupt spirits, annoieth both heart and braine, being the seats and instruments of reason and affections.

Esca Diaboli, Balneum Diaboli.

2. The second is, what are the effects and operations of Melancholy? Answ. They are strange and often fearefull. There is no humour, yea nothing in mans body, that hath so strange effects as this humour hath, being once distempered. An ancient Divine cals it the Devils bait, because the Devill being well acquainted with the complexion and temperature of man, by Gods just permission, conveyes himselfe into this humor, and worketh strange conceits. It is recorded in Scripture, that when the Lord tooke his good spirit from Saul, whereby he did carry himselfe well in the government of his people, and an evill spirit came upon him, he was in so fearefull a case, that he would have slaine him that was next unto him: how so? Surely, because God in justice withdrew his Spirit from him, and suffered Satan to enter into the humour of choler, melancholy, or both, and by this means caused him to offer violence to David.

Now the effects thereof in particular are of two sorts. The first is in the braine and head. For this humour being corrupted, it sends up noysome fumes as clouds or mists which doe corrupt the imagination, and make the instrument of reason unfit for understanding and sense. Hence followes the first effect, strange imaginations, conceits and opinions framed in the mind: which are the first worke of this humor, not properly, but because it corrupteth the instrument, and the instrument being corrupted, the faculty cannot bring forth good but corrupt actions.

Λυκάνθρωποι.

Examples hereof are well knowne, I will only touch one or two. One is called the Bestiall or Beastlike Melancholy, a disease in the braine whereby a man thinkes him to bee a beast of this or that kind, and carries himselfe accordingly. And herewith have all those bin troubled, which have thought themselves to be wolves, and have practised wolvish behaviour. Againe, it is said of Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. 4. that he was driven from men, and did eat grasse as the oxen, that is, behaved himselfe, and fed as a beast. Now some are of opinion, that his humane shape was taken from him, and that he was transformed into a beast; at least that he had the soule of a beast in stead of an humane soule for a time. But they are deceived. For there is no such transportation of soules into bodies, either of men or beasts. Others thinke, that Nebuchadnezzar was smitten in the braine with this disease of beast-like melancholy, whereby he was so bereft of his right minde, that he carried himselfe as a beast. And this interpretation is not against the text: for in the 31. verse of that chapter it is said, that his minde came to him againe: and therefore in the disease, his understanding, and the right use of his reason was lost. And the like is true in histories, by divers examples, though it were not true in Nebuchadnezzar.

Againe, take another example, that is common and ordinary. Let a Melancholike person upon the sudden heare or see some fearefull thing, the strength of his imagination is such, that hee will presently fasten the thing upon himselfe. As if hee see or heare that a man hath hanged himselfe, or is possessed with a Devill, it presently comes to his mind, that he must doe so unto himselfe, or that he is, or at least shall be possessed. In like manner, upon relation of fearefull things, presently his phantasie workes, and he imagineth that the thing is already or shall befall him. And this imagination, when it enters once and takes place, it brings forth horrible and fearefull effects.

The second effect or worke of Melancholy, is upon the heart. For there is a concord and consent between the heart and the brain, the thoughts and the affections: the heart affecting nothing but that which the minde conceiveth. Now when the minde hath conceived, imagined, and framed within it selfe fearefull thoughts, then comes affection and is answerable to imagination. And hence proceed exceeding horrors, feares and despaires, even of salvation it selfe, and yet the Conscience for all this untouched, and not troubled or disquieted.

3. Thirdly, it may be demanded, whether there be any difference betweene the trouble of Conscience and Melancholy? Ans. They are not all one, but differ much. Affliction of Conscience is one thing, trouble by Melancholy is another: and they are plainly distinguished thus:

First, when the conscience is troubled, the affliction it selfe is in the conscience, and so in the whole man. But in Melancholy, the imagination is disturbed, and not the conscience. Secondly, the conscience afflicted hath a true and certaine cause whereby it is troubled, namely, the sight of sin, and the sense of Gods wrath: but in Melancholy, the imagination conceiveth a thing to be so, which is not so: for it makes a man feare and despaire upon supposed and fained causes. Thirdly, the man afflicted in Conscience hath courage in many other matters: but the melancholike man feares every man, every creature, yea, himselfe, and hath no courage at all, but feares when there is no cause of feare. Fourthly, imaginations in the braine caused by Melancholy, may be cured, taken away, and cut off by meanes of Physicke: but the distresse of Conscience cannot bee cured by any thing in the world but one, and that is the bloud of Christ, and the assurance of Gods favour.

4. Fourthly, the way to cure Melancholy is this. First, the person troubled must bee brought to this, that he will content himselfe, to be advised and ruled by the judgement of others, and cease to rest upon himselfe touching his owne estate; and by this shall hee reape much quiet and contentation.

Secondly, search and triall must bee made, whether he hath in him any beginnings of grace, as of faith and repentance, or no. If he be a carnall man, and wanteth knowledge of his estate, then meanes must be used to bring him to some sight and sorrow for his sinnes, that his melancholy sorrow may be turned into a godly sorrow. If he want faith and true repentance, some good beginnings thereof must be wrought in his heart.

Thirdly, when hee is brought to faith in Gods mercy, and an honest purpose not to sinne any more; then, certaine mercifull promises of God are to be laid before him, and he must be exhorted to rest upon these promises, and at no time to admit any imagination or thought, that may crosse the said promises. Now the promises are these, and such like. Psal. 34. 9. No good thing shall bee wanting to them that feare God. Psal. 91. 10. No evill shall come neere the godly man. 2 Chr. 15. The Lord is with you, while you are with him, & if you seeke him, he will be found of you. Iam. 4. 8. Draw neere to God, and he will draw neere to you. And the best meanes to cause any man thus diseased to be at peace with himselfe, is to hold, beleeve, and know the truth of these promises, and not to suffer any by-thought to enter into his heart, that may crosse them.

Moreover, though the former promises may stay the minde, yet will they not take away the humour, except further helpe bee used. Therefore the fourth and last helpe is the art of Physicke, which serves to correct and abate the humour, because it is a meanes by the blessing of God, to restore the health, and to cure the distemper of the body. And thus much touching the trouble of minde, caused by melancholy.

Strange alterations besides melancholy.

The second meanes whereby the body annoyes the mind, is, when it occasions trouble to the minde, by strange alterations incident to the bodie. When a man begins to enter into a Phrensie, if the braine admit never so little alteration, presently the mind is troubled, the the reason corrupted, the heart terrified, the man distracted in the whole body. Thus from the trembling of the heart come many fearefull imaginations and conceits, whereof a man knowes not the cause. The same is procured by the swelling of the spleene, by the arising of the entrals, by strange crampes, convulsions, and such like.

The remedie hereof is this. First, it is still to bee considered, whether the partie thus troubled, hath the beginnings of true faith and repentance, or no. If he hath, it is so much the better: If he hath not, (as usually such persons are meere naturall men) then the first duty is, to use all meanes, to stir up in him some godly sorrow for his sinnes, to bring him to the exercises of invocation, and to some confidence in Gods mercy for pardon.

Secondly, this being done, meanes must be used to take away the opinion conceived, which will be done by giving him information of the state of his body, and what is the true and proper cause of the alteration thereof. This being knowne, the griefe or feare conceived will easily be stayed. For take away the false opinion, and informe the judgement, and the whole man will be the better.

Thirdly, the opinion being altered and reformed, it may be the alteration in the body will remaine: the party therefore in that case must be taught, that it is a correction of God, and that God doth not barely suffer the correction to be inflicted, but is the very author of it: and therefore the party is to be well pleased, and to rest himselfe in that will of God. For every present estate, whether it be good or bad, is the best state for us, because it comes by Gods will and appointment.

And thus much touching the distinct kinds of distresses of minde: whereunto I adde this one thing further; that if we make examination of the estate of such persons as are troubled with any of these five temptations, wee shall not usually finde them single, but mixed together, especially Melancholy, with terror of Conscience or some other temptations.

For the distraction of the minde will often breed a distemper in the body, & the distemper of the body likewise will sometime cause distraction of mind. Againe, Melancholy will often be an occasion (though no direct cause) of terrour of conscience, and in the same manner the conscience touched and terrified with sense of the hainousnesse of sin, and the heavinesse of Gods wrath, will bring distemper of body by sympathy, and cause Melancholy.

In this Case, if Question be made, what is to be done, I answer, that for mixt distresses, wee must have recourse to mixt Remedies, using in the first place the best meanes for the rectifying of the mind, the principall grounds whereof have beene before delivered; and then taking the seasonable advice of the Physitian, whose calling and service God hath sanctified for the cure and releese of the body in case of extremitie.

And so much of the first sort of Questions concerning Man simply considered in himselfe.

The end of the first Booke.

THE SECOND BOOKE OF THE CASES OF CONSCIENCE, concerning Man as he stands in relation to God.

CHAP. I.

Of the order of the Questions.

Hitherto I have spoken touching the first sort of Questions of the Conscience, which concerne Man simply considered in himselfe as he is a man.

In the next place come to be handled and resolved the Questions concerning Man, as he stands in relation. Now man standing in a two-fold relation; either to God, or to man: according to this relation, the Questions come to be considered in their severall places. And first, wee are to treat of the Questions of Conscience touching man standing in relation to God; to wit, as he is a Christian.

All which for orders sake may be reduced to foure heads.

I. Concerning the Godhead.

II. Concerning the Scriptures.

III. Concerning religion, or the worship that is due unto God.

IV. Concerning the time of the worship of God, namely, the Sabbath.

CHAP. II.

Of the Godhead.

Touching the Godhead, there are two maine Questions.

I. Que-

I. Question.

Whether there be a God?

Before wee come to answer the Question, this one caveat must bee remembred, that it is a maine ground and principle in all Religions whatsoever, not to bee doubted of, or called into question, That there is a God. Hebrewes 11. 6. He that commeth to God, must believe that God is. As for those that are commonly termed Atheists, which denie that there is a God, they are to bee punished with death, as not worthy to live in humane society; and the greatest torment that can bee devised by the wit of man, is too good for them. For if those bee holden as Traitors to an earthly Prince, and are most deservedly adjudged to death, that revile his person, and deny his lawfull authority: then they that call into question the God-head, are much more worthy to be esteemed traytours to God, and consequently to beare the just punishment of their rebellion, death it selfe.

For this cause I doe not meane to dispute the Question, whether there bee a God or no; and thereby minister occasion of doubting and deliberation in that which is the only maine Ground and pillar of Christian Religion: but rather my purpose is, in shewing that there is a God, to remove, or at least to helpe an inward corruption of the soule, that is great and dangerous, whereby the heart and conscience by nature denieth God and his providence. The wound in the body that pluckes out the heart, is the most dangerous wound that can bee: and that opinion that taketh away the Godhead, doth in effect rend and plucke out the very heart of the soule. This caveat premised, I come to the point in hand, to shew that there is a God.

And for our better knowledge and assurance of this truth, we are to remember thus much, that God hath given unto man a three-fold light: the one of nature: the other of grace, and the third of glory. And by these, as by so many degrees of knowledge, the minde being inlightened by God, receiveth direction in the truth of the God-head, both for this present life, and for that which is to come.

If it bee demanded, in what order God hath revealed this light unto man: I answer, that the light of nature serveth to give a beginning and preparation to this knowledge: the light of grace ministers the ground, and gives further proofe and evidence: and the light of glory yeelds perfection of assurance, making that perfectly and fully knowne, which by the former degrees was but weakly and imperfectly comprehended. Of these three in order.

Sect. I.

The light of nature is that light, which the view and consideration of the creatures both in generall and particular, affoordeth unto man. From the light of nature, there are five distinct argumen ts, to prove that there is a God: the consideration whereof will not bee unprofitable; even to him that is best setled in this point.

Arguments from the light of nature, and Creation.

I. The first is taken from the creation and frame of the great body of the world, and the things therein contained. Romanes 1. 20. The invisible things of him, that is, his eternall power and God head, are knowne by the Creation of the World, being considered in his workes. And out of this excellent frame of the world, the truth of the God-head may bee sundrie wayes proved and maintained.

First, I would aske this question: This goodly frame of the world, had it a beginning, or no beginning?

Let either part, or both be taken. Let it first bee said, it had no beginning, but is eternall, as the Atheist holdeth. Then I reason thus: If it had no beginning, the world it selfe is God, and all the creatures that are therein, from the greatest and highest, to the least and basest; yea, every drop of water in the sea, and every corne of sand by the sea shoare, are Gods. The reason is, because according to this opinion, they have their being of themselves without beginning, and that which is a substance of it selfe, and hath no beginning, is very God.

Againe, if the world hath no beginning, then it hath also no ending. For that which is without beginning, is without ending. Now all things in the world are lyable to corruption, and consequently are subject to an end. For whatsoever is corruptible, the same is finite: therefore the world had a beginning.

Now if it had a beginning; then I demand, how it was made? did it make it selfe? or was it made of nothing? If it bee affirmed, that it made it selfe, then the world was before it was. If it be said, it came from nothing, that also cannot bee. For nothing brings forth nothing: and that which is nothing in it selfe, cannot bring forth something: therefore it is absurd in reason to say, that nothing brought forth this world. And hereupon it must needs remaine for a truth, that there was some substance eternall and Almightie, that framed this goodly Creature the World, besides it selfe.

If a man comes into a large forest, and beholds therein goodly faire buildings, and sundry kindes of herbs, and trees, and birds, and beasts, and no man: hee will presently reason thus with himselfe: These buildings are the workmanship of some man, they were not from all eternitie, they did not reare themselves, neither did the herbs, the trees, the birds, or the beasts build them: but of necessity they must have some first founder, which is man. In like manner, when wee consider this world, so goodly a creature to behold, though wee see not the maker thereof, yet wee cannot say that either it made it selfe, or that the things therein contained made it, but that the Creator of it was some uncreated substance, most wise, most cunning, and everlasting, and that is God.

Secondly, from this frame of the world, and the consideration thereof, I reason thus: In the world there are foure sorts and kindes of creatures. The first, bare and naked substances, that have neither life, sense, nor reason in them; as the Sunne, the Moone, and the Starres. The second, that have substance and life, but no sense nor reason: as plants, trees, and herbs. The third, that have no reason, but both substance, life, sense, and power to move themselves; as the beasts of the land, and fishes of the sea. The fourth are such as have all, namely, substance, life, sense, and reason; as men.

Now these foure sorts of creatures excell one another in properties and degrees. For the first of them which are meere substances, doe serve those that have life, as the trees and the plants. The trees and the plants serve the creatures that have sense and life, as the beasts and the fishes. The beasts and the fishes serve man, that hath substance, life, sense, and reason. And amongst them all wee see, that those which have more gifts are served of those which have lesse, as the Sunne and Moone serve the plants, the plants and herbs serve the beasts, and the beasts serve man, and that creature that hath most gifts is served of all. Man therefore excelling all these, must have something to honour and serve, which must bee more excellent than the other creatures, yea, than himselfe, and that is a substance uncreate, most holy, most wise, eternall, infinite: and this is God.

Thirdly, all particular creatures whether in heaven or in earth, are referred to their certaine particular and peculiar ends, wherein every one of them, even the baselt and meanest, is imployed, and which they doe all accomplish in their kinde. And this is a plaine proofe, that there is one that excelleth in wisdome, providence, and power, that created all these to such ends, and hath power to bring them thereunto: and who is this but God?

II. The second sort of arguments drawne from the light of nature, are taken from the preservation and government of the world created; and these are touched by the Holy Ghost, when hee saith, Acts 14. 17. That God left not himselfe without witnesse, in that by his providence he did good, and gave raine from heaven, and fruitfull seasons, filling our hearts with joy and gladnesse. Arguments from the government of the world.

The particulars drawne from the government of the world, are these:

First, our food (whereby wee are nourished) is in it selfe a dead food, void of life: and yet it serveth to maintaine and preserve life: whereas in reason, it is more fit to choke and stuffe our bodies, than to feed them.

Secondly, our garments which wee weare, are in themselves cold, and voyd of heat, and yet they have this use to preserve heat, and to sustaine life in the extremity of cold. Therefore there must needs bee an omnipotent and divine power, that giveth unto them both such a vertue, to feed and preserve the life and health of man.

Thirdly, the raine falling, and the Sunne shining upon one and the same plot of ground, causeth it to bring forth in his season an hundred severall kindes of herbs and plants, whereby every one hath a severall and distinct flower, colour, forme, and savour: Whence commeth this? Not from the raine, for it hath no life in it selfe, and besides it is in it selfe all one: not from the Sun, or the earth; for these also in their kinde are all one, having in them no such power whereby they should be the authors of life; therefore the differences of plants in one ground, may convince our judgements, and teach us thus much, that there is a divine and heavenly power above and beside the power of these creatures.

Fourthly, take an example of the bird and the egge. The bird bringeth forth the egge: the egge againe bringeth forth the bird. This egge considered in it selfe, hath in it neither life nor soule, and the bird can give it neither; for all that the bird can doe, is to give it heat, and no more. Within the shell of this egge, is made a goodly creature, which, when it commeth to some perfection, it breaketh the shell. In the shell broken, wee shall see the nibbe, the wing, the legge, and all the parts and members of a bird. Now let this bee considered, that the egge brought not forth this goodly creature, nor yet the henne. For the egge hath no such power or vertue in it selfe; and the henne gave but her heat; neither did man doe it: for that which was done, was was within the egge, and within the shell. It therefore was some other wonderfull power and wisdome that made it, and brought it forth, that surpasseth the power of a creature.

Againe, let us consider the generation of the silke-worme, one of the least of the creatures, and from it we shall have a notable demonstration of the divine providence. This little worme in the first is but a small seed, like unto lin seed: the same small seed breedeth it and bringeth it forth. The worme brought forth, and growing to some bignesse, at length weaves the silke; having woven the silke, it windes it selfe within it, as it were in a shell: and there having lodged for a time, it conceiveth a creature of another forme, which being within a short space perfected, breaketh the shell, and commeth forth a flie. The same flie, like a dutifull creature, bringeth forth the seed againe, and so continues the kinde thereof from yeare to yeare.

Here let it bee remembred, that the flie having once brought forth the seed, leaves it, and dieth immediately: and yet the seed it selfe, though exposed to winde and weather, and utterly neglected of man, or any creature, at a certaine time within few moneths becomes a worme. Whence should all this proceed, but from a Creator infinitely powerfull and wise, who by his admirable power and providence dispenseth life, being, and propagation, even to the least things in their particular sorts and kindes.

III. The third sort of Arguments from the light of nature, are taken from the soule of man. The soule is endued with excellent gifts of understanding and reason. The understanding hath in it from the beginning certaine principles, whereby it knoweth and discerneth both good and bad, things that are to bee done, and things that are to bee left undone. Now man cannot have this gift to discerne betweene good and evill, of or from himselfe: but it must needs proceed from another cause, which is, power, wisdome, and understanding it selfe: and that is God.

Againe, the conscience, another gift of the soule of man, hath in it two principall actions; testimony, and judgement: by both which the truth in hand is evidently confirmed.

Touching the testimony of conscience; let it bee demanded of the Atheist, whereof doth conscience beare witnesse? Hee cannot denie, but of his particular actions. I aske then, against whom, or with whom doth it give testimonie? The answer will easily bee made by the heart of any man, that it is with or against himselfe. Furthermore, whom is it, a creature? Then are we men inferiors. Angels? so it is unpossible that any meaner Angell should checker those the voice of conscience, or convince the testimonie thereof, or discover and charge in the darkest of nights, the most wicked most powerfull, most holy, that seeth and knoweth all things, to whom conscience beareth record; and that is God himselfe.

And touching the judgement of conscience; least man commonly are guilty of offence, though it bee done in secret, and concealed from the knowledge of any mortall living; yet Conscience, that knoweth it, will accuse him, arraigne him, and bring him before God, and give him no rest. Which, or where is the reason? man knoweth not the trespasse committed: And if there bee no God, whom shall hee feare? And yet hee feareth. This also is necessarily proveth, that there is a just and mighty God, that will take vengeance upon him for his sinne.

IV. The fourth Argument which is from nature, is this: There is a ground or principle which is written in every mans heart in the world, none excepted, that there is a God. Reasons for proofe hereof may bee these:

First, the Gentiles worshipping Idols made of stockes and stones, doe acknowledge herein thus much, that there is something whereunto honour and service is due. For man by nature is proud, and will never yeeld to bow the knee of his bodie before a stocke or a stone to adore it, unlesse hee thinke and acknowledge, that there is in them a Divine power, better than himselfe.

Secondly, the oath that is taken for confirmation, which is commonly termed the assertory oath, is used in all countreyes. And it is for the most part generally taken to bee a lawfull meanes of confirming a mans word, when it is bound by the oath taken. Iacob and Laban being to make a covenant, Iacob sweareth by the true God, Laban by his false gods, and by that both were bound to stand to their agreement, and not to goe backe; therefore neither of them did, or durst breake their oath. And among the Gentiles themselves there are very few or none to bee found, that will falsifie their word given and avowed by an oath. Whereupon it is a cleare case, that they acknowledged a Godhead, which knoweth and discerneth their hearts, yea, that knoweth the truth, and can and will plague them for their disgracing the truth by lying.

Thirdly, wee are not lightly to passe over the usuall termes and ordinary speech of all nations who are wont upon occa-

...terously: it lightens, it thunders, it blowes, it hailes. For saying this, one while they rejoyce and are thankfull, and otherwhiles they feare and are dismaied. They say not, Now we have no rain, nor thunder: for then they would neither rejoyce, or tremble. In a word before they speake this commonly, sometimes very wittily, and sometimes fearingly, it may probably be thought that they acknowledge a divine power which causeth the raine to fall, and the thunder to bee so ...to thoughtfull ... for better proofe hereof, it were to bee considered, that since the world begunne, there could not yet bee found, or shewed us forthy any man that ever wrote, or published a discourse, more or lesse, to this purpose, that there was no God.

And to adde, bee said, that some histories doe make mention of sundry, that have in plaine termes denied there is a God, and that this is no lesse dangerous, than if a treatise of the subject should bee written, and set forth to the open view of all.

Answer, indeed in the writings of men wee doe reade of some that did blaspheme God, and lived as without God, and they have alwayes beene properly and deservedly tearmed Atheists. Other have denied, that made and feigned gods, that is, Idols are Gods. And amongst the Heathen that lived onely by the light and direction of nature, all that can bee brought is this, that some men in their writings have doubted whether there were a God or no, but none did ever positively set downe reasons to prove that there was none.

V. The fifth and last Argument from nature is that which is used by all Phylosophers. In the world there is to bee seene an excellent wise frame and order of all things. One creature dependeth upon another by a certaine order of causes: in which some are first and above in higher place, some are next and inferiour, some are the basest and the lowest.

Now these lowest are moved of those that are superiour to them, and alwayes the superiour is the cause of the inferiour, and that whereof the inferiour depends. Something then there must bee that is the cause of all causes, that must bee caused by none, and must be the cause of all: For in things wherein there is order, there is alway some first and soveraigne cause: and where there is no first nor last, there the creatures are infinite. But seeing all creatures are finite, there must bee somewhat first, as well as last. Now the first and last cause of all is God, which moveth all, and to whom all creatures doe tend, as to their end, and which is moved of none.

Notwithstanding all these reasons grounded in nature before, it may bee some man will say, I never saw God, and when shall I know that there is a God indeed. What if thou wilt not beleeve no more than thou seest? Thou never sawest the winde or the ayre, and yet thou beleevest that there is both. Nay, thou never sawest thine owne face but in a glasse, and never out of a glasse, and yet thou contenteth thee. Why then may not this content thee thy heart, and resolve thee of the God-head, in that thou seest him in the glasse of his creatures?

True it is, that God is a Spirit invisible that cannot bee discovered by the eye of flesh and bloud, yet hee hath not left us without a meanes whereby wee may behold him. For looke as wee are woont by degrees to goe from the picture to the Painter, and in the picture to behold the Painters himselfe: even so by the Image of God, which is written (as it were) in the face, and other parts of the creatures in the world, may wee take a view of the wise dome, power, and providence of the Creator of them all, who is God himselfe. And these are the principall proofes of the God-head, which are revealed in the booke of nature.

The second Ground of proofes is taken from the light of Grace. And it is that light which God affordeth to his Church, in the writings of the Prophets and Apostles, and this gives a further confirmation than nature doth. For the light of nature is onely a way of preparation to faith; But this light serves to beget faith, and causeth us to beleeve there is a God.

Arguments from the light of grace.

Now in the holy Scriptures of the Prophets and Apostles, wee shall see amongst the rest, three distinct proofes of this point.

First, expresse testimonies which doe in plaine termes note unto us the God-head.

Secondly, expresse Prophecies and Revelations of things to come, even many hundred and thousands of yeares before they came to passe. Yea, things that are to come are fore-told in the word of God, so, and in that very manner, that they shall bee in the time, wherein they are to bee fulfilled. Now there is no man able of himselfe to know or fore-see these things to come, therefore this knowledge must rest in him alone, who is most wise, that perfectly understandeth and beholdeth things that are not, and to whom all future things are present, and therefore certaine.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, the word of God reveileth many miracles which do exceed and surpasse whole nature, yea, all naturall causes: the doing and working whereof is not in the power of any meere creature in the world. As for example: the making of the Sunne, against his naturall course, to stand still in the firmament; of the waters, which are naturally flowing, to stand as a wall, and the bottome of the sea to be as dry land. The maine end whereof is to shew that there is an absolute and almighty power which is the Author of nature it selfe and all natural things, and ordereth both it and them according to his pleasure.

Sect. 3.

Arguments from the light of Glory.

The third Ground of proofes is fetched from the light of Glory. And this is that light which God affords unto his servants after this life ended, in the kingdome of heaven, wherin all imperfection of knowledge being taken away, they shall see God face to face, and have a full and perfect knowledge of the God-head.

To this purpose the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 13. 12. that in the world we know in part, and we see as it were in a glasse. The comparison is worth the marking. For there hee compareth our knowledge of God, that we have in this life, to a dim sighted man, that can see either very little, or nothing at all, without his spectacles. And such is our light and comprehension of God, darke and dimme, in that we cannot behold him as he is, but onely as he hath manifested himselfe unto us, in and through the glasse of the Word and Sacraments, and by the spectacles of his creatures. But the time will come, when the skales of our eyes shall be washed off, and they shall be made as cleare as crystall, when the imperfection and weaknesse of our understanding shal be clean removed, and then wee shall bee inabled to see God clearly and fully face to face. Thus the first Question is answered, that there is a God.

II. Question.

whether Iesus the Sonne of Marie be the Sonne of God, and Redeemer of the world?

By propounding this Question (as in the former) I meane not to make a doubt touching the God-head of Christ, which is one of the principall Grounds of our Religion; but to take away, or at least prevent an inward corruption of the heart in them that are weak in knowledge; whereby they may be brought sometimes to make doubt and question of the Divinitie of Christ, and therefore have need to be resolved in the truth hereof.

Now for the proofe of this point, that Christ is God, I will lay downe these grounds:

I. The summe and substance of the Bible is to conclude, that Jesus the Sonne of Mary is the Sonne of God, and the Redeemer of mankinde; and it may bee concluded in this syllogisme.

He that shall come of the seed of Abraham, and David, and in time shall be borne a Virgin; that shall preach the glad tidings of the Gospell, satisfie the Law, offer up an oblation of himselfe for the sins of them that beleeve, overcome death by his death and resurrection, ascend into heaven, and in fulnesse of time come again to judge both the quicke and the dead, is the true Messias and Saviour of the world.

But Iesus of Nazareth the Son of Mary, is he in whom alone all these things shall come to passe.

Therfore he only is the true Messias and Saviour of the world.

The proposition or first part of the Argument is laid downe in the old Testament: the assumption or second part in the new: the conclusion is the question in hand, the scope and drift of them both.

II. Ground. In Dan. 9. 24. it was prophesied that after the time of 70. weekes, (that is, 490. yeares, the Messias should be exhibited.

By which prophecie it is manifest, that the Messias is already come into the world. For from that time till now, there are at the least 2000. yeares, as may plainly bee seene by humane historiesand by the motions and course of the heavens. It is also plaine from hence, that having beene exhibited and come in the flesh, he hath made satisfaction by his death to the wrath of God for sinne. Hence it followes, that hee is the very true Messias, and Redeemer of the world, because from that time there was never any to whom this title and the fore-named properties might so truly agree, as to this Jesus the Sonne of David.

III. Ground. Jesus the Sonne of Mary did teach, professe, and dispute, that he was God, that he and his Father were one, and he tooke unto himselfe the honour of God, Joh. 7. and 8. An evident argument that he was so, as he professed and preached himselfe to bee. For never any creature challenged to himselfe the honour of God falsly, but was discovered and confounded.

Adam for affecting and aspiring to it, was cast out of Paradise. And Herod for it dyed miserably, Act. 12. And divers Popes are recorded in Ecclesiasticall stories, to have taken this honour unto themselves: and there was never any sort of men in the world that had more fearefull judgements upon them, than they. But Christ challenged this to himselfe, and prospered: and God did most severely revenge his death both upon Herod and Pilate, as also upon the Jewes, and Emperours of Rome, that persecuted the Church.

IV. Ground. Christ while he was on earth before hee ascended into heaven, promised his Disciples to send his Spirit unto them, to assist them, that they should be able to doe greater workes than himselfe did, Joh. 14. 12. &c. Now when Christ was ascended, the event was strange, and yet fully answerable to his promise. For the disciples were but few, twelve in number, and all unlearned, and yet they preached in the name of Christ, and by bare preaching (without humane eloquence, and the gifts of nature) converted many nations, yea, the whole world. And though themselves were but weake men, and preached things absurd to the corrupt reason of man, yet they won many soules to God, and converted the world.

The Vground is borrowed from the testimony of the Heathen, who have recorded in their writings the very same things touching Christ, which are revealed in the Scriptures. Iosephus a Iew, and an enemie to Christ, in his 18. booke of antiquities, Chap. 4. speakes the same things of Christ that Matthew doth, that he was a most worthy man, that hee wrought many miracles, and that hee arose from the dead. Others affirme, that hee was crucified, under Pilate in the time of Tiberius, and that Tiberius would have put him in the number of his Gods. Againe, heathen writers report, that at his death, under the reigne of Tiberius all the oracles of the world ceased, and that the great Pan (as they say) then died.

CHAP. III.

Of the Scriptures.

The second maine Question is touching the truth of Scripture:

Whether the Scriptures be the true word of God?

THe answer is, that they are. And the Grounds of this assertion may be reduced to six heads.

Sect. 1.

The first is taken from the causes, namely, the Author and writers of the Scriptures.

The authors and pen-men of Scriptures.

Touching the Author, the Scripture referreth it selfe unto God. Therefore hee alone is the true and undoubted Author thereof, and none but hee. The sufficiency of the consequence stands upon these grounds:

First, if God were not the Author of the Scriptures, there would bee no one booke in the earth so fabulous, and so full of errors as it, which to say is blasphemy. For it speaks such things, as never any could speake, but God.

Secondly, if it were not the booke of God, then all Gods will should bee hidden, and God should never yet have revealed his will to man.

Thirdly, if it had not beene the word of God, the falshood thereof would have beene detected long agone. For there hath beene nothing falsly said of God at any time, which hee himselfe hath not at some time or other opened and revealed. Even as hee did detect and discover the falshood of the false Prophet Hanani, Ierem. 28. 16. And Gods heavy hand, no doubt, would long since have beene upon the Ministers and Preachers of the word if they had unjustly and wrongfully fathered it upon him.

Againe, for the writers and pen-men of Scripture; Moses, the Prophets, and Apostles in their writings, doe not set forth their owne glory, nobility, or vertues: but all with one consent have acknowledged directly and plainely their owne errours and faults; yea such faults as may bee disgracefull to themselves and their posterity, and yet they have done it. A plaine proofe, that they were not carried by policy, and natural reason, but were holy men, guided by the holy Ghost. For if they had beene guided by reason, they would never have written that which would have tended to their owne disgrace; but would rather have commended themselves, their name, stocke, and linage. Againe, humane authors in their discourses doe commonly write of the praises and vertues of men, of whom they write; but the pen-men of Scripture, with one consent, give all to God; yea, when they speak of commendation due to men, they give it all to God in men. God is in their writings, the beginning, the end, and all.

The matter of Scripture.

A second head of reasons, is taken from the matter and Contents of the Scriptures, which are manifold. The principall are these:

First, the Scripture doth that which no other bookes can doe. For it sets out the corruption of mans nature by sinne; the fountaine of this corruption; and the punishment of the same, both in this life, and the life to come: it discovereth sinfull mans particular thoughts, lusts, and affections, which never any booke hath done beside it. No Philosopher was ever able to make so true record, and so plaine declaration of the thoughts, motions, and affections of the heart. The reason of man cannot discerne them by nature, unlesse it receive a further light by grace, than it hath naturally in it selfe. Yea, the Scripture sets down things that no mans heart can imagine, and yet are true by experience. For example: that it is an evill thought to thinke there is no God, man by nature cannot imagine, but yet it is true in experience, and by the light of the word. And therefore David saith, Psa. 14. 1. The foole hath said in his heart, there is no God.

Secondly, the maine Contents of this booke are sundry Articles of faith, all which are far above the reach of humane reason, and yet they are not against it, but at least some of them may be proved by it.

For example; that there is a Redeemer of the world, is an article of faith, above reason; yet not above the same. For in naturall understanding, God is not all justice, and no mercy. But if there were no Redeemer, then should God be all justice without mercy. Now because he hath revealed himselfe to bee as well mercifull, as he is just, reason concludes there is a Redeemer. Againe, that this Redeemer should be God and man, is above reason; yet not against it. For reason teacheth, hee must be God, that he might satisfie the infinite justice of God for sinne; which none but God can doe. Againe, that he must be man, because man having sinned, man must be punished for the sinne of man.

Thirdly, in the Scripture there are sundry predictions made before-hand particularly, which notwithstanding were not to come to passe, till 100, 200, 300. yeares after, and all these predictions in the same manner as they have beene foretold, have beene fulfilled.

Iacob in his Will foretold, that the scepter should not depart from Iudah till Shiloh, that is, the Messias came. This was verified, even as it was foretold. For a little before Christs birth, the scepter was taken from the Iewes, and translated unto the Romane Empire. And Herod put the whole College of the Iewes, called their Sanedrim, to the sword, in which College was the heire apparent of the kings blood.

Againe, Balaam. Num. 24. 24. foretold that Kittim, that is, the Grecians and the Romanes should subdue Eber, the people of the East, and that also was afterward verified. For the Hebrewes and the Assyrians were afterward overcome by the Grecians and Silicians.

The Apostle Paul in his time foretold the destruction of the Romane Empire, and the revealing of Antichrist, 2 Thess. 2. 7; 8. &c. which prophecie was shortly after fulfilled. For Antichrist grew from those times by little & little, till at length he came to sit in the Emperours throne. Men indeed may foretell things to come; but things foretold by them are present in their causes, and so they know and foretell them, not otherwise: but God foretelleth simply, and the Scriptures foretell simply, therefore they are the word of God.

Fourthly, the law, a part of the Scripture, is propounded most purely & perfectly without exception or limitation. Whereas in all mens lawes some sinnes are condemned, but some be tolerated and permitted: but in Gods law every sinne is condemned, and none either forborne or excused.

Lastly, the style and speech of the Scripture is plaine and simple without affectation, and yet full of grace and majestie. For in that simple style, it commandeth the whole man, body and soule; it threatneth everlasting death, and promiseth everlasting life: and it doth more affect the heart of man, than all the writings in the world whatsoever.

Sect. 3.

Effects of Scripture.

The third reason to induce us to receive the Scriptures, as the Word of God, is taken from the Effects: whereof I note only two.

I. The doctrine of Scripture in the law, and ispecially in the Gospel, is contrarie to the corrupt nature of man. Whereupon Paul saith, Rom. 8. 7. The wisdome of the flesh is enmitie against God. And yet the same word being preached by the Minister appointed by God, converteth nature, and turnes the heart of man unto it, in such sort, as in this last age it hath won a great part of the world to the embracing thereof. Now in reason this is impossible, that a thing which is so flat against mans corrupt nature, should notwithstanding prevaile with it so farre, as to cause man to live and die in the profession and maintenance thereof. We are wont to reject the writings of men, if they please not our humors; whereas the Word of God is of force to move and incline our affections, though never so much censured, crossed, and controlled by it. And this shewes that God is the Author thereof, from whom the word of creation came, to which every thing at the first yeelded obedience.

II. The Word of God hath this effect, to be able to minister comfort and releese, in all distresses of bodie or minde, yea in the greatest and most desperate troubles and vexations of the conscience. And when the helpes of humane learning and Philosophie (which are of great use and force in other cases) have done all that they can to the very utmost, without effect or successe; even then the sweet promises of the Gospell, will revive and raise up the heart and give it full contentment and satisfaction. Experience shewes this to be a confessed truth in particular cases: and it teacheth, whence and from whom this word proceedeth, wherein these promises are contained, namely, from God. For when he sets the conscience upon the racke, the Word that releeveth and refresheth the same, must needs proceed and come from him alone.

Sect. 4.

Properties of Scripture.

The fourth reason is taken from the properties of Scripture. I will name only two.

The first is antiquitie, which most plainly appeares in the history, though the doctrine it selfe be as ancient. The Scripture containes a continued historie, from age to age, for the space of 4000. yeares before Christ, even from the beginning. Humane histories that are of any certaintie or continuance, begin onely about the time of Ezra, and Nehemiah. As for those which were written before, they are onely fragments, and of no certainty.

The second propertie, is Consent with it selfe in all parts, both for the matter, scope, and end. The writings of men doe dissent from themselves, by reason of ignorance and forgetfulnesse in the authors. But the word of God agrees with it selfe most exactly, and the places that seeme to disagree may easily bee reconciled; which shewes that holy men by whom it was penned, were not guided therein by their owne private judgement, but but were directed by the wisdome of the spirit of God.

Sect. 5.

Contraries. The fifth reason is drawne from the Contraries. The Devill and wicked men are, in judgement and disposition, as contrarie to Scripture, as light to darknesse. I prove it thus: Let a man read any booke of Philosophie, and labour to bee resolved of any one point therein, he shall never be tempted to infidelitie. But if the same man read the books of Scripture, and labour to understand them, he shall have within himselfe many motions and temptations, not to beleeve and obey it. Now what should be the cause thereof, but that these bookes are the word of God, which the Devill laboureth to oppugne with might and maine?

Againe, consider the same in the practice of wicked men. They will not brooke the rebuke of their sinnes, namely, their Idolatrie, blasphemie, and other notorious crimes, by Scripture; but will seeke the bloud and life of him that shall sharply taxe and reprove them. And hence it was, that wicked Kings so persecuted the Lords Prophets. Yea further, let it be marked, that these wicked men that are taunted with these horrible crimes, and cannot abide the word, nor Teachers thereof to the death, have commonly fearefull ends. Now the opposition of Satan and wicked men to the word, shewes the Scriptures to bee a most holy word, and indeed the very word of God.

Sect. 6.

Testimonies. The sixth reason is taken from sundry testimonies.

First, of holy Martyrs, in the old and new Testament, who have given their lives for the maintenance of this word, and sealed the same with their owne hearts bloud; yea suffered the most horrible and exquisite torments that the wit of man could devise, and that most patiently and willingly, not being daunted or dismayed. The stories of Martyrs in all ages confirme this truth, especially of those that suffered before, in, and after the times of the ten bloudy persecutions. And unlesse they had beene supported by a divine power in so good a cause, they could never so many of them have suffered in such manner.

The second is, the testimonie and consent of Heathen men, who have recorded the very same things, at least many of the principall that are set downe in the Bible. If this were not so, man should have some colourable excuse of his unbeleefe. And these things which they record were not all taken out of the Scripture, but were registred to memorie by Historiographers, that lived in the times when they were done. Such are the stories of the Creation and Floud, of the tower of Babel, of the Arke, of Abraham and his possessions, of Circumcision, of the miracles of Moses, of the birth of Christ, and the slaughter of the young children, of the miracles of Christ, of the death of Herod, Agrippa, and such like. And these we take for true in humane stories; much more then ought wee to doe it in the Word of God.

The third testimonie is of miracles. The doctrine of Scripture was confirmed by miracles, wrought by the teachers thereof, the Prophets and Apostles, above all power and strength of nature, and such as the Devill can not counterfeit; as the staying of the sunne, raising of the dead, &c.

The fourth is the testimonie of the Holy Ghost, which is the argument of all arguments, to settle and resolve the Conscience, and to seale up the certaintie of the word of God.

If any shall aske how this testimonie of the Holy Ghost may be obtained, and being obtained, how we may discerne it to be the testimonie of the Holy Ghost, and not of man: I answer, by doing two things.

First, by resigning our selves to become truly obedient to the doctrine taught, Ioh. 7. 17. If any man will doe my Fathers will, (saith Christ) he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God. Secondly, by praying unto God for his Spirit, to certifie our consciences, that the doctrine revealed is the doctrine of God. Aske (saith our Saviour Christ) and it shall be given you: seeke, and you shall find: knocke, and it shall be opened unto you. For he that asketh, receiveth, Mat. 7. 7. 8. Againe, Your heavenly Father will give the Holy Ghost to them that desire him. Luk. 11. 13. And, If any man lacke wisdome, let him aske it of God, who giveth to all men liberally, and reprocheth no man, and it shall be given him, Iam. 1. 7.

Sect. 7.

Objections against the Scriptures. Now having set downe the proofes of this point, before I come to the next Question, some speciall Objections against this doctrine are to bee answered and resolved. For there have not beene wanting in all ages both Atheists and others, who have professedly excepted against it, and of set purpose have undertaken to call the written word of God into Question. Such were Celsus, Lucian, Iulian, Porphyrie, Apelles, & others. From whom some of latter times having received the poyson of Atheisme and pophanenesse, have not ceased as much as in them lieth to oppugne sundry parts and portions of Holy Scripture. Their principall reasons and exceptions I will propound and answer one by one.

Obiect. 1. And first, they except against that which is written, Gen. 1. 16. where it is said, God made the sunne the fourth day. Now, say they, the sunne is the cause of the day; and therefore there could not bee three daies, before the sunne was created, considering that the effect is not before the cause, but the cause before the effect.

I answer, First, we must put a difference betweene cause and cause. For of causes, some be the highest, some subordinate unto them. The highest and first cause of all creatures is God himselfe, from whom all things at the first immediately flowed; without any relation to their causes in nature. And thus were the first, second, and third daies created and appointed immediately from God, and distinguished from the night by an immediate course of light, ordained by him for that purpose.

But the subordinate and inferiour cause of the day, in the order of nature, was the sunne; and that by the same appointment of God: and this cause we doe not see in nature, as the cause of the day before the fourth day of creation: for then it pleased him to make it his instrument, to distinguish the day from the night; as also for other ends and uses. And therefore it is no marvell, though the day was created before the sunne, the instrumentall cause, by reason of confounding that it was created before the sunne was set in the heaven, by the Creator himselfe.

Secondly, wee must distinguish of times, which are either of creation, or government: and there is one regard to bee had of things while they were in making, and another after they were created. Now it is true, the sunne is the cause of the day and the night, in the time of government of the world, but it was not so in the time of the first making of all things. For in the three first daies of the world, there was a day and night without the sun, by a vicissitude of light & darknes, which the Lord made, and nature could never have found out, had not the word revealed it.

But since the creation, in the time of government, the sunne is but an instrument appointed by God to carrie light; and hee that made the light, can now in the government of the world, if it pleased him, put downe the Sunne from this office, and by some other meanes distinguish the day from the night therefore no marvell though he did so in the beginning.

Obiect. 2. The second Objection is, touching the light of the Moone. Moses saith, Gen. 1. 16. it is one of the great lights which God made. Now, say they, in all reason according to humane learning, it is one of the least of the planets, and lesse than many starres.

Ans. It is true which the holy Ghost saith by Moses, and yet the Moone is lesse than the Sunne, yea, than many of the starres. For one and the same starre, in a divers and different respect, may be termed greater and lesser. And in that place the Scripture speakes of the Moone, not in regard of other starres greater than it; but in respect of our sense, because it appeareth greater in quantitie, and really communicateth more light: yea, it is of more operation and use to the earth than any of the starres in the heaven, saving the sunne.

Obiect. 3. The third Objection. Moses saith, Man and Beast was made of the earth, and Fishes of the waters. But all humane learning avoucheth, that the matter of every creature consisteth of all the foure Elements, earth, water, fire, and aire.

Ans. Moses speaketh only of two which were the principall, and in them includes the other two as these they are impure and mixt with the third since the fall. Againe, some learned men thinke that all creatures are made of earth and water only, as being the two first materiall principles of them all, & not of aire nor of fire. And this accords with Moses; and is no doubt a truth, that he speakes only of the principall matter of these creatures: and yet the fire and aire are, and may be called elementall in their beginnings, because they serve to form, preserve, and cherish the creatures.

Obiect. 4. The fourth Objection. Gen. 3. 1. it is said, that Eve before her fall was deceived by the Serpent. Now this, say the Atheist, is absurd. For even in the estate of corruption since the fall, there is no woman so simple that will either admit speech, or suffer her selfe to bee deceived by a Serpent; much lesse would Eve in the estate of her innocencie.

Ans. Though Adam and Eve in their innocencie had an excellent knowledge, yet they had not all knowledge. For then they should have beene as God himselfe. But in that estate ignorance befell Eve in three things. For first, though Adam himselfe was a Prophet in the time of his innocencie, yet both he and shee were ignorant of the issue of future things which are contingent. Secondly, they knew not the secrets of each others hearts. For to know the event of things contingent certainly, and the secrets of the heart, belongs to God onely. Thirdly, though Eve knew the kinds of creatures, yet shee knew not all particulars; and all things that were incident to every kind of creature, but was to attaine unto that knowledge, by experience & observation.

Neither may this seeme strange: for Christ as he was man had as much, yea more knowledge than our first parents had in their innocencie, and yet he knew not all particulars in all singular creatures. For seeing a fig-tree by the way as he went to Jerusalem, he thought it had borne fruit, and yet comming towards it, he found none thereon. And in like manner, Eve might know the Serpentine kinde, and yet bee ignorant, whether a Serpent could speake. Besides that, the naming of the creatures, which argues knowledge of them, was not given to Eve, but to Adam. And therefore it was not so strange, that Eve should be deceived by a serpent, considering that to know that a serpent could speake, or not speake, came by experience, which she then had not.

It will be said, that all ignorance is sinne: but Eve had no sin: and therefore shee could not be ignorant. Ans. Ignorance is twofold; some ignorance (a) ariseth of an evill disposition, when as we are ignorant of those things which we are bound to know, and this is sin properly. But there is another ignorance, (b) which is no sin, when as we are ignorant of of those things which wee are not bound to know. And this was in Christ: for he was ignorant of the fig-trees bearing fruit: and hee knew not the day of judgement, no hee was man. And this also was in Enos, non obstantibus.

Object. 5. The fifth obiection is about the Arke, Gen. 6. 15. God commanded Noah to make an Arke of 300 cubits long, of 50 cubits bread, and of 30. cubits high. This Arke, saith the Atheist being so small a vessell, could not possibly receaue two of every sort of creatures, with their food, for the space of a yeare.

The first author of this cavill was Apelles the heretick, that cavilled with Christians about the Arke. And the answer is as ancient as the heresie: namely, first, that the cubit of the Arke must be understood of the Ægyptian cubit, which is with some six foot, and with others nine foot, by which measure the Arke would be in length halfe a mile at the least: And by this meanes, any man may see a possibilitie in reason that the Arke might containe and preserve all creatures, with their fodder, and roome to spare.

The second answer is, that as the Iewes had a sheckle of the sanctuarie, which was greater than the ordinarie sheckle, so they had beside the ordinary cubit, a sacred cubit, the cubit of the sanctuary, whereof mention is made in the prophecie of Ezechiel, Chap. 40. and that was bigger by the halfe than the ordinarie cubit. And by this measure some say the Arke was made. But both these answers are only coniecturall, without good ground in the Scripture.

To them therefore I adde a third. In the daies of Noah, the stature of man was farre bigger than it is at this day, and looke as the stature of man was great and large, so was the cubit proportionall thereto, containing the length of the arme, from the elbow to the longest finger's end. And this being considered, that the Arke was built by that measure, and not by the ordinarie cubit as it is now, it will appeare, that the Atheist hath greatly deceived himselfe, & abused that part of Gods Word that declares the story of the Arke.

Againe, the length of this vessell being 300. cubits, it is plaine that it was five times the length of Salomons Temple, which contained onely 60. cubits. The breadth being 58. it was twice and a halfe the breadth of that, which was but 20. broad.

Besides that it is to be remembred, that in the Arke were three losts or stories, one above another, whereof each contained 10. cubits in height, and a chamber or floore of square measure 15000. cubits.

As for the creatures that were put into it: the Fowles of the ayre, though they were of many sorts, yet the biggest sort of them, being the Eagle and his kinde, they could not take up any very large place for their residence. The water creatures, as some fowles, the fishes, &c. kept the waters, and were not lodged in the Arke. And the beasts of the earth, (such being excluded, as were bred either by accidentall generation, no Mules; or by putrefaction, as serpents, and other creeping things, which might afterward be restored in other creatures that were preserved) though for multitude and greatnesse they excelled the rest, yet (as some write) there are of them in all not above 150. distinct kindes. And though there were as many more not knowne, yet in probabilitie they could not be either many or great. And of those that are great, there are thought not to be above 40. kindes.

Now though it be granted, that there were in the Arke 300. distinct kinds of beasts, yet this number compared with the roome, it will easily appeare, that there might be allotted to every kinde, in one only storie, 50. square cubits, which in all likelihood might well suffice them all one with another, specially seeing all were not of an equall greatnesse: and therefore some might have that or more space, and some lesse. All these things duly considered, the vessell being of such capacitie, might comprehend all those beasts and many more, together with their provision for a longer time than a yeare. Other doubts touching this history (of lesse moment) I omit, and passe to the next.

The sixth Allegation is out of Gen. 21. 9. Object. 6. where Ismael is said to mocke Isaac when he was weaned, at which time Ismael was fifteene yeares of age at the least: for hee was borne when Abraham was 86. yeares old, Gen. 16. and Isaac was borne, when Abraham was about an hundred, Gen. 21. 5. both which put together make 14. yeares, whereto one yeare being added before Isaac was weaned, makes up the age of Ismael as before. And yet afterward in that chapter, v. 14. Hagar is said to carrie her childe in her armes, and to cast him under a tree, when he and his mother were cast out of Abrahams house: which argues him to have beene but a little childe: whereas before he was said to be 15. yeares old.

Anſ. A foolish cavill, which blind Atheists doe draw from the error of some translation. For the text is plaine, that Ismael with his mother Hagar, by reason of extreme heat and drought, was almost dead, wandering in the wildernesse of Beersheba: and being in this extremitie, she carried him not, but v. 18. led him in her hand, and set him downe under a tree, and there left him to die. For in those countries, men for want of water, were at deaths doore: as we may see in the example of Sisera, Iudges chap. 4. 19. and Sampson, chap. 15. 18.

The seventh Allegation, Gen. 43. 8. Iudah Object. 7. Iosephs brother calls his brother Benjamin, a lad or a boy, Send the boy with me, &c. and yet this lad (saith the Atheist) the yeare following, when he went downe into Ægypt, with Iacob his father, is said to have ten chilchildren, Gen. 46. 21. How can these two stand together?

Anſ. This cavill ariseth from the grosse ignorance of the Atheist, in the originall text. For Benjamin is called Jelid, which word commonly signifies a child, but sometimes also a young man. Thus Ismael that was 15. yeares old, is called Jelech a lad, Gen. 20. 15. And so Gen. 4. 23. Lamech saith, I have slaine a man in my wound, and Jeled, or a young man in my hurt: that is, if a man should wound me, and a young man hurt me, I would slay him. Now it is not like, that a childe could hurt Lamech. Neither must this seeme strange: for the most valiant men that David and Iſhboſheth had, are called hannegnarim, who bodies Abner and Ioab, 2. Sam. 2. 14. and the like phrase is used in other languages: For the Greekes doe call young men by the name of [παῖδες] and the Latines by the name of [pueri] boyes or children.

Object. 8. The eighth Allegation, Exod. 7. it is said, v. 19. that all the waters in Ægypt were turned into bloud, by Moſes and Aaron: and yet, v. 22. it is said, that the Magicians of Ægypt turned water into bloud also: which seemes to imply an absurditie, considering that all the waters were turned into bloud before.

Anſw. Some answer thus; That the water which the Magicians turned, was newly digged out of new pits, and therefore they understand the former, of all the waters that were seene, and that they onely were turned into bloud. Others answer more fitly, that the waters which the Magicians changed, were fetched out of Goshen, from amongst the Israelites, where the waters remained pure, & were not turned as the other was. Either of these answers may satisfie, but specially the latter.

Object. 9. The ninth Allegation, Exod. 9. 6. Moſes saith, that all the beasts in Ægypt died of the murren, and yet, v. 25. in the seventh plague, it is said, the beasts were killed with thunder, and haile, and lightning: both which cannot be true.

Anſ. First, we must put a difference between a common plague or iudgement, and an universall. A common plague is, when no sort or kinde escapeth, but all sorts are smitten: and such was the murren. For no mans cattle were free, no kinde of cattle were saved. But the universall is when no particular of any kinde is exempted, but all destroyed. Such was not this plague, but some escaped and were reserved for other iudgements that followed. The ground of this distinction is this. The word [all] in Scripture is often taken indefinitely for many. Thus the Prophet Esay speakes, c. 66. 23. From moneth to moneth, and from Sabbath to Sabbath, shall all flesh come to worship before me: that is, many or great multitudes. And so in the new Testament, Mat. 4. 23. Christ healed all diseases, that is, many, and of all kinds some. And in like manner the text before alleged, must not be taken generally, to include all without exception, but indefinitely for many of the most part of the cattle that were in the land of Ægypt.

Object. 10. The tenth Allegation, Exod. 10. 22. wee read that one of the plagues was a palpable darknesse, and for great, that for three dayes together no man either saw another, or rose up from the place where he sate. And yet, v. 23. Moſes is sent for, and called to come before Pharaoh. How should this be, seeing no man could stirre from his place, nor have any light to goe before him? for there was none to be had, the darknesse was so palpable, and the aire was so thicke.

Anſ. I take it, the word [Thou] v. 24. is to be meant thus; that Pharaoh sent for Moſes after the darknesse was ended, not by candle or other light in the time of darknesse. And this answer may very well stand without further exception.

Object. 11. The eleventh Allegation, Iudg. 16. 29. the Atheists make a mocke at the history of Sampſon, as fabulous, where it is said, that all the Philistims came together in one house to make sport with him, and on the roofe sate about 3000. persons to behold him while he played: and yet there were but two pillars whereupon the whole house stood, and those also standing in the midst so neere together that a man might reach them both with his armes. This (say they) is most absurd and impossible.

Anſ. Although the full resolution of this cavill belongs to them that have skill in Architecture; yet thus much may be said in way of answer: That the house might bee capable of so many persons, and they also that stood about might well see and behold Sampſon. For first, the whole house was not sustained by two pillars onely, but by many more, whereof two were the principall. For in likelihood the middle part whereon the building was knit together, from the bottome to the top, being the weightiest of all, was supported by two master pillars. The other which was more outward, and lesse weightie, might bee upholden by lesser props, which Artificers in that kinde call by the name of false pillars. Hence it appeareth, that the two maine ones, standing so nigh together, being shaken, the whole house together with them must needs fall. Neither will this seeme strange, that two pillars should beare up a building of such capacitie, if we doe but consider what is recorded of Curio the Romane, who devised the frame of a great Amphitheater, two parts whereof were supported onely by two hinges; and yet was so large, that it contained the whole people of Rome. Secondly, old buildings in those countries were made for the most part with open roofe. Againe, they were full of windowes on every part like unto great gates: and that they might be the more fit for sight from above, they were reared up in some sort after the the manner of the Egyptian Pyramides, wider below, and narrower above towards the top. And by this meanes it is probable, not onely that they might containe a great company, but that all thoſe which ſtood about the ſides and upon the roofe, might very well behold what Sampſon did below; ſpecially conſidering that he ſtood in the middeſt of the Theater, betweene two middle pillars.

Objec. 12. The twelfth Allegation, 1 Sam. 16. 19. &c. it is ſaid that David played before Saul, and that Saul knew him. But chap. 17. 55. when he was to fight with Goliah, Saul knew him not. Here is a plaine contradiction in the Atheiſts judgement.

Anſw. This ſort of men doe ſtill bewray their groſſe ignorance, both in the matter and in the order of Scripture. For the Word of God doth not alway ſet downe things as they follow in order of time juſt one after another: but ſometime it doth anticipate, putting ſuch things in former hiſtories, as are alreadie done and accomplished, which in regard of their event ſhould bee related afterward. Sometime againe it uſeth by recapitulation to declare things as following in order of time, which doe properly belong to a former narration. An example of the latter (to omit many other that might bee brought) is the text alleaged. For that part of the 16. chap. from the 9. verſe to the end, ſhould by order of hiſtorie follow the 17. as will eaſily appeare by comparing the place. And the like diſplacing of things ſaid and done, is elſe-where to be found in the Scriptures. Which being conſidered, the Atheiſts ſuppoſed Contradiction falls to the ground. For David was to fight with Goliah before hee played before Saul, and though he was not then knowne, yet Saul after that time tooke better knowledge of him.

Objec. 13. The thirteenth Allegation is out of 2 Chro. 21. 2. where the Papiſt playes the right Atheiſt, in going about to improve the originall copies. There (ſaith hee) Ieho ſaphat is called king of Iſrael, when as indeed hee was king of Iudah, and ſo is he called in the former booke of Chronicles. In like manner Ahaz is termed king of Iſrael, 2 Chron. 28. 19. whereas the truth is, he was king of Iudah. Anſwer. After the death of Salomon the kingdome was divided, and the ten tribes were called Iſrael, and the other two Iudah and Benjamin did beare the name of Iudah. Now after the diviſion, for ſometime the name of Iſrael common to both ſides, was given to either, and both were named after it. And in this reſpect Ieho ſaphat and Ahaz may bee termed kings of Iſrael. Againe, the name of Iſrael ſundrie times in Scripture, and namely in the Prophets, is taken onely for the two Tribes, which bare the name of Iudah after the defection. And thus alſo might Ahaz have that name given unto him, though hee were king of Iudah. Furthermore, the word Iſrael is ſometimes put for a true worſhipper of God, that is, for him that is a Jew not without, but within, not in the letter, but in the ſpirit, Rom. 2. 29. Thus our Saviour ſaith of Nathaniel, Iohn 1 48. Behold a true Iſraelite in whom is no guile, that is, a man of an upright heart, that ſerveth God in ſpirit and in truth. And in this ſenſe Ieho ſaphat might bee termed king of Iſrael, becauſe he was a king and patron of all true worſhippers of God. For even then the Iſraelites ſorted themſelves together, and the godly among them came to live under him in Judah, though the diſtinction of the kingdomes did ſtill remaine.

Objec. 14. The foureteenth Allegation is out of Acts 7. 16. where the Papiſts and Atheiſts alleage the Scripture to be contrarie to it ſelfe, in that there it ſaith, Abraham bought a field of Emor, when as, Gen. 33. 19. the ſame field was bought by Iacob.

Anſw. 1. Some ſay that there is a fault, becauſe Abrahams name is put for Iacob. Yet not a fault of the Bible, but of them that wrote out the Bible. Neither doth this diminiſh the authoritie of Scripture, though the pen-men did erre and ſlip in writing, ſo long as wee may finde out the truth by Scripture.

2. Anſw. That this field was bought twice: firſt by Abraham, and then afterward recovered by Iacob, that hee might maintaine his fathers poſſeſſion.

3. Anſw. That Abrahams name is here put for his poſteritie, as Iſraels name is otherwhere given to his children, yea not onely to his children, but alſo to his fathers, Iſaac, and Abraham. For Exod. 12. 40. it is ſaid, The abode of the children of Iſrael while they dwelt in Egypt, was 430. yeares, which cannot bee true, unleſſe the abode of Abraham and Iſaac bee therein included. Now if the name of the ſucceſſor may be given to his anceſtors, much more may the name of the anceſtors be given to the poſteritie.

CHAP. IIII.

Of Religion.

THe third Queſtion concerning man as he ſtands in relation to God, is touching Religion, where it is demanded:

what is that Religion that is due unto the true God?

Anſ. The name Religion is not alwaies taken in one and the ſame ſenſe. For ſometime it is uſed to ſignifie the whole body of doctrine, revealed in the written word, that teacheth and preſcribeth whatſoever is to be beleeved or practiſed, as neceſſarie to ſalvation. Otherwhiles it is put for the inward vertue of the minde, where the ſame doctrine is beleeved, and the duties therein required, practiſed, and performed to the Majeſty of God. And being thus taken, it is called by the name of piety or godlineſſe in the Scripture. And in this ſecond ſenſe I take it in this place.

Now Religion or Pietie hath two diſtinct parts: The firſt is Knowledge of God; the ſecond, the Worſhip of God. Theſe two are notably deſcribed by David, in his laſt will and Teſtament, wherein hee commends unto Salomon his ſonne before all other things the care and love of Religion and Pietie; the ſumme whereof hee reduceth to theſe heads; the knowledge of God, and worſhip of God, 1 Chron. 28. 9. And thou Salomon my ſonne, KNOW thou the God of thy father, and SERVE him with a perfect heart, and with a willing minde.

According to this difference of heads, are the Queſtions concerning Religion to bee diſtinguiſhed, and theſe are principally two: firſt how God is to be knowne, and then how he is to be worſhipped.

I. Queſtion.

How God is to be conceived in our minds, when we performe any ſervice or worſhip unto him.

For anſwer hereunto, this Ground is firſt to be laid: That we muſt not, neither can poſſibly know or conceive God as hee is in himſelfe. For God in himſelfe is infinit, and therefore incomprehenſible in regard of us. But we are to conceive him ſo, as hee hath and doth reveale himſelfe to us in his creatures, principally in his Word. The truth hereof may appeare in this one example, (to alleage no more:) when Moſes deſired to ſee the glory and Majeſty of God, for a further confirmation and aſſurance of his calling, anſwer was made him by God, that hee could not ſee his face, but hee ſhould ſee his backeparts, as hee paſſed by him. The meaning of this anſwer is, that God would manifeſt his glorie unto him by his effects, by which, as by a glimpſe or imperfect repreſentation, hee might diſcerne ſome part of his Majeſty, ſo farre forth as hee was able in the infirmitie of fleſh and blood, to behold the ſame. But the perfect and full ſight thereof no creature was ever able to attaine unto, it being reſerved for the life to come; when (and not before) they ſhall ſee him as he is in himſelfe face to face. Exod. 33. 23.

This Ground being laid, the full anſwer to the queſtion I propound in foure rules.

I. Rule. When wee are to pray, or to worſhip God, wee muſt not conceive him in the forme of any earthly, or heavenly, bodily, or ſpirituall creature whatſoever: for thus not to conceive him, is a degree of conceiving him aright.

II. Rule. God muſt bee conceived of us, not by his nature, but by his attributes and workes. By his attributes, as that he is infinite in mercy, juſtice, goodnes, power, &c. By his workes of creation, and government of the world, of redemption, &c. Thus the Lord revealed himſelfe to Moſes, Exod. 6. 15. I AM hath ſent me unto you: that is, one which hath his being in himſelfe, and of himſelfe, that gives being to all creatures by creation, and continues the ſame by his providence: one that gives a being and accompliſhment to all his mercifull promiſes. When the Lord appeared to Moſes, hee ſhewed not his face unto him, but paſſed by him with a voice, The Lord, the Lord, ſtrong, merciful, and gracious, long ſuffering, and plenteous in goodneſſe and truth, Ex. 34. 6. In which place, the Lord proclaimes his name by his attributes. So in the Prophecie of Jeremy, Ier. 9. 24. I am hee that ſheweth mercy, judgment, and juſtice in the land. The ſame Daniel confeſſeth in his prayer, when he ſaith, Dan. 9 4. O Lord God, which art great and fearefull, keeping covenant and mercy toward them that love thee, and keepe thy commandements. And laſtly, the author to the Hebrews, Heb. 11. 6. He that comes to God, muſt believe that God is, and that hee is a rewarder of them that ſeeke him. Mat. 28. 19. 1 Joh. 5 7.

III. Rule. God muſt not be conceived abſolutely, that is, out of the Trinitie: but as hee ſubſiſteth in the perſon of the Father, Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt, ſo hee muſt bee knowne and conceived of us. The ancient rule of the Church is, that the Unitie muſt be worſhipped in Trinity, and the Trinitie in Unitie.

By this doe the Proteſtant Churches differ from all other aſſemblies of worſhippers. The Turke conceives and worſhips a God, Creator of heaven and earth, but an abſtracted God, which is neither Father, Son, nor Holy Ghoſt. The Jew worſhippeth God, but out of Chriſt, and therfore a feigned and idol God. The Papiſt in word acknowledgeth and ſo worſhippeth God, but indeed makes God an idoll, becauſe he worſhips him not in a true, but in a feigned Chriſt, that ſits at the right hand of the Father in heaven, and is alſo in the hands of every Maſſe-prieſt, after the words of conſecration. But the Proteſtant knowes Gods as he will be knowne, and conſequently worſhips him as hee will be worſhipped, in Father, Sonne, and holy Ghoſt.

IV. Rule. When we direct our prayers, or any worſhip to any one perſon, wee muſt include the reſt in the ſame worſhip; yea, further, we muſt retaine in minde the diſtinction and order of all the three perſons, without ſevering or ſundring them: for ſo they are named, and propounded in the Scriptures. The reaſon is, becauſe as they are not ſevered, but conjoyned in nature, ſo they neither are nor muſt bee ſevered, but conjoyned in worſhip. For example: the man that prayes to God the Father for the forgiveneſſe of his ſinnes, muſt aske it of him for the merites of the the manner of the Ægyptian Pyramides, wider below, and narrower above towards the top. And by this meanes it is probable, not onely that they might containe a great company, but that all those which stood about the sides and upon the roofe, might very well behold what Sampson did below; specially considering that he stood in the middest of the Theater, betweene two middle pillars.

Object. 12. The twelfth Allegation, 1 Sam. 16. 19. &c. it is said that David played before Saul, and that Saul knew him. But chap. 17. 55. when he was to fight with Goliah, Saul knew him not. Here is a plaine contradiction in the Atheists judgement.

Answ. This sort of men doe still bewray their grosse ignorance, both in the matter and in the order of Scripture. For the Word of God doth not alway set downe things as they follow in order of time just one after another: but sometime it doth anticipate, putting such things in former histories, as are alreadie done and accomplished, which in regard of their event should bee related afterward. Sometime againe it useth by recapitulation to declare things as following in order of time, which doe properly belong to a former narration. An example of the latter (to omit many other that might bee brought) is the text alleaged. For that part of the 16. chap. from the 9. verse to the end, should by order of historie follow the 17. as will easily appeare by comparing the place. And the like displacing of things said and done, is else-where to be found in the Scriptures. Which being considered, the Atheists supposed Contradiction falls to the ground. For David was to fight with Goliah before hee played before Saul, and though he was not then knowne, yet Saul after that time tooke better knowledge of him.

Object. 13. The thirteenth Allegation is out of 2 Chron. 21. 2. where the Papist playes the right Atheist, in going about to improve the originall copies. There (saith hee) Iehosaphat is called king of Israel, when as indeed hee was king of Iudah, and so is he called in the former booke of Chronicles. In like manner Ahaz is termed king of Israel, 2 Chron. 28. 19. whereas the truth is, he was king of Iudah. Answer. After the death of Salomon the kingdome was divided, and the ten tribes were called Israel, and the other two Iudah and Benjamin did beare the name of Iudah. Now after the division, for sometime the name of Israel common to both sides, was given to either, and both were named after it. And in this respect Iehosaphat and Ahaz may bee termed kings of Israel. Againe, the name of Israel sundrie times in Scripture, and namely in the Prophets, is taken onely for the two Tribes, which bare the name of Iudah after the defection. And thus also might Ahaz have that name given unto him, though hee were king of Iudah. Furthermore, the word Israel is sometimes put for a true worshipper of God, that is, for him that is a Jew not without, but within, not in the letter, but in the spirit, Rom. 2. 29. Thus our Saviour saith of Nathaniel, John 1 48. Behold a true Israelite in whom is no guile, that is, a man of an upright heart, that serveth God in spirit and in truth. And in this sense Iehosaphat might bee termed king of Israel, because he was a king and patron of all true worshippers of God. For even then the Israelites sorted themselves together, and the godly among them came to live under him in Judah, though the distinction of the kingdomes did still remaine.

Object. 14. The fourteenth Allegation is out of Acts 7. 16. where the Papists and Atheists alleage the Scripture to be contrarie to it selfe, in that there it saith, Abraham bought a field of Emor, when as, Gen. 33. 19. the same field was bought by Iacob.

Answ. 1. Some say that there is a fault, because Abrahams name is put for Iacob. Yet not a fault of the Bible, but of them that wrote out the Bible. Neither doth this diminish the authoritie of Scripture, though the pen-men did erre and slip in writing, so long as wee may finde out the truth by Scripture.

2. Answ. That this field was bought twice: first by Abraham, and then afterward recovered by Iacob, that hee might maintaine his fathers possession.

3. Answ. That Abrahams name is here put for his posteritie, as Israels name is otherwhere given to his children, yea not onely to his children, but also to his fathers, Isaac, and Abraham. For Exod. 12. 40. it is said, The abode of the children of Israel while they dwelt in Egypt, was 430. yeares, which cannot bee true, unlesse the abode of Abraham and Isaac bee therein included. Now if the name of the successor may be given to his ancestors, much more may the name of the ancestors be given to the posteritie.

CHAP. IIII.

Of Religion.

THe third Question concerning man as he stands in relation to God, is touching Religion, where it is demanded:

What is that Religion that is due unto the true God?

Anſ. The name Religion is not alwaies taken in one and the same sense. For sometime it is used to signifie the whole body of doctrine, revealed in the written word, that teacheth and prescribeth whatsoever is to be beleeved or practised, as necessarie to salvation. Otherwhiles it is put for the inward vertue of the minde, where the same doctrine is beleeved, and the duties therein required, practised, and performed to the Majesty of God. And being thus taken, it is called by the name of piety or godlinesse in the Scripture. And in this second sense I take it in this place.

Now Religion or Pietie hath two distinct parts: The first is Knowledge of God; the second, the Worship of God. These two are notably described by David, in his last will and Testament, wherein hee commends unto Salomon his sonne before all other things the care and love of Religion and Pietie; the summe whereof hee reduceth to these heads; the knowledge of God, and worship of God, 1 Chron. 28. 9. And thou Salomon my sonne, KNOW thou the God of thy father, and SERVE him with a perfect heart, and with a willing minde.

According to this difference of heads, are the Questions concerning Religion to bee distinguished, and these are principally two: first how God is to be knowne, and then how he is to be worshipped.

I. Question.

How God is to be conceived in our minds, when we performe any service or worship unto him.

For answer hereunto, this Ground is first to be laid: That we must not, neither can possibly know or conceive God as hee is in himselfe. For God in himselfe is infinit, and therefore incomprehensible in regard of us. But we are to conceive him so, as hee hath and doth reveale himselfe to us in his creatures, principally in his Word. The truth hereof may appeare in this one example, (to alleage no more:) when Moses desired to see the glory and Majesty of God, for a further confirmation and assurance of his calling, answer was made him by God, that hee could not see his face, but hee should see his backeparts, as hee passed by him. The meaning of this answer is, that God would manifest his glorie unto him by his effects, by which, as by a glimpse or imperfect representation, hee might discerne some part of his Majesty, so farre forth as hee was able in the infirmitie of flesh and blood, to behold the same. But the perfect and full sight thereof no creature was ever able to attaine unto, it being reserved for the life to come; when (and not before) they shall see him as he is in himselfe face to face.

Exod. 33. 23.

This Ground being laid, the full answer to the question I propound in foure rules.

I. Rule. When wee are to pray, or to worship God, wee must not conceive him in the forme of any earthly, or heavenly, bodily, or spirituall creature whatsoever: for thus not to conceive him, is a degree of conceiving him aright.

II. Rule. God must bee conceived of us, not by his nature, but by his attributes and workes. By his attributes, as that he is infinite in mercy, justice, goodnes, power, &c. By his workes of creation, and governement of the world, of redemption, &c. Thus the Lord revealed himselfe to Moses, Exod. 6. 15. I AM hath sent me unto you: that is, one which hath his being in himselfe, and of himselfe, that gives being to all creatures by creation, and continues the same by his providence: one that gives a being and accomplishment to all his mercifull promises. When the Lord appeared to Moses, hee shewed not his face unto him, but passed by him with a voice, The Lord, the Lord, strong, merciful, and gracious, long suffering, and plenteous in goodnesse and truth, Ex. 34. 6. In which place, the Lord proclaimes his name by his attributes. So in the Prophecie of Jeremy, Jer. 9. 24. I am hee that sheweth mercy, judgment, and justice in the land. The same Daniel confesseth in his prayer, when he saith, Dan. 9 4. O Lord God, which art great and fearefull, keeping covenant and mercy toward them that love thee, and keep thy commandements. And lastly, the author to the Hebrews, Heb. 11. 6. He that comes to God, must beleeve that God is, and that hee is a rewarder of them that seeke him.

III. Rule. God must not be conceived absolutely, that is, out of the Trinitie: but as hee subsisteth in the person of the Father, Sonne, and the holy Ghost, so hee must be knowne and conceived of us. The ancient rule of the Church is, that the Unitie must be worshipped in Trinity; and the Trinitie in Unitie.

By this doe the Protestant Churches differ from all other assemblies of worshippers. The Turke conceives and worships a God, Creator of heaven and earth, but an abstracted God, which is neither Father, Son, nor Holy Ghost. The Jew worshippeth God, but out of Christ, and therfore a feigned and idol God. The Papist in word acknowledgeth and so worshippeth God, but indeed makes God an idoll, because he worships him not in a true, but in a feigned Christ, that sits at the right hand of the Father in heaven, and is also in the hands of every Masse-priest, after the words of consecration. But the Protestant knowes Gods as he will be knowne, and consequently worships him as hee will be worshipped, in Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost.

IV. Rule. When we direct our prayers, or any worship to any one person, wee must include the rest in the same worship; yea, further, we must retaine in minde the distinction and order of all the three persons, without severing or sundring them: for so they are named, and propounded in the Scriptures. The reason is, because as they are not severed, but conjoyned in nature, so they neither are nor must bee severed, but conjoyned in worship. For example: the man that prayes to God the Father for the forgivenesse of his sinnes, must aske it of him for the merits of the Mat. 28. 19. 1 Joh. 5 7.

Son: and by the assurance of the holy Ghost. Againe, hee that prayes for remission of his sinnes to God the Sonne, must pray that hee would procure the Father to grant his pardon, and withall assure it by his Spirit. He also that prayes for the same to God the holy Ghost, must pray that he would assure unto him the remission of his sins from the Father, by and for the merit of the Sonne.

CHAP. V.

Of the second part of Religion tonc' ing the worship of God, and first of the inward worship.

II. Question.

How God is to bee worshipped and served?

FOr the ful answer hereof, we must remember that the worship of God is two-fold; Inward, or Outward. Inward is the worship of the minde, the heart, the conscience, will, and affections: for man by all these joyntly and severally performeth worship and service to his Creator. The Outward is that worship whereby the Inward is testified outwardly in the speech and actions. The former of these two is the spirituall worship of the inwad man, and the very ground and foundation of all true worship of God: for God is a Spirit, and therefore must bee worshipped in spirit, that is, in the minde, conscience, will, and affections. Indeed all the worship of God is spirituall, even that which wee call outward; yet not of it selfe, but by vertue of the inward, from which it proceedeth.

John 4.24.

Sect. 1.

Adoration.

The heads of Inward worship are two; Adoration of God, and cleaving to God. For as they are two different actions of the heart, so they may fitly be termed two distinct parts of Gods worship. This distinction is in some part propounded by Moses, where he exhorteth the Israelites, To feare Iehovah their God, to adore him, to cleave unto him, and to sweare by his Name, Deut. 10.20.

Adoration is that part of Gods worship, whereby a man upon a vile and base estimation of himselfe, as being but dust and ashes, submits and subjects his soule to the glory and Majestie of God.

This hath two principall grounds in the heart, which if they be wanting, there can be no true worship of God. The first is, Abnegation or denialll of our selves, when we esteeme our selves to be meerely nothing. The second is, Exaltation, or Advancement of Gods Majesty, above all the things in the world. Examples of these wee have many in the Scriptures, as of Abraham, who called God his Lord, & himselfe dust and ashes, Gen. 18.27. of the Angels, Esa. 6.2. who in a vision the Prophet saw standing before God, with one wing covering their feet, which signified the abasing of themselves; and with another covering their faces, which betokened their adoration of Gods Majestie: Of Daniel, Dan. 9.7. when he confesseth, To thee, O Lord, belongeth right confusse it selfe, but to us shame and confusion of face: Lastly, of the woman of Canaan, who cals Christ Lord, and her selfe a dog. Mat. 15.27.

Now in Adoration, there are foure vertues; Feare, Obedience, Patience, Thankfulnesse.

Feare is a great part of the worship of God; which I prove by two places laid together, Esa. 29.13. Matth. 15.8, 9. wherein Feare and Worship are taken for one and the same thing, for that which Esay cals feare, Matthew cals Worship. Now in this Feare there be two things that serve to distinguish it from all other feares.

First, it is absolute: for by it God is reverenced absolutely. S. Paul exhorteth to yeeld tribute, feare, and honour to the Magistrate, not for himselfe, but for God, whose Minister he is. And our Saviour saith, Mat. 10.28. Feare yee not them which kill the body, and are not able to kill the soule, but rather feare him which is able to destroy both soule and body in hell. As if he should say, I allow and command you to feare men, onely for God, who hath set them over you; but feare God for himselfe. Rom. 13.7.

Secondly, it makes a man, first of all, to feare the offence of God, and then the punishment and judgement. For it is not a feare of the offence alone, but of the offence and punishment together, and of the offence in the first place. If I be a Lord, where is my feare? And where it is said in Matthew, Mat. 10.28. But rather feare him that is able to cast body & soule into hell fire; there is commanded a feare of God, in regard of his anger. We feare the sword of man, and that lawfully; why then may we not feare the punishment of God? Rom. 13.4. If it be said, this is a servile feare, to feare the punishment, and agrees not to Gods children: I answer, slavish feare is, when a man onely feares the punishment, and not the offence of God, or at least the punishment more than the offence. Mal. 1.6.

The second vertue of Adoration, is Inward Obedience of the hidden man of the heart. The Lord preferres this obedience before all sacrifice, 1 Sam. 15.22. This standeth in two things. First, in yeelding subjection of the Conscience to the Commandements, threatnings, and promises of God, so as wee are willing that it should become bound unto them. Secondly, when the rest of the powers of the soule, in their place and time, performe obedience unto God. And by this meanes doe wee bring into captivitie every thought unto the obedience of Christ, as Paul speaketh, 2 Cor. 10.5.

The

The third vertue of Adoration is Patience, which is, when a man in his afflictions submitteth his will to Gods will, and quieteth his heart therein, because God sendeth afflictions. This was Davids counsell; Be silent before the Lord; and alwaies wait upon his pleasure, Ps. 37.7. and his practice when in trouble hee resigned himselfe into the hands of God, and said, Lord, if I please thee not, loe, I am here, doe with me as seemeth good in thine eyes, 2 Sam. 15.26. This patience is a part of Gods worship because it is a kinde of obedience.

The fourth vertue of Adoration is thankfulnesse to God, which shewes it selfe in two things; First, in an acknowledgement of the hart; that our selves, and whatsoever we have, is Gods, and proceeds from his blessing alone. Secondly, in a consecration of our bodies, soules, lives, callings, and labours, to the honour and service of God. Thus much of the first head of inward worship, or the first action of the heart, standing in Adoration.

Sect. 2.

Cleaving to God.

The second action of the heart in inward worship, or the second part thereof, is cleaving unto God. Now we cleave unto God by foure things: By Faith, Hope, Love, and inward invocation.

By faith, I mean true justifying faith, whereby we rest upon Gods mercy for the forgivenesse of our sinnes, and life everlasting: and upon his providence, for the things of this life. Thus Abraham, being strengthened in his faith, and relying by it upon Gods promises made unto him, gave glory unto God, Rom. 4.20. This saving faith is the very root and beginning of all true worship. For love which is the fulfilling of the Law, must come from it, 1 Tim. 1.5.

The second is Hope, which followes and depends upon faith: and it is that grace of God, whereby with patience wee wait the Lords leasure, for the performance of his promises, especially touching redemption, and life eternall. If we hope (saith Paul) for that wee have not, wee doe with patience expect it, Rom. 8.25.

The third is love of God, which hath two effects in the heart; First, it maketh the heart to cleave unto God, and to be well pleased with him simply for himselfe. In this manner God the Father loving Christ, testifieth that he was well pleased in him, Mat. 3.17. Secondly, it moves the heart to seek by all meanes possible to have true fellowship with God in Christ. This the Church notably expresseth in the Canticles.

The fourth is inward prayer, or invocation of the heart, and it is nothing else but the lifting up of the heart unto God, according to his will, by desires and groanes unspeakable. Or, it is a worke of the heart, whereby it flies unto God for helpe in distresse, and makes him a rocke of defence. When the children of Israel were afflicted, They remembred that God was their strength, and the most high God their redeemer, Psalm. 78.35. Of this kinde of prayer Paul speakes, when he saith, Pray continually, 1 Thes. 5.17. For solemne prayer continued, and uttered in forme of words, cannot alwaies bee used: but wee are to lift up our hearts unto God, upon every occasion, that by inward and holy motions and affections, they may be (as it were) knit unto him.

Now to conclude this point touching inward worship, wee must remember that it alone is properly, simply, and of it selfe, the worship of God: and the outward is not simply the worship of God, but only so far forth as it is quickned by the inward, and grounded upon it. For God is a spirit, and therefore the true worship that is done unto him must bee performed in spirit and truth, John 4.24.

CHAP. VI.

Of the outward worship of God, and the first head thereof, Prayer.

THus much of the inward worship of God. The outward is that which is performed by the body externally, either in Word or deed. To this belong many particulars, which I will reduce to eight severall heads.

I Prayer.
II. The hearing of the word preached.
III. The use of the Sacraments.
IV. Outward Adoration.
V. Confession.
VI. An Oath.
VII. Vowes.
VIII. Fasting.

Touching Prayer conceived and uttered by the voice, there are many Questions of Conscience; the principall whereof are foure.

I. Question.

How shall a man make a lawfull and acceptable prayer to God? Lawfull Prayer.

Answer. The word of God requires many conditions in making prayer to God: they may all be brought to three heads. Some of them goe before the making of prayer, some are to be performed in the act of prayer, some after prayer is ended.

Sect. 1.

Conditions to bee observed before prayer, are three. Conditions before prayer.

First, he that would make such a prayer as God may bee pleased to hear, must repent. Esa. 1.15. God would not hear the prayers of the Jewes, because their hands were full of blood, that is, because they had not repented of their oppression and crueltie. John 9.31.

God heares not sinners: that is, such as live and lie in their sinnes, and turne not unto God by true repentance, 1 Iohn 3.22. By this wee know that God heares our prayers, if we keep his commandements. I adde further, that the man which hath before time repented must againe renew his repentance, if hee desire that his prayers should bee accepted. For the very particular sinnes of men, whereinto they fall after their repentance, doe hinder the course of their prayers, from having accesse unto God, if they bee not repented of. And for this cause, the worthy men of God, the Prophets in the Old Testament, doe usually in the beginning of their prayers, still humble themselves, and confesse their sinne; as we may see in the example of Daniel, chap. 9.v. 5,6. &c. and of Ezra. chap. 9.v.6.&c.

Secondly, before a man make a prayer, he must first (if need require,) be reconciled unto his brother. *If thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there remembrest that thy brother hath ought against thee, leave there thine offring, and go thy way, first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift, Mat.*5.23. *when yee shall stand and pray, forgive, if yee have any thing against any man, &c. Mark.*11.25.

Thirdly, hee that is to pray must prepare himselfe in heart and minde, as one that is to speake familiarly with God.

In this preparation foure things are required: First, the minde is to be emptied of all carnall and worldly thoughts; secondly, there must be in the minde, a consideration of the things to bee asked. Thirdly, a lifting up of the heart unto the Lord, *Psal.*25.1. Fourthly, the heart must bee touched with a reverence of the Majesty of God, to whom wee pray: *Eccl.*5.1. Be not rash with thy mouth, nor let thy hart be hasty to utter a thing before God For the neglect hereof, the Lord threatneth to bring a judgment upon the Israelites, *Esa.*29.13,14.

Sect. 2.

Conditions in prayers.

The second sort of Conditions, are those that are required in prayer, and they are in number eight.

I. Every petition must proceed from a lively sense and feeling of our own wants, and of our spirituall poverty. For without this, no prayer can be earnest and hearty; and consequently become acceptable unto God. For example, when we pray that Gods name may be hallowed, wee must in making that petition, have in our hearts a sense of the corruption of our nature, wherby we are prone to dishonour the name of God.

II. Our prayer must proceed from an earnest desire of that grace which we want: and this desire is indeed prayer it selfe. Moses uttering never a word, but groning in the spirit unto God, in the behalfe of the Israelites, is said, to *cry unto the Lord, Exod.*14.15. We know not (saith Paul) *what to pray as we ought, but the Spirit it selfe maketh request for us with sighes that cannot be expressed, Rom.*8.26.

III. The petition must proceed from saving and true justifying faith. The reason is, because without that faith, it is impossible that either our persons, or our prayers, or any other action wee doe, should please God, *Heb.*11.6.

IV. Every petition must be grounded upon the Word of God, and not framed according to the carnall conceit and fansie of mans brain, And this is the assurance that we have in him, that if we aske any thing according TO HIS WILL, he heareth us, 1 *Ioh.*5.14. Now wee have a double ground of our prayer in Gods word: a commandement to make the prayer, either generall or particular; and a promise, that our requests shall be granted.

Here we must remember two rules: First, Things to bee asked are either spirituall, or temporall. Spirituall are such as concerne God; whereof some are more necessary to salvation, as remission of sinnes, faith, repentance, and such like; some are lesse necessary, as hope, joy in the feeling of Gods mercy in distresse, &c. Temporall things are such as belong to this life, as meat, drinke, cloathing preferment, and such like.

Now touching things spirituall, that are more necessary to salvation, wee are to pray for them absolutely, without any exception or condition. But for things lesse necessarie to salvation, and for temporal blessings, we must aske them at Gods hand with this condition; if it be his will and pleasure, and so farre forth as hee in his wisdome shall judge to bee most expedient for us. Herein we must follow the example of Christ, who in his agony prayed to his Father to take that cup from him, yet with this condition, Not my will, but thy will be done. The reason is this: Looke how far forth God commands us to aske, & promiseth that we shall receive, so farre forth are we warranted to aske, and may hope to receive: Now God commands us to aske, and promiseth us the first sort of spirituall things, freely and simply, without any condition or exception. But the other sort of spirituall things, that are lesse necessary, and temporall blessings, hee promiseth us with condition; and therefore in like sort ought we to aske them.

The second rule is: Wee must not in our prayer binde God to any circumstances of time, place, or measure of that grace or benefit, which we aske.

V. Our prayers being thus framed, (as hath beene said) are to bee presented and offered to God alone, and to none but him. For first, none elsc can heare all men in all places, at all times; and helpe all men in all places, and at all times, but onely hee. Againe, the Spirit of God makes us to pray, and in prayer to call him Abba, Father. Furthermore, all prayer must be grounded upon the Word, wherein wee have not the last warrant, either expressly set downe, or by consequent implyed, to preferre our suits and requests to any of the creatures.

V.I. Prayer is to be presented to God, in the name, merit and mediation of Christ alone. For we our selves are not worthy of any thing but shame and confusion. Therefore we cannot pray in our owne names, but must pray onely in the name of Christ. Our prayers are our sacrifices, and Christ alone is the Altar, whereon we must offer them to God the Father. For this Altar must sanctifie them, before they can be a sacrifice of a sweet smelling savour unto God. Hence it is, that not onely our petitions, but all other things, as Paul wisheth, are to bee done in the name of the Lord Iesus, *Colos.*3.17. And Christ himselfe saith, What soever you aske the Father in my name, he will give it you, Iohn 16.23.

VII. There must be in prayers, Instancie and Perseverance. The heart must bee instant, not onely in the act of prayer, but afterwards till the thing asked bee granted. This instancie is commended unto us in the parable of the widow, and the unrighteous Judge, Luke 18.1. Hereunto the Prophet exhorteth, when he saith, *—keepe not silence, and give the Lord no rest, &c. Isa.*62.7. And S. Paul in like manner wisheth the Romans *to strive with him by prayers to God for him, Rom.*15.30.

VIII. Every true prayer must have in it some thankf-giving unto God for his benefits. In all things let your requests be shewed unto God in prayer and supplication, with giving of thankes, Phil. 4.6. Christ himselfe gave direction touching this, in that forme of prayer which he taught his Disciples, For thine is the kingdome, power and glory.

Sect. 3.

Conditions after Prayer.

The third sort of Conditions, are those which are required after prayer; and they are specially two.

The first is, a particular faith, whereby he that prayeth must be assured that his particular request shal be granted, *Mat.*21.24. What soever yee desire when ye pray, beleeve that yee shall have it, and it shall bee done unto you. And that he may have this particular faith, he must first have that whence it ariseth, namely, true justifying faith, standing in a perswasion of his reconciliation with God.

The second is, that a man must doe and practise that which he prayes for; and hee is not onely to pray for blessings, but also to use all lawfull meanes that he can, whereby the blessings hee asketh may be obtained. For example: As thou prayest for the pardon of thy sinnes, so thou must leave thy sinnes, and use all good meanes, whereby the same may bee mortified and crucified. And the like is to be done in al other things which we aske of God.

Thus wee have the first question of conscience resolved touching Prayer: that then the prayer is acceptable to God, when hee that prayeth observes, as much as in him lyeth, all these conditions before, in, and after prayer.

II. Question:

Whether may a man lawfully make Imprecations, that is, pray against his enemies, and how farre forth is it lawfull?

Sect. 1.

Of imprecations.

For answer to this we must marke and observe sundry distinctions and differences.

First, wee must distinguish between the cause and the person that defends and maintaines the cause. The evill cause which are evill man defendeth, is to be condemned of us, and wee may alwayes, and that lawfully, pray against it; but wee may not in like sort condemne and pray against his person.

Secondly, we must distinguish of the persons of our enemies: Some bee private enemies, some publike. Private I call those, which bee enemies of some particular men; and are against them, in regard of this or that cause or matter, and yet are not enemies of God, or of his truth. Publike are those, which are not onely our enemies, but the enemies of God, of his kingdome, of his truth, and religion. Now we may not pray against private enemies: we may (as before) pray against their evill cause, but not against their person. *Mat.*5.44. Blesse them that curse you, doe good to them that hate you, and pray for them which hurt you and persecute you. And wee are commanded to love our enemies as our selves.

Againe, publike enemies of God and his truth are also of two sorts: either curable, or incurable. Curable are such as offend of ignorance, or some other humane frailtie, so as there is some hope of their conversion and repentance. Wee must not pray against the persons of these, but onely against their dealings and bad causes, and pray for their persons, and for their conversion. Thus Christ prayed for those that crucified him: Father forgive them: and *Stephen, Act.*7. for them that stoned him. Incurable are those that sin obstinately and of malice, so as there is no hope of their amendment and conversion.

And further, for the better answering of this question, we must marke another distinction. There are two sorts of men that are to make prayer unto God: Some that have extraordinarie gifts, as the Prophets and Apostles. Now hee that is an extraordinary man, hath, and must have these two gifts; namely, first a spirit of Discerning, to discerne and judge whether the person against whom hee prayes, bee incurable or no: and secondly a pure zeale of Gods honour and glory. The extraordinary man, that is qualified with these two gifts, may pray not onely against the cause of him that is an enemie to God, but against his person. Thus David did, especially cially in the 109. Psal. which Psalme is full of terrible curses against his particular enemies, and typically against Iudas. For he had the spirit of discerning, by which he knew that they were incurable enemies: and a pure zeale of the glory of God which made him break out into such imprecations. So Paul praies Gal. 5. 12. that they might be cut off which troubled the Church, &c. 2 Tim. 4. 14. he praies directly against the person of Alexander the Coppersmith, that had done him much wrong, The Lord reward him according to his works, which must not seeme strange: for Paul had in that imprecation the spirit of prophecie, and consequently both the spirit of discerning, and of pure zeale: and therefore hee might pray against him as he did.

But for ordinary men, such as have nothing but ordinary gifts, and want the spirit of discerning, and have also a zeale mingled with choler, stomacke, anger, and hatred; they may use no extraordinary prayer against the person of any man. All that they may doe, is to pray, that God would restraine their malice, hinder their bad practices, and turne them to his glory, and the good of his Church. Therefore, Act. 4. 29. when there had beene a councell holden at Jerusalem, against the Apostles Peter and John. in the first beginning of the great persecution of Christians, in the Primitive church, it is said that they departed from the assembly, and prayed together with the rest of the church in this manner; And now, O Lord, behold their threatnings, &c. Wherein they prayed not against the Councell, nor against the men that sate in counsell, but against their proceedings, courses, devices, and threatnings. And their practice may be a patterne for ordinary men to follow. In Luke 9. 54. the Disciples asking our Saviour Christ whether they should call for fire from heaven to destroy his enemies, hee sharply reproveth them for their intemperate heat against the Samaritanes, and tels them, that they had not that extraordinary Spirit, to effect such a thing because they were but ordinary men. Ordinary men therefore may not pray against the persons of Gods enemies. The Pope at this day is a professed enemie to Christ and his Gospell, yet no man may pray against the person of the Pope, but onely against his state, kingdome, and regiment, which is Anti christian; whereby hee sets himselfe against God and his kingdome.

Upon the answer to this Question, there followeth another. Sundry Psalmes of David are Psalmes of imprecation, wherein David curseth his enemies fearefully, especially in the 109. Psalme; now all these Psalmes were penned for our use: It may therefore bee demanded, how we may use these, and such like, when we reade or sing them?

Answ. 1. Wee must not use them as David did, namely, as prayers against the persons of our enemies, but onely as prophecies against the enemies of God, wherein the punishment of incurable men, that were enemies to God and his truth, is fore-told. For wee have not, as David had, an extraordinary spirit, or a pure zeale: therfore we cannot pray as he did.

II. Answer, whereas these imprecations were directed against particular enemies, we may use them in some sort as prayers, but how? As generall prayers against all the incurable enemies of God, not against any particulars among the Jewes, Turkes, or Papists. As therefore we may use these Imprecations as prayers, so wee must use them without any particular application to the persons of any particular men.

III. Question.

what be the particular Circumstances of Prayer? Of the circumstances of Prayer.

Answ. There are chiefly foure. I. The voice, or speech. II. The gesture, III. The place where. IV. The time.

Sect. 1.

Concerning the Voice, this Question may be moved? Of the voice in Prayer.

Whether a voice or words are to be used in prayer or no?

Answ. Prayer is either Publike, or Private. In publike prayer, a forme of words must alwaies be used, in a known, plaine, and distinct voice. The reasons are these: First, the Minister is the mouth of the whole Congregation in prayer, as he is the mouth of God to the people in preaching. Now as the Minister is their mouth to God in prayer, so the people must give their assent, and approbation to his prayer, by the word Amen: But there can be no professed and publike assent, without a voice. Secondly, God is the Creator, not onely of the soule of man, but also of his body; and we bleese God, not onely with the heart, but also with the tongue: therefore the whole man must pray in publike.

Now in private prayer, made in private and secret places, by private persons, the Voice is profitable, but not simply necessarie. It is profitable, because it stirreth up the affections of the heart, it serveth also to keepe the wandring minde in compasse, to expresse the affection, and to procure attention of the heart to the prayer. Yet it is not simply necessary. For a man is not bound in conscience to use a forme of words, in all his prayers. Moses prayed, he spake never a word, and yet it was a prayer: for the Lord sayes unto him, Exod. 14. 15. why crieest thou? Anna praying in the temple, her lips did move, only her voice was not heard, and yet she is said to pray, 1 Sam. 1. 13.

Againe,

Againe, the spirit is said to pray in the elect with groanes that cannot be uttered; and yet the holy Ghost gives them the name of prayers, Rom. 8. 26. Paul bids us pray continually, 1 Thess. 5. 17. which is not to bee understood of a continuall use of a forme of words, but of the groanes and sighes of the heart, which may be made at all times.

Out of this question ariseth another; Whether it be lawfull when we pray, to read a set forme of prayer? for some thinke, that to doe so is a sinne.

Answ. It is no sin: but a man may lawfully, and with good conscience doe it.

Reasons. First, the Psalmes of David were delivered to the Church, to be used and read in a set forme of words; and yet the most of them are prayers. Secondly, to conceive a forme of prayer requires gifts of memorie, knowledge, utterance, and the gifts of grace. Now every child and servant of God, though he have an honest heart, yet hath hee not all these gifts: and therefore in the want of them, may lawfully use a set forme of prayer, as a man that hath a weake backe, or a lame leg, may leane upon a crutch.

It is alleaged, that set formes of prayer doe limit and bind the holy Ghost.

Answ. If we had a perfect measure of grace, it were somewhat, but the graces of God are weake and small in us. This is no binding of the Holy Ghost, but a helping of the spirit, which is weake in us, by a crutch to leane upon: therefore a man may with good conscience, upon defect of memorie and utterance, &c. use a set forme of prayer.

Sect. 2.

The second Circumstance, is the Gesture. Concerning which it is demanded, what kind of Gesture is to bee used in prayer? whether kneeling, standing, sitting, or the holding up of the hands or head to heaven, or bowing the bodie to the earth?

Answ. God in his word hath not prescribed any particular gesture of the body, and therefore our consciences are not bound to any particular. Besides that, Religion stands not properly in bodily actions and gestures. Yet touching gesture, the word of God gives certaine generall rules to be observed in prayer, both publike and private.

In Publike prayer, these rules of Gesture are prescribed. First, when publike prayer is made in the congregation, our gesture must alwaies be comely, modest, and decent. Secondly, all gesture used publikely must serve to expresse as much as may bee, the inward humilitie of the heart, without hypocrisie. Now these kinds are manifold. Some concerne the whole body, as the bowing thereof, the casting of it downe upon the ground. Some againe concerne the parts of the body, as lifting up of the head, the eies, the hands, bowing the knees, &c. Touching these, the Scripture hath not bound us to any particulars; but in them all, we must have regard, that they serve alway to expresse the humilitie of our hearts before God. Thus have the holy men of God behaved themselves; yea, the holy Angels standing before the Arke, doe cover their faces, in token of reverence of the Majestie of God, Esay 6. 2. Thirdly wee must in publike prayer, content our selves to follow the laudable fashion and custome of that particular Church where we are. For to decline from customes of particular Churches in such cases, often causeth schisme and dissentions.

In private prayer, done in private and secret places, there is more libertie. For in it we may use any gesture, so it be comely and decent, and serve to expresse the inward humilitie of our hearts. An ancient writer is of opinion, that it is an unreverent, and unlawfull thing to pray sitting. But both the learned before, in, and after his time, have judged his opinion superstitious; specially considering that Religion stands not in the outward gesture of the body, and it skils not much what that is, so the inward humilitie of a sincere heart be expressed thereby.

Sect. 3.

The third Circumstance, is the Place. Where Question is made, In what place wee must pray? Answ. In regard of conscience, holinesse, and religion, all places are equal & alike in the new Testament, since the comming of Christ. The house or the field is as holy as the Church. And if we pray in either of them, our prayer is as acceptable to God, as that which is made in the Church. For now the daies are come, that were foretold by the Prophet, wherein a cleane offering should be offered to God in every place, Mal. 1. 11. which Paul expounds, 1 Tim. 2. 8. of pure and holy prayer, offered to God in every place. To this purpose, Christ said to the woman of Samaria, That the time should come, when they should not worship in Ierusalem, or in Samaria, but the true worshippers of God should worship him in spirit and in truth, wheresoever it be. Yet nevertheless, for order, decencie, and quietnesse sake, publike prayer must be made in publike places; as Churches and Chappels appointed for that use. And private prayer in private houses and closets, Matth. 6. 5. Now the opinion of the Papist is otherwise. For he thinks that in the new Testament, hallowed Churches are more holy than other places are, or can be and doe make prayers offered to God in them, more acceptable to him than any other: and hereupon they teach, that private men must pray in Churches, and private prayers must bee made in Churches, if they will have them heard. For proofe hereof, they alleage the practice of some particular persons in the Scriptures. Of Anna, who prayed privately in the Temple, Luk. 2. 37. Of David, who in his exile, desired greatly to have recourse unto the Temple. And of Daniel: The place of prayer. Ioh. 4. 23.

who is said to looke out at the window toward the Temple, and pray, Dan. 6. 10.

Answ. These places are abused by the Popish Church. For there is a great difference betweene the Temple at Jerusalem in the old Testament, and our Churches in the new. That was built by particular commandement from God: so were not our Churches. That was a type of the very body and manhood of Christ, Heb. 9. 11. and of his mysticall body, Col. 2. 7. Againe, the Arke in the Temple was a pledge and signification of the covenant, a signe of Gods presence, a pledge of his mercy, and that by his owne appointment: for it was his will there to answer his people: but the like cannot be shewed of our Churches or Chappels.

1 Sam. 7.

It will be said, that the Sacrament is a signe of Gods presence, for in it God is present after a sort. Answ. It is true: Christ is present in the Sacrament, but when? not alwaies, but then onely when the Sacrament is administred. And the administration being ended, Christ is no more present in the bread and wine. And in the very act of celebration, hee is not carnally, but spiritually present.

Sect. 4.

The fourth Circumstance is the Time.

The time of prayer.

Quest. What are the times, in which men are to make prayers unto God?

For answer to this Question, it is first to be considered, that there is a twofold manner of praying, and consequently two kinder of prayer. The first is, the secret and sudden lifting up of the heart to God, upon the present occasion. The second is, set or solemne prayer. The first sort of prayers have of ancient times beene called ejaculations, or the darts of the heart. And the time of this kinde of prayer is not determined, but is and may be used at any time without exception. This point I make plaine by these reasons.

The first is, the commandement of God, 1 Thess. 5. 17. Pray without ceasing Eph. 6. 18. Pray alwayes, with all manner of prayer and supplication in the spirit, and watch thereunto with all perseverance—for all Saints. In both these places, by prayer and supplications, Paul understandeth the sudden lifting up of the heart unto God.

Secondly, whatsoever we speake, thinke, or doe, we must do all to the glory of God. Now God is glorified, when we doe in all things from our hearts acknowledge his power, wisdome, justice, mercie, providence, and goodnesse. And these we doe acknowledge, when we daily and hourely lift up our hearts to him in petition for some blessings, and in thanksgiving for his mercies.

Thirdly, we are subject to innumerable infirmities, frailties, and wants, so as we cannot of our selves so much as thinke one good thought: therefore we are every day & houre to lift up our hearts to God, partly in prayer, partly in giving of thankes, that he would make a daily supply by his grace.

Fourthly, Satan seekes by all meanes to overthrow our soules continually: and in that regard it behooveth us alwaies and upon every occasion to lift up our hearts to God for his mercifull protection.

Fifthly, the gift of faith must grow and increase in us day by day. And the means whereby it groweth and thrivethin us, are the exercises of faith, not seldome and rare, but daily and continually used. Now of all the exercises of faith, none is more excellent than invocation and Thanksgiving.

The second kinde of prayer, is set and solemn; when a man sets himselfe apart, to pray unto God usually and fervently: or when men come reverently and solemnly together into the congregation, to call upon the name of the Lord. The word of God appoints no set time for this kind, but leaves it to the liberty, wisdome, and discretion of men. And the ground of this libertie is this; There is now no difference betweene time and time, in regard of Conscience, for performing the worship of God, and the duties of religion, (the Sabbath onely excepted) but the principall and onely difference is in regard of outward order and conveniency, whereby one time may be thought fitter than another, and that must be discerned by the wisdome of men. In the New Testament, the distinction of dayes and houres is taken away. Paul was afraid of the Galatians, because they made difference of dayes, times, moneths, and years, in respect of holinesse and religion, Gal. 4. 10, 11.

By this doctrine, we may see what to judge of the Romane religion, touching set times of prayer. They preferibe certaine houres, which they terme Canonicall, and they distinguish them in this manner: The first, they call the Matutine, before the Sun-rising. The second, the Prime, from the first houre of the day to the third. The third, from thence to the sixth houre. The fourth, from the sixth to the ninth. The fifth, from the ninth to the twelfth, which they call the None. The sixth, is in the evening about the Sun-setting. The seventh and last, is after the Sunne-setting, which they call the Completorie. Now in these seven prescribed houres, by the doctrine delivered, I note three notable abuses.

First, in that the Popish Church binds men in conscience to observe them, upon paine of mortall sinne: Whereas in regard of Conscience, there is no difference of times. Secondly, they binde the Masse-priest, the Deacon, Subdeacon, and the Benefived man, onely to Canonicall houres: whereas those houres differ not from others, in regard of performance of Gods worship, neither are these men more bound to pray in them, than others. Thirdly, that a man may say and reade his Canonicall houres this day for the morrow, and in the morning, or after dinner, for the whole day: wherein we may see their grosse superstition.

IV. Que-

IV. Question touching prayer is,

How their mindes are to bee pacified, which are troubled by sundry accidents, that fall out in their prayers?

These Accidents are principally three.

First, when they should pray, they cannot frame or conceive a forme of prayer, as other men doe.

For removing of which trouble, lee them remember this one thing: That the unfained desire of the touched heart is a prayer in acceptance before God, though knowledge, memorie, and utterance, to frame and conceive a forme of prayer in words, be wanting, Psal. 10. 17. God hears the desire of the poore, that is, of humble persons, and them which are in distresse, Psal. 145. 19. God will fulfill the desire of them that feare him: he also will heare their crie, and will save them. Rom. 8. 26. We know not how to pray as we ought. but the spirit of God, that is, the spirit of adoption maketh request for us by groanes and sighes, which cannot be uttered. Where we may observe, that the prayer of the holy Ghost, which must needs bee an excellent prayer, is made by groanes, which cannot be uttered in words.

The second Accident is, that they finde themselves full of heavinesse and deadnesse of spirit, and their minds full of by-thoughts and wandring imaginations.

This trouble may be removed upon this ground; that the defects of our prayer shall never condemne us, if we be heartily displeased with our selves for the same; and by prayer and other good meanes, doe struggle and strive against them, Rom. 8. 1. There is no condemnation to them that bee in Christ. In which place it is not said, They doe nothing worthy of condemnation; but thus, There is no condemnation to them being in Christ, though they deserve it never so much.

The third Accident is, that though they pray, they receive not the fruit of their prayers. For the removall of this distresse, we may consider these foure things.

I. The man that is thus troubled, is to examine himselfe, whether he hath made his prayer to God aright, or no? For if he pray amisse, he may pray long and never be heard. Our Saviour would not grant the request of the soanes of Zebedeus, because they asked they knew not what, Matthew 20. 22. Iam. 4. 3. Ye aske and receive not, because ye aske amisse, that ye might consume it on your lusts. Paul prayed three times, and had the repulse, because hee asked things inconvenient for him to receive. therefore answer was made, My grace is sufficient for thee, 2 Cor. 12. The man therefore that would make a prayer aright, must have respect unto the matter and forme thereof, as also to the disposition of his owne heart: if hee faile in any of these, then God will not heare; or if hee doth, hee heares in justice.

II. Though men make lawfull prayers unto God, and aske things that are to be asked, and which God wil grant, yet God will somewhat deferre the accomplishment of their prayers, and not give eare unto them at the first. David prayed night and day, and yet was not heard, Psal. 22. 2. Againe, Mine eyes failed, his throat was drie, while he waited for his God by prayer. Psal. 69. vers. 3. The Angell Gabriel said to Zacharie, Luk. 1. vers. 13. Thy prayer is heard. Now in all likelihood, that prayer of Zacharie was made long before, even in his youth, yet it was not granted him till he was old.

The Lord deferres the grant of our requests upon good reason. For hereby he stirreth up the dulnesse of our hearts, and quickneth our faith and hope. Againe, hee makes us when wee enjoy the blessings desired, to have them in higher estimation, and to bee more thankfull unto him; yea, in the want thereof, to strive the more earnestly with him by prayer for them. The woman of Canaan was repulsed and called a dog by our Saviour Christ, not for that he intended to reject her prayer, but to stir up her faith, to make her more earnest in asking; as also more thankfull for the benefit, when shee had received it.

III. The Lord useth to grant our petitions, two manner of waies. First, by giving the very thing we aske. Secondly, by giving something answerable thereto, when he granteth not the thing it selfe. Thus Christ was heard in that which he feared, Heb. 5. vers. 7. Hee prayed to bee delivered from that cup, which notwithstanding hee dranke of. How then was hee heard? Though hee had not that which he asked, yet God granted him the thing which was proportionable to his request; namely, strength and power, whereby he was enabled to overcome the woful pangs of that death.

IV. Wee must thinke this sufficient, that we can and doe pray unto God, though we never have any request in this world granted. For by whose grace have we alwaies continued in prayer, but by the gift and grace of God? Paul in the like case was answered by God, My grace is sufficient for thee, 2 Cor. 12. 9. that is, thine infirmitie shall not be removed: content thy selfe in this, that thou art in my favour, and hast received my grace, by which thou dost withstand this temptation. To this purpose S. John saith, If we know that he heareth us, whatsoever we aske, we know that we have the petitions granted which we desired of him. 1 Joh. 5. 15. His meaning is, if we can perceive, and discerne that God listneth to our prayers, hereby we may assure our selves, that he grants our requests. Now by this we may per-perceive that he doth listen and give eare to us, because the grace whereby we pray is from him alone.

CHAP. VII.

Of the second head of Gods worship, the Hearing of the Word preached.

THus much touching the first head of outward worship, namely, prayer. Now followes the next, which is the Hearing of the Word preached.

The Questions concerning this point are of two sorts. Some conceme the Preachers of the Word, and some the Hearers. The first sort I omit, and reserve them to a more proper place.

For the second sort concerning Hearers, one Question may be moved:

How any man may profitably, to his owne comfort and salvation, heare the Word of God?

The necessitie of this Question appeares by that speciall Caveat given by our Saviour Christ, Luk. 8. vers. 18. Take heed how yee heare.

Answ. To the profitable hearing of Gods Word three things are required: Preparation before we heare, a right Disposition in hearing, and Duties to be practised afterward.

I. In Preparation, sundry Rules of direction are to be observed

First Rule. We must be swift to heare, Iam. 1. 19. And this wee shall doe by disburdening our selves of all impediments which may hinder the effectuall hearing of the Word. These impediments are especially three; all which are named by the Apostle Iames, together with their severall remedies.

The first is presumption; when the hearer presumes of his wisdome, knowledge, and abilitie to teach (if need were) his teachers. The remedie hereof is, to be slow to speake, that is, not to presume upon our owne gifts, thinking our selves better able to teach others, than to be taught by them. For so the Apostle afterwards expounds himselfe, when he saith, My brethren, be not many masters, Iam. 3. 1. Let not private persons take upon them to become instructers of other men; but as Paul saith, 1 Cor. 3. 18. If any man among you seeme to be wise, let him be a foole, that he may be wise: that is, let him be willing to learne, even of his inferiours. And in this regard, let him follow the practice of Naaman, who submitted himselfe to the advice and counsell of his maid.

The second impediment is troubled affections, specially rash anger, either against the Teacher or others. The remedie of this also is laid downe in the place before alleaged, Be slow to wrath, v. 19. The third is superfluity of maliciousnesse, that is; the abundance of evill corruptions and sinnes, which hearers shall by experience finde in their owne hearts and lives. This impediment hath many branches, principally three. 1. Hardnesse of heart, noted by the stony ground, in the parable of the sower, Matthew 13. 20. 2. The Cares of the world, signified by the thornie ground, v. 22. 3. The itching eare, 2 Tim. 4. 3. when a man will heare no other doctrine, but that which is sutable to corrupt nature, not being willing to frame his heart to the word, but to have the word framed to his wicked heart.

The remedies of this impediment are these. First, every hearer of the Word must lay apart all superfluity of malicionsnesse, that is, cut off as much as in him lieth all corruptions both of heart and life. Hence it is, that God speaketh thus to the wicked man, Psal. 50. 16. What hast thou to doe, to take my word in thy mouth, seeing thou hatest to be reformed, and hast cast my words behinde thee? To this purpose the Prophet Ieremie exhorteth the Jewes to be circumcised to the Lord, and to take away the fore-skins of their hearts, &c. Ier. 4. 4. And Moses by Gods commandement was to sanctifie the people three daies, before they came to heare the Law delivered by himselfe in Mount Sinai, Exod. 19. 11. Againe, every man will and ought to have a care to prepare himselfe more or lesse to the receiving of the Lords Supper: which duty is as well to be performed before the hearing of the word, considering that in substance it differeth not from the Sacraments, they being the visible, and preaching the audible voice of God. Secondly, every hearer must receive the word with meekenes, that is, with quietnes submit himselfe to the word of God in all things, Isa. 57. 15. I dwell with him that is of an humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, &c.

The second Rule of Preparation. Wee must lift up our hearts in prayer to God, that he would give us the hearing eare. This hearing eare is a gift of God, enabling the heart when it heareth, to conceive and understand the doctrine taught, and to yeeld obedience thereunto.

The third Rule. The hearer must in hearing set himselfe in the presence of God. Now therefore (saith Cornelius to Peter, Act. 10. 33.) are we all here present before God, to heare all things commanded thee of God. The reason is, because God is alwaies in the congregation where the Word is preached.

II. The second thing required to profitable hearing, is a right disposition. Wherein two rules are to be observed.

First, when the Word of God is in delivering, every hearer must heare with judgment. But some will say, many Preachers bewray faults and infirmities in their preaching. To this Paul answereth notwithstanding, Despise not prophecie, 2 Thes. 5. 20. Yea, but what if they deliver untruths? Paul answers againe, in the next verse, Try all things, and keepe that which is good: and Saint John to the like purpose, 1 Iohn 4. Believe not every spirit, but trie the spirits whether they be of God.

Here by the way wee must remember one cavear. There bee three kindes of judgement. The first is private, whereby every private person may judge of the doctrine which is taught; For hee must not heare, hand over head, but judge of that which he heareth. Of this Saint Paul speakes to the Corinth. Judge ye what I say, 1 Cor. 10. 5. The second is, the judgement of the Prophet or Minister: And this is a surer kinde of judgement than the former, proceeding from a greater measure of Gods grace. The third is, the judgement of the holy Ghost in Scripture; and this is sovereigne and absolute. For the holy Ghost judgeth all, and is judged of none. These three kindes of judgement are set in this order. The first depends upon the second, the second upon the third, and the third is absolute and judged of none.

Upon this caveat, two things doe follow; First, that a private hearer, though hee may judge of doctrine delivered, yet hee may not censure the Teacher, or his Ministerie. Ministers are to bee judged, but their spirit is not subject to every private man; but to the Prophets: for the spirit of the Prophets, that is, the doctrine which the Prophets bring, being inspired by the Holy Ghost, is subject to the Prophets, 1 Cor. 14. 32. Secondly, a private man is not to publish or broach any point of doctrine, but that which is plainly propounded in the word, and taught by the Ministers thereof. This is a necessary rule; and the want of observation thereof, is the cause of many schismes and heresies in the Church. The Lord commands the people, Mal. 2. 7. To require the Law at the mouth of the Priest in all maine points of faith and manners.

The second rule to be observed in hearing: Every hearer must have care that the word of God be rooted and grounded in his heart, like good seed in good ground: which Saint Iames expresseth, Iam. 1. 21. receive with meekenesse the ingrafted word. Here generally it is to be remembred, that not only ignorant people, but even the most learned ought to be hearers of the word preached. For the preaching thereof serves not only for the increasing of knowledge, but also for the reformation of the affection, which may bee inordinate, where knowledge doth abound.

Now for the rooting of the word of God in our hearts, sundry things are required.

First, a true and right understanding thereof.

Secondly, it must bee mingled with faith, Heb. 4. 1. For the word is as wine, or water of life; our faith is the sugar that sweeteth it, and gives it a pleasant relish. The word therefore must be tempered, and mixed with our faith, that it may become profitable unto us. Now in this mixture, there is required a double faith: the first generall, whereby we beleeve the doctrine delivered to be true, so as we never call the same into question; Our Gospel to you (saith Paul) was in much assurance. 1 Thess. 1. 5. The second speciall, whereby we apply the word preached unto our selves, for the humbling and comforting of our hearts.

Thirdly, wee must labour to be affected with the word. Thus Iosiah his heart is said to melt at the reading of the Law, 2 Chron. 34. 27. And the people rejoyced greatly, because they understood the word which the Levites had taught them, Neh. 8. 12. The hearts of the two disciples that went to Emmaus, burned within them, when Christ opened unto them the Scriptures, Luk. 24. 32. And the Jewes at Peters sermon were pricked in their hearts, and said, Men and brethren, what shall we doe? Act. 2. 37.

Fourthly, the Word of God must dwell plenteously in us, Col. 3. 16. This it doth when it rules, and beares the greatest sway in the heart, and is not overturned by any corrupt affection.

III. The duties to bee performed after Hearing, are these.

First, the doctrine delivered must be treasured up in the heart, and practised in life, Psal. 119. 11. I have hid thy word in my heart, that I might not sinne against thee.

Secondly, a man must meditate on the word which he hath heard, with lifting up of his heart unto God. The beasts that were cloven footed, and chewed the cud, were fitteth both for meat unto man, and for sacrifice to God, Lev. 11. It was the old and ancient opinion of the Church, that this chewing the cud signified holy meditations. And he that heares the Word, must doe as the beast doth, fetch up the meat out of his bellie againe, and chew it over anew. The man that doth so, is the fittest for the Lords use.

Thirdly, he must have experience of the word of God in himselfe, Psal. 34. 9 Taste and see how gracious the Lord is.

Fourthly, hee is to examine himselfe after he hath heard the word. Thus David saith of himselfe, Psal. 119. 59. I have considered my waies, and turned my feet unto thy testimonies.

Fifthly, he must be obedient unto it, and testifie his obedience, though not at all times, yet whensoever occasion is offered: Iam. 1. 22. Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers onely; deceiving your owne selves.

II. Question touching Hearers is,

How are they to be comforted, who after long hearing of the word, either profit very little, or not at all?

For

For resolution of this Question, the Causes of not profiting are distinctly to be considered. And they are of two sorts.

The first sort of Causes are the sinnes of the hearers. And that sinnes are the causes of not profiting, it will appeare by this signe; if the memory, understanding, and other parts of the minde in common matters bee strong and pregnant, but dull and weake in apprehending and retaining the doctrine taught. Now these sinnes are principally two.

First, Hardnesse of heart, when a man is not inwardly moved and affected with the word preached, but remaines in the same state hee was before. This is set forth by the hard ground that is by the high way side, and by the stony ground, Matth. 13.4.5. And such is the heart that is not moved nor affected either with joy, sorrow, feare or consolation. The hardnesse of heart ariseth from a custome in sinning, and from the deceitfulnesse of sin, Heb. 3.13.

Secondly, worldly cares, that is, a heart possessed with desires of profit, pleasures, honours, preferments, and such like; which be as thornes that choake the seed of the word, and suffer it not to grow and fructifie; yea, that fill the heart full of wandring imaginations, which steale away the minde from attending to the word preached. Those that are thus hindred from profiting, are rather to be reproved, than comforted: for that the cause of their non-profitencie is in and from themselves. They are therefore to use all good meanes for the removall of their sinnes, that of hard hearted and carnall, they may become good and profitable hearers of the word. The meanes are these.

First, they must labour to bee touched in heart, with sense and feeling of their spirituall povertie, and want of Gods favour and mercie in the pardon of their sinnes. The reason is given of David; Psal. 25.9. The Lord teacheth the humble his waies: And by Mary in her song, Luk. 1.53. He hath filled the hungry with good things, and the rich hee hath sent empite away. The second meanes is, to heare the word of God with an honest heart, joyned with a constant purpose of not sinning. The third, to be as carefull to bring good affections, as a good understanding. For affections are the feet that carrie the heart, and Salomon bids us to take heed to our feet, when we enter into the house of God, Eccles. 4.17. They are the very key of knowledge and memorie, and therefore David sayes, The secret of the Lord is revealed to those that feare him, and his covenant is to give them understanding, Psal. 25.14. And that which he saith of Feare, may be said also of other good affections.

The second sort of Causes, are ordinary and usuall defects of naturall gifts; as of capacitie, or conceit, of memorie, and understanding. For all men have not the like gifts of nature, and therefore all men cannot reap like benefit by the Word preached. These wants may bee discerned thus; If the minde and memorie bee weake or wanting, as well in common worldly matters, as in divine things that belong to Gods kingdome. And to this kind of men, which are thus troubled for not profiting, there belongeth comfort; yet not simply, but upon these conditions. First, if they know the principall grounds of religion. Secondly, if they have care to profit and increase in knowledge. Thirdly, if they live according to the measure of their knowledge in obedience to Gods will. These being observed, such parties are to comfort themselves in this, that God in mercie will accept of their endevour, forgive their ignorance, and beare with their infirmities. This is to bee seene in the example of Peter, whose faith was highly commended by Christ, when he said, the gates of hell should not prevaile against it, Matth. 16. 16. And yet at that very time, Peter was ignorant of many maine points of Religion, as of the death, resurrection, and ascension of Christ. And in his person, the other Disciples are commended also for their faith, because they held Christ to be the Messias and Saviour of the world, though they were ignorant of the manner of his redemption, thinking he should have beene an earthly King, Act 1. Againe, the want of knowledge in such as have naturall defects, may be supplied by good affection, if they be not wanting in an honest heart, and carefull endevour of godly life. Thus the Church of the Jewes in the old Testament did farre exceed the Church of the new in good affection, though it came farre short of it in knowledge and apprehension.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Sacraments in generall, the receiving, and use of them.

In the next place follow the Questions of conscience touching the third part of Gods Outward worship, namely, the Sacraments; and these concerne either the administration, or the receiving of them. The Administration I will here let passe, and handle those Questions onely that concerne the receiving and use thereof, both in generall and in particular.

Touching the receiving of the Sacraments in generall, there is one onely Question:

Whether the Sacraments ministred by Heretickes, Idolaters, and unsufficient Ministers, be Sacraments or no?

For answer hereunto, wee are to know, there are three sorts of men that may administer the Sacraments. Some are true and lawfull full Ministers, lawfully called by God and man to that function, keeping the right forme of the Sacrament according to the institution. Some againe are meere private persons, that have no authoritie at all to administer, whom we may oppose to the former sort, as contrarie to them in this action. Others againe bee admitted to stand in the roome of lawfull Ministers, by the acceptation and consent of men, or by custome, though corrupt: and these are in a meane betweene the two former sorts. Of the first there is no question. But the Sacrament administred by the second sort is a meere nullitie, because they have no calling thereto, neither can they doe it of faith: for as much as they have neither precept nor example out of the word of God. Now for the third sort, though they be not indeed lawfull Pastors; yet being in the place of such, by the consent, allowance, and custome of men, though corrupt, their action is of force, and the Sacrament which is administred by them, is indeed a true Sacrament; which I prove by these reasons:

First, the preaching of the Word, and administration of the Sacrament are all one in substance. For in the one the will of God is seene, in the other heard. Now the word preached by Heretickes is the true word of God, and may have his effect. The Scribes and Pharisies, great Doctors of the Jewes, were not all of the Tribe of Levi, but descended from other Tribes. Againe, even the principall of them lived by extortion and buberie, and were wicked men, yea Heretickes and Apostataes, deposed and excommunicated persons. And yet because they occupied the places of good teachers, and sate in the chaire of Moses, that is, read the doctrine of Moses Law, Christ biddeth his Disciples to heare them, Matth. 23.2. provided only that they tooke heed of the leaven of their false doctrine & wicked life. Now if the word taught by their ministerie was powerfull, why may not the Sacraments ministred by the Heretickes standing in the roome of the true Ministers, bee true Sacraments? In the dayes of Paul, Phil. 1.15. some preached Christ through envie and strife, and some of good will: what was the Apostles judgement in this case? Himselfe answereth, vers. 18. What then? yet Christ is preached all manner of wayes, whether it be under a pretence, or sincerely, and therein I joy, yea, and will joy.

Secondly; this point is plaine by examples. The Levitical Priests under the Law were Heretickes, and taught altogether the breach of the Morall Law. Yea, they held Justification by works, Rom. 10.3. and yet Circumcision by them administred was in force; neither was the Passeover celebrated by them, or the sacrifices which they offered, any other than the true Passeover, and true sacrifices. Judas was a verie hypocrite, yea, Christ calls him a Devill, Joh. 6.70. and yet hee preached the word at Christs commandement, and baptized with the rest of his Disciples, Joh. 4. vers. 1, 2.

Thirdly, the Sacrament, if it bee administred in the name and by the power of Christ, is the ordinance of God, being received by faith, yea, a true Sacrament of Christ; and the force and efficacie thereof doth not depend upon the worthinesse of the Minister, but upon Christ. The letters or Epistle sent from one man to another are authenticall, and serve fully to expresse the minde of the author, though the messenger or carrier bee a wicked or a naughtie man. And in like manner, the sinne of any man that stands in the roome of a lawfull Minister, doth not nullifie the Sacrament, and therefore not hereof is insufficiencie. S. Cyprian, who lived neere 300 yeares after Christ, was of this opinion, that Sacraments administred by Heretickes were no Sacraments. But the Churches of Africa in those times concluded a contrarie d. against him, according to the doctrine that hath been delivered.

The Vse. 1. By this doctrine they are justly to be blamed, who would have their children re-baptized, which were before baptized by the Popish Priests; because the Sacrament, though administred by a Papist, if he stand in the roome of a true Pastor, and keepe the forme thereof, is a true Sacrament. 11. Others by this doctrine come to be reproved, that refuse to receive the Sacraments at the hands of unpreaching Ministers. For though the Minister bee unsufficient and preach not, yet if hee bee called by the Church, he hath the place of a lawfull Pastor, his administration is warrantable, and the Sacrament by him administred a true Sacrament.

If it be said, that then the true Sacraments may bee out of the true Church, as in the Church of Rome at this day, because Heretickes and such like Ministers are not of the Church; I answer, that there is in the Church of Rome the hidden Church of God, and the Sacraments are there used, not for the Romish Church, but for the hidden Church, which is in the middest of Papacie: like as the lanthorne begareth light not for it selfe, but for the passengers: yet hence it followes not, that we should communicate with Idolaters, Heretickes, and wicked persons.

And so much of the administration of the Sacraments in generall. I come now to the particular Sacraments.

CHAP. IX.

Of Baptisme.

The first Sacrament in order is Baptisme: And the Questions touching it, I reduce to five heads.

I. Question.

Whether Baptisme bee necessarie to Salvation, or no?

For answer to this Question, wee must rightly distinguish of necessitie. A thing is said to be necessarie two manner of wayes; either absolutely and simply, or in part. Absolutely necessarie is that, which is in all respects necessarie, and the contrarie whereof is utterly unnecessarie. Necessarie in part is that, which in some respects, or upon certaine causes and considerations is necessarie. This distinction premised, I answer:

Sect. 1.

How Baptisme is necessarie, and why?

First, that Baptisme is necessarie the second way, in part and respectively, that is, in divers and sundrie regards.

I. As the lawfull use thereof is a note, whereby the true Church of God is discerned and distinguished from the false Church. Not that the Church of God cannot bee a Church without the Sacrament; for it may want Baptisme for a time, and yet remaine a true Church, as well as the Church of the Jewes in ancient times wanted circumcision for the space of fortie yeares, Iosh. 5.6. and yet ceased not to bee a true Church and loved of God.

II. As it serves for necessarie uses and purposes to men of yeares, that are to bee baptized: as first, to testifie unto the Church and themselves, that they are received into the bodie of Christ, which is the company and societie of the faithfull. Secondly, to testifie their obedience to Gods commandement, and their subjection to his ordinance appointed by him for their good. Thirdly, to bee a necessarie prop to uphold their weaknesse, a seale to confirme their faith in the covenant of grace, and an instrument to convey Christ unto them with all his benefits.

III. It is necessarie to infants, as it serves to enter and admit them into the visible Church, and withall to signifie their interest in the covenant of grace, and consequently their right and title to life everlasting.

Sect. 2.

How Baptisme is not necessarie, and why?

Secondly, I answer, that Baptisme is not absolutely or simply necessarie, so as the partie that dies without it, remaines in the state of damnation, and cannot be saued. My reasons are these:

I. Baptisme is appointed by God, to bee no more but a seale annexed unto, and depending upon the covenant: therefore wee must put a difference betweene it and the covenant.

The covenant of grace, and our being in Christ, is absolutely necessarie: for no man, woman, or childe can be saved, unlesse they have God for their God. But the signe therof is not. For look as to the essence of a bargaine, the consent and agreement of the parties alone is of meere necessitie required; and this being yeelded, the bargaine is a bargaine, though it bee neither sealed, subscribed, nor confirmed by witnes; so likewise a man may be saved, if he be within the covenant of grace, though hee have not received the seale and signe thereof, the Sacrament of baptisme.

II. The bare want or privation of baptisme (when it cannot bee had) is pardonable, and doth not condemne the partie unbaptized. The theefe upon the crosse was saved, though hee was never baptized, Luk. 23. And sundrie Martyrs in former times, who were Gods deare children, and died for the maintenance of his truth, though they wanted the outward and visible baptisme, yet by Gods mercie they were not destitute of the inward, and consequently were not condemned, but saved. And so, many children under the Law died before the eighth day uncircumcised. Yea, when any among them were weake, and could not endure to have the foreskin of their flesh cut, in probabilitie their circumcision was deferred, and some of them died in the meane time: which nevertheless being borne of beleeving parents, were undoubtedly saved, according to the promise of God made to Abraham, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed. For as Christ saith of the Sabbath, so may we say of circumcision; It was made for man, and not man for it. And it were a judgement both rash and uncharitable, to thinke that all the males of the children of Israel that died before circumcision were condemned.

Yet on the other side, the wilfull contempt and careleſse neglect of this ordinance, when it may conveniently bee administred and received, is deadly and damnable. And to them that are guiltie of this sinne, is the threat of God justly denounced, Gen. 17.14. Even that person shall be cut off from his people.

III. The grace and mercie of God is free, and not tied or bound to the outward elements. Iob. 3.8. The wind bloweth where it listeth, that is, God gives grace, and vouchsafeth favour, to whom, where, and when it pleaseth him. And hence it is, that they whom hee would not have perish, but come to eternall life, shall be saved, though they be not partakers of this Sacrament.

IV. Infants borne of beleeving parents are holy before baptisme, and baptisme is but a seale of that holinesse, 1 Corinth. 7.14. The children of beleeving parents are holy. Rom. 11.16. If the first fruits be holy, so is the whole lump; and if the root be holy, so are the brunches. Yea, to them belongs the kingdome of heaven as well as to others. Christ saith, Suffer little children, &c. for to them belongeth the kingdome of heaven, Mark. 10.14.

It is alleaged, that those which are sanctified fied have faith, which infants have not. Ans. God saith, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed. By vertue of this promise, the parent layes hold on the covenant for himselfe and for his childe, and the childe beleeves because the father beleeves.

It is objected againe, that infants are borne in originall sinne, and therefore cannot bee borne holy and sanctified. Answ. Everie beleeving parent sustaines a double person. First, as he is a man descending of Adam, by corrupted seed, and thus being himselfe corrupted and unclean, his children also are corrupt and impure. Secondly, as he is an holy and beleeving man, ingrafted by faith into Christ the second Adam. And thus by his faith comes his childe to bee in the covenant, and partaker of the benefits and privileges thereof; and by the same faith hee being a beleever, the guilt of originall corruption which is in the infant new borne, is not imputed unto him to condemnation. And for these causes the Sacrament of Baptisme is not absolutely and precisely necessarie to salvation, but so and in that sort as hath beene declared.

Against this doctrine it is objected, that Christ saith to Nicodemus, Except a man bee borne of water and the Holy Ghost, hee cannot enter into the kingdome of God, Ioh. 3.5.

To this objection sundrie answers are given. First, if the place be understood of Baptisme, then the words may carrie one of those two senses. First, that our Saviour directs this speech principally against Nicodemus, who was a timorous professour, and remained ignorant, and had long neglected his baptisme. Secondly, that the kingdome of heaven is here put, not for everlasting happinesse, but to signifie the visible estate of the Church of the new Testament; and then the meaning is, no man can be admitted into the Church, and made a visible member thereof, but by the water of baptisme: neither can any man bee made a lively member of Christ Jesus, but by the Spirit, that is, by regeneration, which alone makes the partie that is entred into the Church by baptisme, to bee a lively member of the bodie of Christ. Secondly, others answer, that this place is to bee understood not of Baptisme, but simply of regeneration, and that Christ alludes to the sayings of the Prophets, which speake of cleane water, Exod. 36.25. and expounds the same in this sort; Thou Nicodemus, art by profession a Pharisie, and usest many outward washings: but know this withall, that unlesse thou bee washed inwardly by cleane water, that is, bee regenerated and renewed by the HolyGhost, thou canst not enter into Gods kingdome. Lastly, it is answered, that the necessitie of salvation lies not in both, but only in the new birth by the Holy Ghost; as if Christ should say, Except ye be regenerate and borne anew of the Spirit, which as cleane water purgeth and cleanseth you from your sins, yee cannot be saved.

The Vse. By this doctrine touching the necessitie of Baptisme, are justly challenged two sorts of men.

The first is the Popish sort, who build the absolute necessitie of Baptisme upon false and unstable grounds. For they teach in their writings, that all men are borne in sinne and corruption, and unlesse they be cleansed from it they can never be saved. Now Baptisme (they say) is appointed by God, as the only remedie and sole meanes whereby they may bee purged from sinne, and come to salvation. And this they shew by a comparison of Baptisme with the brazen Serpent: which as it was the only remedie for the cure of those which were stinged by serpents, so is this Sacrament the only meanes set apart by God, to keepe them that are partakers thereof, from the sting of death and eternall destruction.

But the answer is plaine out of the former doctrine; That though all men bee conceived and borne in sinne, and cannot enter into the kingdome of heaven, except they bee cleansed; yet Baptisme is not of absolute necessitie for this purpose. For it is not appointed by God, as the only remedie of this evill, but only to bee a signe and signification of the purging and cleansing of sinne, by the bloud of Christ. Now those that are within the Covenant may have their sinnes remitted by the mercie of God, and that according to the forme of the Covenant, though they receive not the signe thereof; so bee it they doe not wilfully contemne nor neglect the same when it may bee had. Against the Serpent lifted up by Moses, in it selfe and by it owne vertue was a bare signe, and was no remedie to cure the diseased Israelites: but they were cured by their faith in the word of Gods promise annexed unto the signe: according to which David saith, Hee sent his word and healed them. Psal. 107. 20. And to the same effect Augustine saith, That the cure and health of the Israelites came not from the Serpent, but from Gods commandement obeyed, and his promise beleeved. And so is Baptisme a remedie, and no otherwise.

Lib. de mirab. Scripturæ. 33. Non in serpente, sed in Domini imperio & promisso, &c.

The second is, the common ignorant sort of people, who thinke that an infant dying without baptisme, dies without christendom; and that it cannot possibly be a Christian, unlesse it be baptized. This their opinion is verie erroneous. For by it they make baptisme the seale of the covenant, to be as necessarie as the covenant it selfe. Whereas on the contrarie, baptisme is not simply and absolutely necessarie, so as the partie dying without it cannot bee saved, but only in part, as it serves to distinguish the true Church from the false, to be a necessarie signe of our admission & entrance into the Church; yea, to confirme our faith in the promise of God. Neither is baptisme of force to make a Christian, but only to signifie and declare a man to bee a Christian, by being within the covenant of grace.

II. Question.

Whether witnesses, which we commonly call Godfathers and Godmothers, bee necessarie?

To this there are given two answers.

First, that the use of Godfathers and Godmothers is not simply necessarie to the Sacrament of Baptisme. For first, it seemes that of ancient times the parents of children which were Heathens, and newly converted to Christian Religion, were either ignorant and could not, or careleſſe and would not bring up their children agreeably to the word of God, and the Religion which they newly profeſſed. And hence it was thought meet, that ſome perſons of good knowledge and life ſhould bee called to witneſſe the Baptiſme, and promiſe their care for their childrens education. But now parents among us being better taught and qualified, the other is not of ſuch neceſſitie. Secondly, Chriſt hath inſtituted and ordained in his Word, all things fit, convenient, and neceſſarie unto lawfull Baptiſme, amongſt all which hee hath not any where expreſſly preſcribed the uſe of Sureties. Thirdly, the whole congregation aſſembled together at the adminiſtration of this Sacrament, doe preſent the childe to the Lord, and are witneſſes that the childe is admitted into the Church, and is externally in the Covenant. And therefore I take it to bee a fault, when the congregation doth depart before the childe bee baptized. Fourthly, that which is required of them to promiſe and performe, may, yea muſt and ought to bee performed by the parents of the baptized, who are by the word of God to bring up their children in the feare of God.

The ſecond anſwer is, that though ſuch perſons are not neceſſarie to the eſſence of Baptiſme, yet they are not ſimply to be rejected; this alway preſuppoſed, that they be fit men, and well qualified. Their fitneſſe ſtands in foure things.

First, that they be of yeares of diſcretion, ſufficient to undertake ſuch a charge. And therefore it is a fault, when children are called to bee Godfathers and Godmothers, which neither are come to yeares of diſcretion, nor able to conſider what they doe, or ought to doe.

Secondly, that they have at leaſt ſome knowledge and underſtanding, not only in generall of the principles and grounds of religion, but alſo of the nature and end of the Sacrament, and of the ſubſtance of the promiſe wherewith they binde themſelves in the behalfe of their Godchildren. It was in ancient times required of ſuch perſons, as were to bee witneſſes, that they ſhould know and underſtand the Creed, and the Lords prayer. Therefore thoſe are juſtly to bee blamed, that call ſuch perſons to bee witneſſes to their children, which though they have yeares ſufficient, yet they have little or no knowledge of the grounds of the Catechiſme, or of the bond whereby they oblige themſelves for the good and godly education of the infants in time to come.

Thirdly, that they be known to be of an honeſt and reformed life, not juſtly chargeable of impietie, incivilitie, or diſhoneſtie: that by their example the children may in time to come bee drawen to holineſſe of life and converſation. For how can hee that is of a diſſolute and wicked life, bee able to bring others committed to his charge, to the embracing of true religion?

Fourthly, that they be carefull to performe their promiſe made in the face of the Church, for the good education and inſtruction of the childe in the feare of God, ſpecially when the parents be negligent and careleſſe in that behalfe.

Now the reaſons why theſe Sureties are not to be ſimply rejected, if they be qualified, as hath beene ſaid, are theſe: I. Becauſe this cuſtome though it be not directly grounded upon Scripture, yet it is not repugnant thereunto. For being rightly uſed and kept, it tendeth to the furtherance of religion and godlineſſe in particular families, and conſequently to the edification of the Church. II. It is no new thing, but an ancient commendable practice, continued in the Church of God above the ſpace of 120. yeares. III. Becauſe theſe parties doe ſupply the deſect of naturall parents when they be wanting, either by death, or by negligence while they live; if they bee anſwerable to their promiſe made in the behalfe of the children, touching the things that belong to their ſalvation.

Yet further touching theſe perſons, three queſtions are moved.

I. Q. What dutie are they to doe in the behalfe of the partie baptized?

Anſ. Papiſts teach, that the principall and proper act of the Suretie is, the taking of the infant baptized from the hands of the Prieſt, into his owne armes and cuſtodie. But this, though it bee an action neither good nor evill, yet conſidering it may as well be done by another as by him, and the doing of it by another is no whit prejudiciall to the end for which ſuch perſons were firſt appointed in the Church, namely, the good education of infants baptized, it cannot bee the principall dutie of the Suretie.

But the things required of them are eſpecially theſe:

I. To be ſpeciall witneſſes of the admiſſion and entrance of the parte baptized into the Church of God.

II. To

II. To binde themſelves by ſolemne promiſe, in the name of the childe, before the whole Church aſſembled, that they will bee carefull ſo ſoone as hee comes to yeares of diſcretion, that hee be brought up in the feare and ſervice of God, and bee inſtructed in the principles of faith and repentance, and acquainted with the promiſe made by them in his behalfe, that he may frame his life thereafter.

III. To have ſpeciall care of the performance of their promiſe, that by all good meanes which God hath appointed, both publike, as hearing the Word, and receiving the Sacraments; and private, as exhortations and admonitions, in time to come hee ſhall bee moved and incited to forſake the Devill, &c. and to pay his vowes made at his Baptiſme.

II. Q. Whether children baptized come to bee of ſpirituall kindred with the whole Church, by reaſon of their Godfathers and Godmothers?

The Papiſts anſwer, yea, and they explane their anſwer in this maner: Looke as by carnall propagation a man hath naturall being; ſo by the Sacrament of Baptiſme he hath a ſpirituall being in the ſtate of grace, according to which he is borne againe. Now, as by carnall propagation ariſeth a bond of kindred betweene one man and another: ſo by the receiving of Baptiſme there ariſeth a bond of kindred betweene the members of the Church; by meanes whereof, the Sureties become as fathers and mothers to the parties baptized.

Wee on the other ſide anſwer negatively, that perſons baptized doe not by their Baptiſme become ſpiritually akin to the Church. Now that this is the truth, and the contrarie doctrine of the Papiſts erroneous, will appeare by theſe reaſons:

I. The Sacrament it ſelfe doth not give a ſpirituall being to any man that is partaker thereof; neither is it of force to make a man a Chriſtian, or a member of the inviſible Church of God. But that which doth this, is the Covenant of grace, wherein is promiſed remiſſion of ſinnes, and life eternall, in and by Chriſt. And the Sacrament is only a ſeale of that covenant, and no more.

Now if baptiſme cannot make a Chriſtian, much leſſe can it give unto him a ſpirituall being in the bodie of Chriſt, and conſequently any ſuch ſpirituall alliance, whereby one member may bee allied unto another.

II. There is not the ſame reaſon of baptiſme, that is of carnall propagation or birth. For baptiſme is not regeneration it ſelfe, but the Sacrament, that is, the ſigne and ſeale of regeneration. And therefore though naturall kindred comes by carnall ſeed and birth, yet ſpirituall kindred cannot come to any by baptiſme. III. The Scripture mentions only two ſorts of kindred, and no more; the one, which ariſeth properly from ſocietie and communion of bloud, which wee call Conſanguinitie; the other, which comes by carnall conjunction of man and woman in the eſtate of marriage, commonly termed Affinitie. And beſides theſe, the Scripture acknowledgeth none.

If it bee ſaid, that God is the father of all beleevers, and that they are his ſonnes and daughters, and Chriſt their elder brother: and therefore there muſt needs be a ſpirituall alliance betweene them all: I anſwer, it is true: but that this kindred hath his originall from baptiſme, and beginneth with that relation that is betweene the Sureties and their God-children in that Sacrament, it is a Papiſt invention, deviſed by the wit of man, without ground or warrant in the word of God.

III. Q. But bee it, that the Papiſts opinion were true, then a further queſtion may be moved:

Whether ſpirituall kindred contracted by Baptiſme, can be a juſt impediment of marriage betweene the witneſſes themſelves, or their children?

The Papiſts in their writings anſwer, that ſpirituall alliance being farre more excellent than carnall, is of much more force, both to hinder a man from marriage before hee marrie, and to breake off marriage when it is conſummate.

Lib ſent. 4. diſt. 41. quæſt. 1. impedit contrahendum matrimonium, & dirimit contractum, Bell. de matr. lib. 1. cap. 30.

But this doctrine (as the former) is not warrantable. For firſt, they themſelves affirme, that this impediment doth not depend upon the Law of Nature, but upon the judgement of the Church. But the eſtate of marriage ſtands by Gods ordinance, who hath given libertie of entrance into it to all men, that are out of the degrees forbidden in his Law without exception: and therefore the lawes and conſtitutions of men cannot prejudice, or take away mans libertie in that behalfe.

Secondly, all beleevers are brethren and ſiſters in Chriſt, and therefore are ſpiritually allied each to other. Now if this ſpirituall alliance be polluted by marriage, or makes marriage undertaken a meere nullitie, then no beleever ſhall marrie in the Lord: for Chriſtians by this meanes muſt never match with Chriſtians, but with Pagans and Infidels.

Thirdly, this impediment is a ſuperſtitious invention of Popiſh Canoniſts, only to increaſe the treaſurie of their Church, by their multitude of diſpenſations. And it ſeemes that they are either aſhamed of it, or wearie to beare the imputation thereof. For ſome of their owne Canons are againſt it, which doe allow Godfathers children to marrie, and a man to marrie his Godfathers wife. And the Councell of Trent hath drawen this affinitie into a narrow compaſſe, which before was ſo farre inlarged, allowing the Witneſſes themſelves to bee man and wife, not urging all all the three kindes of kinred, but only some degrees of compaternitie.

III. Question touching Baptisme.

Whether children of excommunicate persons, which are cast out, and not holden as members of the Church, have right to Baptisme?

For better resolving of this question, the ground of the answer is first to be laid downe, and then the answer shall orderly be made.

There are two Texts of Scripture commonly alleaged, concerning the forbearance and use of Excommunication. The first is Matth. 18. the second is 1 Corinth. 5. The scope of them both is to shew, that the man which is excommunicated is barred from the Kingdome of Heaven. For hee is not to bee holden a true member of the Church, but as an Heathen and a Publican: and therefore is put out of Gods Kingdome, and delivered up to Satan. Of this weight is Excommunication.

Now in Excommunication there are three judgements to bee considered. The first, of God: the second, of the Church: the third againe, of God.

The first is, when God doth hold any obstinate sinner guiltie of his offence, and consequently guiltie of condemnation, unlesse he repent. This is the first sentence. The second is, the judgement of Gods Church upon the offender, after that God hath holden him guiltie. For the judgement of the Church followeth the judgement of God, and doth indeed nothing, but pronounce the partie guiltie and subject to condemnation. And the difference betweene them both is only this; That God holds the offender guiltie, and the Church declareth him so to be. Now the second judgement is not to bee given absolutely, but with condition of repentance, and so farre forth, as man can judge by the fault committed, as also by the word, which gives direction, how to discerne of the impenitencie of the sinner. The third and last judgement is Gods, whereby he ratifies and confirmes that in heaven, which the Church hath done on earth: and this in order followes the second.

This ground being laid downe, I come now to the answer.

First therefore, the parties excommunicate are in some respects no members of Christs bodie, and in some respects they are.

They are not in two regards. First, in that they are cut off from the company of beleevers, by lawfull excommunication, & so have no participation with them, either in prayer, hearing the Word, or receiving the Sacraments. The reason is, for that the action of the Church stands in force, God ratifying that in heaven, which the Church doth upon earth. Secondly, because by their sinne they have (as much as in them lieth) deprived themselves of the effectuall power of Gods spirit, which might rule and governe them.

But in other respects they are members, as will appeare, if we consider the divers sorts of members.

Some are members not actually, and in present, but in the eternall counsell of God, and are to be in time when they shall be called. Thus was Paul before his conversion, and therefore he sayes of himselfe, that God had separated him from his mothers wombe, and called him by his grace, Gal. 1. 15. Also of himselfe and other beleevers he sayes, When we were enemies, were reconciled to God, by the death of his Son, Rom. 5. 10. Some againe are members only in shew and appearance; of which sort are hypocrites, which seeme by their outward profession, to be that they are not in deed: wherein they resemble the wooden leg that is cunningly fastened to the bodie, but indeed is no leg, nor part of the body, whereto it is adjoyned. A third sort are lively members, which are united unto Christ by faith, and have fellowship with God in him, being justified, sanctified, governed and preserved by his spirit; and whall doe feele, and shew forth the power of the same spirit dwelling in them. Of these Paul speaketh, Rom. 8. 14. As many as are led by the spirit of God, they are the sons of God. The fourth sort are decayed members, which though they belong to Gods election, and are plants truly ingrafted into the vine Christ Jesus, yet for the present, have not a lively sense of the power and vertue of the spirit of Christ in them. These may fitly be resembled to the leg of a man, or some other part, that hath the dead palsie, which though it remaine for some time without feeling, and uncapable of nourishment, yet being joyned to the body, it may by vertue of some strong medicine be recovered, and made whole as the other.

Of this sort are excommunicate persons. For in regard of their ingrafting, they are true members, and cannot bee quite cut off from the bodie of Christ, Iob. 10. 28. though otherwise they are not holden so to bee, in a threefold respect.

One in regard of men, because they are excluded from their holy Communion with the faithfull, by the Churches censure. The second, in regard of God, because that which the Church rightly bindeth on earth, is bound in heaven. The third, in regard of themselves, because for a time they want the power and efficacie of the Spirit, untill they be thorowly touched with repentance, and begin (as it were) to live againe.

Now, though in these respects, they bee not esteemed members of the Church, yet the truth is, they are notwholly cut off from the societie of the faithfull. For the seed of faith remaineth in them, and that knits the bond bond of conjunction with Christ, though the fruit thereof bee lost, untill they repent.

In this case, the partie excommunicate is, as a free man in bonds, who untill he get out of prison, hath no use of his freedome, and yet continues a free-man still, though he remaine in prison. So also the children of God may still be the children of God, though excluded from the congregation of the Church, for some offences.

From this that hath beene said, ariseth the Answer to the Question propounded; namely, that the children of such persons, as are excommunicated, are (notwithstanding their excommunication) to bee baptized, because they are indeed, and in the judgement of charitie, true members of the bodie of Christ, though in some other regards, they are not in present holden so to bee.

Yet further, besides the former grounds, consider the reasons.

First, children of parents, that are professed members of the Church, (though cut off for a time, upon some offence committed) have right to baptisme, because it is not in the power of man, to cut them off from Christ, though they bee excommunicated. Secondly, the personall sinne of the parent may not keepe the blessing from the childe: and therefore not deprive him of participation of the ordinance of God. Thirdly, wee must alway put a difference betweene them, which do not make separation from the Church, and yet are grievous offenders: and open Apostataes, that joyne themselves with the enemies of the Church, to the ruine and overthrow of the truth of the Gospel. Fourthly, wee must put a difference betweene those, that have given up their names to Christ; though fallen grievously; and Turkes, and Infidels, that are forth of the Covenant, and never belonged to the Church. Lastly, if the mercie of God enlarge it selfe to thousands, yea to infinite generations: why should man bee so hard hearted, as to make question, whether such Infants belong to the Covenant, and consequently keepe them from the Sacrament of Baptisme?

Out of this Question, ariseth a second;

Whether children borne in fornication, have right to baptisme?

Ans. They are not to be kept from it. For the wickednesse of the parent ought not to prejudice the childe, in things that belong to his salvation.

Yet in this case, some Cautions are carefully to be observed; as first, that the parent hold the true faith and religion: secondly, that hee be by the Minister exhorted, to a true humiliation of himselfe, and to earnest repentance for his sinne committed, and that before the childe be baptized. Thirdly, that there bee some appointed, to answer for the Infant, besides the parents, and to make solemne promise openly to the Church, that it shall bee carefully brought up, and instructed in the faith. And the same is to be observed and practised, before the baptizing of the children of parents excommunicate.

IV. Question.

How men are to make a right use of their Baptisme, when they be come to yeares?

The not observing hereof is the cause of many sinnes and corruptions in the lives of men. It is commonly holden a great fault in civill matters, for a man not to keepe his covenants. Much more is it a hainous sinne before God, not to keepe the promises, and pay the vowes made vnto him.

For answer therefore to the Question, we must first take this for a ground: That baptisme both for signification, force, use, and fruit, continues not for a moment of time, but for the whole course of a mans life: It doth not respect only the time past or present, but that which is to come, yea, that whole time that a man hath to spend, from the very act of his baptisme to his death. Againe, Baptisme is the true Sacrament of Repentance, for remission of sinnes: which being once received, remaineth a perpetuall testimony and pledge of the everlasting covenant of God, and of the continuall washing away of sinne in the bloud of Christ.

This Ground premised, I come to the use of Baptisme, which is two-fold.

The first is, that it serves to be a token and pledge of Gods favour towards us, and that principally three waies.

First, in that it sealeth and confirmeth to us the free pardon and forgivenesse of our sinnes. Thus Cornelius was baptized of Peter, after hee had heard the Gospel preached, and received the holy Ghost, that it might be unto him a pledge of the remission of his sins, Act. 10. 48. And in like manner doth Peter exhort the converted Jewes, to repent them of their sinnes, and to receive the sacrament of Baptisme, as a seale and pledge of Gods mercie, in the forgivenesse thereof by Christ, Act. 2. 38.

In regard of this use, baptisme is of great force, to releeve the heart in distresse. For when any childe of God feeles himselfe laden with the burden of his sinnes, the consideration and remembrance thereof, that God hath pardoned them all, and given him a speciall & certaine pledge of his pardon in baptisme, will serve to stay and support his soule. Yea, though his sinnes were of force to make a separation betweene God and him, yet remembring that his name is written in the Covenant of God, and that he hath by Gods mercie received the seale of the Covenant, hee shall not need to bee much disquieted. When Satan

Satan tempteth him to doubt of his owne estate, in regard of his corruption; even then let him have recourse to his Baptisme, and thinke of the earnest and pledge of Gods favour, which he hath received. Let him draw out his evidences, signed with the seale of Gods covenant, made unto him in Jesus Christ: and that shall bee sufficient to stop the mouth of Satan, and to repell his temptations.

Secondly, Baptisme is a pledge of the vertue of Christs death. Doe you not know (saies Paul) that all wee which have beene baptized into Iesus Christ, have beene baptized into his death? *Rom.*6.3. For they that beleeve, are by baptisme conformed to Christ their head, because they are by it buried together with him into his death, verse 4.

This point is of excellent use in our lives. For it teacheth a man, when his owne corruption moveth him to sin, and he is now even in the combat, the spirit lusting against the flesh, and the flesh against the Spirit; even then, to call to memorie his Baptisme, wherein it pleased God to seale unto him the mortification of his sinne, by the power of Christs death: and consequently to pray earnestly unto him, for the continuance of the same power in his heart; for the continuall crucifying of the old man, and the utter destroying of the bodie of sinne, *Rom.*6.6.

Thirdly, Baptisme is a pledge unto us of the life of Christ, and of our fellowship with him therein. For looke, as hee being dead in the grave, raised himselfe to life, by his owne power; even so, and more than so, being now in heaven glorified, doth he by the power of his Deitie raise up his members from death to life, *Rom.*6.4. A certaine pledge whereof he hath given us in this Sacrament. Which also affordeth singular comfort and joy unto a man, even in his greatest extremitie. True it is, that man by nature is dead in sin; yet God of his mercie sealeth unto him in baptisme, his rising from the death of sin to newnesse of life. True it is againe, that all men must die. Yet this is our comfort, that in Baptisme God hath sealed to us even our rising from the grave to life everlasting, and all by the vertue and power of Christs resurrection. This is a comfort of all comforts, able to uphold the soule of man, even in the houre of death.

The second Use of Baptisme is, that it serves to bee a notable meanes of our death unto sinne, and that three waies.

First, by putting us in minde of mortifying the flesh, and crucifying our owne corruptions. For if we bee baptized into the death of Christ, as Paul saith, Rom. 3. then ought wee not to continue in sinne, but to labour by all meanes, as by prayer, by fasting, by the word preached, and by avoyding all occasions of offence, to kill and destroy the corruption of our nature, and the wickednesse of our hearts, Gal. 5.24.

Secondly, it causeth us to dedicate our selves wholly unto God and Christ, remembring that wee once offered our selves to be baptized, (in the presence of the whole congregation) in token that wee should ever afterward consecrate our soules and bodies unto the Lord, and wholly renounce and forsake the flesh, the world, and the devill.

Thirdly, it causeth us to labour to keepe and maintaine peace and unitie with all men, but specially with Gods people. For Baptisme is a solemne testimonie of the bond of mutuall love and fellowship, both of Christ with his members, and of the members one with another. To this end Paul saith, that we are all by one spirit baptized into one bodie, 1 Cor. 12 verse. 13. yea, and Baptisme is one of those things, whereby the unitie of the spirit is preserved in the bond of peace. Eph. 4. 5.

V. Question.

Whether a man falling into sinne, after he is baptized, may have any benefit of his Baptisme?

Answ. He may, if he repent. And the reasons are these:

First, his Indentures and Evidences remaine whole in respect of God, and his name is not put out of the covenant. Which is otherwise in the Evidences of men. For if they bee once cancelled, a man cannot have his name put into them againe.

Secondly, Baptisme is indeed (as hath bin said) the Sacrament of Repentance, and (as it were) a planke or boord to swimme upon, when a man is in danger of the shipwracke of his soule. Therefore if a man repent, and bee heartily sorrie for his sinnes committed, hee may have recourse to his baptisme, wherein was sealed unto him the pardon of all his sinnes past, present, and to come: he standing to the order of his baptisme, beleeving and repenting.

Thirdly, to them that fall, even after Baptisme, there is hope of repentance, and consequently of the favour of God, if they bee touched in heart with true remorse and sorrow for their offences. For hence it was, that Paul calles the Galatians (fallen after they had bin baptized) to the remembrance of the favour of God promised unto them in the Covenant, and sealed in their baptisme, Galat. 3. verse 3. 19. 27. In the same manner doth Iohn call the Churches of Asia, that had left their first love, to repentance and conversion, Apoc. 2. verse 5. 16. And the said Iohn, in the Ecclesiasticall historie is said to have reclaimed a young man, who had most grievously fallen after his Baptisme. Euseb. Eccles. Hist. l. 3. c. 23.

CHAP.

CHAP. X.

Of the Lords Supper.

THus much concerning the Sacrament of Baptisme. Now we come to the Sacrament of the Lords Supper; concerning the use whereof there are two principall Questions moved.

I. Question.

How farre forth men have libertie to use or not use the Lords Supper?

For the answering hereof, I propound three Rules.

The first: Every man of yeares, living in the Church, and being baptized, is bound in conscience by Gods commandement, to use the Lords Supper. In the institution of the Supper, the Lord gave a Sacramentall Word; whereof there bee two parts: a Commandement, and a Promise. The commandement is expressed in these tearmes: Take, eat, drinke, doe ye this. And it binds all men in the Church that are baptized, to the use of the Lords Supper.

The second Rule: Every man of yeares baptized, is to receive it often. 1 Cor. 11. 26. As oft as ye shall drinke it in remembrance of me. The reason is, because we have need continually to feed on Christ. And herein the Lords Supper differeth from Baptisme; because by Baptisme a man is once only grafted into Christ; but being in Christ, hee hath need often and continually to be fed in him to life eternall. And this often nourishment of the believer is sealed unto him by the often use of this Sacrament.

The third Rule: Every man is to receive and use the Lords Supper according to the laudable custome of that Church whereof he is a member, unlesse there bee a just impediment. A just impediment is that which barres a man from the use of the Supper, as Suspension, Contagious and incurable sicknesse, Absence upon a just and weightie cause, as when a man is in his journey, and such like.

The reason of the Rule is; first, if any man refuse to receive it, when he may conveniently, having no just impediment; so doing, hee neglects and contemnes the ordinance of God. Secondly, for a man to abstaine, when hee is called to receive it, though haply hee may be excused, in regard of some reason inwardly knowne to himselfe; yet his abstinence is a bad example, and may give offence to others. Thirdly, the man that may receive and yet will not, doth in effect suspend and withhold himselfe from the benefit of this holy Sacrament.

Now these three Rules, as they serve directly to answer the Question in hand, so they do plainely discover some errours and faults in the practice of sundry persons in these daies. Some there bee that thinke it sufficient to receive the Communion once by the yeare, namely, at Easter time. Whereas on the contrary it is to be used as oft as may be; considering that it is nothing but the shewing forth of the Lords death till he come: which is not once or twise in the yeare, but often, yea continually to bee remembred. Other there are that take libertie to themselves, to come to this Table, and abstaine at their pleasure, as if it were a thing arbitrarie to themselves; which notwithstanding the Lord hath enjoyned by expresse commandement, as hath beene said.

But some alleage for this their practice, that they are at variance with such and such persons, that have done them wrong, and whom they cannot forgive; and in this respect, they were better abstaine, than come unprovided. To whom it may bee said, that their unfitnesse in this and other respects, ought to be a strong motive to induce them, at least to use all holy endevour, to prepare themselves every day, rather than a meanes to keepe them backe. For if a man should abstaine upon every occasion of variance, discontentment, and infirmitie, he should never receive, and so consequently have no benefit by this ordinance of God. Daily preparation therefore is the more necessarie, that when they be called and have opportunitie, they may come as welcome guests unto that heavenly banquet.

II. Question.

How may a man rightly use the Lords Supper to his comfort and Salvation?

Answ. Three things are required thereunto; A right Preparation, a right Receiving, and a right Use of it afterward.

Sect. 1.

That Preparation is needfull, the commandement of the Apostle plainely shewes, which is directed to all Communicants without exception. 1 Cor. 11. 28. Let a man, that is, let every man examine himselfe.

Now that a man may be rightly prepared, hee must bring with him foure severall things.

First, Knowledge of the foundation of Religion, specially of the use of both the Sacraments. That this is necessarie to Preparation, it appeareth by that which Paul requireth in a good Communicant, 1 Cor. 11. verse 26. to wit, the shewing forth of Christs death, which is done by confession and thanksgiving: and these two cannot bee performed without knowledge.

The second thing required is Faith. For all Sacra-

Sacraments are ſeales of the righteouſnes of faith, *Rom.*4.11. Now Faith is hereby diſcerned, when the heart of the beleever contents it ſelfe only with Chriſt, the matter of ſalvation; and doth beleeve, not only that there is a remiſſion of ſinnes in generall, but that his ſinnes are forgiven to him in particular.

The third is Repentance, ſtanding in a heartie ſorrow for ſinnes committed, in a hatred and deteſtation of the ſame, and in a reſolved purpoſe of amendment, and obedience for time to come.

Here we muſt remember, that renewed Repentance for ſinnes committed, is principally required before the Sacrament. For the Apoſtle charged the beleeving Corinths, with unworthie receiving, becauſe they came in their ſinnes, without renovation of their repentance.

The fourth is Charitie towards man. For this Sacrament is a Communion, whereby all the receivers, joyntly united together in love, doe participate of one and the ſame Chriſt. And therfore, as no man in the old law might offer his Sacrifice, without a fore-hand agreement with his brother; ſo no Communicant may partake with others at this Table, without reconciliation, love, and charitie.

Now further touching Preparation, there are three Caſes of Conſcience to be reſolved.

I. Caſe. What ſhall a man doe, if after preparation he findes himſelfe unworthie?

Anſ. There are two kinds of unworthines; of an evill conſcience, and of infirmitie: Unworthines of an evill conſcience is, when a man lives in any ſinne, againſt his conſcience. This we muſt eſpecially take heed of. For it is proper to the Reprobate; and he that comes to the Table of the Lord unworthily, in this ſenſe, queſtionleſſe he ſhal eat his own judgement, if not condemnation. The unworthines of infirmitie is, when a man truly repents and beleeves, and makes conſcience of every good dutie, but yet ſees and feeles wants in them all, and in regard thereof, himſelfe unfit to the Supper. Such unworthines cannot juſtly hinder a man from comming to this Sacrament, neither is it a ſufficient cauſe to make him to abſtaine. The reaſon is, becauſe the Lord requires not therein perfection of faith and repentance; but the truth and ſinceritie of them both, though they be imperfect.

If it be demanded, how the truth of faith and repentance may be knowne; I anſwer, by theſe notes. I. If our faith bee directed upon the right object, Chriſt alone. II. If there be a hungring and thirſting after his bodie and blood. III. If we have a conſtant and ſerious purpoſe, not to ſinne. IV. If there follow a change of the life. Thus we reade, that many of the Jewes, in the daies of Hezechias, came to Hieruſalem, and did eat the Paſſeover, which had not cleanſed themſelves, according to that which was written in the Law. And yet, for thoſe among them that had prepared their whole hearts, to ſeeke the Lord, the text ſaith, that God heard the prayer of Hezechias, and healed the people, though they were not cleanſed, according to the purification of the Sanctuary, 2 *Chro.*30.18,19,20.

II. Caſe. Whether it be requiſite to preparation, that a man ſhould come faſting to this Supper?

Anſ. It is not neceſſarie. For in the Primitive Church, Chriſtians did firſt feaſt, and at the end of their feaſt received the Lords Supper. And if receivers bring with them attentive mindes, reverent and ſober hearts, it matters not whether they come faſting or not. The kingdome of God ſtands not in meats and drinkes, as Paul ſaith, *Rom.*14.17.

III. Caſe. Whether ſuch perſons as are at contention, and goe to law one with another, may with good conſcience come to the Lords table? The reaſon of the Queſtion is, becauſe men thinke when they goe to law that they do not forgive.

Anſ. There be three kinds of forgiveneſſe; of revenge, of the penalty, and of judgement. Of revenge, when men are content to lay aſide all hatred and requitall of evill. Of penaltie, when being wronged, they are content to put the matter up, and not proceed to revenge by inflicting puniſhment. Of judgement, when a man is willing to eſteeme and judge things badly done, as well done, and to judge a bad man no evill perſon, nor an enemie, though he be an enemie.

Of theſe three, the firſt is alwaies neceſſary. A man is bound in conſcience to forgive the revenge, and leave that to the Lord, to whom vengeance properly belongeth. But to the forgiveneſſe of penaltie and judgement we are not alwaies bound. We muſt ſhun and decline injuries offered, as much as poſſibly we can; but when they be offered, we may with good conſcience ſeeke a remedy of them, and uſe any lawfull meanes to defend our ſelves.

Therefore I anſwer to the Queſtion thus: That if a man going to law with another, forgives him in regard of revenge, when hee comes to the Lords table, hee doth his dutie. For doing that, he is not bound to the other, as hath beene ſaid.

Sect. 2.

The ſecond thing, in the right uſe of the Lords Supper, is the right receiving of it. Wherein there be two things required.

Firſt, the renewing of our Knowledge, or generall faith. And then ſecondly, the renewing of our Speciall Faith in Chriſt.

Let the reaſon of both be obſerved. This Sacrament containeth many particular ſignes; as not only the bread and wine, but the actions about the ſame. The ſignes may be thus diſtinguiſhed. Some of them are repreſenting ſignes, ſome are ſignes applying.

Repreſenting ſignes are ſuch as doe lively ſet forth unto us Chriſt with all his benefits, as the bread and the wine, the breaking, and the powring. Applying are thoſe, that doe appropriate the ſame; as, the giving and receiving of the bread and wine. The firſt ſort ſerve properly to renew our knowledge: the ſecond, to confirme the ſame by application.

Now anſwerable to the ſcope of the Sacrament, muſt bee our right receiving, which conſiſteth in renewing of our knowledge and faith, in the myſterie thereof.

Our knowledge is renewed principally, by meditation in the uſe of the Supper, after this manner.

Firſt, when we ſee two ſignes to be received, we muſt call to minde, that Chriſt is our perfect Saviour, that is, both bread and water of life. Heb.7.25.

Secondly, when we behold the bread and wine ſet apart by the Miniſter, and conſecrated by repeating the promiſe, and prayers made for that end, we muſt remember, that Chriſt was ordained and appointed by God, to be our Mediator and Saviour, Iohn 6.27. Act. 3.23.36.

Thirdly, when wee ſee the bread broken, and wine powred out, we are to meditate of Chriſt, that was crucified for us, and broken, both by the firſt death, and paines of the ſecond, whereby life and righteouſneſſe was procured unto us.

Fourthly, the giving of the elements into the receivers hands, offers unto our meditation thus much: That God doth truly and really give Chriſt, with his merits and efficacy, to every beleeving receiver.

On the other ſide, our Faith is renewed by apprehenſion and application in this manner. When the Miniſter gives the bread and wine, and the Communicant receives them, at the ſame time are we to lift up our hearts to heaven, to apprehend Chriſt by faith, beleeving him, with all his benefits to be ours: that he was made man for us, that he ſuffered and died for the remiſſion of our ſinnes. For theſe outward ſymbolicall or ſacramentall actions ſerve to no other end, but to ſignifie unto us theſe inward actions of the minde and will, whereby we apprehend and receive Chriſt, to our ſalvation.

Here by the way two Caſes are propounded.

I. Caſe. What is to be done, if a man after often receiving, ſtill doubteth whether hee hath faith or no?

Anſw. He muſt ſtrive againſt doubting, and endevour to beleeve; being heartily ſorrie for the weakneſſe and infirmitie of his faith: And let him withall conſider and remember, that God hath not only given his promiſe, but ſet apart this Sacrament, to bee a ſpeciall ſigne and pledge of his mercie contained in the promiſe, for the upholding and ſtrengthening of mans faith.

But ſome man will ſay, Mine endevour is nothing, if doubting prevaile. Anſw. It is not ſo. For if a man can be heartily ſorrie for his infirmitie, if he ſtrive to beleeve, if in heart he hungreth and thirſteth after Chriſt, faith is begun, and he in ſome ſort doth apprehend Chriſt. The poore begger by the high way ſide enjoyeth the almes that is given him, though he receive it with a lame and leprous hand. The ſtomacke that loathes phyſicke, if it receives into it at the firſt but one drop of the potion preſcribed, and that in very weake and fainting manner, it will be able at length to take beneſit by a greater quantitie, and in the meane time it receives good. The man that is in cloſe priſon, if he ſees but one little beame of the Sunne, by a ſmall creviſe; by that very beame he hath uſe of the Sunne, though he ſeeth not the whole body of the Sunne. In like manner, though our faith, the hand of our ſoule, be mingled with weakneſſe and corruption; though we feele never ſo little meaſure of Gods grace in us; yea, though our knowledge be never ſo ſmall, yet it is an argument, that the Spirit of God begins to worke in our hearts, and that we have by Gods mercy begun to lay hold on Chriſt.

It will be ſaid further: If I feele not Chriſt given unto me by God, I doe not, nay, I cannot beleeve. Anſw. In nature it is true, that Experience begins firſt, and then followes Aſſurance, but in ſpirituall and divine things, there is a contrary courſe to be taken. For here we muſt begin with faith, and in the firſt place ſimply beleeve Gods promiſes, & afterward we come, by the goodneſſe of God, to feele and have experience of his mercie. This point was notably practiſed by Iehoſaphat, who being in a great extremitie, and ſeeing no way to eſcape, practiſed his faith in the firſt place, and ſaid, Lord, wee know not what to doe, but our eyes are towards thee, 2 *Chr.*20.12. And the like he taught the people at the ſame time, vers.20. Put your truſt in the Lord, and ye ſhall bee aſſured. Thus Abraham is ſaid, above hope to beleeve under hope the promiſe of God, even againſt ſenſe, reaſon, and experience, *Rom.*4.18.

II. Caſe. If in the very inſtant of receiving a man feele his heart ſo hard, that he cannot lift it up unto God, what is then to be done?

Anſ. Firſt, hardneſſe of heart is twofold, ſenſible, and inſenſible. The inſenſible hardneſſe of heart is a great and dangerous judgment. But the ſenſible and felt hardneſſe, which is in Gods children, and which they feele and bewaile in themſelves, is rather a bleſſing than a curſe. Of this, the people of God complained, Eſa. 63.17. And it muſt not diſcourage any Communicant, but rather comfort him, becauſe it is a ſigne of grace. For if there were no grace in the heart, corruption and hardneſſe could not be felt.

Secondly, I anſwer, that the benefit of the Sacrament is not tyed to the very inſtant of receiving: but if before and after a man lift up his heart to God, hee ſhall finde comfort, though for the preſent he hath not ſo lively ſenſe and feeling thereof as he deſireth. This alway always provided, that the same partie be displeased with himselfe, that he cannot doe that which he would and ought, nor in that measure that is required. And such a one must consider this to his comfort, that though hee doe not apprehend Christ, yet Christ apprehendeth and accepteth him.

Right use after receiving.

In the third place; after the receiving of the Sacrament two things are required.

First, that thanks be given unto God, not only in word, but in every action of our life, for Christ and all his benefits. Secondly, that not only for the present, but ever afterward, still we renew our faith, repentance, and obedience.

But what is a man to doe, if after receiving he finde no comfort? Anſ. First, he must examine, whether he hath truly beleeved and repented, yea or no. If he hath not, then the fault is in himselfe, and not in Gods ordinance. If he hath, let him not be dismaied for the joy of the Spirit is sowne in his heart; and though it be hid for time; yet at length it will shew it selfe, Pſal. 97. 11.

CHAP. XI.

Of Adoration.

THe fourth Head of the outward worship of God is Adoration; wherein wee consider twe things, First, what it is; Secondly, what be the Questions propounded concerning it.

What Adoration is.

Sect. 1.

For the former. Adoration in generall is an outward worship, signifying and testifying the inward worship of the heart. More ſpecially, by it we must conceive, the bowing of the head and knee, the bending and prostrating of the body, the lifting up of the hands, eyes, and such like.

Adoration is two-fold: Religious, or Civill.

Religious Adoration is that worship of God, in which Religion and godlinesse is exercised, expressed, and signified. In it there bee two things alwaies joyned together, and yet distinctly to bee considered. The first and principall, being the foundation of all the rest, is the intention of the minde, whereby God is conceived, as an absolute and omnipotent Lord, knowing all things, yea the heart of man; hearing the prayers of all men, in all places, at all times; the author, preserver, and giver of all good things. The second, depending upon the former, is the outward prostrating of the body, as the bowing of the knee and such like, for this end, to testifie our subjection unto God, as our absolute Lord, &c. Thus is it which makes Adoration a true religious worship.

The other kinde of Adoration is Civill, pertaining to the second Table, teamed by some ſocial; because it is the adoration or worship that fellow creatures give one to another. And this (as the former) hath in it two things. The one is the Intention of him that performeth it, which must be this; That the creature worshipped is indued with excellent gifts of God: or that he hath a power of government over us. For one of these two is ever the ground of civill Adoration. The other is the Action or outward Gesture of the bodie, in token that the creature worshipped is indued with excellent gifts, and graced with authoritie before named. Here we must remember that the bowing of the body, &c. and in generall all bodily gesture performed, is one and the same, both in Religious, and Civill worship, and the distinction standeth only in the intent of the minde.

Sect. 2.

Now the Questions about Adoration are two.

I. Question.

To what thing is Adoration due, and in what manner?

Anſ. We must distinguish the things that are, and they be of three sorts or rankes: In the first ranke comes God the Creator: in the second the creatures: in the third the Worke of the creatures.

For the first, Adoration that is due to God the Creator, must not be ſocial, (for we are not Gods mates and companions) but only Religious. Yea, all religious worship is due to God and to him alone: which I prove thus. The Devill when hee tempted our Saviour, desired no more of him, but the prostrating of his body; yet upon this ground, that he was the giver and disposer of all the kingdomes of the earth. But Christ denies it, and answers: Thou ſhalt worship the Lord thy God, and HIM ONLY ſhalt thou ſerve, Matt. 4. 10. Againe, the very scope of Religious Adoration is, to acknowledge the Godhead and the properties thereof. And hereupon it must be given to God alone, and consequently not to the creature, unlesse we will acknowledge a godhead in the creature.

Here we are to remember two Caveats, touching Religious Adoration.

First, if Adoration bee given to the true God with a false and erroneous intention, it makes him an Idol. For example: If the bodie bee bowed with this intent to worship God out of the Trinity as the Turke doth, or if he be worshipped out of the Sonne with the Jew; thus doing, we worship not the true God, but an Idol. The reason is, because God is so to be conceived of us, as hee hath manifested himselfe in his owne word, and no otherwise. If otherwise, God is not conceived, but an Idol or fiction of the braine, and the Adoration is not done to God, but to the Idol.

Secondly,

Secondly, to worship God in, at, or before an Image, is Idolatry and superstition; and God so worshipped is made an Idoll. For he that thus worships him bindeth his presence, operation and grace, to those places, to which God never bound himselfe, or his presence, &c. God hath not appointed Images to bee pledges of these things, either by promiſe, or Commandement. Hence it followes, that the man which worships God otherwise than he would be worshipped, or looks to bee heard where God will not heare, is an Idolater. Againe, God expresly forbids the worship of his Majestie, in, at, or before any creature in heaven or earth, Deut. 4. 16, 17, 18, 19.

But the Idolater in excuſe of his sinne is wont to pretend many things.

First, that when he worshippeth, he intends not to worship the Image, but God in the Image. To this we answer, that it matters not what his meaning is. For let him intend what he will, if God detesteth that manner of worship, it is not to bee tendred unto him in any sort. The Israelites worshipped not the calfe it selfe, but God in the calfe, Exod. 32. 8. yet then Moſes saith, that they worshipped an idol.

Secondly, hee alleageth, that in the Old Testament, God was worshipped before the Arke; and that there he promiſed to heare the prayers of his people. Anſwer. The reason is not alike. For they had an expreſſe Commandement given them by God, touching Adoration before the Arke; and a promiſe that they should be accepted and heard; but the Idolater hath no such Commandement, or promiſe.

Thirdly, hee objecteth, that Subjects doe kneele downe before the chaire of estate in the absence of the King or Queene, in token of subjection due unto them: and therefore much more may they to the Images of God, and Saints in heaven glorified. Anſw. This reason is also insufficient. For the kneeling before the chaire of estate is a meere civill testimonie of civill worship, and being referred to this end, to shew loyaltie and subjection to lawfull Princes, it stands in force by the Commandement of God. But there is no such warrant from Gods word, for bowing to Images: neither is it his will that they should bee tokens, and pledges of his presence.

The second sort of things that bee, are the creatures, which must bee distinguished into foure kindes. I. Wicked spirits. II. Good Angels. III. Living men. IV. Men departed.

Touching wicked spirits or devils, the question is, What is the Adoration that is due unto them.

Anſwer. They are the enemies of God, and accurſed of him: therefore no honour or ſervice belongs unto them, by his will and appointment. And for that very cause, wee are to have no dealing with them at all. Nay, we are utterly to renounce and abandon whatsoever things come from the devill, or his instruments: as namely, all Spels, Charms, Inchantments, &c. which serve to the working of wonders; and yet have no such vertue given them from God, for that end, either by creation, nature, word, or institution.

Now concerning the good Angels; If they did now appeare unto us, and we had certaine knowledge thereof, we might adore them. But how only with civill and ſocial worship. For so we reade, Gen. 18. 2. that Lot ſeeing two Angels comming toward Sodome, roſe up to meet them, and bowed himſelfe with his face to the ground. By which example it appeareth, that though Angels may bee adored, yet not with Religious. Or that which is mixed with Religious worship, but with worship purely and meerely civil. Whereupon it was that the Angell refused the worship done unto him by John, saying, See thou doe it not; I am thy fellow ſervant, and one of thy brethren, &c. Rev. 19. 10. I adde moreover, that such at this day, the Angels appeare not unto us, we may not worship them at all, either in civill or religious manner, albeit we must ever have a reverent estimation of them.

As for living men, Adoration meerely civill is only due unto them, & that in respect of the gifts of God, which we see to be in them, as also of their dignitie & place, which they have among men. This is expreſly injoined in the fifth Commandement, Honour thy father, &c. and confirmed also by the example of Abraham, who stood up and bowed himselfe before the people of the land the Hittites, Gen. 23. 7. Provided alwaies, that this adoration be according to the laudable custome of the countrey, where they live.

But for worship either simply religious, or mixt, it is in no sort to bee yeelded them. Thus Peter (when Cornelius met him and fell downe at his feet) refused to accept of the honour done unto him; which notwithstanding was not a divine, but a mixed kinde of worship performed unto Peter in a reverent opinion of his person, as being more than an ordinary man, Acts 10. 25, 26. In like manner, Mordecai the Iew denied to worship Haman, because the honour which the King appointed to bee given unto him was an excesſive honour, having some divine worship in it, such as was done to himselfe. Of the same sort is the kissing of the Popes feet, which indeed is civill worship, but mixed with religious. For it is tendered unto him, as to the Vicar of Christ, and one that cannot erre: the like to which is not done to any Emperour or potentate on earth.

Lastly, touching dead men, or Saints departed, as Peter, Paul, and the rest; all the worship we owe unto them is no more but a reverent estimation of their persons, and imitation of their vertues. Religious or civill

Adoration due unto them, wee acknowledge none: because neither wee have to deale with them, nor they with us. Therefore Romish Adoration of them wee renounce, as flat idolatry; considering it gives unto them a Divinity, making them present in all places, to know our hearts, and heare our prayer at all times, which is the prerogative of God alone.

Now for unreasonable creatures, no Adoration at all appertaineth to them, but onely a reverent and holy use of them. For Adoration is a signe of Subjection of the inferiour to the superiour; but man is their superiour: and therefore he is to doe them no worship or service. And hereupon wee justly condemne the Adoration of the reliques of Saints, of the bread and wine in the Sacrament, &c.

The third sort of things is the worke of the creature, to wit, Images. Where, if it bee demanded, what Adoration is due to them? I answer, none at all. Reasons. 1. Wee have an expresse inhibition to the contrary, in the second Commandement, Thou shalt not bow downe to them, nor worship them, &c. 2. The superiour must performe no Adoration to the inferiour. Now though it should bee granted, that they were the Images of God, yet man is a more excellent Image than they, and they are inferiour not onely to him, but even to the baser sort of creatures. The wormе is one of the baseſt creatures upon the earth, yet it is the worke of God. The Image is a worke not of God, but of man. Man therefore may as well in all reason and better, worship the wormе, than the Image.

CHAP. XII.

Of outward confession.

THe fifth head of Gods outward worship is Confession. I meane not the Ordinary or Ecclesiaticall Confession, but that which is made before the Adversary. Concerning which, there bee many Questions commonly made.

I. Question.

whether Confession of faith bee necessary, and when?

Answ. That confession is necessary, it appeares by manifeſt testimonies of Scripture: 1 Pet. 3. 15. Be ready to give an answer alwaies to every man, that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you. Here is a flat Commandement for Confession. Againe, Rom. 10. 9. 10. If thou shalt confesse with thy mouth, and beleeve with thy heart, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man beleeveth unto righteousnesse, and with the mouth man confesseth to salvation. And Marke 8. 38. Whosoever shall be ashamed of mee in this A adulterous generation, of him shall the Sonne of man bee ashamed also, when hee commeth in the glory of his Father, with his holy Angels. This is granted of all Divines, save onely of some pestilent Heretickes.

The second part of the Question is, when Confession is to be made?

For answering whereof, this must bee remembred for a Ground, that there is a distinction to bee made betweene Commandements affirmative and negative. The negative bindeth at all times, and to all times. For it is not lawfull at any time for a man to doe evill. The affirmative binds at and in all times, but not to all times. For it commands a duty B to bee done, which nevertheleſſe is not at all times to bee done. For example: To give almes, is prescribed by an affirmative Commandement, and yet Almes are to bee given onely at fit times and occasions. Hereupon it pleaseth the Lord to propound part of the Morall Law in negative termes, because negatives are of greater force. Now confeſſion being commanded not by a negative, but by an affirmative Commandement, wee are not bound thereunto, at and to all times, but when just occasion is offered.

When then (may some say) are the especiall times, in which Confeſſion is to be made before the Adversary?

Anſ. There are two principally, to which C all the other may bee reduced. The first is, when wee are examined touching our Religion by them that are in authority, as by Magistrates, Princes, Iudges, &c. For at such time we are lawfully called to make confeſſion of our faith, and may do it with boldnesse. Thus much the place before named importeth, where wee are injoyned to bee ready to make an account, &c. 1 Pet. 3. 15. that is, not to every examiner, but to those alone who have power and authority given them by God, for that purpoſe. And the same is implyed in Christs speech to his Apoſtles, Matth. 10. 18. And yee shall be brought before governours and Kings for my sake, in witnesse to them, and to the Gentiles. And in this case, not to make profeſſion of our faith, is in effect to deny Christ, to D scandalize the Church, and greatly to prejudice the truth. The second time of confeſſion is, when in the want thereof, Gods glory is directly impeached, the salvation of men hindered, and our neighbour offended. And then we are necessarily to confeſſe, though no examination be made.

If it bee here asked, How wee may be able to diſcerne of this time? The answer is, by Christian wisdome, which teacheth us, that when by our silence wicked men are emboldened to speake evill of Gods word, and weake ones occasioned to fall from the faith, then is the fitteſt time to stand in the defence and maintenance of the truth. Out of these two times and cases, Christians have liberty not to confeſſe, but may lawfully conceale their their faith; nay (which is more) their perſons; by changing their habit and attire, upon this ground, because the affirmative Commandement doth not always binde.

Here it is objected; First, that we are saved onely by faith, and therefore confeſſion is not necessary. Answer. Wee must conſider faith two wayes. First, as an instrument created in the heart, whereby wee apprehend and apply Christ with his benefits to our selves, for our justification and salvation. Secondly, faith must bee conſidered more largely, as it is a way to bring us to life everlasting. Now in the first acception, it may bee truly said, that wee are saved by faith alone. For there is no grace of God whereby wee take hold of Christ but faith. But if wee take it in the second sense, as a way to life, then wee may truly say, that it alone saveth not, but hope, love, repentance, good workes, and all divine vertues. In this sense Paul saith, we are saved by hope, Rom. 8. verse 24. because by it wee wait for our salvation: and hope is the way in which all must walke that looke to bee saved. Againe hee saith, Momentany afflictions doe worke unto us an eternall weight of glory, 2 Corinthians 4. verse 17. But how? Not as causes, but as wayes, signes, and markes, that give us direction to our journeyes end. And thus the woman is said to be saved by bearing of children, 1 Timothy 2. verse 15. Which bearing and bringing up of children is no cause, but onely a way wherein shee must constantly walke to glory. And though in mans judgement, that may seeme a way of misery and death, yet indeed it is otherwise, if the children continue in faith, love, and holinesse with modesty. Againe, the Apoſtle James saith, that Abrahams faith wrought together with his works. Iam. 2. verſ. 22. which are likewiſe not to be understood as working causes, but as testimonies, and evidences, declaring and manifesting, that hee was just in the sight of God.

Secondly, it is objected, that confeſſion of our faith to God is sufficient. For so Saint Paul seemes to say, Rom. 14. verse 22. Hast thou faith? have it with thy selfe before God: therfore confeſſion before man is not needfull. Answer. The Apoſtle speaketh not of that faith whereby wee are justified and saved, but of that which standeth in a perſwasion of the use or not use of things indifferent. And this a man may keepe to himselfe, that is, hee may so use it, as hee shall not thereby offend his brother. That Commandement was given by Paul for those times, when men were not fully perſwaded of the use of Gods creatures, as meats, drinkes, &c. but to these times it is not.

II. Question.

whether it bee lawfull for a man being A urged, to go to idol-service, and heare masse, so as he keepe his heart to God?

Answer. It is not: and I prove it by the scope of the eighth and tenth chapters of the first Epiſtle to the Corinthians, where the Apoſtle diſputes the Question, whether the Corinthians might goe into the Temples of idols, and eat of meat offered unto them: in the meane time, not partaking with Idolaters in the worship of the Idols? This hee avoucheth to bee utterly unlawfull, and for that purpoſe tels the Corinthians, That they cannot drinke of the Lords cup, and of the cup of devils. Now as this was unlawfull for them, so it is unlawfull for any Proteſtant to goe to B any Popish assembly to heare Maſſe. Againe, God is the Creator of the body and soule: therefore hee is to bee worshipped in both: and consequently wee robbe him of his due, when wee reserve our heart to him, and give our bodies to Idols. To this purpoſe Paul exhorteth the Romanes to give up their bodies a living sacrifice, holy, and acceptable unto God, Rom. 12. 1. which place utterly condemneth the errour of some, who thinke that God will be content with the soule, and that they may bestow their body in the service of the devill.

But against this doctrine sundry things are alleaged. The first is the example of Naaman, 2 King. 5. 18. 19. who said to the Prophet, When I bow my selfe in the house of Rimmon, the C Lord be mercifull to me in this thing. To whom Elisha answered, Goe in peace. Here (say some) the Prophet gives leave to Naaman to worship in an idols Temple.

To this there bee sundry answers given. Some affirme, that Naaman speakes onely of Civill and Politike worship, and not of Religious. For his office was to kneele downe in the Temple, that the King might leane upon his shoulder, when he worshipped the idol. And Naaman makes open protestation, verse 7. that he will worship no God but the God of Israel.

Others answer, and that more truly, that Naaman doth acknowledge it a sinne, to goe to the house of Rimmon, and therefore hee craves pardon for it at Gods hands, twice together, verſ. 18. and withal makes a vow, that hee will thenceforth offer neither burnt offering, nor sacrifice, to any other God, save only to the Lord: and hereunto Elisha answereth, Goe in peace.

Yet further it is answered, that Naaman requesteth the Prophet to pray for him, that hee might bee constant in the service of the true God. And (in case hee were drawne against his purpoſe by humane frailtie, to bow againe before Rimmon, with his King:) that the Lord in mercy would pardon his offence. And to this the Prophet yeeldeth, saying, Goe in peace. As if he should say, God to; I will pray for thee to this end and purpose. For a text therefore gives no warrant for bodily presence in Idolatrous assemblies.

The second Object. Iehu openly professed the worship of Baal, and yet hee dissembled, meaning nothing lesse, 2 King. 10. 18. And the Lord commends him for his diligent execution of that which was right in his eyes, verse 30.

Answ. Iehu is commended, not for his dissembling, but for his diligence in destroying Ahabs house, his Religion, and the Priests, with all that belonged vnto them: though in other matters belonging to the service of God, he departed not from the sinnes of Ieroboam.

The third Object. Daniel 3. 6. Nebuchadnezzar made a decree, that whosoever would not fall downe and worship the golden Image, should at once bee cast into the midst of an hot fiery furnace. Now we doe not read, that any more refused to obey but three, and therefore it seemes that Daniel did worship the Image, as well as others.

Answ. Daniel was not accused as the three children were, and for that cause there is no mention made of his refusall. Againe, put the case hee had beene accused, yet the King tooke no knowledge of his accusation, because hee was in favour, both with him, and the people.

The fourth Object. Paul together with foure men that had made a vow, yeelded to purifie himselfe according to the law of Moses. beeause hee would not offend the weake Iewes, Act. 21. 24. And yet that Law concerning purification, as also the whole body of Ceremonies, was abrogated in the death of Christ. Now if he might doe that which was unlawfull, for the avoiding of offence; why may not a man goe to Masse, and to prevent the scandall, which may bee taken on the behalfe of the Papists?

Answ. It is true, that there was an end put unto the ceremoniall Law by Christs death; yet it was not at the first wholly to bee abolished, but by little and little. Againe, the use of Ceremonies remained as a thing indifferent in it selfe, of the Temple of Ierusalem was destroyed by Titus, and the Church of the new Testament throughly planted. And till both these were accomplished, the use of the ceremoniall law was no sinne; provided, that it were not holden or urged, as a thing necessary to salvation.

Now whereas it is said, that we may be present at the Masse, for the avoiding of offence; it may further bee answered; first, that we are to doe our duties, though men bee never so much offended; for it was the rule of Christ in like case, Let them alone, they bee the blinde leaders of the blinde, Matth. 15. 14. Secondly, wee ought not to doe evill, that good may come thereof.

The fifth Object. The Masse is Gods ordinance, appointed by Christ, though now it bee corrupted by men. Answer. It is a most damnable idol, yea worse than an idoll of the Gentiles; and the Adoration performed therein is most abominable, and hath more affinity with grosse Gentilisme, than with the institution of our Saviour Christ.

III. Question.

whether any man, especially a Minister, may with good conscience fly in persecution and if he may fly, when? Whether it be lawfull to flie.

Sect. 1.

This Question consisteth of two parts. Touching the first, sundry men are of opinion that it is utterly unlawfull to flie in persecution: as Tertullian, who hath written a whole booke of this argument: and besides him, certaine Heretickes named Circumcelliones, in that part of Affricke, which we now call Barbary, and some also of the sect of the Anabaptists. But the truth is, that sometimes it is lawfull to flie, though not alwayes. For proofe whereof, consider these reasons.

First, Christs Commandement, Matth. 10. 23 When they persecute you in one City, flie into another. If it be said, that this Commandement was limited to the times wherein the Apostles preached in Jewry, and therefore is temporarie: I answer, No: for there cannot any text of Scripture bee brought, to shew that it was ever yet repealed. And the Apostles (who had received this Commandement, even after Christs ascension, and the giving of the holy Ghost,) being persecuted, did flie from one place to another, as we may reade, Act. 9. 25. 30. 2 Cor. 11. If it bee alleaged, that if this be a commandement to flie, then all must flie: I answer againe, that though the commandement be generall to all persons, and therefore every Christian may lawfully shun appointed danger: yet the same is particular, in regard of circumstances of time and place. For though all may fly, yet there be some places and times wherein men may not use that liberty, as shall appeare afterward.

The second reason is taken from the example of many worthy men recorded in Scripture. Iacob the Patriarch fled from the presence of his brother Esau into Haran, to Laban, Genes. 27. and againe, from thence to the land of his fathers, Genes. 31. Moses. after hee had slaine the Ægyptian fled out of Ægypt into Madian, where hee lived 40. yeares, Exodus 2. And this was no rash flight, but a worke of faith, Heb. 11. 27. Obadiah the Governour of Ahabs house hid an hundred men of the Lords Prophets, by fifties in a cave, and fed them with bread & water, when Iezabel would have destroyed them. 1 King. 18. 13. Elijah being in feare of his life, fled from Iezabel into into Mount Horeb, 1 King. 19. 3. Againe, in the new Testament, our Saviour Christ being in danger withdrew himselfe, John 10. 39. and that sundry times, till the houre of his passion was come. Paul, when the Jewes tooke counsell together to kill him, was let downe by the brethren in a basket through a wall in Damascus, Act. 9. 25. And when the Grecians went about to slay him, hee was brought by the brethren to Cesarea, and sent to Tarsus, verse 29, 30. Againe, being in danger, hee used Christian policy to save himselfe. For by saying he was a Pharisie, hee made a division between his accusers, the Pharisees & Sadducees, and so escaped, Act. 23. 6, 7. And if that were lawfull for him to do, then is it also lawfull for a man by flight to save himselfe, in case of danger, whether he be a private man, or a Pastor.

Yet for the better clearing of the Answer, some allegations to the contrary are to bee examined.

Object. I. Persecution is a good thing, and that which is good may not bee eschewed. Answ. Good things are of two sorts. Some are simply good, in and by themselves; as vertues, and all morall duties: and these are not to bee eschewed. Some againe are good onely in some respects. Of this sort are things indifferent, which bee neither commanded nor forbidden, but are good or evill, in respect of circumstances. And these may bee eschewed, unlesse wee know that they bee good for us. Now persecution being of this kinde, that is to say, not simply good, but only by accident, may be avoided; because no man can say that it is good or bad for him.

Object. II. Persecution is sent of God, for the triall and good of his Church. Answ. First, evill things sent of God may bee avoided, if hee shewes a meane or way, how they may be avoided. For example: God sendeth sicknesse, famine, the plague, and sword: hee sends also meanes, and remedies for the preventing and removing of them, as Physicke, and food, &c. And these we may lawfully use for the said purposes: and in like manner may persecution bee avoided, if God offer meanes of escape. Secondly, there is a two-fold will of God, his revealed & his secret will. By his revealed will he hath appointed, that in case of present danger, when meanes of escape be offered, they may be used. Now because they that flie lawfully are assured of Gods revealed will, therefore in obedience thereunto, they use the meanes to save themselves from danger. As for his secret will, because it is unknowne, and therefore uncertaine unto us, we may not rathly presume thereof, and against his expresse will refuse the meanes offered, but use them rather, till God reveale the contrary.

Object. III. To flie in persecution is a kinde of denyall of Christ and against confession: he therefore that flies, seemes to make no confession, but rather to deny Christ.

Answ. Christian confession is double, open or implicite. Open confession is, when a man boldly confesseth his faith before the Adversarie, even to the death. This is the greatest and highest degree of confession, and in it the holy Martyrs in former times continued, even to the losse of their lives, undergoing the punishment of death, inflicted upon them by the Adversaries of Christ Jesus, for the maintenance of the truth. Implicite is, when a man to keepe his Religion, is content to forsake his countrey, friends, and goods. This is a second degree, inferiour to the former, and yet it is a true Confession, acceptable to God. And under this kinde comes flight in persecution. Whence it appeares, that lawfull flight in times of danger is no denyall of Christ, nor yet against confession. For sometimes it pleaseth God to call men to professe his name openly, by suffering: sometimes againe, not openly by suffring, but by flying: and this latter way, though it be not so high a degree as is the former, yet it is in deed and in truth, in the measure, a true profession of Christ, and pleasing unto God.

Object. IV. Our Saviour Christ commands us, Feare not them that can kill the body, Mat. 10. 28. Now if a man must not feare them, then he must not flie.

Answer. The text speaketh not of all feare, but of such feare as tendeth to Apostasie. and causeth men to renounce faith and good conscience. Againe, it speakes of that feare, whereby man feareth man more than God. Thirdly, it speakes of such feare, as by which a man is urged to tempt God, by doing some thing that is repugnant to his will, and that out of his calling. Now when the Question is of flight in persecution, we understand not such a flight as teadeth to Apostasie, or argueth the feare of man more than of God, or that is repugnant to Gods will; but that alone, whereby we use the means offered, according to his appointment; lest wee should seeme to tempt him, and bring upon our selves unnecessary danger. And thus the first part of the Question is answered.

Sect. 2.

The second is concerning the time, when a man may flye, Minister, or other? And for better resolution thereof, we are to remember, that there bee eight Conditions required in Christian flight, especially that which pertaines to the Minister.

The first is, if there bee no hope of doing good by his abode in that place where the persecution is. But while hee conceives any hope of doing good, by teaching, preaching, or otherwise, hee may not flie. This the Minister shall easily discerne in Christian wisdome. To this purpose Paul. Act. 18. verse 10. having a while preached at Corinth, and finding that the Jewes detested him and his ministerie, intended a present departure thence. But the Lord appearing unto him by night in a vision warned him to stay: for (saith he)

I have much people in this city: that is, many that are to be converted, and brought unto the faith. Every Minister in his place must have a speciall care of furthering Gods kingdome, whether it be by flying, or not flying.

The second condition. Consideration must be had, whether the persecution be personall, or publike. Personall is that which is directed against this or that mans person. Publike, which is raised against the whole Church. If it be directed against the person of the Pastor, he may use his libeрty. For it may be that his flight will bring peace to the Church.

But what if the people will not suffer him to flie? Ans. They should be so farre from hindering of him in this case, that they ought rather to succour and releeve him. Thus, when Demetrius had raised a tumult against Paul, under pretence of Diana, and hee would have presented himselfe unto the people, in the common place; the disciples suffered him not, Act. 19. 30. And what care they had of his preservation, the same ought the people to have of their Pastor, in case of like perill. But if the persecution bee common to the whole Church, then he is not to fly. For it is necessary, at such times especially, that those which are strong should support and confirme the weake.

The third Condition. If there be in the Pastor a moderation of minde. For he must take heed of these two extremities, that hee bee neither overcome with excessive feare, nor through overmuch confidence, run headlong into apparent danger. And that he may avoid these extremities, hee must first pray to God for wisdome, courage, and constancie: and secondly, use the consent and advice of the Church, for his direction in this behalfe: that all things may be done in wisdome.

The fourth condition of lawfull flight is, that the Minister withdraw himselfe only for a time, and not utterly forsake his charge, and calling. Yea, if hee be principally aymed at in the persecution, he may lawfully go apart; and it is the dutie of the Church also, to see him conveyed away in safetie, till the persecution be over. And thus doing, hee neither forsakes the Church, nor his calling; but onely useth the meanes of his preservation, for the keeping of faith and a good conscience. This warrant our Saviour gives to his Apostles, Mat. 10. 23. When they persecute you in one city, flie into another. The end of that Commandement was, that the Apostles might preserve themselves in safety, till they had preached the Gospell to all the cities of Israel, as the next words doe declare.

The fifth Condition. If after due triall and examination, hee finde not himselfe sufficiently armed with strength to resist or beare the extremitie. For then hee may retire himselfe into some places of safety, where he may live to the glory of God, keeping faith and a good conscience.

The sixth Condition is: If hee be expelled, or banished by the Magistrate, though the cause bee unjust. For to object is simply to bee yeelded to the punishments and corrections of Magistrates, though wee doe not alwayes tender obedience to their Commandements.

The seventh is, If God offer a lawfull means and way of escape; and doth (as it were) open a doore, and give just opportunity to flie. In this case not to flie (especially if hee have not strength sufficient to stand out) is a tempting of God.

The eighth condition. If the danger be not onely suspected, surmised, and seene afarre off; but certain and present. Otherwise the Pastor fals into the sinne of Ionah, who forecasted dangers in his calling, and therefore prevented them by flying to Tarsus.

These Conditions being observed, it may bee lawfull both for Pastor and people to flie in times of persecution.

Sect. 3.

In the next place it may bee demanded, When a Pastor, or other may not flie? When a man may not flie.

For answer hereunto, the signes of unlawfull flight are to bee considered, and they are principally foure.

C

The first is, when God puts into a mans heart the Spirit of courage and fortitude, whereby hee is resolved to abide, and stand out against the force of all enemies. Thus Paul, Act. 20. 22. went bound in the Spirit to Ierusalem. Where, though he knew that bonds and afflictions did abide for him, yet he would not be disswaded, but uttered these words of resolution, I passe not at all, neither is my life deare unto my selfe, so that I may fulfill my course with joy, & the ministration which I have received of the Lord Iesus, to testifie the Gospel of the grace of God. This motion of the Spirit is not ordinary, yet in the time of hot persecution it hath been found in many worthy instruments of Gods glory, as may be seene in the histories of sundry Martyrs, in the dayes of Queene Mary. But one especially, (of whom I was credibly informed) that having this motion, to stand out, and yet flying: for that very act, felt such a thing in his conscience, that hee could never have peace till death.

D

The second signe is, when a man is apprehended, and under the custody of the Magistrate. For then hee is not to flie, because hee must in all his sufferings obey the Magistrate.

Here a Question is moved. Whether a man that is imprisoned may breake prison?

To this Popish Schoole-men answer, that hee may, if the cause of his imprisonment bee unjust. And futable to this assertion, is the Common practice of Papists. Wee on the contrary say, and that truly, that no man being in durance, may use any unlawfull or violent meanes to escape, for we may not at any hand resist the Magistrate in our sufferings. Servants are commanded to subject themselves selves with patience, unto the unjust corrections of their masters, 1 Pet. 2. 19. And this reason is given; For it is thankworthy, if a man for conscience toward God endure griefe, suffering wrongfully. The Apostles being in prison, used no meanes to deliver themselves; but when the Angell of the Lord had opened the prison doores, then they came forth, and not before, Act. 5. 19. And that which Peter and the other Apostles did, must Pastors and other men also doe in the like case, for religions sake.

The third signe. When a man is bound by his calling and ministerie, so as in it hee may glorifie God, and doe good to the Church by preaching; then he must not flie. For the duties of a mans calling must bee preferred before any worldly thing whatsoever, whether body, goods, friends, or life, &c.

The fourth signe. When God in his providence cuts off all lawfull meanes and wayes of flying; hee doth then (as it were) bid that man stay and abide: I say, lawfull meanes, because we may not use those that are unlawfull; but rather rest contented, and refigne our selves wholly to Gods will and pleasure. We must not doe any evill, that good may come thereof; and of two evils, not only not the lesse, but neither of both is to be chosen. So much of Confession.

CHAP. XIII.

Of an Oath.

THe sixth Head of Gods worship, is an Oath: concerning which, three Questions are to be handled.

I. What an oath is?

II. How an oath is to be taken?

III. How farre forth it bindeth, and is to be kept?

Sect. 1.

I. Question.

What is an Oath?

The nature of an Oath.

Ans. An Oath is a religious necessary confirmation of things doubtfull, by calling on God to be a witnesse of truth, and a revenger of falshood.

First, I call it a Confirmation: for so the holy Ghost speaketh, An Oath for confirmation is among men an end of all strife. Heb. 6. 16.

Secondly, I terme it a religious confirmation, because an Oath is a part of Gods religion and worship. Yea, it is sometimes put for the whole worship of God: Esa. 19. 18. In that day shall they sweare by the Lord hosts: that is, they shall worship the true God.

Thirdly, I adde a necessary confirmation, because an oath is never to be used, in way of confirmation, but only in case of meere necessitie. For when all other humane proofes doe faile, then it is lawfull to fetch testimonie from heaven, and to make God himselfe our witnesse. In this case alone, and never else it is lawfull to use an Oath.

Fourthly, I say, in which God is called upon, as a witnesse of the truth, and a revenger of falshood. This is added in the last place, because herein alone stands the forme and life of an Oath, that in things doubtfull we call God as a witnesse of truth, and a just revenger of the contrarie. There bee sundry kindes of confirmation, as the affirmation, the asseveration, and the obtestation. And by this Clause, an Oath is distinguished from them all: because in it we call upon God to give witnesse to the thing avouched, but in the other three we doe not.

Now touching this last point of the forme and life of an Oath, three Questions are to be answered, for the better clearing of the whole doctrine.

I. Question. Whether an Oath taken by creatures, be a true oath, and to be kept?

Ans. An Oath by creatures, is an Oath, though unlawfull. For though there be not in it a direct invocation of God for witnesse, yet when wee call the creature to give testimony, we doe then indirectly call upon God, because hee is seene in them, and looke how many creatures there be in the world, so many signes are they of Gods presence. This answer Christ himselfe maketh, Mat. 23. 21, 22. Hee that sweareth by heaven, sweareth by the throne of God, and by him that sitteth thereon, that is, by God himselfe.

II. Quest. Whether an oath by false gods be a true oath or no? for example: the oath of the Turke by Mahomet, the oath of Laban by the gods of Nachor, that is, by his Idols: when as in them there is no invocation of the true God of heaven and earth.

I answer as before, though it be not a lawfull oath, yet it is in value and effect an oath. For though that thing be a false god indeed, by which it be taken, yet it is the true God, in the opinion of him that sweareth. Thus Mahomet is to the Turke in stead of the true God, and is honoured of him as God: and therefore his oath by Mahomet is a true oath. Thus when Iacob in the covenant that hee made with Laban, sweares by the Feare of his father Isaac, and Laban by the Idols of Nachor; Iacob accepted the oath which was tendered to him in the name of a false god; which he would not have done, if it had not beene an oath at all. And hence the Case is plaine, that swearing by a false god is an oath, and therefore bindeth the Swearer in conscience, though it be unlawfully taken.

III. Quest. If in every oath God ought to be cited as a witnesse, how then can God sweare by himselfe, seeing none can witnesse unto him?

Answ.

Answ. This description of an oath whereby the creature sweareth, includes not that oath whereby God sweareth. For the end why God sweareth is, to bind himselfe (as it were) with a bond unto man, whereby hee would have man to repute him a lyar, and no God, if hee fai'es and keepes not his promise. Thus the Lord sweares in his wrath, Heb. 3.11. If they shall enter into my rest. The words of the oath are to be understood with this clause, If, &c. then let me be holden as no God, or as a false God. And in this manner is God said to sweare, when he manifesteth to man that hee is content to bee counted no God, if that which hee avoucheth by oath bee not performed.

Furthermore, in every oath there be foure distinct things. First, an Asseveration of the truth; which should bee avouched, though there were no oath taken. Secondly, a confession or the omnipotent presence, wisdome, justice, and truth of God; whereby we acknowledge, that he is the searcher and knower of the heart; yea, that he is both witnesse, judge, and revenger of falshood and lying. Thirdly, Prayer and invocation, whereby God is called upon, to give testimonie to the conscience of him that sweareth, that he speakes nothing but the truth. These two actions of Confession and Invocation doe make an oath to bee no lesse a true and proper part of Gods worship, than prayer it selfe. Fourthly, Imprecation, in which a man acknowledging God the just revenger of a lie, bindes himselfe to punishment, if hee shall sweare falsly, or speake an untruth wittingly or willingly.

Now though these be the distinct parts of an Oath, yet all of them are not expressed in the forme of every oath; but sometimes one, sometimes two of the principall, and the other concealed, but yet alwaies understood. For example: the Prophet Jeremie teacheth the people of Israel a forme of swearing, Thou shalt sweare the Lord liveth, Ier. 4.2. In which there is expressed only the second part, Confession, and in that, the rest are to be understood. Againe, the words of Ruth to Naomi, Ruth. 1.17. The Lord doe so to me, and more also, if ought but death depart me and thee, are only an Imprecation, in which the other parts are infolded. So the oath which God maketh, Heb. 3.11. If they shall enter into my rest, is expressed onely by Imprecation, and the other parts understood, though they be not mentioned. In common speech betweene man and man, it is usually avouched, (though not wickedly.) If it be not thus or thus, let me be hanged, I would I were dead, I would I might never move hence, &c. Now this avouchment, howsoever it may be taken, is indeed a forme of sweating, in value and force all one with the oath of God, when he saith, If they enter into my rest, let me be no God, but a deceiver.

Sometimes two parts of the foure are expressed, and the rest understood: 2 Cor. 1.23. Now I call God to record unto my soule. Here Invocation with Imprecation is uttered in speech, and the other two conceived in the minde. By these particulars, wee see it usuall in Scripture, to propound formes of sweating by expressing some one or two particular parts in stead of the rest; yet so, as the parts concealed be all understood: for otherwise the oath is not formall and entire.

II. Question.

How an oath is to be taken in a good and godly manner?

For the answering hereof, two Rules are to be remembred.

The first Rule. He that will take an Oath by the name of God, must sweare in truth, in judgement, in righteousnesse, Ier. 4.2. Here three vertues are required in a lawfull Oath.

First, that it be made in truth. And we must know that there is a double truth; the one of the thing spoken the other of the mind wherein it is conceived. Truth of the thing is, when a mans speech is framed according to the thing as it is indeed, or as neere as possibly may be, and that because God is truth it selfe. This is called by Schoolemen, Logicall verity. Sometimes by reason of mens frailtie, the truth is wanting, because we know not things as they are. The truth of the minde is, when a man speakes or sweares as he thinketh, or is in conscience perswaded of the thing; and this the Schoolemen terme Morall verity. Now though the first of these two be wanting, yet the latter must necessarily be in an oath, lest we fall into perjurie.

The second vertue is Judgement, that is, prudence or wisdome. This Judgement requires discretion and consideration, principally of five things. First, of the thing in question which is to be confirmed. Secondly, of the nature of the oath that is taken. Thirdly, of the minde and true meaning of him that sweareth. Fourthly, of the particular circumstances, of time, place, and persons, when, where, and before whom he sweareth. Fifthly, of the event or issue of the oath. All these are duly to be regarded, that we sweare not rashly or unadvitedly.

The third is Justice, wherein also care must be had of two things. First, that the point to be confirmed be lawfull. And it is then lawfull, when it may stand with pietie and charitie. Secondly, that the occasions of taking the oath be also just; and they be chiefely foure. I. When it may further Gods glory and worship, or serve to prove some doctrine of salvation, in whole, or in part. II. When it may tend to the furtherance of brotherly love, or to the preservation of our neighbours life, goods, or good name: or further, to the confirmation of some league, covenant, or contract made betweene parties upon good ground, and for good and necessary purposes. III. When it serveth to releeve a mans owne private necessitie; as when one sweares to maintaine his owne good name, goods, or life; to confirme his owne faith and truth in contracts. An example hereof we have in Paul, who to confirme the Romanes in the perswasion of his love and care of their salvation, saith, God is my witnes (whom I serve in my spirit, in the Gospel of his Son) that without ceasing I make mention of you, Rom. 1.9. And againe, to keepe his owne credit and good name among the Jewes, I say the truth in Christ, I lie not, my conscience bearing me witnesse in the holy Ghost. Rom. 9.1. IV. When the Magistrate doth exact it by order of justice. This though it be a just occasion and warrant of an oath, yet three Caveats are in it to be observed.

First, that the oath bee ministered lawfully, not against pietie or charitie. Secondly, hee which takes an oath tendered by the Magistrate, must sweare according to the minde and meaning of the Magistrate, who exacts the oath, and not according to his owne private intent. Thirdly, hee must not sweare ambiguously, but in a simple sense, so as the words of his mouth may bee agreeable with that which he conceiveth in his heart, as Psalme 15.2. And whatsoever oath is taken without observation of these Caveats, the same is not taken in truth, but in fraud and deceit. Popish teachers affirme, that in some cases they may sweare in a doubtfull meaning. And this they practise in time of danger, when being convented before the Magistrate, and examined, they answer Yea in word, and conceive a negation, or No in their mindes. A practice most impious, and flat against this excellent Rule of the Prophet, that a man should sweare in truth, judgement, and justice.

The second Rule is, That the forme in which the oath is propounded, must be a plaine, simple, and direct forme, wherein God is directly called to witnesse. For his worship is directly to be given to him: and therefore the oath also being an Invocation of his name, and a part of his worship, is directly to be made.

That the meaning of this Rule may the better appeare, one question is to be answered; Whether in the forme of an oath, a man may not sweare directly by creatures, and indirectly by God?

Most of the Popish sort, and some Protestants hold that hee may. But the truth is otherwise. I say unto you (saith our Saviour) sweare not at all, neither by heaven—nor by the earth—nor by thy head, &c. Matth. 5.34. In which words, hee forbids all indirect oathes whereby men sweare indirectly by creatures, and directly by God: for so did the Pharisies. Againe, if a man might sweare by creatures, and conceale the name of God, it would diminish his Majesty and authority, and much deceit might be used: for the swearer might say that he sware not, but only used an obtestation.

Against this it is objected. 1. That Joseph sware by the life of Pharaoh, Gen. 42.15. therefore it may seeme that oathes by creatures are not unlawfull. Ans. First, it may be said, that Joseph sinned in so sweuring: for therein he imitated the Egyptians, who sware by the life of their King. Secondly, it may be answered, that Joseph doth onely make an asseveration, and not an oath.

Object. 2. The church in the Canticles takes an oath by the creatures, Cap. 2.7. I charge you daughters of Jerusalem, by the roes and by the hindes of the field, &c. Ans. It is no oath, but an obtestation whereby the church cals the creatures to witnesse her earnest affection to Christ. The like is made by Moses, Deut. 30.19. when he saith, I call heaven and earth to record against you this day. And by Paul in his charge to Timothie, 1 Tim. 5.21. I charge thee before the elect Angels. In which and the like speeches, there is no sweating, but a kind of citation, or summoning of the Creatures as witnesses. And there is great difference betweene an oath and an obtestation. In the Obtestation, there is no more but a calling of the creature to give testimonie, the matter being already apparent and manifest. But in an Oath, where the matter is not so manifest, God is made not only a witnesse, but also a judge and revenger.

Object. 3. If Saint Paul sweares by his rejoycing in Christ, 1 Cor. 15.31. which rejoycing was a created passion, or a creature. Ans. That was also an obtestation, or a word of avouchment and asseveration; and not an oath. For it is all one, as if he had said thus; My sorrowes and afflictions which I endure for Christ would testifie (if they could speake) that as certainly as I rejoyce in Christ, so certainly I die daily.

Object. 4. Abigail sware to David by the creature; As the Lord liveth, and as thy soule liveth, 1 Sam. 25.26. Ans. The former part of her speech may be called an oath, but the latter is onely an obtestation, or earnest avouchment joyned with an oath.

Now, although it be in no sort lawfull to sweare by creatures, yet when a man sweareth directly by God, he may name the creatures in way and forme of an oath; specially if hee make them as his pawnes and pledges set before God, that he may in justice be revenged upon him in them, if hee lieth and sweareth not a truth.

Sect. 3.

III. Question.

How farre forth doth an Oath binde, and is to be kept?

The answer to this Question is large, and therefore for order sake I distinguish it into two parts; and first I will shew when an oath binds; secondly, when it bindeth not.

For the first; an Oath taken of things certaine, lawfull, and possible, is to be kept, yea and binds alwaies, though it be rendred even to our enemies. To this purpose God hath given speciall commandement in sundry places, Numb. 30.3. Whosoever sweareth an oath to binde his soule by a bond, he shall not breake his word, but shall doe according to all that proceeds out of his mouth: Matth. 5.33. Thou shalt not forsweare thy selfe, but shalt performe thine oathes unto the Lord: Exod. 20.7. Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vaine; that is, lightly and rashly. But Gods name is taken in vaine, when an oath made of things lawfull and possible is not kept. David at the humble request of Shemei, (who had before cursed him) pardons his fault for the time, and sweares to him that hee should not dye, 2 Sam. 19.23. David made conscience of this oath, knowing himselfe to be bound thereby, and therefore till his death he kept it; onely he charged Salomon not to count him innocent, 1 King. 2.9.

Now for the better clearing of the answer, we are to consider foure particular cases touching this point.

I. Case. What if a man take an oath by false gods, whether is hee bound to keepe it yea or no?

Answ. He is, and the reasons are these. First, from the like. There was a question among the Scribes and Pharisies, Mat. 23.16. whether a man swearing by the creature were a debter or no? The Pharisies taught, that if a man swore by creatures, the oath did not binde: But Christ, vers. 20. affirmeth, that he that sweares by the Temple, or by the Altar, or by heaven, sweares by God indirectly, and so takes an oath, though not a lawfull oath, and thereupon remaines bound and is a debter: now by proportion hee that sweares by false gods, sweares by God indirectly, because the false God is in the opinion of him that sweares, a true God, and so his oath bindeth, and is to be kept. Secondly, Abraham accepteth the oath that Abimelech tendreth unto him in the name of a false God, Gen. 21.23. So doth Iacob accept of the oath made unto him by Laban, Gen. 31.53. which they could not have done, if their oathes had not beene sufficient bonds to binde them to observation and performance.

It will be said, Hee that admits of an oath by an Idoll, doth communicate in the sinne of him that sweareth. Ans. In case of necessity, a man may admit of such an oath without sin. A poore man being in extreme want, borroweth of an usurer upon interest: it is sinne to the usurer to take it, but it is not so in the poore man, who is compelled by the usurer to give interest: Thus the poore man doth use well the iniquitie of the usurer. So it is in an oath: A godly man may well use and take benefit by the wicked oathes of idolaters, so farre forth as they shall serve for the ratifying and confirming of lawfull covenants.

II. Case. If a man take an oath, and afterward endure hurt or dammage by it, whether is he then bound to keepe his oath or no?

Answ. If the losse be but temporarie and private, (the oath being made of a thing lawfull) it must bee endured. For David reckoneth it among the properties of a good man, That he sweareth and changeth not, though it be to his hurt, Psal. 15.4.

And here a difference is to be made betweene a promissory oath, and a single promise. A single promise may bee reversed by the will and consent of him to whom it is made, but a promise made by an oath is to be kept, though losses and hinderances ensue thereupon. For the reverence we beare to the name of God used in the oath, ought to be of greater force with us, than any private hinderance or inconvenience which may befall us upon the performance of the same.

III. Case. Whether doth an oath binde conscience, whereunto a man is drawne by fraud and subtiltie?

Answ. If the oath be of things lawfull and possible, it bindeth and is to be kept, though wee were induced to it by deceit. Iosua deceived by the Gibeonites, was brought to make covenant of peace with them, and to bind it by an oath: now perceiving after three daies, that they had wrought it by craft, he would not touch them in reverence of the oath that he had taken, Iosh. 9.18,19,20. And about 300. yeares after, when Saul had slaine certaine of the Gibeonites, the Israelites for that fact were punished with three yeares famine, which could not bee stayed, till seven persons of Sauls house were hanged up in Gibeah, 2 Sam. 21.

IV. Case. What if a man take an oath by feare and compulsion, is he to keepe it yea or no? For example; A man falling into the hands of theeves, for the safety of his life is urged to take a solemne oath, that he will fetch and deliver them some portion of money, and withall never disclose the parties. The oath being thus taken, the Question is, whether he be bound to keepe it.

Ans. Some Divines are of opinion that the oath is to be kept, and some say no: but generally it is answered that it must be kept, because this feare did not abolish the consent of his will. But if it be alleaged, that in so doing he shall hurt the common-wealth: Answer is made, that if he doe not sweare secrecy, hee may in probability bring greater dammage to the weale publike, in depriving it of a member by the losse of his owne life. But it will be said, by this meanes he maintaines a theefe. Answ. Be it so: yet he remaines excusable, because that was not his intent, but only to preserve his owne life to the good of the Common-wealth.

Thus the most and best Divines doe hold. But for my part I leave it in suspense; though it seemes in likelihood that the partie which sweares silence, doth after a sort maintaine theft, and communicate with the sinne of the robber: and further gives occasion, that others may fall into the like hazard and jeopardie of their lives. And so much of the first part of the Answer.

The second part of the Answer to this third maine Question followes: namely, to shew when an oath bindes not. An oath doth not binde in six cases.

I. When it is against the word of God, and tends to the maintenance of sinne. The reason is, because when God will not have an oath to binde, it must not binde. For an oath must not be a bond of iniquitie. Hereupon David having sworne a rash oath, to destroy Nabal and his house, and being stayed from it by the Lord in the meanes of Abigail, he praiseth God in this manner: Blessed bee the Lord God of Israel, which sent thee this day to meet me, and blessed be thy counsell, and blessed be thou which hast kept me this day from comming to shed blood, 1 Sam. 25.32,33.

II. If it be made against the wholesome lawes of the Common-wealth; because every soule must bee subject to the higher powers, Rom. 13.1.

III. If it be taken of such persons as want reason; as of children, mad-men, or fooles; because they know not what they sweare: and there can be no binding of conscience, when he that sweareth wanteth reason to discerne what he doth.

IV. If it be made by those who are under the tuition of their superiours, and have no power to binde themselves; as by children which are under the government of their Parents: For these are part of their parents goods; and therefore not fit to undertake an oath without their consent. Neither are they to chuse a calling, or make any contract of themselves, but onely by the direction and advice of their parents, though some of the Popish tort doe erroneously teach, that a child may binde himselfe by oath, to become a Monke of this or that order, without consent of parents.

V. If it be made of things impossible: for then it is a vaine oath.

VI. If at the first it were lawfull, and afterward become impossible and unlawfull. For such oathes God himselfe may be said to reverse. Thus if a man binde himselfe by oath to live in single life without marriage, and after findes that God hath not given him the gift of continencie, in this case his oath becomes impossible to be kept, and therefore being reverted by God, and becomming unlawfull, it may be broken without impietie.

To these six, the Papists adde two other. The first, when the oath is made upon custome. And they put this example; If two men going out of a doore, or over a bridge, the one sweares by God that he will not goe first, likewise sweares the other: yet at the last after contention, one of them goes first. In this case, saies the Papist, the oath binds not. Ans. Custome cannot make that which is sinne to bee no sinne, or perjurie to be no perjurie: but rather doubles the sinne, and makes it above measure more vile and abhominable; and they that give themselves to this usuall and customable swearing, cannot but oftentimes become guiltie of flat perjurie.

The second Case is, when the Superiour power, that is, the Pope or other inferiour Bishops give order to the contrarie, by relaxation or dispensation. Ans. It is false. For in every lawfull oath there is a double bond, one of man to man, the other of man to God. Now if in the oath taken, man were only obliged to man, the oath might be dispensable by man: But seeing man when he sweareth to man, sweareth also to God, and thereby is immediately bound to God himselfe, hence it followeth, that an oath taken cannot have release from any creature. Therefore our Saviour Christs commandement is, Thou shalt not forsweare thy selfe, but shalt performe thy oaths: to whom? to the Lord, Mat. 5.33. And the oath that passed betweene David and Jonathan, is called the Lords oath, 2 Sam. 21.7. and 1 Sam. 20.8. God will have the oath to binde, as long as seemeth good unto him, yea and cease binding when it pleaseth him. And that which himselfe bindeth, or will have to bee bound, no creature can loose: The things which God hath coupled, let no man separate, Mat. 19.6. And herein the Pope shewes himselfe to bee Antichrist, in that he challengeth power to dispense with a lawfull oath, made without error or deceit, of things honest and possible.

Out of this answer, another Question may be resolved, namely, when doth a man commit Perjurie.

Answ. I. When a man sweares that which he knowes to be false. II. When he sweares that which he meanes not to doe. III. When he sweareth to doe a thing, which hee also meanes to doe, yet afterwards doth it not. In these three, the not performing of an oath made is flat perjurie.

That we may yet be informed concerning the sinne of Perjurie, one Question of moment is to be skanned. In Societies and Corporations, there be Lawes and Orders, to the keeping whereof, every one admitted to an office takes a corporall oath: Afterward it fals out upon occasion, that he breakes some of the said Statutes: The Question is, whether he be not in this case perjured?

Answ. Statutes are of two sorts. Some are principall or fundamentall, which serve to maintain the state of that body or corporatiō.

Others

Others lesse principall or mixt, that serve for order or decencie. In the statutes principall, the law-maker intends obedience simply; and therefore they are necessarie to be kept. But in the lesse principall, hee exacts not obedience simply, but either obedience or the penaltie; because the penaltie is as much beneficiall to the state of that body, as the other. The breach of the former makes a man guilty of perjurie; but it is otherwise in the latter, to bee it the delinquent partie bee content to beare the mulct, if it be imposed. Thus students and others belonging to such facieties, may in some sort excuse themselves from the sinne of perjurie, though not from all fault, in breaking some of the lesser locall statutes, else few could live in any societie without perjurie.

Yet one more Question is propounded touching perjurie; whether a man may exact an oath of him whom hee feares or knowes will forsweare himselfe? Answ. A private man must not; but a Magistrate may, if the partie offer to take his oath, (not being urged thereto,) and be first admonished of the grievousnesse of the said sinne of perjury. In the execution of Civill Justice, Magistrates must not stay upon mens sinnes: Moses expected not the Israelites repentance for their idolatrie; but presently proceeded unto punishment. Neither must the publike good of the Common-wealth be hindred, upon the likelihood or suspition of a mans perjurie.

CHAP. I.

Of Vowes.

THe seventh head of the Outward worship of God is concerning a vow. All the Questions whereof may be reduced to these foure.

I. Question.

What is a Vow?

Answ. A vow is a promise made to God of things lawfull and possible. I call it a promise, to distinguish a vow from a single purpose. For a purpose may be changed, but a vow lawfully made cannot. Againe, there is great difference betweene these two: for in a vow, there is first a purpose to doe a thing: secondly, a binding of our selves to doe that we purpose. For this cause I terme it a promise, because it is a purpose with a bond, without which there can be no vow made.

In the next place I adde a promise made to God; not to Saint, Angel, or Man. The reasons are these. First, a vow is properly the worke of the heart consisting in a purpose. Now God alone knowes the heart, and he alone is able to discerne of the purpose and intent of the same: which no Angell, Saint, or other creature can possibly doe. Secondly, when the vow is made, none can punish and take revenge of the breach thereof, but God. Thirdly, in the old Testament, the Jews never vowed but to God; because the vow was a part of Gods worship: Deut. 23. 21. When thou shalt vow a vow unto the Lord thy God, thou shalt not be slacke to pay it, for the Lord thy God will surely require it of thee, and so it should be sinne unto thee. Where by the way, we may take notice of the superstition of the Popish Church, that maketh vowes to Saints and Angels, which is in effect to make them gods, and to worship them as the Jewes worshipped God in the old Testament.

II. Question.

Whether a vow be now in the new Testament, any part of Religion or Gods worship?

The answer is threefold.

First, if a vow be taken for a promise of morall obedience; the answer is, that a vow is indeed the worship of God, and so shall bee to the end of the world. For as God (for his part) promiseth mercie in the covenant of grace; so we in Baptisme doe make a vow and promise of obedience to him in all his commandements; and therefore Peter calleth Baptisme a stipulation, that is, the promise of good conscience to God. This promise once made in Baptisme is renewed so oft as wee come to the Lords Supper, and further continued in the daily spirituall exercises of Invocation and Repentance.

But it may be said, wee are already bound to the obedience of the Law, by order of divine Justice; therefore wee cannot further binde our selves. Answer. He that is bound by God, may also binde himselfe. David, though he was bound by God in conscience to keepe the Law; yet he binds himselfe freely by oath to helpe his owne weaknesse, and to keepe himselfe from falling, when he saith: I have sworne and will performe it, that I will keepe thy righteous judgements, Psal. 119. vers. 106. and the same bond is no lesse necessary and behovefull for us, if wee consider how prone and readie we are to fall from the worship of God.

The second answer. If a vow be taken for a promise of some ceremoniall dutie, as of Sacrifices and Oblations, or of giving house, lands, and goods to the Temple, then wee must put a difference betweene the Old Testament and the New. In the Old Testament, the vow of such duties was part of Gods worship, but in the New it is not, and that for these Reasons.

First, the Jewish ceremonies were to the Jewes a part of Gods worship, but to us Gentiles they are not, considering they are all in Christ abolished, and none of them doe now stand stand in force by Gods Law to us. Thus the Passeover was a ceremonie, or service appointed by God to bee observed of the Israelites and their posteritie, Exod. 12. 24, 25. and therefore stood as a part of Gods worship to them for a perpetuall ordinance. But to us in the new Testament, both it and other Legall ceremonies are abrogated, and we have onely two Sacraments to be administred and received, as seales of the promises of God, and parts of his worship, baptisme, and the Supper of the Lord.

Secondly, that which is not commended unto us by God, in the name of worship, is no worship to us. Now the ceremonies of the Jewes are no where commended unto us in that name; and therefore it is a vaine thing for any man to vow the observation thereof.

Thirdly, vowes of ceremoniall duties did in a peculiar manner, and upon speciall respects, pertaine to the Jewes. Hereupon, when they vowed house, lands, goods, &c. to the use of the Temple, this they did, as being the Lords Tenants, of whom alone they held their possessions: and hereby they acknowledged, and also testified their Homages and Services due unto him. And this particular respect concerneth not the Church and people of the new Testament: whence it followeth, that they are not tied by the same bond to performe worship unto God by the vowes of ceremonies, gifts, oblations, and sacrifices.

The third and last part of the Answer. If a vow bee taken for a promise of some bodily and outward worke or exercise, as fasting, giving of Almes, abstaining from certaine meats and drinkes, &c. then it is not any part of Gods worship, but onely an helpe, stay, and furtherance of the same. For first, we have liberty of conscience in Christ, to use, or not to use all indifferent things. Now Gods worship is not a thing of that nature, but absolutely necessary. Secondly, Paul, 1 Tim. 4. 8. affirmeth, that bodily exercise profiteth little, but godlinesse is profitable for all things: In which words he opposeth godlinesse to bodily exercise; and therefore godlinesse, or the worship of God, consisteth not in them.

But the words of David are alleaged to the contrary, Psalm. 76. 11. Vow and performe unto the Lord your God. Where we have a double command, one to make vowes, another to pay them. To which I answer: first, if David speaketh of the vow of all morall duties, then the Commandement concerneth every man, because the thing commanded is a part of Gods worship. For it is as much as if he had said, Vow thankfull obedience unto God, and performe it. Againe, if the place bee meant of the vow of ceremoniall duties, then it is a Commandement peculiar to the Old Testament, and so bindes the Jewes only: howbeit not all of them, but only such as had just cause to make a vow: for otherwise they had liberty to abstaine from vowing, Deut. 23. 22. When thou abstainest from vowing, it shall be no sin unto thee. Of one of these two kindes must the place alleaged necessarily be understood, and not of the third, which is of bodily exercise: for then it should reverse Christian libertie in the use of things indifferent, which no commandement can doe.

By light of this Answer, wee may discerne the errour of the Popish Church, which maketh vowes a part of religion and the worship of God. Nay further, it teacheth that some vowes, as namely those of Povertie, Continencie, Regular Obedience to this or that Order, are workes of merit and supererogation, tending to a state of perfection, even in this life; and deserving a further degree of glory in heaven, than the workes of the Morall Law.

III. Question.

When a Vow made doth binde, and when not?

Before I give answer to the Question, I will lay downe this Ground.

In making of a lawfull Vow, foure Conditions are to be observed.

The first concernes the person of him that voweth, that hee bee a fit person. His fitnesse may be discerned by two things: First, if he be at his owne libertie, (as touching the things whereof hee makes his vow,) and not under the government of a superiour. Thus in the old Testament, if a daughter had made a vow without the consent or allowance of her father, it might not stand in effect, Numb. 30. 4, 5. Secondly, if the party keepe himselfe within the compasse of his calling generall and particular. Hence it followes, that vowes of going a Pilgrimage, to worship this or that idoll, in this or that place, for example, Saint James of Compostella and the Lady of Lauretto, &c. are utterly unlawfull, because such persons by this practice doe leave their calling and condition of life, and take upon them a calling not warranted by the Lord.

The second Condition is concerning the matter of a Vow. It must be Lawfull, Possible, and Acceptable to God. Hereupon it follows that there bee foure things which cannot bee the matter of a Vow. The first is sinne. Thus the Jews bound themselves with a Vow, that they would neither eat nor drink, til they had killed Paul, Act. 23. 12. 14. This their vow was nothing else but a threatning of God himselfe, and therefore utterly unlawfull. Secondly, trifles, and light matters, as when a man voweth not to take up a straw or such like. And this is a plaine mocking of God. Thirdly, things impossible, as to fly, or to goe on foot to Jerusalem. Fourthly, things meerely necessary; as to die, which cannot be avoided.

The third is touching the Forme of a Vow. It must bee voluntary, and free. And that it may be so, three things are necessarily required. First, that it be made in judgement, that is, with reason and deliberation. Next, that it bee done with consent of will. And thirdly, with liberty of conscience.

Hence it appeares, that the Vowes of children, mad-men, and fooles, or such as are taken upon rashnesse, or constraint; also the vow of perpetuall abstinence from things simply indifferent, are all utterly unlawfull. For the first sort are not done upon judgement, the next without due consideration, and the last are greatly prejudiciall to Christian liberty.

The fourth concernes the End; which is not to bee a part of Gods worship, but onely a stay and prop to further and helpe in the same. Now there be three particular ends of a vow. First, to shew our selves thankfull to God for blessings received: secondly, to prevent sinne to come, by keeping sobrietie and moderation: thirdly, to preserve and increase our faith, prayer, repentance, and obedience.

This Ground being laid, the Answer to the Question pre pounded is this: When in vowing wee observe the conditions præ-required, the vow is lawfull, and consequently bindes the party vowing, so as if hee keepe it not, he dishonoureth God. But when the said conditions doe not concurre in the action of vowing, it becomes unlawfull, and the party remaines free, and not bound to performance.

Here by the way a Question of some moment is made; Whether Iephte upon his Vow did offer his Daughter in sacrifice or no? considering that it is plaine, even by the light of nature, as also by the doctrine before taught, that a man is bound by the vow which he maketh.

This Question admitteth sundry answers, according to the divers opinions and judgements of men, upon the place written, Iudges 11.39. And my purpose is not to examine that which others have brought in way of resolution, but briefly to deliver that which I take to bee the truth. I answer therefore, that Iephte did not offer his daughter in sacrifice upon his vow; but onely dedicated her unto God, after the manner of the Nazarites, to the end of her daies, to leade her life apart in a single estate. The truth of this answer will appeare by these reasons:

First, in the 37. verse of the Chapter, the daughter of Iephte craves leave of her father to goe apart into the mountaines, for two moneths space, to bewaile her Virginitie. Where it may bee observed, that shee went not to deplore the losse of her life, but her future estate and condition, because shee was (upon her fathers vow) to live a perpetuall single life. And why? Surely because (as the text saith, v. 39. shee had not knowne a man; and it was accounted a curse in Judea, for a woman always to live unmarried.

Secondly, in the last verse it is said in our common English translation, that the daughters of Israel went yeare by yeare, to lament the daughter of Iephte: but I take it, it may be as well, or better translated out of the Hebrew, they went * to talke or confer with her, and so to comfort herrand that this interpretation may not seeme strange, the very same word is observed in this sense, Iudg. 5.11. there shall they * talke or conferre of the righteousnesse of the Lord. Now if they went yeare by yeare to comfort her, then she was not put to death.

Thirdly, Iephte is commended by the holy Ghost, for the excellency of his faith, and that out of the same history. Now the commendation of his faith, and the unnaturall murther of his daughter, cannot stand together. But it will bee said, that Iephte vowed, that whatsoever came out of his doores to meet him should be the Lords, and he would offer it for a burnt offering, verse 31. Answer. The words may more truly be read thus; or I will offer it in sacrifice: and the meaning of the vow was this: That thing which first meeteth me, if it be a thing to be sacrificed, I will sacrifice it: if not, I will dedicate it to the Lord. For it seemes to consist of two parts, whereof the latter is coupled to the former, by a disceretive conjunction, as the Grammarians speake. In this manner the word is else-where taken, so as it may either way be expounded. In the fourth Commandement, Exodus 20. vers. 10. in our common translation it is read, thou and thy sonne, and thy daughter; but out of the Hebrew it may bee translated either and or or.

It will be said againe, that Iephte rent his cloathes, because his daughter met him, when hee returned from the victory. Answ. That was in regard of her vowed virginitie, which was a curse among the Jewes. And besides, he had but one daughter, and by this meanes of sacrificing her, all hope of posterity after him was cut off.

But it seemes that Monasticall vowes of virginitie by this example are lawfull. Answ. Indeed the custome of vowing virginitie began in those dayes, but they thought it not a state of perfection, but rather an estate of misery, as may appeare, in that he rent his cloaths when the met him; and the daughters of Israel went to comfort her, as being now in a woefull and miserable estate.

Upon these reasons I conclude, that Iephte did not offer up his daughter in sacrifice, but onely set her apart, to live a single life, to the honour and service of God. And Iephte might know, even by the light of nature, that it was a sinne to vow his daughters death, and a double sinne to kill her.

* Le-thannoth. So this expounded by the Hebrew Doctors, Kimchi in Iud. 11.40.

* Iathannu. Heb. 11.32.

IV. Question.

Whether Monasticall or Monkish vowes binde or no?

To

To this the Papists answer affirmatively, placing the greatest part of their Religion, in practice and observance of these vowes.

That we may know them the better, they are in number three. The first is the vow of continency, whereby a man renounceth Marriage for ever, and voweth unto God perpetuall virginitie. The second, of Voluntary Poverty, which is, when a man gives over all property of his goods, and bindes himselfe to live by begging. The third is, of Regular obedience, when a man resignes himselfe in conscience to bee ruled by another, and to keepe some devised order, in all actions and duties pertaining to religion.

Now the Question being, whether these vowes binde or no? I answer in a word, they doe not, and that for these reasons.

I. First, they are flat against the law of God, which I make manifest in the particulars. The vow of perpetuall chastitie is expressly against Gods commandement, 1 Cor. 7.9. If they cannot abstaine, let them marry: for it is better to marry than to burne. To this text the Papists answer, three wayes.

First, they say that this place of Scripture is onely a divine permission, and not a Commandement: we reply againe directly, that it is a plaine Commandement. For the intent of the holy Ghost in that text, and in the whole chapter is, to ordaine a necessary remedie for incontinencie, which Paul cals burning, and for the avoiding of fornication, which brings destruction to the soule. And for that purpose, he speakes not in permitting manner, but in imperative termes, Let them marry.

Secondly, they answer, that the words concerne onely incontinent persons, that commit fornication. Wee on the other side affirme, that they are not only given to them that live incontinently, but to all persons, which are subject to burning, which burning may bee without incontinency.

For the better understanding whereof, let it bee considered, that there bee three distinct degrees of lust in man. The first is, when the temptation is first received into the minde. The second, when the same temptation prevaileth, though with some resistance and trouble of the minde and conscience, which also (though no outward offence as yet follow) is a degree of burning. The third is, when the temptation so farre prevaileth, that the heart and will is overcome, and the duties of religion for the time utterly hindered. This is the highest and worst kinde of burning. And if we consider these degrees well, it will easily appeare, that there may be burning, without incontinent living.

Thirdly, they answer, that this text speakes of those persons alone that are free, not of those who are bound from marriage by solemne vow. Wee contrariwise affirme and hold, that the words are generall, and plainly directed to all persons bound by vow or otherwise; and that appeares by verse 35 where he saies, I speak not this to intangle you in a snare. These words do shew, what Pauls mind was, touching the vow of perpetual virginity: For hee leaves every man according to Gods ordinance, to his owne liberty, willing none by vow to binde himselfe from the use thereof.

Now for the vow of Regular Obedience, that also is against the word of God, 1 Corin. 7.23. Yeare bought with a price, be not the servants of men. Where the Apostle forbids us to subject our hearts and consciences to the lawes and ordinances of men, in matters of Religion; and consequently overthrowes the vow of Regular obedience. For in that man bindes himselfe to be ruled (in all things belonging to Gods worship) according to the will and pleasure of his Superiour, yea, to eat drinke, sleepe, to be cloathed, &c. according to a certaine rule given and prescribed by him; whereas in regard of conscience we are bound only unto God.

Lastly, the vow of voluntary Povertie is also a plaine abuse of Gods owne ordinance and appointment, Deut. 15.5. that there should be no begger in Israel.

But it may seeme, that this law is not perpetuall. For in the New Testament we reade, that there were beggers, as namely one that was laid at the gate of the Temple, daily to aske almes, Act. 3. Ans. This Law neither was then, nor is now abrogated by God, but the observation of it (at that time, and since) was much neglected. And the neglect of provision for the poore is the cause of begging: and the vow of perpetuall povertie still remaines as a manifest breach of Gods holy ordinance, notwithstanding any thing that may be pretended to the contrary.

II. The second reason followes. Monkish vowes, as they are against Gods Commandement, so are they also against the Libertie of Conscience, which wee have by Christ touching the use of the creatures, and ordinances of God; as riches, marriage, meats, drinkes and apparell. Stand fast, saith the Apostle, in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made you free, Gal. 5.1. Againe, Let no man judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy day. Col. 2.16. In these places there is granted unto man, a free use of all things indifferent, so it be not in case of offence.

Now in Monkish vowes, those things which God hath made indifferent, and put in our liberty, are made necessary: whereas no ordinance of man, can make things simply necessary, and parts of Gods worship, which hee himselfe hath made indifferent, and left free to the will of man. And hence it was, that the forbidding of meats and marriage were termed by the Apostle, The doctrine of devils, 1 Tim. 4.1.

But (will some say) doth not the civill Magistrate in our Common-wealth forbid the use of some meats? Answ. He doth. But by his Commandement hee takes not away the liberty that wee have in the use of things indifferent, but doth onely moderate it for the common good, which he may lawfully.

III. The third reason. Some of them are out of the power and ability of him that voweth; as the vow of perpetuall chastity in single life. For our Saviour saith, All men cannot receive this word, but they to whom it is given, Matth. 19.11. that is, Continency is a gift of God, whereof all men are not capable, but those onely to whom he giveth it, when, and as long as it pleaseth him: neither is it denied unto some because they will not, but because they are not able.

Against this the Papist obiecteth, that wee may receive any good gift of God, if we pray for it: for Christ hath said, Aske, and ye shal receive, Matt. 7.7. Ans. It is false. Gods gifts are of two sorts: some are common to all that beleeve, and necessary to salvation: as faith, repentance, obedience, the feare of God. Some againe are special gifts not given to all, nor needfull to salvation, but peculiar onely to some: as health, wealth, continency, single life, &c. Now the promise of our Saviour, aske and ye shal receive, is meant of things necessary to salvation, and not of particular and speciall gifts. For some may pray for them, and yet never receive them. Thus Paul praied thrice, that the pricke in his flesh, the messenger of Satan, might bee removed from him, yet hee was not heard, nor his petition granted. And why? because that which he praied for was not a common gift necessary to salvation, but a speciall grace, for the time of the temptation, wherewith hee was presently assaulted: whereupon Answer was given, My grace is sufficient for thee.

And hence wee learne in what manner to aske things at the hands of God, when wee pray. Such as are necessary to salvation, wee may aske absolutely and simply; but things that are lesse necessary, with this condition: If it may stand with the good will and pleasure of God.

Againe, the Papist alleageth an example of two married persons; the one whereof being smitten by the hand of God with the dead palsie, the other must needs pray for the gift of continency. Answ. In this case a married partie may aske it, and by Gods mercy obtaine it, because now there remaines unto him or her no other remedy. But it is not so with single persons, considering that they have another remedy, which is marriage: and therfore they may not looke, or hope to obtaine such a gift.

Thirdly, they say God hath given to all men sufficient aid and strength, that if they will use the meanes, they may have the gift of chastity. For sufficient grace is given to all, though not effectuall. Answ. It is false: there is neither sufficient, nor effectuall grace given to all, to live a single life: but it is a rare and special gift given only to some, Paul, to Timothy, willeth younger women, not to endevour to forbeare, when they have not the gift, but in want thereof to marry, 1 Tim. 5.14. Where he takes it for granted, that they had no such power given them of God, to live in perpetuall chastitie though they would.

IV. The fourth reason. Popish vowes doe abolish that order which God hath set in the society of mankinde, to wit that men should not onely serve him in the duties of the first Table, but in the duties of the second, by serving of men, Gal. 5.13. By love serve one another. Againe, Rom. 13.10. love is called the fulfilling of the Law: because the law of God is practised, not apart by it selfe, but in and with the love of our neighbour. From this order it followeth, that every man beside the generall calling of a Christian must have some particular kind of life, in the which he must walke, and therein doe service to men: which if hee refuse to doe, he must not eat, according to the Apostles Rule, 2 Thess. 3.10.

Now these vows make a separation betwixt these two: for they bring men into a generall calling, but they utterly frustrate and make void the particular and the duties of it; so as a man keeping them cannot bee serviceable to man, either in Church or common-wealth. Besides, by the vow of povertie, the Apostles rule is disanulled, 1 Tim. 5.16. which is, that if a man bee able to maintaine himselfe, or have any kindred able to doe it, hee should not bee chargeable to the Church: and so there might bee sufficient Almes to them that are truly poore.

V. The fifth Reason. They bring in againe Judaisme: for Iewish Religion by Gods appointment stood in bodily rites, and outward ceremonies, actions, and gestures, yea in outward things, as garments, meats, drinkes. And their rule was, touch not, taste not: from all which we are wholly freed by Christ.

VI. Sixthly, these vowes are Idolatrous and superstitious: for they are made and observed with an opinion of Gods worship, of merit, & of the state of perfection, whereas nothing can be made Gods worship, but that which himselfe commandeth. And bodily exercises are unprofitable, as Paul saith, and therefore they cannot be meritorious. And further to dreame of a state of perfection beyond the Law of God is to make the Law it selfe imperfect: whereas contrariwise, the Law of the Lord is perfect, righteous, pure, Psal. 19.7,8.

VII. Lastly, these vowes are against the preservation of nature; for by them, specially that of perpetuall chastitie, men are brought to destroy even their owne bodies and lives, which they are bound to preserve and maintaine, Eph. 5.29. No man ever yet hated his owne flesh, but nourisheth and cherisheth it. The Apostle, even in his daies, noted it as a fault in a voluntary Religion, that was then taken up by some, that for the maintenance thereof, thereof, they spared not their owne bodies, Col. 2.23. And like unto that is the practice of the Popish Votaries, which tendeth to the ruine and overthrow of nature and life it selfe.

These be the reasons. In the next place wee are to consider the Allegations that are commonly made in the favour and defence of Popish Vowes.

And first it is objected: In the Old Testament, Vowes were a part of Gods worship: therfore they are so to be holden in the New. Ans. There is great difference betweene them. For first, they had their warrant out of Gods word: these have not so, they are expresse testimonies of Scripture against these vowes.

Secondly, in their vows there was alwaies right reserved to superiours, to reverse them, if they liked them not. But in Monasticall vowes all right is taken from superiours. For children are permitted to vow, and their promises must stand against Parents consent. And wives (according to Popish doctrine) may vow against the expresse consent of their husbands.

Thirdly, they were not perpetuall, but ceased with the ceremoniall law: But these are supposed to have a perpetuall equitie, that must continue till the end of the world.

Secondly, they alleage that which is written, Matth. 19.12. Some have made themselves chaste for the kingdome of heaven. Answ. The meaning of the text is not, that some have vowed single life, but that there are some who being assured that they have the gift of continency, upon that gift, doe endevour to maintaine their present estate, that so they may the better serve God, and advance his kingdome both in themselves and others.

Thirdly, they object, 1 Tim. 5.12. where Paul speaks of certaine young women, which have damnation, because they have broken their first faith; that is, (as they interprete it) their vow of single life. Answer. The words are not to be understood of the faith of the vow; but either of that faith and promise, which was made to God in their Baptisme, or the faith and promise of service and releefe to bee performed to the poore; and for the breach of either of these, they may be said to incurre damnation.

Fourthly, they say Christ himselfe was a begger, and therefore why may not wee also be beggers? Ans. Though Christ was poore, yet was hee no begger. For he kept a family, and had a treasure: Iudas was the steward of his family, and bare the bagge, John 13.29. Againe, there is mention made of 200. pence, John 6.7. which in likelihood was in the bag that Iudas kept: yea, of the money which he had, the Disciples are said to buy meat, John 4.8. And though it were granted, that Christ was a begger, yet it followed not, that wee should be so. For his povertie was expiatory, and part of his sufferings. So saith the Apostle, He being rich, for our sakes became poore, that wee through his poverty might be made rich, 2 Cor. 8.9.

Fifthly, they alleage, that the Disciples forsooke all, and lived in poverty; and their example is propounded for our imitation. Ans. They forsooke all indeed, yet how? not for ever, but for a time; and that not by vow, but only in affection and disposition of their hearts. For after they had forsaken all, we reade, that they came to their nets and boats againe, John 21.3. Againe, the Apostle Paul speaks of himselfe and the rest, when he saith, Have we not power to leade about a wife being a sister? 1 Cor. 9.5. By which it is plaine, that they put not away their wives.

Sixtly, Matth. 19.21. If thou wilt be perfect (saith Christ to the young man) go sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poore, & thou shalt have treasure in heaven, and come and follow me. Here (saith the Papist) our Saviour prescribes perpetuall poverty by expresse counsell.

Answ. The words are no counsell, but a speciall Commandement of triall, directed to this young man. And the end of it was, to discover unto him his secret pride and hypocrisie, in that he boasted, that he had kept all the commandements, when as indeed hee knew not what they meaned.

Lastly, they object the example of the Rechabites, who according to the Commandement of their father Ionadab, would drinke no wine, nor dwell in houses, nor build, nor plant, nor sow, Ier 35.8,9,10. and the Lord approveth their practice. Answ. They did obey their fathers command in these things, as being things indifferent, but not as parts of Gods worship, in the doing whereof they placed Religion. And they obeyed it carefully, for this end, that they might inure themselves unto hardship. Secondly, this their obedience touching these things stood not by any vow, much lesse was it perpetuall. For then they should have observed all the things which they vowed, equally, which they did not; for they dispensed with their fathers voluntary injunction for dwelling in Tents: and as we reade, vers. 11. They came up for feare of the Chaldeans that were in the land, and dwelt at Ierusalem.

And so much touching Popish Vowes, whereof to conclude, this may be said: That they are all but a meere will-worship, standing upon no ground or warrant of Gods Word, and therefore of no force to binde the consciences of men, but are to bee holden as they are in truth wicked and abominable.

CHAP. XV.

Of fasting.

THe eighth Head of the outward worship of God is fasting.

By Fasting I understand the Religious Fast, which is joyned with the duties of Religion; and namely, the exercises of Prayer and Humiliation. Touching it, there are three principall Questions to be handled in their order.

I. Question.

What is a Religious Fast?

Answ. It is a voluntary and extraordinary abstinence, taken up for a religious end: what this end is, we shall see afterward.

First, I call it voluntary, because the time and particular manner of Fasting is not imposed or determined, but left free to our owne liberty. Againe, I terme it extraordinary, to distinguish it from ordinary Fasting, which stands in the practice of temperance and sobrietie, whereby the appetite is restrained in the use of meats and drinkes, that it doe not exceed moderation. Now this kinde of fast is to be used of all Christians at all times: where as the extraordinary is not daily and ordinarily to be practised, but upon speciall occasions, and at speciall times, inasmuch as it is a more strait and severe abstinence than the other.

II. Question.

How a Religious Fast is to be observed?

Answ. For the observation of it, three things are required.

I. A just and weighty cause.

II. A right manner.

III. Right ends.

Sect. 1.

The just cause of a Fast.

Fasting is then to be used, when a just and weighty cause or occasion thereof is offered. There be two just causes of a fast.

The first is, when some judgement of God hangs over our heads, whether it be publike, as Famine, Pestilence, the Sword, destruction, &c. or private. The Prophet Ioel in the name of the Lord calls the Jewes to a straight and solemne fast, and that upon this just occasion, because the Lord had sent a great dearth upon the land, Ioel 2.14,15. &c. Hester and her company fasted when she had heard news of the intended destruction of the Jews, Ester 4. vers. 16. The people of Ninive, which were not Jewes, but forreiners in regard of the Covenant, when the Prophet came, and denounced destruction unto them for their sins, they gave themselves generally to fasting and prayer, Ion. 3.5.8.

The second cause of fasting is, when wee are to sue and seeke by prayer to God for some speciall blessing, or for the supply of some great want. Thus when Daniel desired to obtaine the deliverance of the children of Israel out of captivity in Babylon, hee gave himselfe to fasting, Dan. 10.3. Thus Christ fasted, and spent the whole night in prayer unto God, before hee chose his twelve Apostles, Luk. 6.12. And in like manner, Paul and Silas when they were to found and plant Churches, used prayer and fasting, Act. 14.23. because in these matters of so great importance, they looked for speciall direction from God himselfe. Lastly, Anna, that shee might bee more fervent in prayer, fasted night and day in the Temple, Luk. 2.37.

The second point is the right manner of fasting, which stands in three things.

The first is abstinence from meat and drink: for therein consisteth the very nature of a fast: and if that be wanting, it is no fast at all. Thus Esther commanding the Iewes to fast for her, bids them neither eat nor drinke for three daies, Esther 4.16.

The second is an abstinence from all delights, which may any way cheere and refresh nature. In this sort Daniel fasted three whole weekes of dayes, abstaining from all pleasant bread, flesh, wine, and ointments, Dan. 10.3. So when David fasted, it is said that he lay all the night upon the earth, that he neither washed, nor annointed himselfe, nor changed his apparell, 2 Sam. 12.16.20. In the solemne fast of the Iewes, the bridegroome and bride must come out of their chambers, Ioel 2.15.16. By these places it is manifest, that in a true fast there is required not onely abstinence from meat and drinke, but from all delights, recreations, and other things that might refresh the nature of man. By this the Popish fasting is justly reproved: wherein though men are injoyned to abstaine from flesh, yet there is given liberty to use other delicates.

The third thing in the manner of a fast is, so farre forth to abstaine from meat, and other delights, as the body may be thereby afflicted. Ezra proclaimes a fast, and he gives a reason thereof, that himselfe and the people might afflict themselves, Ezra 8.2. this afflicting of a mans selfe is expounded by Paul, 1 Cor. 9.27. where he saith, I beat downe my body, and bring it into subjection. Now though wee must humble and afflict our bodies by fasting, yet wee ought not to weaken, abolish, or destroy nature, or do that whereby the strength of nature may be taken away. For such afflicting is forbidden, Col. 2.23. And contrariwise, we are commanded by Christ to pray for daily bread, that is, such food as is fit to sustaine our substances; and therefore we may not by such exercises overthrow the same.

Yet for the better understanding of the manner of fasting, three Questions are to bee answered.

I. Question. How long the Fast must continue?

Ans. The beginning and end of a Fast is left unto our libertie. But it is so long to bee kept, as the principall actions of the fast, that is, is, humiliation and prayer, doe continue. And though the beginning and end thereof bee free to us, yet it is most meet and convenient that solemne fasts should begin in the Morning, and last till the Evening. This was the usuall custome of the Church in the old Testament.

II. Question. Whether in the day of a solemne fast a man may eat any thing or no? and if he may, what? and how often?

Answer. We may eat, and that (if need require) once or twice. Yet here wee must take with us two caveats. First, concerning the quantity of our meat: it must be lesse than ordinary, and onely that which is necessary to preserve nature, and no more: for if it be otherwise, we abolish our fast. Secondly, concerning the qualitie of that we eat; It must not be dainty and pleasant, but the meanest food, and such as hath least delightsomnesse and dilicacy in it. Thus Daniel fasted for three weekes of daies, from morning to evening; in which time he eat but a small quantitie of meat, and that which was none of the daintiest, Dan. 10.3.

These caveats observed, a man may lawfully take some sustenance, even in the time of a solemne fast. For there is no kinde of meat but may then be eaten, quantity and quality being observed. In the old Testament, no cleane beast was forbidden to be eaten in the day of a fast. And in the new, To the pure, saith Paul, Tit. 1.15. all things are pure. And the kingdome of God stands not in meats and drinks, but in righteousnesse, peace, and joy in the holy Ghost. Rom. 14.17.

III. Quest. Whether all persons are bound to keepe the forme prescribed, in the day of the solemne fast?

Ans. All that are able and can abstaine, are bound. Yet because Gods worship stands not in eating or in not eating, some persons are here exempted.

First, all those that are weake, as children, aged persons, and those that are sickly. Secondly, they that by reason of the constitution of their bodies, doe find themselves unfit to pray, and heare the word cheerefully, when their stomacks are empty. These persons may eat in the day of a solemne fast, so that they observe the caveats before remembred. It is not with us in these countries, as it was with the Jewes: They could fast one, two, or three daies together, without any inconvenience; we cannot doe the like. And the reason is plaine. Men that live in those hot countries have cold stomacks, and so may fast the longer, but in colder climates, such as ours is in respect of theirs, men being of hotter stomacks, are not able to continue fasting so long as they.

Sect. 3.

The right ends of fasting.

The third point is, concerning the right ends of a religious fast, and they are foure.

The first is, to subdue the flesh, that is, to bring the body, and so the bodily lusts into subjection to the will and word of God. By eating and drinking the bodie is made heavie, the heart oppressed, the senses dull, and the whole man unfit for the duties of humiliation, prayer, and hearing of the word, Luk. 21.34. That therefore this unfitnesse may be taken away, not only the body it selfe, but the unruly lusts of the flesh are to bee mortified and subdued, by this exercise of fasting.

The second end is, to stir up our devotion, and to confirme the attention of our mindes in hearing and in prayer. To this purpose in the Scripture fasting and prayer are for the most part, if not alwaies, joyned together, because when the stomacke is full, the body and minde are lesse able to doe any good dutie; and contrariwise, when abstinence is used, the heart is lighter, the affections in better order, the whole man more quicke and lively in the service of God. For this very cause Anna is said to worship God night and day with fasting and prayer, Luk. 2.37. And the intent of the holy Ghost there is to commend her for the fervencie of her prayer, which she testified, in that by such exercises she stirred up and increased the attention of her minde.

The third end is, to testifie the humilitie and contrition of our hearts, that is to say, our inward sorrow and griefe for sinne, and our repentance and effectuall turning unto God. Without this end, the fast is but a vaine ceremonie. And therefore the Prophet Ioel cals upon the people to turne unto the Lord with all their hearts, with fasting, weeping, and mourning; to rent their hearts and not their garments, &c. Ioel 2.12,13. The Prophet Esay in like manner reproveth the Jewes, because when they fasted they would afflict their soules for a day: and bow downe their heads as a bul rush, and lie downe in sackcloth and ashes; but made no conscience to turne from their evill waies, Esay 58.5,6. Therefore their outward humiliation was but hypocrisie.

The fourth end of a fast is to admonish us of our guiltinesse before the Lord, and to put us in minde of the acknowledgement of our sins, whereby we become unworthy of any blessing, gift, or mercy, yea, unworthy to goe upon the ground, to breathe in the aire, to eat, drinke, sleepe, or enjoy any other benefit. In a word, that we have deserved by our sinnes all the plagues and punishments threatned in the Law against sinners. The Malefactor in the day of Assises cannot give greater testimonie of the true confession of his guiltinesse, than by comming before the Judge with the rope about his necke; neither can we bring a more notable signe of our true humiliation before God, than by comming before him in the day of the solemne fast, with open confession and proclamation of our guiltinesse, both of sinne and punishment. Hence it was, that in the fast of Ninive, not onely men, but even the beasts were forbidden to feed or drinke water; water; for this very end, that the Ninevites might acknowledge their sins to be so great, and heinous in the sight of God, that in regard thereof, not onely the reasonable creatures themselves, but also the beasts of the field, for their sakes, were unworthy of life and nourishment.

III. Question.

Whether Popish Fasts be Lawfull, and approved of God?

Ans. They are wicked, and therefore neither approved of God, nor to bee observed by man, and that for three speciall causes.

First, the patrons and maintainers of them doe appoint set times of fasting, which are necessary to be kept, upon paine of mortall sinne. And abstinence from flesh (with them) is made a matter of conscience. Now to prescribe set times necessarily to be observed, is contrarie to that libertie which the Church of God and the governours thereof have for this purpose, onely upon speciall occasion. When the question was moved to our Saviour by Johns Disciples, Why they and the Pharisies fasted often, whereas his fasted not, Answer was given in this manner, Can the children of the marriage chamber mourne, as long as the bridegroome is with them? But the daies will come, when the bridegroome shall bee taken away from them, and then shall they fast, Matth. 9. 15. From whence we may gather, that times of fasting must be according to the times of mourning. For Christ gives them to understand, that they were to fast, as occasions of mourning were offered. As therefore there can be appointed no set time for mourning, no more can there be injoyned a set time for fasting, but must be left to the libertie of the Church, to be prescribed as God shall give occasion. Againe, the Apostle reproveth the Church of Galatia, for observing set daies, and moneths, and times, and yeares, in way of Religion, Gal. 4. 10. Montanus the Hereticke is thought (in Ecclesiasticall stories) to have bin the first that made lawes of set-fasting. And the Churches of God in ancient times fasted of their owne accords freely, not inforced by law or commandement, but as time and occasion served.

It is alleaged, that this doctrine seemes to challenge the Church of England of Heresie: for it appointeth and observeth set times of fast. Ans. Nothing lesse. For our Church injoyneth and approveth these times, not upon necessity, or for religions sake, but for civill and politicke respects: whereas the Romish Church holds it a mortall sinne to put off a set fast appointed, so much as till the next day following.

Eusеb Hist. Eccle. l. 5. c. 17.

The second reason. They of the Church of Rome make a distinction of meats. For they wholly forbid flesh to bee eaten upon daies of fast, and allow whit-meats only then to be used; and that of necessity. Now this difference of meats is partly impious, partly absurd and foolish.

Impious it is, because they make it for Religions sake. For since the comming of Christ, there is a libertie given to all men whatsoever, to eat of all kindes of meats without any distinction, commanding abstinence from nothing which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving. It is true indeed, we hold a difference betweene meat and meat, but how? not in way of religion, but in regard of temperance and health for civill and politicke uses and respects. As for the other, we rest upon the word of God, and hold it with Paul, a doctrine of Devils, to command forbearance of meats, in regard of conscience, 1 Tim. 4. 3.

B

But to this place of Paul they give answer and say, that it is spoken of Heretikes, such as the Manichees, and Novatians, &c. were; that held meats in their owne nature unclean. We on the other side reply, and say, that this text condemnes those that make meats any way uncleane. And that the Papists doe put this difference, in way of religion and conscience; as appeareth by their streight prohibitions of flesh as uncleane, and that for conscience sake. And this text they shall never be able to shift off: for it plainly condemneth any such distinction, seeing to the pure all things are pure: and every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, so it be received with thanksgiving, 1 Tim. 4. 4.

C

Furthermore, this difference of meats is also foolish. For first, the light of nature and common sense teacheth, that in such meats as they permit, there is as much delicacie, pleasure, and contentment, yea, as much (if not more) strength: for example: in some fish, fruits, and wines, as in flesh by them forbidden. Yea, Saint Paul ascribes flesh unto fishes, 1 Cor. 15. 39. There is one flesh of men, another of beasts, another of fishes, &c. Secondly, I call it foolish, because in their set Fasts they forbid flesh, but permit divers wines, and the daintiest juncates that the Apothecaries shop can afford: whereas in a solemne fast, all meats, drinkes, and all other delights, of what kinde or nature soever, are to bee forborne. For this was the practice of the Church in former times, to forbeare not onely ordinarie food, but soft apparell, sweet ointments, and whatsoever it was, that served to refresh and cheare the heart, as hath beene shewed.

D

The third Reason. The Church of Rome giveth to their fastings false and erroneous ends: as namely, to merit something at the hands of God thereby, to satisfie his justice for sinne, and to be true and proper parts of his worship. And that these are false and erroneous, I prove by these reasons.

First, they doe wholly frustrate the death of Christ, which is the onely thing in the world appointed by God, to be meritorious and satisfactorie.

Secondly, Fasting of it selfe is a thing indifferent, neither good nor evill. For though it be referred to a religious end, which is the humbling of the soule; yet it is not good in it selfe, but onely in regard of the end. Neither is it any part of Gods worship, being so referred; but onely a prop and furtherance, serving (in the right use thereof) to make a man more fit for the duties of Gods service.

Thirdly, these ends if they be well considered caanot be the true ends of fasting, as will appeare by this example. A begger at our doores entreats an almes, we give it, and he receives it. But will any man say, that by begging he doth merit or deserve his almes? In like manner we are all beggers that have nothing of our owne, neither food, nor raiment, nor any other blessing we doe enjoy, but all we have commeth unto us only from God. Well, upon just occasion, we give our selves to fasting, we pray earnestly unto him for mercie, in the pardon of our sinnes. In this case, is it not great madnesse to thinke, that wee by begging mercie can merit mercie at the hands of God? But prayer (saith the Papist) as it is prayer merits nothing, but as it is a good worke. Ans. Prayer as it is a good worke is no other than begging: and then it is impossible, that it should bee meritorious, unlesse it bee granted, that begging is meritorious, which cannot be.

These reasons considered; I conclude, that Popish fasts, which stand in force among them at this day, are wicked and damnable, and consequently to be abolished, if it were no more, but for the blasphemous ends which they make of them.

And thus much touching this point of Fasting, as also concerning the other Heads of Gods outward worship.

CHAP. XVI.

Of the Sabbath day.

THe fourth maine Question touching man as he stands in relation to God is concerning the Time of Gods worship. Wherein certaine particular Questions are to be resolved touching the Sabbath day.

The first, and most principall of all the rest, is this;

Whether it be in the liberty of the Church of God upon earth, to alter the Sabbath day from the seventh day to any other?

In answering to this Question I will not resolutely determine, but onely propound that which I thinke is most probable.

First therefore I answer negatively: That it is not in the Churches libertie, to alter the Sabbath from the Seventh day. The reasons are these.

I. Reason. The substance of the fourth commandement is unalterable. Now the sanctifying of a rest upon the seventh day is the substance of the fourth commandement. Therefore the sanctifying of the rest of the seventh day is unalterable in regard of any creature.

That the truth of this reason may appeare, two things are to be considered. First, what is changeable and temporarie in the Sabbath: and then what is morall and perpetuall.

B

Sect. 1.

What is ceremoniall in the Sabbath

The things which are temporarie and ceremoniall in the Sabbath day are these.

I. That rigorous and precise rest prescribed to the Jewes, which stood in the straight observation of three things.

First, the Jew might not on the Sabbath goe forth, to take a journey any whither, for any matter or businesse of his owne. For of this there was a speciall commandement given, Exod. 16. 29. Tarry every man in his place, let no man goe out of his place the seventh day: namely, to doe any worke or businesse of his owne whatsoever.

Secondly, the Jew might not kindle a fire upon the Sabbath day. For so saith the Lord by Moses, Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitations, &c. Exod. 35. 3. It will be then said, How did they for meat and fire in winter? Ans. They prepared and dressed their meat the day before: as they were commanded, Exod. 16. 24. And for fires in winter, if they had any upon the Sabbath, it was necessary (as I suppose) that as they dreft their meat the day before, so they should then begin their fire also, which being thus begun, might bee preserved on the Sabbath.

Thirdly, the Jew might not carrie a burden. This the Lord did expresly forbid them by the Prophet Jeremie, Thus saith the Lord, Carrie no burdens upon the Sabbath day, neither bring them in by the gates of Jerusalem, &c. Jeremie 17. vers. 21. And Nehemiah charged the men of Judah, with the prophanation of the Sabbath in that kinde, Nehemiah 13. 15, 16, 17. In these three particulars stood the strict observation of the Jewish rest: which is altogether temporarie, and doth not concerne the times of the New Testament; because it was onely typicall, the Sabbath being (in regard of that manner of rest) a signe of the most strict spirituall rest from all sinne, in thought, word, and deed, required of every true beleever.

II. Againe, in the Sabbath this was ceremoniall and temporarie, that it was a speciall signe betweene God and his people, of the blessings that were propounded and promised in the Covenant, Exod. 31. 13. And these were were principally two. First, it was a signe of their sanctification to teach them, that as the Lord had set apart a day of rest, so he did and would sanctifie the observers thereof unto himselfe, by forgiving their sinnes, and receiving them into his favour, in & by the Messias to come. Secondly, it was ordained by God, to figure and signifie the everlasting rest of Gods children in the kingdome of heaven. Of this the Prophet Esai speakes, when hee saith, that from moneth to moneth, and from Sabbath to Sabbath, all flesh shall come to worship before God, Esa. 66. 23. And the authour to the Hebrewes, There remaines therefore a Sabbatisme, or rest to the people of God, Heb. 4. 9.

III. Furthermore, this was temporarie in the Sabbath, that it was to be observed upon a set day, namely, the seventh from the Creation, and that with set rites and ceremonies. So saith Moses, The seventh day is the Sabbath, Deut. 5. 14. Againe, On the Sabbath day, yee shall offer two lambes of a yeare old, without spot, and two tenth deales of fine flower, for a meat offering mingled with oyle, and the drinke offering thereof: and the burnt offering of every Sabbath, beside the continuall burnt offering, and the drinke offering thereof. Numb. 28. 9, 10.

IV. This also was Ceremoniall, that it was to be observed in remembrance of their deliverance out of Ægypt. Remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Ægypt, and the Lord thy God brought thee out thence by a mighty hand, and stretched out arme: therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to observe the Sabbath day, Deut. 5. 15.

Now, as there were some things temporarie and Ceremoniall in the Sabbath, so there are some things in it perpetuall and Morall: and those I take it are three especially.

First, that there should be a day of rest, in which man and beast might be refreshed after labour.

Secondly, that this day should be sanctified; that is, set apart to the worship of God. These two first are therefore morall, because they are expresly mentioned in the Commandement touching the Sabbath.

Thirdly, that a seventh day should bee sanctified to an holy rest, and that this holy rest should be observed in a seventh day. I say not in this or that seventh day, but in one of the seven.

Now that this also is morall, it appeares by these reasons.

First, the Sabbath of the seventh day was instituted and appointed by God in Paradise, before the fall of man, and the revealing of Christ; yea even then, when there was one condition of all men. This is plainely set downe in Gen. 2. as also in the fourth Commandement. And upon this ground it is manifest, that a Sabbath of a seventh day cannot be a Ceremonie simply, considering the ordination thereof was in time long before all Ceremonies. If it bee objected, that it was made a Ceremonie afterward: I answer, that the reason is naught. For matrimonie was ordained in Paradise, and afterward made ceremoniall, to signifie the spirituall union betweene Christ and his Church, And yet Matrimonie is perpetuall: and so is a Sabbath of a seventh day. If it be againe alleaged, that God did then keepe a seventh day in his owne person, and afterward injoyned it to man by his commandement: I answer, that the institution of the Sabbath in Paradise consisted of two parts; Blessing, and Sanctification: and the meaning of the holy Ghost is, that God did both blesse it in regard of himselfe, because he kept it in his owne person, and hallowed it also in regard of man, by commanding it to bee sanctified, and kept in performance of holy duties.

Secondly, the reasons of the fourth Commandement are generall, and the equitie of them is perpetuall, and they have this end to urge the rest of a seventh day. Let them bee considered in particular. The first, in these words, Six dayes shalt thou labour. Which some take to be a permission: as if God should have said thus; If I permit thee six, thou shalt allow me a seventh. But they may be also taken for a commandement, injoyning labour in the six dayes; first, because they are propounded in commanding termes: secondly, because they are an exposition of the curse laid upon Adam, thou shalt eat thy bread in the sweat of thy face, namely, in the six dayes: and thirdly, because idlenesse, the spoile of mankinde, is there forbidden. This being so, there must needs be a seventh day, not only of rest, to ease them that labour in the five daies, but also of an holy rest that God might bee worshipped in it. The second reason is taken from Gods example: For in six daies the Lord made heaven and earth, &c. That which the Lord himselfe hath done in person, the same must man doe by his commandement: But the Lord himselfe in six daies laboured, and rested the seventh: therefore man must doe the same. This reason made by God to the creature must stand in force till he reverse it, which yet he hath not done, nor doth. If then these reasons doe not onely inforce a rest, and an holy rest, but a rest on the seventh day, then this rest on the seventh day is a part of the fourth Commandement: and consequently, the Church cannot alter it from the Sabbath day, because they cannot alter the substance of that Commandement which is eternall.

II. Reason. The Sabbath day in the new Testament (in all likelihood) is tyed to that which we call the Lords day, and that (as I take it) by Christ himselfe. The reasons thereof are these.

I. The Sabbath day of the new Testament is called the Lords day, Apoc. 1. 10. Now I suppose, suppose, (for in these points still we must goe by likelihoods) it is called the Lords day, as the last supper of Christ is called the Lords Supper, for two causes: First, as God rested the seventh day after the Creation, so Christ having ended the worke of the new creation, rested on this day from his worke of redemption. Secondly, as Christ did substitute the last Supper, in roome of the Passeover, so he substituted the first day of the weeke in roome of the Jewes Sabbath, to be a day set apart to his owne worship.

II. The Church of Corinth every first day of the weeke made a Collection for the poore, as we may read, 1 Cor. 16. 2. and this collection for the poore in the Primitive Church followed the preaching of the Word, Prayer, and the Sacraments, as a fruit thereof, Act. 2. v. 42. For these be Sabbath exercises, that went alwaies together in the Apostolicall church. But it will be said, that collecting for the Saints is a matter of indifferencie, and may be done upon any day, as well as upon the Sabbath. To this I answer, that Paul commands the Corinths to doe it, as he had ordained it in the church of Galatia: whereby he makes it to be an Apostolicall, and therefore a divine ordinance. Yea, that very text doth in some part manifest thus much, that it is an ordinance and institution of Christ, that the first day of the weeke should bee the Lords day. For Paul commandeth nothing, but what he had from Christ.

III. Christ and his Apostles kept the first day of the weeke as the Sabbath. For Christ rose againe the first day of the weeke, and appeared to his Disciples, Joh. 20. 19. and eight daies after hee appeared againe to Thomas, vers. 26. which was the next first day of the weeke. And this hath beene the opinion of sundrie ancient Divines. [a] Cyril upon John sayes, that this eight day was without doubt the Lords day, and so ought to be kept, because it is likely Christ himselfe kept it holy. And the same is affirmed and taught by [b] Augustine and [c] Chrysostome. Againe, the Apostles also kept it. For when the Holy Ghost descended upon them, they were again assembled upon this day, Act. 2. v. 1. which I prove thus. The day of Pentecost was the first day of the weeke: for the Jewes were commanded to bring a sheafe of their first fruits, the morrow after the Sabbath in the Passeover, Levit. 23. 15. &c. and betwixt that and Pentecost they were to reckon fifty daies. Hence it follow with, that the day of Christs resurrection, falling the morrow after the Jewes Sabbath, which is the first day of the weeke, Pentecost must needs fall on that day: and therefore the Apostles met the same day, and not they only, but also the whole Church gathered themselves together, and celebrated this day with preaching of the Word, and administration of the Sacraments, Act. 20. 7. And according to this institution of Christ, and the examples of his Apostles, hath beene the constant practice of the Church, from their times until now.

IV. That which was prefigured, in that it was prefigured, was prescribed: but the Lords day was prefigured in the eighth day, wherein the children of the Jewes were circumcised: therefore it was prescribed to bee kept the eighth day. Thus the ancient Fathers, by name Cyprian and Augustine, have reasoned and taught. Againe, the day of Christs resurrection was prefigured by that day, wherein the stone which the builders refused was made the head of the corner, Psal. 118. vers. 24. and in that it was prefigured, it was appointed by God. For then it appeared to bee true which Peter saith of Christ, that God had made him both Lord and Christ, Act. 2. 36. And the same may be said of the Sabbath of the new Testament, that it was in the figure preordained, and therefore limited and determined by our Saviour Christ unto the Lords day. Other reasons might be added, but they are onely conjectures: these be the principall.

II. Reason. God is Lord of times and seasons, and therefore in all equity, the altering and disposing thereof is in his hands, and belongs to him alone, Act. 1. 10. Times and seasons the Father hath kept in his own hand. Againe, Christ is called the Lord of the Sabbath. And Antiochus Epiphanes is condemned by the holy Ghost, because he tooke upon him to alter times, Dan. 7. Besides that, Daniel saith, that it is God alone that changeth times and seasons, Dan. 2. 21. Now if it be proper unto God, as to create, so to appoint and dispose of times, then he hath not left the same to the power of any creature. And therefore, as the knowledge thereof, so the appointment, and alteration of the same, either in generall, or particular, belongs not to the Church, but is reserved to him. The Church then neither may nor can alter the Sabbath day. And this is the first part of the answer.

Sect. 2.

The second is this: If the Church had libertie to alter the Sabbath, then this alteration must be made within the compasse of the weeke, to the sixth, or fifth, or fourth, or second, or third, or first day; and not to the eighth, or ninth, or tenth daies, without the compasse of the weeke. The reason is plaine. The Church of the new Testament hath more knowledge and more grace, than the people of the old Testament had; and in that regard, ought to have more zeale, and greater alacritie in the worship of God than they had, that it may exceed the Jewes according to the measure of grace received. And thus the first and principall question touching the Sabbath is answered and resolved.

Sect. 3.

Now, before I come to the next, let us in the meane while see and examine the Reasons that are brought against the answer, precisely fently made. First therefore it is alleaged, that in the new Testament there is no difference of dayes. For if we have or make a difference of dayes, we are in truth no better than Jewes. That there is no distinction of dayes, they prove out of two places. The first is Coloss. 2. 16. where the Apostle saies, Let no man condemn you in respect of an holy day, or of the new Moone, or of the Sabbath day. The second, Gal. 4. 10. where the same Apostle reproves the Galatians for observing dayes, and moneths, and times, and yeares.

To this I answer, that both the places speake of the feasts of the Jewes, and of difference of daies, that stands in force by the Jewish ceremoniall law. Paul to the Colossians, warnes them to give no occasion to others, whereby they might justly condemne them, for observing of daies in superstitious manner, upon opinion of holinesse and necessity, as if mens consciences were bound to such observation. And hee reproves the Galatians, for observing dayes (as it is likely they did) not only in the Jewish, but also in the heathenish manner. To which purpose Paul saith, ver. 11. He is afraid of them. His meaning was, because they placing their salvation (in part) in their Jewish observation of dayes, after they had beene informed touching their libertie in Christ, did thereby mix the Gospell with the Law: And therefore hee feared, lest by that meanes Christ should become unto them unprofitable, and so his preaching to small or no purpose.

Againe, they alleage, Rom. 14. 5. where Paul saith, One man esteems one day better than another, and another man counts every day alike. In which words the Apostle blameth not them which thinke all dayes as one.

Ans. In the new Testament, all dayes be as one, in regard of the aptnesse thereof to the worship of God: and yet there may be difference of daies in regard of order: and this Paul no where condemneth. That we may the better conceive this distinction, we must consider a difference betweene the Jewes Sabbath and ours, which is this, That the Jewes Sabbath was both the time of the worship of God, and also a part of his worship. But the Sabbath of the new Testament, though it be a necessarie time of Gods worship, yet it is not a part thereof. If it be said, that it is commanded, therfore it must needs be a part of Gods worship: I answer, It is commanded not as Gods worship for substance, but in respect of the duties of the worship, that are to bee kept and performed in it. And hence it is manifest, that in regard of Gods worship, there is no difference of dayes in the new Testament, but in regard of order.

Thirdly, they object, that Paul kept the Jewes Sabbath, as well as the Lords day. For he and Barnabas came to Antiochia, and went into the Synagogue on the Sabbath day, Act. 13. 14. And againe, hee and Timothy converted Lydia upon the same day, Act. 16. 13.

Ans. The Apostle did this upon very good ground, not because hee held the observation of it as necessary as the other; but in regard of the weakneese of the Gentiles and Jewes newly called. For the Church that consisted of such persons in those daies, was not yet fully perswaded and resolved of the Abrogation of the Jewish Sabbath: and therefore for the time, he yeelded to their weaknes, and observed it as well as the other. But afterward when they were confirmed in that point, hee forbare that liberty, and taught the full abolishment both of it and other ceremonies.

Fourthly, Act. 18. 3, 4. Paul is said to come to Corinth to Aquila and Priscilla, and to worke with them in their trade of tent-making: and further it is said, that he disputed in thy Synagogue every Sabbath day, that is, on the Jews Sabbaths, and exhorted the Jews and Greekes. Hence it is gathered by some, that Paul did onely keepe the Sabbath of the Jewes, and that both on the Lords day, and on the weeke dayes, hee wrought with Aquila and Priscilla.

Ans. First, we must remember this rule, that Charitie and necessitie doe dispense with the Sabbath, and with ceremonies. If a Towne should bee on fire, or if a Citie or Countrey should bee presently assaulted by the enemie, in the time of the word preached, on the Sabbath day; the preaching of the word, in these cases, must cease for a time, till by convenient helpe the fire bee quenched, and the enemie be taken, or driven backe. Now whereas Paul in the ordinary daies of the week made tents, and on the seventh too, not observing it, but the Jews Sabbath: we must know, that he did it upon necessity, for the salvation of the Jewes. For Priscilla and Aquila were Jewes unconverted, and Christ was not yet revealed unto them. And if Paul had but once named Christ, hee could have done no good among them. Yet afterward, when he saw better opportunity, at the comming of Silas and Timotheus from Macedonia, then hee could no longer contain himselfe, but burned in the spirit, and testified to the Jewes, that Iesus was the Christ, vers. 5. Now if there was cause why he did not speak of Christ for the time, then was there cause also why he did not make profession of a Sabbath. Secondly, I answer, though Paul did not then openly sanctifie the Sabbath; yet it is to be supposed, that hee kept it privately by himselfe, reserving some speciall time for that purpose: and the contrary cannot be shewed.

The second Question touching the Sabbath.

How the Sabbath of the New Testament is to be observed.

Answ. In observing a Sabbath of the new Testament, there are two things required; a Rest, rest, and a sanctification of the same rest to an holy use. This answer is made out of the verie substance of the fourth Commandement, which is morall, and hath nothing ceremoniall in it. And the fourth Commandement (for substance) consists in a ceasing from labour, and an holy dedication of our rest to an holy use, that is, to the worship and service of God.

Sect. 1.

Now touching the first point, the rest of the Sabbath, there are three severall opinions, whereof two are contrarie, and the third a meane betweene both.

The first opinion is, that wee are bound as strictly to keep the outward rest of the Lords day, as the Jewes were to keepe the Sabbathe and sundrie men are of this minde. But I take it, this opinion is not warrantable. For (as was said before) the Jewish manner of keeping the Sabbath in straitnesse is a Ceremonie. And if we bee bound to keepe it as straitly as the Jewes did, then Judaisme must still remaine, and the Ceremoniall Law (at least in some part) must still be in force.

But in favour of this opinion it is alleaged; First, that the fourth Commandement is a Law given as well to Christians, as to Jewes, and therefore it bindes both alike. Ans. The fourth Commandement bindeth Christians to keepe a seventh day for the Sabbath, both in respect of rest, as also in regard of sanctification thereof; but that it bindeth them to the same strait manner of keeping the rest, as it did the Jewes, we utterly deny.

Secondly, that the reasons used to inforce the Commandement doe equally binde all: therefore the Commandement it selfe. Answ. It is true for the dutie commanded, but not for the manner of performance. Againe, the reason alleaged doth not follow: for sometimes the Holy Ghost useth a reason that is perpetuall, to inforce a ceremonie. That Levi should have no part nor inheritance among his brethren, was a ceremonie commanded by God, and yet the Lord inforced it with a reason that was perpetuall, namely, because himselfe was the part and inheritance of Levi among the children of Israel, Numb. 18. 20.

Thirdly, that the Sabbath is a figure (to beleevers in the new Testament) that God is their God, and they his people, and the same it was to the Jewes: therefore the bond is as strict to the one as to the other. Answ. 1. Beleevers under the Gospell have two only signes of the Covenant; Baptisme, and the Lords Supper, and no more. 2. The Scripture restraineth the Sabbath, as a signe only to the Jewes, It is a signe between me and you in your generations, Exod. 31. 13. Againe, vers. 16. the children of Israel shall keepe the Sabbath — for an everlasting covenant. 3. The Sabbath was not a signe in the first institution in Paradise. For the covenant of grace was made after the fall of man, and the signe thereof must needs bee appointed after it, considering that before the fall, ceremonies signifying sanctification had no place. And this is the first opinion.

The second opinion touching the rest of the Sabbath is flat contrarie to the former; namely, that on the Sabbath day, (after the publike worship of God is ended, and the Congregation dissolved) men have libertie either to give themselves to labour, or to honest pleasures and recreations. This opinion doth quite abolish one of the Commandements of the Decalogue. For it presupposeth all dayes to be alike, this only provided, that the publike worship of God bee solemnely kept. Now this may be done in any day of the weeke, and there will bee no need of appointing a set time for Gods service, if all dayes be equall, without any difference or distinction. But the fourth Commandement (for substance) is eternall, and requireth (upon paine of the curse) both rest from labour, and a setting apart of the same rest, to the duties of holinesse and religion. And if it command abstinence from ordinarie labour, then much more from pleasures and recreations.

The third and last opinion holds the meane betweene the two former extremities, and that I take to be the best and safest. The substance hereof consists of these two conclusions.

1. That upon the Sabbath day of the new Testament, men are to rest from the ordinarie labours of their callings. Thus much is commanded in the fourth Commandement. For the rest it selfe was not a Ceremonie (as I said before) but the strait and precise manner of resting. Againe, it is most necessarie, that Religion and the power thereof should be maintained amongst Gods people, which cannot possibly bee, unlesse men (at some times) set themselves a part unto it. The Student that desires learning doth not attaine unto knowledge, unlesse he doe daily conserate and devote himselfe to the studie thereof. In like manner, Religion cannot be preserved and maintained in the Church, except men doe wholly and continually imploy themselves in the practice of the same. Furthermore, it is the libertie that Gods Law gives to servants, yea and to beasts, that they shall not bee oppressed with labour by working on the Lords day, and this libertie is grounded upon the Law of nature, and common equitie.

Here the common sort are wont to reply and say; If wee must rest from the labour of our callings the whole day, wee shall not bee able to maintaine our selves and our families. To which it may bee answered, that they which gathered Manna only in the six dayes, had as much as they that went out to gather it on the seventh day: for though some of the people went out thereon to gather, yet they found none. They therefore which take rest on the Sabbath day, must not bee distracted with needlesse cares, but live by faith, and depend upon Gods providence for meat, drinke, and cloathing. And the labour of the calling then used, when it is expressly forbidden by God, brings rather a curse with it than a blessing. Againe, such persons must remember, that godlines hath the promises of this life, and the life to come, 1 *Tim.*4.8. and if they will first seek the kingdome of God & his righteousnesse, all things necessarie shall be cast unto them in way of advantage, *Mat.*6.33. Therefore if they keepe his commandement, and rest upon the seventh day, God wil in mercy give a blessing, and they shall no lesse receive from him their daily bread in that day than in another.

II. Conclusion. In this rest sundrie kindes of works may bee done, and that with good conscience, principally two.

The first are works both holy, and of present necessitie. And they are such as cannot be done before or after the Sabbath. These are likewise of two sorts. The first are those that doe necessarily pertaine to Gods worship, so as without them God cannot be worshipped. Of this kinde is the Sabbath dayes journey, Act. 1.12. allowed among the Jewes to the people to goe and heare the word preached: Thus we read that the Shunamite went ordinarily upon the Sabbath and new Moone, to the Prophet to heare him. For when she demanded leave of her husband to goe to the Prophet, he askes her, Why wilt thou goe, seeing it is neither new Moone, nor Sabbath day, 2 *King.*4.23. Of the same sort were the killing and dressing of sacrificed beasts in the time of the Law, whereof our Saviour saith, *Have ye not read in the Law, how that on the Sabbath dayes the Priests in the temple breake the Sabbath, and are blamelesse? Mat.*12.5. The next sort of works of present necessitie, are those that belong immediately to the preservation of the temporall life of man and beast, or that serve to the good estate of them both. Such are workes of mercie, the watering of cattell, Mark. 12.11. the drawing of a beast out of a pit, *Luk.*14.5. and such like.

The second kinde of workes that may bee done upon the Sabbath, are works of Christian libertie, out of the case of necessitie. These were such as the Jewes might not doe, and yet we in the new Testament may doe them. For example; provision and dressing of meat, making fires, and carrying of burdens. Yet upon this libertie men ought not to gather that they may doe what they will, because they must cease from the ordinarie execution of the works of their callings. For the word of God giveth no such warrant; men are in this case to submit themselves to his will expressly revealed, and to use their libertie according to the same.

Here two cases are propounded.

I. Case. Whether we may not lawfully use recreations on the Sabbath day, as shooting, bowling, hunting, hawking, wrastling, &c.

Ans. I take it, we are not denied to rejoyce and solace our selves upon this day. For to some men, at some times, recreations may be more necessarie than meat, in case of weakenesse, for present preservation of health. And though not in that regard, yet being well used, it may bee a furtherance to men in the performance of the duties of godlinesse, as well as in the duties of their calling. But this rejoycing must be such, as was the rejoycing of the Jewes, Nehem. 8.12. which was only spirituall and in the Lord. For they rejoyced only for this, that they understood the Law of God that was taught them.

But as for the recreations and pastimes aforenamed, as bowling and such like, they are not at this time to be used. My reason is this: That which is the more principall and necessarie, namely, labour in the execution of a mans calling, is forbidden; recreation therefore which is with labour, must cease on that day when labour ceaseth. Againe, if the duties of the ordinarie vocation, otherwise lawfull and commendable, bee therefore forbidden, because they destroy the rest commanded, and take up the minde, that it cannot be freely imployed in the affaires of God, then much more are the works of pleasure forbidden, because they doe the same things much more, though otherwise in themselves they be not unlawfull. Object. Servants must have recreation, otherwise how shall they bee able to worke in the weeke day? Answ. True, but their recreation must bee granted them in the dayes of labour. For recreation pertaineth not to rest, but to labour, and is therefore used, that a man by it may be made more fit to labour.

II. Case. Whether men upon any occasion may not doe a worke of their callings, in the morning or evening of the Sabbath day, as Tradesmen for example. I answer, that they may, so be it they observe foure caveats. I. That the worke done be no scandall to any person. II. That it withdraw not the mind of the worker or any other, from sanctifying the Sabbath, either publikely or privately. III. That it be not a worke of gaine, but a worke of mercie, or tend to a worke of mercie. IV. That it serve for the immediate preservation of life, health, or goods. Of life; thus Elias continued his flight from Iezabel many Sabbaths together, 1 *King.*19.8. And the reason is good; the Sabbath was made for man (saith Christ) that is, not for the hurt, but for the good of man. Of health, and thus our Saviour Christ visited the sicke, *Iob.*5.3. and cured the blinde man upon the Sabbath, John 9.14. By whose example the Physitian and the Chirurgian may lawfully goe, not only to give necessarie counsell, but to minister necessarie physick, and do cure. Lastly, of goods which are in present danger of losing. Thus Christ would have the oxe presently pulled out of the pit, *Luk.*14.5. and the ship on the shore full fraught with wares requires present helpe, helpe, if it bee in apparent danger of sinking. This much concerning the first thing required in the observation of the Sabbath.

Sect. 2.

Sanctification of rest.

The second thing required in the hallowing of the Sabbath of the new Testament is the sanctification of rest, which is nothing else but the dedicating of it to a religious use, that is, to the practice of divine worship. This sanctification is either publike or private.

The publike is the solemne performance of spirituall works commanded in the second and third Commandements, and tending to publike worship. And this may bee reduced to foure principall heads. I. The reading or preaching of the word, when the Minister publikely in the Congregation assembled, doth faithfully deliver unto the people pure and sound doctrine, and applies the same as necessitie requireth and occasion serveth, to the edification and salvation of all and everie hearer in publike audience: and the people on the other side doe reverently & attentively heare the same word read and preached. II. The administration of the Sacraments according to Gods institution, by the Ministers of the Church lawfully called. III. Publike prayer, wherein the Minister calleth upon the name of the Lord, and the whole Congregation in fervent affection lift up their hearts unto him, and in minde give assent to the prayers made in the name & behalfe of them. IV. Collection and giving of alms for the releefe of the poore, whether they be captives and strangers, or those that dwell among us, the sicke, the needie, orphans and widowes, and such like. Upon these foure heads doth stand the whole publike worship of God. For proofe and declaration hereof read these places, Neh. 8. Act. 2.42. Act. 13.14.15. Act. 16.13. *Act.*20.7. 1 *Cor.*16.1,2, &c.

Private sanctification (which serveth to answer the second opinion) stands in these things: I. That everie man in the beginning of the Sabbath, in the morning, doe privately prepare himselfe to the publike service that followeth, by private prayer, by examination & humbling of himselfe before God, in respect of his particular sins. This the wise man exhorteth unto, when he saith, *Take heed to thy foot when thou entrest into the house of God, Eccles.*4.17. and his meaning is, that before a man betakes himselfe to the publike Congregation, there to performe service and worship unto God, hee should looke into his heart, and examine his affections & thoughts, that hee come not unprepared: which dutie, though it bee alwayes to be done, yet principally on the Sabbath day. The children of Israel rose up early in the morning on the Sabbath day, to offer up burnt offerings and peace offerings to an Idol, *Exod.*32.5,6. much more ought we, &c. And it is said of our Saviour Christ, that hee rose verie early in the morning before day, and went into a solitarie place to pray, and the day following was the Sabbath when hee preached in the Synagogues, Mark. 1.35,39. II. That when the Congregation is dissolved, we spend the rest of the Sabbath in meditation and conference of the Word before preached, and of the creatures. Thus it is said of some that heard Paul preach, that they received the Word with all readinesse, and searched the Scriptures whether those things were so, *Act.*17.11. And the whole 92. Psalme was penned that it might be a song of the Sabbath, and it contained nothing but a meditation of the works of God. III. That men privately exercise themselves in the works of charitie and mercie, as in visiting the sicke, in making peace between those that are at discord, in releeving the poore, in teaching and instructing the ignorant, in comforting those that are distressed and comfortlesse, Neh. 8.12. Then all the people went to eat, and to drinke, and to send parts abroad to the poore, and to make great joy.

The third Question touching the Sabbath, when the Sabbath doth begin?

To this some doe answer, in the evening, and some in the morning. My answer is this, that the Sabbath of the new Testament amongst us is to begin in the morning; and so to continue till the next morrow, and not in the evening till the evening.

The reasons be these. 1. The Sabbath is to begin when other ordinarie dayes begin, according to the order and account of the Church wherein we live. 2. It was the practice of Christ and the Apostles. For Christ (as it hath beene thought of ancient times) consecrated the Sabbath, in that hee rose from the dead early in the morning, when the first day of the weeke began to dawne, Matth. 28.1. and therefore it is fit that the Sabbath day should then begin when he rose, for as much as it is kept in remembrance of his resurrection. The same was the practice of the Apostles. For *Act.*20.7. the first day of the weeke the Jewes came together at Troas in the morning, and there Paul preached from that time till midnight, being the next morning to depart, having stayed there, as is plaine out of the sixth verse, seven daies. In that text I note two things. First, that the night there mentioned was a part of the seventh day of Pauls abode at Troas. For if it were not so, then hee had stayed at least a night longer, and so more than seven daies, because he should have staied part of another day. Secondly, that this night was a part of the Sabbath which they then kept. For the Apostle keepes it in manner of a Sabbath in the exercises of pietie and divine worship, & namely, in preaching. Yea further, he continues there till the rest was fully ended: He communed with them till the dawning of the day, and so departed. vers. 11. Besides this text, David saith in the Psalm of the Sabbath, that he will declare Gods loving kindnes in the morning, & his truth in the night, Psa. 92. 2. making the night following a part of the Sabbath.

Gen. 1. 5, 8, 13, &c.

Against this doctrine it is alleaged, first, that the Sabbath is to begin in the evening, because in the first of Genesis it is said, six severall times, the evening and the morning made the first day, and so the second, and third, &c.

Answ. First, in that text when it is said, the evening and the morning made such and such dayes, by the evening is understood the night, and by the morning the day, and the evening was the end of the day, and the morning the end of the night. This exposition is ancient, and yet in Scripture wee finde not one place where the evening is put for the night. Secondly, I answer, that the collection from that place is of no force: for thus the reason must needs bee framed. That which God did in appointing of daies, the same must we doe in using of them: But God in appointing of dayes, began the day at the evening, Erg. &c. The consequent is false. For the case is otherwise in the constitution of time, than it is in the use of time constituted: and there is not the same reason of things in doing, as there is of the same things in being and use. Thirdly, this did not bind the Jewes. For they in all likelihood began their Sabbaths in the morning. Indeed their solemne feasts, as the Passover and such like, began and were kept from evening to morning, as wee may read, Levit. 23. 5. But their ordinarie Sabbath was kept from morning to morning. Whence it is, that S. Matthew calls the dawning of the first day of the weeke, the end of the Sabbath of the Jewes, Mat. 28. 1. and there is nothing (I take it) that can be brought to the contrarie.

It is objected that Moses saith, Lev. 23. 32. From even to even shall ye celebrate your Sabbath. Answ. The words must be understood of the feast of reconciliation, being the tenth day of the seventh moneth, which was solemnized and kept from even to even. And it is called a Sabbath, because it was by speciall commandement appointed to bee kept as the Sabbath day, and that in two respects. First, because it was to be kept holy by the Jewes, in humbling themselves and offering sacrifices, vers. 27. Secondly, because upon that day it was not lawfull to doe any servile worke upon paine of death, vers. 29. 30.

Againe, it is alleaged that Ioseph of Arimathea could not embalme Christ, by reason that the Sabbath was at hand, and this was the evening. I answer, that the Jewes Sabbath there meant concurred with the day of their Passeover, and hence it was that their Sabbath began in the evening.

By this that hath beene said, the answer to the third Question is plaine, to wit, that in the new Testament the Sabbath is to begin at the morning, and so to continue to the next morning, and not as some suppose, to begin at the even and continue till the next even. And thus much touching the speciall Questions of Gods worship, as also generally concerning those that belong to man, as he stands in relation to God.

The end of the second Booke.

THE THIRD BOOKE OF THE CASES OF CONSCIENCE,

Concerning Man, as he stands in relation to Man.

CHAP. I.

Of the nature and differences of Vertue, and the order of the Questions.

THus farre we are proceeded in the handling of two sorts of Questions, whereof some doe concerne man, as hee is considered apart by himselfe, without respect unto another: some againe concerne man, as he stands in the first relation, namely to God.

Now wee come by order to speake of the third and last head of Cases, propounded by the Conscience of man, as he stands in the second relation to man. And under this head are comprehended all those Questions of Conscience that are incident to the lives of men, and which doe belong unto man, as he is a member of some societie, whether it bee the Family, the Church, or the Commonwealth.

For the better and more orderly proceeding in this discourse, some convenient subject or matter is to be propounded; whereunto all the Questions that follow may fitly be reduced. Now of all other, the most convenient subject in this kinde is Vertue, and therefore according to the differences of Vertue, wee will distinguish the Questions into three severall sorts.

But before wee proceed to particulars, it shall not be amisse to speake somewhat generally of Vertue, so farre forth as the knowledge thereof may give light to the things that follow.

Touching Vertue, two things are briefly to be remembred: first, what it is: and then what be the distinct kindes thereof.

Vertue is a gift of the Spirit of God, and a part of regeneration, whereby a man is made apt to live well.

I call it first, a gift of the Spirit of God, because in whomsoever it is, whether in Christians, or in Heathen men, it hath the nature of a gift that floweth immediately from the spirit of God. And this I put in the first place to confute the received errour of the wiliest Heathen Philosophers, which call Vertue an habit of the minde, obtained and confirmed by custome, use, and practice.

Secondly, I call it such a gift as is also a part of regeneration: and this is added for two causes.

First, that wee may put a difference betweene Christian and Heathen vertues. For, howbeit the same vertues in kinde and name are, and may be found, both in them that professe Christ, and those also that are ignorant of the true God; yet they are in them after a divers manner. For in Heathen men they are the gifts of God, but not parts of regeneration and new birth: but in those that bee true Christians, they are indeed not only the gifts of Gods spirit, but also essentiall parts of regeneration.

That wee may the better yet conceive this difference, we must understand that the grace of God in man is two-fold: restraining, and renewing.

Restraining is that which bridleth and restraineth the corruption of mens hearts, from breaking forth into outward actions, for the common good, that societies may be preserved, and one man may live orderly with another. Renewing grace is that which doth not only restraine the corruption, but also mortifieth sinne, and renewes the heart daily more and more. The former of these is incident to Heathen men; and the vertues which they have serve only to represse the act of sinne in their outward actions: but in Christians, they are graces of God not only bridling and restraining the affection, but renewing the heart, and mortifying all corruption. And though those vertues of the Heathen be graces of God, yet they are but generall and common to all: whereas the vertues of Christians are speciall graces of the Spirit, sanctifying and renewing the minde, will, and affections. For example, chastitie in Iosepo was a grace of Gods spirit renewing his heart; but chastitie in Xenocrates was a common grace, serving only to curbe and restraine the corruption of his heart. And the like may be said of the justice of Abraham a Christian, and of Aristides an Heathen.

Secondly, I adde this clause, to meet with an errour of some learned Philosophers, who taught that the verie nature of Vertue stands in a meane or mediocritie of affection. This that they say is true in part, but not wholly. For the mediocritie of which they speake, without renovation of affections is nothing: and therefore all vertues that are not joyned with a renovation and change of the affections are no better than sinnes. This point the Philosophers never knew, and hence it was that they stood only upon a mediocritie, defining a man to bee truly vertuous, that did wisely observe a meane betweene two extremes.

Lastly, I say that this gift of God makes a man fit to live well. In which clause standeth the proper effect of vertue, which is, to make those in whom it is, to lead their lives well. And by this we are advertised to take heed of the opinion of Philosophers concerning some particular vertues. For in their morall discourses, they give both the name and the nature of Vertue to those things which are either false and counterfeit vertues or indeed none at all. For example, Aristotle makes verbositie a vertue, which is indeed nothing else but a dexteritie in mocking & defeaturing upon mens persons and names: and so it is reckoned by Paul amongst grievous sinnes and vices, which are to be avoided, Eph. 5. vers. 4. Againe, the Philosopher calls magnanimitie (whereby a man thinkes himselfe worthy of great honours, and thereupon enterpriseth great things) a vertue which notwithstanding is to bee holden a flat vice. For by the Law of God, everie man is to range himselfe within the limits of his calling, & not to dare once to goe out of it. Whereas on the contrarie, the scope and end of this vertue (as they terme it) is to make men to attempt high and great matters above their reach, and so to go beyond their callings. Besides, it is directly opposite to the vertue of humilitie, which teacheth that a man ought always to be base, vile, and lowly in his owne eyes. The Prophet David cleares himselfe of this sin, Psal. 131. 1. when hee saith, Lord, I am not high minded, mine eyes are not hautie, I have not walked in things that be great and above my reach. Furthermore, no vertue must make vs to forsake good life, but everie one serveth for this end, to make us fit to live a godly life.

The next point to be considered is, What be the kindes of vertue.

Vertue is either in the minde of man, or in the the will. The vertue of the minde is Prudence. The vertue of the will is that that orders mans will, and it is two-fold: for it respecteth either our selves, or others.

That which respecteth our selves is conversant about two maine things in the heart of man, the revenging and the lusting power. That which respecteth the revenging power is Clemencie; which standeth in the ordering and reforming of the raging power of anger. The next which respecteth the lusting power is Temperance.

Vertues that doe respect others are either concerning Courtesie, as Liberalitie; or concerning Equitie. And these consist partly in doing of equitie, as Justice; partly in defending and maintainig it, as Fortitude.

Now according to this distinction of vertues, the Questions of Conscience are to bee distinguished in this sort. Some of them concerne Prudence, some concerne Clemencie, some Temperance, some Liberalitie, some also concerne Justice, and some Fortitude. Of all which in order.

CHAP. II.

Of Questions concerning Prudence.

THere are two maine Questions of Conscience which concerne Prudence.

I. Question.

How a man should practise Prudence or wisdome?

This I acknowledge is an high point in the life of man, and such as cannot be resolved as it ought without great deliberation: notwithstanding, I will doe mine endevour to answer something.

Concerning Prudence, there are sundrie things to be considered.

First, what is the beginning of the practice of this vertue, and that in a word is the Feare of God. This feare standeth principally in two things: the first is a reverent awe of the Majestie of God in all places, and at all times, whereby we are resolved, that where soever we are, we are in his presence, and whatsoever we thinke, speake, or doe, it is wholly & perfectly knowen unto him. The second is a resolved care to walk as in the presence of God, that is, to keepe his Commandements, and to yeeld obedience unto his Majesty in al things. Now that this feare is the beginning of wisdome, it appeares by sundrie places of Scripture, Psal. 111.10. *The beginning of wisdome is the feare of Iehovah. Prov.*1.7. The beginning of knowledge is the feare of the Lord: fooles despise wisdome and understanding. Moses tels the children of Israel, that herein stood their wisdome and understanding before the eyes of all people, that they observe and practise all the ordinances and judgements of God, which he had commanded them, Deut. 4. *vers.*6. And David professeth of himselfe, that by his daily meditation in the Law of God, and keeping his Commandements, hee became wiser than his enemies, Psal. 119.98. yea, of more understanding than all his teachers, vers.99. yea further, more prudent than the ancient, vers. 100.

Secondly, wee must consider the rule of Prudence; and that is spirituall understanding, whereby wee are enabled to know and conceive spiritually truth and falshood, good and bad. This Saint Paul wished unto the Church of Colosse, when hee saith, *Wee cease not to pray for you, and desire that yee might be fulfilled with knowledge of his will, in all wisdome and spirituall understanding, Colos.*1.9. And the same Apostle exhorteth the Romans to give up their bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God, and not to fashion themselves like unto this world: hee makes the ground of his exhortation, and consequently the rule of their obedience thereunto, the renovation of their mindes or understandings, to this end, That they might prove what is the good will of God, acceptable and perfect, and answerably doe and performe the same, Rom. 12.2. And his reason is good, because though prudence be the rule of all vertues, as the ancient Philosophers among the Heathen have affirmed, yet it selfe must be ruled by an higher rule which the knew not; namely, by spirituall understanding and knowledge, according to the word of God.

Thirdly, wee are to consider what is the practice of Prudence, and wherein it consisteth.

In the practice thereof two actions are required: the one is Deliberation, wherby according to spirituall understanding, wee advise what is good and bad, what truth and falshood, what is to bee imbraced and done, and what not. The other is Determination, whereby we resolve upon former deliberation, to imbrace, to doe, to follow, and pursue the best things in everie kinde. And therein stands the verie nature and forme of true Christian prudence, when a man (upon due consideration of things and actions, together with their properties and circumstances) proceeds to an holy and godly resolution, according to the rule aforesaid. Now the practise of Prudence in these two actions is very large, and consisteth of sundrie branches. I will only touch the principall, and propound them in these Rules following.

The first Rule is this: A man must in the first place, and above all things in the world, carefully provide for the forgiveneſſe of his sins. and the salvation of his soule. This our Saviour Christ commandeth as a speciall dutie, Matt. 6.33. Seeke yee first the Kingdome of God and his his righteousnesse. And sinners and unrepentant persons are sundry times in Scripture teamed fooles, as in many other respects, so principally in this, because they faile in this first point of wisedome, going on in their sin without repentance. The five virgins in the Gospel are for this very cause pronounced foolish, or fooles, because they provided not for the oyle of Faith, but did only content themselves with shining lampes, that is, a naked profession of religion and vertue; and for want of wisedome and prudence in this point, they were justly deprived of acceſſe into the bridechamber. Thus the rich man, that had great revenewes and abundance of worldly wealth, is notwithstanding teamed by God himselfe a foole, because he gathered riches to himself, and was not rich in God; that is, hee minded earthly things, and placed his chiefe felicity in value and transitorie riches, not once foreseeing, how to come into the favour of God, that he might be saved.

To this Rule I adde that, which Paul by way of caveat commandeth to the Ephesians, *Ephes.*5.16. Take heede that ye walke circumspectly, not as unwise, but as wise, redeeming the time. As if he should say, Play the part of wise men; take time while time serves, lay hold on the meanes of salvation, use no delaies in heavenly matters, deferre not your repentance from day to day; for the daies are evill, and you may be surprized in your sinnes before you beaware.

II. Rule. We must use continuall watchfulneſse against our enemies, but especially against our spirituall enemies. This watchfulneſse our Saviour commandeth often in the Gospel, but specially in *Mark.*13.33. *Take heed, watch, & pray.*35. Watch *therefore, for ye know not &c.*37. Those things that I say unto you, I say unto all men, Watch, And S. Peter exhorteth in like manner, *Be sober, and watch; for your adversary the Devill as a roaring Lyon, walketh about, seeking whom he may devoure.*1 *Pet.*5.v.8.

Now this dutie stands principally in two things. First, that we diligently observe the danger, wherein we are, by reason of temptations. Secondly, that we daily labour to search and finde out the secret counsels, practices, and enterprises of our enemies, and withall seeke to prevent them. To this purpose, we must watch against the corruptions of our hearts, the temptations of the Devill, and the day and houre of our death, that we be not found unprepared. For our owne sinnes are many; Satan is strong and subtill in his suggestions, and temptations; and death, though of all other things it be most certaine, and cannot be avoided, yet it is most uncertaine in regard of the time when, the place where, and the manner and kind, of what and how a man shall end his dayes.

III. Rule. Every man must measure himselfe by his owne strength, and doe nothing beyond his abilitie. This Rule is set downe, though expressed in other termes, Rom. 12.3. No man must presume to understand above that which is meet to understand, but ought to be wise according to sobrietie, as God hath deale to every man the measure of faith. An example of the transgression of this Rule, we have in Davids three Worthies, who brake into the host of the Philistims, to fetch David the king water from the well of Bethlem, 2 Samuel 23. 16. Which act of theirs was a rash enterprise, and such a one, as David himselfe condemneth in that Chap. because they went beyond their strength, to encounter with a whole garrison of men, they being themselves but few, namely three in number.

IV. Rule. We must distinguish betweene the necessary workes of our callings, that pertaine to us and other workes that are out of our callings, and pertaine not unto us: and we must doe the other, though we leave these undone. This Rule is propounded in 1 *Thess.*4.11. Meddle with your owne businesse, that is, doe the necessary workes of your calling that belong to you, though you leave the other for the time undone. The contrary to it is to live or to behave himselfe inordinately, 2 *Thess.*3.7. And we have an example of the transgression here of in Peter, *Joh.*21.21. whom when Christ had commanded to follow him, he would needs aske him what John should doe; Christ gives him this answer, what is that to thee? In which words, he teacheth that not only Peter, but also every man must attend upon the necessary and proper workes of his owne vocation, and not deale with other mens busines; which because Peter did, hee is by that answer secretly reproved, and justly condemned of curiosity in that behalfe.

V. Rule. *We must put a difference betweene things honest, and of good report, and things unhonest and of bad report, and those we are to let passe, and only to doe the other. Phil.*4.8. Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things pertaine to love, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any vertue, if there be any praise, thinke on these things. To this may be added one caveat, that, Of two evils which are both sinnes, we must not only not chuse the lesse, but we are to chuse neither. For their damnation is just, who affirme that men may doe evill, that good may come of it, as the Apostle saith, Rom. 3.8.

E duobus malis non minimum, sed neutrum eligendum.

VI. Rule. Thing of profit and pleasure must give place to things that belong to vertue and honestie. This conclusion the light of nature teacheth. Worldly men say, who will shew us any good? but Davids prayer is; *Lord lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us, Psal.*4.6. Godlinesse is the great gaine: therfore all gaine must give place to godlinesse, 1 *Tim.*6.6.

VII. Rule. We may not trust man upon faire pretences that they make unto us, without further triall. This point was practised by our Saviour viour Christ, who, though many beleeved in his name, when they saw the miracles which he had done; yet he did not commit himselfe unto them, because he knew them all, Iohn 2. 24. And it is also verified by the common proverbe, First trie, and then trust.

VIII. Rule. We must give place to the sway of the times, wherein we line, so fir forth as may stand with keeping faith, and a good conscience. We may not be temporizers, and change our Religion with the time; but yet we may and must give place to time, as we give place to the streame, so that it be done with keeping of true religion, and good conscience. This rule was practised by Paul, Act. 28. 11. who living among the Heathen was constrained to speak as they, and therefore he saies, that he departed in a ship to Rome, whose badge was Castor and Pollux. Againe, Act. 19. 10. he was three yeares in Ephesus an idolatrous place, where the great goddesse Diana was worshipped; yet in all that time he contained himselfe, and spake nothing in particular against Diana, but only in generall against false gods, saying, that they be no gods that are made with hands, v. 29. Nay Alexander could not charge him with this, that he had in all that while blasphemed their goddesse Diana. Paul therefore was faine to yeeld to the sway of those times, that so he might do some good in Ephesus by his ministery. Whereas, if hee had spoken against Diana directly, it had not bin possible for him, to have done that good by preaching, which otherwise he did. Againe, in the primitive Church, the Apostles for the weakeneſſe of the Jewes did yeeld to the use of Circumcision, and permitted abstinence from blood, and that which was strangled, &c. so far forth, as it stood with pure religion, and good conscience: and if they had not so done, they should not have wonne the Jewes to the faith, as they did.

IX. Rule. If we cannot doe the good things that we desire, in that exquisite manner that we would, we must content our selves with the meane; and in things which are good, and to be done, it is the safest course to satisfie our selves in doing the lesse, lest in venturing to doe the more, which cannot be, we grow to the extremity; and so faile or offend in our action. It is a good and wise counsell of the preacher, to this purpose, Eccl. 7. 16. Be not just overmuch: and his meaning may bee this; Bee not too strict or curious, in effecting that which thou intendest, exactly, when thou canst not; but rest contented in this, that thou hast done thine endevour; and take to the lesse, when the greater cannot be effected. In some countries, Popish Images erected in Churches do stand undefaced. The good desire of the people is, that they may be pulled downe: but this cannot be brought to passe. What then are they to doe in this case? they must not grow to extremitie, and pull them downe themselves; but they must intreat the lawfull Magistrate for their removall so to doe; and in the meane time, rest content with that they have done, and waite the Magistrates pleasure. In the Judiciall law, by reason of the hardnesse of the Jewes heart, sundry sinnes could not utterly be taken away, as divorcements, polygamie, usurie. Hereupon the Lord makes a law of Toleration, without approbation, and did not remoove them quite away, for that was not possible, in regard of man, for the time: but restrained the evill, that could not be quite cut off and abolished otherwise. And herein appeared the great wisedome of God, in making a Law not to allow of, nor yet utterly to take away, but to moderate the practice of these sinnes in the Jewes, for the hardnesse of their hearts. In like manner, in this our land there is the practice of usurie, a sinne that cannot, nor ever shall be rooted out utterly. For this cause, the States of this kingdome, have out of their wisedome provided a Law for the toleration thereof after a sort, and that upon a speciall cause. For if the Magistrate should have enacted a Law utterly to abolish it, it would before this (in likelihood) have growne to great extremity. The same was the practice of the Apostles in their times, who yeelded to beare with the use of Circumcision for a time, when they could not otherwise utterly cut it off.

II. Question.

whether a man may lawfully and with good conscience use Policie in the affaires of this life?

Ans. There be foure principall Caveats, which being observed, Policie may bee used, and is not against Christian religion. I. Nothing must (in policie) be said, done, or intended, to prejudice the truth, specially the truth of the Gospel. II. Nothing is to be said, done, or intended, against the honour and glory of God, either in word, in deed, or in shew. III. Nothing must be wrought or contrived against justice, that is due to man. IV. All actions of policie must be such as pertaine to our callings, and bee within the limits and bounds thereof. For if any action whatsoever be done out of that calling, wherin God hath placed us, or at least, be not answerable thereunto, though it bee plotted and attempted in never so great wisedome and policie, it is unlawfull and not warrantable.

These Caveats observed, it is not unlawful to use that which we commonly call policy. And the reason is this; when any businesse is to be done, we must make a two fold inquirie. First, into the thing to be done, whether it be good or bad, lawfull or not lawfull, commanded or forbidden. Secondly, into our selves, whether the work in hand be agreeable to the calling of the doer, or answerable to that duty which he owes to God and man. Now because both these are grounded upon the former cautions, cautions, therefore wee conclude, that whatsoever businesse is taken in hand, and not suted unto them, it hath not good warrant, and so cannot bee done with good conscience.

Yet for better clearing of this answer, let us a little consider the Scriptures, and the examples there recorded touching this point ligy. In Iosh. 8. 5. we shall find, that Iosua useth Martiall policy in the besieging of Ai, placing one part of his armie in an ambushe, and causing the other part to flie: for by that meanes, the men of Ai comming out of the citie, and pursuing those that fled, the souldiers that lay in ambush, spoile the city and destroyed it. In 2 Samuel 5. 23. David using to make warre against the Philistims asketh counsell of God, and God teacheth him policy, and more especially those wise and prudent shifts in warre, which we call Stratagems or policies of the fields. Wee have also the example of Paul for this purpose, who (Act. 18. 26.) faines himselfe to have made a vow to bee a Nazarite, that hee might yeeld somewhat to the weakeneſſe of the Jewes, who were not sufficiently informed in the doctrine of Christian liberty. This practice was warrantable, neither was it a sinne in Paul: for hee did it by the counsell of the Church at Jerusalem, verse. 20. 24. And Paul himselfe never made mention of this, as of a sinne, which hee would undoubtedly have done, had it beene a sinne. Againe, Act. 23. 6. when hee was brought before Ananias the Priest, and the Councell at Jerusalem, being in some daunger, he useth policie: for he pretended that he was a Pharisie, and by that meanes raised a dissention betweene the Pharisies and the Sadducees. And this was no sinne in Paul; for he spake no more but the truth, only he concealed part of the truth.

Now if it fall out otherwise: that policie be used, and any of these foure Caveats be not observed, then it loseth both the name and nature of true policie, and becomes fraud, craft, and deceit, and so is condemnable. Example hereof wee have in David, 1 Samuel 21. 14. who when he came to the court of Achish king of Gath, and saw himselfe in daunger, he faines himselfe mad. Which though he did to save his owne life, yet his policie was not to bee allowed of: for it tended to his owne disgrace, (he being King of Israel:) and it was also dishonourable unto God, who had appointed him to be the king of Israel. Againe, that which is commonly called the policie of Machiavel is here to be condemned. For it is not answerable to the Caveats remembred. Besides that, it is not only against the written law of God, but even against the law of Nature. And the very foundation thereof standeth only in the practice of lying, swearing, forswearing, in fraud, deceit, and injustice.

CHAP. III.

Of Questions concerning Clemencie.

CLemencie or meekeneſſe is a vertue, that serves to moderate wrath and revenge. Touching Clemencie there be three questions.

I. How a man is to carrie himselfe in respect of injuries and offences done unto him?

II. When Anger is in time, and when not?

III. How a man should remedie his rash and unjust anger?

I. Question.

How may a man carrie himselfe in respect of injuries and offences done unto him?

Ans. That a man may behave himselfe so as becommeth a Christian in these cases, hee must in the first place inquire into the nature and qualitie of the wrong done.

Now, Offences that are done to us by others are of three sorts.

The first sort, and the least are, when some things are done to us, that doe only displease us, but bring no losse or hurt to us. These bee light offences, and of this kinde are common infirmities, as hastinesse, restinesse, frowardneſſe, slownesse and dulnesse of nature; of this kind also, are reproches of unskilfulnesse, ignorance, basenes, povertie, and such like. The first degree then of Clemencie is, not so much as to take notice of these sleight offences, but to let them passe, and burie them in oblivion. Salomon saith, A mans understanding deferreth his anger, and it is credit to passe by an offence, Prov. 19. 11. his meaning is, that when small offences are done, which cannot be avoided, then in discretion a man should wisely shut his anger, and not take notice of them, but passe by them and let them goe: for this shall be a farre greater ornament unto him, than if upon the deed done, he should hastily proceeded to revenge.

The second sort of offences are small injuries, such as doe not only displease us, but withall bring some little hurt to us: either in our goods, life, or good name. Now the second degree of meekeneſſe is, to take notice of these, but withall to forgive them and put them up. The reason is, because alwaies greater care must be had of peace and love, than of our owne private affaires. Reade the practice hereof, Iohn 8. 49. It was objected to Christ wrongfully, that he was a Samaritane, and had a Devill. Christ takes knowledge of the wrong & saith, you have reproched me: but withal he puts it up, only denying that which they laid, and clearing himselfe, I have not a devill, but I honour my Father. David had received great wrong at the hands of Ioab and Shemei, as appeares in the historie of his life, but principally, when he came first to be king of Israel, 2 Sam. 3. and yet he takes not a hastie course, course, presently to be revenged upon his adversaries: but proceeds in this order. First, he takes notice of the fact, and commits his cause to God, v. 19. and then afterward, as opportunity served, gave the parties their just desert. The reason was, because being newly invested in the kingdome, his adversaries were strong, and himselfe weake, even by his owne confession, and therefore not able at the first to redresse the injury done unto him. But when he had once established himselfe, then he doth not only beginne, 2 Sam. 19. 14. but proceeds to ful execution of punishment upon them, as we reade, 1 Kin. 2. ver. 5. 6. 34, 35.

The third sort of wrongs are greater injuries, such as are not only offensive to our persons, but withall doe prejudice our lives, and bring a ruine upon our estates, both in goods and good name. These are the highest degree of injuries, manifested in open and apparent wrongs. And therefore answerable to them, is required the third and highest degree of Clemencie, which stands in three things. First, in taking notice: secondly, in forgiving them: thirdly, in a just and lawfull defending our selves against the wronging parties. This is the summe and substance of the answer.

For the better conceiving whereof, sundry Questions are further to be propounded and resolved.

First in generall, it is demanded, how a man should and ought to forgive an injury.

Ans. In forgivenesse there be foure things.

The first is forgivenesse of Revenge, that is, of requiring evill for evill, either by thought, word, or deed. This must alwaies be practised. For vengeance is not ours, but the Lords, and great reason then, that we should evermore forgive, in regard of revenge and hatred. This the Apostle teacheth, when he saith, 1 Cor. 13. 5. Love is not provoked, it never thinketh, much lesse speakes or does, evill.

The second is forgivenesse of private punishment, which is, when men returne punishment for injuries done, in way of requitall; and this must alwaies take place with us, because as vengeance it selfe, so also punishment in way of revenge, is Gods alone.

The third is, forgivenesse of judgement, when we judge an injurie done to be an injurie. This judgement we are not bound to forgive unto men. For we may with good conscience judge a sinne and a wrong to be as they are. And yet notwithstanding, if a man make satisfaction for the wrong done, then there ought to be forgiveneſſe, even in regard of judgement.

The fourth is forgiveneſſe of satisfaction. This we are not alway bound to remit, but we may with good conscience alway require satisfaction where hurt is done.

Secondly, for the further clearing of this generall Question, we are to answer some particular Cases usually propounded in the lives of men, and namely, five.

I. Whether a man may defend himselfe by law?

II. How he may defend himselfe by law?

III. Whether a man may defend himselfe by force?

IV. How?

V. Whether a man may defend himselfe by combat?

I. Case. Whether a man may with good conscience and a meeke Spirit, defend himselfe by law, for wrongs that are done unto him?

I answer affirmatively: A man may, with good conscience, defend himselfe against great injuries, by the benefit of law. For Magistracie is Gods ordinance, for the good of men, Rom. 13. 4. and therefore men may use the benefit of authoritie, judgement, and jurisdiction of Magistrates, without breach of conscience. Againe, it is the expresse law of God, that when a false witnes riseth up against a man, to accuse him of a trespasse, that both the accuser and the accused should stand before God, that is, before his Priests & Judges for the time being, and have remedie at their hands. An example of which judiciall defence we have in Paul, who in case of wrong makes his appeale to the judgement seat of Rome, Act. 25. 10.

But it is alleaged out of Scripture, to the contrarie, Luk. 6. 29. To him that smiteth thee on the one cheeke offer also the other. Matth. 5. 40. If any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him carrie thy cloake also.

Answ. These places are spoken of private persons, that want the defence and assistance of the publike Magistrate; and such must rather suffer wrong upon wrong, blow upon blow, and losse upon losse, than right their owne wrongs, by revenging themselves.

Againe, it is objected, that Paul saies, Lawing is a fault, 1 Cor. 6. 7. There is utterly a fault among you, because ye goe to law one with another, &c.

Ans. We must distinguish betweene things themselves, and the manner of doing them. When Paul saies, it is a fault, he condemneth not lawing absolutely in it selfe, but the Corinthian manner of going to law, which was this. First, they went to law with scandall, before the Tribunals of Heathenish and unbeleeving Judges, and so made the Gospel to be slandered and reproached. Secondly, they went to law upon light causes, and for small injuries, which they might well have put up, and easily brooked. Thirdly, in lawing they fell into rash and violent passions of rage and envy, so as they could not temper themselves, but must needs goe to law in the first place, which should rather have beene the last and the desperatest remedie of all. And this bad manner of suing one another at the law, is it which Paul rebukes as a fault. And it is to be observed, that Paul notes their fault by a word that signifies * Weaknesse or impotencie of their affections; whereby it came to passe, that being overcome by the strength of their owne desires, upon injuries offered, they were unable to beare them in any degree of Christian moderation, and thereupon hastily proceeded to the Courts of Heathen judges, for determination of controversies and contentions among them.

It is further alleaged, that when a man is any way wronged, it is Gods will it should be so, and therefore hee ought not to seeke redresse, but to rest himselfe in the wil of God.

Ans. It is Gods will we should have diseases, and yet it is no lesse his wil, that we should use good meanes to be cured of them. So is it in wrongs and injuries done unto us. As his will is, we should be afflicted, so also hath he willed our deliverance, by such meanes as himselfe hath appointed.

But our Saviour would have his Disciples to be as sheepe among wolves, and therfore we ought to endure all wrongs without revenge. For the sheepe takes all wrongs, and doth not so much as defend it selfe against the woolfe.

Answ. So Christ commandeth that wee should be simple as doves, Matth. 10. 16. and yet withall he commandeth us to be wise as Serpents, to defend our owne heads, and to save our selves.

Lastly, it is alleaged, 1 Cor. 13. 5. that love seekes not her owne: therefore love must not defend her selfe.

Answ. Love doth not so seeke her owne things, as that she neglecteth the good of others; but seeking her owne, she seekes the good of all. And this practice is not against, but according to the law of Charity.

II. Case. How is a man to defend himselfe by law?

Answ. For the resolving of this Question we must take two Rules.

The first is this. We must first trie all meanes, and use all remedies that may bee, before we use the remedie of Law. It is our Saviours direction, Matt. 5. 25. Agree with thine adversarie quickly, while thou art in the way, that is, before the controversie be ended by order of law. Again, Matt. 18. 15. If thy brother trespasse against thee, goe and tell him his fault betweene thee and him alone. And Saint Paul in this case prescribes a course to bee taken before hand; namely, first to beare and suffer as much as may bee, 1 Cor. 6. 7. Why rather suffer ye not wrong? why rather sustaine ye not harme? Then if bearing will not end it, to commit our cause to private arbitrement of one or two, v. 5. Is it so that there is not a wise man among you, no not one that can judge betweene his brethren? Law is to be used in this case, as the Physitian useth poison, and that is, only in desperate cases.

The second Rule is, That our patient mind must bee made knowne to all men, Phil. 4. 5. In taking the benefit of Law, we are to use great moderation of mind, and that in three respects; before we goe to law; in lawing; and when the suit is ended.

The moderation of minde before the beginning of suits in law stands in three things.

First, we must consider, that all injuries whatsoever they be, doe befall us by the providence of God, and that for our sinnes. Upon which consideration, we ought to submit our selves to Gods will, to obey him, to arme our selves with patience, and to lay aside all anger, envie, malice, and impatience.

Secondly, we must consider before-hand, that courts of justice are the ordinance of God, in which it pleaseth him to exhibite his presence, justice, and goodnes; and upon this ground, we shall be moved to depart with our owne right, and to yeeld our selves and all the right we have into the hands of God, in the use of the meanes appointed: in the meane time depending on him by faith, for the issue and event of our suit.

And hence (by the way) it appeares, that few or none doe use this ordinance of God as they ought, because the greatest sort of men that commence suits in law, doe not consider either the nature, or end of civill Courts. No man ordinarily will yeelde a haire of his right; but every one fixeth his eyes wholly upon the event of his action by extremity of law: and so swarveth from that Christian moderation required by the word of God in this case.

Thirdly, we must so doe unto our selves lawfull and just ends of our actions, not unjust and unlawfull. These just ends are first, Gods glorie in the execution and manifestation of justice: secondly, the honest defence of our owne right: thirdly, publike peace; fourthly, the amendment of disordered persons, and not the defamation or hurt of any man.

The moderation of the minde in Lawing stands in these particulars. 1. In seeking after peace to the utmost, Rom. 12. 17. If it be possible, as much as in you is, have peace with all men. 2. In love of our enemies, with whom we are at controversie in law. 3. In neither using nor shewing extremitie in our proceedings, Matth. 5. 25. Matth. 18. 28.

After that the suit is ended, the moderation of our minds must be expressed, by our behaviour, in regard of the event of our action. For if the Law goe with us, we are to give God thankes for the manifestation of his justice, in the course taken. If on the other side it goe against us, we may not rage or be discontentedly grieved, but commend our cause quietly to God, and accuse our selves for our owne sinnes, and say with David, Righteous art thou, O Lord, and just are thy judgements, Psal. 119. 137.

III. Case. Whether may a man defend himselfe by force, when he is wronged?

Answ. In some Cases he may lawfully defend himselfe by force. Reasons: First, because the Gospel doth not abolish the Law of nature, nor the poſitive lawes of all countries: but it doth eſtabliſh them. Now, it is the Law of nature and nations, that a man may defend his life and health, in ſome caſes upon juſt occaſion. Secondly, this is Gods Law, Exodus 22.2. If a theefe be found breaking up a houſe, and be ſmitten that he dies, no blood ſhall be ſhed for him: Abraham was a ſtranger in the land of Sodom, and yet he reſcued his brother Lot, and recovered all his ſubſtance that he had loſt, by force and armes, Gen. 14. 14. and his action was approved of God. For Melchiſedeck met him, as his returne from the ſlaughter of the Kings, and bleſſed him: yea, and bleſſed God for his deliverance, v. 19, 20. Againe, in ſome caſes a man may give his life for his brother. So ſaies S. Iohn 1 Ioh. 3.16. We ought alſo to lay downe our lives for the brethren.

IV. Caſe. When may a man defend himſelfe by force?

Anſ. Not alwaies and upon every occaſion, but only in theſe caſes. First, when violence offered is ſo ſudden and unexpected, that when it comes, there can be no eſcape, either by yeelding, or by flying, or by ſome ſuffering. Secondly, when the violence offered is open and manifeſt, ſo as there is no other way to reſcue our ſelves, but by ſtriking, or killing. Thirdly, when violence is offered, and the Magiſtrate abſent; either for a time, and his ſtay be dangerous; or altogether, ſo as no helpe can be had of him, nor any hope of his comming. In this caſe, God puts the ſword into the private mans hands. Fourthly, when the defence is juſt and done in a right manner.

A juſt defence ſtands in theſe things. I. It muſt be done incontinent and forthwith ſo ſoone as ever violence is offered. For if there be delay, and it come afterward, it loſes the name of a juſt defence, and becomes a revenge, ariſing of prepenſed malice, as the Lawyers uſe to ſpeake. II. There muſt be an intention, not to revenge principally, or to kill, but only to defend himſelfe. III. There muſt bee a juſt and equall proportion of weapons; therefore it is no juſt defence to ſhoot a naked man through with a muſket, or other peece of ordinance, when he offers violence.

V. Caſe. Whether a man may reſcue himſelfe or others by Combat?

Anſ. It hath beene of ancient times, an uſuall manner of defence, in ſome countries, that in caſe of difference, betweene people and people, in matters of weight, two men ſhould be choſen out amongſt the reſt, who by fighting hand to hand, and killing one another, ſhould end the controverſie. But this way of defence, how ancient ſo ever it be, is utterly unlawfull.

Reaſons are theſe. First, it is the expreſſe commandement of God, Thou ſhalt not kill. In which all private men are forbidden to kill or ſlay, but in the caſe of juſt and neceſſarie defence. Secondly, we may not hazard our lives, without ſome ſpecial warrant from God: if we doe, it is a flat tempting of God: and this is done in every combat. Thirdly, if Magiſtrates will permit ſuch fights as this is, then they are bound to defend and ſave the life of the innocent. For by ſuch permiſſion, oftentimes innocent blood is ſhed, and the more harmeleſſe partie goes by the worſt.

But it will be, and is objected. First, that a Combat is a triall of innocencie. Anſ. It is thorſt. For he that is ſtronger uſually overcomes in the combat, not he that hath the more righteous cauſe. Againe there be other meanes to try a truth, beſides this; as by examination, and by oath. Laſtly, triall by the combat is of the ſame nature with the triall of a murtherer by the bleeding of a corps touched, or handled; which is very doubtfull, and of all other moſt uncertaine.

Secondly it is alleaged, that if a man take not a challenge, he is diſgraced for ever. Anſ. There is no warrant in Gods word, for a private man to accept a challenge. Nay, it is rather flat againſt the word. For God ſaies, Revenge is mine. The private man ſaies the contrary, The wrong is mine, and I will be avenged of him that hath done it. Againe, it is better for any man to endure a little reproch with ſome men, than to hazard his life.

Thirdly it is objected, that the Philiſtines offered to try the victory by a ſingle combat with the Iſraelites, and appointed Goliah (on their ſide) to give the Challenge; and that David (on the Iſraelites ſide) accepting the Challenge, encountred with him, and had good ſucceſſe. It may ſeeme therefore, that combats are lawfull. For it is better that one man ſhould periſh in warre, than that a whole army ſhould miſcary. Anſw. That was a ſpecial and extraordinary example of triall, and David was a champion in that fight, not by ordinary appointment, but by extraordinary prophetical inſtinct of Gods ſpirit. Againe in warre, though there bee leſſe danger in hazarding one mans life, than a whole armie: yet a good and juſt cauſe is to be maintained, with all the ſtrength that may be made, and not to depend upon the power and courage of one man, who, in probabilitie, unleſſe he be ſupported by ſpeciall calling and aſſiſtance from God, may be overcome and loſe the victory.

Fourthly, it is alleaged, that an army may fight againſt an army, therefore one man againſt another. Anſw. The reaſon is not like. For warres and armies are Gods ordinances; and ſo are not combats; and it is not Gods will that men ſhould deviſe and eſtabliſh new waies and meanes of triall, not allowed by his word, but rather reſt content with that hee hath appointed.

Fifthly, Ionas did hazard his life, by caſting lots, therefore a man may by combat. Anſ. To ſay that Ionas did put his life in hazard by lots, is an untruth. For there was only a conjecturall triall made, who ſhould be the cauſe cauſe of the preſent danger. And when the lot fell upon him, he was not caſt into the ſea by the lot, but by his owne advice and counſell. Againe, the caſting of Ionas into the ſea did not befall him by lot, but by his owne voluntarie reſignation of himſelfe into the hands of God; will-ingly undergoing it, as a juſt puniſhment of the neglect of his calling; which himſelfe confeſſed in theſe words, For I acknowledge, that for my ſake this great tempeſt is upon you, Ion. 1.12.

Sixthly, Moſes and the Ægyptian fought a combat, and Moſes ſlew him. Anſw. Moſes tooke upon him publike revenge in his action as a Magiſtrate, and not private, as a private man. For though as yet his calling was not fully manifeſted to his brethren, yet the truth is, God had called him to be their deliverer out of the hands of the Ægyptians; and this verie action was a ſigne of their deliverance, which was to come to paſſe afterward. It was (I ſay) a ſigne thus; As he defended his brother, and avenged his quarrell upon the Ægyptian, ſo in time to come the Lord would by his hand give them full freedome and deliverance from the tyrannie of Pharaoh, and all his and their enemies, Acts 7.25. Being then a publike perſon, his example can prove nothing for this purpoſe.

II. Queſtion.

When anger is a vertue, and ſo good and lawfull, and when it is a vice, and conſequently evill and unlawfull?

This Queſtion hath two diſtinct parts: of which I will ſpeake in their order.

Sect. 1.

The firſt part is, when anger is a vertue, and lawfull?

For anſwer hereof we muſt underſtand, that in juſt and lawfull anger there be three things, a right beginning or motive, a right object, and a right manner of being angrie.

To the right beginning of anger, three things are required.

First, that the occaſion of anger be juſt and weighty, as namely, a manifeſt offence of God. Take an example or two. Moſes in ſundrie places is ſaid to be angrie, and the occaſions of his anger were great, as appeares in the particulars. First, becauſe ſome of the Iſraelites, againſt Gods commandement, had reſerved Manna till the next day, Exod. 16. verſ. 20. Againe, he was angrie becauſe the Iſraelites had tempted God, in worſhipping the Golden Calfe, Exod. 32.19. In Numb. 16: 15. Moſes againe is wroth, becauſe Corah, Dathan, and Abiram rebelled againſt him, and in him againſt God. Phinees, Numb. 25. 8, 11. is ſaid to have been zealous, that is, angrie for God: the occaſion was, becauſe the Iſraelites committed fornication with Heatheniſh women. David in like manner, 2 Sam. 13.20, 21. was angrie upon this occaſion, becauſe Ammon his ſonne had deflowred his ſiſter Thamar. Elias is angrie, 1 King. 19. 14. and why? becauſe the Iſraelites forſooke Gods covenant, caſt downe his altars, and had ſlaine his Prophets with the ſword. Nehemiah, chap. 5. verſ. 6. is verie angrie, becauſe the Iſraelites oppreſſed one another with uſurie, and other kindes of exactions. Ieremie alſo, chap. 6. verſ. 11. was angrie for this, becauſe the Iſraelites were of uncircumciſed hearts and eares, and the word of the Lord was unto them as a reproach, and they tooke no delight therein.

Secondly, it is required that anger be conceived upon counſell and deliberation. Prov. 20. verſ. 18. Eſtabliſh thy thoughts by counſell. If thoughts muſt bee eſtabliſhed by counſell; then the affections, and ſo our anger alſo. And the Apoſtle ſaith, Iam. 1. verſ. 19. Bee ſlow to wrath. Now the reaſon is plaine, Counſell ought to bee the foundation of all our actions, and therefore much more of our affections, which are the beginnings of our actions.

Thirdly, juſt and lawfull anger muſt bee kindled and ſtirred up by good and holy affections, as namely, by deſire to maintaine the honour and praiſe of God, by the love of juſtice and vertue, by hatred and deteſtation of vice, and of all that is evill. One ſaith well to this purpoſe, that anger muſt attend upon vertue, and be ſtirred up by it againſt ſinne, as the dog attends upon the Shepherd, and waits upon his eye and hand, when to follow him; and when to purſue the wolfe.

The ſecond thing in good anger, is a fit object or matter to worke upon; touching which two things muſt be remembred.

First, we muſt put a difference betweene the perſon, and the offence or ſinne of the perſon. The ſinne of the perſon is the proper object of anger, and not the perſon, but only by reaſon of the ſin. Thus David ſayes of himſelfe, that he was conſumed with anger, not becauſe the men with whom he was angrie were his enemies; but becauſe they kept not Gods Law; Pſal. 119.139. Thus Moſes was angrie at the idolatrie of the Iſraelites, where with they had ſinned againſt God fortie dayes together, and yet hee prayes earneſtly unto God for their perſons, as we read, Exod. 32.

But it is alleaged to the contrarie, that David directs his anger againſt the perſons of his enemies, eſpecially in Pſalme 109. Anſwer. First, Prophets (as hath been ſaid heretofore) were endued with a ſpeciall meaſure of zeale; and their zeale was a pure zeale, taken up ſpecially for the glorie and honor of God; but our zeale againſt our enemies is commonly mixt with hatred, envie, and ſelfe-love; therefore wee muſt not, nay wee cannot follow their examples. Secondly, imprecations used by David, were predictions rather than prayers: for he rather fore-told in them what should come to passe, than prayed that it might come to passe. Thirdly, David in his imprecations accurseth not his owne private enemies, but the enemies of God, and not all them, but such only as were incurable; for by the spirit of prophecie, hee knew the state of those against whom he did pray, so do not we.

Secondly, we must put a difference between the cause and offence of God, and the cause and offence of man. Now iust anger must bee directed against persons for the offence of God properly, and not for private offence, but only so far forth, as it tendeth to the offence of God. Thus Miriam and Aaron murmured against Moses, because he had married a woman of Æthiopia. But this was only a private offence, and therefore Moses behaved himselfe meekly towards them, Numb. 12.3.

The third thing in good anger is the right manner of conceiving it. Wherein these cautions are to be observed. First, that our anger be mixed and tempered with charitie & love. It is the propertie of God himselfe, *in wrath to remember mercie, Hab.*3. 2. and herein wee must be like unto him. This was the practice of Moses, who out of his love prayed for those with whom hee was angrie, Exod. 32. Secondly, anger against any offence must bee mixed with sorrow for the same offence. Thus Christ was angrie with the Jewes, but withall he sorrowed for the hardnesse of their hearts, Mark. 3.5. The reason hereof is this: In any societie whatsoever it be, if one member sinneth, the sinne of that one member is the punishment of the rest that be in that societie; even as it is in the bodie, if one part bee affected and ill at ease, the rest will be distempered. Paul sayes of himselfe, that he was afraid, lest when hee came to the Corinths, God would humble him for their sinnes, 2 Cor. 12. 21. Againe, he teacheth, that those which are fallen into any fault, must bee restored by the spirit of meekneſſe, because wee our selves are subject to the same tentations, *Gal.*6.1. And in this regard hee would have men to mourne with them that have in them the cause of mourning, Rom. 12. 15. Thirdly, iust anger must be contained within the bounds of our particular calling and civill decencie: that is, so moderated, as it make us not to forsake our duties which wee owe to God and man, nor breake the rules of comelinesse. Thus Iacob was angrie with Laban, and yet hee speakes and behaves himselfe as a sonne to his father, even in his anger, Gen. 31. verſ. 36. Ionathan was angrie with Saul his father, and yet hee withdrawes not any reverent or dutifull respect from him, 1 Sam. 20.

Sect. 2.

The second part of the Question is, When anger is a vice and unlawfull?

Anſw. It is a sinne in five regards, contrarie to the former.

A First, when wee conceive it without counsell and deliberation. This rash, hastie, sudden, and violent anger, is condemned by our Saviour Christ, *Matth.*5.22. Whosoever is angrie with his brother unadvisedly, shall be culpable of punishment.

Secondly, when it is conceived for no cause, or for a light or trifling cause, Prov. 10. verſ. 12. Love covers a multitude of sins. Therefore everie light offence must not bee the cause of open anger. Prov. 19. 11. It is the glorie of a man to passe by some infirmities. Eccleſ. 7. verſ. 23. Take not notice of all the words that men speake, no not of all those which servants speake unto their masters. Besides that, causelesse anger is many times forbidden in the Scripture.

B And Paul sayes, that love is hardly provoked, because it will not be moved to conceive hatred, but upon weightie and important causes, 1 *Cor.*13. verſ. 5.

Thirdly, when the occasion is just, yet the measure of anger is immoderate. Eph. 4. 26. Be angrie, and sinne not; and if by infirmitie thou fall into it, let not the Sun goe downe upon thy wrath. The reason is added in the next words, Give not place to the Devill; because hee is alwayes at hand to inflame the affection, as he did Sauls, who therefore in his rage, would have killed him that was next him.

Fourthly, when it makes us to forget our durie to God or man, and to fall to brawling, cursing, and banning. Thus was Shemei angrie when he railed upon the King, and flung stones at him and his servants, giving him bad and unreverent termes, and calling him a man of bloud, and a man of Belial, 2 Sam. 16. 5, C 6, 7. Thus did the Disciples forget their durie of love unto their brethren, and in anger desired that fire might come downe from heaven and destroy the Samaritans, Luke 9. 59. Thus the Jewes in undecent and uncharitable manner, gnashed with their teeth at Steven, Act. 7. 54. And S. Paul sayes, that the fruits of wicked anger are clamors, and crying speeches between person and person in their furie, *Eph.*5.31. And thence it is, that we finde Balaam in his anger, to have been more void of reason than his Asse, *Numb.*22.27.

Fifthly, when we are angrie for private respects concerning our persons, and not concerning the cause of God. Thus Cain is said to be exceeding wroth, and to have his countenance cast downe, only upon a private respect, because he thought his brother Abel should be preferred before him, *Gen.*4.5. Thus Saul was wroth with David, taking himselfe to be disgraced, because the people (after the slaughter of the Philistimes) ascribed to David ten thousands, and to him but a thousand, 1 *Sam.*18.7. In like manner he was angrie with Ionathan, for his love that he bare to David, and for giving him leave to goe to Bethleem, 1 Sam. 20. verſ. 30. Thus Nebuchadnezzars wrath was kindled against the three children, because hee tooke himselfe to bee contemned of them, *Dan.*3.19. Thus Haman meerely in regard of private disgrace, growes to great indignation against Mordecai, Ester ch. 3. v. 5. Thus Aja was angrie with the Prophet Hanani, because he thought it a discredit to him, to be reproved at his hand, 2 Chron. 16. 10. And in this sort were the Jewes filled with wrath at Christs reproofe, *Luk.*4.28. shewing thereby, as it is truly expounded by the Commenter, that they were verie hot in their owne cause, and not in the cause of God.

II. Question.

What is the remedie of unjust anger?

Anſ. The remedies thereof are two-fold: Some consist in meditation, and some in practice.

Sect. 1.

The remedies that stand in meditation are of three sorts, some doe concerne God, some our neighbour, some ourselves.

The Meditations concerning God are specially six.

I. Meditation. That God by expresse commandement fobids rash and unjust anger, and commands the contrarie, namely, the duties of love. Read for this purpose, *Mat.*5.21.22. where we may observe three degrees of unjust anger. The first whereof is that which is inwardly conceived, and not outwardly shewed. The second, when unjust anger shewes it selfe by signes of contempt, as by snuffing, tushing, changing and casting downe of the countenance. The third is railing (thou foole) which is culpable of Gehenna fire, the highest degree of punishment. Now all these three degrees are murther, and the punishment of a murtherer is to bee cast into the lake of fire, *Rev.*21.8. Againe, Christ commandeth us to reward good for evill, to blesse them that curse us, and to doe good to them that hate us, if we will be the children of our Father which is in heaven, *Mat.*5.45. And S. Paul wisheth us, to overcome evill with goodnesse, *Rom.*12.21.

II. Meditation. That all injuries which befall us doe come by Gods providence, D whereby they are turned to a good end, namely, our good. Thus David saith, that God had bidden Shimei to curse him, 2 Sam. 16.10. And this was the ground of Christs reproofe of Peter, Shall I not (saith he) *drinke of the cup which my Father hath given mee to drinke of? Ioh.*18.11.

III. Meditation. God is long-suffering even towards wicked men; and wee in this point must be followers of him. In regard of this, God is said to be mercifull, gracious, slow to anger, abundant in goodnesse and truth, *Exod.*34.6. Hence it was, that he spared the old world 120. yeares, 1 *Pet.*3.19. He spared the Israelites after their idolatrie 390. yeares, *Ezech.*4. 5. Besides this, we have example of

A the lowlinesse and long suffering of Christ, who saith, *Mat.*11.29. Learne of me, for I am humble and meeke: and of whom it is said, 1 *Pet.*2.22. When he was reviled, he reviled not againe; when he suffered, he threatned not, but committed his cause to him that judgeth righteously. Now because some may haply say, that these examples of God and Christ are too perfect for man to follow, who cannot imitate God in all things: therefore besides them, consider further the examples of some of the servants of God. Moſes, when the people murmured at him, did not answer them againe by murmuring; but cried unto the Lord, What shall I do to this people? for they be almost ready to stone me, *Exo.*17.4. And Steven B when he was stoned, prayed for his enemies, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge, *Act.*7.60.

IV. Meditation is, concerning the goodnesse of God towards us, an argument whereof is this: That he doth everie day forgive us farre more offences, than it is possible for us to forgive men.

V. Meditation. All revenge is Gods right, and hee hath not given it unto man, Rom. 12. 19. Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord. And man by revenging his owne quarrell, makes himselfe both the Judge, the witnesse, the accuser, and the executioner.

VI. Meditation is, touching Christs death. He suffered for us the first death, and the sorrowes of the second death: much more then C ought wee at his commandement, to put up small wrongs and injuries without revenge. His commandement is, Reſiſt not evill, but whosoever shall smite thee on the right cheeke, turne to him the other also, *Mat.*5.39. Againe, Destroy not him with thy meat, for whom Christ died, *Rom.*14.15.

The Meditations concerning our neighbour are two. The first is, the condition of him with whom we are angrie, namely, that he is a brother. Let there be no strife betweene me and thee, for we are brethren, *Genes.*13.8. Againe, he is created in the image of God; we must not therefore seeke to hurt or destroy that image. The second is, concerning that equitie which we looke for at the hands of all men. If we wrong any man, we desire that he would forgive us: and therefore we must forgive him the injurie that hee doth unto us, without unjust anger. This is the verie law of nature, Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, even so do you unto them, Mat. 7. 12.

Meditations concerning our selves are six.

First, he that conceiveth rash anger makes himselfe subject to the wrath of God, if hee cherish the same without relenting. Matth. 6.15. If ye doe not forgive men their trespasses, no more will your Father forgive you your trespasses. And *Matth.*7.1. Iudge not, that yee be not judged. Yea, when wee pray to God to forgive us, and doe not resolve to forgive our brethren, we doe in effect say, Lord condemne us, for we will be condemned.

Secondly, we are commanded to love one another, even as Christ hath loved us, Ephes. 5.2. It is the propertie of love, to suffer and to beare, and not to bee provoked to anger, 1 Cor. 13. And it is a marke whereby Gods children are discerned from the children of the Devill, that they love their brethren. 1 Ioh.3.10.

Thirdly, wee are ignorant of mens mindes in speaking and doing: wee know not the manner and circumstances of their actions. And experience teacheth, that much anger comes upon mistaking and misconstruing them. Whereas contrariwise, if they were thorowly knowen, we would not be so much incensed against men as commonly we are.

Fourthly, in rash anger we can doe no part of Gods worship that is pleasing to him, wee cannot pray: for hee that prayes must lift up pure hands without wrath, 1 *Tim.*2.8. Wee cannot bee good hearers of the word; for S. Iames willeth us to bee swift to heare, and slow to wrath, because the wrath of man doth not accomplish the righteousnesse of God. Iam.1.20,21.

Fifthly, we must consider what are the fruits and consequents of unjust anger. For first, it greatly annoyes the health. It annoyes the braine & pulse, it causeth the gall to flow into the stomack & the bowels, it killeth and poisoneth the spirits, and is the next way to procure distemper of the whole body, and consequently losse of health. Secondly, it makes a man captive to the Devill, *Ephes.*4.27. which we see to be true in Sauls example, who being a man full of wrath, and giving place to his owne rage and furie, an evill spirit entred into him by the just judgement of God.

Sixthly, we must consider the causes of unjust anger. It is commonly thought, that anger is nothing but the flowing of choler in the gall and in the stomacke: but the truth is, anger is more than choler. For it riseth first of a debilitie of reason and judgement in the minde. Secondly, from evill affections, as from envie and selfe-love. Thirdly, from the constitution of the body that is hot and drie. Againe, we read in histories, that men having no gall, have, notwithstanding beene full of anger: and choler indeed is a furtherance, but no cause of anger.

The remedies of unjust anger that stand in practice are specially five.

The first is, in the time of anger to conceale the same, both in word and deed. The indignation of a foole (saith Salomon, Prov. 12.16.) will bee knowen the same day, but the wise man covereth his shame: that is, hee restraines his anger, which if it should presently breake forth, would be a reproach unto him. Answerable to this notable speech of Salomon, was the wise counsell of Ambrose to Theodosius, that after sentence given, he should take 30. dayes respite before execution. And not unlike hath beene the practice of the verie Heathen in their time. Socrates said, I had beaten thee, but that I was angrie. Athenodorus gave Augustus this rule, that when he was angrie, he should first say over the whole Alphabet, before he put in execution his anger. * Ambros. de obit. Theod.

Secondly, we must depart from them with whom we are angrie. For this affection is as a fire, take the matter away from fire, and it will cease to burne: so let a man depart, & employ himselfe (for the time) some other way, & he shall soone cease to be angrie. Thus did Ionathan depart out of his fathers presence, 1 Sam. 20.34. Abraham in his anger withdrew himselfe from Lot, Genes. 13. Iacob in wrath departed from Esau, Gen. 27.42.44.

Thirdly, wee must avoyd the occasions thereof, as contentions and contentious persons. *Doe nothing through contention, Phil.*2.3. Make no friendship with an angrie man, neither goe with a furious man, lest thou learne his wayes, and receive destruction to thy soule, Pro. 22.24. We must for this purpose be carefull to avoid all meanes that may serve to further the heat of the temperature of such a body, as is apt and disposed to this unruly passion.

Fourthly, we are to consider that wee sinne against God, not once or twice, but often, yea every day: and therefore the course of our anger must be turned against our owne selves for our sins. For this is one propertie of true repentance, to worke in us a revenge upon our selves, in regard of our sinnes committed against God and our brethren, 2 *Cor.*7.11.

Fifthly, we must accustome our selves to the daily exercises of invocation of the name of God, for this end, that hee in mercie would mortifie all our earthly affections, especially this corrupt and violent affection of unjust wrath. And this must we doe, as at all times, so then especially when anger is creeping upon us.

It will bee said of some: Our anger is violent, and comes upon the sudden, and therefore these remedies will doe us no good. Ans. Such persons, when their mindes bee quiet, must often read and meditate of the foresaid remedies, and by this meanes they shall bee able to prevent hastinesse.

But what if wee bee overtaken with anger, what must we then doe? Answ. If thou fall into it through infirmitie, yet remember thy selfe, let not the Sun go down upon thy wrath, *Eph.*4.26. Consider with thine owne heart, that anger is as a poison: if a man drinks poison, he must not suffer it to rest and flow into the bodie and veines, but with all speed must purge it out: and so must anger be dealt with all, whensoever we are overtaken with it.

CHAP. IV.

Of Questions concerning Temperance.

Temperance is a vertue that moderateth appetite or lust. And this moderation of appetite stands in foure things.

I. In

I. In the use of riches.
II. In the use of meat and drinke.
III. In the use of apparell.
IV. In the use of pleasures, wherein recreations are to be considered.

Sect. 2.

Concerning the moderation of appetite in the use of riches, there are two maine Questions.

I. Question.

How farre a man may, with good conscience, proceed in the desiring and seeking of riches?

The Answer of this Question is the rather to be considered, because this doctrine rightly conceived and understood, serves greatly for the direction of the whole course of our lives unto the end. Here therefore I will first set downe the ground of the Answer, and then the Answer it selfe.

The ground of the Answer I propound in five Rules.

I. Rule. Wee must consider that riches and goods are of two sorts: some are necessarie, some are more than necessarie, which the Scripture cals abundance.

Goods and riches are two wayes necessarie; necessarie to nature, or necessarie to the person of a man. Goods necessarie to nature, are those without which nature and life cannot bee well preserved; and these are most needfull. Necessarie in respect of a mans person, are those goods without which a mans state, condition, and dignitie wherein he is, cannot be preserved.

Now riches more than necessarie, I terme those, without which both the life of man and his good estate may well bee preserved. For example: To the calling of a Student, meat, drinke, and cloth are necessarie in respect of nature; besides these, other things, as bookes, and such like, are also necessarie for him, in respect of his condition and place. And whatsoever is beside these is more than necessarie.

II. Rule. Things and goods are to bee judged necessarie and sufficient, not by the affection of the covetous man which is unsatiable, but by two other things, the judgement of wise and godly men, and the example of sober and frugall persons.

III. Rule. We must not make one measure of sufficiencie of goods necessarie for all persons; for it varieth according to the divers conditions of persons, and according to time and place. More things are necessarie to a publike man, than to a private; and more to him that hath a charge, than to a single man.

IV. Rule. That is to be judged necessarie, which in some short time to come may bee needfull, though it have no present use. For example: the dowrie that a father gives to his daughter at the day of marriage, though it bee not presently needfull, yet because in short time it may be necessarie, therefore it is to be reputed amongst necessarie goods.

V. Rule. Wee our selves doe often erre in judgement, in determining of things necessarie and sufficient for our selves: and therefore when men seeke things competent and necessarie, they must always pray to God to give them that which hee knowes in his wisdome to bee meet and necessarie, not prescribing a measure unto him.

I come now to the Answer of the Question, which is two-fold.

The first is this: Man may with good conscience desire and seeke for goods necessarie, whether for nature, or for his person, according to the former rules: but he may not desire and seeke for goods more than necessarie, for if hee doth, hee sinneth. The reasons of this answer are these:

First, *Deut.*17.16,17. the commandement is given to the King, that hath most need of abundance, that he should not multiply his horses, or his silver, or his gold. That which the King may not doe, the subjects ought much lesse to doe; and therefore they are not to multiply their goods. For this cause it is a great fault in subjects, repining (as they be) subjects, to seeke to attaine to the riches of Princes. Againe, Paul saith, 1 *Tim.*6.8. Having food and rayment, let us be therewith content. Besides that, in the petition, Give us this day, &c. we crave but only bread for our sustenance, that is meet to preserve us for nature, in that calling wherein wee serve God day by day. The prayer of Agur is, that God would give him food convenient for him, or (as the words signifie) bread of his statute, that is, which God in his counsell had appointed and ordained for him, *Prov.*30.8.

Secondly, seeking of abundance is an hazard to the salvation of the soule, by reason of mans corruption. Therefore, *Mat.*13. Riches are called thornes, that choake the word of God sowen in the heart. And 1 *Tim.*6.9. They that will, that is, desire to be rich, and content not themselves with things necessarie, fall into the snare of the Devill.

Thirdly, seeking of abundance is a fruit of diffidence in the providence of God. Now all fruits of unbeleefe must bee cut off; wee must not therefore desire more than necessarie.

In the next place, for the better clearing of this doctrine, the objections of covetous men are to be answered.

Object. I. Good things are to bee sought for; but abundance is a good thing, and a blessing of God. Answ. Good things are of two sorts. Some are simply good, that is to say, good both in themselves and to us, as remission of sinnes, holinesse, righteousnesse, and life everlasting in the kingdome of heaven, and such like: these may wee desire and seeke for. Some againe are good only in part, which though they bee good in themselves, yet are not alwayes good to us. Of this kinde is abundance of riches and store of wealth, more than necessarie for nature and person. For which cause, riches in abundance are as the knife in the hand of a childe, likely to hurt if it bee not taken away, because they are (in some men) occasions of sinne, unlesse God in mercie prevent and hinder them. And for our selves, what know wee whether God will keepe and preserve us from sinne, when wee seeke and labour for abundance?

Object. II. It is the promise of God, that riches and treasure shall bee in the house of the just, Psal. 112. 3.

The answer is two-fold. First, riches in Scripture sometimes doe signifie only things sufficient and competent, and of them is that place to be understood. To this purpose David sayes, that a small thing, that is, a competent and meane portion, though but verie little, is to the just man better than great riches to the wicked and mighties, Psal. 37. vers. 16. And whereas David in another place affirmeth, that nothing shall be wanting to them that feare God, Psal. 34. 9. And againe, They which seeke the Lord shall want nothing that is good: the places are to be understood with exception of the crosse and correction, in this sort, that they shall have competencie, unlesse the Lord intend to chastise and correct them by want. Secondly, if by riches David there meaneth abundance, the words must bee understood with this condition, if they bee for their good. For so all promises of temporall things must be limited with exception, partly of Gods glorie, kingdome, and will, and partly of our good and salvation.

Object. III. Wee must doe good to the poore, to the Church, to the Commonwealth, and we must also leave some what to posteritie. I answer: wee may not doe evill that good may come thereof. Againe, everie man is accepted of God according to that hee hath, and not according to that he hath not, if there be a ready minde, 2 Cor. 8. 12. And the end of a mans calling is not to gather riches for himselfe, for his family, for the poore; but to serve God in serving of man, and in seeking the good of all men: and to this end men must apply their lives and labours.

Object. IV. We are called to imitate the Ant, Pro. 6. & 13. which gathers in one season for her releefe in another. Answ. The Ant gathers in summer only things necessarie, shee doth not by the instinct of nature seeke superfluitie and more than is necessarie.

This doctrine serves to direct and informe almost all the world, to beat downe the wicked practice of the Usurer, and to teach everie one of us to moderate our care in things pertaining to this life.

The second part of the Answer is this: If God give abundance when we neither desire it nor seeke it, we may take it, hold and use it, as Gods stewards. Abraham and Ioseph of Arimathea are commended for their riches, and yet they obtained them not by their owne seeking and moiling after the manner of the world, but walking in their callings, God in his providence blessed and multiplyed their wealth. For further proofe of this answer, consider but one only place, Act. 5. 4. where Peter sayes to Ananias, when it remained, appertained it not unto thee? and when it was sold, was it not in thy power? These words import thus much, that if we have possessions and abundance, we may with good conscience enjoy them as blessings and gifts of God.

Against this doctrine it is alleaged: First, that our Saviour sayes, It is an hard thing for him that hath riches, to enter into the kingdome of God, Matth. 19. 23. Answ. The place is to be understood of them that trust in their riches, as it is expounded, Mark. 10. 24.

Secondly, it is objected, wee must forsake all, and become Christs disciples, by the commandement of Christ, Luke 14. verse 26. Answer. A man must forsake all, not simply, but in regard of the daily disposition and preparation of his minde; and so a man ought to forsake the things that are deerest unto him, because hee must have his minde resolved to forsake them. Againe, a man must bee content to part with all, not only in affection, but actually when it commeth to this point, that either hee must lose them, or renounce Christ.

Thirdly, it is alleaged, that riches are called unrighteous, Luk. 16. 9. Make yee friends of unrighteous Mammon: therefore it seemes we may not have them. Answ. Mammon is called Mammon of iniquitie, not because it is so in it selfe, but because it is so in the common use, or rather abuse of wicked men, and that in sundrie respects. First, because it is commonly (though not alwayes) unjustly gotten: for it is an hard thing to become rich without injustice. Secondly, it is made ordinarily, among sinfull men, an instrument of many evils. Thirdly, evill gotten goods are unjustly possessed, and no man can bee truly termed rich, that unjustly possesseth riches.

II. Question.

How a man may with good conscience possesse and use riches?

The Answer to this Question I propound in foure Rules.

I. Rule. They which have riches are to consider, that God is not only the soveraigne Lord, but the Lord of their riches, and that they themselves are but the stewards of God, to imploy imploy and dispense them, according to his will. Yea further, that they are to give an account unto him, both for the having and using of those riches, which they have and use. This Rule is a confessed truth. In the petition, when wee have bread in our houses and hands, yea which is more, in our mouthes; when we are in the use of the creature, even then are we taught to say, Give us this day our daily bread, to signifie that God is our soveraigne and absolute Lord, and that when we have the creatures, we have no use of them, unlesse he give it unto us. Againe, the commandement, Luk. 16. 2. Give an account of thy stewardship, pertaines to all men that have riches, though it be but meat and bread.

II. Rule. We must use speciall moderation of minde, in the possessing and using of riches, and be content with our estate, so as wee set not the affection of our heart upon our riches, Psal. 62. 10. If riches increase, set not your heart upon them; that is, place not your love and confidence in them; be not puffed up with pride and ambition, because you are rich, Luk. 6. 24. Woe be to you that are rich, that is, that put confidence in your riches, Matth. 5. 3. Blessed are the poore in spirit. Now poverty of spirit is, to beare poverty with meekenesse, patience, and obedience, as a crosse imposed by God. And in this sense the rich man may be said to be poore in spirit, if he bestoweth not his love and confidence upon his wealth, but in affection of heart is so disposed, as if hee were not rich, but poore. And this poverty is necessary even in the middest of wealth, because it wil restraine the fury of the untamed and unruly affection. Againe, Christ saith, Matth. 10. 39. He that loseth his life for my sake shall find it. Losing there mentioned, is not an actuall losing, but (as before) a disposition or preparation of the heart to lose for Christs sake (if need be) the deerest thing we have, that is, our life. And againe, Luk. 14. 26. If any man come to me, and hate not father and mother,—yea and his owne life also, hee cannot be my Disciple. That place is not spoken of actuall, but of habituall hatred. And this stands in a readinesse and inclination of the heart to hate (if need be) father and mother, yea our owne life for Christ and the Gospels sake. To this purpose the Apostle saith, They that buy, must be as though they possessed not, 1 Cor. 7. 30. that is, in respect of moderation of the affection, and the disposition of the heart. For otherwise, it is the law of nature, that he that buies must possesse.

Example of the moderation of the affection we have in Moses, who esteemed the rebuke of Christ greater riches then the treasures of Egypt, Heb. 11. 26. And in David who though he were a King and a Lord in the earth, yet saith of himselfe that he was but a pilgrime and sojourner with all his fathers, Psal. 39. 13. And he speakes this in respect of the affection of his heart, and moderation thereof, because he did not fix the same upon abundance. And of Paul, who professeth in this manner, I have learned to be full, and to be hungrie: in all things I am instructed, or entred in this high point of Christian practise, to be hungrie and to be full, Phil. 4. 12. In which text, two things are set downe. First, that Christian moderation or contentment is a high mysterie, yea that it requires much skill and art to know how to be poore, and how to be rich. Secondly, that himselfe was a learner of this art, and that he had beene but entred and initiated into the knowledge thereof. *perfected.

Now, that this moderation of minde may be learned and practised, we must remember that two especiall meanes are to be used. First, we must labour to be able to discerne betweene things that differ, Phil. 1. 10. How is that? by judging aright betweene riches temporal, and the true riches, that will make a man rich before God. This gift of discerning was in Moses, who upon a right judgement in this point, accounted the rebuke of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt; Heb. 11. 26. In David, who saies, that the Lord was his portion, when he was a King, and even in the middest of his riches, Psal. 119. 57. In Paul, who esteemed the best things that were, but base, yea drosse and dung, that he might win Christ, Phil. 3. 8. The second meanes of moderation is, to consider that wee are in this world, as pilgrimes and strangers, 1 Pet. 2. 11. that the best of us brought nothing into the world, neither shall (when we die) carry ought out of it.

III. Rule. We must, upon the calling of God, forsake our riches, and al that we have in this world, not only in disposition of minde, but in deed.

The word of God teacheth, that there bee three Cases, wherein a man is indeed to forsake all.

I. If he be extraordinarily and immediately called, to publish the Gospel to all nations. This was the case of the Apostles and Evangelists, who in regard of their calling, at least for use, forsooke all that they had, Matth. 19. 27.

II. In the Case of Confession; when for professing the name of Christ, a man is deprived of them in the daies of triall. Thus when our Saviour saith, Whosoever he bee that forsaketh not all that he hath, &c. Luke 14. 33. the words are spoken of all beleevers, in the Case of confession, when they are called by God unto it; and therefore S. Matthew explaines it thus; Whosoever, &c. for my names sake, he shall receive, &c. Matth. 19. 29.

III. When in the time of persecution, famine, or warre, the necessity is so great, that it requires present releefe, which can no other way be had, but by giving and selling the goods that a man hath. In Psal. 112. 9. the good man is said to disperse to the poore; this dispersing must not be understood of al times, but in case of extreme need. Againe, when Christ

Christ saies, Luke 12.33. Sell all that thou hast; this commandement must be limited: for a man is not bound to sell all at all times, but in the time of great and urgent necessity. Thus the Christians in the Primitive Church, in the daies of imminent persecution, sold all their possessions, Act. 2.45. And so Paul acknowledgeth that the Church of Corinth releeved the Church of Macedonia, even beyond their abilitie, in the dayes of extremity that was in that Church; 2 Cor. 8.

Here another Question may be mooved; Whether a man may voluntarily, and of his owne accord, give away all his goods, live upon almes, & give himselfe to fasting & prayer?

Ans. He may in Popish conceit give himselfe (in this sort) to voluntary poverty, which they hold to be lawfull, and (which is more) a state of perfection. We on the contrarie doe answer, that this practice is in no sort lawfull, unlesse a man have special calling and warrant from God so to doe. For first, the law of nature sets downe and prescribes distinction of possessions, and propertie of lands and goods, and the Gospel doth not abolish the law of nature. Againe, the same distinction and propriete is allowable by the written Law of God. Salomon teacheth, Pro. 5.15. that a man must let his water flow out of his cisterne, but hee must keepe the fountaine to himselfe. And, Prov. 10.22. It is the blessing of God to be rich, and he addeth no sorrowes to it. Men must not therefore voluntarily forsake their riches, and to bring sorrow to themselves. Besides that, Agur prayes against povertie; Give me not (saith he) neither poverty nor riches, Prov. 30.7. David makes it a curse, to be a beggar, Psal. 109. 10. and he never saw the righteous mans seed begging their bread, Psal. 37.25. Our Saviour Christ bidden him that had two coats, not to give both away, but one, Luke 3.11. And Paul saies. It is a more blessed thing to give, than to receive, Act. 20.35. Therefore he biddes every man to labour with his owne hands, that he may need nothing: that is, that he may not need the releefe and helpe of any man, or of any thing, 1 Thess. 4.11, 12.

But it is alleaged to the contrary, Mat. 19.21. If thou wilt be perfect, sell all. Ans. The words are a personal and particular commandement. For this young Prince, whom Christ speakes unto, was called to become a Disciple of Christ, and to preach the Gospel, Luke 9.59. And the commandement is not given generally to all men, but particularly to him alone, and we cannot make a general rule of a special commandement or example. Againe further, is was a commandement of speciall triall.

Secondly, they alleage, Matth. 10.9. Possesse neither gold, nor silver, nor money in your purses. Ans. That commandement was temporal, and given to the Disciples but only for the time of their first embassage into Jurie, as appeares in the 5. v. where Christ bids them not to goe yet into the way of the Gentiles. And the commandements of their first embassage were reversed afterward, Luke 22.36. Considering then that it belonged only to their first embassage, when they preached to the Jewes, it was not given them for all times.

IV. Rule. We must so use and possesse the goods we have, that the use and possession of them may tend to Gods glory, and the salvation of our soules. Rich men must be rich in good works, and together with their riches, lay up a good foundation in conscience, against the evill day, 1 Tim. 6.18.

For the better practising of this rule, take these three cautions.

I. We must seeke to have Christ, and to be in him justified and sanctified: and being in him, then shall we in him and by him have the holy use of all that we have.

Some will say; Infidels have the use of riches. Ans. They have indeed, and they are to them the gifts of God: Yet they so enjoy them, as that before God they are but usurpers. They be gifts of God in regard of Gods giving, but they are abuses and thefts in regard of their receiving, because they receive them not as they ought. A father gives a gift unto his childe, upon condition that he shall thus and thus receive it; now the child steales the gift that is given him, and therefore hath it not in that manner that his father would he should have it. In like manner do Infidels steale and usurpe the blessings of God, to which they have no just title, themselves being out of Christ; neither doe they use them in that maner which God requireth, sanctifying them by the word and prayer, 1 Tim. 4.5.

II. Wee ought to pray to God, that hee would give us his grace, rightly to use our riches to his glory, and our owne salvation. For riches and other temporall blessings, to sinfull men that have not the gift to use them well, are dangerous, even as a knife in the hand of a child. They are thornes, and choake the grace of God, they keepe those that trust in them, from entrance into the kingdome of heaven. Yea they are the devils snare, wherby he catcheth the wicked, and holdeth them in it at his will and pleasure.

III. Our riches must be imployed to necessarie uses. These are first, the maintenance of our owne good estate and condition. Secondly, the good of others, specially those that are of our family or kindred, 1 Tim. 5.8. He that provideth not for his owne, and namely for them of his houshold, he denieth the faith, and is worse than an Infidell. Thirdly, the releese of the poore, according to the state and condition of every man. Fourthly the maintenance of the Church of God, and true religion, Prov. 3.9. Honour God with thy riches. Fiftly, the maintenance of the common-wealth: Give tribute (saith Paul) to whom tribute belongeth, Rom. 13.7. And give unto God, saith Christ, the things that are Gods, and unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsars, Matth. 22.21.

Thus

Thus much touching the moderation of the appetite in the use of Riches.

Sect. 2.

In the second place follow those Questions, that concerne the moderation of our appetite, in the use of Meat and Drinke. Concerning which there are principally two; the answer to the first whereof is the ground of the second.

I. Question.

Whether there be any difference in the use of Meats and Drinkes, now in the times of the New Testament?

Answer. There is a distinction and difference of Meats to be observed in sundry respects.

I. In respect of man, for health sake. Paul counselleth Timothie; Drinke no more water, drinke a little wine, 1 Tim. 5.23. In which it is plaine, that there is a distinction of meats approved and commended for man. For every kinde of food fits not every body: meats therefore are to bee used with difference. Man was not made for meat, but meat for man.

II. In respect of scandall. Some are not to be used at some time, and some are at the same time to be eaten. Thus Paul professeth, that rather than he would offend his brother, hee would eat no flesh while the world endureth, 1 Cor. 8.13. And in Rom. 14. he disputes this point at large, touching the distinction of meats, that is to bee observed in regard of offending them that are weake.

III. There is a distinction to be made, in respect of civill and politicke order; when for the common good of societies, certaine kinds of meats for certaine seasons of the yeare are forbidden. Thus in our common wealth, there are appointed daies of flesh, and daies of fish, not in respect of conscience, but in regard of order, for the common good of the countrie.

IV. There is a difference of meats, which ariseth upon the bond of conscience, so as it shall be sinne to use or not to use this or that meat. Touching this difference; Before the flood, the Patriarches (in all likelihood) were not allowed flesh, but only hearbs, and the fruit of the ground, Gen. 1. verse 29. After the flood, flesh was permitted, but blood forbidden, Gen. 9.3,4. From that time there was commanded a distinction of meats, whereof some were cleane, some uncleane; which distinction stood in force til the death of Christ, and that in conscience, by vertue of divine Law. But in the last daies, all difference of meats in respect of obligation of the conscience, is taken away; and a free use of all is given in that regard.

This the Scripture teacheth in many places, Act. 10.15. Those things that God hath purified, pollute thou not. Peter in these words teacheth, that all meats in the new Testament in regard of use, were made cleane by God, and therfore that no man by refusall of any kinde of meats, should thinke, or make them uncleane. Againe, Rom. 14.17. The kingdome of God is not meat or drinke, but righteousnesse, peace, and joy in the holy Ghost. For whosoever in these things serveth Christ, is acceptable to God and approved of him. Hence it appeareth, that in the Apostles judgement, meat and drinke doth not make any man accepted of God, whether he useth or useth it not, but the worship of God is it that makes man approved of him. To the same purpose it is said, 1 Cor. 8.8. Meat doth not commend us unto God. Againe, Col. 2. ver. 16. Let no man condemne you in meat and drinke, &c. vers. 20. If ye be dead with Christ, why as if ye lived in the world are ye burdened with Traditions, as Touch not, Taste not, Handle not? All which perish with the using. Here, Paul would not have the Colossians burdened with rites and Traditions concerning meats, so as if they used them not, they should incurre the blame and condemnation of men: but he would have them to use them freely and indifferently. And his reason is double: First, because they were now freed in conscience from the bond of the Ceremoniall law touching meats: and therefore they were in conscience much more freed from mens lawes. Secondly, because these traditions are not the rules and commandements of God, but the doctrine and precepts of men. Furthermore, Paul in 1 Tim. 4.3. foretels, that there should be many in the latter daies, that should command to abstaine from meats. To which place the Papists answer, that that was, because such persons taught that meats were uncleane by nature. But the words are simply to be understood, of meats forbidden with obligation of the conscience, and the text is generall, speaking of the doctrine, not of the persons of those men, nor in civill respects, but in regard of the bond of conscience. Lastly, it is a part of Christian liberty, to have freedome in conscience, as touching all things indifferent, and therefore in regard of meats.

To this doctrine, some thinghs are opposed, by them of contrarie judgement.

Object. I. Princes doe make lawes, and in the lawes doe forbid meats and drinkes, and they must bee obeyed for conscience sake, Rom. 13.5.

Answ. They doe so, but all these lawes are made with reservation of libertie of conscience, and of the use of that liberty to every person. But to what end then (will some say) are lawes made, if they be made with reservation? Ans. The scope of them is, not to take away, or to restraine liberty, or the use of liberty in conscience, but to moderate the over-common

common and superfluous outward use. As for the text, Rom. 13.5. It is to be understood for conscience sake, not of the law of the Magistrate, but of the law of God that bindes us to obey the Magistrates law.

Object. II. There was bloud, and things strangled forbidden, in the councell at Jerusalem, after Christs ascension, Act. 15. verse 20. Answer. It was forbidden only in regard of offence, and for a time, so long as the weake Jew remained weake, not in regard of conscience. And therefore afterward Paul saies, that all things, even bloud it selfe was lawfull, though not expedient in regard of scandall, 1 Cor. 6.12. And to the pure, all things are pure. Tit. 1.15.

Object. III. Papists make lawes, in which they forbid some meats, only to rettraine concupiscence. Ans. Then they should forbid wine, as well as flesh; for wine, spices, and some kinds of fish, which they permit, are of greater force to stirre up lust, than the use of flesh. And hence it is, that Saint Paul exhorts men not to be drunke with wine, wherein is excesse; Eph. 5,18. Againe, I answer that lust may bee restrained by exhortation to temperance, without prohibitorie lawes for the obligation of the conscience, which are flat against Christian libertie.

Upon this answer a further Question may be made.

Whether a man may with good conscience eat flesh at times forbidden?

Ans. There are two kinds of eating; eating against the Law, and besides the Law.

Eating against the law is, when a man eats, and by eating hinders the end of the law, contemnes the authority of the law-maker, frustrates the law it selfe, and withall, by his eating gives occasion to other to doe the same. This eating is a flat sin against the fifth commandement. For it is necessarie, that the Magistrates lawes should bee obeyed in all things lawfull. Heb. 13.17. The master and the parent must be obeyed in all lawfull things, much more the lawes of Magistrates.

Eating beside the law is, when a man eats that, which the law mentioneth and forbiddeth, but not hurting the law. And, that a man may thus eat, fundry cautions are to be observed. I. This eating must be upon just cause in a mans owne selfe. II. It must be without contempt of the law-maker, and with a loyall minde. III. It must bee without giving offence to any, by his bad example. IV. When it doth not hinder the maine end of the law. V. When the eater doth subject himselfe to the penaltie, voluntarily and willingly. In this eating there is no breach in conscience, neither is it a sinne to eat that which the law forbiddeth. For man hath free libertie in conscience to eat that which he doth eat. Now if he use his liberty and hurt no law, observing these cautions, his eating is no sinne. For example. It was Gods law, that the priests only should eat the shew-bread. Now David upon a just cause in himselfe, (all the former cautions observed) eats the shew-bread, and sinnes not; because his conscience was free in these things, and therefore Davids eating was not against the Law, but only beside the Law.

II. Question.

How wee may rightly use meats and drinkes, in such sort as our eating may be to Gods glory, and our owne comfort?

Answ. That we may so doe, some things are to be done before we eat, some in eating, and some after our eating.

What is required before wee eat.

Sect. 1.

The thing that is to be done before our eating is the consecration of the food, that is, the blessing of the meats which we are to eat, 1 Tim. 4.5. Every creature of God is sanctified by the word of God, and prayer. By sanctification there, is not meant that, whereby we are sanctified by the holy Ghost: neither that, whereby the bread and the wine is hallowed in the Sacrament of the supper. But it is this: when we are assured, that the creature is made so free, and lawfull to us, in respect of our use, that we may eat it freely, and with good conscience. By the word of God, Paul meanes the word of creation, mentioned in Gen. 1.28, 29. and repeated, Genesis 9.3. as also the word of God touching the libertie of conscience, namely, that to the pure all things are pure. Tit. 1.15. It is further added, and prayer, that is, praier grounded upon the said word of creation, and the doctrine touching Christian liberty; whereby we pray for grace to God, that wee may use the creatures holily to his glorie.

The reasons, why this sanctification of our meat is to be used, are these. First, that in the use of it, we may lift up our hearts unto God, and by this meanes, put a difference between our selves and the brutebeasts, which rush upon the creatures, without sanctifying of them. Secondly, that we may be admonished thereby, touching the title we have to the creatures; which being lost by the fall of Adam, is restored unto us againe by Christ. Thirdly, that it may be an assured testimonie to our hearts, that we may use the creature with liberty of conscience, when we doe use it. Fourthly, that we may be sanctified to the use of the creature, as it is sanctified to us, to the end, that we may use it with temperance, and not abuse it. Fifthly, that when we use the creature, we may depend on God for the blessing of it, to make it our nourishment. For no creature can nourish of it selfe, but by Gods commandement, who as David saith, Psalme 145.16. Openeth his hand, and fisheth all things living of his good pleasure. And in bread, we must must not consider the substance only, but the staffe, which is the blessing of God upholding our bodies. Sixthly, that we may not grow to security, forgetfulnesse, and contempt of God, and so to prophanenes in the use of our meats and drinkes, as the Israelites did; which sate downe to eat and drinke, and rose up to play.

Now besides these Reasons, we have also the Examples of holy men. This blessing of the meat was so knowne a thing of ancient times, that the poore maids of Kamath-zaphim could tell Saul, that the people would not eat their meat, before the Prophet came, and blessed the sacrifice, 1 Sam. 9.13. Christ in his owne family would not eat of the five loaves and two fishes, till he had looked up to heaven and given thanks. Mark. 6. 41. Paul tooke bread in the ship, and gave thanks in the presence of all that were with him, Act. 27.35.

The use of the first point is. I. By this doctrine, all persons are taught, but specially governors of others, as Masters of families, and Parents; never to use, either meats or drinkes or any other blessing, that they receive at the hands of God, but with praise and thanksgiving. For this which is said of meats and drinkes, must be inlarged also to the use of any benefit, blessing, or ordinance, that we take in hand to use or enjoy. II. Though we doe not simply condemne, but allow of hallowing of creatures, yet we detest Popish consecration of salt, creame, ashes, and such like. First, because Papists hallow them for wrong ends, to procure by them remission of sins, to drive away devils, &c. Secondly, because they sanctifie creatures without the word; yea, though they doe it by prayers, yet it is prayer without the word, which giveth no warrant thus to use the creatures, or to these endes; and therefore of the same nature with Magicall inchantments. Thirdly, if the creature must be sanctified for our use, before wee can use it, then we our selves must be sanctified both in soule and body, before we can be fit for the use and service of God. Looke as the creature, by the hand and providence of God, is presented before us to serve us; so must we being strengthened and nourished by the same, give up our selves, soules and bodies, to serve and honour him. Yea our sanctifying of the creature to our holy use, should put us in minde of sanctifying our selves to his glory. So soone as the Prophet Esay was sanctified by God unto his office, then he addresses himselfe, and not before, and said, Lord, I am here. Esa. 6. 8. and so we our selves, before we can performe any acceptable duty unto God, must be purged and cleansed. The sonnes of Aaron would not doe this honour unto God, by sanctifying his name before the people, and therefore God glorified himselfe in their death, and temporall destruction. Levit. 10.2. And when Moses the servant of God failed in the sanctification of his name, by the circumcision of his sonne; Gods hand was upon him to have destroied him. This point is duly to be observed of all, but principally of such as are appointed to any publike office; if they will serve God therein with comfort and incouragement, they must first labour to be sanctified before him, both in their soules and bodies.

Sect. 2.

What is required in our eating.

I come now to the second thing, required for the right and lawfull use of meats and drinkes, namely, a Christian behaviour while we are in using them.

For the better understanding whereof, wee are to consider two points. First, what we may doe; and then, what we must doe in using the creatures.

I. Touching the former. We may use these gifts of God, with Christian liberty: and how is that? not sparingly alone, and for meere necessity, to the satisfying of our hunger; and quenching of our thirst, but also freely and liberally, for Christian delight and pleasure. For this is that liberty, which God hath granted to all beleevers. Thus we reade, that Ioseph and his brethren with him, did eat and drinke together of the best, that is, liberally, Gen. 43.34. And to this purpose David saith, that God giveth wine, to make glad the heart of man, and oyle to make the face to shine, as well as bread to strengthen the bodie. Psalme 104.15. And the Lord threatneth to bring a punishment upon his people, Agg. 1.6. in that he would give them his creatures indeed, but such a portion of them, as should only supply their present necessities, and no more. Ye shall eat (saith he) but ye shall not have enough: ye shall drinke, but ye shall not be filled. Againe, we reade that Levi the Publican, made our Saviour Christ a great feast in his owne house, Luk. 5.29. At the marriage in Cana a towne of Galile, where Christ was present, the guests are said, according to the manner of these countries, to have drunke liberally, Ioh. 2. 10. And at an other place, in supper time, Marie is said to have taken a boxe of pretious and costly oyntment, and to have annointed his feet therewith, so as the whole house was filled with the savour of the oyntment. John 12. vers. 3. Iudas indeed thought that expence which shee had made, superfluous, but Christ approves of her act, and commendeth her for it.

I adde further, that by reason of this libertie purchased unto us by Christ, wee may use these and the like creatures of God, with joy and rejoycing. This is the profit that redoundeth unto man, in the use of them, that he eat and drinke, and delight his soule with the profit of his labours, Eccl. 2.24. The practice hereof wee have in the Acts, c.2. v.46. where they of the Church that beleeved, are said to eat their meat together with gladnesse, and singlenesse of heart. And yet this rejoycing in the creatures, must be limited with this clause; that it be, in the the Lord, that is to say, a hurtlesse and harmelesse joy, tending to the glorie of God, and the good of our neighbour. This condemneth the common practice of the world, who solace and delight themselves in the use of Gods creatures, but so, as with their joy is joyned the ordinary traducing of the Magistrate, Minister, and those that feare God, and will not runne with them to the same excesse of riot, 1 Pet. 4. 4.

II. The second point is, what we must doe, when we take the benefit of Gods creatures; a matter of great consequent in the lives of men. And it is this, that we use our liberty in the Lord, and whether we eat, or eat not, we must doe both to the Lord, Rom. 14. 6. This is done by labouring, both in eating, and in abstinence, to approve the same unto God, unto his Saints, and unto our owne consciences. Wherein appeareth a manifest difference betweene the wicked and the godly man. For the one, when he eateth or drinketh, he doth it in the Lord, and to the Lord; the other doth it not to the Lord, but to himselfe, that is, to the satisfaction and contentment of his owne carnall delight and pleasure.

That a man may eat to the Lord, there are foure things directly to be observed.

I. That in our eating we practise Justice. Salomon saith, The bread of deceit, that is gotten by unlawfull meanes, is sweet unto a man: but afterward his mouth shall be filled with gravel, Prov. 20. 17. And Paul gives a rule to the Church of Thessalonica, that every man should eat his owne bread, that is, the bread which is procured and deserved by his owne just and honest labour, 2 Thess. 2. 2. This first thing serves to checke a number of men, that live in the daily practice of injustice, by spending their goods in good fellowship at Taverns and tipling houses, neglecting (in the meane while) the maintenance of their owne charge, by following their honest labour; and by this meanes, doe even rob their families of their due and right.

II. That we may eat to the Lord, we must practise Love and Charity in our eating. How is that?

First, we must give offence to no man whatsoever. It is good, saith Paul, neither to eat flesh, nor to drinke wine, nor any thing, whereby thy brother stumbleth, is offended, or made weake: Rom. 14. 21.

Secondly, in our eating we must have respect of the poore. Thus Nehemiah exhorteth the Jewes that were mourning for their sinnes, to be cheerefull, to eat of the fat, and drinke the sweet, and send part unto them for whom none was prepared: that is, to them that were poore, Nehem. 8. 10. And the Prophet Amos inveigheth against some of the Princes of Israel, who drunke wine in bolles, and anointed themselves with the chiefe ointments, and were not sorie for the affliction of Joseph: that is, did not releeve the poore brethren that were led captive, and wanted food and maintenance, Amos 6 6.

III. We must use our meat in Sobriety. Sobriety is a gift of God, whereby we keepe a holy moderation in the use of our dyet. Prov. 23. 1, 2. When thou sittest to eat, &c. consider diligently what is set before thee, and put the knife to thy throat, that is, be very carefull and circumspect in taking thy food, bridle thine appetite, take heed thou doest not exceed measure.

If it be asked, what Rule of moderation is to be observed of all, whether they be men or women, young or old?

Answer: First, one mans particular example must not be a rule of direction to all. In the East countries, we reade, that men have lived, and doe yet live a great time with a little; for example, with parched corne and a cake. Now this example of theirs, is no rule to us that live in these parts. For their countrie is hotter than ours, and therefore lesse might serve them than us: we are hot within, and so our appetite is the more strong. Againe, in eating wee may not judge or condemne him that eateth more or lesse than we our selves, because his eating is no rule to us in this case.

Secondly, a mans owne appetite is not to be made a rule of eating for others. For a man must not eat so long as his stomacke craves meat, lest he fall into the sinne of gluttonie, Rom. 13. 13. And this sinne is noted by our Saviour Christ, to have beene in the old world, in the daies of Noah, Matth. 24. 38. when they gave themselves to eating and drinking like the brute beasts*: for so the word signifies.

* σιτοις και πoσεσι.

If then neither example nor appetite may rule our eating, what bee the right rules of Christian moderation in this behalfe?

Ans That we may not exceed measure, we must keepe our selves within these limits.

First, our food must not goe beyond the condition, place, abilitie, and maintenance that God hath given us. John the Baptist being in the wildernesse, contented himselfe with very meane fare, agreeable both to the manner of that countrey, and to his owne calling, and condition of life. His meat was locusts and wild hony, Matth. 3. 4.

Secondly, it must be framed to the order and difference of time and place. Against this Rule the rich glutton offended, who fared deliciously every day, without any difference of time or place, Luk. 16. Salomon pronounceth a woe to the Land, whose Princes eat in the morning, Eccl. 10. 16. Saint Paul notes it as a fault in a Minister to be given to wine*, 1 Tim. 3. 3. that is, to be a common tipler, and one that loves to sit by the wine morning and evening, day by day.

Thirdly, every man must eat and drinke so much as may serve to maintaine the strength of his nature, of his bodie and minde, yea so much, as may serve to uphold the strength of grace in him. Salomon the King of Israel, would have all Princes to eat in time, for strength, and not for drunkennesse, Eccles. 10. 17. Esay notes it as a judgement of God upon men, when they use feasting and mirth, and have not grace to consider the workes of God, Esa. 5. 12. Our Saviour would have all men so to eat and drinke, that they may bee the fitter to watch and pray, Luk. 21. 34. 36. And the Apostle Paul exhorteth men not to be drunk with wine, wherein is excesse, but to be filled with the holy Ghost, Eph. 5. 18. His meaning is, that men ought so to eat and drinke, that their bodies, mindes, and senses, may not be made thereby more heavie, but rather more lightsome and able to perform their duties to God and man. For if by immoderate feeding they be hindered in this behalfe; they are guiltie of excesse and riot, which is greatly displeasing to God, and offensive to men. This rule serveth to admonish some persons, who (as the Proverb is) are good forenoone-men, but bad afternoonemen; because in the morning they bee sober, but for the most part overcome with drinke after dinner.

IV. Every man must eat his meat in gladnesse. This is indeed to eat unto the Lord, and it may be done by observation of these rules.

First, by taking heed of the abuse of any creature appointed for food, by intemperance. This abuse holy Iob suspected in his sonnes, while they were a feasting, and therefore he sent day by day, and sanctified them, and offered up burnt offerings unto God, according to the number of them all, Iob. 1. 5.

Secondly, by receiving the creatures, as from the hand of God himselfe. For this very end did God by expresse word, give unto Adam every herb bearing seed, which was upon the earth, and every tree wherein was the fruit of a tree bearing seed, for his meat, that he might receive it as God had given it unto him, from his owne hand, Gen. 1. 29. Thus Moses said unto the Israelites touching Manna: This is the bread which the Lord hath given you to eat, Exod. 16. 15. This David acknowledged, saying, thou givest it them, and they gather it: thou openest thy hand, and they are filled. Psal. 104. 28. and 145. 15. The Lord upbraideth Israel with this fault, by the Prophet Hosea, She did not acknowledge that I gave her corn, and wine, and oyle, and multiplyed her silver and gold, Hos. 2. 8. Yea, it is noted as an argument of Gods love to Israel, by the Prophet Ioel, that he sent them corne, wine, and oyle, that they might be satisfied therewith, Ioel 2. 19.

By this duty, are justly to bee reproved the carelesse and godlesse behaviours of sundry persons, who (with the swine) feed upon the creatures of God, but never lift up their eyes or hands unto him, of whom, and from whom they doe receive them. The very brute beast can teach them a better lesson. For (as David saith,) the Lions roaring after their pray, do seek their meat from God; Psal. 104. 21. Yea the heavens and the earth, and all that are in them do alwaies depend upon his providence, and are altogether guided and directed by him, Iob 38. And shall not man much more have an eie unto his Creator, and wholly depend upon him, for all blessings, from whom he receives life and breath, and all things?

Thirdly, wee must receive these creatures from God our Father, as tokens of our reconciliation to him in Christ. Spiritually S. Paul, Giving thanks alwaies for all things, to God even the Father, in the name of our Lord Iesus Christ, Eph. 5. 20. Thus wee hold and receive Gods blessings, and hee that holds and receives them otherwise, is an usurper, and not a right and lawfull possessor of them.

Fourthly, wee must learne to be contented with that portion that God assigneth to us, be it never so small; and withall labour to see the goodnesse of God, even in the meanest fare that may be. Our table is (as it were) a lively Sermon to us, of Gods speciall providence over our bodies. For first, in reason dead flesh should rather kill us, than give us nourishment, and yet by his blessing and providence, it continueth life and strength. Againe, both we and our meat are but perishing; and therefore when wee feed thereon, it may serve to stirre us up, to seeke for the food of the soule, that nourisheth to life everlasting, Iohn 6. 27. Furthermore, looke as every creature serves for our use, even so should wee our selves consecrate our selves unto God, and serve him both with our soules and bodies, as before hath beene shewed.

What is required about our meat.

The third and last point is, what we are to doe; and how to behave our selves after our meat? This Moses teacheth the Israelites, Deut. 8. 10. When thou hast eaten and filled thy self, than shalt thou blesse the Lord thy God. This praising or blessing of God stands in two things:

First, in a holy remembrance, that God hath given us our food. For being once filled, wee must take heed we forget not God, who hath opened his hand, and plenteously refreshed our bodies with his creatures, Deut. 8. 11.

Secondly, we must make conscience in view of thankfulnes to God, to employ the strength of our bodies in seeking his glory, and walking according to all his lawes and Commandements, whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye doe, doe all to the glory of God, 1 Cor. 10. 31. We may not live idlely, and give our selves to riot and gaming, but labour to serve God and our countrey, in some profitable course of life, left it be said of us, as was once of the old Iewes, that we sit downe to eat and drink, and rise up to play.

To this I adde one thing further, that when we have eaten to our contentment, and something remaines, care must be had to preserve it it, and not to cast it away. For this purpose we have the example of Christ, who commandeth to gather up the broken meat that remains, that nothing be lost, Joh. 6. 12. The reason is, because these reliques and fragments are part of the creatures, yea, they are as well Gods good creatures as the rest were, and must bee preserved to the same use.

Now if these may not bee abused, or lost, much lesse ought the gifts of the minde, which are greater, and farre more precious, be suffered to miscarry, but rather to bee preserved and increased. A good lesson for such as have received any speciall gifts of nature, or grace from God; that they mis-spend them not, or suffer them to perish, but carefully maintaine them to the glory of God, and the good of others.

To conclude this Question, wee are all to be exhorted to make conscience of this dutie; to use the good blessings of God in such sort, as they may alwaies tend to the honour of the giver, avoiding all excesse and riot.

Reasons to move us hereunto, may bee these: I. Excesse destroyes the body, and kils even the very naturall strength and life thereof. II. It brings great hurt to the soule of man, in that it annoyeth the spirits, it dulleth the senses, it corrupteth the naturall heat, and good temper of the body. Now these things being the helpes, and next instruments of the soule, if they be once corrupted and decayed, the soule it selfe will at length bee brought to the same passe. III. Let this bee considered, that a Woe belongs unto them that eate and drinke immoderately, Esa. 5. 11. And for this very sinne, the Lord led his owne people into captivity, verse 13. Yea the drunkard and the glutton shall become poore, Prov. 23. 21. And both shall equally with their pompe and excesse descend into hell, Isa. 5. 14. IV. Wee should be willing to part from all for Christs sake, much more from our excesse, and shall we thinke it possible for a man to forsake all, even his owne life, that will not forsake excesse and intemperance, in the use of Gods creatures?

It will be said of some, we are not drunken, though we drinke much. Ans. It is a policy of the Devill, to delude men withall, when hee perswades them, that much drinking is not amisse, if a man bee not overtaken therewith. For it is a sin to live and sit daily by the wine, to be alwayes bibbing and sipping. We know not when or where wee shall die, and we are commanded to watch over our hearts, that we be not overcome with sursetting and drunkennesse. What a madnesse then is it, to give over our selves to such immoderate excesse, whereby wee are utterly disabled from these and all other duties of godlinesse?

Sect. 3.

In the third place we come to those Questions that concerne the moderation of our appetite in the use of Apparell. And of this kinde there be two principall Questions; the former of them being nothing else but an introduction to the latter.

I. Question.

Whether ornaments of gold, silver, precious stones, silkes and velvets, &c. may not lawfully be used?

Ans. There is a lawfull use of these things, yet not in all, but onely in them to whom they belong. Reasons of the Answer are these:

I. Gold and silver, &c. are the gifts of God, and serve not only for necessity, but for ornament and comelinesse.

II. Wee have the examples of sundry persons in Scripture, which doe warrant the use of these creatures and blessings of God. Abraham by his steward sends unto Rebecca a golden abrilmont, or eare-ring, of halfe a shekell weight, and two bracelets of ten shekels weight of gold. Genesis 24. verse 22. And it is said, that when shee received it, shee ware the jewell of gold in her forehead, and the bracelets upon her hands; verse 47. Joseph being advanced in Pharaohs Court, had the signet of Pharaoh put upon his hand, and a chaine of gold about his neck, and was arraied in fine linnen: all which were the ornaments of Princes in those countries, Genesis 41. verse 42. Againe, all the Israelites did weare earrings of gold, which afterward they tooke off from their eares, and gave them to Aaron, to make thereof the golden calfe, Exod. 32. 3. And they are not blamed for wearing them, but because they put them to Idolatrous uses. So it is said of King Salomon, that he had silver in such abundance, that according to his state, hee gave it in Jerusalem as stones, 2 Chron. 9. 27. And Christ speaketh of the royalty of Salomon, as of a rare and excellent thing, which himselfe approved, howsoever hee preferres the glory of the Lillies of the field before it, Mat. 6. verse 29. The daughter of Pharaoh is said to bee brought unto Salomon in vesture of gold of Ophir, that is, in a garment of the finest bea.en gold, Psalme 45. verse 10. All these examples doe shew thus much, that there is a lawfull use of these things in them to whom they appertaine.

Against this doctrine some things are objected.

Object. I. In some places of Scripture, women are forbidden to weare costly apparell, and gold. For Paul willeth Timothy, that the women array themselves in comely attire, not with broidered haire, or gold, or pearles, or costly apparell. 1 Tim. 2. 9. And to the same purpose Peter speaketh, 1 Pet. 3. 3.

Answ. First, these ornaments are not by Paul and Peter simply forbidden, but the abuse of them in riot and excesse. For persons that were in those times called, were of meaner estate; and the Churches in the dayes of the Apostles consisted (for the greater part) of poore, base, and meane men and women. 1 Cor. 1. 28. These things therefore are forbidden them, because the use of gold and precious ornaments is nothing else but meere riot, in those that are but of a meane condition. Secondly I answer, that the Apostles in the places alleaged, doe reprove a great fault, which was common and ordinary in those dayes. For men and women desired and affected the outward adorning and trimming of their bodies, accounting the outward ornament, which consisted of gold, pearle, and costly apparell, to be the principall: whereas indeed the chiefe ornaments of a Christian, should be the vertues of Modesty and Humilitie, seated in the minde, and testified in the outward carriage.

Object. II. The Prophet Esay condemneth these things in particular. For it seemes, that he had viewed the wardrobes of the Ladies of the court in Ierusalem, Cap. 3. 18. &c. where he makes a Catalogue of their speciall attires and ornaments, and pronounceth the judgements of God against them all.

Answ. Some of the ornaments which the Prophet there mentioneth, are indeed meere vanities, that were of no moment, and served to no necessary or convenient use or end at al. Againe, others of them were in themselves things lawfull, and the Prophet doth not condemne them at all, as they have meet and convenient use: but hee condemnes them in this regard, because they were made the instruments and signes, of the pride, wantonnesse, vanitie, and lightnesse of those women. The truth of this answer will appeare, if we consider the 16. verse of that Chapter, where the prophet shews what his drift was in speaking of those things; not to condemne all ornaments, but the pride of the daughters of Ierusalem, and their hautinesse and wantonnesse, testified by divers particular behaviours there mentioned. Againe, some of the things there named, were the like, if not of the same kinde, with those which Abraham sent to Rebecca, and which shee did weare, Gen. 24. 22. And therefore we may not think that the Prophet intends to condemn all things there specified, but onely the abuse of them, as they were then misapplied to wrong ends, and served to proclaime to the world, the pride and wantonnesse of the hearts of that people.

III. Question.

What is the right, lawfull, and holy use of apparell?

Answ. In the use of Apparell, two things are to bee considered: the preparation of it, when it is to be worne; and the wearing, when it is prepared.

Sect. 1.

Preparation of apparell.

In the right preparation of our apparell, two Rules are propounded in Scripture for our direction.

I. Rule. Our care for apparell, and the ornaments of our bodies, must bee very moderate. This our Saviour Christ teacheth at large, Mat. 6. from the 28. to the 31. v. Where, commanding men to take no thought for apparell, he forbids not all care, but the curious and immoderate care. The reason is added, because they which walke in their callings, and doe the duties thereof with diligence, shall have, by Gods blessing, all things needfull provided and prepared for them. Hee that dwels in a borrowed house, wil not fal a trimming of it, and suffer his owne hard by to become ruinous. In like manner, our bodie is the house of our soule, borrowed of God, and by him lent unto us for a time; and wee are but his Tenants at will: for wee must depart out of it at his Commandement. And therefore our greatest care must bee employed upon our soules; and the other which concerneth the adorning of our bodie, must bee but moderate. Againe, God in his providence, cloatheth the very herbs of the field, therfore much more is he carefull for a man. And Paul saith. If we have food and raiment, we must therwith be content. 1 Tim. 6. 8. that is, if we have food and raiment necessary for us and ours, wee ought to quiet our hearts, and have no further care for our apparell.

It will be said, How shall we know what is necessarie?

Ans. A thing is necessary two wayes; first, in respect of nature, for the preservation of life and health: secondly, in respect of place, calling, and condition, for the upholding and maintenance thereof. Now we call that necessary raiment, which is necessary both these wayes: for example: That apparell is necessary for the scholler, the tradesmen, the countrey man, the Gentleman; which serveth not onely to defend their bodies from cold, but which belongs also to the place, degree, calling, and condition of them all.

If it be asked who shal determine and judge, what is necessary to these persons and purposes? I answer. Vaine and curious persons are not to bee competent judges hereof; but in these things we must regard the judgment and example of modest, grave, and frugall persons in every order and estate; who upon experience and knowledge, are best able to determine what is necessary, and what is not. Againe, though wee must not seeke for more than necessary apparell; yet if God of his goodnesse, give us ability to have and maintaine more, we must thankfully receive it, and use it well to the good example of others.

But some will say; It seemes that we ought not to have much, though God give ability, because wee may not have above one coat. For Iohn gives this rule, Luke 3.11. Let him that hath two coates, give to him that hath none. Answ. Iohn meaning must needs be this; He that hath not onely necessary raiment, but more than necessary, hee must give of his abundance to them that want. For otherwise, his rule should not agree with Christs owne practice, who had himselfe two coats, an inner and an upper garment, which he kept and wore: nor with Saint Pauls, who had both a cloake and a coat.

This Rule discovers the common sinfull practice of many men in the world. The greater sort of men are exceeding carefull, by all meanes and wayes, to follow the fashion, and to take up every new fangled attire, whensoever it comes abroad. A course flat contrary to Christs doctrine, which commandeth an honest care only for necessary ornaments, and condemneth the contrary, and that upon speciall reason, because this inordinate and affected care is commonly a great pick-purse. It fils mens heads and hearts with vaine and foolish thoughts: it makes them wastfully to abuse the blessings of God given unto them, whereby they are disabled from helping others that are in need. Whereas the first and principall care ought to bee for the adorning of the soule with grace, and putting on the Lord Iesus; and this is it which will yeeld more comfort to the minde and conscience, than any externall formalitie to the outward state of man.

II. Rule. All apparell must be fitted to the body, in a comely and decent manner, such as becommeth holinesse, Tit. 2.3.

If it bee here demanded, how wee should thus frame and fashion our attire? The answer is, By observing the rules of decencie and comelinesse, which are in number seven.

First, that it be according to the sex: for men must prepare apparell for men, women for women. This rule is not ceremoniall, but grounded upon the law of nature, and common honestly, Deut. 22.5. The woman shall not weare that which pertaineth unto the man, neither shall a man put on womans raiment: for all that do so, are abomination to the Lord thy God.

Secondly, our apparell must bee made according to our office; that is, such as may be fit and convenient for us, in respect of our calling: that it may not hinder or disable us, in the performance of the duties thereof. Whereupon comes justly to bee condemned the kinde of apparell, (specially of women) that is used in this age. For it makes them like to an image in a frame, set bolt upright; whereby it comes to passe, that they cannot go well and with ease or conveniencie about any good businesse, but must of necessity either sit or stand.

Thirdly, our attire must bee according to our abilitie, and maintenance, either in lands, or in goods and substance. Wee must (as the common proverb is) shape our coat according to our cloth, that so wee may not bee in want, but have sufficient wherewith to maintaine our families, and to releeve the poore. Which also serveth to condemne the sinne of many persons, who lay upon their backes whatsoever they can scrape and gather together; in the meane while neglecting the honest maintenance of their own estates for time to come, and the necessary releefe of them that are in distresse and want.

Fourthly, it must bee answerable to our estate and dignity, for distinction of order and degree in the societies of men. This use of attire stands by the very ordinance of God; who, as he hath not sorted all men to all places, so hee will have men to fit themselves and their attire to the quality of their proper places, to put a difference betweene themselves and others. Thus we reade, that Ioseph being by Pharaoh set over all the land of Egypt, was arrayed with garments of fine linnen, and had a golden chaine put upon his necke, to put a difference betweene him and the inferiour princes of Pharaoh, Genes. 41.42. Thus in ancient times, the captaines and chiefe of the armies did weare fine garments of divers colours of needle work, to distinguish them from others, Judg. 5.30. Thus in kings courts, they went in soft raiment, and the poorer people in baser and rougher attire, Mat. 11.8. By which it appeares, that many in these dayes doe greatly offend. For men keepe not themselves within their owne order: but the Artificer commonly goes clad like the Yeoman: the Yeoman like the Gentleman: the Gentleman as the Nobleman: the Nobleman as the Prince: which bringeth great confusion, and utterly overturneth the order which God hath set in the states and conditions of men.

Fifthly, mens attire is to be framed and prepared, according to the ancient and received custome of the countrey, wherein they are brought up and dwell.

Touching this rule, it is demanded, whether if a man see a fashion used in other countries, he may not take it up here, and use it?

Answ. Hee may not. For God hath threatned to visit all such, as are clothed with strange apparell, Zeph. 1.9. And Paul taxeth it as a great disorder in the Church of Corinth, and even against nature, that men went in long haire, and women went uncovered, 1 Cor. 11. 13,14. And if this be so, then what a disorder is that, when men of one countrey frame themselves to the fashions and attires both of men and women of other nations? This one sinne is so common among us, that it hath branded our English people with the blacke marke of the vainest and most new-fangled people under heaven. If a stranger commeth into our land, hee keepeth his ancient and customable attire, without varying or alteration. Wee on the contrary, can see no fashion used, either by the French, Italian, or Spanish, but we take it up, and use it as our owne.

Sixthly, the garments that we make to cover our bodies, must bee such as may expresse the vertues of our mindes; specially the vertues of modesty, frugality, shamefastnes. They should be as a booke written with text letters, wherin at the first, any man may reade the graces that be in the heart. Thus Paul exhorts women that they array themselves with comely apparel, in shamefastnesse and modesty, not with broidered haire, &c. but as becommeth women that professe the feare of God, with good works, 1 Tim. 2.9,10. And our Saviour commandeth that the light of our conversation, even in outward things, should shine unto men, that they seeing our good workes, may glorifie the Father which is in heaven. Mat. 5.16.

Seventhly, it must bee framed to the example, not of the lighter and vainer sort, but of the gravest, and the most sober of our order and place, both of men and women. Wee have no expresse rule in Scripture, touching the measure and manner of our apparell; and therefore the wise and grave presidents of good and godly men, that are of the same, or like degree with our selves, ought to stand for a rule of direction in this behalfe. To which purpose Paul exhorteth, Whatsoever things are pure, honest, of good report, if there be any vertue, &c. thinke of these things which yee have both learned, and received, and heard, and seene in me, those things doe, Phil. 4. 9. Examples hereof, we have many in the word of God. Of Iohn the Baptist, who had his garments of Camels haire, Mat. 3. 4. Of Elias, who is said to be a hairie man, in respect of his attire, and to be girded (as Iohn was) with a girdle of leather about his loynes, 2 King. 1. 8. For these rough garments were the principal raiments of Prophets in those times and places, as wee reade, Zach. 13.4. And it was the ordinary fashion of the Iewish nation, to use goats haire, not only for making of their apparell, but even of the curtaines, that were made for the use of the sanctuary, Exod. 36. 14. If this rule were practised, it would serve to cut off many scandalous behaviours in the conversations of men. For now adaies, men doe strive who shall goe before another, in the bravest and costliest attire: having little or no respect at all, to the examples of godly and sober persons of their degrees and places. And this their excessive pride and vanity is ordinarily maintained, by unjust dealing, in lying and deceit, by covetousnesse, and unmercifulnesse to the poore: sins which are so greatly dishonourable unto God, that the very earth whereupon men doe live, can hardly endure the same. Wherefore those that feare God, and have a care to serve him in holinesse and righteousnesse, ought to hate and detest these courses, renouncing the curious vanitie of the world, and testifying the graces and vertues of their mindes unto men, even by their grave and sober gestures and habits of their bodies.

Wearing of apparell.

The second thing to bee considered in the right use of apparell is the wearing and putting of it on. Touching which, two speciall Rules are to be observed.

I. Rule. That wee weare and put on our apparel, for those proper ends for which God hath ordained the same. The Ends of apparell are specially three:

First, for Necessities sake: that is, for the defending of the body from the extremitie of parching heat, and pinching cold, and consequently the preserving of life and health.

This was the end for which garments were first made after the fall. And the reason of it is this: Whilest man was yet in the state of Innocency, before his fall, there was a perfect temperature of the ayre, in respect of mans body, and so there was no need of garments: and nakednesse then was no shame unto man, but a glorious comelinesse. Now after that Adam, and in him all mankinde had sinned, vanity came upon all the creatures; and amongst the rest, upon the ayre a marvellous distemperature in respect of heat and cold. For the remedy whereof, it was ordained that Adam should weare apparell, which God having once made and appointed, hee hath ever since blessed it as his owne ordinance, as daily experience shewes. For our attire, which is void of heat and life, doth notwithstanding preserve mans body in heat and life; which it could not doe, if there were not a speciall providence of God attending upon it.

The second End of apparell is Honestie. For to this end doe wee put it on, and weare it, for the covering and hiding of that deformitie of our naked bodies, which immediatly followed upon the transgression of our first parents: and in this respect also, were garments (after the fall) appointed by God, for the use of man.

It is objected, that Esay prophecied naked and bare foot, Esay 20. 2. and so did Saul, 1 Sam. 19 24. I answer, first, that which the Prophet did, was done by Commandement, as may appeare in the 2. vers. of that Chapter. For the Lord gave him Commandement so to doe. Againe, hee is said to be naked, because he put off his upper raiment, which was sackcloth, or some other rough garment that Prophets used to weare: but it cannot bee proved, that hee put off that garment which was next his flesh and skin.

Concerning Saul, there bee two answers given. One, that hee put off his upper garment, as Esay did. For wee are not to imagine that hee prophesied naked, it being so unseemely a thing, and even against the Law of nature since the fall. The other answer, and that according to the true meaning of the text is; that Saul, before the spirit of prophecy came upon him, had put on and worne his warrelike attire, where with hee went out to

to take David. But when the Spirit came upon him, then hee put off his military habit, and went in another attire, after the manner and fashion of a Prophet, and so prophesied. And therefore, whereas he is said to go naked, the meaning is, that hee stript himselfe of his armour, which both himselfe and his messengers used, in pursuing after David.

Now touching the Covering of the bodie with apparell, these things are to bee remembred. First, that it must bee covered in decent and seemly sort. Thus Iosiph wrapped Christs body that was dead, in a cleane linnen cloth, together with the spices, Matth. 27.59. Secondly, the whole body must be covered, some only parts excepted, which (for necessitie sake) are left open and bare, as the hands and face: because there is an ignominous shame, not only in some parts, but over the whole body. And here comes to bee reproved, the affected nakednesse used of sundry persons, who are wont to have their garments made of such a fashion, as that their neck and brests may be left for a great part uncovered. A practice full of vanitie, and cleane contrary to this Rule, grounded in corrupted nature. For if the whole body bee overspread with shame by sin, why should any man by such practice, (as much as in him lies) uncover his shame to the view of the world? The end of attire is to hide the shamefull nakednesse of the body from the sight of men. But such persons as these are, doe hereby expresse the vanity and lightnesse of their minds, by leaving some part of their bodies open and uncovered. Wherein, what do they else, but even display and manifest unto men and Angels, their owne shame and ignominie? Nay, what doe they else, but glory in that which is (by the just judgement of God) reproachfull unto them? Let all those that feare God, and are humbled in the consideration of their sinnes, which are the matter of the shame of mankinde, bee otherwise affected.

A third end of apparell is the honouring of the body. To this purpole S. Paul saith, 1 Cor. 12.23. Vpon those members of the body which we think must honestly put more on the greater honor, &c. v. 24. God hath tempered the body together, and given it more honour to that part which lacked. And in 1 Thes. 4.4. It is the will of God, &c. that every one of vs should know how to possesse his vessell in holinesse and honour. These words are spoken of chastitie, but they are generally to bee vnder stood of any other vertue belonging to the body. Now the reason of this end is plaine. The body of every beleever is the Temple of the holy Ghost, and a member of Christ, in the kind and place, as well as the soule. Therefore it ought to be both holily and and honourably used.

For the honouring of the body with outward ornaments, we must remember this distinction. Some ornaments are inward, and some are borrowed. Inward, are the graces and gifts of God; these are our owne. Borrowed are gold, silver, pearles, and precious stones, and these are outward. And of the two, more speciall care ought to bee had of the inward, than of the outward and borrowed. For these are indeed faire and honourable, in the opinion and estimation of men; but the other are farre more honourable in the sight of God. And therefore S. Peter exhorteth women, that their apparell be not outward. as with broidered haire, and gold set about, or in sumptuous garments, but that the hidden man of the heart bee uncorrupt, with a meek and quiet spirit, which is before God a thing precious, 1 Pet. 3.3,4.

Now that we may use our apparell to the Ends before rehearsed, wee are yet further to observe some speciall Rules: which may serve for our direction in the right adorning of the body.

First, every one must be content with their owne naturall favour and complexion, that God hath given them; and account of it as a preciousthing, be it better, or be it worse. For the outward forme and favour that man hath, is the worke of God himselfe, fitted and proportioned unto him, in his conception, by his speciall providence. Being then the Lords owne worke and his will, thus to frame it, rather than otherwise; great reason there is, that man should rest contented with the same.

Here comes to bee justly reproved, the strange practice and behaviour of some in these dayes, who being not contented with that forme and fashion which God hath sorted unto them, doe devise artificiall formes and favours, to set upon their bodies and faces, by painting and colouring; thereby making themselves seeme that which indeed they are not. This practice is most abominable in the very light of nature, and much more by the light of Gods words, wherein we have but one onely example thereof, and that is of wicked Iezabel, 2 King. 9.30. who is noted by this marke of a notorious harlot, that she painted her face. For what is this, but to finde fault with Gods owne workmanship? and to seeke to correct the same, by a counterfeit worke of our owne devising, which cannot but bee highly displeasing unto him?

A cunning painter, when hee hath once finished his worke, if any man shall go about to correct the same, he is greatly offended. Much more then may God, the most wise and absolute Former, and Creator of his worke, bee highly offended with all those that cannot content themselves with the favour and feature they have received from him, but will needs be chilling his worke into question, and refining it according to their owne humours and fancies. Tertullian in his booke de habitu mulierum, calls such persons, and that deservedly, the devils handmaids.

But may some say, if there be any deformitie in the body, may wee not labour to cover it? Answer. Yes: but we may not set any new forme on the face, or habit on the body. Dissembling is condemned, as well in deed, as in word, and such is this.

Secondly, we must place the principall ornament of our soules and bodies, in vertue and good workes, and not in any outward things. So would Paul have women to array themselves in comely apparell, with shamefastnesse and modestie, 1 Tim. 2.9.

Thirdly, in using of ornaments before named, we must be very sparing, and keepe our selves within the meane.

It will bee here demanded, What is then the measure that must bee used? Answ. The Scripture gives no rule for our direction in this point, but the example and judgement of the sagest and sobereſt persons in every order, age, and condition; and as they doe and judge, so must wee. As for example: whether a man should weare a ruffe, single, or double, or tripled, &c. the Scripture in particular gives no direction: onely we must looke upon the example of the sobereſt and discreetest persons of our order and age, and that ought to bee our president for imitation.

Fourthly, ornaments must be used not alwaies alike, but according to times and seasons. It is noted as a fault in the rich glutton, that he went every day in costly apparell, Luk. 16. 19. In the dayes of rejoycing, we may put on more outward ornaments: and so they used of ancient times at marriages, to put on wedding garments. Mat. 22. But in the daies of mourning, baser and courser attire is to be used, as fitteſt for the time.

Fifthly, we must adorne our bodies to a right end; to wit, that thereby we may honour them, and in them honour God. Against this Rule doe offend those that adorne their bodies to be praised, to bee counted rich and great persons, and to purchase and procure unto themselves the love of strangers. This is the harlots practice, described by Salomon at large, Prov. 6.25. and 7.10. 16. These are the ends, for which we must attire our selves.

And so much of the first maine Rule to bee observed, in the wearing and putting on of apparell.

The second maine Rule followeth. Wee must make a spirituall use of the apparell which we weare. How may that be done?

Answ. First, we must take occasion thereby to humble our selves, and that in this manner. When we see the plaister upon the sore, we know there is a wound: and so the cover of our bodies, must put us in minde of our shame and nakednesse, in regard of grace and Gods favour, by reason of originall sinne. And wee are to know that it is a dangerous practice for any man, to puffe up himselfe in pride upon the sight and use of his apparell. For this is to bee proud of his owne shame. Nay, it is as much as if a theefe should bee proud of his bolts, and of the halter about his necke; garments being nothing else but the cover of shame, and the signes of our sinnes.

Secondly, by the putting on of our garments, wee must bee admonished to put on Christ, Rom. 13.14. Quest. How shall we doe that? Ans. Thus: We must conceive Christs obedience active and passive, as a covering, and therefore by prayer we are to come unto God in his name, and intreat him to accept this his obedience for us: yea that Christ may bee made unto us wisdome, righteousnesse, sanctification, and redemption. And wee on the other side made conformable to him in life and death in all morall duties. Lastly, that we may have the same minde, affection, and conversation that he had.

Thirdly, when we put off our cloathes we then are admonished of putting off the old man; that is, the masse and body of sinfull corruption. And we then put him off, when we can by grace hate sin, and carrie a resolute purpose in our hearts of not sinning.

Fourthly, when we cloathe our selves, and trusse our attire to our bodies, this should teach us a further thing, that it behoveth us to gird up our loines, to have our lights burning, to prepare our selves to meet Christ, whether by death, or by the last judgement. If we make not these uses of our attire, we doe not rightly use, but rather abuse the same.

In a word, to shut up this point wee are all to be exhorted to make conscience of the practice of these Rules, and to take heed of pride in these outward things. And in way of motive hereunto; consider first, how great and heinous a sinne Pride is. The greatnesse of it may be discerned by foure things.

First, in it and the fruit thereof, superfluity of apparell, there is an abuse of our wealth to needlesse and superfluous uses, which ought to be unployed to uses more necessary; as to the good of the Church, common-wealth, and families, and especially for the releese of the poore.

Secondly, in this sinne there is an abuse of time. For they that give themselves to pride, spend so much time in the adorning of their bodies, that they have no leisure for the adorning and beautifying of the soule. Hence it comes to passe, that proud persons abound with ignorance, idlenesse, wantonnesse, and many other enormities.

Thirdly, in this sin there is an abuse of the attire it selfe: in that it is made a signe of the vanity of the minde, and wantonnesse of the heart, which should be the signe of a heart religiously disposed.

Fourthly, in it there is a confusion of order in the estates and societies of men. For whereas one order of men should goe thus attired, and another after another manner; by this it comes to passe, that equall and superiour are cloathed both alike, and that which should be an occasion to humble us, is made an occasion to puffe us up.

Fifthly,

Fifthly, there is a great judgement threatned against this sin, Esay 2. vers. 11,12. Zeph. 3. vers. 11.

The greatnesse of this vice, we are to endevour by all meanes possible to redresse in our selves. For which purpose, we must be carefull to see and feele, and withall to bewaile the spirituall nakednesse of our soules; which is a depravation of the image of God, wherin wee are created according to him in holinesse and righteousnesse, the want whereof makes us ugly and deformed in the eyes of God. And the true sense and experience of this wil turne our mindes and thoughts from the trimming of the body, and make us especially to labour for the righteousnesse of Christ imputed, as the only covering which will keepe us warme and safe from the stormes and tempests of the wrath of God.

Sect. 4.

In this fourth place, we come to the handling of those Questions that concerne the Moderation of our appetite in the Vse of Pleasures and Recreations. And these are specially three.

I. Question.

whether Recreation be lawfull for a Christian man?

Answ. Yea, and that for two causes.

First, Rest from labour, with the refreshing of body and minde is necessarie; because mans nature is like the bow, which being alway bent and used, is soone broken in peeces. Now that which is necessarie, is lawfull. And if rest be lawfull, then is recreation also lawfull.

Secondly, by Christian libertie, we are allowed to use the creatures of God, not onely for our necessitie, but also for meet and convenient delight. This is a confessed truth; and therefore to them which shall condemne fit and convenient recreation (as some of the ancient Fathers have done, by name Chrysostome and Ambrose) it may be said, Be not too righteous, be not too wise, Eccl. 7. 16.

II. Question.

What kinds of Recreations and Sports are lawfull and convenient, and what unlawfull and unconvenient?

Ans. I will first lay downe this ground, that, all lawfull recreation is onely in the use of things indifferent, which are in themselves neither commanded nor forbidden. For by Christian liberty, the use of such things for lawfull delight and pleasure, is permitted unto us. Therefore meet and fit recreations doe stand in the use of things indifferent, and not in things either commanded or forbidden. Hence I derive three conclusions, that may serve for the better answer of the Question.

I. Recreation may not bee in the use of holy things; that is, in the use of Word, Sacraments, Prayer, or any act of religion. For these things are sacred and divine, they doe stand by Gods expresse commandement, and may not be applyed to any common or vulgar use. For this cause it is well provided, that the Pageants which have beene used in sundry cities of this land, are put downe; because they were nothing else, but either the whole, or part of the historie of the Bible turned into a Play. And therefore the lesse to be allowed, considering that the more holy the matter is which they represent, the more unholy are the playes themselves. Againe, all such jests as are framed out of the phrases and sentences of the Scripture, are abuses of holy things, and therefore carefully to bee avoided. The common saying may teach us thus much, It is no safe course to play with holy things. Lastly, upon the former conclusion, we are taught that it is not meet, convenient, or laudable, for men to move occasion of laughter in Sermons.

* Non est bonum ludere cum Sanctis.

The second conclusion. Recreation may not bee made of the sinnes or offences of men. They ought to be unto us the matter of sorrow and mourning. David sheddrivers of teares, because men brake the commandements of God, Psalm. 119.136. The righteous heart of Lot was vexed, with hearing and seeing the abominations of Sodome, 2 Pet. 2. vers. 8.

Upon this it followeth first, that common playes which are in use in the world are to bee reproved, as being not meet and convenient matter of recreation. For they are nothing else but representation of the vices and misdemeanours of men in the world. Now such representations are not to bee approved. Paul saith, Fornication, covetousnesse, let them not be named among you, as becommeth Saints, Ephesians 5. verse 3. And if vices of men may not bee named, unlesse the naming of them tend to the reproving and further condemning of them, much lesse may they bee represented for the causing of mirth and pastime. For naming is farre lesse than representing, which is the reall acting of the vice. Indeed Magistrates and Ministers may name them, but their naming must be to punish and reforme them, not otherwise. Againe, it is unseemly, that a man should put on the person, behaviour, and habit of a woman; as it is also for a woman to put on the person, behaviour, and habit of a man, though it bee but for an houre. The law of God forbids both, Deut. 22.3. And that law, for equity, is not meerly judiciall, but morall. Nay it is the law of nature and common honestie.

Here

Here also, the dancing used in these dares is to bee reproved, namely, the mixed dancing of men and women, in number and measure, (specially after solemne feasts) with many lascivious gestures accompanying the same; which cannot, nor ought to be justified, but condemned. For it is no better than the very bellowes of lust and uncleannes, yea the cause of much evill. It is condemned in the daughter of Herodias, dancing before Herod, Mark. 6 22. And in the Israelites, that sate down to eat and drinke, and rose up to play; that is, to dance. We read indeed of a kinde of dancing commended in Scripture, that Moses, Aaron and Miriam used at the red sea, Exodus 15. 20. And David before the Arke, 2 Samuel. 6. 14. And the daughters of Israel, when David got the victorie of Goliah, 1 Samuel 18. 7. 8. But this dancing was of another kinde. For it was not mixt, but single, men together, and women apart by themselves. They used not in their dancing wanton gestures, and amorous songs, but the Psalmes of praise and thanksgiving. The cause of their dancing was spirituall joy, and the end of it was praise and thanksgiving.

It may be alleaged, that Ecclesiastes saith, There is a time of mourning, and a time of dancing, Eccl. 3. 4. And David saith, Thou hast turned my joy into dancing, Psal. 30. 11. And the Lord saith to Ieremie, O daughter of Sion, thou shalt goe forth with the dance of them that rejoyce, Ierem. 31. 4. I answer: first, these places speake of the sacred dancing before named, and not of the dancing of our times. Secondly, I say, that these places speake not of dancing properly, but of rejoycing signified by dancing, that is to say, a hearty rejoycing, or merrie-making. Besides that, the Prophet Ieremie speakes by the way of comparison, as if he should say: Then shall the virgin rejoyce, as men are wont to doe in the dance. And it is sometimes the use of the Scripture, to expresse things lawfull by a comparison, drawne from things unlawfull: as in the Parables of the unrighteous Judge, the unjust Steward, and the theefe in the night.

The third Conclusion. We may not make recreations of Gods judgements, or of the punishment of sin. The Law of God forbids us to lay a stumbling block before the blind, to cause him to fall, though it be not done maliciously, but in sport Lev. 19. 14. Upon the same ground, wee are not to sport our selves with the folly of the naturall foole. For that is the blindnesse of his minde, and the judgement of God upon him. I know it hath beene the use of great men, to keepe fooles in their houses. And I dare not condemne the fact: For they may doe it, to set before their eyes a daily spectacle of Gods judgement, and to consider how God in like sort might have dealt with them. And this use is Christian. Neverthelesse, to place a spirituall recreation in the folly of such persons, and to keepe them only for this end, it is not laudable. When David feined himselfe to be mad, before Achish the King of Gath, marke what the heathen king could say, Have I need of madmen, that ye have brought this fellow to play the mad man in my presence? Shall he come into my house? 1 Sam. 21. 15.

Againe, the baiting of the Beare, and Cocke fights, are no meet recreation. The baiting of the Bull hath his use, and therefore it is commanded by civill authority; and so have not these. And the antipathie and crueltie which one beast sheweth to another, is the fruit of our rebellion against God, and should rather move us to mourne, than to rejoyce.

The second answer to the former Question is this.

Games may bee divided into three sorts: Games of wit or industrie, Games of hazard, and a mixture of both.

Games of wit or industrie are such as are ordered by the skill and industrie of man. Of this sort are Shooting in the long bow, Shooting in the Caleever, Running, Wrastling, Fencing, Musicke, the games of Cheese, and Draughts, the Philosophers game, and such like. These, and all of this kinde, wherein the industrie of the minde and body hath the chiefest stroke, are very commendable, and not to be disliked.

Games of hazard are those, in which hazard onely beares the sway, and orders the game, and not wit; wherein also there is (as we say) chance, yea, meere chance in regard of us. Of this kinde is Dicing, and sundry games at the Tables and Cards. Now games that are of meere hazard, by the consent of godly Divines, are unlawfull. The reasons are these.

First, games of meere hazard are indeed lots; and the use of a lot is an act of religion, in which we referre unto God the determination of things of moment, that can no other way bee determined. For in the use of a lot there be foure things. The first is, a casuall act done by us, as the casting of the Die. The second is, the applying of this act to the determination of some particular controversie, the ending whereof maintaines peace, order and love among men. The third is confession, that God is a soveraigne Judge, to end and determine things that can no other way bee determined. The fourth is supplication, that God would by the disposition of the lot when it is cast, determine the event. All these actions are infolded in the use of a lot, and they are expressed, Act. 1. 24. 25. 26. Now then, seeing the use of a lot is a solemne act of religion, it may not bee applied to sporting, as I have shewed in the first conclusion. Secondly, such games are not recreations, but rather matter of stirring up troublesome passions, as feare, sorrow, &c. and so they distemper the body and minde. Thirdly, covetousnesse is commonly the ground of them all. Whereupon it is, that men usually play for for money. And for these causes, such playes by the consent of learned Divines, are unlawfull.

The third kinde of playes are mixt, which stand partly of hazard, and partly of wit, and in which hazard begins the game, and skill gets the victorie: and that which is desective by reason of hazard, is corrected by wit.

To this kinde are referred some games at the cards and tables. Now the common opinion of learned Divines is, that as they are not to be commended, so they are not simply to be condemned, and if they be used, they must bee used very sparingly. Yet there bee others that hold these mixt games to be unlawful, and judge the very dealing of the cards to be a lot, because it is a meere casuall action. But (as I take it) the bare dealing of the cards is no more a lot, than the dealing of an almes, when the Princes Almner puts his hand into his pocket, and gives, for example, to one man six pence, to another twelve pence, to another two pence, what comes forth without any choice. Now this casuall distribution is not a lot, but onely a casuall action. And in a lot there must be two things. The first is, a casuall act: the second, the applying of the foresaid act, to the determination of some particular and uncertaine event. Now the dealing of the cards is a casuall act; but the determination of the uncertaine victorie is not from the dealing of the cards in mixed games, but from the wit and skill, at least from the will of the players. But in things that are of the nature of a lot, the wit and will of man hath no stroke at all. Nevertheless, though the dealing of the cards and mixed games be no lots; yet it is farre safer and better to abstaine from them, than to use them, and where they are abolished, they are not to be restored againe, because in common experience, many abuses and inconveniences attend upon them: and things unnecessarie, when they are much abused, because they are abused, they must not be used, but rather removed, as the brazen serpent was, 2 King. 18. 4.

III. Question.

How are we to use Recreation?

For answer whereof, we must remember these foure speciall rules.

I. Rule. Wee are to make choice of Recreations that are of least offence, and of the best report, Phil. 4. 8. Whatsoever things are of good report, thinke of them. The reason is, because in all recreations we must take heed of occasions of sinne, both in our selves and others. And this moved Iob, while his sonnes were a feasting, to offer daily burnt offerings, according to the number of them all, because he thought, It may be, my sons have sinned, and blasphemed God in their hearts, Iob 1. 5. And not onely that, but I adde further, wee must take heed of occasions of offence in others. Upon this ground, Paul saies, that rather than hee eating should offend his brother, he would eat no meat while the world endured, 1 Cor. 8. 13. In this regard it were to be wished, that games of wit should be used only, and not games of hazard, because they are more scandalous than the other. Lastly, in things that are lawfull in themselves, we are to remember Pauls rule, All things are lawfull, but all things are not expedient, 1 Cor. 6. 12.

II. Rule. Our Recreations must be profitable to our selves and others; and they must tend also to the glory of God. Our Saviour Christ sayes, that of every idle word that men shall speake, they shall give an account at the day of judgement. Matth. 12. vers. 36. Where by idle words, hee meaneth such, as bring no profit to men, nor honour to God. And if for idle words, then also for idle recreations, must wee bee accountable to him. Againe, S. Paul teacheth, that whether wee eat or drinke, or whatsoever wee doe, we must doe all to the glorie of God, 1 Corinthians 10. vers. 31. Therefore the scope and end of all recreations is, that God may be honoured in and by them.

III. Rule. The end of our recreation must bee, to refresh our bodies and mindes. It is then an abuse of Recreation, when it is used to win other mens money. The gaine that comes that way is worse than usury, yea it is flat theft. For by the law, we may recover things stolne, but there is no law to recover things won. And yet if play bee for a small matter, the losse whereof is no hurt to him that loseth it, and if it be applyed to a common good, it is lawfull; otherwise not.

IV. Rule. Recreation must be moderate and sparing, even as the use of meat and drink, and rest. Whence it followeth, that they which spend their whole life in gaming, as Players doe, have much to answer for. And the like is to be said of them that have lands and possessions, and spend their time in pleasures and sports, as is the fashion of many gentlemen in these daies.

Now Recreations must bee sparing two waies.

First, in regard of time. For wee must redeeme the time, that is, take time while time lasteth, for the procuring of life everlasting. Eph. 5. 16. This condemneth the wicked practice of many men that follow this game, and that, to drive away time, whereas they should employ all the time that they can, to doe Gods will. And indeed it is all too little, to do that which we are commanded: and therefore while it is called to day, let us make all the haste we can, to repent and be reconciled unto God.

Secondly, Recreation must bee sparing, in regard of our affection. For we may not set our hearts upon sports, but our affection must be tempered and allaied whith the feare of God. Thus Salomon saies, that laughter is madnesse, Eccl. 2. 2. so farre forth as it hath not the feare and reverence of the name of God to restraine it. This was the sinne of the Jewes reproved by the Prophet, that they gave themselves to all manner of pleasures, and did not consider the worke of the Lord, that is, his judgements and corrections, Esa. 5. 12. And thus if Sports and Recreations be not ordered and guided according to this and the other Rules, wee shall make them all not only unprofitable unto us, but utterly unlawfull. And so much of the vertue of Temperance.

CHAP. V.

Of Liberality.

HItherto we have treated of the first sort of Vertues that are seated in the will, which doe respect a mans owne selfe, namely, Clemencie, which standeth in the moderation of the minde in respect of anger: and Temperance, which consisteth in the moderation of our appetite, in respect of riches, apparell, meat and drinke, pleasures and recreations.

Now we come to the second sort, which respect others beside our selves. And these belong to the practice either of Courtesie and kindnesse, or Equitie and right. Of the first kind is Liberality: of the second is Justice, in shewing or giving Equitie, or Fortitude in maintaining the same. Of these in order.

Liberalitie is a vertue seated in the will, wherby we shew or practise courtesie & kindnesse to others. The principall Questions touching this vertue, may be referred to that text of Scripture which is written, Luk. 11. 41. Therefore give almes of those things which yee have, & behold all things shall be cleane unto you.

The words are a rule or counsell, delivered by Christ to the Pharisies; and the true and proper sense of them is this: You Pharisies give your selves to the practice of iniustice and oppression, and thereby you defile your selves and all your actions. For redresse hereof I propound you this Rule; Practise Charity in giving of your almes, let your outward good actions proceed from the inward sincere affection of your hearts toward your brethren; and then shall you attaine to a holy and pure use of your goods. The counsell of Daniel to King Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. 4. 24. To breake off his sins by the practice of justice, and his iniquities by mercie to the afflicted, may be a good Commentary to this Text.

In the words I consider two things: A remedie, Therefore give almes of those things you have; and the fruit that follows upon the remedie, and behold all things shall be cleane unto you.

Sect. 1.

The Remedie is the vertue of Christian Liberalitie, consisting principally in the practice of love and mercie, in giving of Almes.

For the better understanding whereof, five Questions are briefly to be propounded and resolved.

I. Question.

Who, or what persons must give almes?

Answ. There be two sorts of men that are and ought to be givers of Almes.

The first sort are Rich men, who besides things necessary, have superfluitie and abundance, yea, much more than things necessary. These are such as have the worlds good, as Saint Iohn saith, whereby they are able to give and bestow releefe upon others, out of their abundance. Thus Saint Paul saith, that the abundance of the Corinthians must supply the want of other Churches, 2 Cor. 8. 14. Many other proofes might be brought, but these be sufficient in a knowne confessed truth. 1 Ioh. 3. 17.

A second sort are men of the poorer sort, that have but things necessary, and sometime want them too. These must sometimes and in some cases give releefe. And because this point is not so easily granted, therefore I will prove it by the Scriptures.

The man that lives by his worke, is commanded to labour in his calling, that he may have something to give to them that want, Eph. 4. 28. The poore widow that cast into the Lords treasurie (of her penury) but two mites, that is, the eighth part of a penny, is commended; and Christ preferreth her almes before the great gifts of the richer sort, Luk. 21. 2. The Church of Macedonia, being poore and in extreme necessitie, doth yet send releefe to other Churches, and is commended for it by Paul, 2 Cor. 8. 2. Their povertie excused them not from liberality, but they were liberall, not onely according to, but even beyond their abilitie. Our Saviour Christ himselfe lived of almes: for Ioanna the wife of Chuza Herods steward, and Susanna ministred unto him of their substance, Luk. 8. 3. Where by the way we note, that he did not live by begging, as the Papists affirme, but by the voluntary ministration and contribution of some, to whom hee preached. Now though he was so poore himselfe, yet he used to gave almes of that he had, Ioh. 13. 29. The oblations of the old Testament, for the maintenance of the Altar, were a matter of great cost and charge; in sacrifices and such like ceremonies: and yet all were charged with them, the poore as well as the rich. Now in the new Testament, the materiall Altar is taken away, and yet we have something in the roome thereof, namely, those that are poore and destitute, which all men are bound in conscience to releeve and maintaine, as once they were to maintaine the Altar. Saint John commends unto us Charitie, not that which consisteth in words onely, but which shewes it selfe in actions, 1 John 3. 18. teaching that the one is no way sufficient without the other. Lastly, all mankind is distinguished into these two sorts: some are givers, some are receivers of Almes; there is not a third kinde to bee found in the Scripture.

Yet here an exception must bee added, that this doctrine bee not mistaken. There are some persons exempted from this dutie, and they bee such as are in subjection to others, and are not at their owne disposition. Of this sort are children under the government of their Parents, and servants subject to the authority and dominion of their masters. For the goods which they have, are not their owne, neither may they dispose of them as they list: they therefore must not bee givers.

It may bee asked, whether the wife may give Almes without the consent of her husband, considering that shee is in subjection to another, and therefore all that shee hath is anothers and not her owne. Answ. The wife may give Almes of some things, but with these cautions: as first, shee may give of those * goods that she hath excepted from marriage. Secondly, she may give of those things which are common to them both, provided it bee with her husbands consent, at least generall and implicite. Thirdly, shee may not give without or against the consent of her husband. And the reason is, because both the law of nature, and the word of God, commands her obedience to her husband in all things.

* Ex parpher-nalibus.

If it bee alleaged, that Ioanna the wife of Chuzæ Herods steward, with o hers did minister to Christ of their goods, Luke 8.3. I answer: it is to be presumed, that it was not done without all consent.

Againe, if it be said that Abigail brought a present to David, for releefe of him and his young men, whereof she made not Nabal her husband acquainted, 1 Sam. 25.19. I answer, it is true, but marke the reason. Nabal was generally of a churlish and unmercifull disposition, whereupon he was altogether unwilling to yeeld releefe to any, in how great necessity soever; whence it was, that hee rayled on the young men, that came to him, and drove them away, vers. 14. Againe, he was a foolish man, and given to drunkennesse, so as hee was not fit to governe his house, or to dispense his Almes. Besides that, Abigail was a woman of great wisdome in all her actions, and that which she now did was to save Nabals and her owne life, yea, the lives of his whole family: for the case was desperate, and all that they had, were in present hazard. That example therefore is no warrant for any woman to give almes, unlesse it be in the like case.

II. Question.

To whom must almes be given?

Answ. To them that are in need, Eph. 4.28. For the better conceiving of this answer, wee must remember that there bee three degrees of need. The first is extreme necessity, when a man is utterly destitute of the meanes of preservation of life. The second is great need, when a man hath very little to maintaine himselfe and his. The third is common necessity, when he hath something, but yet not sufficient or competent.

Now those that are in the first and second degree of need, they are the persons that must be succoured and releeved. For proofe hereof consider these places, Matth. 25.35.36. I was hungry, and ye gave me meat, I thirsted, and ye gave me drinke, I was naked, and yee cloathed me, I was sicke, and ye visited me, I was in prison, and ye came unto me. Where observe what persons Christ commendeth unto us to be releeved, the hungry, thirsty, naked, sicke, harbourlesse, and the captive or prisoner. Rom. 12.20. If thine enemie hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drinke. Wee must not onely supply the need of our friends, but also our enemies; 1 Tim. 5.16. If any believing man or woman have widowes, let him minister unto them, &c. that there may be sufficient for them that are widowes indeed. Here widowes that are desolate, without friends and goods, are commended to the liberality of the Church, Lev. 25.35. If thy brother be impoverished, and hath the trembling hand, thou shalt releeve him as a stranger or sojourner, so shall hee live with thee. By the trembling hand, is meant the man that works hard for his living, and yet cannot by his labour get things necessary, but must needs stretch out his hand to others that are in better state for helpe.

Here two Questions may further be made. First, whether we must give almes to beggers? I meane such as goe from doore to doore: for they come under the degrees of needy persons.

Anſ. Beggers are of two sorts: either such as are strong, able to labour and doe somewhat for their living; or such as are weake and impotent, unable to take paines for the maintenance of themselves, or those that belong unto them.

The first sort are not to bee releeved. For touching them, the Apostle hath given this rule, Hee that will not labour, must not eat, 2 Thess. 3.10.12. Every man must live by the labour of his owne hands, and feed upon his owne bread. Againe, such beggers are theeves and robbers, because they steale their labour from the Church and Common-wealth, which is as profitable as land and treasures.

In

In the old Law, if two men strived together, and the one had wounded the other; the offender was injoined, not only to pay for the healing, but for the losse of his time also, Ex. 21.19. And in like manner ought such persons to bear their punishment, both of their theft, and of the losse of their labour. And the truth is, they that give to them in this their loose life, doe maintaine them in wickednesse.

Yet here one Caution is to bee remembred: that if such a man bee in extreme need, hee must be helped, rather than he should perish. And the Magistrate is to punish him for his idlenesse, and to compell him to labour. The Magistrate, I say, for private persons have no authority to inflict punishment in this case.

As for the other sort, that are unable to worke, they are not allowed by the word of God, to gather their almes themselves by begging from doore to doore, but to be releeved at home in their houses, Deut. 15.4. there shall not be a begger in thee, v. 11. There shall be ever some poore in the land. Here the holy Ghost makes a plaine difference betweene the poore and the begger, forbidding the one, and commanding to helpe the other. S. Paul likewise distinguisheth of widowes, whereof some have rich kindred, and they are to be provided for by them, 1 Tim. 5.4. Others are destitute of friends and kindred, by whom they may bee releeved, and such he willeth to be maintained by the Church. v. 16. And this is no toleration or approbation of beggers.

Againe, the begging of almes is the very seminary of vagabonds, rogues, and straggling persons, which have no calling, nor are of any Corporation, Church, or Common-wealth. Yea, it doth proclaime to the world, in the eares of all men, the shame either of the Magistrate, who restraines it not, having authority: or of the wealthy and able, that they have no mercy or compassion. It is also a great disorder in commonwealths. For the boldest and most clamorous begger, carries away all the almes from the rest: and so releefe is distributed both unwisely and unequally. And howsoever it is the good law of our land, agreeable to the law of God, that none should beg that are able to labour, or ail men are bound in conscience so see it observed, that have any care of the good of this Church and commonwealth: yet it is a plague of our times, and greatly to bee bewailed, that it is neglected, and not put in execution.

In the second place it is demanded, whether we must put a difference betweene persons and persons, in giving our almes?

Anſw. There be three differences of men that are in need

The first, is a mans owne: and such are they, that be of his household, for which hee that makes not provision, is worse than an Infidell, as the Apostle speaketh, 1 Tim. 5.8. Those also which are of a mans owne bloud, as father and mother, &c. Mat. 15.5.6. Now contrary to this sort are strangers, to whom we must not give in this case. For to neglect a mans owne, and to bestow it upon forreiners, unlesse there bee just and necessary cause so to doe, is a sinne against the law of nature.

A second difference of men is this. Some are of the household of faith, some are otherwise. S. Pauls rule is this, that we prefer them before the other, Galat. 6.10. Doe good unto all men, but specially to them that are of the house hold of faith.

A third difference. Some are our owne poore, of our owne land, and country, and some bee strangers in the same respects. Now howsoever wee are debters to all that we can doe good to: yet those that are neerer to us in habitation or neighbourhood, are to bee respected and releeved before others. This the Lord commandeth, Deuter. 15.7. If one of thy brethren with thee be poore, within any of thy gates in thy land, which the Lord thy God giveth thee; thou shalt not harden thy heart, and shut thine hand from him. And these being releeved, wee may in the next place afford our helpe to others. Thus did the good Samaritane in case of necessity, practise his charity upon a stranger, Luk. 10.32. and is therefore commended by our Saviour Christ.

III. Question.

How much releefe must every man give

Answ. We must put a difference betweene the almes of private men, and of incorporations or Churches. Touching private mens almes, the Scripture hath not determined how much must be given, but hath left it to the discreet consideration of every Christian. And yet it must be remembred, which the Apostle saith. 2 Cor. 9.6.7. that he that soweth sparingly, shall reape sparingly. And againe, Let every man give, as he hath determined in his own heart. Lastly, he gives a Commandement touching the quantity of giving, that every first day of the week, every one lay aside by himselfe, and lay up as God hath prospered him; that is, according to the ability, wherewith God hath blessed him, 2 Cor. 16.2.

But two cautions are propounded in the word, touching this quantity.

First, that wee must not so give almes, that others be eased, and we our selves grieved, 2 Cor. 8.13. It is not Gods will, that we should give all that we have in almes, and keepe nothing for our selves, but that wee keepe a due proportion in giving; and doe that good to others, wherby we may not our selves be hindred or oppressed. Our fountaines and rivers, must runne, to serve the necessity of the stranger. in ſe. Pro. 5.16,17. But yet the right must remain our own, we may not give away fountaine and water, and all. Luk. 3.11. He that hath two coats, let him part with him that hath none, that is, hee that hath things necessary and in abundance, let him give freely, yet so as hee reserve one coat unto himselfe.

Here the Papist is justly to bee blamed, who holdeth it a state of perfection to give away all, and to live by begging. For this cannot bee, seeing it is against Gods Commandement, who will have some given, and not all, one coat, not both, and so is a state rather of sinne and imperfection.

Secondly, in the case of extreme necessity (and not otherwise) wee must bee ready and willing to give almes, though it bee by the selling of our possessions, Luke 12.33. Sell that ye have & give alms: our Saviours meaning is, in the case of extreme necessity, when there is no other way to releeve those that are to be releeved. David notes it as a property of a mercifull man, that he dispersseth abroad, and giues to the poore, Psalme 112.9. It was practised by the primitive Church, in the time of perfecution, in the like case, *Act.*4.34, 35. And the Church of Macedonia, though they were in want themselves, yet supplyed the extreme want of other Churches, 2 Corin. 8.1,2.

Now touching the almes of whole bodies, and Churches, this is the Rule; that they should maintaine the poore with things necessary, fit, and convenient, as meat, drinke, and cloathing, 1 Tim 5.16. And this serves to confute a grosse error, maintained by learned Papists; who hold, that whatsoever a man hath, above that which is necessary to nature and estate, hee should give it in almes. But the truth is otherwise: for a man may and ought to give almes more liberally, when hee hath abundance, yet so as hee is not bound to give all, but may reserve even part of his superfluity, for the publike use of Church and Commonwealth. And to this purpose is that which our Saviour saith, Luke 3.11. He that hath two coats, that is, things necessary and superfluous, must give but one, and that in case of the greatest necessity; meaning thereby, that all superfluity must not bee given in almes, saving onely in the case aforesaid of extreme want.

IV. Question.

How many wayes is a man to give almes?

Answer. Three wayes: first, by free giving to the poore. Secondly, by free lending: for this is oftentimes as beneficiall to a man, as giving. For this end there was a law given, *Deu.*15.8. thou shalt ope thy hand unto thy poore brother, & lend him sufficient for his need wherein hee hath. Luke 6.35. Lend, looking for nothing again. Exod. 22.25. If thou lend money to thy poore with thee, thou shalt not be an usurer unto him, thou shalt not oppresse him with usury. Thirdly, by remitting due debt in case of mens decay and extreme poverty. *Ex.*22.26. If thou take thy neighbours raiment to pledge, thou shalt restore it unto him before the Sun goe downe: 27. For that is his covering only, and this is his garment for his skin; wherein shall he sleep? therefore when he crieth unto me (for ceasse and necessity) I will heare him: for I am mercifull. According to this law, Nehemiah exhorteth the Rulers and Princes of the Jewes, that had oppressed their poore countrimen, saying, Remit unto them the hundreth part of the silver, and of the corne, of the wine, and of the oyle, that ye exact of them for love, Nehemiah 5.11.

V. Question.

How should almes bee given, that they may bee good workes, and pleasing unto God?

Answer. For the right manner of giving, sundry things are required, but specially these six.

First, a man must consecrate himselfe, and all the gifts that he hath and enjoyes, to God and his honour. This duty is commended in the Church of Macedonia, that they gave their owne selves first to the Lord, and after unto them that were in need, by the wil of God, 2 Cor. 8. 5. And thus the Prophet Esay fore-telleth, that the City Tyrus being converted, should consecrate her selfe and her goods to the Lord, *Esa.*23.18. Yet her occupying and her wages shall be holy unto the Lord, it shall not bee laid up nor kept in store, but her marchandise shall be for them that dwell before the Lord, to eat sufficiently, and to have durable cloathing.

Secondly, we must give almes in faith. How is that? first, we must be perswaded that we are reconciled to God in Christ, and stand in his favour: and then our almes shall be accepted. For no worke of the person can please God, before the person himselfe bee approved of him. Secondly, wee must depend upon God by faith, for the good successe of our almes. Saint Paul compares the poore man to a field well tilled, and almes to the sowing of seed, which hath a most plentifull harvest of blessing following it, 2 *Cor.*9.6. Now as the husbandman, casting his seed into the earth, waiteth upon God for the fruit thereof, Iam. 5.7. so must the good man that gives almes, depend upon God for the event thereof. Salomon saies, He that hath mercy upon the poore, lendeth to the Lord, and the Lord will recompence him that which he hath given, *Pro.*19.17. Upon these grounds must our faith rest, when we doe good to the poore.

Thirdly, wee must give in simplicity, Rom. 12.7. Hee that distributeth, let him doe it with simplicity, that is, of meere pity and compassion, and not for any sinister respect, pleasure, or praise of men, *Matth.*6.3. When thou doest thine

Fourthly, we must give in love, 1 *Cor.*13.3. Though I feed the poore with all my goods, &c. and have not love, it profiteth me nothing.

Fifthly, in iustice. For we must not give other mens goods, but our owne truly gotten. Esa. 58.7. abeit we fasting is, to break thine own bread to the hungry, to bring the poore that wander, into thine owne house, &c.

Sixthly, with a bountifull and cheerefull mind: 2 *Cor.*9.7. As every man wisheth in his heart, so let him give, not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerefull giver. Our alms must not bee extorted, but franke and free. And hence it followes, that there ought to be no begging from doore to doore, in a Christian Commonwealth. For that shewes, that men part with their almes, of a niggardly and compelled minde. And thus much of the Remedy.

Sect. 2.

In the next place followeth the fruit of the Remedy, in these words, And all things shal be cleane unto you.

Here first I will speake of the false, and then of the true and right fruit of Liberality.

The false fruit is this, that giving of almes doth merit forgiveneſſe of sinne, and satisfie the justice of God, for the temporall punishment thereof. That wee may the better see the error of this doctrine, I will answer the arguments alleaged in the defence thereof.

Object. I. The first is framed out of this text, that giving of almes makes all things cleane unto us, Luke 11.41.

Answ. Wee must understand the text thus: If wee returne to God, believe in Christ, and leave all our sinnes, then are we cleane, and all our actions, and consequently our almes-giving shall bee cleane unto us: for to the pure all things are pure. Now almes and other things are then said to be cleane unto man, when hee being himselfe pure, maketh and hath a pure use of them.

Object. II. *Dan.*4.24. Redeeme thy sinnes by giving of almes.

Ans. This place maketh against the Papists: for by sinnes the Prophet understandeth both the guilt, and also the punishment. Whereas they affirme, that the guilt of sinne cannot bee redeemed, but by Christ alone, and man onely is to satisfie for the temporall punishment of sinne. Secondly, the word which they translate redeeme, doth properly signifie (as it is in the Chalde paraphrase) to breake off. As if the Prophet should have said, Thou art, O King, a mighty Monarch, and thou hast used much injustice and cruelty: therefore now repent thy selfe, and breake off the course of thy sinnes, and testifie thy repentance, by doing justice, and giving almes to the poore, whom thou hast oppressed. Thirdly, the word in the ancient Latine translations, signifieth to amend; and then it beareth this sense; Amend thy selfe, and the course of thy life, and let thine injustice be turned into justice, thy cruelty into mercy.

Object. III. Make you friends with the riches of iniquity, that when ye shall want, they may receive you into everlasting habitations, Luke 16.9

Answ. Receiving here mentioned, is not in regard of merit, as though a man could deserve it by giving almes, but either by way of hearty prayers made by the poore, that they may bee received, or else because their almes shall bee unto them a pledge and earnest of their receiving into Gods kingdome.

Object. IV. *Prov.*16.6. By mercy and truth, iniquity is redeemed.

Answer. 1. Salomons meaning is, that by Gods goodnesse, and not ours, iniquity is pardoned. 2. If by mercy is meant, mans mercy, then are wee to understand it thus: that mercy and truth are evident signes unto us that our sinnes are forgiven, and not the working causes of remission.

Object. V. *Luk.*14.14. And thou (which giveſt releeſe) shalt be blessed, because they cannot recompence thee: therefore almes doe merit.

Ans. When God promiseth reward to the giving of almes, the promise is not made to the worke, but to the worker, and that not for the merit of his person, or worke, but onely for Christ his sake in whom hee is, by whose meanes hee stands reconciled unto God. And so men that practise charity in giving of almes, are rewarded with blessednesse, not for their almes, but according to the mercy of God in Christ.

Now followeth the right fruit of almes-giving: and it stands in foure things.

First, they are the way, in which we must walke to life everlasting. I say the way, not the cause either of life, or any other good thing, that God hath promised.

Secondly, they are effects and fruits of our faith, yea the signes and seales of Gods mercy to us in Christ. To this purpose S. Paul wisheth Timothy, 1 Tim. 6.17, 18, 19. to charge them that bee rich in this world, that they doe good, & be rich in good workes, and be ready to distribute, laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may obtaine eternall life. Now where is this foundation to bee laid up? not in heaven, for that is impossible for us, and it is laid up for us there already by Christ; but in our owne consciences, and that is our assurance of Gods favour in this world, and life everlasting in the world to come: of which assurance, this and other good workes are signes and seales unto us.

Thirdly, almes comes in the way of restitution of those goods that have beene gotten fraudulently, though from whom wee know not. Thus Zacchaeus at his conversion, for wrongs that hee had done, hee knew not to whom, gave halfe his goods to the poore, and proclaimed restitution to those that could come forth and challenge him.

Lastly, alms are a notable remedy against covetousnesse. For he that hath a mercifull heart, to bestow upon the poore, shall easily be content with that hee hath, and avoyd that sinne whereby otherwise hee fals into temptation and snares of the devill, 1 *Tim.*6.9.

CHAP. VI.

Of Iustice.

*Psal.*15.2. He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousnesse.

THE substance of the whole Psalme is a Question, and an Answer. The Question is, Who are the members of Gods Church upon earth, that shall come to life eternall in heaven? vers. 1. The answer is made in the rest of the Psalme. And in this answer is contained a description of the parties, by their properties and markes. The first marke is, walking uprightly, that is, in truth and sincerity of religion, which standeth in the sincerity of faith and a good conscience. The second note is the practice of righteousnesse.

Now Righteousnesse, or Justice, is twofold: the justice of the Gospell, and the justice of the law.

Evangelicall justice is that which the Gospell reveales, and not the Law, to wit, the obedience of Christ in his sufferings, and fulfilling of the Law, imputed to them that beleeve, for their justification; and this is not here meant.

Legall justice is that which the Law revealeth, and withall requireth: and it is either universall, or particular.

Universall justice is the practice of all vertues, or that whereby a man observes all the Commandements of the Law. Of this Paul speaketh, *Rom.*10.5. in which place hee opposeth it to the righteousnesse which is by faith. And Zachary and Elizabeth are said to bee *just before God, Luk.*1.6. namely, by this universall justice; because they walked in all the commandements and ordinances of the Lord, endevouring in all things to please him.

Particular justice is that, whereby we give to every man his right or due: and of this David here speaketh. The reason is, because if it were not so, then this second marke should comprehend under it all the rest; and so there would bee no good distinction of these properties one from another.

Particular justice is two-fold: in distribution, or in exchange and contract. Justice in distribution is that which keepes a proportion in giving to every man that honour, dignity, reverence, reward, or punishment, that is due unto him.

Of this there are moved principally two Questions.

I. Question.

What is that judgement, which men are to give and hold, one to and of another?

Answ. Iudgement is of two sorts: publike, and private.

Publike, which is given and administred by a publike person, in a publike place. Such is the judgement of the Magistrate, when hee acquitteth men, or according to their deserts condemneth them to temporall punishment. Of which we may reade, 2 *Chron.*19.6. Psal. 58.1. Such also is the judgement of the Prophet or Minister, whereby hee doth openly pronounce to men that beleeve and repent, that their sinnes are remitted, or retained, 1 Cor. 14.24. or that, whereby obstinate sinners are delivered up unto Satan, by the censure of Excommunication, 1 Corinth. 5.3,4,5. or Suspension.

Private judgement is that, whereby one man giveth judgement privately of another: and touching it, wee are to consider two points: First, of what things judgement must be given: secondly, how we are to give judgement.

For the first: wee must give judgement of three sorts of things: of mens facts, of their doctrines, and of their persons. Touching facts: the Apostle Paul would not have us to have fellowship with the unfruitfull works of darknesse, Ephesians 5.11. but rather to reprove them, because they are subject to our judgement: and being reproved by us, they are judged of us. And our Saviour doth therefore command us, when our brother trespasseth against us, to goe and reprove him, Matth. 18. verse 15. because his actions are lyable to our censure.

Secondly, the doctrines of men are to bee judged by us. Try the spirits whether they are of God or no, 1 *Ioh.*4.1. The spirituall man judgeth all things, that is, all doctrines, 1 *Cor.*2.*ver.*15. And our Saviour saith, Yee shall know them by their fruits, that is, partly by their doctrine, and partly by their lives, being judged according to the rule of Gods word, Matthew 7. verse 20.

Thirdly, wee may judge of the persons of men. Now men are of two sorts: either in the Church, or out of the Church. The members of the Church must bee judged by the judgement of charity, not of infallibility. They that are out of the Church, wee must suspend our judgements concerning them, and leave them to God. For what have I to doe (saith the Apostle) to judge those that are without 1 *Corin.*5.12. Wee may try and examine the person, but wee must reserve the judgement of condemnation to God alone.

The second point is, How wee are to judge one of another.

Ans. The right manner of judging according ding to the word of God, I will lay downe in six Rules.

The first is, If we know any good thing by any man, whether vertue, or action, wee are willingly to speake of it, to commend it, and glorifie Gods name in it, and for it. Thus Paul affirmeth, that the Churches of Iudea, when they heard the word which hee preached, *glorified God for him alone, Gal.*1.23.

The second Rule; If wee know any evill, sinne, vice, or offence by any man, there is a time when we may, and a time when we may not speake of it, and that with good conscience. For the better keeping of this Rule, foure cautions are to be remembred.

First, he that will give sentence of another man, must in the first place purge and reforme himselfe. To this purpose Christ commandeth, *first to plucke the beame out of our owne eye, and then shall wee see clearely to cast out the mote out of our brothers eye, Mat.*7.5. And he that will not doe this in judging another, he condemneth himselfe, *Rom.*2.1.

Secondly, we must be rightly and truly informed in the matter, before wee give judgement. This was Gods owne practice, who came downe to see, whether the sinne of Sodome was answerable to the cry, *Gen.*18.21.

Thirdly, our love and charity must order and direct, both our speech & our judgement of others, that we speake not of them without deliberation. For hee that upon hatred reports the evill hee knoweth by another, is a back-biter. When Doeg the Edomite came and shewed Saul, that David was gone to the house of Ahimelech, hee told no more than the truth; and yet because it proceeded from an evill minde, therefore David accuseth him of hatred, back-biting, slandering, and unrighteousnesse, *Psal.*52.1,2.

Fourthly, hee that speakes the evill hee knowes by his neighbour, must have the testimony of his owne conscience, to assure him that he hath a calling to doe it.

Now a man is called by God in three cases. First, when hee is commanded by the Magistrate, to testifie what he knoweth. Secondly, when an evill that is in his neighbour is to be redressed by admonition. Thirdly, when an evill is to bee prevented, that it spread not abroad to the infection of others.

These caveats observed, wee may speake the evill wee know by others truly, and with an upright conscience. But if they may bee concealed, rather than a man should blaze abroad the faults of others, whereunto hee is privie, he ought to be silent: remembring always the saying of Salomon, that it is the glorie of a man to passe by an infirmitie, and not to take notice thereof, but by love to cover a multitude of sinnes, Prov 19.11.

The third Rule. When a mans speech or action is doubtfull, and may bee taken either well or ill, we must always interpret it in the better part. When Christ was brought before Caiphas the High Priest, there came two witnesses against him, who affirmed something of him which hee had spoken: but because they changed and misconstrued his words, turning them to a wrong sense, therefore they are called by the Holy Ghost, to their perpetuall shame and reproach, *false witnesses, Matth.*26.60. Against the Apostle saith, that Love thinkes no evill, 1 *Cor.*13.5. therefore love makes every speech and action in the better sense.

The fourth Rule. Touching secret offences of our neighbour, we must suspend our judgement of them. The reason is, because love always hopes the best, and thinkes no evill, 1 *Cor.*13.5. And our Saviours rule is, *If thy brother trespasse against thee, first reprove him privately, betweene thee, and him, and goe no further if that will prevaile. Matth.*18.15.

The fifth Rule. Against an Elder, receive not an accusation under two or three witnesses, 1 *Tim.*5.19. By an Elder, understand Ministers, civill Governours, and all Superiours. And if wee must not receive, then much lesse may wee frame an accusation against them. This may be a lesson for all inferiours, to learne, who take libertie to themselves, to speake what evill they please of their Governours.

The sixth Rule is concerning Ministers. The Spirit of the Prophets is subject to the Prophets, and not to private persons, 1 *Cor.*14.32. Indeed private persons have power to examine & trie their doctrine and ministerie: but they must goe no further; for they have no power to give judgement, either of their Ministers doctrine or persons. The doctrine and manners of teachers are subject to the censure of Prophets only. For example: A private man sayes, that he may excommunicate at his pleasure those that sinne, if hee proceed according to the three degrees mentioned, *Mat.*18. But this is in him a fault, for hee must not judge in this case at his owne pleasure, but his judgement must follow the judgement of the Church: and when the Church hath given censure, then may the private man proceed to censure, and not before. So saith our Saviour Christ, *Matth.*18.17. If hee heare not the Church, after the Church hath judged him, let him be unto thee as an heathen and a publican.

Here if the Question be made, how a man may with good conscience give judgement of his owne selfe;

I answer, by observing two Rules. First, a man must alwayes in the presence of God judge himselfe in regard of his sinnes, both of heart and life, 1 *Corinth.*11.31. If wee would judge our selves, we should not be judged. And this judgement of a mans selfe must not bee partiall, but sharpe and severe, with true humiliation and lowlinesse of heart. For this is a true ground of all charitable judgement of others. Secondly, before men a man must suppresse his judgement of himselfe, and bee silent: no man is bound either to praise or dispraise, diſpraiſe, to excuſe or accuſe and condemne himſelfe before others: and grace muſt teach him thus much, not vainly to commend or boaſt of his owne gifts and actions; but rather to bury them in ſilence, and referre them to the judgement of others.

Now to conclude this point: The doctrine delivered is moſt neceſſary for theſe times. For the faſhion of moſt men is to give raſh and ſiniſter judgement of others, but themſelves they will commend, and that highly. If any thing be evill ſaid or done, all men muſt have notice of it. If a thing be doubtfull, it is alway conſtrued in the worſer part. If a thing be done of weakneſſe and infirmitie, wee aggravate it, and make it a double ſinne. Wee are curious in ſearching and inquiring into the lives of others, that we may have ſomething to carpe and finde fault with. But let this be remembred, that as wee judge, ſo wee ſhall be judged; firſt, of God by condemnation, and then by hard and unequall judgement from others. Againe, what is it that makes men to be open-mouthed in declaring and cenſuring our faults, but this, that wee open our mouthes to the diſgrace and defamation of others? Wherefore, if we would have other men to judge of us and our actions in love, wee muſt alſo make conſcience to give charitable judgement of them.

II. Queſtion.

How one man ſhould honour another?

Anſw. That we may rightly honour men, we muſt firſt know the cauſes for which men are to be honoured. And that the cauſes of honour may be conceived, I will lay downe this Ground: Honour is in the firſt place principally and properly to be given unto God: 1 *Tim.*1.17. To Godonly wiſe, be honour and glory. The reaſon hereof is rendred in the Lords prayer; becauſe his is kingdome, power, and glory. Againe, God is goodneſſe it ſelfe: his goodneſſe and his eſſence are one and the ſame: therefore honour is due unto him in the firſt place. Now every creature as it comes neare unto God, ſo is it honourable; and the more honourable, by how much neerer it commeth unto him. But man eſpecially, by how much nearer hee commeth to God in divine things, by ſo much more is he to bee honoured in reſpect of other creatures. From this ground doe follow theſe concluſions:

A First, that man is firſt of all to be honoured for vertues ſake: becauſe therein principally ſtands the internall Image of God. Rom. 2. 10. To every man that doth good, ſhall be honour, glory, & peace; to the Iew firſt, &c. Now whereas the queſtion might be, Who is the Jew, to whom this honour muſt be yeelded? Paul anſwers, ver. 29. that he is not a Jew, which is one outward, but he is a Jew, who is one within: and the circumciſion is of the heart. And Salomon ſaith, that Honour is unſeemly for a foole, Prov. 26.1. And the Holy Ghoſt to the Hebrewes ſaith, that by faith our Elders were well reported of, Hebrewes 11.2. The Heathen man, Marcus Marcellus, a Roman, did dedicate a Temple to the goddeſſe of Honour, and the way to that Temple, was by the houſe of Vertue.

The ſecond Concluſion is, That man is to be honoured, not only for vertue, but alſo for divine repreſentations of other good things: in a word, becauſe one man before another, bears the image of ſomething that is in God. As firſt, of his Majeſtie. Thus the King is honoured, becauſe in his Majeſtie and ſtate hee carrieth a reſemblance of the power and glory of God; ſo as that which is ſaid of God, may be alſo ſpoken of him. Hence it was, that Daniel ſaid to Nebuchadnezzar: O King, thou art a King of Kings: and why? for the God of heaven hath given thee kingdome, power, ſtrength, and glory. Secondly, of his Dominion. Thus the husband is to bee honoured of the wife, becauſe he beareth before the woman the image of the glory of God; yea, of his providence, wiſdome, Lordſhip, and government, 1 *Cor.*11.7. Thirdly, of his Paternity: and ſo the father is honoured of the ſonne, becauſe he beares in his perſon the Image of Gods paternity or fatherhood. Fourthly, of his Eternity: and hence it is, that honour is given to the aged, before the young man, becauſe he beareth the image thereof. Thus we ſee, that divine repreſentations doe imprint a kinde of excellencie in ſome perſons, and conſequently doe bring forth honour.

Dan.3.37.

The third Concluſion is, That men are to be honoured, even for the vertues of others, to whom they ſtand in relation. Thus the ſonnes of Princes are called by the honourable name of Princes. The children of Nobles are eſteemed by birth noble. Thus dignities doe run in deſcent, and the poſterity is honoured in the name of the anceſtors, but principally for the vertues of the anceſtors.

The fourth Concluſion is, Men are to be honoured for their riches. I meane not for riches ſimply, but for the right uſe of riches; namely, as they are made inſtruments to uphold and maintaine Vertue.

If it be ſaid, that to honour rich men, is to have the faith of the Lord Ieſus Chriſt in reſpect of perſons, *Iam.*2.1. I anſwer; In that place wee are not forbidden to honour rich men; but the Apoſtles meaning is, to reprove a fault of another kinde, when men preferre riches before pietie; when rich men are honoured being ungodly; and when godly poore men are deſpiſed and rejected, becauſe they are poore.

Now having premiſed the ground, wee come to give anſwer to the queſtion before propounded. A man therefore is to honour every one in his place, whether hee bee his ſuperiour, ſuperiour, equall, or inferiour. Yea, there is a kinde of honour to be performed to a mans owne ſelfe. The truth of this anſwer we ſhall ſee in the particulars that follow.

Sect. 1.

Touching the honouring of Superiours, theſe Rules are to be obſerved.

First: All Superiours muſt have reverence done unto them, whether they be Superiours in age, in gifts, in authoritie, or howſoever, and that becauſe they are Superiours.

The actions of reverence due to all Superiours, are principally ſix. The firſt is, to riſe up before the Superiour, Levit. 19. 32. Thou ſhalt riſe up before the hoare head, and honour the perſon of the old man. The ſecond, when they are comming towards us, to goe and meet them. Thus, when Abraham ſaw the three Angels comming toward him, he ranne to meet them from the tent doore, Gen. 18.2. And King Salomon, when his mother Bathſheba came towards him to ſpeake unto him for Adoniah, the text ſaith, he roſe up to meet her, 1 *King.*2.19. The third, to bow the knee before the ſuperiour. Thus wee reade in the Goſpell, that a certaine man comming to Chriſt, as he was going on the way, kneeled unto him, Mar. 10.17. Thus Abraham ranne to meet the three Angels, and bowed himſelfe to the ground, *Gen.*18.2. And the ſame Abraham. elſe-where, bowed himſelfe before the people of the land of the Hittites, Gen. 23.7. The fourth, to give them the firſt and higheſt ſeat or place. This our Saviour Chriſt meaneth in the parable, wherein hee willeth thoſe who are invited to a banquet, to yeeld the chiefeſt place to them that are more honourable than themſelves, Luke 14.7. And it is ſet downe as a commendation of Iоſephs brethren, that they ſate before him in order, the eldeſt according to his age, and the youngeſt according to his youth, Geneſis 42. 33. Here we muſt remember, that though in common practice among men, the right hand is a note of ſuperiority, yet in Scripture the practice is contrarie. For in the article of our Creed, Sitting at the right hand, ſignifieth the inferiority of the Mediator, in reſpect of the Father; though it be a token of his ſuperiority, in regard of the Church. And ſo muſt the place be underſtood, (1 *King.*2.19. where it is ſaid, that Bathſheba ſate at the right hand of Salomon.) namely, that it was an argument of ſuperioritie, whereunto hee preferred her before the people; but it ſhewed her inferioritie in regard of Salomon himſelfe. And this cuſtome is frequent, both in the Scriptures, and in humane writers. The fifth, to give libertie of ſpeaking in the firſt place. This was the practice of Elihu, one of the friends of Iob, who being the youngeſt in yeares, dared not to ſhew his opinion, till Iob and others, who were his ancients had ſpoken. But when they had left off their talke, then he is ſaid to have anſwered in his turne, Iob 32.6, 7. 17. The ſixth, to give the titles of reverence to all ſuperiours. Sara according to this rule, called Abraham Lord, 1 Pet. 3.9. The man in the Goſpel comming to learne ſomething of Chriſt, cals him by this name, Good Maſter, Mark 10.17. and Anna rebuked by Eli, anſwered him with reverence, and ſaid, nay, my Lord, 1 Sam. 1.15.

The ſecond Rule touching honour due to ſuperiours, is more ſpeciall, touching ſuperiours in authoritie; namely, that they alſo muſt be honoured. And this honour ſhewes it ſelfe in foure things.

The firſt is, ſpeciall reverence, which ſtands in the performance of two duties. The former is, to ſtand when our ſuperiours doe ſit. For thus Abraham after hee had received the Angels into his tent, and prepared meat for them, ſerved himſelfe by them under the tree giving attendance, while they did eat, *Gen.*18.8. In like manner, when Moſes ſate in judgement, the people are ſaid to have ſtood about him, from morning untill evening, Exod. 18.13. The latter is, not to ſpeake, but by leave. A duty alwaies to be obſerved, but ſpecially in the courts of Magiſtrates. Example whereof we have in Paul, who being called before Felix the governour, did not ſpeake a word, untill the governour had beckened unto him, and given him leave, Act. 24.10.

The ſecond thing is ſubjection; which is nothing elſe but an inferiority, whereby we doe (as it were) ſuſpend our wils and reaſons, and withall cauſe them to depend (in things lawfull and honeſt) upon the will of the ſuperiour. This ſubjection is yeelded to the authoritie of the ſuperiour, and is larger than obedience.

The third is obedience; whereby we keepe and perform the expreſſe commandement of our ſuperiour, in all things lawfull and honeſt. It ſtandeth in ſundry particulars, as firſt, it muſt be in the Lord, and as to the Lord himſelfe, Whatſoever ye doe (ſaith the Apoſtle) *doe it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men, Col.*3.23. Againe, obedience muſt be performed even to ſuperiours that are evill. Thus Peter exhorts ſervants to bee ſubject to their Maſters, in all feare, not only to the good and courteous, but alſo to the froward, 1 Peter 2. 18. Thirdly, it muſt be done to Rulers, in whom we ſee weakneſſes. For their infirmities ought not to hinder or ſtop our duty of obedience, conſidering that the commandement of honouring the father and mother is generall without exception. Fourthly, it is to bee performed to them that are Deputies to Rulers, yea, which are deputies of deputies. Submit your ſelves (ſaith Peter) unto all manner ordinance of man, for the Lords ſake, whether it bee unto the King, as unto the ſuperiour, or unto governours, as unto them who are ſent of him, &c. 1 Pe er 2.13, 14. Fiftly, though puniſhment bee wrongfully and moſt unjuſtly impoſed by Rulers, yet it muſt be borne without reſiſtance.

stance, till we can have our remedie. For this is thankeworthie, if a man for conscience toward God, endure griefe suffering wrongfully, 1 Pet. 2. 19. The practice of this we may see in Hagar, the hand-maid of Sara, who is commanded by the Angell to returne againe to her dame, and humble her selfe before her, though she had dealt very roughly with her, Gen. 16. 9.

The fourth thing due to Superiours in authoritie, is Thankesgiving; in praising God for their paines, authoritie, and gifts principally. Thus Paul exhorts, that prayers, intercessions, and thanksgiving, be made for Kings, and all that be in authoritie, 1 Tim. 2. 1. The reason is, because being over us in authoritie, we have the benefit of their gifts and authoritie, Gen. 45. 9.

Sect. 2.

In the second place commeth to be considered our honour due unto our Equals. Concerning which, there be two Rules.

I. Rule. Equals must esteeme better of others than of themselves. Thus Paul exhorts all men in meeknesse of minde, without contention or vaine-glorie, to esteeme others better than themselves, Phil. 2. 2.

II. Rule. Equals, in giving honour, must goe one before another, Rom. 12. 10 where the Apostle saith not, in taking honour, because the dutie by him prescribed concernes not all persons, but those alone who are of a like or equall condition.

Sect. 3.

A third sort, to whom honour is to be yeelded, are inferiours. And the honour due unto them is, without all contempt, in meeknesse of spirit, to respect them as brethren. This dutie the Lord commands expressly to the King; That his heart bee not lifted up above his brethren, Deut. 17. 20. The same was the practice of Iob, who saith of himselfe, that he did not contemne the judgement of his servant, or of his maid, when they did contend with him, Iob. 31. 31. Naaman the Syrian thought it no disgrace, to be advised and ordered by the counsell of his servants, 2 King. 5. 13. And true it is, that all superiours ought, to keepe their state and place; yet so, as they have respect also to such as are inferiour to them, without scorne or contempt.

Sect. 4.

Lastly, there is a kind of honour to be performed to a mans owne selfe, which dutie the Apostle exhorteth unto, Phil. 4. 8. where hee saith; If there be any vertue, if there be any praise, thinke on these things. By which he would teach us, not only to tender the honour of our superiours, equals, and inferiours, but even of our selves, in seeking after vertue, and praise that followeth after it.

But how should a man in a right manner honour himselfe?

Answ. By observing two rules.

I. Rule. We must preserve our selves in bodie and soule; specially, we must keepe the body, that it be not made an instrument of sin. For when wee doe use our bodies as instruments of uncleanesse, then doe we bring a shame upon them. And it is the will of God, that every man should know how to possesse his vessel in holinesse and honour, 1 Thess. 4. 4. And that which is said of the body, is to be understood of the hand, the heart, the tongue, and all the parts and members thereof.

II. Rule. If wee would truly honour our selves, we must honour God in all our waies. For God will honour them who honour him. 1 Sam. 2. 30. Now to honour God, is to honour him according to his will and word, in the duties of good conscience and good life. On the contrarie, they that dishonour God, God will dishonour them before all the world. And this must teach us, even to dedicate our selves to God and his glorie, in the whole course of our callings, whether in the Church or Common-wealth.

2 Tim.3.16. 2 Pet.1.20. 2 Tim.0.19.

THE holy Scriptures (Right Honourable) given by diuine inspiration, and penned by the holy men of God, Prophets, Apostles, and Apostolike writers, not by priuate motion, but as they were guided by the holy Ghost, are not onely commended by God, and left vnto the Church as a precious depositum carefully to bee kept in their integrity, (for which cause the Church is called the Ground and Pillar of truth, 1 Tim.3.15.) nor to bee defended onely by the sword of the Magistrate against Heretikes, Schismatikes, and men of scandalous life, in which respect hee is called (and that truly) Custos vtriusq; tabulæ: But also to bee the pillar and foundation wherevpon rest our faith, the touch-stone of truth, the skop of remedies for all spirituall maladies, an anker in the blasts of Temptation, and waues of affliction; a two-edged sword to foile and put to flight our spirituall enemies, the only Oracle to which we must haue recourse, and whereat we are to inquire the will of God: In a word, the bread and water of life, wherevpon our soules are to feed vnto eternall life. Therefore we are commanded to search the Scriptures as for siluer, and to seek in them as for treasures, to read in them con tinually, to meditate on them day and night, to vse them as bracelets vpon our armes, and frontlets betweene our eyes, to teach them to our posterity, and to talke of them when wee are in our houses, and when we walke by the way, when we lie downe, and when we rise vp. And great reason there is of this commandement, seeing that (as an ancient writer saith) Quicquid in eis docetur, veritas est: quicquid præcipitur, bonitas est: quicquid promittitur, felicitas est: that is, whatsoever is taught in them, is truth it selfe: whatsoever is commanded, is goodnesse it selfe: whatsoever is promised, is happinesse it selfe. They being of such perfection, that nothing may be added vnto them, nor any thing taken from them: of such infallible certainty, that heauen and earth shall sooner passe away, than one tittle fall to the ground: so pleasant and delightfull, that they exceed the hony and the hony combe: and so profitable, that no treasures may be compared vnto them: seeing they are able to make vs wiser than our enemies, than the aged, than our teachers: to make vs wise vnto saluation, to giue vs an inheritance among them that are sanctified: nay, able to saue our soules. Which being so, I cannot sufficiently wonder, that any calling themselues Christians should make lesse account of the booke of God, than the Romanes in old time did of their twelue Tables, and other Heathens of their ritual bookes: or than the Iewes at this day doe of their Talmud, the Turkes of their Alcoran, the Æthiopians of their Abetelie; especially that those which professe themselues Diuines, should so disdaine the holy Scripture, that leauing it, the cleare fountaine of the water of life, they should breake themselues to the troubled streames of mens deuices, and dig vnto themselues pits which will hold no water. Wherein the Schoole-men (I meane, the Sententiaries, the Summists and Quodlibetaries, are chiefly (if not only) to bee censured; who setting aside the Scriptures, haue vanished away in vaine speculations in their Questions vpon Lombard the Master of the sentences, and vpon Thomas their new Master. So that had it not beene for some few Glosses (which notwithstanding like the glosse of Orleans doe often corrupt the text) Nicolaus de Lyra, Hugo de S. Charo, and Peter Comester (whom I should haue named first, being so good a textman, that as his name importeth) he did eat vp the text, as the poore mans horse drinke vp the water: we should not haue had among such a multitude of writers, one poore comment vpon the Bible for diuers hundred yeares. And no marueil, seeing it is an ordinarie thing for young nouices in Popish Vniuersities (and I would it were but there onely) not to lay the foundation of their study in Diuinity vpon the rocke, but vpon the waters: that is, not vpon the Scripture, but vpon Aquinas, or some such Summist: and to read the Scriptures no further than they giue them light for the vnderstanding of their Schoole-Doctors. studied Schoole-Diuinity and the Canon Law for the space of 16. yeares, and yet never so much as saluted either the Scriptures, or the Fathers. Which course they take, either because they presume to vnderstand aboue that which is written, contrary to the Commandement of the Apostle, Rom.12.3. or for that they iudge the Scriptures too simple and shallow for them to wade in, as not affording them sufficient matter for their wits to worke vpon. Not considering that whilst they contemne the simplicity of the Scriptures, and looke beyond the Moone, in the meane time with Thales they fall into the ditch: and that whilst they striue with the wings of their wit to soare aboue the clouds of other mens conceits, they sinke into a Sea of absurdities and errors. Not yet remembring that the Scripture hath great maiesty ioyned with simplicity, and as great difficulty mixed with plainnesse and facility: and therefore not vnfitly resembled by S. Gregory, to the maine Ocean, in which the lambe may wade, and the Elephant may swim. For the Spirit of God hath in wonderfull wisdome so tempered the Scriptures, that they are both obscure, and perspicuous: in some places like a clasped or sealed book, Isa.29.11. in other places like a booke that is opened; Apoc.5.5. being both easie and difficult. Easie, in that the entrance into the word giueth light and vnderstanding to the simple, Psal.119.130. Difficult, in that some things are hard to be vnderstood, 2 Pet.3.16. and hard to be interpreted, Heb.5.11. Easie, to inuite vs to read and learne them: Difficult, to exercise vs lest we should contemne them. From the easie and plaine places are gathered principles of Religion, both grounds of faith, and rules of good life, which we call Catechismes. The difficult places require interpretation, and the Commentaries of the learned. Both which is necessary in the Church of God: Catechismes haue a necessary vse, both in regard of the simple, who are to be fed with milke, being but babes in Christ: and of the learned, who are strong men in Christ, that they may haue some rule, whereby to try the spirits, consonant to the analogy of faith, and the doctrine of the Orthodox Fathers of the Church: which Paul calleth the forme of knowledge, Rom.2.20. and the forme of doctrine, Rom.6.17. and a patterne of wholesome words, 2 Tim.1.13. which formes of doctrine were in vse in the primitive Church in the Apostles dayes, as it is manifest, Heb.6.1. where the Apostle sets downe the principall points of the Catechisme, calling them the doctrine of the beginning of Christ. And after the Apostles, we finde that they were vsed by learned Fathers, both of the Greeke and Latine Church. Clemens Alex. had his Pædagogus. Cyril of Ierusalem his Catechisme and Mystagogue bookes. Origen (that famous Catechist) his bookes of principles. Theodoret his Epitome Diuinorum decretorum. Lactantius his Institutions. Augustine his Enchiridion. Hugo de S. Victore his bookes of the Sacraments, or mysteries of Christian religion. And it were greatly to be wished, that as in other reformed Churches beyond the Sea, they haue a set Catechisme which all men follow: and in the Church of Rome one approued by the Councell of Trent: so there were an vniforme Catechisme inioyned by publike authority to be vsed in all Families, Schooles, and Churches, in this land, that we might all with one minde and one mouth, iudge and speake the same thing.

Now as Catechisms gathered out of plaine and easie places are necessary for the simple: so Commentaries are as necessary for the vnderstanding of such places as are more abstruse and difficult. Our Sauiour Christ (the great Doctor of the Church) hath by his owne practice giuen vs a president hereof, in expounding the Law, Mat.5. in expounding all hard parables to his disciples apart: for the text saith, that he vnfolded or expounded them vnto them, Marke 4.35. That hee interpreted vnto them in all the scriptures the things which were written of him, Luke 24.27. That he opened vnto them the scriptures, v.32. And they haue beene alwayes so accounted in the Church of God. For the Iewes (as we know) had their Perushim, the Greek Church their Scholia, the Latin Church their Glosses, with other Paraphrases, and Expositions. Neither was it euer called in question by any, saue by the phantasticall Anabaptists, who rest onely vpon immediate reuelations. And some preiudicate Papists, who hold the consent of all Catholikes to be the true Scripture, both the glosse, and the text, the written word, but vnlike Diuinity, and a dead letter. And certaine arrogant spirits, who with Nestorius skorne to reade any Interpreters. But how Commentaries ought to be written, it is not so easie to define, there being such difference as well in regard of the manner of writing, as of the measure. For besides that the Popish writers in the foure seuerall senses of the Scripture, commending Ierome to excell in the literall, Origen in the Allegorical, Ambrose in the Anagogicall, Chrysostome in the Tropologicall; they haue beene of sundry wayes of expounding the Scripture, as their owne writers doe record. In the measure, we finde some too tedious, as the two Alphonsi, Tostatus, and Salmeron, who vpon every small occasion digresse from the text, or rather take occasion to enter into infinite friuolous questions, which breed strife rather than godly edifying which is by faith. For there is not so short a Chapter in the Bible, vpon which the former moueth not infinite endlesse questions: whereupon his volumes grow to that bignesse, that one contrasting his commentary vpon S. Matthew, and drawing it into an epitome, yet could not see it abridge it, but that it contained aboue a thousand pages in folio in the largest volume, and smallest character. The other is so short with his 12. volumes vpon the Euangelists, that hee might well haue contracted leaues into lines, and lines into letters. Which tedious discourses, and impertinent excursions from the text serue for no other end, but to cast a mist before the eyes of the reader, and draw (as it were) the vaile of Moses ouer his face, so that he cannot see the meaning of the holy Ghost. Others on the contrary are too short and compendious, offending as much in breuity, as the former in prolixity: by name Emanuel Sa the Iesuit, whose Commentaries vpon the Bible are shorter than the text it selfe, like to those of Apollinaris, of whom Ierome writeth, that a man which readeth them, would thinke hee read Contents of Chapters, rather than than Commentaries. But as for the manner: the literall sense (which our author here followeth) is the only sense intended by the spirit of God: the Allegoricall, Tropologicall, Anagogicall, being but severall uses and applications thereof: For the Scripture (consisting in the sense, not in the letters) is profitable to teach, and improve, as Paul saith: whereas from the Allegoricall sense no necessary argument can be taken (as their owne Doctors confesse) either to confirme or confute any point of doctrine: and therefore much lesse from the Tropologicall, or Anagogicall. And as for the measure, in regard of brevity or prolixity, the golden meane hath beene judged by the learned to be the best which is, not only to give the bare meaning paraphrastically, but to make collection of doctrine, and application of uses: yet briefly, rather pointing at the chiefe heads, than dwelling long upon any point. Some are of opinion that a Commentor is only to give the literall sense of the place without making further use of application, or instruction: To which I could easily subscribe, if all the Lords people could prophesie, or of all were able to handle the word of God, the sword of the spirit. For as to an expert Musitian who is acquainted with the concords or rules of descant, it is as good a direction to have only the grounds, as if he had every point pricked out unto him, being inured to the division upon every point, as it falleth out in the ground: So to him that is acquainted with the word of God, a short and concise handling of the Scripture may bee as good a direction, as if every point were discoursed at large. But because all readers are not strong men in Christ, some being but babes, who must have every thing minced, and cut small unto them before they can receive it. Neither all teachers expert and prompt Scribes, like to Ezra, nor mighty in the Scripture as Apollos, such as are able to devide the word aright, and apply it fitly as they ought: (Some being deceitfull workmen perverting it to their owne destruction, in pressing the two dugs of the Scripture, the Old and New Testament, that in stead of milke, they sucke nothing but blood. Others unskilfull, casting wilde Colloquintida into the pot of the children of the Prophets, being too hasty to learne, and too ignorant to know of themselves, what they should have gathered.) Therefore to helpe the ignorance of the one, and hinder the malice of the other (and so to profit the most) beside the meaning, hee hath briefly drawne out such doctrines as naturally arise from the text: shewing withall, how they ought to be applyed for confutation, correction, instruction, consolation. Which he hath done with such dexterity (artificially marching together, two things, heretofore insociable, Brevity and Perspicuity,) that the like (I take it) hath not beene performed heretofore by any Expositor upon this Epistle: which we may well call the key of the new Testament, in that it handleth the weighiest points of doctrine, whether we consider the necessary knowledge, thereof, or the controversies of these times. Therefore Luther after hee had once publikely expounded it tooke in hand again, and interpreted it the second time, beginning (as himselfe saith) where he ended, according to the saying of Syracides, When a man hath done what he can, he must begin againe, which Commentary seeing it hath found such good entertainment amongst us, being but a forreiner, and having lost much of his strength, and taken wind by changing from language to language, as wine from one vessell to another: I doubt not but this, being a free denizen, will finde the like favour and acceptance, the rather, if it will please your Honour to vouchsafe it your countenance: To whose protection and patronage I here commend it, as S. Luke did his histories to the most noble Theophilus: desiring hereby to testifie my humble duty unto your Honour, and my thankfulnesse to God for the riches of his grace bestowed upon you in the mystery of the Gospell; for your zeale of Gods glory, your love of the truth, and of all those that unfainedly embrace the truth.

And thus fearing to hinder the course of your more serious cogitations and actions, I humbly take my leave: Desiring the Lord, who hath promised to honour those that honour him, that as hee hath made you Honourable in your noble progenitors, so hee would make you thrice Honourable in your future successors, and long continue you a noble instrument under his Highnesse, of the peace and welfare of your country, as hitherto he hath done, accomplishing all your desires for present posterity and future felicity. To the Courteous Reader.

Here offer to thy view (Gentle Reader) a Comment, and a Supplement: the Comment drawn by an excellent workman, and drawen in excellent proportion, in all points suting to the analogie of faith, and the doctrine of the Orthodox Fathers of the Church, being the substance of his three yeares Lectures upon the Lords day. If his former workes either of Positive Divinitie in sundrie of his Treatises, or Controversall Divinitie in his Reformed Catholike, or Casu-Divinitie in his Cases of Conscience, have ministred any comfort unto thee, or given thee content: I doubt not but these Commentaries will abundantly satisfie thy expectation. For to omit the varietie of matter, as also the brevitie and admirable perspicuitie in regard of the manner, (being the cheefest commendation of Oecumenius or any Interpreter) in them as in a mirrour thou mayst more clearely see his knowledge in the mysterie of Christ; and his dexteritie in exemplifying that by practice, which he had formerely taught by precept, than in any of his writings besides: as having a double eminencie above the rest. First, in that they were penned the last of all his workes, being come to ripenesse of judgement: and that upon mature deliberation after his Sermons, (as his manner was.) Secondly, in that they were written with his owne hand, whereas all his other writings (except some short Treatises) were taken by some diligent auditors, and perused by himselfe. Heretic resembling the Epistle it selfe, which was written with Pauls owne hands: all the rest (except that short one to Philemon) by his Scribes. And as they doe exceed his other writings, so I might say (perhaps more truly than discreetly) that they surpasse in this kinde, all the moderne writers that have gone before them: so that he which will vouchsafe to read them, shall not greatly need nor desire any other Interpreter upon this Scripture: the which I speake not as disvouching of Anticquitie no better worth, than to be put under a bushell, that Novelitie might be set upon the candlestick: but for that I see not, but that Iohn Baptist the last of all the Prophets, was as goodly a burning and shining candle as any of the rest, and that he pointed forth Christ more distinctly than the rest. But I hope I shall not need to use many words in commendation either of the worke, or of the Author, being so well knowen and sufficiently commended by others, for soundnesse of doctrine and integritie of life; which (whilest he was living) did parallel each other, his doctrine being a patterne of his life, and his life a counterpaine of his doctrine. And now being dead, his savoury writings which hee hath left behinde him, breathing forth (as it were) the sweet smell of a sanctified spirit (like a field which the Lord hath blessed) have got him a name never to be forgotten, which giveth him after his death a second life.

I am further to advertise thee, (good Reader) that there are some places in the originall copie, to which the Author would (no doubt) have given some review and correction, if God had dealt with us the line of his life but a little longer: which I have filed and polished according to my poore skill, though not so sparingly, in such places only as were obscure, or had any phrase of doubtfull construction, or otherwise seemed to be mistaken: pointing and interlining a few lines, to fit it for the Presse. In any of which my unskilfull handling of them hath deprived them of their due lustre, yet I feel I am to hasten them no tincture.

Touching the Supplement: it was my purpose, at the first, to have made a supply of that which was wanting, out of the Authors owne writings; as it hath been done in Aquinas Summes and others: but after views perceiving that his workes already extant, would not afford me sufficient matter to furnish out that argument, I was inforced to take another course, and to make a supply with counsell of mine owne, as I could, which if it shall seeme not to suite the former in all points, I shall desire thee to consider, that it is not so easie a matter for a Sclepiodorus accustomed to draw with a cole or chalke only, to finish a picture begun by Apelles with so curious a pensill: and that it is in the Author, wherein I confesse, I have not been so much conversant, as perhaps in some other writers, either than soe was out of purpose to make ostentation of wit, reading, or invention: but lest it should not be performed by some for the profiting of the worke, and the edifi of the Church, (if this poore mite may confer any thing to the Treasurie of the Lords Temple.) And thus hoping that these reasons may intreat for a friendly acceptance at thy hands, and that thou will afford me thy good word for my good will, and a favourable construction for my paines, I commend to the blessing of the Almightie, and thee to his gracious protection, unfainedly wishing to thee as to my selfe, the mercie of God in Christ Iesus. Augutt. 10.

THE EPISTLE OF SAINT PAUL TO THE GALATIANS.

The Argument.

Two things are generally to be considered: the occasion of this Epistle, and the scope. The occasion that moved Paul to write this Epistle was, because certaine false Apostles slandered him both in respect of his calling, as also in respect of his doctrine; teaching that he was no Apostle, and that his doctrine was false. And by this meanes they seduced the Churches of Galatia, perswading them that justification and salvation was partly by Christ, and partly by the Law. The scope of the Epistle is in three things. First, the Apostle defends his calling in the first and second chapters. Secondly, hee defends the truth of his doctrine, teaching justification by Christ alone. And upon this occasion hee handles the greatest Question in the world, namely, What is that Justice whereby a sinner stands righteous before God, in the third and fourth, and in the beginning of the fifth. Thirdly, hee prescribes rules of good life in the fifth and sixth chapters.

CHAP. I.

1. Paul an Apostle (not of men, nor by man, but by Iesus Christ, and God the Father, who raised him from the dead.)

THE Epistle hath three parts; a Preface, an Instruction, and the Conclusion. The Preface is in the five first verses: and it hath two parts, an Inscription, a Salutation.

The Inscription sets downe the persons that write the Epistle, and the persons to whom it is sent. The persons that write are two, Paul and the Brethren.

Paul is mentioned in the first verse. In which, in comely and decent manner he commends himselfe to the Galatians by his office and function [an Apostle] that is, one called to bee a planter and founder of the new Testament among the Nations. And because the title of an Apostle in generall signification may agree to all Teachers, therefore he goes further, and sets downe the cause of his Apostleship. And first, he removes the false causes in these words [not of men] that is, not called by men, as by Authors of my calling, or not called by the authoritie of men. And in this Paul opposeth himselfe to the false Apostles, who were called not by God, but by men. Againe, he saith [nor by man] that is, not called of God in and by the ministerie of any mere man. And in this Paul opposeth himselfe to all ordinarie Ministers of the Gospell whatsoever, who are called of God by man. This done, hee propounds the true cause and Author of his Apostleship, of whom hee was called immediately. Against this it may bee objected, that Paul was ordained to bee an Apostle by the imposition of hands of the Church of Antioch. I answer, That this imposition was rather a confirmation than a calling. Secondly, they of Antioch had not imposed hands on Paul, but that they were commanded by the Spirit of God. Further Paul addes, that he was called by Christ [and God the Father] for three causes. The first was, to signifie the consent of will in the Father and Christ. The second was, to teach us how we are to conceive of God, namely, that he is the Father, and Iesus Christ, and the holy Ghost: for the Godhead may not be conceived out of the Trinitie of persons. The third is, because the Father is the fountaine of all good things that come to us by Christ. Lastly, he setteth downe the effect or action of the Father [who raised him from the dead] and that for two causes. One was to prove Christ to be the naturall Sonne of God; for he professed himselfe to bee so: and one cause why hee was crucified and put to death. Now when he was dead, if hee had not beene the Sonne of God indeed, hee had never risen againe, but had perished in death. And in that the Father raised him againe to life, hee gave testimony that hee was his owne naturall Sonne. And therefore Paul saith, Rom. 1. 4. that Christ was declared to bee the Sonne of God by the resurrection from the dead: and he applyes the words of the Psalme (Acts 13. 33. Thou art my Sonne, this day have I begotten thee) to the time of Christs resurrection. Againe, Paul mentions the resurrection of Christ, to note the time of his owne calling: for though the rest of the Apostles were called when Christ was in the estate of humiliation, yet Paul was called after wards, when Christ was entred into his Kingdome, and sate at the right hand of his Father.

Mat. 16. 17. Gal. 1. 15. Rom. 1. 4. Psal. 2. 7. Acts 13. 33.

The Use. First, whereas Paul in the verse foregoing of his Epistle begins with his owne calling, I gather, that every Minister of the Gospell ought to have a good & lawfull calling. A man cannot preach unlesse he be sent. Christ tooke not unto him the office of a Mediator till he was called and sent of his Father. Therefore the opinion of the Anabaptists is foolish and phantasticall, who thinke that every man may preach that will, without any speciall calling. They alleage, that the house of Stephanas ordained themselves to the ministerie of the Saints. Ans. The meaning of the place is not that they called themselves, but that they set themselves apart to the Ministerie of

Rom. 10. 14.

1 Cor. 16. 15. Gr. ἔταξαν.

of the Saints, in the purpose and resolution of their owne hearts. Againe, they alleage that all Christians in the new Testament are Kings and Priests, and the office of the Priest is to teach. I answer: All are Priests, in that they are to offer themselves in sacrifice to God, and to teach privately within their places and callings, as the matter his servants, the father his children, &c. and to make a confession of their faith, when they are called so to doe. Thirdly, they alleage that the power of the keyes is given to the Church. I answer, It is indeed; yet so as the use and administration thereof belongs to the Ministers alone, in the dispensation of the word.

Apoc. 5. 10.

Secondly, whereas Paul saith (not of men, but of Christ.) I gather, that every lawfull calling is of God, and not of men as authors thereof: and that the right to call belongs to God. The Father thrusts forth labourers into the vineyard, the Sonne gives Pastors and Teachers, the Holy Ghost makes Overseers. It may be alleaged, that the Church hath authoritie to call and ordaine Ministers: I answer, that the Churches authoritie is no more but a ministerie or service, whereby it doth testifie, declare, and approve whom God hath called.

Matth. 9. 38. Ephes. 5. 11. Acts 20. 28.

Thirdly, whereas Paul thus proclaimes his calling, (Paul an Apostle of Iesus Christ) I gather, that the callings of the Ministers of the Gospell must bee manifest to their owne consciences, and the consciences of their hearers; and that for divers weightie causes. First, they are Embassadours, Instruments, and the mouth of God: and for this cause they are to speake in the name of God, and this they cannot doe, unlesse they know themselves to bee called. Secondly, that the calling of the Ministerie may tend to edification, there is required the assitance of Gods Spirit in the teacher, the protection of him and his ministerie, the effectuall operation of the Spirit in the hearts of the hearers. And he that wants the assurance of his calling, cannot pray to God in faith for these things, neither can hee apply the promises of God to himselfe. Thirdly, the knowledge of our callings breeds conscience of our duties, diligence, and the feare of God. Lastly, knowledge of our callings in the consciences of the hearers, breeds a reverence in their hearts, and obedience to the ministerie of the word. Upon this some may demand, how they may know that they are called of God to the Ministerie of the word. Ans. They may know it, if they finde three things in themselves: the first is, the testimonie of their consciences, that they entred not for praise, honour, or lucre; but in the feare of God, with a desire to glorifie him, and to edifie the Church. The second is a faculte to doe that which they have a desire and will. In this faculte are two things, knowledge of God and his wayes, and aptnes to deliver that which they know. The third is the Ordination of the Church, which approves and gives testimonie of their will and abilitie. He that hath these things, is certainly called of God. Now put the case a man wants the first of these three, because he entred with evill conscience, being carried with ambitious and covetous desires: then I answer, that his calling still in respect of the Church is good and lawfull, and when hee repents of his bad conscience, it is also accepted of God.

1 Cor. 7. 12. Not the Lord, but I. Ans.

The fourth point to bee observed, is, that Paul makes three kindes of callings in the Church. One is, when men are called by men, and not by God: and thus are all false teachers called. The second is, when men are called of God by the ministerie of men: thus are all ordinarie Ministers of the word called. The third is, when men are called not by men, but by Christ immediately. And Paul here signifies, that he himselfe and the rest of the Apostles were called according to this third way. And in this respect hee puts a difference betweene the Apostles, and all the Ministers of the new Testament. For in that they were called immediately, they were also taught by immediate inspiration, and also aided by the infallible assistance of Gods Spirit. And of all this they had promises, Matth. 10. 19, 20. Luk. 10. 16. Hence we may gather the certaintie of our religion. The essentiall note of the Church is faith: faith stands in relation to the word of God: and the word of God is no word unto us, unlesse we know it to be so: and we know it to be so, because it was written by the Apostles, who in preaching and writing could not erre. Secondly, hence I gather, that the doctrine of the Apostles is the immediate word of God, because it was given by inspiration, both for matter and words: whereas the doctrine of the Church in Sermons, and the decrees of Councels, is both the word of God and the word of man: The word of God, as it agrees with the writings of the Apostles and Prophets: the word of man, as it is defective, and as it is propounded in termes devised by man. It may bee objected, that Paul spake some things of himselfe, and not from the Lord, 1 Cor. 7. 12. Not the Lord, but I. Answ. The meaning is, not the Lord by any expresse commandement, but I by collection and interpretation of Scripture, and that by the assistance of Gods Spirit, v. 40. Seeing then the writings of the Apostles are the immediate and meere word of God, they must bee obeyed as if they had beene written without man, by the finger of God.

Lastly, seeing it is the propertie of an Apostle, to be called immediately by Iesus Christ, hence it follows, that the authoritie, office, and function of Apostles ceased with them, and did not passe by succession to any other. Therefore it is a follihood, that the Pope of Rome succeeds Peter in Apostolicall authoritie, and in the infallible assistance of the Spirit, when he is in his Consistorie.

And where Paul saith, he was called by Jesus Christ, and not by man, that is, meere man, hee gives a pregnant testimonie that Christ is both God and man.

And whereas Paul was called by Christ raised from the dead, hence I gather the dignitie of the Apostle Paul above all other Apostles, in that he was called after the resurrection of Christ, when hee was entred into his Kingdome.

The Text.

2. And all the brethren that are with me, to the Churches of Galatia.

The Exposition.

By brethren wee are to understand such as separated themselves from the Pagans, and received the faith of Christ, 1 *Cor.*5.11. And here more specially such as taught and professed the faith, that is, both pastors and people, whether of Antioch (as some thinke) or of Rome, as others.

And Paul writes his Epistle as well in their names, as in his owne, and with their consent, for two causes. One was, that he might not be thought to deliver any private doctrine devised of his owne head. And this care hee had alwayes: and therefore taught nothing but that *which was in the writings of Moses and the Prophets, Act.*26.22. And this was the care of Christ, who saith, *My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me, Ioh.*7.16. And at this day, this must bee the care of the Ministers of the Gospell to deliver nothing of their owne. First therefore their doctrines must bee founded in the writings of the Prophets and Apostles: and secondly, that they may be sure of this, they must have the consent of the true Church, specially of such as have beene the Reformers of the Gospell in this last age. This rule Paul gives Timothy, to continue in the things which he had learned of Paul and the rest of the Apostles, 2 *Tim.*3.14. Hence it appeares to be a fault in sundrie private persons, when they read the Scriptures, to gather private opinions, to broach them to the world. This practice hath beene the foundation of heresies and schismes in the Church.

Secondly, Paul writes with consent, that hee might the better move and perswade the Galatians to receive his doctrine which hee is now to deliver.

Hence it appeares, that the consent of Pastors and people is of great excellencie. For the better conceiving of it, and the meaning of the Text, I will handle three points. The first is, what is the force of consent? wherin stands it? and where it is now to be found? For the first: Consent is of force to prepare the heart, and to move it to believe: as Augustine saith, I had not believed the Gospell, except the authoritie of the Church had moved me. And this is all it can doe. For it is the word that is the object and the ruler of our faith: the word it selfe works in us that faith, whereby it is believed. And Paul in this place useth consent, not to work a faith in the Galatians, but only to stirr up a liking of his doctrine. Two errors of the Church of Rome must here be avoided. One, that consent is a certaine marke of the Church. It is false; for consent may bee among the wicked in the Kingdome of Antichrist, *Rev.*13.16. In the kingdome of darknes all is in peace. Againe, dissention may bee among the godly, as betweene Paul and Barnabas, Paul and Peter. In the Church of Corinth there were schismes, 1 *Cor.*11. Consent therefore simply, unlesse it bee joyned with true faith and true doctrine, is not of force to declare unto us the true Church. The second error is, that the Catholike consent of beleevers in points of religion, is the true and lively Scripture, and that the written word is but a dead letter to it, and to be judged by it for his sense & meaning. But all is contrarie. For the written word is the first and perfect patterne of the minde and will of God: and the inward consent in the hearts of men is but a rude and imperfect extract and draught of it.

The second point is, wherein stands this consent? It must have his foundation in Christ, and thence flow to the members, as the oyle from Aarons head to his garments, *Psal.*133. And it stands in three things: consent in one faith and doctrine; consent in affection, whereby men bee of one heart, Acts 2.47. consent in speech, 1 *Cor.*1.10.

The third point is, where it is now to bee found? The Papists say, that they have true and perfect consent among themselves, and that Fathers & Councels be on their side: and that wee have no consent among our selves. I answer first, that they have not the consent which they pretend, for the proper points of Poperie were not knowen to the Apostles, nor to the Apostolicall Churches, but were taken up in the ages following by little & little. Secondly, such doctrine as the Papists make articles of faith, are but opinions & conjectures in the Fathers and Councels. Thirdly, the things which the Papists hold are the same peradventure in name, but they are not the same in deed, with that which the fathers hold, neither are they holden in the same manner: as for example, the Purgatorie which the Fathers hold is a thing farre different from the Purgatorie of the Papists, & so all the rest. Of consent they may brag, but they cannot shew it. As for our selves, we all consent in the foundation of religion. There is difference about the descent of Christ into hell. The thing we all hold, namely a descent; the difference is in the manner, whether it be vertually or locally. There is a difference about the pains of Christ in his agony & passion: yet all acknowledge the infinite merit and efficacie of the death of Christ. There is a difference about the government of the visible Church on earth. For the substance of government all agree, but for the manner of execution and administration, they they doe not. That Christ is present in the Eucharist, and that his bodie and bloud is there to bee eaten and drunken, all our Churches agree: and the difference is only touching the manner of his presence, namely whether it be spirituall or locall. And this is the mercie of God, that in all our differences this foundation of religion is not razed. Let us pray for the continuance and increase of this. [illegible] This much of the person that writes now follow the Churches to which the Epistle is sent, to the Churches of Galatia.] At this time the Galatians had made a revolt, and were fallen from justification by the obedience of Christ; so as Paul was afraid of them, *Cap.*4. and yet hee calles them Churches still, using great meeknesse and moderation. His example must wee follow in giving judgement of Churches of our time. And that we may the better do this, and the better relieve our consciences, marke three rules. The first is, that we must rightly consider of the faules of Churches. Some are faults in manners, some in doctrine. If the faults of the Church be in manners, and these faults appeare both in the lives of Ministers and people, so long as true religion is taught, it is a Church, and so to be esteemed: and the Ministers must be heard, *Mat.*23.1. yet may we separate from the private company of bad men in the Church, 2 *Cor.*6.11. and if it bee in our libertie and choice, joyne to Churches better ordered. If the errors be in doctrine, we must first consider, whether the whole Church erre, or some few therein: if the errour bee in some, and not in all, it remaines a Church still, as Corinth did, where some denied the resurrection; because a Church is named of the better part. Secondly, we must consider, whether the Church erre in the foundation, or no. If the errour overthrow not the foundation of religion, Paul hath given the sentence, that they which built upon the foundation hay and stubble of erroneous opinion, may be saved, 1 *Cor.*3.15. Thirdly, inquirie must be made, whether the Church erre of humane frailtie, or of obstinacie. If it erre of frailtie, though the error be in the foundation, yet it is still a Church, as appeares by the example of the Galatians. Yet if a Church shall erre in the foundation openly and obstinately, it separates from Christ, and ceaseth to be a Church, and we may separate from it, and may give judgement that it is no Church. When the Jewes resisted the preaching of Paul, and had nothing to say, but to raile, Paul then separated the Church of Ephesus, and Rome from them, *Act.*19.8. and 28.28. It may here be demanded, why Paul writes to the Galatians as brethren, and calls them Churches, seeing they have erred in the foundation, and are as he saith, vers. 6. removed to another Gospell. I answer, he could doe no otherwise. If a private man shall erre, he must first be admonished, and then the Church must be told of it. If he heare not the Church, then judgement may bee given, that hee is a Publican, and not before: much more then if the Church shall erre, there must first be an examination of the errour, and then sufficient conviction, and after conviction followes the censure upon the Church, and judgement then may be given, and not before. And Paul had now only begun in this Epistle to admonish the Church of Galatia. Great therfore is the rashnesse and want of moderation in many, that have beene of us, that condemne our Church for no Church, without sufficient conviction going before. If they say that we have been admonished by bookes published: I say againe, there be grosser faults in some of those bookes, than any of the faults that they reprove in the Church of England; and therefore the bookes are not fit to convince, specially a Church.

And though Paul call the Galatians Churches of God, yet may wee not hence gather, that the Church of Rome is a Church of God. The name is may have, but it doth in truth openly and obstinately oppugne the manifest principles of Christian religion.

If any demand what these Churches of Galatia were; I answer, that they were a people of Asia the lesse: yet now the country is under the dominion of the Turke. This shewes what God might have done to us in England long agoe, for the contempt of the Gospell. This againe shewes what desolation will befall us, unlesse we repent and bring forth better fruits of the Gospell.

3. Grace be with you and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Iesus Christ.

4. Who gave—

Here is laid downe the second part of the Preface, which is the salutation propounded in the forme of a prayer, Grace and peace, &c. Grace here mentioned is not any gift in man, but grace is Gods and in God. And it signifies his gracious favour and good will, whereby hee is well pleased with his elect, in and for Christ. Thus Paul distinguisheth the grace of God from *the gift that is by grace, Rom.*5.15. and sets grace before the gift as the cause of it. Here comes the errour of the Papists to be confuted, which doth teach, that the grace which makes us gratefull to God, is the infused gift of holinesse and charitie: whereas indeed wee are not first sanctified, and then please God: but first we please God by grace in Christ, and then upon this wee are sanctified and endued with charitie.

Peace is a gift not in God, but in us: and it hath three parts. The first is peace of conscience, which is quietnesse and tranquillitie of minde, arising of a sense and apprehension of reconciliation with God, Romans 5. verse 1. The second is peace with the creatures: and it hath five branches. The first is peace with Angels; for man is redeemed by Christ, and by meanes of this redemption, sinfull man is reconciled to good Angels, *Colos.*1.20.

The second is peace with the godly, who are all made of one heart and minde, Ier. 32.9. The third is peace with our selves, and that is a conformitie of the will, affections, & inclinations of mans nature to the renewed minde. The fourth is, peace in respect of our enemies. For the decree of God is, Touch not mine Anoynted, and doe my Prophets no harme: Againe, All things turne to the good of them that love God. The fifth is peace with the beasts of the field. God makes a covenant with them for his people, Ose. 2. 18. The creatures desire and wait for the deliverance of Gods children, Rom. 8. They that trust in God shall walke upon the Lion and the Basiliske, Psal. 91.

Rom 8. 28.

The third part of peace is prosperitie and good successe: whatsoever the righteous man doth, it prospers: And all things prospered in the house of Potiphar, when Ioseph was his Steward, because he feared God, Gen. 39. 1, 2.

To proceed: Paul sets downe the causes of grace and peace; and they are two; God the Father, and Jesus Christ. And here it may be remembred, that the Father & Christ; as they are one God, they are but one cause: and yet in regard of the manner of working, they are two distinct causes. For the Father gives grace from none but himselfe, by the Sonne; and Christ procures grace and peace, and he gives it unto men from the Father. Furthermore, Christ is described by his properitie, Our Lord, and by his effects in the next verse.

The Use. Whereas Paul begins his prayer with grace, we learne that grace in God is the first cause and beginning of all good things in us. Election is of grace, Rom. 11. verse 5. Vocation to salvation is of grace. 2 Tim. 1. 9. Faith is of grace, Phil. 1. 2, 9. Justification is freely by grace. Rom. 3. 24. Love is by grace, 1 Ioh. 4. 9. Every good inclination is of grace, Phil. 1. 13. Every good worke is of grace, Ezech. 36. 27. Eph. 2. 10. Life everlasting is of grace, Rom. 6. 23. To avoid any evill is the least good, and every good is of God. It may bee said, that will in man is the cause and beginning of some good things. Answer: In the creating or imprinting of the first grace in the heart, will is no cause at all, but a subject to receive the grace given. After the first grace is given, will is an Agent in the receiving of the second grace, and in the doing of any good worke. Yet this must bee remembred, that when will is an agent, it is no more but an instrument of grace, and grace in God is properly the first, middle, and last cause of grace in us, and of every good act. Hence it followes, that there bee not any meritorious workes that serve to prepare men to their justification: and that the co-operation of mans will with grace in the act of conversion, whereby wee are converted of God, is but a fiction of the braine of man. Lastly, this doctrine is the foundation of humilitie: for it teacheth us to ascribe all to grace, and nothing to our selves.

Secondly, wee learne that the chiefe good things to be sought for are the favour of God in Christ, and the peace of a good conscience. Consider the example of David, Psal. 4. verse 7. and Psalm 73. verse 23, 24. end of Paul, who accounted all things dung for grace and peace in Christ. And the peace of good conscience is as a guard to keepe our hearts and mindes in Christ, Phil. 4. 7. The soule of most men is, They spend their dayes and their strength in seeking riches, honours, pleasures: and they thinke not on grace and peace: After the manner of beasts, they use the blessings of God, but they looke not at the cause, namely, the grace of God: Our dutie is, above all things to seeke for grace and peace. The reason: True happinesse, which all men desire, consists in peace, and is founded in grace: they are said to bee happie and blessed that mourne, and suffer persecution for justice sake, Matt. 5. because in the midst of their sorrowes and miseries, they have the favour of God, and the peace of good conscience.

Thirdly, in that grace & peace are joyned, we learn, that peace without grace is no peace. There is no peace to the wicked, saith my God, Isa. 57. ult. They which make a covenant with hell and death are soonest destroyed, Isa. 28. 18. Laughter (saith Salomon) is madnes, namely, when it is severed from grace and peace. When men say peace, peace, then comes destruction, 1 Thess. 5. The prosperitie of the men of this world ends in perdition: read Psal. 73.

Paul saith not simply that grace and peace come from God, but from God the Father, and from Jesus Christ; that hee may teach us rightly to acknowledge and worship God. For God is to bee acknowledged and worshipped in the Father, in Christ, and in the Holy Spirit. It was the fault of the Pagans, and it is the fault of sundrie Christians, to worship an absolute God, without the Father, and without Christ. This fault must bee amended, for it turnes God to an Idoll.

Againe, when Paul saith, that grace proceeds from the Father; and secondly, from Jesus Christ: he sets downe the order which God observeth in the communication of grace and peace. The Father is the fountaine of grace, and gives it from none but from himselfe. Christ againe is (as it were) a conduit, or pipe, to convey grace from the Father to us. Of his fulnesse we receive grace for grace, Ioh. 1. In him we are complete, Col. 2. Election, justification, salvation, and all is done in and by Christ, 2 Tim. 1. 9. The Use. 1. Let them that travell under the burden of a bad conscience, and a bad life, come to Christ by turning from their sinnes, and by beleeving in him, and they shall obtaine grace, and finde rest to their soules. II. In our miseries, our hearts may not bee troubled over-much, but we must alwayes moderate our sorrowes. For if we beleeve in Christ, we shall alwayes have grace and peace: Read Ioh. 14. 27. III. We must moderate our cares of this life. For if we we trusting in Christ, have grace and peace, we shall want nothing: reade Psal. 4. v. 6, 7. Jesus Christ that gives grace and peace, is called, Our Lord, for two causes. One is to teach us to acknowledge Christ in right, and title is, to acknowledge him to be our Lord, as well as our Saviour. He is a Priest to procure life. A Prophet to teach the way of life. A Lord to command them to walke in the way of life. The fault of our times: All men professe Christ; yet many allow of no Christ, but of their own devising, namely, a Christ that must be a Saviour to deliver them from hell, but not a Lord to command them, that they can not brooke. The second cause why Christ is called our Lord, is to signifie the persons to whom grace and peace belongs; and they are such as acknowledge Christ for their Lord, and yeeld subjection to him in heart and life. They find rest to their soules, that take up the yoke of Christ in new obedience, and the patient bearing of the Crosse; Matth. 11. v. 29.

4. Who gave himselfe for our sinnes, that hee might deliver us out of this present evill world, according to the will of God our Father.

5. To whom bee glorie for ever and ever, Amen.

In these words, the second argument is propounded, wherby Christ is described, namely, the effect of Christ, which is, that hee gave himselfe. And hee is said to give himselfe for two causes. First, because he presented himselfe as a price and sacrifice for sinne to God the Father, Matth. 20. 28. Eph. 5. 2. 1 Tim. 2. 6. The second, because he did publikely propound and set forth himselfe to the world, as a sacrifice and price of redemption, Rom. 3. 25. Iohn 3. 14. and Act. 4. 12.

In this giving there are five things to bee considered. The first, the giver, Christ: the second, the thing given, and that is Christ himselfe. The third is the end of his giving, for sinne, that is, that he might make satisfaction for our sinnes. The fourth is another end of his giving, that he might deliver us out of this present evill world. Here the present world signifies the corrupt estate of men, that live according to the lusts of their owne hearts, 1 Ioh. 2. 16. And men are here said to be delivered and taken out of the world, when they are severed from the condition of sinfull men, by sanctification and newnesse of life, and by divine protection, whereby they are preserved from evill after they are sanctified, Tit. 2. 14. and Ioh. 17. 15. And this deliverance is not in this life in respect of place, but in respect of qualitie. The fifth thing is the cause that moved Christ to give himselfe, and that is the will of God.

In the 5. verse there is set downe a corollarie or conclusion, which containes the praise of God.

The use followes. Whereas Christ is the giver of himselfe, hence it followes, that his death and sacrifice was voluntarie. And this he shewed in two things. When he was to bee attached hee fled not, but went to a garden in the mount, as his custome was, which was knowne to Iudas, Ioh. 18. 2. And in the very separation of body and soule, he cried with a loud and strong voice, which argued that he was Lord of death, and died because his will was to die. This must be remembred: For otherwise his death had not beene a satisfaction for sinne.

In that Christ gave himselfe to be a sacrifice, we learne many things. First, that the worke of redemption exceeds the worke of creation. For in the creation, Christ gave the creatures to man; in the redemption he gave himselfe, and that as a sacrifice. Secondly, in that he gave himselfe, it appeares that he gave neither Angel, nor meere man, nor any thing out of himselfe; and that all merits of life, and satisfaction for sinne, are to be reduced to the person of Christ: and consequently that there be no humane satisfactions for sin, nor meritorious workes done by us; because they pertaine not to the person of Christ, but to our persons: and they were neuer offered of Christ unto God as merits and satisfactions, because hee gave nothing but himselfe, and the things which appertained unto his owne person. Thirdly, in that Christ gives himselfe, we must take and receive him with hungring hearts. Nay he is to suffer violence of us, and the violent are to take him to themselves. Lastly, in that he gives himselfe to us, we againe must give our bodies and soules unto him in way of thankfulnesse, and dedicate all that we have or can doe to the good of men. The creatures at our tables present us with their bodies: and so must we present our bodies and soules to God.

The first end of this giving is, that Christ might be a sacrifice and ransome for sin. The knowledge of this point is of great use. First, it workes love in us, on this manner. We must in minde and meditation come to the crosse of Christ. Upon the crosse wee are to behold Christ crucified, and in his death and passion, his sacrifice; in his sacrifice for the sinnes of his enemies, his endles love: and the consideration of his love will move us to love him againe, and the Father in him. Secondly, the consideration of his endlesse pains for our sins in the sacrifice of himselfe, must breed in us godly sorrow for them: for if he sorrow for he, much more we. Thirdly, this knowledge is the true beginning of amendment of life. For if Christ gave himselfe to redeeme us from iniquitie, we must take up a purpose of not sinning, and never wittingly sinne more. Lastly, this knowledge is the foundation of comfort in them that truly turne to Christ. For the price is paid for their sinnes: and they which are eased of their sins are blessed, Psal. 32. 1. And in temptation, they may boldly oppose the satisfaction of Christ against hell, death, the law, and the judgement of God: and if at any time they sinne, they must recover themselves, and remember that they have an Advocate with the Father, Iesus Christ the just. 1 Iohn 2.1.

And whereas Paul saith, that Christ gave himself for our sinnes, hee teacheth that every man must apply this gift and sacrifice of Christ to himselfe. This applying is done by faith: and the right manner of application is this. Wee must turne to Christ, and in turning by faith apply: and when wee apply Christ by faith, we must withall turne. Faith goeth before conversion in order of nature, yet in the order of teaching and practice they are both together. They which use to apply Christ and his benefits unto themselves, and yet will not turne themselves to Christ, misapply and presume; because the right apprehension of Christ is in the exercises of invocation and repentance.

The second end, for which Christ gave himselfe, is that he might take us out of this evill world. And hence wee are taught three things. First, that we must be grieved and displeased at the wickednesse of the world, as Lot was, 2 Pet. 2.7. Secondly, that we must not fashion our selves to the wicked lives of the men of this world; but we must in all things prove what is the good will of God, and doe it. Thirdly, seeing we are taken out of this world, we must not dwell in it, but our dwelling must bee in heaven Revel. 13.6. the beast out of the sea persecutes them that dwell in heaven, that is, such as dwell on earth, and for affection have their conversation in heaven. And seeing this must be so, we must not love the world, but love the comming of Christ, and every day prepare our selves against the day of death, that we may enter into our owne home. Rom. 12.

And whereas Paul calls this world an evill world, hee doth it to signifie that there is nothing in men but sinne, till they bee regenerate, yea that civill vertues, and civill life, that are excellent in the eyes of men, are no better than sinnes before God. It is the errour of the Papists, that men may thinke and doe some thing that is morally good without grace.

The cause that moved Christ to give himselfe, is the will of God. Hence it appeares that God gives Christ to no man for his foreseene faith or workes. For there is no higher cause of the will of God. The foreknowledge of things that may come to passe, goes before will, but the foreknowledge of things that shall come to passe, and therefore the foreknowledge of faith and workes, follows the will of God; because things that shall come to passe are first decreed, and then foreseene.

The will here mentioned is said to bee the will of God, that is, the first person, the Father: for when Christ is opposed to God, then God signifies the Father. And he is most commonly called God, because he is God without communication of the Godhead from any: whereas the Sonne and holy Ghost are God by communication of Godhead from the Father.

11 And this God is called our father by Paul. And hereby he signifies that the scope of the Gospel is; first, to propound God unto us not only as Creator, but as a Father: secondly, to enjoyne us to acknowledge him to be our Father in Christ; and consequently to carry our selves as dutifull children to him in all subjection and obedience. They which doe not this, know not the intent of the Gospel: and if they know it, in deed they denie it.

The conclusion annexed to the salutation. To whom be glorie for ever, teacheth us so oft as we remember the worke of our redemption by Christ, so oft for to give praise and thanks to God: yea, all our lives must be nothing else but a testimonie of thankfulnesse for our redemption. And all our praise and thankes to God must proceed from the serious affection of the heart signified by the word, Amen, that is, so be it.

6. I marvell that you are so soone removed away to another Gospel, from him that hath called you in the grace of Christ.

7. Which is not another Gospell: but that some trouble you, and intend to overthrow the Gospell of Christ.

Here begins the second part of the Epistle, in which hee gives instruction to the Galatians. And it hath two parts: one concernes doctrine, the other manners. The first part touching doctrine begins in this sixth verse, and continues to the 13. verse of the 5. chapter. The summe of it is a reproofe of the Galatians for revolting from the Gospel: and it is disposed in this syllogisme.

If I be immediately called of God to teach, and my doctrine be true, ye ought not to have revolted from my doctrine.

But I was called immediately of God to teach, and my doctrine is true: Therfore ye should not have revolted from my doctrine.

The proposition is not expressed: because it was needlesse. The minor is handled through the whole Epistle. The conclusion is in the 6. and 7. verses, the meaning whereof I will briefly deliver. So soone] that is, presently after my departure: removed] carried away by the perswasions of false teachers. To another Gospel] to another doctrine of salvation, which in the speech and opinion of the false teachers is another manner of Gospel, more sufficient and more excellent than that which Paul hath delivered. From him] that is, from me being an Apoltle, who have called you by preaching the Gospel of Christ. In the grace] that is, have called you freely, without any desert of yours, to bee partakers of the favour of God in Christ. Which is not another] which pretended Gospel of the false Apostles is not indeed another Gospel from that of Paul, because there is but one; but it is an invention of the braine of man. But there bee some] that is, but I plainly perceive the cause of of your revolt, that some trouble you, and seeke to overthrow the Gospell of Christ.

In these words two points are to be considered. The first is the manner which Paul useth in reproving the Galatians. Hee tenders their good and salvation, and seekes by all meanes their recoverie. And therefore in his reproofe he doth two things. First, hee reproves them with meeknesse and tendernesse of heart, following his owne rule, Gal. 6.1. for hee might justly have said, Ye may be ashamed, that ye are removed to another Gospell; but he saith only, I marvell, that is, I was well perswaded of you, and I hoped for better things, I am deceived, and I wonder at it. Secondly, he frames his reproofe with great warinesse and circumspection: for he saith not, ye of your selves doe remove to another Gospell, but ye are removed: and thus he blames them but in part, and laies the principall blame on others. Againe he saith not, ye were removed, but in the time present, ye are removed, that is, ye are in the act of Revolting, and have not as yet altogether revolted. And hereby hee puts them in minde that although they bee in a fault, yet there is nothing done which may not bee easily undone. According to his example, we are in all reproofes to shew love and keepe love: to shew love to the party reproved, and to frame our reproofe so as we may keepe his love.

The second point is the fault reproved, and that is the Revolt of the Galatians, which was departure from the calling whereby they were called to the grace of Christ. If it be demanded what kind of Revolt this was? Answer, there be two kinds of revolt, particular & generall. Particular, when men professe the name of Christ, and yet depart from the faith in some principal points thereof. Of this kind was the Apostasie of the ten tribes, and such is the Apostasie of the Romane Church. A generall revolt is, when men wholly forsake the faith and name of Christ. Thus doe the Jewes and Turkes at this day. Againe, a revolt is sometime of weaknesse and humane frailtie, and sometime of obstinacie. Now the revolt of the Galatians was only particular in the point of justification, and of weaknesse, and not of obstinacie: and this Paul signifies when he saith, they were carried by others. Of this Revolt foure things are to be considered. The time, so soone: From whom, or what? from the doctrine of Paul, and consequently the grace of Christ. To what? to another Gospell. By meanes of whom? but some trouble you, &c.

Touching the time, it was short; They were soone carried away. This shewes the lightnes and inconstancie of mans nature, specially in matter of religion. While Moses tarried in the mount, Aaron and the people set up a golden calfe, and departed from God. Osea saith, The righteousnesse of the Israelites was like the morning dew, which the rising of the Sun consumeth, chapter 6.4. Iohn was a burning light, and the Iews rejoyced in this light: that is well; but marke what is added: for an houre or moment, Iohn 5.35. They which cryed Osanna to the sonne of David, shortly after cried, Crucifie him, crucifie him. The crosse and persecution will make men call the Gospel in question, if not forsake it, Luk. 8 13. The multitude of people among us are like wax, and are fit to take the stampe and impression of any religion: and it is the law of the land that makes the most imbrace the Gospell, and not conscience. That we may constantly persevere in the profession of the true faith, both in life and death, first, we must receive the Gospell simply for it is, because it is the Gospell of Christ, and not for any other by-respect. Secondly, we must be mortified and renewed in the spirit of our minds, and suffer no by-corners in our hearts, where secret unbeleefe, secret hypocrisie and spirituall pride may lurke and lye hid from the eyes of men, Heb. 3.12. Thirdly, we must not only be hearers of the word, but also doers of it, in the principall duties to bee practised, of faith, conversion, and new obedience.

B

To come to the second point: when Paul saith, the Galatians were removed from him that called them, that is, himselfe; he shewes Christian modestie: because speaking things praise-worthie of himselfe, he speaketh in the third person: from him that hath called, &c. The like he doth, 2 Cor. 12.2 I know a man taken up into the third heaven, that is, himselfe. And Iohn saith, the disciple that leaned on the breast of Christ, whom Christ loved, asked whom hee meant, Ioh. 13.23. After this practice wee are to give praise to God and to his instruments: but neither to praise nor dispraise our selves. This is Christian civility to bee joyned with our faith.

C

Secondly, when he saith, who hath called you in the grace of Christ, we learne, that the scope of the Gospel is to bring men to the grace of Christ. To this very end God hath vouchsafed us in England the Gospel more than fortie yeares. And therfore our words, and deeds, and lives, should be seasoned with grace and favour of it, and shew forth the grace of God. Secondly, we owe unto God great thankfulnesse, and we can never be sufficiently thankfull for this benefit, that God calles us to his grace. But it is otherwise: the Sun is a goodly creature: yet because we see it daily, it is not regarded: and so it is with the grace of God.

Thirdly, the Galatians are removed not only from the doctrine of Paul, but also from the grace of God. And the reason is, because they joyned the workes of the law, with Christ and his grace in the cause of their justification and salvation. Here it must be observed, that they which make an union of grace and workes in the cause of justification, are separated from the grace of God. Grace admits no partner or fellow. Grace must be freely given every way, or it is no way grace. Hence it followes, that the present Church of Rome is departed from the grace of God, because it makes a concurrence of grace and workes, in the justification of a sinner before God: and wee may not make any reconciliation with that Church in religion; because it is become an enemie of the grace of God.

The third point is, To what thing the Galatians revolt? to another Gospell, that is, to a better Gospel than that which Paul taught, compounded of Christ and the workes of the law. And this forged Gospell the false Apostles taught, and the Galatians quickly received. Here we see the curious niceness and dantinesse of mans nature, that cannot bee content with the good things of God, unlesse they be framed to our minds: and if they please us for a while, they doe not please us long, but we must have new things. Our first parents not content with their estate, must needs bee as God. Nadab and Abihu offer sacrifice to God, but the fire must bee of their owne appointment. King Achaz will offer sacrifice to God, but the altar must bee like the altar at Damascus. False teachers, beside the doctrine of the Apostles, had profound learning of their owne. The Jewes, beside the written law of Moses, must have their Cabala, containing, as they supposed, more mysticall and excellent doctrines. The Papists, beside the written word, set up unwritten Tradition, which they make equall with the Scripture. We that professe the Gospell, are not altogether free from this fault. We like, that Christ should be preached: but Sermons are not in common reputation learned, neither doe they greatly please the most, unlesse they be garnished with skul of arts, tongues, and varietie of reading: this curiousnesse and discontentment the Lord condemnes, when he forbids plowing with the oxe & the asse, and the wearing of garments of linsi-wolsie. And it is the worst kind of discontentment, that is in things pertaining to salvation. It is called by Paul, the itching of the eare, and it is incident to them that follow their owne lusts. The remedie of this sinne, is to learne the first lesson that is to be learned of them that are to bee good schollers in the schoole of Christ: and that is to feele our povertie, and in what extreme need wee stand of the death and passion of Christ and withall to hunger and thirst after Christ, as the bread and water of life. Reade Isa 44. 3. Iohn 7. 37. Psal. 25. 11. the example of David, Psal. 143. 6. When the heart and conscience hath experimentally learned this lesson, and not the braine and tongue alone; then shall men begin to favour the things of God, and discerne of things that differ, and put a difference betweene grace and workes, mans word and Gods word; and for the working of our salvation, esteeme of mans workes, and mans word, as offals that are cast to dogges.

2 Reg. 16. 11.

Rev. 2. 24.

Deut. 22. 10, 11.

2 Tim. 4. 5.

Paul addes, which is not another Gospell, that is, though it be another Gospell in the reputation of false teachers, yet indeed it is not another, but is a subversion of the Gospell of Christ. Hence I gather, that there is but one Gospel, one in number and no more. For there is but one way of salvation by Christ, whereby al the Elect are saved, from the beginning of the world to the end, Act. 15. 11. 1 Cor. 10. 3. It may be demanded, how they of the old Testament could be partakers of the bodie and bloud of Christ, which then was not. Answ. The bodie and bloud of Christ, though then it was not subsisting in the world, yet was it then present to all beleevers, two waies: first, by divine acceptation; because God did accept the incarnation and passion of Christ to come, as if it had beene accomplished. Secondly, it was present to them by meanes of their faith, which is a substance of things that are not seen: and consequently it makes them present to the beleeving heart.

Againe, hence it appeares to be a falsehood, that every man may be saved in his owne religion, so be it he hold there is a God, and that he is a rewarder of them that come unto him. For there is but one Gospel: and if the former opinion were true, then so many opinions, so many Gospels. Paul saith, that the world by her wisdome could not know God in his wisdome, and for this cause he ordained the preaching of the word to save men, 1 Cor. 1. 21. And though he that comes to God must beleeve that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that come to him: yet not every one that beleeves generally that there is a God, and that he is a rewarder of them that come to him, comes to God: for this the devils beleeve.

The fourth point, is concerning the Authors of this Revolt: and Paul chargeth them with two crimes. The first is, that they trouble the Galatians, not only because they make divisions, but because they trouble their consciences setled in the Gospel of Christ. It may be alleaged, that there be sundry good things which trouble the conscience, as the preaching of the law, the censure of excommunication, the authority of the Magistrate in compelling Recusants to the congregation. Answer, these things indeed trouble the consciences of men, but they are evil consciences: and the end of this trouble is, that they may be reformed and made good. But the crime wherewith the false apostles are charged, is, that they trouble the consciences of the godly, or the good consciences of men. Here then is set downe a note, whereby false and erroneous doctrines may be discerned, namely, that they serve only to trouble and disquiet the good conscience. And by this we see the Romane religion to bee corrupt and unsound: for a great part of it tends this way. Justification by workes is a yoke that none could ever beare, Act. 15. The vow of single life is a snare, or as the noose in the halter to strangle the soule, 1 Cor. 7. 4. So is the doctrine which teacheth teacheth that men after their conversion, must still remaine in suspence of their salvation: and that pardon of sinne is necessarily annexed to confession in the eare, and to satisfaction for the temporall punishment of sinne in this life, or in purgatorie.

On the contrarie, the Gospell of Christ (as here it appeares,) troubles not the good conscience, but it brings peace and perfect joy, Iohn 15. 11. Rom. 15. 13. And the reason is plaine: for it ministers a perfect remedie for every sinne, and comfort sufficient for every distresse. And this is a note whereby the Gospel is discerned from all other doctrines whatsoever.

The second crime wherewith the false apostles are charged, is, that they overthrow the Gospell of Christ: the reason of this charge must bee considered. They did not teach a doctrine flat contrarie to the Gospell of Christ: but they maintained it in word, and put an addition to it of their owne out of the law, namely, justification, and salvation, by the workes thereof. And by reason of this addition, Paul gives the sentence, that they perverted and turned upside downe the Gospel of Christ. Upon this ground it appeares that the Popish religion is a flat subversion of the Gospel of Christ, because it joynes justification by workes, with true justification by Christ. The reason, that the workes that justifie are works of grace, and not of nature, will not serve the turne. For if Christ by his grace makes works to justifie; then is he not only a Saviour, but also an instrument to make us Saviours of our selves: hee being the first and principall Saviour, and we subordinate saviours unto him. But if Christ have a partner in the work of justification and salvation, he is no perfect Christ.

8. But though we, or an Angell from heaven, preach unto you otherwise, then that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.

9. As we said before, so say I now againe; if any man preach unto you otherwise then ye have received, let him be accursed.

An objection might be made against the former conclusion, thus: But the most excellent among the Apostles, Iames, Peter, Iohn, (by your leave) teach another Gospell than that which Paul had preached. To this objection he makes answer in this verse negatively, that whosoever teacheth another Gospell is accursed, whatsoever he be. In this answer three things are to be considered: a sinne, the punishment thereof, and a supposition serving to amplifie the sinne.

The sinne is to preach in the cause of our justification, any other thing beside that or divers to that which Paul taught the Galatians, though it be not contrarie. Thus much the very words import: and the same words are againe united in the next verie. And Paul bids I may be, accurst them that teach otherwise, that is, any divers doctrine as necessarie to salvation, beside that which he taught, 1 Tim. 6. 3. And the reason of this sinne is, because God hath given this commandement, Wee may not depart from his word, to the right hand or to the left; neither may we adde thereto, or take therefrom, Iosua 1. ver. 7, 8. Deut. 4. and 12. Before I gather any doctrine hence, this ground is to be laid downe, that Paul preached all the counsell of God, Act. 20. 27. And that which he preached, being necessary to salvation, he wrote, or some other of the Apostles, Iohn 20. 31. This being granted (which is a certain truth) two maine conclusions follow: One, that the Scriptures alone by themselves, without any other word, are abundantly sufficient to salvation, whether we regard doctrines of faith, or manners. For he that delivers any doctrine out of them, & beside them, as necessary to be beleeved, is accursed.

The second conclusion is, that unwritten Traditions, if they be tendered to us, as a part of Gods word, and as necessarie to salvation, they are abominations, because they are doctrines beside the Gospel that Paul preached. And the Romane religion goes to the ground, because it is founded on Tradition, out of, and beside the written word. Learned Papists, to helpe themselves, make a double answer. One is, that they are accursed, which preach otherwise than Paul preached, and not they which preach otherwise than hee writ. But it is false which they say, for that which he preached, he writ. Augustine having relation to the text in hand, saith, that he is accursed which preacheth any thing * beside that which we have received in the legall and Evangelicall scriptures. Againe, he saith, that he must * not teach any more, or any other thing, then that which is in the Apostles, whose words hee must expound.

* Præterquam. Contra ep. fundam. c. 6. De bono viduitatis, c. 1.

* Non aliud, quod amplius.

The second answer is, that to preach otherwise, is to preach contrarie; Because (as they say) precepts and doctrines may be delivered if they be divers, and not contrarie. As the Gospell of Iohn, and the Apocalyps, were written after this Epistle to the Galatians, which are divers to it, though not contrarie: the like they say of the Canons of Councels; and that Paul, Rom. 16. 18. put me, beside for contrarie. I answer thus: The preposition (para) translated, beside or otherwise, signifieth thus much properly; and wee are not to depart from the proper signification of the words, unlesse we bee forced by the text. And the place in the Romans is his proper and full sense, must be turned thus: Observe the authors of offences, beside the doctrine which ye have learned. And Pauls minde is, that they should be observed, that teach any other divers or distinct doctrine, though it bee not directly contrarie. The Gospell of Iohn and the Apocalyps, written after ward, propound not any divers doctrine pertaining to the salvation of the soule, but one and the same in substance, with that which Paul wrote. The Canons of Councels Councels, are traditions touching order and comelines, and they prescribe not any thing, as necessary to justification and salvation. Againe, the Embassadour that speakes any thing beside his commission, is as well in fault, as he that speakes the contrarie: though not so much.

The second point is, the punishment [Let him be accursed] Here are three things to bee considered. The first, what it is to be accursed? Answ. God hath given to the Church, the power of binding, and it hath foure degrees, Admonition, Suspension from the Sacraments, Excommunication, Anathema. And this last is a censure or judgement of the Church, whereby it pronounceth a man severed from Christ, and adjudged to eternall perdition, Rom.9.5. 1 Cor.16.22. And he is here said to be accursed, that stands subject to this censure. The second part is, who are to be accursed? Answ. Heinous offendours and desperate persons, of whose amendment there is no hope. And therefore this judgement is seldome pronounced upon any. We finde but one example in the new Testament: Paul accursed Alexander the Copper smith, 2 Tim.4.15. And the Church afterward accursed Iulian the Emperour. Other examples we finde not any.

The third point, how the Church should accurse any man, and in what order? Answ. In this action, there be three judgements. The first is Gods, which is given in heaven, whereby he doth accurse obstinate and notorious offenders. The second judgement pertaines to the Church upon earth, which pronounceth them accursed, whom God accurseth. It may be said, how comes the Church to know the judgement of God, whereby he accurseth? Answ. The word sets downe the condition of them that are accursed; and experience, and observation findes out the persons to whom these conditions are incident. The third judgment is given in heaven, whereby God ratifies and approves the judgement of the Church, according to that, Whatsoever ye binde on earth shall be bound in heaven. The last judgement pertaines to every private person, who holds him in execration, whom God hath accursed, and the Church hath pronounced so to be. If hee heare not the Church, the Church pronounceth him to bee as a Publican and heathen, and then (saith Christ) let him be as a Publicane to thee. Thus must the text be understood.

Hence we are taught, to be carefull in preserving the purity of the Gospel: because the corrupters thereof are to bee accursed as the damned spirits. Hence againe it appeareth, that the Church in accursing, doth but exercise a Ministerie, which is to publish and testifie, who are accursed of God. Lastly, hence we learne, that private persons must seldome use cursing: because God must first accurse, and the Church publish the sentence of God; before we may with good conscience utter the same. They therefore, which in a rage accurse themselves, and others, deale wickedly. We are called ordinarily to blessing, and not to cursing.

The third point is, the supposition of things impossible, on this manner. Put the case, that I Paul, or any other of the Apostles, should teach otherwise than I have taught you: neither I, nor they must be beleeved, but bee accursed. Againe, put the case, that an Angell from heaven should come and preach otherwise than Paul preached to the Galatians, who must be beleeved? Paul, or the Angel? the answer is, not the Angel, but Paul: and the Angel must be accursed. And the reason is, because Paul in preaching and writing, did represent the authoritie of God, and God puts his owne authoritie unto the word which he uttered: and he was assisted by the extraordinarie, immediate, and infallible assistance of Gods Spirit. From this supposition, sundrie things may be learned. The first, that the word preached and written by Paul, is as certein, as if it had beene written by God himselfe, immediately. It may be objected, that Paul saith, 1 Cor.7.12. To the remnant, I speake, not the Lord. I answer, Paul saith, I; not the Lord, not because he was deceived in his advise, for he spake by the Spirit of God, chap. 7. verse 40. but because he gave counsell in a case of marriage, whereof the Lord had made no expresse law. The meaning then is this, I speake by collection from the law of God, and not the Lord, by any particular and expresse law.

Secondly it appeares hence, that the articles of faith, or the doctrine of the Gospel, is in excellencie and authoritie above all men and Angels. And hence it followes, that the Church and Councels cannot authorize the word of God, in the minde and conscience of any man. For the inferiour and dependent authority addes nothing to that which is the principall and superiour authoritie. Therefore, the opinion of the Papists is false, that we cannot know the Scripture to be the word of God, but by the testimonie of the Church: as though the letter of a Prince, could not be knowne to be so, without the testimonie of the subjects. The principall authoritie is sufficient in it selfe, to authorize it selfe, without externall testimonie.

Thirdly, since the daies of the Apostles, sundrie doctrines have beene received and beleeved, touching intercession of Saints, prayer to the dead, and for the dead, Purgatorie, and such like: and those doctrines have beene confirmed by sundrie revelations. And we learne, what to judge both of the doctrines, and of the revelations; namely, that they are accursed: because the doctrines are beside the written word, and the revelations tend to ratifie and confirme them.

Lastly, hence we learne, what to thinke of the writings of Papists, and Schoolemen, whereof some are called Seraphicall, Cherubicall, call, or Angelicall Doctors. They broach and maintaine sundry things, beside that which the Apostles preached and wrote; as justification by works, and a mixture of the law and the Gospel: they give too little to grace, and too much to mans will. In this regard Paul hath given the sentence, that they are accursed. For this cause, Students of divinity are warily to read them with prayer, that they be not led into temptation, and they are to use them only in the last place. And they are greatly to be blamed, that prefer them almost above all Writers: they shew that they have little love of the Gospell in their hearts.

9. As we said before, so say I now againe; If any man preach unto you otherwise than ye have received, let him be accursed.

In these words Paul repeats againe that which he said before: and the repetition is not in vaine, but for three weighty causes; the first is, to signifie that hee had spoken not rashly, but advisedly, whatsoever he had said before: the second is, that the point delivered is an infallible truth of God: the third is, to put the Galatians and us in minde, that we are to observe and remember that which hee had said, as the foundation of our religion, namely, that the doctrine of the Apostles is the onely infallible truth of God, against which we may not listen to Fathers, Councels, or to the very Angels of God. If this had beene remembred and observed, the Gospell had continued in his puritie after the dayes of the Apostles.

In this verse one thing is to bee observed. Before, Paul said, they are accursed which teach otherwise than he had taught: here hee saith, they are accursed which teach otherwise than the Galatians had received. Whereby it appeares, that as Paul preached the Gospel of Christ, so the Galatians received it. And they received it, first, in that they had care to know it: secondly, in that they gave the assent of faith unto it, as to a truth: against which the very Angels could take no exception. And for this also are the Thessalonians commended, that the Gospel was to them in power & much assurance. The great fault of our times is, that whereas the Gospel is preached, it is not accordingly received. Many have no care to know it: and they which know it, give not unto it the assent of faith, but only hold it in opinion. And this is the cause that there is so small fruit of the Gospell. This sinne will at length have his punishment. The places that are not seasoned by the waters of the Sanctuary, are turned to salt pits, Ezech.47.11.

10. For now whether preach I men, or God? or seeke to please men? for if I should yet please men, I were not the servant of Christ.

The interrogations in this place, Doe I preach? and doe I please? are in stead of earnest negations, I doe not preach, I doe not please. And when he saith, do I now preach men, or God? his meaning is this: Heretofore I have preached the Traditions of men; but now being an Apostle, I preach not the doctrine of men, but of God. And when he saith, doe I seeke to please men? his meaning is this: I doe not make this the scope of my ministerie, to frame and temper my doctrine so, as it may bee suitable and pleasing to the affections of men. For otherwise we are to please men in that which is good, and for their good, 1 Cor.10.33. Rom.15.2.

This verse containes a double reason of his former speech, and of the repetition thereof. The first is this: Though heretofore I taught the Traditions of men; yet now I teach the word not of men, but of God: and therefore I accurse them that teach otherwise. The second is framed thus: If I should yet please men, I were not the servant of God: but I am the servant of God; therefore I seeke not to please men; but if need shall bee, I will denounce curses against them.

Here first wee see the proper matter of the Ministerie, which is not the word or doctrine of man, but of God. By this the Ministers of the Gospell are taught to handle their doctrine with modestie and humilitie, without ostentation, with reverence, and with a consideration of the Majesty of God, whose the doctrine is which they utter, that God may be glorified, 1 Per.4.11.

Secondly, the hearers in hearing are to know that they have to deale with God, and that they are to receive the doctrine taught, not as the word of man, but as the very word of God, as the Thessalonians did, 1 Thess.2.13. The want of this consideration is the cause that some contemn the Ministerie of the word, & others are not touched and moved in hearing.

Againe, here is set downe the right manner of dispensing the word, which must not be for the pleasing of men, but of God. Hence it appeares, that Ministers of the Gospell must not bee men-pleasers, nor apply and fashion their doctrine to the affections, humours, and dispositions of men, but keepe a good conscience, and doe their office. The Lord tels Ieremy, he must not turne to the people, but the people must turne to him, Ier.15.19. Thus God shall be with them, and they shall bring forth much fruit.

And the people must know it to bee a good thing for them, not to bee pleased alwayes by their Ministers. The Ministerie of the Word must be as a sacrificing knife, to kill and mortifie the old Adam in us, that we may live unto God. A sicke man must not alwayes have his mind, but he must often be crossed and restrained of his desire: and so must we that are sicke in our soules in respect of our sinnes. It is a fault therefore of men that desire to bee pleased, and to have matters smoothed over of their Teachers. This is Davids balme, which hee wisheth may never bee wanting to his head, Psal.141.5.

The end of this verse sets downe a memorable sentence, That if wee seeke to please men, wee cannot bee the servants of God.

Hence I gather, that our nature is full of rebellion, and enmity against God; because they which please men, cannot please God. Againe, here is set down what is the hurt that comes by pride and ambition. It keepes men, that they cannot bee the servants of Christ. To believe not (saith Christ) because ye seek glory one of another, John 5. 44. Ambition fils the mind with vanity, and the heart with worldly desires, that it cannot thinke or desire to please God. Wherefore he that would be a faithful Minister of the Gospel, must deny the pride of his heart, and be emptied of ambition, and set himselfe wholly to seeke the glory of God in his calling. And generally, hee that would be a faithful servant of Christ, must set God before him as a Judge, and consider that he hath to deale with God: and he must turne his minde and senses from the world, and all things therin, to God: and seek above all things to approve his thoughts, desires, affections, and all his doings unto him.

Lastly, the profession of the servant of God is here to be observed in the example of Paul, who saith, Doe I now preach men? and doe I yet please men? as if he had said, I have done thus and thus, I have preached the Traditions of men heretofore, and I have pleased men in persecuting the Church of God: but I doe not so still, neither will I. And he that can say the like with good conscience, I have sinned thus and thus heretofore, but now I doe not, neither will I sinne as I have done, is indeed the servant of God.

V. 11. Now I certifie you, brethren, that the Gospel which was preached by me, was not after man.

The meaning is this: That it may the better appeare, that I have justly accursed them which teach any other Gospell, and justly reproved you for receiving it; I give you to understand, that the Gospell which I preached was not after man, that is, not devised by man, or preached of me by mans authoritie, but it was from God, and preached by the authority of God. And this sense appeares by verse 10. and 12.

In these words is laid downe the reason of the conclusion, or the assumption of the principall argument, which was on this manner. If I be called to teach, and that immediately of God, and my doctrin be true, then ye ought not to have revolted from the Gospell which I preached: but I was called to teach immediately of God, and my doctrine is true. The first part of this assumption is here set downe, and handled to the end of the second chapter: and the conclusion (as we have heard) was set downe in the premises.

Hence two maine points of doctrine, that are of great consequent, may bee gathered. The first is this; It is a thing most necessary, that men should be assured and certified, that the doctrine of the Gospell, and the Scripture is not of man, but of God. This is the first thing which Paul stands upon in this Epistle. It may be demanded, how this assurance may bee obtained. I answer thus: For the setling of our consciences, that Scripture is the Word of God, there bee two testimonies. One is the Evidence of Gods Spirit, imprinted and expressed in the Scriptures: and this is an excellencie of the word of God above all words, and writings of men and Angels: and containes thirteene points. The first is, the puritie of the law of Moses, whereas the lawes of men have their imperfections. The second is, that the Scripture sets downe the true cause of all misery, namely sinne; and the perfect remedy, namely, Christs death. The third is, the antiquity of Scripture, in that it setteth downe an history from the beginning of the world. The fourth is, prophecies of things in sundry bookes of Scripture, which none could possibly fore-tell, but God. The fifth is, the confirmation of the doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles by miracles, that is, workes done above, and contrary to the strength of nature, which none can doe but God. The sixth is, the consent of all the Scriptures with themselves, whereas the writings of men are often at jarre with themselves. The seventh is, the confession of enemies, as namely, of heretickes, who in oppugning of Scriptures, alleage Scriptures, and thereby confesse the truth thereof. The eighth is, an unspeakable detestation that Satan and all wicked men beare to the doctrine of Scripture. The ninth is, the protection and preservation of it, from the beginning to this houre, by a speciall providence of God. The tenth is, the constant confession of Martyrs, that have shed their bloud for the Gospell of Christ. The eleventh is, that fearefull punishments and judgements have befallen them that have oppugned the word of God. The twelfth is, the holinesse of them that professe the Gospell. The last is, the effect and operation of the Word: for it is an instrument of God, in the right use whereof wee receive the testimony of the Spirit of our adoption, and are converted unto God. And yet nevertheless the word which converteth is contrary to the wicked nature of man.

The second testimony is, from the Prophets and Apostles, who were Ambassadours of God, extraordinarily to represent his authority unto his Church, and the pen-men of the holy Ghost, to set downe the true and proper word of God. And the Apostles above the rest, were eye-witnesses and eare-witnesses of the sayings and doings of Christ: and in that they were guided by the infallible assistance of the Spirit, both in preaching and writing, their testimony touching the things which they wrote, must needs bee authenticall. If it bee said, that counterfeit writings, [illegible] this name of the Apostles, as if they were in the degree of the Apostles, [illegible] that is, extraordinary [illegible] Barnabas [illegible] Paul [illegible] Apostles [illegible] this wonder, Apostles [illegible] the [illegible] and the rules of [illegible] Cyprus and [illegible] Greece [illegible] ploughs [illegible] Gospell [illegible] which they had [illegible] miracles. No world doubtlesse [illegible] doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles, which they had [illegible] degrees and [illegible] ordinary calling [illegible] they [illegible] was so, Luke 20. 4. The third is, [illegible] Teachers in these last dayes, after they have brought men to receive the Gospell, are to be ordained as other ordinary Ministers after the Lawes of Gods word. For they are not extraordinary in respect of their doctrine, which is the doctrine of the word, nor in respect of their office: in which regard they are Pastors and Teachers, and not Apostles or Evangelists. But their calling is extraordinary, in respect of the common and publike office of teaching, and in respect of the communication of divine gifts. These three rules, as cannons observed, we may easily perceive whether all that extraordinarily, which now and then is all fully verified in the first Preachers of the Gospell.

Thirdly, it is objected, that they which are lawfully called, are ordained by men before. Answere, have not the Apostles themselves added by the Apostles. I answer: Succession is three-fold: The first is, of persons and doctrine joyntly together: and this was in the primitive Church. The second is, of persons alone, and this may bee among Antichrists and heretickes. The third is, of doctrine alone.

And therefore Matthew placed the Apostles. And therein is difference. For this title must be ordained, that the power of the Keies, that is, of order and publication, be put by God, and annexed to the new Testament or doctrine. If in Turky, or Asmuria, or else-where, the Gospell should be suppressed by him, by the counsell and perswasion of private persons, they shall not need to send into Europe for authorized Ministers, but they have power to ordaine and send Ministers from within themselves, because God gives the mind, he gives the power also.

Vnobscured Succession of the first Preachers, their calling was altogether ordinary; neither were ordained of their predecessors. It is manifested, that their callings are corrupt. Item, it appeares, All actions Ecclesiasticall, that tend to building or loosing, appertaine properly to the person of Christ, and men are but Ministers, and instruments thereof: And therefore no call men to the ministery and dispensation of the Gospel, belongs to Christ, who alone giveth the power, the will, the deed. And the Church can doe no more but testifie, publish, and declare whom God calleth, by examination of parties for life and doctrine, by election, and by ordination. This is, (for substance) all that the Church can doe: and all this is allowed, and prescribed by the lawes of this Church and land. And therefore our callings for their substance are divine, whatsoeuer defects there be otherwise.

This assurance that our callings are of God is of great use. It makes the Minister to make a conscience of his duty: it is his comfort in trouble, Isa. 49. 2. 2 Corinth. 2. 15. And to the hearers it is a meanes of great reverence and obedience.

12. For neither received I it of man, neither was I taught it but by the Revelation of Iesus Christ.

The meaning is this: Paul here saith, he received not the Gospel of man: because he received not the office to teach & preach the Gospell from any meere man. For here he speakes of himselfe as hee was an Apostle: and then an Apostle properly is said to receive the Gospel, when he receives not onely to know and believe it, but also to preach it. And he addes further, that he was not taught it, that is, that hee learned the Gospell, not by the teaching of any man, as formerly hee learned the law at the feet of Gamaliel. The last words [but by the Revelation of Iesus Christ] carry this sense, but I learned and received it of Christ, who taught mee by revelation. Further, Revelation is two-fold: one ordinary, the other extraordinary. Ordinary is, when Christ teacheth men by the word preached, and by his Spirit. In this sense the holy Ghost is called the Spirit of Revelation, Eph. 1. 17. Extraordinary is without the word preached, and that foure wayes. First, by voice. Thus God taught Adam and the Patriarkes. The second, by dreames, when things revealed were represented vnto them in sleepe. The third is vision, when things to come are represented to the outward sense of man being awake. The fourth is rapture, when God ravisheth by inward motion and inspiration. Thus did God illuminate the Prophets, 2 Pet. 1. 21. When the scripture was penned, Paul was in a transitory, but extraordinary and rare manner ravished by the Spirit, and heard the voice, and saw him who by it answered. He was not in earthly or heavenly, but in a third manner. And that Paul both saw and heard him, it was by miracle: whereas Stephen in like manner saw Christ, he saw him not necessarily, but standing at the right hand of God in heaven: for otherwise the opening of the heavens had been a needlesse thing.

These words then are a confirmation of the former verse, on this manner: The authoritie whereby I preach, and the doctrine which I teach, I first received and learned it, not of man, but immediately of Christ: therefore the Gospel which I preach is not humane, but divine, and preached not by humane, but by divine authority.

In the scope and sense of the words, many points of doctrine are contained. The first, that Christ is the great Prophet and Doctor of the Church, Matth. 17. 6. Heare him: and 23. 8. One is your Doctor, namely, Christ. And hee is called the great Shepherd of the sheepe, Hebr. 13. 20. His office is in three things. The first is, to manifest and reveale the will of the Father, touching the redemption of mankind, Iohn. 1. 18. and 5. 36. This hee hath done from the beginning of the world, (the Father never speaking and appearing immediately, but in the Baptisme and transfiguration of Christ) and this hee doth to Paul in this place. The second is, to institute the ministery of the word, and to call and send Ministers. As my Father sent me, so I send you, Iohn. 20. 21. Hee it is that gives some to be Pastors, some to be Teachers, Ephes. 4. 11. And thus appointes Paul to be an Apostle. The third is, to teach the heart within, by illuminating the mind, and by working a faith of the doctrine which is taught. Hee openeth the understanding of his Disciples, that they may understand the Scriptures, Luke 24. 45. Thus here hee inlightneth and teacheth Paul.

Furthermore, it must be observed, that this office of teaching is inseparably annexed to the person of Christ, and is by him accordingly executed even after his ascension, as appeares in the conversion of Paul. And therefore Isay saith, They shall bee all taught of God, Isay 54. 13. As for the Ministers of the Gospell, they in teaching are no more but instruments of Christ to utter and pronounce the word to the eare: this is all they can doe. Therefore Paul saith, He that plants or waters, is not any thing, but God that giveth the increase.

The

The teacher then properly in the Ministery of the new Testament to the very end of the world, is Christ himselfe. This must teach us reverence in hearing Gods word, and care with diligence in keeping of it, Hebr. 2. 1, 2, 3. &c. Secondly, this teacheth us, that they which embrace not the Gospell among us, are contemners of Christ, and shall endure eternall condemnation, Iohn 3. 18. and Hebr. 12. 25. Thirdly, if we want understanding, wee must pray to Christ for it; and because we have so excellent a teacher, wee must pray unto him that he would give unto us hearing eares, that is, hearts tractable, and obedient to his word, that wee may bee fit disciples for so worthy a Master.

The second is, that there bee two wayes whereby Christ teacheth those that are to bee teachers. One is immediate revelation; the other is ordinarie instruction in schooles by the meanes and ministery of man. The like saith Amos, I was neither Prophet, nor son of a Prophet, but the Lord sent me to prophesie to Israel, Amos 7. 14.

The third point is, that they which are to bee teachers, must first bee taught; and they must teach that which they have first learned themselves. 2 Tim. 3. 14. Abide in the things which thou hast learned. Christ taught that which hee heard of the Father; the Apostles that which they heard of Christ; ordinarie Ministers that which they learned of the Apostles. This is the right Tradition: And if it bee observed without addition or detraction, the Gospel shall remaine in his integrity. Here our Ancestors are greatly to bee blamed, who have not contented themselves with that which they have learned of the Apostles, but have delivered things of their owne which they were never taught. Hence sprang unwritten Traditions, and the corruption of religion. Againe, such are here to bee blamed that take upon them to bee teachers of the Gospell, and were never taught by revelation or by any ordinary way. Thirdly, private persons are much more to be blamed, that broach and deliver such doctrines and opinions, as they themselves never learned by any ministery. For teachers themselves must first learne, and then teach.

The fourth point is, that they which are to bee teachers are first to bee taught, and that by men, where revelation is wanting. This kinde of teaching is the foundation of the schoole of the Prophets, and it hath beene from the beginning. The Patriarkes till Moses were Prophets in their families, and they taught not onely their families in generall, but also their first borne, that they might succeed as Prophets after them. There were 48. cities of the Levites dispersed thorow all the tribes, where not onely the people were taught, but also schooles erected that they might be taught, which were to be Priests and Levites. One citie among the rest is called Cireath sepher, Iosu. 15. 15. that is, the city of bookes. or as wee say, the Universitie. Samuel a young man was sent to the Tabernacle in Shilo, to bee taught, and trained up of Eli the Priest. Samuel, when hee was Judge of Israel, erected Colleges of Prophets, and ruled them himselfe, 1 Samuel 10. In the decaied estate of the tentribes, Elias and Elizeus set up schooles of the Prophets in Bethel, Carmel, &c. and the young students were called the sonnes of the Prophets. 2 King. 2. 3. Christ himselfe (beside the sermons made to the people) trained up and taught himselfe his twelve Apostles, and his 70. Disciples. Paul commands Timothy to teach that which he had learned, to such as shall be fit to teach others, 2 Tim. 2. 2. Furthermore, this teaching is of great use. For it serves to maintaine the true interpretation of Scripture, purity of doctrine: and it is a meanes to continue the Ministery to the end of the world. The meanest art or trade that is, is not learned without great teaching: then much more teaching is required in divinitie, which is the art of all arts. The true interpretation of Scripture, and the right cutting of the word, is a matter of great difficultie, and a matter (whatsoever men thinke) of the greatest learning in the world. Therefore it is necessarie, that teachers should first bee taught, and learn aright the Gospel of Christ. Eleven hundred yeares after Christ, men began to lay aside Moses, and the Prophets, and the writings of the new Testament, and to expound the writings of men, as the Sentences of Peter Lumbard. Hence ignorance, superstition, and idolatry came head-long into the world. Seeing then the teaching of them that are to bee teachers, is of such antiquity and use, all men are to bee exhorted, to put to their helping hands, that this thing may goe forward. Princes are to maintaine it, by their bountifulnesse and authority, as they have done, and doe still: and that which they doe, they must doe it more. Parents must dedicate the fittest of their children to the service of God, in the ministery, and not to use it in the last place for a shift, as they doe. For commonly, the eldest must bee the heire, the next the lawyer, the youngest the divine. Students must love and affect this calling above all other, 1 Cor. 14. 1. Lastly, all men must make prayer, that God would prosper and blesse all Schooles of learning where this kinde of teaching is in use.

Here againe it appeares that Christ is God, and more than a meere man, because hee is opposed to man: and that Paul received authority, and the keies of the kingdome of heaven, immediately of Christ, as well as Peter.

13. For ye have heard of my conversation, in time past, how that I persecuted the Church of God extremely, and wasted it.

14. And profited in the Iewish religion, above many of my companions of mine owne nation, and was much more zealous of the Traditions of my fathers.

In the former verse the Apostle set downe, that he learned the Gospel, not of man, but of Iesus Christ immediately. This in the next place hee goes about to prove at large. His reason is framed thus: If I learned the Gospell of any man, I learned it either before, or after my conversion: but I learned it neither before, nor after my conversion, of any man. The first part of his reason is here confirmed thus: Before my calling and conversion, I professed Judaisme, and I lived accordingly, persecuting the Church, and suppressing the Gospel of Christ, and profiting in my religion above many others: therefore I was not then fit to heare and learne the Gospell of Christ of any man. This argument he further confirmes by the testimony of the Galatians thus: That this was my conversation in Judaisme, ye are witnesses: for yee have heretofore heard as much.

In the example of Paul, two points are generally to bee considered. The first, that the distinction of man and man, ariseth not of the will or naturall disposition of man, but of the grace and mercy of God. For Paul an Elect vessell for nature and disposition, before his conversion, is as wicked as an other. And hee saith, Rom.9.16. that the difference betweene man and man before God is not in him that willeth, nor in him that runneth, but in him that sheweth mercy. Therefore it is a Pelagian errour, to thinke that men, doing that which they can, doe by nature occasion God to give them supernaturall grace. The second point is, that Paul here makes an open and ingenuous confession of his wicked life past. And hence I gather, that this Apostle, and consequently the rest, writ the Scriptures of the new Testament by the instinct of Gods Spirit, and not by humane policie, which (no doubt) would have moved them to have covered and concealed their owne faults, and not to have blazed their owne shame to the world. And therefore the bookes of Scripture are not bookes of policy (as Atheists suppose) to keepe men in awe, but they are the very word of God. Againe, the end of this plaine confession is, that Paul might thereby confirme and justifie his calling to the office of an Apostle. This serves to give a checke to such persons as use to sit and rehearse their wicked lives past, in boasting and rejoycing manner.

In Pauls example there bee two things to bee considered; his profession before his calling, and conversation. His profession was Judaisme: and this hindered him from embracing the Gospell. It may here bee demanded, what Judaisme, or the Jewish religion is? Answer. In the dayes of Christ and the Apostles, there were three speciall sects among the Iewes, Essens, Sadducies, and Pharises. And the Pharises were the principall, and their doctrine was commonly imbraced of the Iews. And therefore by Judaisme (as I take it) Pharisaisme is here meant. Now the principall doctrines of the Pharises were these: I. They held, that there was one God, and that this God was the Father, without any distinction of persons: for when Christ mentioned the distinction of the Father and the Sonne, they would not acknowledge it, Ioh.8.19.11. They acknowledged in the Messias but one nature: for when it was asked them, how Christ being the sonne of David, should nevertheless be his Lord; they could not answer, Matth.22. III. They held, that the kingdome of the Messias was an earthly kingdome: and with this opinion the Disciples of Christ were tainted. IV. They held, that the keeping of the morall law stood in externall obedience, as appeares by the speeches of Christ, reforming their errours, Matthew 5,6,7. chapters. V. They maintained a naturall freedome of the will, in the observing of the law, Luke 18. Lord I thank thee (saith the Pharisie) I do thus and thus. VI. They held a justification by the workes of the law without the obedience of the Messias, Romanes 9.3. VII. Beside the written word and law of Moses, they had many unwritten traditions, which they observed precisely, and the observation of them was accounted the worship of God, Matth. 15.3.9. Other points they held, but these are the principall. It may further bee demanded, how the Jewes could hold such heretical and damnable opinions, and yet bee the people of God? Answer. They had for their parts forsaken God: but God had not forsaken them, because the Temple was yet standing, and the sacrifices with the outward worship yet remained among them. In this regard, they were still a reputed people of God. Againe, they are called a people of God, not of the bigger, but of the better part: and the better part was a small remnant of them that truly feared God, and beleeved in the Messias. Of which sort, were Ioseph, Mary, Zacharie, Elizabeth, Simeon, Anna, Ioseph of Arimathea, and Nicodemus. Againe, it may bee demanded, how the Jewes, being such a people of God, should fall away to so damnable a religion? Answer. They neither loved, nor obeyed the doctrine of Moses and the Prophets: and therefore God in judgement left them to the blindnesse of their owne minds, and the hardnesse of their own hearts, Isai.6. The like may bee our case. If we love and obey not the Gospell, more than we have done, our religion may end in ignorance, superstition, and prophanenesse, as theirs hath done.

The second thing in Pauls example is his conversation, whereby hee lived and conversed according to his religion. The like should bee in us. For the profession of the faith and godly conversation are to goe together, Phil.1.27. Faith in the heart is a light and and works are the shining of this light, Mat. 5.16. Christ hath redeemed them that beleeve from their vaine conversation, 1 Pet.1.18. Here many of us doe amisse, disfiguring faith and good life. And this fault is the greater, because it is an occasion to our adversaries to mislike and reject our religion.

Pauls conversation hath two parts, his persecution of the Church, and his profiting in his religion.

Persecution properly is the afflicting of the people of God for their faith and religion. In this we are not to follow Paul, but to do the contrarie, that is, by all meanes to seeke the good of the Church. After Gods glory immediately, we are to seeke the comming and advancement of the kingdome of God. Now this kingdome is a certaine estate and condition of men, whereby they stand subject to the word and spirit of God. And this subjection to God and Christ, is the propertie of them that be members of the Church of God. All, both rich and poore, conferred something (according to their abilitie) to the building of the Temple, which figured the Church of God. The fault of our times is, that wee build our selves and our worldly estates, and little respect the common good of the Church.

In the persecution of the Church by Paul, two points are to be considered, the manner, and measure or accomplishment. The manner is, that hee persecuted the Church extremely or above measure. That which Paul did in his religion, we must doe in ours. The good things that we are to doe, we must doe them with all our might. Our dutie is to keepe our hearts in the feare of God, and we must do it with diligence, Prov.4.24. It is our dutie to seeke Gods kingdome, and we must take it with violence. To enter into life is our dutie, and we must strive to enter. To pray is our dutie, and we must wrastle in prayer, Rom.15.30. Iosias turnes to God with all his heart. The law requires, that we should love God with all the powers of body and soule, and with all the strength of all the powers. In earthly things we must moderate our thoughts and cares, but spirituall duties must be performed with all our might.

Eccl.9.10.

The accomplishment of persecution is, that Paul wasted the Church, and made havocke of it. Here I consider 2. points, what is wasted? and who is the waster? For the first, it is the Church. Here 2. questions may be demanded: the first is, how the Church can be wasted? Answ. In respect of the inward estate thereof, which stands in election, faith, justification, glorification, it cannot be wasted. In respect of her outward estate it may be wasted, that is in respect of mens bodies, and in regard of the publike assemblies, and the exercises of religion. The second question is, why God suffers his enemies to waste his owne Church. Answ. Judgement begins in Gods house, and his judgements sometime are very sharpe, whether they be inflicted for triall or correction of sinnes past, or for the preventing of sinnes to come. As in the body sometime there is no hope of life, except armes and legges he cut off: even so it is in the Church. Hence it appeares, that there shall be a last judgement, and that there is a life everlasting in heaven: because the wicked man flourisheth in this world, and the godly are often oppressed.

The waster of the Church is Paul. By whom we learne that sin, where it takes place, gives a man no rest till it hath brought him to a height of wickednesse. Hatred having entred into Cains heart, leaves him not, till it have caused him to imbrue his hands in his brothers blood. Covetousnesse makes Iudas at length to betray his master, and hang himselfe. Blind zeale makes Paul not only to persecute, but also to waste the Church. Therfore it is good to avoid the first beginnings, yea the very occasion of sinne.

The second part and point in Pauls conversation is, that hee profits in his religion. Thus should we profit in the Gospel of Christ. It is Gods commandement, Bee ye perfect as your heavenly father is perfect: that is, endevour to come to perfection. All the faith we have or can obtaine, is little enough in the time of temptation. Iob that said in his affliction, though the Lord kill me I will still trust in him, saith also, that God wrote bitter things against him, and made him to possesse the sinnes of his youth. It is a token that a man is dead in his sinnes, when he doth not grow or increase in good things, 1 Pet. 2.2. In this regard great is the fault of our daies, for many are wearie of the Gospell, many stand at a stay without profiting; many goe backward. The cause is this. Commonly men live as it were without the law: and thinke it sufficient if they doe not grosselly offend: not considering that the law of God is law to our thoughts and affections, and all the circumstances of our actions. That we may hereafter make good proceedings in our religion, we must remember three caveats. One, that we must endevour to see and feele in our selves the smallnesse of our faith, repentance, feare of God, &c. and the great masse of corruption that is in us. Thus with the begger we shall bee alwaies peecing, and mending our garment. The second, that as travellers, we must forget things past, and goe on to doe more good, Phil.3.14. The third, that we must set before us the crowne of eternall glory, and seeke to apprehend it, 1 Tim. 6. vers. 11. thus did Moses, Hebrew. 11.

Iob.13.15. v.26.

In Pauls profiting two things must be considered, the measure, and the thing in which he profited. The measure, in that he profited above many others. Hence wee learne, that in matters of religion there should be an holy emulation and contention among us: and our fault is, that wee contend who shall have the most most riches and honour, or goe in the finest apparell, and strive not to goe one beyond another in good things. Againe, Pauls modesty must here be observed. He doth not say, that he profited more than all; but more than many: and he saith not more than his superiours, but more than his equals for time: and he saith not more than all the world, but more than they of his owne nation. This modesty of his must be learned of us, for it is the ornament of our faith; and therefore must be joyned with our faith.

The matter or the thing in which Paul profited is, that he was abundantly zealous for the traditions of the fathers. Here I consider three points. I. What zeale is? Ans. It is a certain fervencie of spirit, arising of a mixture of love and anger, causing men earnestly to maintaine the worship of God, and all things pertaining thereto, and moving them to griefe and anger, when God is any way dishonoured. II. For what is Paul zealous? Answ. For the outward observation of the law, and withall for Pharisaicall unwritten Traditions: which therefore he cals the Traditions of his fathers. III. What is the fault of his zeale? (for hee condemnes it in himselfe.) Answer. He had the zeale of God, but not according to knowledge. For his zeale was against the word, in that it tended to maintaine unwritten Traditions, and justification by the workes of the law, out of Christ, Rom. 10. 2.

Hence we learne sundry things. (For that which Paul did in his religion, are we to doe in the profession of the Gospel.) First, we are to addict and set our selves earnestly to maintaine the truth, and the practice of the Gospel. Christ was even consumed with the zeale of Gods house, Iohn 2. The Angell of the Church of Laodicea is blamed, because he is neither hot nor cold, Rev. 3. He is accursed of God, that doth the worke of God negligently, Ier. 48. Secondly, we are to be angry in our selves, and grieved when God is dishonoured, and his word disobeyed. When the Israelites worshipped the golden calfe, Moses in holy anger, burst the tables of stone. David wept, and Paul was humbled for the sins of other men, Psal. 119. 136. 2 Cor. 12. 21. Thirdly, we are here taught, not to give libertie to the best of our naturall affections, as to zeale; but to mortifie them, and to rule them by the word, Numb. 15. 39. otherwise they will cause us to runne out of order like wilde beasts, as here we see in Paul. Lastly, let it be observed, that Paul here condemnes zeale, for the maintenance of unwritten Traditions. And let the Papists consider.

15. But when it pleased God (which had separated me from my mothers wombe, and called me by his grace)

16. To reveale his son in me (or to me) that I should preach him among the Gentiles, immediately I communicated not with flesh and blood.

17. Neither came I to Hierusalem, to them which were Apostles before me, but I went into Arabia, and turned againe to Damascus.

Paul before proved, that he learned not the Gospell of any men before his conversion: here he further proves, that he learned it of no man after his conversion. And the substance of his reason is this, because immediately upon his conversion, he conferred with no man; but went and preached in Arabia and Damascus.

In the words I consider foure things. First, the causes of Pauls conversion. And here he sets down three degrees of causes, depending one upon another. The first is, the good pleasure of God, whereby he doth whatsoever he will in heaven and earth, in these words [when it pleased.] The second is, his separation from the wombe; which is an act of Gods counsell, whereby he sets men apart to be members of Christ, and to be his servants, in this or that office. This separation is said to be from the wombe; not because it began then, for it was appointed by God before all times, even from eternitie, as all his counsels are. But the holy Ghost hereby signifies, that all our goodnesse, and all our dexteritie to this or that office, is meerly from God; because we are sanctified, dedicated, and set apart in the counsell of God, from all eternitie, and therefore from the wombe, or from our first conception and beginning. The third cause is, vocation by grace; the accomplishment of both the former, in the time which God hath appointed. The second thing is, the manner or forme of Pauls vocation, in these words [to reveale his sonne to me.] The third is, the end of his vocation, to preach Christ among the Gentiles. The last, is his obedience to the calling of God, in the 16. and 17. verses.

To begin with the efficient causes of Pauls conversion: here we see the order and dependance of causes, in the conversion and salvation of every sinner. The beginning of our salvation is in the good pleasure of God: then followes separation, or election to eternall life: then vocation by the word and spirit: then obedience to the calling of God, and after obedience, everlasting life. This order Paul here sets down, and the consideration of it is of great use. Hence it appeares to bee a doctrine erroneous, which begins our salvation in the prevision of mans faith & good workes. For in Pauls order, workes have the last place. And it must be Gods pleasure, that man shall doe a good worke, before he can do it. And if separation to eternall life should be according to faith or workes, then wee should make separation of our selves, as well as God. And vocation is not for workes, but that we might doe good workes, Eph. 1. 4. Secondly, by this order it appeares, that the salvation of them that beleeve, is more sure than the whole frame of heaven and earth: because it is founded in the vocation of God, which is without repentance, in the counsell of or separation, and in the pleasure of God. Thirdly, by observing well this order, we may attaine to the assurance of our election. For if thou hast beene called, and hast in truth answered to the calling of God by obedience, thou maist assure thy selfe of thy separation from the wombe to everlasting life, because this order is (as it were) a golden chaine, in which all the linkes are inseparably united. Lastly, the consideration of this order serves to mortifie the pride and arrogancie of our hearts, in that it ascribes all to God, and nothing to man, in the cause of salvation. Read Ezech. 16. 63.

Againe, by the consideration of these three causes, we gather that God hath determined what he will doe with every man, and that he hath in his eternall counsell assigned every man his office and condition of life. For there is in God a pleasure whereby he may do with every man what he will. And by this eternall counsell, he separates every man from the very wombe to one calling or other; and accordingly hee cals them in time by giving gifts, and will to doe that, for which they were appointed. And this I understand of all lawfull callings in the family, church, or commonwealth. Thus Christ was called from the wombe, and set apart to bee a Mediator, Isa. 47. 1. and Ioh. 6. 27. Ieremy to be a Prophet, Ierem. 1. 5. Christ is said to give Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Eph. 4. 11. God sent Ioseph into Egypt to be the governour thereof, and a releever of Iacobs family, Gen. 45. In this regard the Medes and Persians are said to be the sanctified ones of God, Isa. 13. 3. and the men of his counsell, Isa. 46. 11.

The use. Hence we are all taught, to walke in our callings with diligence and good conscience. Because they are assigned us of God. Hence wee are taught to yeeld obedience to our rulers and teachers, because they that are our rulers and teachers, were separated from the wombe to be so, and that by God himselfe without the will of man. Hence we may gather assurance of Gods protection and assistance in our callings: for in that he hath appointed us our callings, he will also defend us in them, 2 Cor. 3. 46. Isa. 49. 2. Hence we may learne patience and contentation in all the miseries and troubles of our callings: for in what calling soever thou art, thou wast ordained to it by God from thy mothers wombe. Think on this. Hence we learne thankfulnesse to God, because our callings, gifts, and the execution of our callings, is wholly of God: and this Paul signifies, when he saith, that our separation to our offices and callings, was from our first conception. Hence we learne to depend on Gods providence for the time to come. For if he provided our callings when wee were not, hee will much more aid and blesse us in them now while we have a being. Read Psal. 22. 8, 9. Poore parents that cannot leave lands and livings to their children after their decease, let them labour diligently in this; that their children be from their mothers wombe separated to some good office and condition of life by the will of God: and a good office or calling is better than land and living.

Thirdly, it appeares hence, that the time of all events is determined in the counsell of God: For God determines with himselfe the time in which he will call and convert Paul. By this we are taught in our prayers, not to limit God to any time for the accomplishment of our requests: for the disposition of times is his, and this is to be left to his wisdome. Againe, in our afflictions and temptations, we must not make haste for helpe and deliverance before the time, but wait the leisure of God, who hath decreed the time of deliverance. He that beleeveth maketh not haste, Isa. 28. 16. and Habakkuk must wait, because the vision is for a time appointed, Hab. 2. 3. Davids eyes and strength failed in waiting on God, Psal. 69. 3. Daniel waites on God 70. yeares, and then prayes for deliverance out of captivitie, the time being expired. This serves to discover the wickednesse of them that, being in any kinde of miserie, cannot stay the leisure of God till he deliver them by good meanes, but they will have present remedie, though it be from the devill: and if helpe cannot be had when they desire, they presently make away themselves.

The second point is, the forme of the calling, or conversion of Paul, in these words, to reveale his Sonne in me: that is, to teach me the doctrine of the redemption of mankinde by his Sonne Jesus Christ. Here I consider, to whom revelation is made, and how.

For the first, revelation of the Son is made to cruell and persecuting Paul, a desperate sinner. Hence every man can gather, that God hath mercy for great and notorious offenders, as for Paul, and such like: and the collection is good. For God is much in sparing, Isa. 55. 7. And yet here it must be remembred, that all desperate offenders shall not finde mercy: unlesse they be great in their repentance, as God is great in mercy. For Gods mercy hath a double effect in us, one is remission of sinne by the imputation of the merit of Christ: the other, the mortification of originall sinne, by his efficacie. And these two be inseparable, as we see in Paul, on whom God shewed great mercy, whose repentance also was notable. As the woman, Luk. 7. had many sins forgiven her, for she loved much, v. 47. By this we see the great and common abuse of the mercy of God. Men every where presume upon the greatnesse of Gods mercy, and they make Christ a packhorse, lading him with their burdens, and there is little or no amendment of life.

The manner that God used in revealing the Sonne to Paul, stands in two things: Preparation and Instruction.

Preparation is a worke of God, whereby he humbled Paul, subdued the pride, and stubbornesse bar-rednesse of his heart, and so is become vnable, and vnreachable. That is meant, when it is said, that the Lord was parted by lightning from heaven, and fell to the earth, and made him blind, and spake him voice reproving him: Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? The inward humiliation was in a feare and horrour, for his sinne. The inward illumination was in a light, and knowledge of Christ. The first was an height of wickednesse, to be persecuting the Church he made warre against God himselfe. Secondly, To make manifest the sonne in him, the meaning of them commandements, and the mercifulnesse of his will, was in Saul the Church-law killed him that was slaine in his owne opinion, when he was a Pharisie.

The instrument, whereby God wrought the change in Paul, he saith was the Gospell, called Gods, the meanes by which Paul is become a member of the Sonne of God. And this he did, first, by propounding vnto him the commandement of the Gospel, which is to repent and beleeve in Christ. Secondly, by offering to him the promise of remission of sinnes, and life everlasting, when he beleeved. The second part of instruction, is a reall and lively teaching, when God makes it to be heard to answer the calling according to that, Psal. 27. 8. When thou saidst, seeke ye my face, mine heart answered, thy face Lord will I seeke. And in Zach. 13. 9. It shall say, thou art my people, and they shall say, the Lord is my God. This is a spirituall Eccho that is made in the heart, by the sound of Gods word, and sweet newes in the world, and the heart of man which be as rockes and stones, makes answer. And this worke of God, that makes man meete to the calling of God, is in Scripture a thing of divine teaching: thus the Father is said to teach the Sonne by drawing, Ioh. 6. 44. And God is said to teach us his wayes, when he guides us by his spirit in the land of righteousnesse, Psal. 143. That this reall and heavenly kind of teaching may take place, God by grace puts a kind of softnesse into the heart, whereby it is made subject and obedient to the word. And it hath two parts. One is an acknowledgement by faith, that the Sonne is our redeemer. The second is regeneration, which is the putting off the old man, and the putting on of the new: which to doe by the vertue of Christ, is to learne Christ, Eph. 4. 20. 23. Thus then God reveales the Sonne to Paul, by preparing him, and making him teachable, by propounding the doctrine of salvation to him, and by causing him inwardly to beleeve it, and so obey it. And thus we see the manner of the calling, and conversion of Paul.

For the more clearing of this doctrine, five questions are to be answered. The first is, what was the preventing grace in the conversion of Paul? Answ. Schoolemen and Papists generally teach, that it was the inspiration of good motions and desires, into the heart of man. But in this faith which the regenerate do learne is vncapable of any good desire or motion till he be regenerate. Therefore I thinke that the preventing grace in Pauls conversion, is the grace of regeneration and sanctification, the infusion of a new active and mortified habit. For Christ meeteth with a man, and translateth him into the kingdome of his deare Sonne, Col. 1. 13. and quickneth him, and raiseth him from the dead, Eph. 2. 1. and createth him anew vnto good workes, Eph. 2. 10. and maketh him a new creature, 2 Cor. 5. 17. and giveth him a new heart, and a new spirit, Ezek. 36. 26. and writeth his lawes in his heart, Heb. 8. 10. and maketh him willing in the day of his power, Psal. 110. 3. and worketh in him both the will and the deed, Phil. 2. 13. Now this is the preventing grace in the calling of Paul, and in the calling of every man, that is, the infusion of a new habit of grace, and the creating of a new heart, and a new spirit, and the writing of the lawes of God in the heart, and the making of the will willing, and the worke working. For before any inspiration of heavenly motions can take place, the heart must be changed, and the will must be made willing. For as long as the heart is vnchanged, and the will vnwilling, all motions and desires of good things are vaine, and to no purpose. Therefore the preventing grace in the calling of Paul, was the infusion of a new habit of grace, and the creating of a new heart, and the making of the will willing, and the worke working.

The second Question is, whether the will of Paul were an agent, or cause in the effecting of his first conversion? Answ. No. Scripture makes two sorts of conversion: one Passive, when man is converted by God: in this man is but a subject to receive the impression of grace, and no agent at all. For in the creating, fitting, or imparting of righteousnesse and holinesse in the heart, will can doe nothing. The second conversion is Active, whereby man being converted by God, doth further turne and convert himselfe to God, in all his obedience, works, and deeds. This conversion is not onely of grace, nor onely of will, but partly of grace, and partly of will: yet so as grace is the principall agent, and will but the instrument of grace. For, being first turned by grace, we then can move and turne our selves. And thus there is a cooperation of mans will with Gods grace. And Austen said truly, He that made thee without thee, doth not save thee without thee.

The third question is, whether God did offer any violence to Pauls minde and will, in his conversion? Answ. There is a double violence or coaction. One, which doth abolish all consent of will, and this he did not. The other drawes out a consent from the will, by causing it of an unwilling will, to become willing. This coaction or violence God offered to Paul: and in this sort they which come to Christ, are said to be drawne, Ioh. 6. 45.

The fourth question is, wherein stands the efficacy of the preventing grace, whereby Paul was effectually converted? Answ. The Councell of Trent, and sundrie Papists incline to this opinion, to thinke that it stands in the event, in that the will of man applies it selfe to the grace which God offereth. But then the efficacy of grace must be from mans will: and then man hath something whereof to boast, and he is to thanke himselfe for the grace of God. Other Papists, place the efficacy of grace in the congruitie or aptnesse of motions or heavenly perswasions, proiected to the mind of man that is to be converted. But this opinion also is devoid of truth. For there is no no efficacie in any motions or perswasions, till there be a change, and new creation of the will. The true answer is this: Outward meanes are effectuall, because they are joyned with the inward operation of the Spirit. Inward grace is effectuall, because God addes to the first grace, the second grace. For having given the power to beleeve and repent, he gives also the will and the deed: and then faith and repentance must needs follow. And herein stands the efficacie of the first grace that God addes unto it, and worketh the will and the deed, Phil. 2. 13.

The last question is, whether it was in the power of Pauls will, to resist the calling, or the grace of God? Ans. The will for his condition is apt to resist grace: nevertheless, if we consider the efficacie of Gods grace, and the will of God, he could not resist the calling of God. Every one that hath heard and learned of the Father, comes to Christ, Iohn 6. 45. Gods will determines and limits the will of man: and mans will is an instrument to effect the will of God. It may be here demanded, how the efficacie of grace may stand with the liberty of mans will, if it have not libertie to accept or refuse the grace of God? Answ. Libertie and freedome of will in God is perfect libertie: now God cannot will either good or evill, but only that which is good. And mans will, the neerer it comes to this will of God, the greater libertie hath it. Therefore to will that only which is good, is the freely without compulsion, is true libertie; to be able to will that which is evill, and to resist the calling of God, is not libertie, but impotencie. And he that can onely will that which is good, doth more freely will good, and hath more liberty, than he that can will either good or evill.

The use. Ministers of the Gospell must learne Christ as Paul learned him. They may not content themselves with that teaching which they finde in schooles, but they must proceed further to a reall learning of Christ: and that is, to beleeve in the Sonne of God, to die to their sinnes by the vertue of his death, and to live to God by the vertue of his life. This is a reall and lively learning of Christ. They that must convert others, it is meet they should bee effectually converted. Iohn must first eat the booke, and then prophesie, Rev. 10. 9. And they that would be first Ministers of the Gospell, must first themselves eat the booke of God. And this booke is indeed eaten, when they are not onely in their minds inlightned, but their hearts are mortified and brought in subjection to the word of Christ. Unlesse Christ be thus learned spiritually and really, divines shal speake of the word of God, as men speake of riddles, and as Priests in former time said their mattens, when they hardly knew what they said. Againe, students in every facultie are with Paul to learne Christ, and that as he learned him. Such persons desire and love good learning: now this is the best learning of all, to learne to know and to acknowledge Christ. The knowledge of Christ crucified is Pauls learning. The knowledge of the remission of our sinnes is the learning of David that great Prophet. For whereas he gives to this 32 Psalme, The understanding of David, I ally it rather in this reall manner with Paul to be the same. For here is an example to all that shall beleeve in him to life everlasting, 1 Tim. 1. 16. Paul bids us to hope the good things which we have seene in him, Phil. 3. 17. Vse two.

The third point is the end of Pauls conversion in these words: That he might preach him among the Gentiles. Here I confide. What he must preach, namely the Son Christ: and to whom? namely, among the nations. Againe, of the preaching of Christ, I consider two things: the first is, why Christ must be preached rather than Moses? Answer, there be two causes. One is, because Christ is the substance or subject matter of the whole Bible. Put the summe of the Scriptures may be thus gathered together: The Sonne of God made man, and working our redemption, is the Saviour of mankinde: but Jesus the Son of Marie is the Son of God made man, working our redemption: therefore Jesus the Son of Marie is the Saviour of mankinde. The major is the summe of the old Testament: the minor is the summe of the new: and the conclusion is the scope of both. The second cause is: The law is the Ministerie of death: and the Gospel (which is the doctrine of salvation by the Sonne) is the instrument of God to begin and to confirme all graces of God in us, that are necessarie to our salvation. Therefore the doctrine principally to be preached is the Gospell, and not the law.

Secondly, it may be demanded, what it is to preach Christ? Answer: it is a great worke, and it containes foure ministeriall actions. The first, generally to teach the doctrine of the incarnation of Christ, and of his three offices, his kingly office, his prophetical office, and his priesthood with the execution thereof. The second, to teach that faith is an instrument ordained of God to apprehend and to apply Christ with his benefits. The third is to certifie and to reveale to every hearer, that it is the will of God to save him by Christ in particular, so bee it hee will receive Christ. For when the Gospell is preached, God thereby signifies unto us, that his will is to give us life everlasting, 1 Ioh. 5. 11. The last is to certifie and to reveale to every particular hearer, that he is to apply Christ with his benefits to himselfe in particular, and that effectually by his faith, that a change and conversion may follow both in heart and life, 1 Iohn 3. 23. And thus when these things are rightly performed, Christ is preached. Hence it appeares that to learne Christ, is not onely to know him generally, but also effectually to apply him to our selves by our faith, that there may be a change and and renovation of the whole man. They which learne Christ, must thus learne him, else can they not be saved.

The second point, that Paul must preach to the Gentiles. There be two causes of it: one, that the prophecies of the calling of the Gentiles might be fulfilled, Psal. 2. and 110. Isai. 2. The second, because at the death of Christ, the division which was betweene the Jewes and Gentiles was quite abolished, Eph. 2. 13. Here I observe the difference betweene Apostles and ordinary Ministers. Their charge is a sect and particular congregation; whereas the charge of an Apostle is the whole world.

The fourth and last point, is the obedience of Paul to the calling of God, in that he went and preached the Gospell. Here a question may be demanded, whether Paul performed his obedience by vertue of the grace which he had formerly received, without the helpe of new and speciall grace, or no? Answ. No: His obedience proceeds from the first grace, helped or excited by speciall grace. In the regenerate that have power to doe good, God workes the will and the deed in every good, Phil. 2. 13. And it is a certaine truth: we doe not that which we are able to do, unlesse God makes us doe it, as he made us able to doe it. Therefore to the doing of every new act there is new and speciall grace required.

In Pauls obedience I consider three points. When he obeyed? Immediately. How? Without deliberation or consultation. Where? In Arabia and Damascus.

For the first, in that he obeyed God in going to preach immediately, we learne how we are to answer and obey the calling of God, that cals to amendment and newnesse of life, namely, in all haste, without deferring of time. Heb. 3. 8. To day if ye will heare his voice, harden not your hearts: and v. 13. exhort one another while it is called to day. Psal. 119. 60 I made haste & did not delay to keep thy comandements. And there be good reasons why we should no longer defer our conversion to God. The end of our life is uncertaine: and looke as death leaves us, so shall the last judgement finde us. Secondly, when we delay our daily repentance, we adde sin to sin, and so treasure up wrath against the day of wrath, Rom. 2. Thirdly, when we deferre to obey and turne to God, we grow to perfection in sin: and sin being perfected brings forth death, Iam. 1. 14. Lastly, late repentance is seldome or never true repentance. For when men are dying, their sins forsake them, and they doe not commonly forsake their sins. God hath called us in England more than 40. yeares together, and yet many of us have not listened to the call of God, but deferred to obey: let us now presently amend and turne to God, lest if we still deferre the time of our repentance, Gods judgements come forth in haste upon us.

The manner of his obedience is, that Paul did not communicate with men, that is, conferre and consult with them touching his doctrine and calling. And this he amplifies by a comparison, thus: He did not consult with any man, no not the Apostles of Hierusalem. And he addes a reason of his doing, because they were but flesh and bloud, in respect of God: and indeed it is unmeet to consult with men, touching the matters of God.

Hence I gather, that Gods word, whether preached or written, doth not depend on the authority of any man, no not on the authority of the Apostles themselves; it is sufficient to authorize it selfe. Christ receives not the testimony of man, Ioh. 5. 34. And it is an errour, to thinke that the Church doth authorize the word and religion in the consciences of men. For the Church it selfe is founded on the word. The Church cannot consist without faith, nor faith without the word.

Secondly, hence I gather, that there is no consultation, or deliberation to be used at any time, touching the holding or not holding of our religion. Hee that will follow Christ, may not put his hand to the plough, and then looke backe againe to his friends, to see what they will say, Luk. 9 61. He that would be wise, must deny his owne wisdome, and become a foole, 1 Cor. 3. 18. The three children would not consult touching the worshipping of the Image, but said, Be it knowne to thee, O king, that we will not worship thy gods, Dan. 3. When the Judge gave Cyprian the Martyr leave to deliberate a while, whether he would deny his religion, he answered, that in divine matters deliberation is not to be used. By this I gather, that the Schoolemen have done evill, which have turned all Divinitie into Questions, and have made of the articles of our faith a questionary Divinity. Secondly, by this we are taught, that in the day of triall we may not consult of the change of religion, but we must be resolute, and tread under foot the perswasions of flesh and bloud.

Thirdly, our obedience to God must bee without consultation. We must first try what is the will of God, and then absolutely put it in execution, leaving the issue to God. Abraham is called of God to forsake his country and kindred, Gen. 12. hee directly then gives attendance to the commandement, and goes as it were blindfold, he knowes not whither. God promised him a child in his old age, he beleeves God without any reasoning, or disputing the case with himselfe, to or fro, Rom. 4. 20. But the common manner is, (though we know the will of God) to dispute the case, and to consult with our friends, and to practise according to carnall counsell. Eve listens to the counsell of Satan, and neglects Gods commandement. Saul being forbidden to offer sacrifice in Gilgal, till Samuel came to do it, consults with himselfe, whether he may doe it or no; and followes his owne reason against Gods commandement, and lost his kingdome for it. And this kind of deliberation liberation, whereby men consult what is to be done, is the cause of the manifold rebellions of men in the world.

In that man is termed here, flesh and bloud, wee are taught, not to put confidence in man: wee are taught to humble our selves before God: we are taught every day to prepare our selves against the day of death, and the day of judgement: yea, to account every new day as the day of death, because we are but flesh and blood.

The third point is, where Paul first preached? namely, in Arabia and Damascus. Arabia is a region of the world, where mount Sina stands, and where the children of Israel wandred 40. yeares. The inhabitants there of were of two sorts: some more civill, and some barbarous. Civill, as the Ismaelites, Amalechites, Midianites, &c. (yet were they professed enemies of the people of God.) Barbarous, as the Easterne part of Arabia, toward Babilon. For the inhabitants dwelt in Tents, and lived like wilde and savage men, by robbing and stealing, and consequently by killing, Isa. 13. 20. Ier. 3. 2.

Here wee see Pauls estate and condition, when he first begins the execution of his Apostolicall function. God then laies upon him a sharpe and weighty triall. For hee goes alone into Arabia, and he must become a teacher to his owne professed enemies, yea, to a savage generation, of whose conversion hee had no hope, in mans reason. And this hath beene an usuall dealing of God with his owne servants. When Moses was called to deliver the Israelites, and was in the way, the Lord, for a defect in his family, comes against him to destroy him, Exodus 4. 24. David is annointed King of Israell: and withall Saul is raised up, to persecute him, and to hunt him, as men hunt Partridges in the mountaines. Ionas is called to preach to Nineve, and withal God forsakes him, and leaves him to himselfe, so as he is cast into the sea, and devoured of a fish: and after this, being delivered, he must goe preach at Nineve. When Christ was in his baptisme (as it were) inaugurated the Doctor of the Church, presently after, before hee begun to preach, hee is carried into the wildernesse, to be with wilde beasts, and to be tempted of the devill, Mark. 1. verse 12. And the reasons of this dealing of God are manifest: by this meanes sinfull men are made fit for the office of teaching. For the saying is true, Reading, prayer, and temptation, make a divine. Againe, by this meanes they are called to depend on the providence and protection of God, and they are made sinfer the assistance and presence of Gods Spirit, who dwels only with them that are of humble and contrite hearts. Now then, let not them, that in any notable change of their life, finde notable temptations, be discouraged: for this is no condition that befals them, but a wise and speciall providence of God. For it was the Spirit of God, that led Christ into the wildernesse, to be tempted, after his baptisme.

Againe, here wee are taught, to acknowledge three things in God. His power, in that he sets up his kingdome, where it is most oppugned, and reignes in the midest of his owne enemies; namely, the wicked and savage Arabians, according to that in Psalm. 110. v. 2. His goodnesse, in that hee sends Paul to preach repentance to the people that are in the snare of the devill at his will, 2 Tim. 2. 26. His truth, in that hee now fulfils things foretold by David, Psal. 72. 10. The Kings of Sheba and Saba shall bring gifts: that is, Ethiopians and Arabians.

18. Then after three yeares, I came againe to Ierusalem, to visite Peter, and abode with him fifteene dayes.

Paul having proved before, that hee learned not the Gospell of any man, no not of the Apostles at Jerusalem: goes about now to answer exceptions, that might bee made against his reason. And first of all, it might have beene objected, that hee was gone to Hierusalem sundry times: and therefore in all likelihood, went thither to be instructed. To this hee answers three things: that hee went thither three yeares after his conversion, and not before: that hee went to visit Peter, & that hee abode there fifteene dayes. For the first, where hee saith, hee preached three yeares in Arabia and Damascus, and then after went to Hierusalem, and abode there fifteene dayes (for some speciall causes:) we see Paul is ready and able to make a good account of the spending of his time, both for dayes and years. And good reason: for time is precious, and great care ought to bee had of the expending of it. After Pauls example, wee must so live, that wee may bee able to give a good account of the spending of our dayes. That this may bee done, wee must learne to number our dayes: and to redeeme the time. To number our dayes, is to consider the shortnesse of our lives, and that wee are every day subject to death: and withall, seriously to bethinke our selves, of the causes of this our condition; namely, our sinnes, both originall and actuall. When this two-fold consideration takes place, wee then begin to number our dayes. The numbring of our time, and the paine thereof, bringeth us to the redeeming of it. To redeeme our time, is to take time, while time serves, specially for spirituall uses, and for the amendment of our lives. When time is thus numbred and redeemed, then shall the good account bee made before God and men. Wherefore miserable is the case of them, that spend their dayes in idlenesse, in sinne, and sporting, in chambering and wantonnesse. For they neither number time, nor redeeme it: and therefore they are farre from any good account.

The second point is, that Paul goes up to Hierusalem to visit Peter, that is, to see him, to be acquainted with him, to talke and conferre with him. Hence it appeares, that there is a lawfull kinde of peregrination or pilgrimage, in that Paul journies from Arabia to Jerusalem, to see Peter. Thus the Queene of Saba went up to Jerusalem, to heare the wisdome of Salomon. The law of God was, that all the males in Israel should thrice in the yeare goe up to the place which God had appointed, Deut.16. This Law was practised by Elkana and Anna, 1 Sam. 1. by Ioseph and Mary, by the Steward of Candaces, Queene of Æthiopia, *Act.*8. Nevertheleſſe, Popiſh pilgrimage is utterly to bee condemned, for two cauſes. One is, becauſe it is made a part of Gods worſhip, whereas now in the new Teſtamene all religious diſtinction of places is aboliſhed, 1 Tim. 2. 8. Lift up pure hands in every place unto God. Some alleage, that vowes which were not commanded, were nevertheleſſe parts of Gods worſhip among the Jewes. Anſwer: though men were not commanded to vow, yet the matter and forme of vowes was commanded. And in that God commanded the manner of vowing, he allowed the act of vow-making: let the Papiſts ſhew the like allowance for their pilgrimage. The ſecond reaſon is, becauſe popiſh pilgrimage is not to living men, but to the Reliques and images of dead men: which kinde of peregrination was never uſed in the world, till after the Apoſtles daies. For pilgrimage to reliques came in 300. yeares after Chriſt, and pilgrimage to images after 600. yeares.

In that Paul goes about to viſit Peter, the Papiſts gather the Primacy of Peter, over all the Apoſtles, but falſly. For this viſitation argues reverence: and reverence is given not onely to ſuperiors, but alſo to equals. Againe, primacy is two-fold: Primacy of order, and primacy of power. Primacy of order was due unto Peter, in that he was firſt called to be an Apoſtle, and he was in the faith before Paul. And in this regard, he was reverenced of him.

The third point is, that Paul abides with Peter at Jeruſalem, and that fifteene daies. His abode with Peter was in token of mutuall conſent and fellowſhip. Like ſhould be the conſent of the Miniſters of the Goſpell. For their office is to publiſh & perſwade peace between God and men, to which they are unfit, that cannot maintaine peace among themſelves. And all beleevers ſhould bee of one minde, ſpeaking and thinking the ſame things: and this cannot bee, unleſſe there bee a conſent of them that are Guides. This conſent therefore is to be maintained, and greatly to bee prayed for. And when there cannot bee conſent of judgement, by reaſon of humane frailtie, yet ſo long as the foundation is maintained, there muſt bee conſent in affection. And injuries offered may not diſſolve this bond. Though the Church of Jeruſalem ſuſpected Paul, and would not at the firſt acknowledge him for a Diſciple, Act. 9. 26. yet did hee for his part accept of their love and fellowſhip.

Whereas hee addes, that his abode with Peter was but for 15. daies, hereby he ſignifies that he learned not the Goſpell of him; for it could not bee learned in ſo ſhort a ſpace: neither could Paul by the teaching of any man become an Apoſtle in ſo little time.

19. And none other of the Apoſtles ſaw I, ſaving Iames the Lords brother.

It might haply be objected againſt the former verſe, that Paul might be raught of ſome other Apoſtle beſide Peter, and that at Jeruſalem: to this he anſwers two things. One, that there was none of the Apoſtles at Jeruſalem, but Iames: (beſide Peter afore-named:) the ſecond, that he did but ſee Iames.

In that Iames is called our Lords brother, three things may be demanded. One, which Iames this was? Anſw. It was Iames the ſon of Alpheus: for hee lived 14. yeares after this, *Galat.*2. 9. whereas Iames the ſonne of Zebedæus lived not ſo long, becauſe hee was put to death by Herod. The ſecond thing is, how Iames ſhould be the Lords brother? Anſwer. In Scripture, children of the ſame wombe are brethren: men of the ſame blood are brethren: as Abraham and Lot, *Gen.*13. 8. Men of the ſame country are brethren, thus Sauls country-men are called his brethren, 1 Chro. 12. 2. And Iames is called our Lords brother, not becauſe hee was of the ſame wombe, but becauſe he was of the ſame blood or kindred: For Eli had two daughters, Mary eſpouſed to Joſeph, and Mary Cleophas, who afterward was married to Alpheus, of whom came Iames here mentioned. Iames therefore was the cozen-german of Chriſt. Therefore Helvidius failed, when he went about to infringe the perpetuall virginity of the virgin Mary out of this place, as if ſhee had more ſonnes beſide Chriſt. The third thing is, what benefit Iames had by being the Lords brother? Anſw. Hee is here called the Lords brother, onely for diſtinctions ſake, in reſpect of the other Iames the ſonne of Zebedæus: and this brotherhood doth not make him the better Apoſtle, or the better man. Outward things doe not commend us to God. And it is the ſpirituall kindred, by meanes of faith, and our new birth, that bringeth us into favour with God, *Mat.*12. 46.

20. Now the things which I write, I ſpeake before God, I lie not.

Before Paul hath avouched ſundry things of himſelfe: that hee preached in Arabia and Damaſcus: that he went thence to Jeruſalem: that he did not learne the Goſpell there of Peter, Iames, or any other Apoſtle. Now ſome ſome men might haply ſay, that theſe ſayings of his are but falſe and fabulous avouchments therefore in this verſe Paul defends himſelfe, and juſtifies his owne ſayings, by a divine teſtimony.

The words containe two parts. An anſwer to an objection concealed on this manner; I may bee thought to lye, but indeed I lye not. The ſecond is a confirmation by oath, Before God I ſpeake it. Touching the firſt part, there be two points to bee handled: what is a lie? And whether it be ſinne or no?

A lye is, when wee ſpeake the contrary to that wee thinke, with an intention to deceive. More plainely in a lye there be foure things: the firſt is, to avouch and confirme that which is falſe. The ſecond is, to ſpeake with a double heart, *Pſalm.*12. 2. That is, to ſpeake againſt knowledge and conſcience, as when a man ſaith that is true which he knowes to be falſe, or that is falſe, which he knowes to be true. This makes a lie to be a lie, and this diſtinguitheth an untruth from a lie. For here it muſt be obſerved, that a man may ſpeake that which is falſe, and not lie: namely, if he ſpeake that which is falſe thinking it to be true. For then though he erre and is deceived, yet hee ſpeakes not againſt conſcience, and conſequently hee ſpeakes no lie. Againe, a man may ſpeake that which is true indeed, and ſpeake it as a truth, and yet thinke it to be falſe he lies indeed: becauſe he ſpeakes the truth againſt his conſcience. The third thing in a lye is a mind or intention to deceive or hurt. For in the ninth Commandement, that is a falſe teſtimony that is againſt our neighbour. The 4. point is, that he which ſpeaks that which is falſe upon a vanity of mind, without reaſonable cauſe, is a liar. Thus boaſters and flatterers are liars. And theſe are the things which concurre in the making of a lye.

For the better conceiving of the nature of a lie, we muſt put a difference betweene it and ſundry other things incident to ſpeech. Firſt, we muſt put a difference betweene a lie, and a parable or figure. In a parable indeed there is ſomething ſuppoſed or fained; as for example, when the trees are brought in conferring, and conſulting about their king, *Iudg.*9. 8. nevertheleſſe a parable is farre from falſehood, or lying: for by things fained, it ſignifies and declares an unfained truth.

Againe, difference muſt be put betweene a lie & the concealment of a thing; for it is one thing to ſpeake againſt our knowledge, and another not to ſpeake that which we know. And concealments, if there be a reaſonable cauſe, and if it bee not neceſſary for us to reveale the thing concealed, are not unlawfull. Thus Abraham ſpeakes the truth in part, calling Sara his ſiſter, and conceales it in part, not confeſſing her to bee his wife, *Gen.*12. 10. Thus Samuel by Gods appointment reveales that hee came to Bethlem to offer ſacrifice, and conceales the annointment of David, that hee might ſave his life; 1 *Sam.*16. 5. Ionas preaches that Nineve ſhall be deſtroied within 40. daies, and he conceales the condition of repentance. The like did Iſay to Ezekias. *Iſa.*38. 1.

Thirdly, a difference muſt bee made betweene lying and fayning: which ſome call ſimulation: not diſſembling; but rather ſembling (if I may ſo terme it.) And that is, when ſomething is ſpoken not contrary, but beſide or divers to that which wee thinke. And this kinde of fayning, if it bee not to the prejudice of truth againſt the glory of God, and the good of our neighbour, and have ſome convenient and reaſonable cauſe, is not unlawfull. It was not the will and counſel of God to deſtroy the Iſraelites for their idolatry. And hee doth not ſpeake unto Moſes any thing contrary to his will, but ſomething that is beſide, or divers unto it, when he ſaith, Let me alone, that my wrath may wax hot, and I may deſtroy them, *Exod.*32. 10. And this he ſpake, that he might ſtirre up Moſes to fervency in prayer for the Iſraelites, and the Iſraelites to unfained repentance. Ioſua having beſieged Ai, meant not to flie, yet doth hee faine a flight, that hee might draw his enemies out of the Citie and deſtroy them, *Ioſ.*8. 5. There is a kinde of deceit called dolus bonus, that is, a good deceit, and of this kinde was the act of Ioſua. Thus Phyſitians for their good, uſe to deceive the ſenſes of their impotent patients. Thus Parents inſinuate unto their children terrible things, of the Beare, and bull-begger, that they may keepe them from places of hurt and danger. And this may bee done without fault, for it is one thing to contrary the truth, and another to ſpeake or doe ſomething divers unto it without contrariety.

The ſecond point is, Whether to lye be a ſin, or not: the anſwer is, yea. For even in this place, Paul puts lying from himſelfe, and that with an oath. The devill is ſaid to be the author of all lyes, John 8. And it is Gods Commandement, that we ſhould put away lying, *Eph.*4. 25. It is objected, that the ſporting and officious lie is not againſt charity, to the hurt of any, but for the good of men. I anſwer, firſt, though it bee not to the hurt of our neighbour, yet it is to the hurt and prejudice of truth. Secondly, they are deceived to whom theſe lyes are told. Thirdly, hee hurts himſelfe that tells a lye, though it bee for the good of men: for when hee ſpeakes the truth indeed, hee is leſſe beleeved. Laſtly, though theſe kinde of lies ſeeme to bee good in reſpect of their end, yet are not they good in reſpect of their nature and conſtitution. For in ſpeaking, there ſhould be a conformity and conſent between the tongue and the minde; which is not, when any lye is uttered. Secondly, it is objected, that the Ægyptian Midwives ſaved the male-children of the Iſraelites, and Rahab the ſpies, by lying, *Exod.*1. 19. *Ioſ.*2. 5. and that they are commended for this: I anſwer, wee muſt diſtinguiſh the worke done, from the execution of the work. The worke in saving the children and the spies was a fruit of faith and the feare of God, and it is commended: but the manner of putting these workes in execution by lying, is not approved. If it bee said, that faith and the feare of God cannot stand with a manifest sinne: I say againe, that faith and the feare of God are imperfect in this life, and therefore they are joined with many frailties; and actions of faith are mixed with sundry defects and sinnes.

Now then, we are to be exhorted, to make a conscience of lying, and to speake the truth from our hearts. And there bee many reasons to induce us to the practice of this duty. First, it is Gods Commandement, Iam. 3. 14. Secondly, lying is a conformity to the Devill, and by truth wee are made conformable to God, who is truth it selfe. Thirdly, we are sanctified by the word of truth, John 17.17. and guided by the Spirit of truth: and therefore wee are to detest lying and deceit. Fourthly, truth is a fruit of Gods Spirit, *Galat.*5. and a marke of Gods childe, *Psalm.*32.v. 2. he hath the pardon of his sinnes in whose spirit there is no guile, and *Psal.*15.2. he shall rest in the mount taine of God, who speaks the truth from his hart. Lastly, destruction is the lyars reward, *Psal.*5. 6. God wil destroy them that speak lies: and they must have their portion in the lake that burnes with fire and brimstone, *Revel.*22.15.

Thus much of the answer to the objection: now followes the confirmation by oath, [before God.] Here it may bee demanded, how these words can be a forme of swearing? Anſ. In an oath there bee foure things. The first is, An Asseveration of the truth. The second is, Confession, whereby the party that is to sweare acknowledgeth the power, presence, and wisdome of God, in searching of the heart, and that hee is both witnesse, and judge of all our doings. The third is, Invocation of God, that hee would bee a witnesse with us, and to us, that wee speake the truth. The last is, Imprecation, that God would be a Judge to take revenge upon us, if wee lye. Now then, the forme of an oath is a certaine forme of words; in which not all, but some of the principall parts of an oath are expressed, and the rest concealed, and yet to be understood, *Ier.*4.2. there is the forme of an oath, The Lord liveth, and here onely confession is expressed. The forme of swearing, I call God to witnesse to my soule. 2 *Corin.*1.23. expresseth the third part, namely, invocation. The words, *Ruth.*3.17. The Lord do thus and thus unto me, is an imprecation. The common forme, the Lord thee help through Iesus Christ, is partly praier, and partly imprecation. And the forme in this place is directly a confession, that God is present to witnesse and judge the truth. Thus commonly in all formes of oaths, one part is expressed, and the rest are infolded.

Here first wee learne, that the forme of an oath is to be plaine, and direct in the name of God; and not indirect or oblique in the name of the creatures, Gods name concealed. And it is the flat Commandement of God. Matth. 5.34. It is alleaged, that Paul, 1 *Corinth.*15. 31. sweares by his rejoycing in Christ. I answer; the words of Paul, by my rejoycing, are not an oath, but an obtestation: for the meaning of his words is this, that his sorrowes and afflictions which hee endured for Christ, would testifie (if they could speake) that he died daily. Thus Moses called heaven and earth to witnesse, without swearing: for in an oath, the thing by which he sweares, is made not onely witnesse, but also Judge. Nevertheless, it is not unlawfull to name the creatures in the forme of an oath, if they bee considered as pledges presented unto God, that hee should punish us in them, if wee lie. Thus Paul sweareth, I call God to witnesse to (or upon) my soule. Here they are to bee blamed, whose common swearing is by the creatures; as by their faith, by their troth, by the Masse, Mary, by this bread, by this drinke, &c.

Secondly, here wee learne to use an oath, onely in the case of extremity, namely, when a necessary truth is to be confirmed, and when this cannot bee done by any reason or proofe to bee found among men upon earth, then may we fly unto heaven for proofe, and make God our witnesse. Thus Paul confirmes his owne calling, when all other prooфes failed. And it must further bee observed, that in extremities hee useth an oath but seldome. This seemes to condemne their wickednesse, that crie at every word in their common talke, before God, before God.

Thirdly, before wee sweare, wee are to use great meditation, confideration, and preparation: and therefore Paul in swearing useth a word of attention, and saith, Behold, I speake it before God. This condemnes the rash and custom able swearing of men in their common talke: who also in that they commonly and rashly sweare, commonly forsweare themselves.

In that Paul confirms his writings by oath, it appeares that they are of God. For if he had sworne falsly, God would have taken revenge upon him and his writings, before this: which he hath not done.

Whereas Paul saith, Before God I speake it.: he teacheth us after his own example to bring our selves into the presence of God, to walke before him as Enoch did, Genesis 5.22. and as Abraham was commanded, Gen. 17. *verſe.*1. and to doe whatsoever wee doe as in the sight and presence of God: and to bee afraid to sinne, because of his presence. This is the true feare of God, and this is the right practice of religion.

21. After that I went into the coasts of Syria, and Cilicia: and I was unknowne by the face to the Churches of Iudea which were in Christ.

22. But they had heard only some say, He which persecuted us in times past, now preacheth the the faith which before he destroyed.

23. And they glorified God in me.

Here Paul answers another objection, which may bee framed thus: Though Paul learned not the Gospell of the Apostles at Jerusalem, yet might he haply learne it of them in other Churches of Judea. To this Paul answers three things. The first is, that hee went from Ierusalem into Syria and Cilicia. The second, that hee was not known in person to the Churches of Judea, but only by hearesay: and he sets down the report that went of him. The third is, that the Churches of Judea did not disgrace and slander him, but they glorified God for him. Of these in order. For the first, that Paul went from Jerusalem straight into Syria and Cilicia, the regions of the Gentiles: there be two causes. One, because Paul was ordained specially to bee the Apostle of the Gentiles, Act. 9. 15. Rom. 15. 16. The second, because Cilicia was his own country: for he was borne in Tarsus a towne in Cilicia: and his love to his country no doubt was great. For in the like case hee could have wished himselfe to be accursed for his countriney the Jewes. From this first answer, I gather two things. First, if any Apostle above the rest, be the Pastor and universall Bishop of the Church over the whole world, it is Paul and not Peter: because hee specially was ordained to teach and convert the nations. The second is, that Pauls ofte and dangerous journies must teach us to attend on our calling with care and diligence, and not to bee dismaied with the troubles that shall befall us.

The second answer, that Paul was known to the Christian Jews, not by face, but by hearesay: this may seeme strange, considering Paul was at Jerusalem, and travailed through Jury into Syria and Cilicia: but it is the truth, and the reason of it is plaine. The office of an Apostle is not to build upon the foundation of another, or to succeed any man in his labours, but to plant and found the Church of the new Testament, where Christ had not been preached or named, Rom. 15. 20. In this the Apostles differ from all the Ministers of the new Testament whatsoever. And this is the cause why Paul was not known to the Churches of Judea. And here wee see, that succession (which the Papists imagine) is not always a note of the true Church, and the true Ministery. For the Ministery of the Apostles, and the Apostolicall Churches wanted it. And this is for the greater commendation of them.

Againe, it is said, that Paul was not known to the Churches of Judea, which were in Christ. Where let it be observed, that a while after the ascension of Christ, the Apostles had gathered and planted sundry Christian Churches in Judea. This grants by consequent the efficacie and power of the Gospell. For hardnesse of heart had overspread the nation of the Jewes, and they had rejected and crucified the Lord of life. And this is verified

A which Christ saith, that his Disciples should bee hating in him, should therefore endure what they had done, John 15. 18. 20. for by preaching did not convert multitudes of the Jewes, and range them into Churches, as the Apostles did. Here againe, we see that the Gospell, by means of the corruption of man, is an occasion of divisions. For after the Gospell was published by the Apostles, there arose a division of Churches among the Jewes. Some were Christians in Christ, and some out of Christ, namely the Synagogues which resisted Christ. We may not therefore now adayes take offence if schismes and dissentions follow, where the Gospell is preached: it is not the fault of the Gospell, it is the fault of men.

That Paul might the better throw, that hee was knowne to the Churches of the Jewes onely by heare-say; hee expresses the report that went of him. Hence I gather, it is not unlawfull to tell and heare reports or newes, so be it they be not to the prejudice of the truth, or the glory of God, and the good name of men. Nay, it is commendable to report, and heare newes, that concernes the inlarging of Gods kingdome, and the conversion of wicked men.

In the report, two things are set down: what Paul did, He once persecuted us & destroyed the faith: what he now doth; He preacheth the gospell: by this we see that verified which Salomon told, that the lion, the wolfe, the lambe, &c. should peaceably live together. Again, here we see, that all things upon earth are subject to change and alteration, so as it may be said, heare of live it was thus, and thus, but now it is otherwise. Therefore in miseries, wee may not bee over-much grieved, for they are changeable: and in earthly things we may not rejoice overmuch, because they are mutable, and subject to daily alterations. Our speciall care must be, to avoid eternall and unchangeable evills; as death and the cause of death, namely sinnes; and to purchase to our selves the good things which are everlasting, namely, the favour of God, and everlasting life.

Furthermore, the thing which Paul laboured as, in professing the Church, is to bee considered, and that two wayes; That hee might destroy the faith. By faith, wee are to understand the doctrine of the Gospell, and withall the vertue or gift of faith, whereby it is beleeved: for the Devill and his instruments seeke the overthrow of both. Christ saith, Satan desired to sift his disciples, that is, to sift all their faith out of their hearts, and so leave nothing in them but chaffe, Luke 22. 31. Here now it may be demanded, whether faith may be lost, specially in the children of God, in this time of temptation and persecution? It answers thus: There be three degrees of faith. The first consists in a true change wrought in us by the Gospel, and assures us of salvation. This faith the devill hates, and tempts to lose it, and by this faith we may stand, and not fall away. The second kinde of faith containes knowledge, assent, a ease or joy in the goodnesse of God, a zeale to the word of God, and apparent fruits of holinesse. This faith also (being better than the former) may bee lost in the dayes of persecution, until believers by this faith, may fall quite away, Luke 8.13. The third faith, (called the faith of the Elect) containes three parts, knowledge of the Gospell, assent to the truth of it, and apprehension, whereby wee doe receive and apply Christ with his benefits to our selves, or the promise of remission of sinnes, and life everlasting. This faith may bee greatly wasted, for things appertaining to it may bee lost, as boldnesse to come unto God, the sense or feeling of spirituall ioy, and such like: Againe, it may bee buried for a time in the heart, and not shew it selfe, either by fruits, or any profession: and in respect of the measure of it, it may bee lessened and maimed: and as wee respect the nature of it, it is unapt to be lost, as any other grace of God: for there is nothing by nature unchangeable, but God. Nevertheless, where this faith is in truth, it is never by affliction and temptation put out or extinguished: because God in mercy confirmes it by new grace. Christ saith to Peter, I have prayed for thee that thy faith faile not, Luke 22. 32. And this privilege have all the godly; for God promiseth, that they shall not be tempted above their strength, 1 Corin. 10. 13. Indeed perfections are said to destroy the faith: because this is their intent, and they endeavour to doe what they can: but God prevents their desires, by suffering true faith, that it may not utterly faile.

A preached and the Sacraments: the hand to receive, is our faith. The giving of pardon is necessary: for though sinnes bee pardoned, in the decree of God, by his promise in the word, and by procurement upon the crosse, yet pardon is no pardon to us, till it bee given unto us by God. Furthermore, this giving is not altogether at one instant, but it begins in the conversion of a sinner, and is oftentimes renued in the use of the word and Sacraments, to the end that Paul wils the Corinthians reconciled to God, till to bee reconciled, 2 Corinthians 5. 20. And wee are taught, every day to pray to God, to give us the pardon of our sinnes. This giving is two-fold: 1. conditionall, and absolute. Conditionall, when God gives the pardon of sinne upon condition. Thus in baptisme, and in the first conversion of a sinner, all sinnes without exception are pardoned: yea future sinnes; yet not simply, whether a man repent or no, but upon condition of future repentance. The absolute donation is, when a man repents or renewes his repentance: for then the pardon of sinne is simply and fully without condition, applyed and revealed to the conscience. When David confessed his sin, Nathan, in the name of the Lord, saith, The Lord hath put away thine sinne, 2 Sam. 12.

Now then, to come to the point, the childe of God hath pardon of his sinne in respect of the decree to pardon, in respect of the generall promise of pardon, in respect of the procurement of pardon, in respect of the conditionall donation of pardon, which is made in baptisme; and he may be said to want pardon, in that the pardon of his offence is not fully and absolutely given him till he recover himselfe, and renew his repentance. If it bee here demanded, what the childe of God askes, when he prayes for pardon day by day? I answer, he prayes for two things. First, that God would continue to shew his favour, and to impute the merits of Christ unto him, whereas he is for his part by his offence, desirous to bee deprived of all favour. Secondly, he askes the giving of the pardon, that is, that God would renue his conscience thereof.

D

This use. Seeing the intent of the evill and wicked men is to destroy the faith (as it appeares in this place, and in the first temptation wherewith Satan assaulted Christ, Matth. 4.) wee must have a special care of our faith. And first wee must looke that our faith bee a true faith, lest wee bee deceived as the foolish virgins. Secondly, wee must keepe and locke up our faith in sure lock and sure place, namely, in the store-house or treasury of a good conscience, 1 Tim. 1. 19. Thirdly, wee must bee resolute in faith, that our hearts may bee confirmed grounded in Gods love. And for this cause wee are to make continuall experience, and observations of the love of God toward us, and to ponder all together, and to build a joyfull conclusion thereupon.

The

The third answer of Paul is, And they glorified God for me: that is, the Churches of Judea when they heard of my calling and conversion, they considered therein the power, the goodnesse, and the mercy of God, and with joy they gave him thankes for it. In this practice of the Church, we learne that our duety is to sanctifie and glorifie the name of God, in every worke of his. And this sanctification hath two parts. The first is, the consideration of the Divine vertues, that shew themselves in every worke of God: as his wisdome, power, justice, mercie, providence, presence, &c. The second is, praise and thankgiving to God for the same. And in this practice wee must be exercised: to this purpose wee must in the feare of God, without exception, to his glory, and to our edification, observe the workes of mercie, whereto wee are commanded in perfection to sanctifie God in our hearts, 1 Pet. 3. 15. And Moses, because he failed in the doing of this duty, was barred the land of Canaan, Numb. 20. 12. In England God hath wrought his wonderous works among us. He hath given us peace and protection against our enemies, with the Gospell for the space of 40. yeares and more. And our duety is to glorifie God in these works of his: but alas, wee doe it not. For the Gospell of salvation is little regarded of the most, and little obedience is yeelded to it. This neglect of ours, is glorifying and praising of God, is a great sinne: and it stands us in hand to repent of it betimes, lest God take away his word from us, and leave us to strange nations, to believe lies.

C

Againe, here we see what is the right manner of honouring of the Saints, and that is to glorifie God in them, and for them. As for religious worship of adoration and invocation, it is proper to God: and the Saints desire it not, Revel. 19. 9.

CHAP. II.

1. Then fourteene yeares after I went up againe to Jerusalem with Barnabas, and tooke with mee Titus also.

2. And I went by revelation, and communicated unto them of the Gospell which I preach among the Gentiles, but privately with them that were the chiefe, lest by any meanes I should runne, or had run in vaine.

IN this verses, Paul proceeds to refute and overthrow the second and third false accusation. And this whole chapter serves to depend on the 1. verse of the former chapter. Namely, when the Adversaries of Paul might haply object on this manner: Though the Apostles of Jerusalem did so thinke, yet will not the Apostles doe it, because they are chefe teachers: Therefore Paul answers in this chapter. The chiefe and summe of the first is this: I went to Jerusalem to confer with the Apostles there, I had their consent and approbation. And the answer consists three parts. The first, of Paul his journey to Jerusalem, in the first verse. The second, his conference with the Apostles, in the 2 verse: the third, of the approbation which they gave him, from the 3. verse to the 11.

In his journey, I consider foure things. The first is, the Manner of his journeying, in these words, I went up, or ascended to Jerusalem. And this he speakes, because Jerusalem was placed and seated upon a mountaine, and compassed with mountaines, Psal. 125. 2. Or, in respect of the dignitie and excellence of the place, as we in England use to say, we ride up to London, from all the parts of the land, because it is the chiefe Citie.

A

The second thing to be considered in the journey is, the time when, in these words, after fourteene yeares. Here two questions are to be considered. The first is, of what this journey is made five journeys to Jerusalem: The first, from Arabia: the second, when he and Barnabas were sent by the Church of the Gentiles to carrie almes to Jerusalem: the third, when hee went to the Councell at Jerusalem: the fourth, when he went up for the keeping of his vow: the last is mentioned, Act. 21. 21. Answer. These words are not to be read of the first, for that was but three yeares after his conversion: neither can they well be understood of the second: because Paul then was sent by the Church, and therefore he went not by revelation. And they cannot well be understood of the third: for then Paul would have mentioned the Councell of Jerusalem, whereof he was a principall member, chiefly seeing he hath occasion so to doe, and prevailed much for his purpose. The fourth and fifth journeys were after a long time: all fourteene yeares. It is likely therefore, that this journey here mentioned, and observed by Paul, is none of the five mentioned by Luke, but some other. The second question is, When these fourteene yeares must begin? Answer. It is uncertain. Some thinke they must begin at his conversion: some three yeares after, when he went to Jerusalem: and other some otherwise. We must here take order: For though circumstances of time and place, being things of left moment, cannot alwaies be certainly observed, yet antiquity for their substance and doctrines pertaining to salvation, are plainly to be wise. And here we are to be mindfull to be content to be ignorant in some things, because the manner of things is not revealed, or revealed them, or yet because we cannot by reason of our blindnesse, conceive them.

D

The third point, to consider of the journey is, the cause thereof, in these words, by revelation. Barnabas and Paul were sent by the Church, that they might be witnesses to the truth of the doctrine he taught among the Gentiles: and againe, to the Gentiles of the faithfulnesse between him, and the rest of the Apos-

stles. For the law of God is, that every matter shall be established by the testimonie of two or three witnesses. Hence we learne, that if a question arise of the doctrine which is delivered in the publike Ministerie, then the hearers that are able to judge, must be witnesses, and the triall is to bee made by them. Thus saith Christ in the like case, Why aske yee me? aske them that heard me, Ioh. 18.21. Therefore great care and circumspection is to be had of things publikely delivered. Againe, whereas Paul makes Barnabas a Iew, and Titus a Gentile, his companions, we are taught to imbrace with a brotherly love, not onely the men of our owne country, but also such as bee of other nations, specially if they beleeve. For then they are all children of one Father, and pertaine all to one family: and there is no difference of nations now. It is a fault therefore, that men of one nation carrie in their hearts a generall dislike and hatred ostentimes of them with whom they deale and converse, and that because they are of such or such countries.

The fourth point is, the cause of his journey, in these words, and I went by revelation. Here we are taught, that for the journeyes we make, we are to have some good and sufficient warrant: though not a revelation, yet a commandement, or that which countervailes a commandement; as when wee travell by vertue of our callings. When Noe had made the Arke, he enters into it at Gods commandement: he abides in it: and when the earth was in part dried, he presumes not to goe out, til the Lord bade him. Here three sorts of men are to be blamed. Pilgrimes that travell to Jerusalem, or other countries in way of merit or religion. For they have no warrant. Secondly, travellers that goe from countrie to countrey, and out of the precincts of the Church, upon vaine curiositie, to see fashions. Such when they travell from their owne countries, yet they travell not from their vices, but rather goe deeper into them, and come home againe with many bad and corrupt fashions. The last are beggers and Rogues, that passe from place to place, that they may live in idlenesse, and upon the sweat of other mens browes.

Thus much of the journey: now followes the Conference, in these words; And I communicated, &c. Here generally I gather, that Conferences both private and publike are laudable, and to be maintained, specially when they tend to the maintenance of unitie, and consent in doctrine. The Papists blame us Protestants, for condemning Conferences (as they say) and Councels. But they doe us wrong. Indeed the Councell of Trent wee reject and condemne. For in it, against all equitie, the Pope was both partie and Judge. In it there was no libertie to make triall of truth. For nothing was propounded, but by the liking and consent of the Pope. Againe, the whole Councell consisted of such as were of the Italian faction, whose faith was pinned on the Popes sleeve. Nevertheless, we allow all Christian Councels, lawfully gathered: and wee desire there might be a Generall Councell, for the triall of truth, and for the staying of unsettled minds: these three caveats being remembred; One, that the Councell be gathered by Christian Princes, to whom the right of calling a Councell belongs. The other, that the Pope bee no Judge, but a partie. The third, that Christ in his word be the Judge, and that the Delegates in the Councell be but as witnesses, determining all things by the written word.

In this conference we are first to consider the manner of conferring which was used. Paul saith, he communicated with them, that is, he laid downe unto them, and expounded the Gospell which he preached; and this he did privately, that is, with the Apostles, one by one, in plaine and familiar manner, as one friend doth with another. Therefore for the maintaining of this conference, there was no assembly made, neither was there any disputation held. Only Paul declares his doctrine, and they give assent. Hence it appeares, that Paul doth not submit the truth of his doctrine to triall. For he was resolved of it, and he accursed him that taught otherwise: but his intent was to seeke the approbation of the Apostles, that hee might stop the mouth of his adversaries.

The second point is, the matter of the conference, and that is the Gospell which Paul preached. Here the Papist gathereth, that the Church is the Judge in all questions pertaining to religion and the word; because it is here the thing that is judged. I answer, first, they gather amisse. For Paul doth not here submit the Gospell which he preached to the judgement of the Church of Jerusalem. And it is false which they teach: for the soveraigne Judge of all questions and controversies in Religion, is Christ alone. The power to determine and resolve in cases concerning faith and good life, is inseparably annexed to his person; and in it are we to rest. The principall voice of the Judge, and the definitive sentence, is the written word. And the office of the Church is no more but to gather, declare, testifie, and pronounce this sentence. It is objected, that when a question is propounded, the Scripture cannot speake, nor Christ in the Scripture, but the Church onely: I answer againe, that God ascribes to the written word, a voice, or speech, Rom. 3.19. And the Scripture speakes sufficiently, to the resolving of any mans conscience, in all matters pertaining to salvation. Againe, they pleade, that the Church is before the Scripture: and therefore it being most ancient, must be the Judge. I answer, that the Church was before the writing of the word, but not before the word which is written. For the Church presupposeth faith, and faith presupposeth a word of God.

God. Upon this our doctrine, they further upbraid us, that we will be tried by nothing, but by the Scriptures, even as the malefactor, that will not be tried by the Quest, but by the evidence. I answer, for the satisfying of our adversaries, wee submit our selves to the triall of the Church and Councels, so be it, the three cautions before remembred be duly observed: specially, that all things be judged and tried by the written word, and by reasons gathered thence.

Againe, the Papists hence gather, that the Scriptures are to bee approved by the Church. Ans. Thus much we grant: yet so as we hold, that the principall approbation of the word, (whereby wee are moved to beleeve and obey) is the word, and from the word, and not from the Church. For the Scripture hath his evidence within it selfe, which is sufficient to make us beleeve the word to be the word, though the Church should say nothing.

The third point is, concerning the persons with whom Paul conferred: namely, with them that were the chiefe, that is, with the that were in price and account, as Peter, Iames, &c. Here we see, what is the honour and worship that is due to excellent men, namely, a precious and reverend estimation. Thus the name of David was of price in Israel for his vertues, 1 Sam. 18. last. And thus with the Papists, are we content to honour the Saints. Againe, here the Papists gather, that they are heretickes, that after Pauls example, will not goe up to Rome to Peter and his successour, to have their doctrine and religion tried and examined. I answer, first we are content to be tried by the writings of Peter, Iames, Iohn, Paul, &c. And this is the commandement of God, in doubtful causes, To the Law and to the testimony, Isa. 8.20. Secondly, I answer, that we have a commandement, not to goe up to Rome at this day, to have our religion tried; Rev. 18.4. Come out of Babylon my people. Thirdly, I answer, that the Bishop of Rome is Peters successour, not in teaching, but in denying of Christ. And the learned Papists confesse, that for this succession thy have but a humane faith, grounded upon humane historie.

The fourth point is, the End of the conference, Lest I should run, that is, lest I should preach, or had preached in vaine. These words of Paul are not simply to be taken. For the Ministerie of man, and every sermon, brings forth the fruit which God hath appointed. And whether it bee unto the hearers, the savour of life, or the savour of death, it is alwaies a sweet savour unto God. The words therefore beare this meaning: Lest my preaching should be of lesse use and profite here after, lest I should preach in vaine, in respect of that good which is looked for at the hands of an Apostle. And this Paul speakes, because a rumor went abroad, that his doctrine in many things was contrarie to the other Apostles. And by this meanes, many were kept from receiving the Gospell, and the faith of weake beleevers was quenched. Now then, the end of the conference was to stay this false report, that the Ministerie of Paul might have passage, and that with greater profite.

Hence the Papists gather, that the doctrine of Paul was uncertaine and unprofitable, till it was approved by Peter. I answer, that Paul sought the approbation of his doctrine, as the hands of Peter, and the rest; not because it was uncertaine, and unprofitable; but because it was slandered: and the slander was, that he taught otherwise than Peter did. Now to cut off this slander, he useth meanes to manifest his consent with Peter, and therefore seekes approbation at his hand.

Againe, when Paul saith; Lest I should run in vaine, he gives us to understand, that the Ministerie of the word is not a worke of ease, or pleasure, but a labour: not a continued labour, like to the running in a race. It were therefore to be wished, that Ministers of the Gospell would so labour and walke in this calling, that they might be able to say with Paul, I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, &c. 2 Tim. 4.

Thirdly, hence it appeares, that all beleevers should have a certain knowledge of their faith and religion. The procuring of this was the thing that Paul aimed at, in this conference with the Apostles at Jerusalem. Wee must not bring children asleepe, and dumbe with every winde of doctrine, Eph. 4.14. Gods word requires faith in us: and faith presupposeth certaine knowledge. The first and second commandements require that we know God, and his will, distinguish him from false gods, and his worship from false worship. Here comes the fault of our times to be considered: most men amongst us doe not know their religion. A foule negligence. We take paines to learne trades and occupations, that wee may have wherewith to preserve this temporall life: what a shame then is it, that wee learne not better to know the doctrine of true religion, whereby our soules are to be saved?

Lastly, here we learne, that the office of the Minister is, not only to teach and preach, but also to study and take care, how by preaching he may doe the most good.

3. But neither yet Titus, which was with me, though he were a Grecian, was compelled to be circumcised.

After the conference, followes the Approbation which was given to Paul. It standeth in foure things. The first, that the Apostles did not compell Titus to be circumcised. v. 3. The second, that they added nothing to his doctrine. v. 6. The third, that they gave him the hands of fellowship. v. 7. The last, that at his departure, they required of him nothing but the giving of Alms, v. 10.

For the first, the words, And Titus was not compelled to be circumcised, carrie this sense: all for my part was readie to circumcise Titus, if there had beene a meet occasion: false brethren would have imposed a necessitie upon us: then I and Titus refused: and the Apostles did not urge me to circumcise him.

for

Here it may bee demanded, how this text can well stand with Act. 16.v.3. for there Paul circumciseth Timothy, a Grecian: and here he refuseth to circumcise Titus, though he were a Grecian. I answer thus. Circumcision was at this time a thing indifferent. From the first institution to the comming and specially to the death of Christ, it was a thing commanded, a Sacrament, and a part of Gods worship. Againe, after the planting of the Church of the new Testament, it was utterly abolished, and a thing in respect of use utterly unlawfull. In the middle time, that is, while the Gospel was in publishing to the world, and the Church of the new Testament was yet in founding, it was a ceremonie free or indifferent. It may be objected, that the whole ceremoniall law was abolished in the death of Christ: I answer, it was so: and circumcision was abolished, in respect of faith and conscience: yet so, as the use therof was left to the libertie of the people of God for a while. Circumcision at this time was as a corps that is dead, yet unburied, and only laid out; and so it must remaine for a time, that it may be buried with honour. It may againe be objected, that Baptisme was come in the roome of circumcision: and that therefore circumcision was but an idle and emptie ceremonie. I answer, it was not used as a Sacrament at this time, or as a part of Gods worship, or a matter of necessitie, but onely as a free ceremonie, and that onely then, when it tended to the edification of men.

Being then a thing indifferent, it might as occasion served be used or not used. Therefore Paul condescending to the weaknesse of the beleeving Jewes, circumcised Timothie: and that he might not offend the godly, and hinder Christian libertie, he refused to circumcise Titus.

Here a great question is answered, whether we may use things indifferent as oft as we will, and how we will: The answer is, No. Things are not called indifferent, because we may use them indifferently, or not use them when we will, and how we will: but because in themselves, or in their owne nature, they are neither good nor evill, and we may use them well or evill. Furthermore, there be two things which restraine the use of things indifferent: the law of charitie, and the lawes of men. The law of charitie is this, Things indifferent, in the case of scandall, cease to be indifferent, and are as things unlawfull, that is, either forbidden, or commanded. Paul saith, If to eat flesh be to the offence of his brother, he will eat no flesh while the world stands, 1 Cor. 8. 13. And though he circumcised Timothie, yet would he not circumcise Titus, lest he should offend the godly, and by his example, hurt Christian liberty.

A Likewise the good lawes of men, whether civill or Ecclesiasticall, tending to the common good, and serving for edification restraine the use of things indifferent, so that they which shall do otherwise than these lawes command, with a contemptuous or disloyall minde, are guilty before God; yet here two cautions must be remembred. One, that the lawes of men doe not change the nature of things indifferent: for it is the propertie of God, by willing this or that, to make it good or evill. Neither doe they take away the use of things indifferent. For libertie granted by a soveraigne power cannot be reversed by an inferiour power. Therefore humane lawes doe no more but temper and moderate, the overcommon use of things indifferent. The second caution is; That when the end of a law ceaseth, when there is no contempt of the authoritie that made the law, when no offence is given: a thing indifferent remaines in his free use without sinne, or breach of conscience.

B Againe, here we learne, that a thing indifferent, when it is made necessarie to salvation, (as Circumcision was) is not to be used. This conclusion serves to overthow the Popish religion. For it stands in the observation of things indifferent, as meats, drinkes, apparell, times, &c. And the using, or the not using of them is made necessarie even in regard of mans salvation. For the abstinence from things that are by nature indifferent is made a part of Gods worship, and meritorious of eternall life. For example: to marrie, or not to marrie, is for nature a thing indifferent: and therefore when abstinence from marriage is made necessarie (as it is in divers orders of men and women) the nature of the thing is changed, which God hath left free, and it is a doctrine of devils; which is taught.

C Here againe we learne, to make difference of persons. Some are weake, some are obstinate. Weake ones are such, as having turned unto God, and carrying in their hearts a purpose in all things to please God, nevertheless doe sundrie things amisse, upon simple ignorance or bad custome, till be they better informed. Of these Paul saith, that he became all to all, that he might save some, 1 Cor. 9. 22. And for their sakes he condescended to circumcise Timothie. And if we that have scarce a drop of mercy in us, must thus beare with them that are weak, much more will God doe, who is mercy it selfe. The good shepherd brings home the stray sheep upon his shoulders: he carries his lambes in his bosome, Isa. 40. 11. He will not quench the smoaking flax, Isa. 42. He spares them that feare him, as a father spares his child, Mal. 3. 17. This being alwaies remembred, that weake ones truly turne to God, and carrie in their hearts an honest purpose not to sinne against his lawes: not anytime wittingly, & willingly. Obstinate persons, are such as professe the faith, and yet hold and practice bad things of of willfull ignorance, and of malice. These persons are not to be borne with, nor to bee respected: and in respect of them, Paul would not circumcise Titus.

Lastly, in that Titus was not compelled to be circumcised, it may be demanded, whether Recusants may be compelled to the exercises of religion? I answer, yes, for exercises of religion are not things indifferent, as Circumcision was. Iosias made a covenant with the Lord, and hee caused all his subjects to stand to it, 2 Chr. 34. 32. The king at the marriage feast of his sonne saith of the guests, Compell them to enter in, Luk. 14. 23. It is objected, that men may not be compelled to beleeve. I answer: it is the commandement of God, prove the spirits, 1 Ioh. 4. 1. And this commandement pertaines to all persons. Therefore though men may not be compelled to beleeve, yet may they be compelled to come to the congregation, to heare our sermons, and therein the reasons and grounds of our doctrine, that they may trie what is the truth, and cleave unto it. For this is their duty.

4. For all the false brethren that crept in, who came in privily to spie out our libertie which we have in Christ Iesus, that they might bring us into bondage.

5. To whom we gave not place by subjection for an houre, that the truth of the Gospell might continue with you.

Paul had said before, that Titus was not compelled to be circumcised: now he addes, For all the false brethren, that is, though the false brethren did what they could to the contrarie. Here then Paul sets downe who were the cause that Titus was not circumcised, namely, certaine persons at Jerusalem, and them he sets forth by two properties, they are false brethren, and they crept into the Church. Touching the first, by lewe learne, that the Church of God upon earth, even when it is at the best, hath wicked men and hypocrites in it. In Adams family there is Cain: in the Arke there is Chams in Christs family or schoole, there is Iudas. In the Church of Jerusalem, planted and governed by the chiefe Apostles, there be false brethren. The true Sheepe be often without, and wolves within. Therefore we may not so much as dreame of a perfection of the Church of God upon earth; so long as wicked men be mixed with true beleevers.

D Againe, these adversaries of Paul are called false brethren, because they joyned Circumcision with Christ, as a necessary cause of justification and salvation. Hence it follows, that the Church of Rome is a false Church: because it joynes workes with Christ, in the cause of our justification, and that as meritorious causes.

Their second property is, that they crept in to the Church, which I conceive an extraordinarie. The Church of God is a Sheepe fold, an house, Iohn 10. 1. Christ is the onely Doore.

A Now Pastors that teach Christ might be said to enter in by this doore: they which teach any other way of salvation, are said to climbe in another way: and they which teach Christ, joyning some other thing with him in the cause of salvation, are said to creep in, because in appearance they maintaine Christ; and yet, because they adde something to Christ, they neither enter nor continue in the true Church, with any good warrant from God. In this, they are like the Serpent. Living creatures were all placed in Eden: and Man was placed in the garden of Eden called Paradise, and so were not beasts. How then comes the Serpent in? why, in all likelihood it crept in. And so do false brethren into the Church. Hence I gather, that false brethren are not true and lively members of the visible Church, though they be members in appearance. For if they were in their right place, they should not be said to creepe in. The true members of the Church creepe not into the mysticall bodie, but are built and set upon the foundation laid by God. It may be alleaged, that they are baptised, & thereby made members of the Church. I answer, that faith makes us members of Christ, and consequently of the true Church: and baptisme doth but seale our insition into Christ, and serves as a meanes of admission into the outward societie of the congregation: and the outward washing doth not make any man a member of Christ. Againe, it followes hence, that false brethren are not members of the Catholike Church: For the visible Church is part of the Catholike: and therefore they which are not reall members of the true visible Church, are not members of the Catholike.

B Againe, in that false brethren crepe into the congregation, hence it appeares, that no man can set downe the precise time when errours and their beginnings. For the authors thereof enter in secretly, not observed of men. The envious man sowes his tares whereupon he is asleepe, Mat. 13. It sufficeth therefore, if wee can shew them to bee errours by the word, though we cannot designe the set time when they began. The time when a ship saileth, we often observe: but the time when it first drew water, we do not. Like the Papists in this upon this.

C Paul having thus declared who were the causes that Titus was not circumcised, goes on, and shewes how they were causes. The effect and summe of his declaration is this: They urged the observation of the Ceremoniall law, as necessary: and hereupon we refused to circumcise Titus. For the which cause, Paul sets down how they urged circumcision, and that by three degrees. First, privily: secondly, openly. Secondly, they spie out our libertie. Thirdly, they labour to bring us into bondage. Against Paul set down the manner of our resistance, in three things. We gave not place for an houre. We gave not place by subjection. We give no place, place, that the truth of the Gospell might continue with you.

The first degree or step in their urging of circumcision was, that They came in privily: that is, they joyned themselves in fellowship with the Apostles, and in shew pretended the furtherance of the Gospell: and yet indeed meant nothing lesse: though their fraud and wickednesse was not perceived. Here then the foundation they lay of all their naughtie dealing, is their dissembling, which Paul here notes and condemnes. On the contrarie, our duty is, to be indeed that which we professe our selves to be: and so professe no more outwardly, than we are inwardly: and to approve our hearts to God, for that which we professe before men.

The second step or degree is, that they spie out the libertie which Paul and the rest had by Christ: that is, they conferre with the Apostles, and inquire of them what libertie they have by Christ, in respect of the Ceremoniall law of God: and this they doe, not of a minde desirous to learne, but for advantage sake. There be two kinds of spying: one lawfull; the other unlawfull. Lawfull, as when in just and lawfull war, we inquire into the counsels and doing of our enemies, Numb. 13.1. Unlawfull, when men prie into any thing, or matter, to finde a fault. Thus hypocrites spie faults in the persons and lives of men, that they may have some what wherewith to disgrace them, Matth. 7.4. Thus Atheists prie into the Scriptures, that they may confute them. Thus sundrie heatens come to sermons, that they may carpe. Thus our enemies enquire into our religion, that they may finde (as they suppose) exceptions, untruthes, and contradictions. And so the Church of Jerusalem, false brethren enquire how farre Christian liberty extended, that they may overthrow it. This kind of spying is a common fault; wee must take heed of it, and apply the eie of our minde to a better use. First, we are to be spies, in respect of our owne sinnes and corruptions, to spie them out, Lam. 3.40. Let us search our waies, and inquire, and turne again to the Lord. Againe, we are to play the spies, in respect of our spirituall enemies, that we may finde out the temptations of the flesh, the world, and the devil. Thirdly, we must be as spies, in the reading of the Scriptures, Joh. 5.39. that we may understand the words of the law of God, and the doctrine of our soules.

The third and last degree of urging is, that the false brethren let in to bring the Apostles in bondage, that is, to binde them to a necessarie observation of the ceremoniall law. Here let us mark the practise and pollicie of the devill. Let the ceremoniall law, (saith the ceremoniall law) be the treasure of the Church: and therefore the devill seeke to overthrow it by bringing men in bondage under abolished ceremonies. Thus at this day, the rest of the Papists thinke we are in bondage under no bonds of humane traditions, being indeede a yoake farre heavier than that of the ceremoniall law. Againe, when men professe the name of Christ, the devill is content with it and he endeavours with all his might, every wheie to hold them under the bondage of sinne, and to hold them in his striture: at his will. Thus under the name of Christianitie, there be swarmes of Atheists, Epicures, Libertines, worldlings, and prophane persons. At this time, according to ancient custome, wee celebrate the memorial of the birth of Christ: and yet no time so full of disorder as this. For the most that professe Christ take and challenge to themselves a licencious libertie, to live and doe as they list: and this kind of liberty is flat bondage. But they that are servants of Christ indeed should take heed of this bondage: for being free from sin, they should be servants of righteousnesse, Rom. 6.18. They that be of a corporation, stand for their liberties: what a shame then is it, that men should love in bondage, and neglect the spirituall libertie which they have by Christ?

Thus we see how the false brethren urged circumcision, now let us come to Pauls refusall. The first point is, that they would not give place for an houre. It seemes they were requested to use circumcision but once: but they would not yeeld so much as once: because their act would have tended to the prejudice of Christian liberty in all places. Here we learne, that we may not use the least dissimulation that is in the case of confession before our adversaries, that is, when they seeke to oppresse the truth by force or by fraud, and make ceremonies, signes, and tokens, of the confession of any untruth. Julian the Emperor sitting in a chaire of estate, gave gold to his soldiers; one by one, with all commanding to cast of frankincense so much as a graine into the fire, that lay upon an heathenish altar before him. Now Christian souldiers refused to doe it: and they which had not refused, afterward recalled their act, and willingly suffered death.

Againe, here we learne, that we are not to yeeld from the least part of the truth of the Gospell, that God hath revealed to us. This truth is more precious than the whole world besides and heaven and earth shall rather passe, than the least title of it shall not be accomplished. The reason why the Apostle was to teach them to doe all things which God had commanded. Therefore the union or mixture of our religion with the Popish religion, is but a meere adulterous Polticie: for such a mixture we must yeeld, and they must yeeld each to other, but we may not yeeld a jot of the truth: even as one Theocrene fellowship of light with darknesse, &c. Colequintius thus a naughtie pot herbe marred a whole goodly pottage: a few words of Christ saith in the like case of the Apostles, Leave him alone, he is a guide of the blind, Matt. 15. 14. We may not yeeld in any kinde to the very least not in points of religion. In matters of this world we may be indifferent, and of neither side; but in matters of God we may not. There is no halting betweene two religions.

The second point is, they gave not place by the way of subjection. The reason is, the Apostles were of highest authoritie, simply to bee beleeved in their doctrine. And they had extraordinary authority to punish them that rebelliously withstood them, Act. 5.5. & 10. and Act. 13.20. 2 Cor. 10.6. For this cause they were not to stand subject to the judgement and censure of any man. They willingly suffered their doctrine to be tried, yet were they not bound to subjection, as other Ministers of the new Testament are, 1 Corinth. 14.32. 1 Joh. 4.1. It may be said, If they would not give place by subjection, how then gave they place? Ans. There is two kindes of yeelding: one by toleration without approbation, the other by subjection, which is the greatest approbation that can be. By the first, it may be Paul was content to give place, but not by the second. Here we see how we are to yeeld to the corruptions of the times in which we live, whether they be in manners, or in doctrine. We are to give place by meeke and patient bearing of that which we cannot mend, but we are not to give place by subjection.

The third point is the end of Pauls refusall, That the truth of the Gospell might continue: that is, that the Gospell might bee preserved in puritie and integritie in all things. And by this Paul gives us to understand, that if circumcision be made a necessarie cause of justification and salvation, the truth of the Gospell doth not continue. Here let us observe, that when justification or salvation is ascribed to works of sacraments, the truth of the Gospell gives place, and falshood comes in the roome. Wherefore the religion of the Church of Rome is in meere deprivation of the Gospell, for it makes works to be the meritorious causes of justification and salvation. Nay, which is more, it teacheth men to worship a peece of bread, and to invocate dead men, and to kneele downe to stocks and stones.

* I learned nothing, or, I was not taught.

6. And of them that seemed to be great ( what they were in times past, it makes no matter to me: God accepteth no mans person:) for they that seemed to be chiefe added nothing to me.*

Here Paul layes downe the second signe of his approbation, namely, their in conference hee learned nothing of the chiefe Apostles. And this he expresseth in the first words, in which the circumlocution which he useth is to be observed. For having begun a sentence, he breakes it off in the middest, and conceales the latter part, and leaves it to be supplyed by the reader thus; Of them that seemed to be great I will not take him, or, I learne nothing. The like forme, of speaking is used, 2 Cor. 11.16. Where Labor saith, If the Lord blesse me, and heavenly men conceiling the end of his sentence, I will be translated, thou, and thou.

In the roome of this concealement, Paul puts an answer to an objection. For some man might take exception against his former speech thus: Thou calleth the Apostles great, but thou speakest faindly; for thou knowest they were but poore fishermen. To this hee makes answer thus; What they were once, it makes no matter to me. Then he renders a reason of his answer, God accepteth no mans person. This done, he proceeds and renders a reason of his first speech: he learned nothing of the chiefe Apostles; because they did not communicate any thing to him, either in doctrine or counsell.

Luk. 10.16.

The Use. This verse serves to expound other places in S. John. Where Christ promiseth to give his Spirit to his Disciples, to teach them all things, Joh. 14.26. and to lead them into all truth, Joh. 16.13. Now these promises directly and properly concerne the Apostles, and they are here verified in Paul; who was so farre forth taught by God, and led into all truth, that the chiefe Apostles could not teach, or communicate any thing to him. For all this, though Paul and the rest were led into all truth, that they could not erre, yet were they not led into all holinesse of life, that they could not sinne. Paul saith, To will is present with me, but he addes, that hee cannot doe the good he would. Christ saith to all the Apostles, Hee that is washed, and is all cleane, needs but have his feet washed, Joh. 13.10. Wherefore they are to be rebuked, that thinke there must be no want at all in them that are Preachers of the Gospell, and hereupon take occasion to despise their Ministerie, if they can spie any thing amisse in their doings. Upon the same ground they might reject the ministerie of the Apostles. For though they could not erre in preaching and writing, and though they had no need to be taught of any man, yet were they not free from sin in their lives, and the chiefe of them sundrie times failed.

Againe, here we learne, that there is a good and lawfull kinde of boasting: and that is, when a man is disgraced, and his disgrace is the dishonour of God, and the disgrace of the Gospell. This makes Paul here to say, that he learned nothing of the chiefe Apostles. For if he had said otherwise, he should have been reprobate, and no more but an ordinary Disciple, and the doctrine which he taught before this conference, should have been called in question. For this cause he stands upon it, that they did not communicate any thing unto him. Upon the like occasion hee professeth that hee will boast, 2 Cor. 11.16. Here the saying of Salomon may be objected, Let another man, and not thine owne, praise thee, and not thine owne, Prov. 27.2. Ianswer: It sufficeth for the truth of sundrie proverbs, if they bee commonly, ordinarily, and usually true, though they bee not generally true. Thus ordinarily men are not to praise themselves: yet in a speciall and extraordinarie case, it may be otherwise. And the manner which Paul useth in commending of himselfe, is to be observed. First, he doth it in great modestie; because in speaking of himselfe, hee concealeth that part of the sentence which should have served to expresse his praise. Secondly, in praising of himselfe, he is not carried with envie, but his care is to maintaine the good name of the rest of the Apostles, when hee saith, What they have beene, it is no matter to mee. Here then we see, that the Atheists doe Paul wrong, who challenge him for pride and presumption, as though hee could not brooke an equall, and withall scorned to learne of any. Againe, by Pauls example we are to take notice of a common sinne. Mens hearts are so possessed with selfe-love, and they are so addicted to their owne praise, that it is grieſe to them to heare any praised beside themselves: whereas love bindes us as well to take care for the good name of others, as of our owne.

When Paul saith, What they were in times past, it matters not to me: we learne, that we are to esteeme of men, not as they have beene, but as they are. Peter, James, and John, though they had beene fisher-men, yet are they honoured of Paul as Apostles. Therefore when men have repented, wee may not upbraid them with their lives past. Neither may wee take occasion to contemne them that bee in authoritie, because we have known what they have beene heretofore: but everie man is to be esteemed according to his calling, and according to the grace of God given him. Like is Gods mercifull dealing towards us. For he accepts men, not as they have beene, but as they are when they repent. Therefore if Satan shall at any time object thy life past, say unto him thus: Tell me not what I have beene, but tell me what I am, and what I will be. This sufficeth when we repent.

God accepteth the person of no man.] By person is meant, not the substance of a man, or the man himselfe, but the outward qualitie or condition of man, as countrey, sex, birth, condition of life, riches, povertie, nobilitie, wisdome, learning, &c. And God is said, not to accept the person, because he doth call men, bestow his gifts, and give judgement, according to his owne wise and just pleasure, and not according to the outward appearance and condition of the person. Read Iob 34. 19. It may be objected, that God deales not equally with them that are equall: because all men are equall in Adam, and of them hee chuseth some to eternall life, and refuseth others. I answer: Hee is said to accept persons that deales unequally with men, being bound to deale equally: now God is not thus bound, because hee is soveraigne and absolute Lord over all his creatures, and may use with his owne what he will, Mat. 20. 16. Secondly, it may be objected, that God had respect to Abel and his sacrifice, Gen. 4. 4. Answ. The condition of man is two-fold; outward, inward. Outward stands in worldly and civill respects. Inward stands in a pure heart, good conscience, and faith unfained. For this only was Abel respected, Hebr. 11. 4. Though God accept not the outward person, yet in everie nation, he that feareth God is accepted of him, Act. 10. 34. Thirdly, it may be objected, that God judgeth everie man according to his workes. Answ. Though workes appeare outwardly, yet the root and ground of them is in the heart. And the judgement of God is according to them, as they are fruits of the faith of the heart.

The Use. All men are in this to be like unto God their heavenly Father: not accepting persons in their dealings. As Magistrates in the execution of justice, Deut. 1. 17. Ministers in teaching, and in the reproving of sinne, Mark, 12. 14. and all beleevers, who are not to have religion in acceptation of persons, Iam. 2. 1. This acceptation is the ruine of societies. And it is the common fault. For usually elections are made, offices bestowed, and justice executed with partialitie, and with blinde respects to countrey, kindred, friendship, money.

Secondly, wee are all taught to feare the judgement of God, and to prepare our selves with all diligence, that wee may bee found worthy to stand before God in that great day. For we must come naked before him, and hee will have no respect to our birth, our riches, our learning. Therefore it is good for us how to put on Christ, that in him wee may be accepted. For with him the Father is well pleased.

Thirdly, wee may not set our hearts upon the outward things of this world, because God doth not respect us for them. But we are earnestly to seeke after the things that make us accepted with God, as true faith, righteousnesse, and good conscience, Rom. 14. 17.

Againe, superiours must be admonished to deale moderately with their inferiours, Col. 4. 1. Againe, inferiours are to comfort themselves if they bee oppressed: in that God the Judge of all accepts no persons.

Lastly, here we learne that when wee shall have immediate fellowship with God in heaven, all outward respect of persons shall cease. God himselfe and the Lambe Christ Jesus shall be all in all to the Elect.

In the end of the verse Paul addes, They had communicated nothing to me. But to the contrarie, Rom. 1. 13. may be objected: where Paul desires to come to Rome, that he might be comforted by their mutuall faith both his and theirs. Ans. Though the Apostles did communicate nothing to Paul, in respect of doctrine or judgement, yet might they, or else meanest beleevers, confer something unto him, in respect of comfort, or the confirmation of his faith: and thus much he signifieth to the Romanes. Here is a good reason for them that that come to no Sermons, because they can learne nothing. Put the case they were as learned as the Apostles, yet might they profit in hearing, in respect of comfort, of faith, and good affection.

7. But on the contrarie, when they saw that the Gospell over the uncircumcision was committed unto mee, as the Apostle over the circumcision was to Peter.

8. (For he that was mightie by Peter in the Apostleship over the circumcision, was also mightie by me toward the Gentiles.)

9. And when Iames, and Cephas, and John, knew the grace of God that was given to mee, (which are accounted pillars,) they gave to mee, and to Barnabas, the right hand of fellowship, that we should preach to the Gentiles, and they unto the Circumcision.

The words of more difficultie are thus to be explained. [Contrariwise] that is, they did communicate nothing to mee in way of correction, but on the contrarie, they gave mee the hand of fellowship. Againe, the words [circumcision, and uncircumcision] signifie the nation of the Jewes, and the Gentiles, the one circumcised, the other uncircumcised. And when Paul saith; that the grace of God was given to him, he meanes specially the gift of an Apostle, Rom. 1. 5. Lastly, to give the right hand of fellowship to Paul, is to esteeme and acknowledge him for their Colleague, or fellow-Apostle, by giving the right hand in token thereof.

The contents of the words are these: Here Paul sets downe the third signe of his approbation, namely, that the chiefe Apostles acknowledged him for their fellow-Apostle, vers. 9. Secondly, hee sets downe the manner, how the chiefe Apostles acknowledged this fellowship, and that was, by making a covenant with Paul, that hee should preach to the Gentiles, and Peter to the Jewes. Thirdly, hee sets downe the impulsive cause, that moved the Apostles to receive Paul to their fellowship: and that was the decree of God, whereby he ordained, that Paul should bee the chiefe Apostle to the Gentiles, and Peter the chiefe Apostle among the Jewes, vers. 7. Lastly, hee sets downe the signes, whereby the Apostles knew, that Paul was ordained the Apostle of the Gentiles: and they are two; the grace of God given him, and the power of his Ministerie among the Gentiles, vers. 8, 9. Furthermore, the things here contained are in a Syllogisme disposed thus.

When the Apostles saw that I was ordained the chiefe Apostle of the Gentiles, and Peter of the Iewes, they acknowledged me for their fellow-Apostle, and made a covenant with me, that I should preach to the Gentiles, and Peter to the Iewes.

But when I was with them at Ierusalem, they saw that I was ordained the chiefe Apostle of the Gentiles, and Peter of the Iewes.

The minor is omitted, yet the proofe thereof is set downe thus: For they saw the efficacie of my Ministerie among the Gentiles, and the grace of God that was with me. Therefore they acknowledged me for their fellow-Apostle, &c.

The Use. This Text makes notably against the primacie of Peter. First therefore, let us observe the ordinance of God here plainly expressed, that Paul should bee the chiefe Apostle of the Gentiles, and Peter the chiefe Apostle of the Jewes. And this may elsewhere bee gathered. For the commission of the twelve Apostles ran thus, that they must first preach to Ierusalem and Iudea, then to Samaria: and in the last place, to the uttermost parts of the earth, Act. 1. 8. And Pauls commission was, that he should first preach to the Gentiles, and in the second place to the people of Israel, Act. 9. 16. It may be objected, that the commission of all the Apostles, was to goe into all the world, and to preach to all men without exception, Mark 16. 15. Answ. This power and libertie Christ gave to all the Apostles, and hee did not take it away afterward: nevertheless, hee ordered it by a second decree, that Paul should specially have care of the Gentiles, and Peter of the Jewes. And this the Lord did in great wisdome, that confusion and discord might bee avoided, and a regard had of all Provinces thorow the world.

Hence it followes, that the primacie of Peter, over Jewes and Gentiles, is a supposed thing. For the ordinance of God is, that Peter shall be chiefe over the Jewes, and not over the Gentiles, which were almost all the world beside. And thus the supremacie of the Pope goes to the ground, for if hee hold of Peter, and succeed him in authoritie and office, (as hee pretends) he must challenge a superiioritie over the Jewes, and hee hath nothing to doe with us. For Paul was chiefe over the Gentiles, and not Peter.

Secondly, this ordinance of God gives us to understand, that the place, Matth. 16. 18. Thou art Peter, and upon this rocke will I build my Church, &c. and I will give thee the keyes of the kingdome of heaven: doth not containe a promise made to Peter, of a primacie over all the Apostles, and over the Catholike Church. If Christ had meant any such thing in these words, hee would not have affigned the Jewes to Peter, and all the nations of the world beside to Paul. Thus we see, how this Text, for many hundred yeares, hath beene abused, and is still at this day.

Thirdly, it is false which the Papists teach, that the place in S. John, Feed my lambs, and, feed my sheepe, gives a primacie to Peter over the whole world. For by the ordinance of God, this feeding of lambs and sheepe is limited to the nation of the Jewes. Ioh. 21. 15, 16.

Lastly, whereas Eusebius saith in his Chronicle, that Peter was Bishop of Rome, & sate there 25 yeares, it hath no likelihood of truth: for then Peter lived in the breach of an expresse cómandement of God, for a long time: because the Jewes were his speciall charge.

A Againe, it is to be observed in this text, that Iames, Peter, Iohn, are made equall, all being pillars; and Iames is first named, and that not without cause. For not Peter, but Iames was the President of the Councell of Jerusalem: because hee spake the last, and concluded all, Act. 15. 13. Therefore the first naming of Peter, in other places of Scripture, is no sufficient proofe of his supremacie.

Thirdly, Peter here is said to make a covenant with Paul, that he shall be the Apostle of the Gentiles, and Peter of the Iewes. But if Peter had been head over the Church for 14. yeares together, and had but knowen the primacie which the Papists give to him, hee would not have consented to this order. It is alleaged, that Paul was the cheefe Apostle over the Gentiles, in respect of paines and labour, and not in respect of jurisdiction. I answer: This distinction hath no ground in the word of God. Againe, Paul was an Apostle, and used his Apostolicall authoritie over the Gentiles: and there is no Ecclesiasticall person that is, or can be above an Apostle. For he was simply to bee beleeved in preaching and writing, and had extraordinarie power given him by God, to punish them that rebelled.

Againe, Paul here saith, that the Gospell was committed to him and Peter, that is, that they were put in trust with it. Hence wee learne three things. The first, that the Gospell is not ours, but Gods: and that men are but the keepers of it. For this we are to praise God. The second is, that the Ministers of the Word are to keepe and maintaine the truth of it, with all faithfulnesse and good conscience: and further, to apply it to the best use, and to the greatest good of men. For this charge lies upon them that are put in trust. The third is, that the Gospell is a speciall treasure. For this, we in England are to yeeld unto God all thankfulnesse, specially by bringing forth the fruits of the Gospell. In this duetie the most of us come short: and therefore we may justly feare, lest God take from us the Gospell of life, and give it to a Nation that will bring forth the fruit of it.

Moreover, in that Paul saith, that God was mightie in him and Peter, to the Iewes & Gentiles, wee are to consider the efficacie of the Ministerie. Of it three cautions are to be observed. The first, that grace or power to regenerate, is not included in the Word preached, as vertue to heale, in a medicine. Paul saith, He that planteth, and he that watereth, is not any thing; 1 Cor. 3. 7. To regenerate, is the proper work of God, not agreeing to Angels, no not to the flesh of Christ, exalted above men and Angels. For the vertue to renew or regenerate, is not in it, as in a subject, but in the Godhead of the Son. The second caution is, that grace is not inseparably annexed and tied to the Word preached, for to some it is the savour of death to death. The third is, that the preaching of the Word is an externall instrument of faith and regeneration: and the proper effect of it is to declare, or to signifie. And it is an instrument; because when the Ministers of the Word do by it signifie & declare what is to be done, and what is the will of God, the spirit of God inwardly inlightens the minde, and inclines the heart to beleeve & obey. Hence we learne, that it is a magicall fiction, to suppose that five words, For this is my body, should transubstantiate the bread into the body of Christ. Secondly, we learn that the Sacraments doe not confer grace, ex opere operato, by the worke done. For the word & Sacraments are both of one nature (Sacraments being a visible word.) Now the word and the preaching of it doth not confer grace, but only declare what God will confer. Thirdly, by this it appeares, that charmes or spels have not force in them to cure diseases, & to worke wonders, but by faranicall operation. For the best word of all, even the word preached, hath it not. Lastly, we are here to be put in minde, that we lose no time in hearing of the word; for it is a means wherby we are cleansed & renewed. Every branch that bringeth forth fruit, God purgeth it, by his word & other meanes, that it may bring forth more fruit, Ioh. 15.

It is a thing to be observed, that the Apostles at Jerusalem acknowledged Paul to bee an Apostle, because hee had the gift of an Apostle, and because his ministerie was powerfull among the Gentiles. Therefore they which have the gift of teaching, by whom also God is powerfull in the conversion of sinners, are Ministers certainly called of God. Let them think on this, that utterly condemne the ministerie of the Church of England. For many Teachers among us can shew both the gift of teaching, and the power, or the efficacie of their Ministerie.

It is worth the marking also, that the Apostles are called Pillars. Here wee see, what is the charge of the Ministers of the Word, namely, to sustaine and to uphold the Church, by doctrine, prayer, counsell, good life. Elizeus is called of Ioas, The chariots and horsemen of Israel, 2 King. 13. 4. And the Church of God upon earth is called the Pillar and ground of truth, in respect of the Ministerie of the Word, 1 Tim. 3. 15.

Againe, in that all Ministers in their places (according to the measure of gifts received) are pillars, they are admonished hereby to be constant in the truth, against all enemies whatsoever. It is the praise of Iohn Baptist, that he was not a reed shaken of the wind, Mat. 11. 7. All beleevers are to stand fast in temptation, against their spirituall enemies, Ephes. 6. 13. and this they shall the better doe, if they bee directed by the good example of their Teachers.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, in that Ministers are pillars, wee are taught to cleave unto them and their ministerie at all times, in life and death. For we are living stones in the Temple of God: Christ is our foundation, and they be pillars to hold us up: therefore not to be forsaken, Deut. 12. 19.

Furthermore, Paul at this time was not accounted a pillar: for he saith thus, Iames, Cephas, Iohn, are accounted pillars; as who should say, I am accounted none. Thus Paul goes thorow good report and evill report, and is content to be contemned.

Lastly, the example of concord among the Apostles is to be observed: in that they give the right hand of fellowship one to another.

10. Warning only that wee should remember the poore: which thing also I was diligent to doe.

B In these words Paul sets downe the fourth and last signe of his approbation at Jerusalem, on this manner. At my departing, the Apostles warned me to remember the poore, and of no other thing did they give me warning: therefore there was a full and perfect consent betweene us.

In these words two things are set downe, the Apostolicall warning, and the practice of it by Paul: The warning in these words, Warning only that wee should remember the poore. In them three points are to bee considered. The first, that the Church of Jerusalem is in extreme povertie. And the causes of it may be two. The first, because the poorer sort received the Gospell: thus it was in Corinth, 1 Cor. 1. 26. No many wise according to the flesh, not many mightie, not many noble. The like have wee in experience at this day: the poorer sort among us doe more heartily receive it, than they of the richer sort. By this we are taught, that we may not fix our love & our confidence upon riches: and that they that buy, must bee as though they bought not, and they that possesse, as though they possessed not. Because riches steale away the heart. The second cause of their povertie was, that they were deprived of their riches for the profession of the name of Christ; 1 Thess. 2. 14. Hebr. 10. 34. Here wee are taught to sit downe, and to reckon what the profession of Christ will cost us to the uttermost: and wee must put this in our account, that we must be ready and willing to part with the dearest things in the world, for the name of Christ. And this reckoning and resolution must wee daily carrie about with us.

C The second point is, Why the Church of Jerusalem must bee releeved by the Gentiles, considering by Gods Law, Deut. 15. 11. every place must releeve his owne poore? Ans. We are first of all debtors to our owne poore, and they must first be releeved: this done (in the case of extreme necessitie) we are debtors to the poore a thousand miles off. And in this case did the Apostles crave releefe of the Gentiles for them at Jerusalem.

The third point is, that the Apostles themA selves are carefull for the gathering of releefe. Hence wee learne, that it is the office of Pastors and Teachers, not only to preach and dispence the Word, but also to have care of the poore: and this care is to bee shewed in exhortation, counsell, oversight. As for the administration and execution of matters belonging to the poore, it belongs to others. If the Apostles at any time gathered, carried, and dispensed releefe, it was because the Church was not yet founded and planted, and therefore there was no other to doe it.

Now I come to the practice of Paul in these words, Which thing also I was diligent to doe. Here first let us marke, that Paul who had spoiled and made havock of the Church of Jerusalem, now gathers releefe, and (as we say) begs for it: and no doubt, the rather that hee may make some recompense for the wrong hee had done. By his example we are taught to make satisfaction for all injuries and hurts done to others, and that to the uttermost. Hee that steales, according to the qualitie of his theft, must restore either two-fold, or foure-fold, Exod. 22. 7. hee that maimes a man, must pay for his healing, and for his resting, that is, for the losse of his labour, Exod. 21. 19. Daniel saith to Nabuchadnezzar, O King, breake off thy sinnes with almes-deede, Dan. 4. 24. that is, whereas thou hast beene given to cruelties and oppression, cease to doe so any more, and make some recompence by giving of almes. David saith, it is the propertie of a wicked man, to borrow and not to repay, Psal. 37. 21. Satisfaction, recompence, and restitution, is the way to life, by the appointment of God. Exech. 18. 7. and 33. 15. If thou restore the pledge, and repay that which thou hast robbed, thou shalt live, and not die. The Lord saith, Are the treasures of wickednesse yet in the house of the wicked? And he addes, that he will not justifie the false balance, Micah. 6. 10, 11. Zacheus in his conversion, for knowen wrongs restores foure-fold: and for his unknowen wronges he gives halfe his goods to the poore, Luke 19. 7.

D Let Usurers, Ingrossers, and all that oppresse, or deale deceitfully, remember this; and begin to make conscience of this duetie of satisfaction, or restitution. And that it may the better bee practised, I will further set downe five points.

The first is, who must satisfie and restore? Ans. He that is the cause of any wrong, or losse to his neighbour, and all they that are accessarie. Men may be accessarie many wayes; by commandement, by counsell, by consent, by partnership, by receiving, by silence when a man ought to speake, by not hindring, when hee ought to hinder, by not manifesting that which he ought to manifest.

The second is, To whom must restitution be made? Ans. To him that is wronged, and beares the losse, (if the partie be knowen and alive:) if he be dead, to his heires; if all be dead, to the poore. If the person wronged bee not knowen to us (as often it fals out) then restitution is to be made to the Church or Common-wealth, and restitution is to bee turned into almes for the poore, Dan. 4. 24. Moreover, if both the giving and receiving of a thing be unlawfull, as in bribes and simoniacall gifts, restitution is not to be made to the giver, but as before, it is to be applied to common use, specially to releefe.

The third point is, What must bee restored? Ans. The things which are of us unjustly received, or detained, either knowen to us, or unknowen. If they be knowen, they are in their owne kinde to bee restored, or in value, Exod. 21. 19. If the partie who is to restore be in extreme povertie, and have not wherewith to make recompence, hee must doe that which he can, that is, hee must shew a readie and willing minde: and this is done by confession, and by craving of pardon. If goods to be restored, bee for their value and quantitie unknowen, then restitution must be made according to the judgement and discretion of them that are wise.

The fourth point is, touching the time when. Answ. In respect of preparation of minde, we must presently satisfie: yet not in respect of execution. For the act of restitution may be deferred, if there be ignorance of the right, or ignorance of the fact, if the restorer be in extreme need: or if upon present restitution, life, goods, or good name be endangered.

The last point is, in what order and manner restitution is to be made. Answ. Things certaine must first be restored, and things uncertaine after. Among things certaine, that is, which certainly belong unto another, things bought and not delivered, are to be restored; and Deposita, things committed to our trust. If things to bee restored for their value and qualitie be uncertaine, the order is, this restitution must be made (according to the discretion of wise men) in some part: and for the rest, pardon to be craved. Againe, in restitution warinesse is to be used, lest by supplying the losses of other men, wee procure to our selves the losse of good name.

Againe, in Pauls practice wee see an earnest care and diligence to provide for the poore. And his diligence is further expressed, Rom. 15. 25, 28. where it is said, that he ministred to the Saints at Ierusalem, and withall, that hee gave himselfe no rest in this dutie, till he had sealed this fruit unto them, that is, till hee saw it done according to his desire. His example must be followed of us. It is not enough for us to give good words, and to wish well, but wee must in our places and callings doe our endevour, that releefe may even bee sealed to our poore. And there bee many reasons to move us. First, let us consider that the charge was verie great, to maintaine the altar of the Lord in the old Testament, with sheep, and oxen, and offerings of all kindes: and now in the new Testament, the poore come in the roome of the Altar. Secondly, the poore represent the person of Christ, and in them he comes unto us, and saith, I am hungrie, I am naked, I am harborlesse: therefore looke what we would doe to Christ, the same must we doe to them. Thirdly, the poore have title and interest to part of our goods: for God is the Lord of them, and we are but stewards to dispose and use them, according to his appointment. And his will is, that part of our goods be given for the releefe of the poore. If this be not done, we are theeves in respect of the goods we possesse. Lastly, mercie, or the bowels of compassion in us, is a pledge, or an impression of the mercie that is in God towards us: and by it we may know, or feele in our selves, that mercie belongs unto us. Thus we see what is our dutie: now let us consider what is our fault. Not to blame any person or persons, it is our common fault, that we are backward and slack in this dutie. And the cause is, in that we doe not heartily give our selves to Christ: and this makes us to bee so slacke in giving our goods to the poore, 2 Cor. 9. 5. Againe, wee commonly live (as it were) without a law. Wee doe not with David set Gods Law before us, Psal. 119. v. 168. Neither doe wee apply our hearts to his statutes, v. 112. For thes would we with David make haste to keepe the commandements of God, v. 60. specially this great commandement of releefe: and the rather, because the observing of it is the enriching of us all.

Lastly, let us marke, that Paul being warned of the Apostles, was diligent to doe that whereof he was warned. The like must wee doe. It is not sufficient to heare; but beside this, there must bee in us a care and diligence to doe and practise that which we heare. For this is to build upon the rocke. And it is a common fault to heare much, and doe little, Ezech. 33. 24.

Vers. 11. And when Peter was come to Antioch, I withstood him to his face: for hee was to be blamed.

In these words Paul propounds the second answer, which hee makes to the objection, mentioned in the beginning of the chapter, to this effect: Though the Church glorifie God for thee, yet will not the Apostles doe it, because thou art contrarie to them. Here Paul answers, that there was indeed a dissention betweene him and Peter, when he withstood Peter to his face at Antioch: but the fault was not his, but Peters, who was wholly to be blamed.

For the better understanding of these words, three points are to bee handled. The first is, who was resisted? The answer is, Peter the Apostle. For the intent of this chapter is, to shew what agreement there was betweene Paul and the rest of the Apostles. And there was no Apostle of this name but one. Therefore, fore, they among the Ancient are greatly deceived, who thinke that the Apostle Peter was not reproved, but some other of that name. The second point is, who resisted? Answ. Paul: and that not for shew and fashion, but in truth and good earnest. And this appeares, because in the words following he sets downe a weightie and urgent cause of his reproofe. Therefore Jerome and others are deceived, who thinke that Paul reproved Peter in shew and appearance*, and not in good earnest. The third point is, what was Pauls minde and meaning, in resisting Peter? Answ. To doe his office. The kingdome of God, and all things pertaining thereto, must have free passage without resistance. The second petition is, Thy kingdome come. Iohn the Baptist preached thus, Prepare the way of the Lord, and make his pathes straite, Mark. 1. Saint Paul saith, Pray that the word of God may have free passage, and bee glorified, 2 Thess. 3. 1. Contrarie wise, such things as hinder the kingdome of God must be withstood. Therfore Peter saith, Resist your adversarie the devill, strong in faith, 1 Peter 5. 9. And thus men that are instruments of evill, are to be withstood. And here Paul, by an holy reproofe, withstands Peter for his bad example.

In Paul, here first we may behold an example of true vertue, in that he resists evill to the uttermost of his power, following his owne rule, Abhorre that which is evill, and cleave unto that which is good, Rom. 12. 9. Have no fellowship with the unfruitfull workes of darknesse, but rather reprove them, Eph. 5. 11. In like manner must every one of us resist evill; first, in himselfe, and then in them that appertaine to him. Therefore Paul saith to all, Put on the armour of God, that ye may resist, Eph. 6. 13. Here two things may be demanded: first, what must wee resist? Paul answers againe, Principalities, and powers, and spirituall wickednesse: that is, the devill, and all his angels. It may be said, we have no dealing with them, for they use not to appeare unto us. Ans. The devill comes not unto us visibly, but in the persons of evill men, and in the bad examples of all men. This made Christ say to Peter, Matth. 16. 23. Come behind me, Satan, for thou art an offence unto me, when Peter would have dissuaded him from going to Jerusalem. Againe, it may be said, In what things must we resist them? Paul answereth, In heavenly things, ver. 12. that is, in things which pertaine to Gods kingdome, and concerne either the salvation of our soules, or the worship of God. For the devill seeketh by all manner of evils, to hinder these good things. Moreover, this duty of resisting evill is so necessarie, that we must resist shine, if need be, to the very shedding of our bloud, Heb. 12. 4.

Againe, wee have in Paul an example of boldnesse and libertie in reproving of sinne. This was a thing commanded to the Prophets and Apostles, Isa. 58. 1. Cry and spare not, lift up thy voyce like a trumpet, shew my people their transgression, Jer. 1. 17. Trust up thy loines, arise and speake unto them all that I command thee: be not afraid of their face, lest I destroy thee before them. Like liberty may the Ministers of the word use, observing Pauls rule, 1 Tim. 1. 7. God hath not given us the spirit of feare, but of power, and of love, and of a sound minde. Where he sets downe three caveats. First, that this libertie in reproving is not the fruit of a bold and rash disposition, but it is a fruit of Gods spirit, and so to bee acknowledged. Reade Micah 3. 8. The second, that the use of this libertie is to bee ordered by a sound minde, whereby wee are able to give a good account of our reproofes, both for the matter, and manner of them. The third is, that all our admonitions must bee seasoned and tempered with love; that they tend to the good and salvation of them that are reproved. These caveats observed, libertie in reproving shall never want his blessing, Isa. 50. 7.

Thirdly, here is an example in Paul, of an ingenuous and honest minde. When he sees Peter do amisse, he reproves him to his face. Contrarie to this is the common practice in back-biting, whispering, and tale-bearing, whereby it comes to passe, that when a man is in fault, every man knowes it, save he which is in fault. This vice the law of God expresly forbids, Levit. 19. 16. And it is the propertie of a good man, not to take up a false report, Psal. 15. And David reproves Saul, because hee did but lend the eare to tale-bearers, saying, Wherefore givest thou an eare to mens words that say, behold David seeketh evill against thee? 1 Sam. 24. 10.

In Peter, who when he was reproved made no reply, we see an example of patience and humility, whereby he humbled himselfe before the reprover, when he was convicted of an offence. The like was in David when hee said, let the righteous smite mee, Psal. 141. v. 4.

Whereas Paul saith, that Peter was to bee blamed or condemned, not in respect of his person, but of his example: we see that excellent men, even the chiefe Apostles, are subject to erre and be deceived. It may be said, How then may wee trust them in their writings? I answer, while they were in delivering any thing to the Church, whether it were by sermon or writing, they were guided by the infallible assistance of the spirit, and could not erre. Otherwise they might erre, when they were out of this worke, in minde, will, & affection, or action. Thus Ionas, when he saw that Nineve was not destroied, was impotent in his anger. Nathan was deceived in giving advice to David, touching the building of the temple, 2 Sam. 7. The Apostles at the ascension of Christ, still dreamed of an earthly kingdome, saying, When wilt thou restore the kingdome to Israel? Act. 1. And Peter being bidden to arise, and eat of things forbidden by the ceremoniall law, said, Not so Lord, Act. 10. 14.

Thus

Thus then, if Peter was subject to errour, the pretended successors of Peter, namely, the Bishops of Rome, cannot be free from errour. It is alleaged, that Peter erred in life; and not in doctrine. I answer, it was so indeed: yet did his bad example tend to the ruine of doctrine, if it had not beene prevented. Therefore, the errour that was in act, if wee respect the euent, was in doctrine. Againe, I answer, that an errour in action presupposeth an errour in minde, or at the least, some ignorance: because the minde is the beginning of the thing done. Thus all sinners are called ignorant persons, Heb. 5. 2. And it seemeth that the errour of Peter was, that of two evils, it was the best to choose the losse: that is, to choose rather to offend the Gentiles, than the Jewes, to whom he was an Apostle specially appointed.

Here againe wee miserable wretches are taught to watch and pray, that God would not lead us into temptation, considering most excellent men are subject to falling. And men must be warned not to abuse Peters example in bolstering themselves in their naughtie waies, by saying, weare all sinners, that the best man alive is a sinner, that the just man falls seven times a day. For the place in the Proverbs 24. 14. is spoken of affliction and not of sinne: the just man falls seven times, that is, he falls into manifold perils. And further, we should not only consider the faults of just men, but also their conversion and repentance. And againe, to sinne and to commit sinne are two divers things. Though the godly sinne, yet doe they not keepe a course in sinning and goe on from sinne to sinne.

Vers. 12. For before certain came from Iames, he ate with the Gentiles: but when they were come, he withdrew himselfe, fearing them that were of the circumcision.

Vers. 13. And other Iewes dissembled likewise with him: in so much that Barnabas was brought into their dissimulation also.

The Apostle hath propounded his second answer in the former verse: now hee proceeds to make a declaration of it. And first, hee sets downe the cause why Peter was reproved, and the manner of reproofe. The cause is in the 12. and 13. verse, namely Peters sin. And this sinne is set forth by foure things. By the name of the sinne, the matter of the sinne, the cause of the sinne, the effects of the sinne.

The name of the sinne is noted, when Paul saith, And other Iewes dissembled likewise with him, &c. where I gather that Peters sinne was Simulation. Simulation of it selfe is a thing indifferent, and according to circumstances is either good or evill. Lawfull simulation is, when men conceit that which they may lawfully conceit, and signifie some thing either by word or deed, that is only beside the truth and not contrary to it. This was the Simulation of Ioseph, who carried himselfe as a stranger to his brethren in Egypt after he had examined them, and knew who they were, Gen. 42.

This was the Simulation of Christ, who when he was come to Emaus, made as though he would have gone further, Luk. 24. 28. Thus Paul among the Jewes plaid the Jew, 1 Cor. 9. 20. Unlawfull Simulation is, when something is signified or fained against the truth, or to the prejudice of any. Of this kind was the simulation of Peter, which tended to the prejudice of the Gospel, and to the offence of the Gentiles.

The second point is, the matter of the sinne, or the sinne it selfe, which was on this manner. First, among the Gentiles at Antioch, hee useth Christian libertie, in eating things forbidden by the ceremoniall law: yet after the comming of certaine Jewes from Jerusalem hee separates himselfe from the Gentiles, and plaies the Jew among the Jewes. Like to this was the halting of the Israelites betweene God and Baal, 1 King. 18. 21. and the practice of sundry men, who are Protestants with us, and yet in other countries goe to Masse: and the practice of our people, who change their religion with the times.

Here wee see the great weaknesse of Peter, in that upon a very little occasion, and that presently, he falls away from his profession to his old course. In him wee may behold our owne weaknesse, and consider what wee are like to doe in like case. We now professe the Gospel of Christ: yet if any occasion were offered, it is to be feared, that many of us would be easily moved to returne to our old prophanenesse, and to the superstition of Popery. But for the staying and the better establishing of our minses, let us alwaies remember, that they shall perish, who withdraw themselves from their faith, profession, and obedience, which they owe unto God, Heb. 10. 38. Psal. 73. 27.

Againe, here it must be observed, that Paul in describing the sin, expresseth two actions, his eating with the Gentiles, and his separation from them; the first good, and the latter evill. The beginning of his action was good, but the end of it was nought. The reason is this: the man regenerate is partly flesh, and partly spirit: and hereupon it is, that when we will that which is good, we cannot accomplish it, and evill is present with us. The child of God is like a lame man, that goes the right way, but yet halts at every step. Abraham and Sara desire issue, that is from the spirit: but they desire issue by Agar their handmaid, that is from the flesh. Rebecca seekes the blessing for Iacob, that is a worke of the spirit: but shee seekes it by lying, that is from the flesh: Peter eats with the Gentiles, that is from Christian liberty; he after separates himselfe, that is from corruption. Thus we see that the best workes are imperfect, and mixed with corruption: and therefore the best workes we must humble our selves, and seeke pardon; not in respect of the goodnesse of the worke, but in respect of the defect thereof.

It

It may be demanded, how the act of Peter should bee a sinne, considering he did only abstaine from certaine meats, that hee might avoid the offence of certaine Jewes? Answ. The fact of Peter considered by it selfe, is not a sinne: for Paul did the like in playing the Jew: but the circumstances make it a sin. For first of all, Peter doth not only abstaine from meats forbidden by the ceremoniall law, but also he withdrawes himselfe from the companie of the Gentiles, and keepes companie apart with the Jewes. Secondly, he abstaines not among the Jewes at Jerusalem, but at Antioch among the Gentiles, where a little before, he had openly done the contrarie, in using his Christian liberty. Thirdly, hee used this abstinencey when certain Jewes came from Jerusalem, to search out the libertie of the Gentiles. Fourthly, while Peter seekes to avoid the small offence of some Jewes, he incurres a greater offence of all the Gentiles. Lastly, this act of Peter did tend to the overthrowing of Pauls Ministerie, and the suppressing of the truth of the Gospell. Thus then the act of Peter becomes unlawfull, that was otherwise lawfull, being simply considered by it selfe. Here it may bee demanded, what Peter should have done? Ans. He should have openly withstood the Jewes that came from Jerusalem, as Paul withstood them that urged the circumcision of Titus: Or againe before he had plaid the Jew, he should have advertised the Gentiles that for a time he was to yeeld to the infirmitie of some Jewes.

In Peters example weare taught, that we must not offend God, though all the world be offended. Lesse offences must give place, when the great offence is at hand: that is, when God is dishonoured, and the very least part of his truth is suppressed.

The third point to bee considered, is, the cause of the sinne of Peter: and that was the feare of the offence of the Jewes. Here two questions are to bee handled. The first, how Peters feare should be a sinne? Answ. There is a naturall feare created by God, and placed in the heart of man. This feare of it selfe is good. Nevertheless, by the corruption of nature it becomes evill. And it is made evill two waies. One is, when men feare without cause, as when the Disciples feare Christ walking upon the sea, and feare drowning when Christ was in the ship with them. The other is, when there is no measure in feare. As when men so feare the creature, that they neglect their dutie to God. This was Peters feare, and it was a sinne in him. For God is to be feared simply, because he is Lord of body and soule, and can destroy both: and he is to be feared for himselfe, whereas every creature is to be feared in part only, and for God, Rom. 13. 3, 4. By this we are taught daily to inure our selves in our hearts to feare God above all things.

The second question is, how Peter could have the feare of God, considering hee feared men more than God, at the least in this one action? Anſ. There are three kinds of feare. One is without all sinne: this was in Adam, and in Christ. The second is altogether sinful, in the wicked and ungodly, because it is severed from faith and obedience: as when there is a feare of men, without the feare of God. The third is a mixed feare in them that are regenerate, in whom the feare of God is joyned with the corrupt feare of man. And in this mixture other whiles the one prevailes, other whiles the other. And this feare was in Peter, in whom at this time the carnall feare of man prevailed against the true feare of God.

Paul notes feare to be the cause of Peters sinne, that he may thereby signifie unto us what kind of sinne it was, namely, a sinne not of malice, but of infirmitie. A sinne of infirmitie is, when there is a purpose in the heart not to sinne: and yet for all this, the sinne is committed, by reason the will is overcarried by temptation, or by violence of affection, as by feare, anger, lust. Thus Peter sinned. And let it bee remembred, that to sinne of infirmitie is properly incident to such as be regenerate, as Peter was. Every wicked man makes his sin his infirmity: fornication is the infirmitie of the fornicator: drunkennesse the infirmitie of the drunkard, &c. But it is false which they say. For they sinne with all their hearts when they sinne.

The fourth and last point is, the effect of Peters sinne, in drawing the Jewes and Barnabas to the like dissimulation. Here we see the contagion of evill example. And hence wee learne, that Ministers of the word must of necessitie joyne with good doctrine, the example of good life. For first of all, it is the expresse commandement of God, 1 Pet. 5. 3. Be patternes of the flocke, 1 Tim. 4. 12. Be an ensample in word, conversation, love, spirit, faith, purity, Phil. 4. 8. What ye have seene in me, that doe, Matth. 5. 16. Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good workes. Secondly, practice in the Minister is a part of his teaching. For the multitude doe not marke so much what men say, as what men doe. Herod did many things, not because Iohn the Baptist was a good Minister, but because he was a good man, Mark. 6. 20. Thirdly, Ministers have not the presence and protection of God, unlesse their lives be vertuous & godly. If thou turne, thou shalt stand before me, Iere. 15. 19. God reveales his secrets to the Prophets his servants, Amos 3. 7. Lastly, fearefull judgements of God belong to Ministers of wicked lives. Destruction befals the sonnes of Eli & their families, because they by lewd example made the people of God to sinne, 1 Sam. 2. 24. The like befel the sonnes of Aaron for their presumption.

Againe, all superiours are warned to goe before their inferiours by good example. When Moses went into Egypt to be the guide of the Israelites, the Lord would have destroyed him, by reason of the bad example in his owne family, namely, the uncircumcision of his child. Dauid, for his evill example, whereby hee caused the enemies of God to blaspheme, is punished, and that after his repentance, that men might see in him an example of Gods judgement against sinne, 2 Samuel 12.14.

Here againe we see, that the consent of many together is not a note of truth. Peter, Barnabas, and the Jewes, altogether are deceived, and Paul alone hath the truth. Panormitane saith, that a lay-man bringing Scripture, is to bee preferred before a whole Councell. Papistes alone had the truth, and the whole Councell of Nice inclined to errour.

14. But when I saw that they went not with a right foot to the truth of the Gospell, I said to Peter before all men: If thou being a Iew, liuest as the Gentiles, and not like the Iewes, why constrainest thou the Gentiles to doe like the Iewes?

In these words, Paul sets down the reproofe of Peter, and the whole manner of it. In it many points are to be considered. The first is, the time of this reproofe: and that was so soone as Paul saw the offence of Peter. Here we learne, that we must resist, and cut off the first beginnings of temptation, of sinne, and of superstition, because we are prone to evill: and therefore if it once set footing in us, it wil take place.

The second point is the foundation of the reproofe in these words [when I saw,] and that is a certain knowledge of Peters offence. Here we are to take notice of the common fault, and that is, that we use to censure, and condemne men, specially publike persons, upon suspitions, and conjectures, and heare say: whereas we should not open our mouthes to reprove, till we have certain knowledge of the fault. Moreover, publike persons, as Magistrates and Ministers, have their privilege, that an accusation is not to bee received against them, without there be a proofe by two or three witnesses, 1 Tim. 5. 20.

The third point is, the fault reproved, which is here expressed by another name, not to walke with a right foot to the truth of the Gospel: that is not to converse with men, and to carry himselfe so, as he may be sutable to the sincerite of the Gospel, both in word and deed.

Here is a notable duty set downe for all men, To walke with an euen foot according to the truth of the Gospel: and this is done, when in word and deed, and every way, we ascribe all the good we have or can doe, to grace, to mercie, and to Christ: when againe, in word, and deed, and every way, we give all thankes to God, for grace and mercy by Christ. Here two sorts of men are to bee condemned, as halters in respect of the truth of the Gospel. The first are Papists, who joyne Christ and workes in the cause of our justification and salvation. The second are carnall Protestants, and all other sorts of men, that professe the name of Christ, and withal challenge to themselves a libertie to live as they list. For they walke contrarie to the Gospel, disjoyning justification and sanctification, faith and good life, remission of sinne and mortification. This is the rife and common sinne of our daies. We are light in the Lord, but we walke not as children of light. We are content to come to the marriage of the kings sonne, but we come not with the marriage garment. It is to be feared, this very sinne will banish the Gospel, and bring all the judgements of God upon us. Let us therefore repent of our uneven and halting liues: and prevent the Lords anger, by walking worthy the Gospel of Christ.

It will be said, how must we performe this duty? Answ. Two rules must be remembred. The first is, that we must have and carrie in us a right heart. For the want of this was Simon Magus condemned, Act. 8. 21. A right heart is an humble and an honest heart. The humble heart is, when in estimation of our owne hearts, we abase our selves under all creatures upon earth, and that for our offences: when againe, in the affection of our hearts, wee exalt the death and bloud of Christ, above all riches, above all honours, above all pleasures, above all joyes, and above all that heart can thinke, or tongue can speake. The honest heart is, when we carrie, and cherish in our hearts the setled purpose of not sinning: so as if we sinne at any time, we may in the testimony of a good conscience say, that we sinned against our purpose. The second rule is, that we must make straight steps to our feet. Heb. 12. 13. And that is done, when wee endevour to obey God, according to all his commandements, Psal. 119. 6. and also, according to all the powers of the inward man, that is not only in action, but also in will, affection, and thought. Let us also apply our hearts to the doing of this, lest if wee come to the marriage of the Kings sonne without the garment of a right heart and life, wee heare the sentence, Binde them hand and foot, and cast them into vtter darknesse, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

The fourth point is the place of reproofe: [before all men:] for they that sinne openly to the offence of many, are openly to be reproved, 1 Tim. 5. 20.

The fifth point is, concerning the reasons which Paul useth for the restraining of the sinne of Peter. The first is set downe in the 14. verse, If thou being a Iew, &c. Here the meaning of some words are to be opened. To Iudaize, or to live as a Iew, is to observe (and that necessarily,) a differance of meats and times, according to the ceremoniall law of Moses. To Gentilize, or to live as a Gentile, is to use meats, and drinkes, and times, freely without difference. Peter is said, to compell the Gentiles to Iudaize, not by teaching of any doctrine (for the Apostles never erred in teaching and delivering any thing to the Church of God: this is a principle:) therefore he constrained them them by the authority of his example: whereby he caused them to thinke that the observation of the Ceremoniall law was necessary.

The first reason then is framed thus: If thou being a Jew, usest to live as the Gentiles; thou maist not by thy example compell the Gentiles to Judaize in the necessarie observation of ceremonies: but thou being a Jew, usest to live as the Gentiles: therefore thou maist not compell the Gentiles to live as Jewes.

Here first let us observe the force of evill example: it compels men to be evill. Therefore let all superiours, Magistrates, Ministers, and all governours of families, looke to their examples: for if they be evill, they constraine others also to be evill.

Here againe we see what wonderfull subjection the ancient beleevers yeelded to the ministerie of the word. For if the actions of the Apostles compelled men to doe this or that, what then did their doctrines and heavenly exhortations doe? When Iohn the Baptist preached, the kingdome of heaven suffered violence, and the violent tooke it to themselves. Matth. 11. 12. When the Disciples preached in Iurie, they saw Satan falling downe from heaven like lightning. Luk. 10. 18. The weapons of Paul were spirituall, to cast downe holds, and to bring every thought in subjection to God. 2 Cor. 10. 4. Here the fault of our time is to bee considered. We have the forme of godlinesse, in hearing and in outward profession, but we want the power of it. For we do not in heart yeeld subjection by suffering our selves to be urged and compelled to obedience by the authoritie of the Ministerie.

Thirdly, here we see wherein stood Peters sinne: namely, in that he constrained men to a necessarie observation of the Ceremoniall law: by his example binding the Gentiles to the doing of that which the Gospell hath made free. Therefore we greatly mis the wicked nesse of the Romane Religion, in that it placeth a necessitie in many things; in the use whereof, Christ hath procured us an holy and Christian libertie. In this respect there was no perpetuall continency, of poverty and regular obedience, are falsly termed states of perfection; and are indeed estates of abomination.

15. We who (are Iewes by nature) and not sinners of the Gentiles.

16. Know that a man is not justified by the workes of the law, but by the faith of Iesus Christ: we (I say) have beleeved in Iesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Iesus Christ, and not by the workes of the law: because by the workes of the law no flesh shall be justified.

Here Paul frames downe the second reason of his reproofe: it is framed thus: That which we defend, both in judgement and practise, that must we urge, and not the contrarie: but justification by faith without workes, we defend both in judgement and practise: therefore we must urge it, and not the contrarie, namely, the necessarie observation of the law.

The major is wanting: the minor is expressed in the 15. verse, and it is amplified by an argument of divers things, thus: Though we be Jewes, to whom the law was given; yet we forsake the law, and looke to be justified by the faith of Christ. Secondly, the minor is confirmed by a testimonie of the Psalme, vers. 16. By the workes of the law no flesh shall be justified.

Here two points are to be handled. One, of the distinction of the Jewes and Gentiles: the other of justification.

Touching the distinction of Jewes and Gentiles, sundrie points are to bee handled. The first, what is the cause of this distinction. Ans. The good will and pleasure of God. Moses saith, God chose the Israelites above all nations, Deut. 7. 6. He loved them, Deut. 18. 15. When he divided the nations, Jacob was his portion, Deut. 32. 8. He knew them above all nations, saith Amos 3. 1. And he chose them, because he loved their fathers, Deut. 4. 37. Hence we gather, the free Election of God: and that they are deceived, who thinke, that there was no difference of Jewes and Gentiles in respect of God, but in respect of themselves: because the one embraced Christ, the other refused Christ. But there cannot be a refusall, where the Messias was not knowne: and among the Gentiles he was not so much as named, Rom. 15. 20.

The second point is, wherein stands the difference of Jewes and Gentiles. Ans. Here the Jewes are opposed to sinners of the Gentiles: and therefore by the Jewes are meant an holy and peculiar people. The distinction thereof lies in this, that the one was holy, the other prophane; the one in the covenant, the other out of the covenant, Rom. 9. 4, 5. Psal. 147. 20. Here two errours must be avoided. One, that the difference lay in earthly things: which is not true. For the law was given to the Israelites: and it was a Schoolemaster to Christ, Gal. 3. and an introduction to a better hope, Heb. 7. 19. The second errour is, that they differed only in this, that Christ was more plentifully and fully revealed to the Jewes: more darkly, and sparingly to the Gentiles. But it was otherwise. For the Gentiles were without God, and Christ, Eph. 2. 12. and they were left to themselves, to walke in their owne waies, Act. 14. 16.

The third point is, how long this difference endured? Ans. Till the death of Christ. For the Disciples were forbidden to goe into the way of the Gentiles, Matth. 10. 5. And Christ saith, that he was not sent, but to the lost sheepe of the house of Israel, Matth. 15. 24. It may be objected, that here we see the difference of Jewes and Gentiles is standing long after the ascension of Christ. Ans. Christ in his death did fully merit the abolishment of this difference, Eph. 2. Nevertheless the execution of this abolishment was by degrees: and it was at this time, begunne by the ministerie of the Apostles, yet not accomplished.

The

The last point is, that the Jewes are an holy people by nature: not because holinesse is conveied to them by generation, but because even from their beginning and birth, by vertue of the covenant, they are holy. If the root bee holy, the branches are holy, Rom. 11. 16. If either of their parents beleeve, their children are holy, 1 Cor. 7. 14. In a civill contract, the father and his heire make but one person, and the father covenants for himselfe and his posteritie: even so, in the covenant of grace, he beleeves for himselfe, and withall makes his posteritie partaker of the said covenant: and thus the posterity becommeth holy. It may be objected, that whatsoever is borne of flesh, is flesh. Answ. The parent sustaines a double person. First, he is to be considered as a child of Adam, and thus he brings forth a child, having with Adams nature, Adams corruption. Againe, he is to bee considered as a beleever: and thus albeit hee doth not propagate his faith and holinesse to his child; yet by meanes of his faith, his child is in the covenant, and consequently is to be accounted holy in the judgement of charitie, till God manifest the contrary. Againe, it may be objected, that if the children of beleeving parents bee borne holy, they want originall sinne. Anf. The children also sustaine two persons. First, they are to bee considered as children of the first Adam: and thus they are conceived and borne in sinne, and are children of wrath. Againe, they are to be considered as children of beleeving parents: and thus by meanes of the covenant, they are children of God: and originall sinne which is in them, is covered from their first beginning, and not imputed to them.

The use. There was no absolute necessity of circumcision. For they which died before the eight day, were borne holy, and consequently in the covenant, and therefore might be saved: And thus Baptisme is not of absolute necessitie for the children of beleevers are borne holy and Christian: and therefore dying in the want of Baptisme, may for all that bee saved. The seale of the covenant is not of like necessity with the covenant it selfe.

Secondly here we learne, that it is not the act of Baptisme to conferre the first grace, but only to confirme and seale it unto us. Adoption and life begimnes not in Baptisme, but before. If the root be holy, the branches [springing thence are holy]. We are borne Christians, if our parents beleeve, and not made so in Baptisme.

Lastly, if wee be borne holy, it is our shame that we have made no more proceeding in holinesse, than we have done: the most remaine ignorant, and unreformed: and they of the better sort, either stand at a stay, or goe backward.

The second point is concerning Justification, in the sixteenth verse, of which sundriel things are there propounded. And first, I will A begin with the name. The word, Iustitie, is borrowed from courts of judgement, and signifies a judiciall act. Otherwhiles it is put for the action of the Judge, and then it signifies to absolve, or to pronounce innocent. Thus Paul saith, Act. 13. 39. That wee are justified from all things, from which we could not be justified by the Law of Moses, that is, absolved, or cleared. Againe, he opposeth justification to accusation and condemnation; Rom. 8. 33. Now the contrary to condemnation is absolution. Sometimes againe, the word justitie signifies the act of the party judged, or of the witnesses: and then it imports as much as to give testimony, or to declare and approve. Thus Iames saith, Abraham was justified by B workes, chap. 2. v. 22. that is, declared, and approved to be a just man by workes. In the former signification is the word used, where the holy Ghost delivereth the doctrine of justification, as in this place.

The use. Here wee see how to distinguish betweene Justification, regeneration, and renovation. Regeneration is usually in Scripture, the change of the inward man, whereby we are borne anew. Renouation is the change both of the inward and outward man, that is, both of heart and life. Justification is neither, but a certaine action in God applied unto us, or a certaine respect or relation, whereby wee are acquit of our sinnes, and accepted to life everlasting. Secondly, we must here note, that C the Teachers of the Church of Rome mistake the word, Iustification. For by it they understand nothing else, but a physicall transmutation of the qualitie, and disposition of our hearts, from evill to good. And by this mistaking, they have made a mixture, or rather confusion, of law and Gospel. Thirdly, here we see, what is to be the disposition of the partie justified: (for by the consequent we may learne the antecedent.) A man therefore that would be justified, must come before the judgement seat of God, and there must hee plead guilty, and be his owne adversarie, condemning himselfe: and being pressed with the terrours of the law, he must flie and make his appeale to the throne of grace, for pardon in Christ: and then he shall be acquit, or justified from all sinnes. Thus much doth the word justitie import. Thus came the Publican before God, Luke 18. when hee said, Lord bee mercifull to me a sinner; and departed justified. This in the fifth petition, we are taught to come every day into the presence of God, and to acknowledge our debts, and to use the plea of mercy, saying, Forgive us our debts.

The second thing to be considered, is the subject of justification, or the person to be justified, and that is man generally, signifying that a man is justified. The holy Ghost speaketh thus generally, for two causes. The first is, because all men without exception, have need of justification, even they which are regenerate, Cap. 2. the Epistle to the Galatians. 205 generate, Rom. 3. 23. And in this place Paul saith, that he and Peter, and the rest have beleeved in Christ, that they might be justified by faith. Here we are to take notice of the miserable condition of prophane and secure Epicures, who never so much as dreame of justification. The second reason is, because God communicates the benefit of justification generally to all sorts of men: and this hee doth in the ministerie of the Word, in which he beseecheth men to be reconciled to God, 2 Cor. 5. v. 21. This must be an inducement unto us, to come unto Christ, humbling and judging our selves, that we may be justified. God himselfe from heaven useth reasons unto us daily, to move us to the practice of this dutie. What meane these gracious and continuall preservations of Prince and People, Church & Land? By them wee see it is the good pleasure of God, to give us a time to seeke his kingdome and righteousnesse: wherefore let us not neglect the day of visitation, but take the time while it serves, that we may turne unto God, and be accepted of him, and escape the woe pronounced upon Corazin and Bethsaida.

The third thing to bee considered, concernes things excluded from justification, as false causes, namely, the works of the Law. Here it may bee demanded what works are meant? I answer, First, not only works of the ceremoniall, but also of the morall Law. For all men know, that ceremoniall actions are of C no use, unlesse they bee joyned with morall duties of love and mercie. And if Paul meant only ceremoniall works, hee needed not to have made so long a discourse against justification by works: for hee might have ended the whole matter in a word or twaine, by shewing that the ceremoniall Law was abrogated by Christ. Secondly, I answer, that not only works done before faith are excluded, but also works that follow faith, and are done in the estate of grace. For Paul here reasons thus: If no flesh bee justified by works, then not wee beleevers: but no flesh at all is justified: therefore not we beleevers. David. Psal. 143. reasons on the same manner: No flesh shall be justified in thy sight: therefore I cannot, though otherwise I be thy servant, in keeping thy commandements. When Abraham was the father of all the faithful, & was come to the highest degree of faith, and abounded in good works, yet was hee not then justified by works, Rom. 4. 1, 2. Paul kept a good conscience before God and men, Acts 23. and yet was he not justified thereby, 1 Cor. 4. 4. And hee saith, that wee are not saved by the works which God hath ordained that we should walke in, Ephes. 2. 9, 10. And the works that God hath ordained for us to walke in, are the best works of all, even works of grace. Againe, he saith, that we are not saved by works of mercie, Tit. 2. 5. It may be objected, that there is a co-operation of works and faith, Iam. 2. 21. I answer, that this co-operation is not in the act A of justification, nor in the worke of our salvation, but in the manifestation of the truth, and sinceritie of our faith, without hypocrisie. And for the declaration and approbation of this, faith and works joyntly concurre. Here then we see it is a pestilent and damnable doctrine of the Papists, when they teach justification by the works of the Law. Let us here be warned to take heed of it.

The fourth point is the meritorious cause of our justification, and that is Christ. Here it may bee demanded, what is that thing in Christ, by and for which wee are justified. I answer, the obedience of Christ, Rom. 5. 19. And it stands in two things, his passion in life and death, and his fulfilling of the Law joyned therewith. For by faith the Law is estab'ished, Rom. 3. 31. Christ was sent in the similitude of sinfull flesh, that the righteousnesse of the Law might be fulfilled in us, Rom. 8. 3. and Christ is the perfection of the Law for righteousnesse to all that beleeve, Rom. 10. 4. He that doth not fulfill all things contained in the Law, is accursed, Gal. 3. 10. Seeing therefore wee cannot performe the things contained therein by our selves, wee must performe them in the person of our Mediator, who hath satisfied for the threatnings of the Law by his passion, and hath fulfilled the precepts of the Law by his obedience, in all duties of love to God and man. Wee owe to God a double debt. One B is, that wee are to fulfill the Law everie moment, from our first beginning, both in regard of puritie of nature and puritie of action. And this debt was laid upon us in the creation, and is exacted of us in the Law of God. The second debt is a satisfaction for the breach of the Law. For this double debt Christ is become our Suretie; and God accepts his obedience for us, it being a full satisfaction, according to the tenour of the Law.

For the better conceiving of this obedience, foure questions may bee demanded. The first is, when this obedience begins and ends? Answ. Satisfactorie obedience performed by Christ, begins in his incarnation, and ends in his death. Christ saith, Ioh. 4. 34. It is my meate, to doe my Fathers will, and to finish his worke. But when was it indeed finished? A little before his passion he said, Ioh. 17. 4. I have finished the worke which thou gavest me to doe. Againe, in the surrendring of his soule, he saith, It is finished, Ioh. 19. 30. Saint Paul saith, Christ was obedient to the death of the crosse, Phil. 2. 8. The triumph of Christ began upon the crosse, Col. 2. vers. 15. and hee could not triumph before hee had made a full and perfect satisfaction for us. When Christ had procured deliverance from hell, and right to life everlasting, hee there made a perfect satisfaction for us, to the justice of God. And this hee did in his death upon the crosse. For by the death of the Mediator, we receive the promise of everlasting inheritance, Heb. 9. 15. and with one oblation upon the D crosse, he perfected them that are sanctified, Heb. 10.14. and they cannot be perfected without the perfect obedience of Christ. Christ rose from death, and ascended into heaven in our roome and stead: and this hee could never have done, unlesse he had made a perfect satisfaction in death. Here it may be asked, If satisfactorie obedience end in the death of Christ, to what use serves the resurrection and ascension of Christ, and his sitting at the right hand of the Father? Answ. They serve also for our justification, but after another sort. For they serve to apply and communicate unto us, and to put us in possession of the benefits which Christ hath procured for us, and purchased by his death. S. Paul saith, He ascended to give gifts to men, & to fill all things, Eph. 4.8,10. And Christ saith, When I am exalted, I will draw all men to me, Ioh. 12.32. And, He lives for ever to make intercession for us, Heb. 7.27.

The second question is, how Christ could obey being God, and satisfie for us being man? Answ. Christ must bee considered, not meerely as God, or as man; but as God-man, or Man-god. For the Godhead doth not redeeme us without the manhood, nor the manhood without the Godhead. Nevertheless, Christ as God and man, may both obey and satisfie. For, as there are in Christ two natures, so there are two distinct operations of the said natures. And as the said natures united make one Christ, so the operations of the natures concurring and being united in one, make the compound worke of a Mediator. Therefore the obedience of Christ being the worke of a Mediator, hath in it the operations of both natures. The practice, exercise, or execution of obedience, is from the manhood: therefore it is said, that Christ bare our sinnes in his body upon the crosse, 1 Pet. 2.24. that hee suffered in the flesh, 1 Pet. 4.1. that hee made a living way by the vaile of his flesh, Heb. 10.20. that wee are reconciled in the body of his flesh, Col. 1.22. Obedience is properly a subjection of the will in reasonable creatures, to the will of God: Now the will of the Godhead of Christ admits no subjection to the will of God, because the will of the Godhead (or of God,) is one and the same in all the persons. Christ therefore yeelds subjection only in respect of the will of the manhood, in which he performes obedience. Moreover, the operation of the Godhead is to make the said obedience meritorious and satisfactorie for all that shall beleeve. In this respect Paul saith, God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himselfe, 2 Cor. 5.18. and that God shed his blood, Acts 20.28. namely, in that nature which the Sonne of God assumed. Hence ariseth the value, price, and dignitie of the obedience of Christ.

The third question is, how the obedience of Christ should be made ours? Ans. By the free donation of God. For Christ is really given unto us in the Word & Sacraments: and consequently Christs obedience is made ours: even as when a peece of ground is made ours, the commoditie thereof is ours also.

The fourth question is, how the obedience of Christ should be our justice? Ans. It is not our justice in naturall manner, for then it should be in us: but by a divine & supernaturall manner, namely, by Gods acceptation, in that he accounts it ours, even as truly as if it were in us. And because God accepteth it for ours, it is ours indeed: for his willing and approving of any thing, is the doing it: and he cals the things that are not, as if they were.

Thus wee see what the obedience of Christ is. And here two errours must bee avoided. The one is of some Protestants, lesse dangerous, yet an untruth; namely, that we are justified only by the passion of Christ. But if this were so, we should be justified without fulfilling the Law: for (as I have said) we owe unto God a double debt: one by creation, namely, the fulfilling of the Law in all things, from our first beginning: the second, since the fall of Adam, namely, a satisfaction for the breach of the Law. Now the passion of Christ is a payment of the second debt, but not of the first; whereas both must be answered. For, Cursed is he that doth not continue in all things written in the Law to doe them. The passion of Christ procureth deliverance from hell, but alone by it selfe considered, it doth not purchase a right to eternall life.

Object. I. Christ fulfilled the Law for himselfe: therefore his passion alone serves for our justification. Ans. Christ as man fulfilled the Law for himselfe, that hee might be in both natures an holy High Priest, and so continue. Nevertheless, as Mediator, God and man, he became subject to the Law: in this regard he did not fulfill the Law for himselfe, neither was he bound so to doe.

Object. II. That which Christ did, we are not bound to do: but Christ (say some) fulfilled the Law for us: therfore we are not bound to fulfill the Law. Ans. That which Christ did we are not bound to doe, for the same end, and in the same manner. Now he fulfilled the Law in way of redemption, and satisfaction for us: and so doe not we fulfill the Law, but only in way of thankfulnesse for our redemption.

Object. III. The Law doth not exact both obedience, and the penaltie also. Ans. In the estate of innocencie, the Law threatned the penaltie, and it only exacted obedience. Since the fall it exacteth both obedience, and the punishment. The threatning of the Law exacts the punishment, the precepts exact obedience.

Ob. IV. Heb. 10.19. By the blood of Christ we have entrance into the holy place. Ans. By the blood of Christ wee are to understand the passion: and the passion may not be severed from active and voluntarie obedience. For Christ in suffering obeyed, & in obeying suffered. And (as Chrysostome saith) the passion is a kinde of action. Christ in the oblation of himselfe did not only offer to God his passion, but also prayers, which are no passions, Heb. 5.7.

Homil. 2. in Act.

The second errour is of the Papists, who teach that the thing by which and for which a sinner is formally justified, is remission of sins, with inherent justice infused by the Holy Ghost. But this cannot be. For inherent justice and justification are made distinct gifts of God. Paul saith, Christ is made unto us of God, wisdome, justice, sanctification, 1 Cor. 1.30. Againe, But yee are washed, yee are justified, and sanctified, 1 Cor. 6.11. Secondly, the justice whereby a sinner is justified, is revealed without the Law, Rom. 3.21. Now inherent justice, or the habit of charitie, is revealed by the Law: and the obedience of Christ is the only justice revealed without the Law. For it is a justice impured which the Law never knew; and in this obedience Christ performed the Law, and more too. For hee died for his enemies, and so loved his neighbour more than himselfe. Thirdly, God is not only a Justifier, but also just in justifying, Rom. 3.26. because he justifieth none but such as bring unto him a true and perfect justice, either in themselves, or in their Mediator, Prov. 17.15. Now this inward and inherent justice is not such, for it is imperfect: because it is increased (as they teach) by a second justification, and it is in this life mixt with the corruption of the flesh. Fourthly, the righteousnesse of a good conscience is an excellent grace, and gift of God: but by it we are not justified, 1 Cor. 4.4. Lastly, a dole error is to be noted in this Popish doctrine of justification. For in Popish learning remission of sinnes is not only an abolishing of the guilt and the punishment, but also of the corruption of sinne: so as the partie pardoned and justified hath nothing in him, that (as they say) God may justly hate. And yet Paul justified and regenerate saith otherwise of himselfe: that sinne dwelleth in him; and that the law of his members rebels in him against the law of his minde, and leads him captive to sinne. Rom. 7.

The Use of the Doctrine. First, in that we are justified by an obedience out of our selves, wee are taught utterly to deny our selves, and to goe out of our selves, as having nothing in us whereby wee may be saved. Here is the foundation of the abnegation of our selves. Secondly, the obedience of Christ must bee unto us the foundation of our obedience: for hee performed all righteousnesse for us, that wee might bee servants not of sinne, but servants of righteousnesse in all duties of obedience. And in his obedience wee must not only respect the merit thereof, but also his holy example in love, mercie, meeknesse, patience, &c. and after it, are wee to fashion our lives. Thirdly, the obedience of Christ must bee the foundation of our comfort. In all dangers and temptations, wee that beleeve are to oppose the obedience of Christ against the fierce wrath of God, against hell, death, and damnation. Certaine beasts when they are pursued fly the next way to their dens, where they hold themselves even to death. Christ in respect of his obedience, is our hiding place, Rom. 3.26. he is set forth unto the world as a Propitiatorie. For as the Propitiatorie covered the Arke and the Decalogue, so he covereth our sins, and he hides our bodies and soules from the furious indignation and vengeance of God. Let us therefore by our faith fly to this our hiding place in the storme and tempest of Gods wrath, and let us there live and die. Fourthly, this obedience is the foundation of our happinesse. For true happinesse is to be eased of our sinnes, Psal. 32.1. and this ease we have from Christ, Matt. 11.28. Lastly, the consideration of this obedience is the foundation of our thankfulnesse to God. For if wee beleeve that Christ suffered, and fulfilled the Law for us; wee are worse than beasts, if wee doe not everie way shew our selves thankfull for this mercie.

The fifth point to bee considered, is the meanes of justification, namely, the faith of Christ. Of which I consider three things. The first, what faith is? The Papists define justifying faith to be a gift of God, whereby we beleeve the articles of faith to be true, and the whole word of God. But this faith the Devils have. Here they alleage, that Abraham was the father of all the faithfull, and that his faith was nothing else but a perswasion, that he was able to give him a childe in his old age. Answ. First, the object of Abrahams faith was double, one lesse principall, that he should have issue in his old age: the second more principall, that the Messias his Redeemer should descend of his loynes. And this was the thing which his faith in the promise of God specially aimed at. I answer againe, that Abraham beleeved not only the power of God, Rom. 4.21. but also his will: which he had revealed in the promise, In thy seed all the nations of the earth shall be blessed. Secondly, it is alleaged that Christ in the curing of certain blinde men, required no more, but that they should beleeve his power, Mat. 9.28. I answer, That the end of the miracles of Christ was to confirme the certaintie of doctrine, specially touching his natures and offices. And therefore a generall faith touching the divine power or Godhead of Christ was sufficient for the obtaining of a miraculous cure. Thirdly, they object that salvation is promised to generall faith, Rom. 10.9. If thou shalt confesse with thy mouth the Lord Iesus, and beleeve that God raised him from the dead, thou shalt bee saved. That Peters faith was generall, Matth. 16.10. Thou art Iesus Christ the son of the living God. That the Eunuchs faith was of the same kinde. Act. 8.37. I beleeve that Iesus Christ is the son of God. Ans. It is a common rule in Scripture, that words signifying knowledge, signifie also the motions and good affections of the heart, Psal. 1. The Lord knowes the way of the righteous, that is, knowes and approves it, 2 Tim. 2.19. The Lord knowes who are his, that is, he knoweth and chuseth them. Joh. 17. 2. This is eternall life, to know thee the only God, that is, to know and acknowledge thee for our God. If this bee true in words of knowledge, then much more words of beleeving signifie the good motions and the affiance of the heart. Thus to beleeve Christ to be the Son of God, in the places before named, is to beleeve that he is God, and withall to fix our affiance on him: otherwise the Devils beleeve thus much. When Thomas had put his finger in the side of Christ, he said, My Lord, and my God, Joh. 20. 28. And to this speech of his Christ saith, Thou hast seene and beleeved. This then is true faith, not only to beleeve that Christ is God, but also that he is our God.

Justifying faith in true manner is defined thus: It is a gift whereby we apprehend Christ and his benefits, Joh. 1. 12. to beleeve in Christ, and to receive Christ, are put both for one, Joh. 6. faith is the mouth of the soule, whereby we eat the flesh of Christ, and drinke his bloud, Joh. 17. 8. To receive the word of Christ, to acknowledge it, and to beleeve it, are put all for one. Paul saith, that the Gentiles did apprehend the justice which is by faith, Rom. 9. 30. Againe, that wee receive the promise of the Spirit by faith, Gal. 3. 14.

This apprehension stands in two things. The first is, to know Christ as hee propounds himselfe in the Word and Sacraments. The second is, to apply him and his benefits unto our selves. This application is made by a supernaturall act of the understanding, when we beleeve that Christ with his benefits is really ours. It may bee objected, that faith is a certaine confidence, whereby wee beleeve in Christ: and so it is described even in this text. Answ. 1. Faith and confidence properly are distinct gifts of God: and confidence is the effect or fruit of faith. For Paul saith, that we have entrance to God with confidence by faith, Ephes. 3. 12. And reason declares as much, for a man cannot put his confidence in Christ, till he be assured that Christ with his benefits are his. Wee doe not rest on his goodnesse, of whose love wee doubt. Secondly, I answer, that confidence being a most notable effect of faith, is often in Scripture put for faith, and faith is described by it (as it is in this place,) and yet for nature they are not one, but must be distinguished.

Furthermore, the grounds of apprehension must bee considered. For speciall faith must have a speciall and infallible ground. The grounds are three. The first is this: In the Gospell God hath propounded generall promises of remission of sinnes, and life everlasting by Christ: and withall hee hath given a commandement to apply the said promises to our selves, 1 Joh. 3. 23. This is the commandement of God, that ye beleeve in the name of his Sonne Jesus Christ: and wee cannot beleeve in Christ, till wee beleeve Christ to bee our Christ. Now then a generall promise, with a commandement to apply the same to our selves, is in effect as much as a speciall promise. The second ground is this, Rom. 8. 16. The Spirit of God testifieth together with our spirits, that wee are the sonnes of God. In this testimony foure things must be observed. The first, that it is sufficient to certifie and assure us of our salvation. For if the testimony of two or three witnesses establish a truth among men, then much more the testimony of God. The second is, that this testimony may bee certainly knowen; else it is no testimony unto us. The third is, that this testimony is found and perceived in the use of the Word, Prayer, Sacraments. The last is, that it is especially given and felt in the time of great danger and affliction. For when by reason of miserie and trouble, wee know not how to pray as wee ought, then the Spirit makes request for us with groanes that cannot be uttered, Rom. 8. 26. And in afflictions Paul saith, The love of God is shed abroad in our hearts. Now then, if God give to them that turne unto him a testimony that they are the children of God: they for their parts are by speciall faith to beleeve it. The ground is this: A speciall faith may bee gathered, partly upon things generally revealed in the word of God, and partly upon sense, observation, and experience: the same things being revealed generally in the word, and particularly by experience. Upon this ground may we truly conclude the forgivenesse of our sins, and the salvation of our soules on this manner: Hee which beleeveth hath the forgivenesse of his sins, but I beleeve in Christ (saith hee which beleeveth) therefore my sins are forgiven me. The major or first part is expressed in the word; the minor or second part is found true by experience, and by the testimony of the conscience, which is a certaine testimony. For Paul saith, This is my rejoycing, the testimony of my conscience, 2 Cor. 1. 12. And the conclusion is the conclusion of speciall faith. If this bee not a good and sufficient ground, there is almost no speciall faith in the world.

Lastly, wee are to consider the degrees of Apprehension, and they are two: there is a weake apprehension, and there is a strong apprehension, as there is a weake and a strong faith. The weake faith and apprehension is, when wee endevour to apprehend. This endevour is, when wee bewaile our unbeleefe, strive against our manifold doubtings, will to beleeve with an honest heart, desire to be reconciled to God, and constantly use the good meanes to beleeve. For God accepts the will to beleeve for faith it selfe, & the wil to repent for repentance. The reason hereof is plaine. Every supernatural act presupposeth a supernaturall power or gift: and therefore the will to beleeve and repent, presupposeth the power and and gift of faith, and repentance in the heart. It may bee objected, that in the mindes of them that beleeve in this manner, doubtings of Gods mercie doe abound. Answ. Though doubtings abound never so, yet are they not of the nature of faith, but are contrarie to it. Secondly, wee must put difference betweene true apprehension and strong apprehension. If we truly apprehend, though not strongly, it sufficeth. The palsie hand is able to receive a gift, though not so strongly as another. The man in the Gospell said, Lord, I beleeve, help mine unbeleefe, Mark. 9. 24. that is, help my faith, which by reason of the smalnesse thereof, may rather bee called unbeleefe than faith. This is the common faith of true beleevers. For in this world wee rather live by hungring and thirsting, than by full apprehending of Christ: and our comfort stands rather in this, that wee are knowen of God, than that we know God.

The highest degree of faith is a full perswasion of Gods mercie. Thus saith the Holy Ghost, that Abraham was not weake through unbeleefe, but strong in faith, Rom. 4. 20. But wherein was his strength? In that he was fully perswaded, that God which had promised would also performe it. This measure of faith is not incident to all beleevers, but to the Prophets, Apostles, Martyrs, and such as have been long exercised in the schoole of Christ. And this appeares by the order whereby wee attaine to this degree of faith. First, there must bee a knowledge of Christ, then followes a generall perswasion of the possibilitie of pardon and mercie, whereby wee beleeve that our sinnes are pardonable. An example whereof we have in the prodigall childe, Luk. 15. 18. After this the Holy Ghost worketh a will and desire to beleeve, and stirres up the heart to humble and serious invocation for pardon. After prayer instantly made, followes a settling and quieting of the conscience, according to the promise Matt. 7. 7. Knocke, it shall be opened; seeke, ye shall finde; aske, ye shall receive. After all this followes an experience in manifold observations of the mercies of God, and love in Christ; and after experience followes a full perswasion. Abraham had not this full perswasion, til God had sundry times spoken to him. David, upon much triall of the mercie and favour of God, growes to resolution, and saith, Psal. 23. 6. Doubtlesse, kindnesse and mercie shall follow me all the daies of my life.

This distinction of the degrees of faith must the rather be observed, because the Papists suppose that wee teach, that everie faith is a full perswasion, and that everie one among us hath this perswasion. Which is otherwise. For certaintie we ascribe to all faith, but not fulnesse of certaintie. Neither doe we teach, that all men must have a full perswasion at the first.

The Use. If that bee the right faith, which apprehends and applyes Christ unto us, then is it a poore and miserable faith of the Papist, to be baptized, and withall to beleeve as the Church doth, when it is not known what the Church beleeves.

Of the same kinde is the faith of the multitude among us, whose faith is their good meaning, that is, their fidelitie and truth in their dealings.

Lastly, if that be faith which truly apprehends Christ, there is little true faith in these last dayes. For though the merit of Christ be apprehended by faith, yet is not the efficacie of his death; and that appeares by the bad and unreformed lives of them that professe the Gospell. Indeed, many say they have, and ever had a strong perswasion of Gods mercie: but in the most of them it is but a strong imagination: for their faith was conceived without the Word, Prayer, Sacraments: and it is severed from good life. We are then all of us carefully to seek for this true and lively faith: and the rather, because faith and repentance are possible to all that by grace doe will it. Nay, they which will to beleeve and repent, have begun to beleeve and repent; God accepting the will for the deed, Luk. 11. 13. And having attained to a measure of true faith, we must goe on and seeke to justifie our selves: but yet (as S. James teacheth, cap. 2.) justifie our faith by good works, and then shall our faith be a meanes to justifie us in life and death.

The second point to be considered concerning faith, is the manner how it justifieth. The Papists teach, that it justifieth, because it stirreth up good motions and good affections in the heart, whereby it prepareth and disposeth man, that hee may bee fit to receive his justification. Againe, because it being an excellent vertue, meriteth that God should justifie. But this is false which they say. For if faith justifieth by disposing the heart, then there must bee a space of time betweene justification and justifying faith: but there is no space of time betweene them. For so soone as a man beleeves, he is presently justified. For everie beleever hath the promise of remission of sinnes and life everlasting. Againe, in the case of justification, Paul opposeth beleeving and doing, faith and works of the Law: faith therefore doth not justifie, as a worke, or as an excellent vertue, bringing forth many divine and gracious operations in us. Nay, the proper action of faith, which is Apprehension, doth not justifie of it selfe; for it is imperfect, and is to bee increased to the end of our dayes.

Faith therefore justifieth, because it is an instrument to apprehend and apply that which justifieth, namely, Christ and his obedience. As the Israelites stung of fiery Serpents were cured, so are we saved, Joh. 3. 18. the Israelites did nothing at all, but only look upon the brazen Serpent; so are we to do nothing for our justification and salvation, but

Psal. 1. The Lord knowes the way of the righteous, that is, knowes and approves it, 2 Tim. 2.19. The Lord knowes who are his, that is, he knoweth and chuseth them. Joh. 17. 2. This is eternall life, to know thee the only God, that is, to know and acknowledge thee for our God. If this bee true in words of knowledge, then much more words of beleeving signifie the good motions and the affiance of the heart. Thus to beleeve Christ to be the Son of God, in the places before named, is to beleeve that he is God, and withall to fix our affiance on him: otherwise the Devils beleeve thus much. When Thomas had put his finger in the side of Christ, he said, My Lord, and my God, Joh. 20. 28. And to this speech of his Christ saith, Thou hast seene and beleeved. This then is true faith, not only to beleeve that Christ is God, but also that he is our God.

Justifying faith in true manner is defined thus: It is a gift whereby we apprehend Christ and his benefits, Joh. 1. 12. to beleeve in Christ, and to receive Christ, are put both for one, Joh. 6. faith is the mouth of the soule, whereby we eat the flesh of Christ, and drinke his bloud, Joh. 17. 8. To receive the word of Christ, to acknowledge it, and to beleeve it, are put all for one. Paul saith, that the Gentiles did apprehend the justice which is by faith, Rom. 9. 30. Againe, that wee receive the promise of the Spirit by faith, Gal. 3. 14.

This apprehension stands in two things. The first is, to know Christ as hee propounds himselfe in the Word and Sacraments. The second is, to apply him and his benefits unto our selves. This application is made by a supernaturall act of the understanding, when we beleeve that Christ with his benefits is really ours. It may bee objected, that faith is a certaine confidence, whereby wee beleeve in Christ: and so it is described even in this text.

Answ. 1. Faith and confidence properly are distinct gifts of God: and confidence is the effect or fruit of faith. For Paul saith, that we have entrance to God with confidence by faith, Ephes. 3. 12. And reason declares as much, for a man cannot put his confidence in Christ, till he be assured that Christ with his benefits are his. Wee doe not rest on his goodnesse, of whose love wee doubt. First, there must bee a knowledge of Christ, then followes a generall perswasion of the possibilitie of pardon and mercie, whereby wee beleeve that our sinnes are pardonable. An example whereof we have in the prodigall childe, Luk. 15. 18. After this the Holy Ghost worketh a will and desire to beleeve, and stirres up the heart to humble and serious invocation for pardon. After prayer instantly made, followes a settling and quieting of the conscience, according to the promise Mat. 7. 7. Knocke, it shall be opened; seeke, ye shall finde; aske, ye shall receive. After all this followes an experience in manifold observations of the mercies of God; and love in Christ; and after experience followes a full perswasion. Abraham had not his full perswasion, til God had sundry times spoken to him. David, upon much triall of the mercie and favour of God, growes to resolution, and saith, Psal. 23. 6. Doubtlesse, kindnesse and mercie shall follow me all the dayes of my life.

This distinction of the degrees of faith must the rather be observed, because the Papists suppose that wee teach, that everie faith is a full perswasion, and that everie one among us hath this perswasion. Which is otherwise. For certaintie we ascribe to all faith, but not fulnesse of certaintie. Neither doe we teach, that all men must have a full perswasion at the first.

The Use. If that bee the right faith, which apprehends and applyes Christ unto us, then is it a poore and miserable faith of the Papist, to be baptized, and withall to beleeve as the Church doth, when it is not knowen what the Church beleeves.

Of the same kinde is the faith of the multitude among us, whose faith is their good meaning, that is, their fidelitie and truth in their dealings.

Lastly, if that be faith which truly apprehends Christ, there is little true faith in these last dayes. For though the merit of Christ be apprehended by faith, yet is not the efficacie of his death; and that appeares by the bad and unreformed lives of them that professe the Gospell. Indeed, many say they have, and ever had a strong perswasion of Gods mercie: but in the most of them it is but a strong imagination: for their faith was conceived without the Word, Prayer, Sacraments: and it is severed from good life. We are then all of us carefully to seek for this true and lively faith: and the rather, because faith and repentance are possible to all that by grace doe will it. Nay, they which will to beleeve and repent, have begun to beleeve and repent; God accepting the will for the deed, Luk. 11. 13. And having attained to a measure of true faith, we must goe on and seeke to justifie our selves: but yet (as S. James teacheth, cap. 2.) justifie our faith by good works, and then shall our faith be a meanes to justifie us in life and death.

The second point to bee considered concerning faith, is the manner how it justifieth. The Papists teach, that it justifieth, because it stirreth up good motions and good affections in the heart, whereby it prepareth and disposeth man, that hee may bee fit to receive his justification. Againe, because it being an excellent vertue, meriteth that God should justifie. But this is false which they say. For if faith justifieth by disposing the heart, then there must bee a space of time betweene justification and justifying faith: but there is no space of time betwene them. For so soone as a man beleeves, he is presently justified. For everie beleever hath the promise of remission of sinnes and life everlasting. Againe, in the case of justification, Paul opposeth beleeving and doing, faith and works of the Law: faith therefore doth not justifie, as a worke, or as an excellent vertue, bringing forth many divine and gracious operations in us. Nay, the proper action of faith, which is Apprehension, doth not justifie of it selfe; for it is imperfect, and is to bee increased to the end of our dayes.

Faith therefore justifieth, because it is an instrument to apprehend, and apply that which justifieth, namely, Christ and his obedience. As the Israelites stung of fierie Serpents were cured, so are we saved, Joh. 3. 15. the Israelites did nothing at all, but only look upon the brazen Serpent; so are we to do nothing for our justification and salvation, but to to fix the eye of our faith on Christ. The bankrupt paies his debt by accepting the paiment made by the surety. It is the propertie of true religion to depresse nature, and to exalt grace: and this is done when wee make God the only worker of our salvation, & make our selves to bee no more but receivers of the mercie and grace of God by faith, and receivers not by nature, but by grace, reaching out the beggers hand, namely, our faith in Christ, to receive the gift or almes of mercie.

The last point is, that faith alone justifies. For here Paul saith, that wee are justified by faith, without the works of the Law: and that is as much as if he had said, by faith alone. Some Papists to help themselves translate the words of Paul thus, Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the Law, [ἐὰν μὴ] if not by faith, that is, except faith goe withall: then if faith be joyned with works, (say they) works justifie. I answer, that this manner of translation corrupteth the Text. For [ἐὰν μὴ] must here bee translated; but, as appeares by the words following, We have beleeved in Christ, that wee might be justified by faith in Christ without the works of the Law: We cannot doe more in the curing of our spirituall diseases, than in the curing the diseases of our bodie: of which Christ saith, Only beleeve, Mark. 5.36. When Abraham abounded both in faith and works, *Rom.*4. it is said, that he was justified by faith without works.

This Doctrine is of great use. First, wee learne hence, that a man is justified by the meere mercie of God; and that there is excluded from justification, all merit of congruitie, all meritorious works of preparation wrought by us, all co-operation of mans will with Gods grace, in the effecting of our justification.

Secondly, we learne that a man is justified by the meere merit of Christ, that is, by the meritorious obedience which he wrought in himselfe, & not by any thing wrought by him in us. Here then our merits, & satisfactions, & all inward justice is excluded from the justification of a sinner. To this end Paul saith, that we are justified freely by the redemption that is in Christ, Rom. 3.24. that we are made the justice of God in him (and not in us,) 2 *Cor.*5.21. that hee gave himselfe to deliver us, Gal. 1.4. that he hath purged our sins by himselfe, Heb. 1.3. and not by any thing in us. Hence it appeares, that the Papists erre and are deceived, when they teach that Christ did merit, that we might merit & satisfie for our selves: for then we should not be justified by our faith alone.

Thirdly, hence wee learne, that a sinner is justified by meere faith, that is, that nothing withinus concurres as a cause of our justification, but faith; and that nothing apprehends Christs obedience for our justification, but faith. This will more easily appeare, if wee compare faith, hope, and love. Faith is like an hand, that opens it selfe to receive a gift, and so is neither love, nor hope. Love is also an hand, but yet an hand that gives out, communicates & distributes. For as faith receives Christ into our hearts, so love opens the heart, & poures out praise & thanks to God, and all manner of goodnes to men. Hope is no hand, but an eye that wishly looketh & watcth for the good things which faith beleeveth. Therefore it is the only propertie of faith, to claipe and lay hold of Christ and his benefits.

It is objected, That true faith is never alone. I answer thus: Faith is never alone in the person justified, nor in godly conversation: but is joyned with all other vertues. Yet in the act and office of justification it is alone. The eye in the bodie is not alone, being joyned with all other parts, hand, foot &c. nevertheless, the eye in seeing is alone. For no part of the bodie seeth, but the eye.

Secondly, it may bee objected, that being justified by faith alone, we are saved by faith alone, and so may live as wee list. I answer: Faith must be considered as an instrument, or as a way. If it be considered as an instrument to apprehend Christ to our salvation, wee are only saved by faith on this manner. Yet if faith be considered as a way, we are not only saved by faith. For all other vertues & works are the way to life, as well as faith, though they be not causes of salvation.

Thirdly, it is objected, That not only faith, but also the Sacraments serve to apply Christ. I answer: They are said to apply, in that they serve to confirme faith, whose office is to apply. And here let us take notice of the errour of the Papists, who teach, that our satisfactions serve to apply the satisfaction of Christ: and the sacrifice of the Masse, to apply the sacrifice of Christ upon the crosse: whereas nothing indeed applyes but faith.

In the sixth place wee are to consider the kindes of justification. The Papists make two: one, when a man of an evill man is made a good man: the second, when a good man is made better: and this, they say, is by works. But it is false which they teach. For the Jewes which were borne an holy and peculiar people to God, by meanes of the covenant were justified (as Paul here saith) by faith, without works. Againe, he saith, that the verie end of our beleeving is, that wee may bee justified by faith, without works. Therefore there is one only justification, and no more, and that by faith without works.

The seventh point is the ground of this doctrine of justification by faith without works. And it is laid down in the end of the 16. vers. No flesh shall bee justified by the works of the Law. And this ground is taken, as I suppose, from Psal. 143.v.2. It may bee alleaged, that David saith thus, No flesh shall bee justified in thy sight, and that the other words, [by the works of the Law] are not expressed. I answer, that the Apostles, and Christ in citing places of the old Testament, apply them, and expound pound them, and hereupon sometime adde words without adding to the sense. Moses saith, *Him shalt thou serve, Deut.*6.13. Christ alleaging the same words, saith; *Him only shalt thou serve, Matth.*4.10. David saith, Sacrifice and burnt offering thou wouldest not, but mine eares hast thou pierced, Psal. 40.7. the author to the Hebrewes citing this text saith, *Sacrifice and burnt offering thou wouldest not, but a bodie hast thou fitted mee, Hebr.*10.5. And thus the piercing of the eare is explained. For indeed it signifies to be made obedient: and to th send was a body given to Christ, that he might obey his Fathers will.

The eighth and last point is the practice of them that are justified, and that is to beleeve, or put their trust in Christ. Trust in the Lord (saith the Prophet) and ye shall be assured, 2 *Chro.*20.20. And Salomon saith, *Roll your care on the Lord, Prov.*16.3. By meanes of this faith the heart of the righteous is fixed and stablished, Psal. 112.7,8. For the better practice of this duty, two rules must be remembred. The one is, that faith and the practice thereof must reigne in the heart, and have all at command. We must not goe by sense, feeling, reason, but we must shut our eyes, and let faith keepe our hearts close to the promise of God. Nay, faith must over-rule nature, and command nature, and the strongest affections thereof. Thus Abraham beleeved against hope, and by faith was content to offer his naturall and only begotten sonne, *Heb.*11. If faith overrule nature, then much more must it have all the lusts and corruptions of nature at command. The second rule is, that when wee know not what to doe, by reason of the greatnesse of our distresse, we must then fix our hearts on Christ without separation. He that climes up a ladder or some steepe place, the higher hee goes, the faster he holds, 2 *Chron.*20.12. Iob 23.12. Hence is true comfort, *Psal.*27.13.

17. And if while we seeke to be made righteous by Christ, wee our selves are found sinners, is Christ the minister of sinne? God forbid.

For the better understanding of the latter part of this chapter, it must be observed, that Paul directs his speech not only to Peter, but also to the Jewes that stood by, being maintainers of justification by the law.

Some thinke, that in this verse Paul makes an objection in the person of the false Apostles, on this manner: If wee be justified by Christ alone, without the observation of the law, then there is no difference betweene us Jewes and the Gentiles; but wee are as deepe sinners as they: and if this be so, then Christ is the minister of sinne. And then say they, to this Paul answers, God forbid. But I some what doubt, whether this be the sense of the words, because Paul doth not make a direct confutation of this objection in the words following.

Therefore I rather suppose, that Paul continues his former speech, even to the end of the chapter: and that in these words hee useth a third reason, to dissuade Peter from halting betweene the Jewes and Gentiles. And the reason will the better appeare, if we search the meaning of the words. If while we be justified by Christ, that is, by faith in Christ, without the workes of the law. Wee are found sinners, that is, found in our sinnes, not fully justified, but are further to be justified by the workes of the law. Is Christ the minister of sinne? that is, doth it not hence follow, that Christ ministred unto us occasion of sinne, in that he hath caused us to renounce the justice of the law? God forbid, that is, ye doe all hold it with me as a blasphemie, that Christ should be the minister of sinne.

The argument then is framed thus: If being justified by Christ, we remaine sinners, and are further to bee justified by the law, then Christ is the minister of sinne: but Christ is no minister of sinne: therefore they which are justified, need no further to bee justified by the law.

The use. First we learne hence, that it is blasphemie to make Christ the minister of sinne, who is the minister of righteousnesse, yea justice it selfe, *Isa.*53.11. *Dan.*9.25. Hee brings everlasting righteousnesse, Iohn 1. He is the Lambe of God that takes away the sinnes of the world. Of this all the Prophets give testimony, Act. 10.43. Therefore Atheists are no better than devils, that reckon him among the false Prophets of the world. And many of them that professe Christ are greatly to be blamed, that make Christ the greatest sinner in the world: because Christ died for them: therefore they presume of mercie, and take libertie to live as they list.

Againe, Paul here teacheth, that they which are justified by Christ, are perfectly justified, and need not further to be justified by any thing out of Christ, as by the workes of the law. It may be objected, that they which are justified feele themselves to bee sinners, *Rom.*7.14. Answ. The corruption of originall sinne is in them that are justified: yet it is not imputed to them by God, and withall, it hath received his deadly wound by the death of Christ. Therefore they which are justified, are not reputed sinners before God. Againe, it may be objected, that they which are justified, must confesse themselves to bee sinners to the very death. Ans. Confession of sinne is not a cause, but a way for the obtaining of pardon, *Prov.*28.13. 1 Iohn 1.9. The uncovering of our sinnes is the way to cover them before God. The sinnes therefore of men justified, upon their humble and serious confession, are not sinnes imputed, but covered.

Upon this doctrine it followes, that there is not a second justification by workes, as the Papists teach. For hee that is justified by Christ, is fully justified, and needs not further to be justified by any thing out of Christ, as by the law. Againe, the same persons teach, that our sinnes are done away by the death of Christ, Christ, and we iustified in our Baptisme: and that if we fall and sinne after Baptisme, we must doe workes of penance, that we may satisfie Gods iustice, and be further iustified by our workes and sufferings. But then, by their leaves, after we are iustified by Christ, we are found sinners, and we are further to be iustified by our owne workes. Now this is the point which Paul here confuteth.

Againe, by this doctrine wee learne, that Christ alone is by himselfe sufficient for our iustification. In him (saith Paul) are we compleat, Col. 2. 14. He is a well of grace and life never dried up, Iohn 4.14. Thirdly, we must content our selves with him alone, and with his obedience for our iust-fication, despising (in respect of him) all merits and satisfaction done by man.

Lastly, here we see what must be the care of men in this world, namely, to seeke to be iustified by the faith of Christ. It was Pauls principall desire to be found in Christ, having not his owne righteousnesse, but the righteousnesse which is by the faith of Christ, Phil. 3. 10. The like desire should be in us all.

18. For if I build againe the things which I have destroyed, I make my selfe a transgressour.

By things destroyed, Paul meanes the works or the iustice of the law, as appeares by the next verse following, where rendering a reason of this, he saith, by the law I am dead to the law.

These words depend on the former thus: Paul had said before, that Christ was not a minister of sinne unto us: and here he proves it thus. He that builds the iustice of the law which he hath destroyed, is a minister of sin, or makes himselfe a sinner: but the Iewes, and Peter by his example, build the iustice of the law which they have destroyed, and so doth not Christ: therefore the Iewes and Peter make themselves sinners, and Christ doth not make us sinners.

Here let us obserue the modestie and meeknesse of Paul. The things which he speakes, concerne Peter, and the Iewes: yet lest he offend them, he applies them to himselfe. This care not to offend was in Christ, who was rather willing to depart from his right, than to offend, Matthew 17. 27. And Paul bids us please all men in that which is good.

Here againe it is Pauls doctrine, that wee make our selves offendors when wee build that which wee have lawfully destroyed. Thus Teachers are great offendors, when good doctrine is joyned with bad conversation. For good doctrine destroies the kingdome of darknesse, and bad conversation builds it up againe. Thus rulers are great offendors, when good counsell and bad example goe together. For good counsell beats downe wickednes, and bad example sets it up againe. Thus beleevers in Christ are great offendors, when reformed religion and unreformed life are joyned together, as often they are. For then unreformed life builds the kingdome of sinne, which Christ hath destroyed.

Further, we are here taught to be constant in that which is good, Tit. 1.9. and to hold fast the Gospel which we professe. Wee have put under foot the Popish religion for this many yeares: our duty is to be constant therein, and no way to budge either in word or deed that which we have to the uttermost of our power destroyed.

19. For I through the law am dead to the law, that I may live unto God.

In these words Paul sets downe a second reason, to prove Christ to bee no minister of sinne, in abolishing the justice of the law. And the reason is framed thus: We Iewes, justified by Christ, are dead to the law, not to live as we list, but to live to the honour of God. Therefore Christ in taking away the justice of the law, is not the minister of sinne.

Here three points are propounded: the first is, that the person justified is dead to the law: the second, that hee is dead to the law by the law: the third, that he is dead that he may live unto God.

For the better understanding of the first point, wee must search what is meant by dying to the law. Here the law is compared to an hard and cruell master, and wee to slaves or bondmen, who so long as they are alive, they are under the dominion, and at the command of their masters: yet when they are dead, they are free from that bondage, and their masters have no more to doe with them. Here then, to be dead to the law is to be free from the dominion of the law. And wee are free in foure respects. First, in respect of the accusing and damnatorie sentence of the law, Rom. 8.1. Secondly, in respect of the power of the law, whereby as an occasion it provoketh and stirreth up the corruption of the heart in the unregenerate, Rom. 7.8. Thirdly, in respect of the rigour of the law, whereby it exacteth most perfect obedience for our justification. Thus Paul here saith, that hee is dead to the Law. Lastly, in respect of the obligation of the conscience, to the observation of Ceremonies, Col. 2. 20. Thus are all persons justified, by the faith of Christ, free from the law.

Hence we learne, that the Papists erre, and are deceived, when they teach, that the law and the Gospell are one for substance of doctrine. For then they which are justified by Christ, should not only be dead to the law, but also to the Gospell. Now the Scripture saith not, that persons justified are dead to the Gospel.

They erre againe, in that they teach, that persons justified by the merit of the death of Christ, are further to bee justified by the workes of the law. For he that is justified by Christ, is dead to the law: but if we be justified by workes, then are we by Christ made alive to the law.

Thirdly, here we see how long the dominion of the law continueth, and when it endeth.

The

The law reignes over all men without exception, til they be justified. When they once beginne to beleeve in Christ, and to amend their lives, then the dominion of the law ceaseth, and they then are no more under the law, but under grace. Here all such persons as live in the security and hardnesse of their hearts, are to be admonished to repent of their sinnes, and to beginne to turne unto God. For they must know, that they live under a most hard and cruell master, that will doe nothing but accuse, terrifie, and condemne them, and cause them to runne headlong to utter desperation. And if they die being under the law, they must looke for nothing but death and destruction without mercie. For the law is mercilesse. This consideration serveth notably to awake them that are dead in their sinnes. Againe, all such as with true and honest hearts have begunne to repent and beleeve, let them be of good comfort. For they are not under the dominion of the law, but they are dead to the law, and under grace, having a Lord, who is also their mercifull Saviour, who will give them protection against the terrours of the law, and spare them as a father spares his child that serves him, and not breake them though they be but as weake and bruised reeds, and as smoaking flax.

The second point is, touching the meanes of our death to the law, and that is the Law. Here some by the law, understand the law of faith, that is the Gospel, Rom. 3.27. And they make this to be the meaning of the words, By the law of Christ, that is, by the Gospel, I am dead to the law of Moses. But this sense, though it be a truth, yet will it not stand in this place. For it is the question, whether by the Gospell we be freed from the law? Now Paul, a learned disputer, would not bring the question to prove it selfe. Therefore, I take the true meaning of the words to be this: By the law of Moses, I am dead to the law of Moses. It may be demanded, how this can be, considering the law is the cause of no good thing in us? For it is the ministery of death and condemnation: 2 Cor. 3.7, 8, 9. Againe, that which the law cannot revcale, it cannot worke: but the law neither can, nor doth reveale faith in Christ, the death to the law, nor repentance, &c. therefore the law is no cause to worke them. It may peradventure be said, that the law workes repentance, and sorrow for sinne. I answer, there is a double Repentance. One Legall, the other Evangelicall. Legall is when men have a sight of their sins, and withal are grieved for the punishment thereof. This repentance is wrought by the ministerie of the law: it was in Iudas: and it is no grace of God, but of it selfe it is the way to hell. Evangelicall Repentance is, when being turned by grace, we turne our selves to God. This repentance is a gift of grace, and is not wrought by the law, but by the ministerie of the Gospel. Againe, there is a Legall sorrow, which is a sorrow for sinne, in respect of the punishment: this is no grace, and it is wrought by the law. Evangelicall sorrow is sorrow for sinne, because it is sinne. This indeed is a grace of God; but it is not wrought by the law, but by the preaching of mercy and reconciliation: and it followes in us upon the apprehension of Gods mercy by faith. The law then being the cause of no good thing in us, it may be demanded (I say) how we should bee dead to the law, by the law? Answ. Though the law be not a cause of this death to the law, and so to sinne: yet it is an occasion thereof. For it accuseth, and terrifieth, and condemneth us: and thereby it occasioneth, or urgeth us to flie unto Christ, who is the cause that we die unto the law. As the needle goes before, & draws in the threed, which sowes the cloth; so the law goes before, and makes a way, that grace may follow after, and take place in the heart. Thus must this place be understood, and all other places that speake of the law in this manner: as Rom. 7. 8. &c.

The third point is, touching the end of our death to the law: and that is, that we may live to God. It may bee demanded, what life this is, whereby we live to God? Ans. There is a naturall, and a spirituall life. Naturall life is that, which we receive from Adam by generation: and it is the function of naturall faculties, in living, moving, use of senses, and reason. Spirituall life, is that which wee receive from Christ by regeneration: and it is the action, motion, or operation of the spirit in us. This life is called by Paul, the life of God. Eph. 4.18. And this is the life which he speakes of in this place. And it is described by many things. First, by the end, and use of it. For it serves to make us to live to God, that is, to the honour and glorie of God. And we live to God by living wisely, godly, justly, Tit. 2.12. Wisely, in respect of our selves: godly, in respect of God: justly, in respect of men.

That we may live wisely, we must obserue two rules. The first: we must labour with all diligence, and with all speed, that we may bee worthy to stand before the Sonne of man at his comming. And therefore we must labour to be in Christ, having true faith and good conscience, Eph. 5. 15. Luk. 21. 36. Consider also the example of Paul. Act. 24.16. It is true wisdome to be wise for our soules, and for everlasting happinesse: and it was the folly of the foolish virgins, that they did not furnish themselves with the oyle of grace in time convenient. The second rule: we must in this world come as neare heaven and the happinesse of life everlasting, as may bee, Phil. 3.14. And for this cause we must joyne our selves to the assembly where the word is preached, prayer made, and Sacraments administred: for there is the gate of heaven. Consider the practice of Moses, Heb. 11.25, 26. and that of David, Psal. 84.10. Againe, being absent from heaven both in bodie and soule, yet we must have our conversation there, by the cogitation of our mindes, and by the affections of our hearts, Phil. 3. 21.

That we may live godlily, seven rules must be remembred. The first: we must bring our selves into the presence of the invisible God: yea, we must set our thoughts, wils, affections, and all we doe in this sight and presence: and we must evermore remember whatsoever we do, that we have to deale with God himselfe. In this regard Enoch is said to walke with God, Gen. 5. 24. Abraham and Isaac before God, Gen. 17. 1. and 48. 15. and David, Psal. 116. 9. and 139. all. and Cornelius, Act. 10. 33. and Paul, 2 Cor. 7. 12.

The second: we must take knowledge of the will of God in all things, whether it be revealed in the word, or by any event. It is not enough to know Gods will, but when time and place serves, wee must acknowledge it, Rom. 12. 2. Col. 1. 10.

The third: we must bring our selves in subjection to the knowne will of God, and captivate all our senses unto it: and suffer God to set up his kingdome in us, Rom. 12. 1.

The fourth: when we have offended God, wee must instantly humble our selves before his majestie, confessing our offences, and making instant deprecation for mercy. Thus did Ezra, chap. 9. and Daniel, chap. 9. and David, Psal. 32. 3.

The fifth: in all our miseries and adversities we must be silent in our hearts, by quieting our wi's in the good will of God, Psalme 4. 4. Examine your selves, and be still, Psal. 37. 7. Be silent to Iehova. Consider the example of Aaron, Levit. 10. 3. of David, Psal. 39. 9. of the Jewes, Act 11. 18.

The sixth: In all things we doe or suffer, we must depend on the goodnesse, providence, and mercy of God, for the successe of our labours, and for ease or deliverance out of miserie. This is to live by faith: and as Peter saith, 1 Pet. 2. 17. to sanctifie God in our hearts.

The last: In all things we must give praise and thankes to God: and that for our miseries and afflictions, Iob. 1. 22. for in them God mingles his justice with mercy, whereas hee might utterly condemne us.

That we may live justly in respect of men, two rules must be observed. The first: we must make God in Christ, our treasure and our portion, and his favour and blessing our riches. Then shall not the vile sinnes of avarice and ambition beare sway in us: and then shall wee learne with Paul to be content in any estate, Phil. 4. 11. because howsoever the world goe, wee have our portion and treasure. The second, we must love God in loving of man: and serve him in doing service to men by the offices and duties of our callings. They which labour in their callings for this end to get riches, honours, and to set up themselves in this world, prophane their callings, and practice injustice. For not selfe-love, but love to God, in duties of love to men, must beare sway in all our actions.

A

Thus we see what it is to live to God. Now we are all to be exhorted, to order our lives in this manner. For first of all, we are Gods: and therefore wee must glorifie God both in our bodies and soules, 1 Cor. 6. 20. Secondly, the end of our justification and redemption is, that wee may live to God. And it is great wickednesse to pervert the order of God, by living to our selves and the lusts of our hearts. Thirdly, there bee three degrees of life: one is in this life, a spirituall and a renewed life: the second in death, when the body goes to the earth, and the soule to heaven: the third, in the last judgement, when body and soule reunited, enter into the presence of God. Therefore that wee may be saved, we must live unto God in this life: for we can never come to the second degree of life, but by the first. And we must not imagine, that we can step immediately out of a feud and wicked life, into everlasting happinesse in heaven. Lastly, the grace of God in the ministerie of the Gospel hath appeared, and long taught us, and called upon us, to live unto God. Therefore unlesse we be ashamed and confounded for our sinnes, and beginne with all speed to live unto God, it will bee worse with us, than with Sodom and Gomorrha, and many other nations.

20. I am crucified with Christ: Thus I live, yet not I any more, but Christ lives in me. And in that I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Sonne of God, who hath loved me, and given himselfe for me.

C

Whereas Paul said before, I am dead to the law, here he declares the reason of it, when he saith, I am crucified with Christ. Againe, here Paul sets downe the true preparation to spirituall life. For God first kils, and then he makes alive. And the measure of spirituall life is according to the decay of originall sinne. This preparation stands in two things: the first is, fellowship with Christ in his crosse and passion, in these words, I am crucified with Christ. The second is Abnegation, or Annihilation (as some call it) in these words, Not I any more: I am crucified with Christ.

D

For the better understanding of these words, we must observe, first, that Paul speakes not this of himselfe particularly, but he speakes in the person of the Christian Jewes, before whom he now reasoneth with Peter: nay in the person of all beleevers. For all that beleeve are buried into his death, Rom. 6. 4. Secondly, it must bee observed, that Paul speakes this of himselfe not as he is man consisting of bodie and soule, but as he is a sinner carrying about him the body of sinne, Rom. 6. 6. Further, it may be demanded, upon what ground hee should say, I am crucified with Christ? Answ. There be two reasons of this speech. One is, that Christ upon the crosse stood not as a private person, but as a publike person, in the roome, place, and stead of all the Elect: and therefore when he was crucified, all beleevers were were crucified in him; as in the Parliament, when the Burgesse gives his voice, the whole corporation it said to consent by him, and in him. The second reason is this; by the conversion of a sinner, there is a real donatio of Christ and all his benefits unto us: and there is a reall union, whereby every beleever is made one with Christ. And by vertue of this union, the crosse and passion of Christ is as verily made ours, as if we had beene crucified in our owne persons. Hereupon Paul saith in the time present, I am crucified with Christ. There are like phrases in Paul, We are dead with Christ: we are risen with him: we sit with him in heavenly places, Eph. 2. 6. Col. 3. 1. and they are in the same manner to be expounded. Moreover, the benefits that arise of this communion with Christ in his passion are two. One is, Justification from all our sinnes, Rom. 6. 7. The second is Mortification of sinne by the vertue of the death of Christ, after wee are ingrafted into him. Thus much of the meaning.

The use. Superstitious persons take occasion by the passion of Christ, to stirre up themselves to sorrow, compassion, and teares, by considering the pitifull handling of Christ, the sorrow that pierced the heart of the virgin Marie, and the cruelty of the Jewes. But this is a humane use, that may be made of every historie.

The right use is this: We are in minde and meditation to consider Christ crucified: and first, we are to beleeve, that he was crucified for us. This being done, we must goe yet further, and as it were spread our selves on the crosse of Christ, beleeving and with all beholding our selves crucified with him. Thou wilt say, this is a hard matter, I cannot doe it. I say againe, that this is the right practice of faith: strive therfore to be setled in this, that the bodie of thy sinne is crucified with Christ. Pray instantly by asking, seeking, knocking, that thou majest thus beleeve. This faith and perswasion is of endlesse use. First, it is the foundation of thy comfort. If thou beleeve thy self to be crucified with Christ, thou shalt see thy selfe freed from the dominion of the law and sinne, from hell, death, and condemnation; and to thy great comfort shalt see thy selfe to triumph over all thy spirituall enemies. For this Christ doth, Col. 2. 14. and thou dost the same, if thou be setled in this, that thou art crucified with him. Secondly, upon this perswasion, thou shalt feele the vertue of the death of Christ to kill sinne in thee, and to raise thy dead soule to spirituall life. When the Shunamites child was dead, Elisha went and lay upon him, applying face to face, hand to hand, and foot to foot: and then his flesh waxed warme, and revived, 1 King. 4. 34. even so apply thy selfe to Christ crucified, hand to hand, foot to foot, heart to heart: and thou shalt feele in thy selfe a death of sinne, and the heat of spirituall life to warme and inflame thy dead heart. Thirdly, if thou beleeve thy selfe to be crucified with Christ, thou shalt see the length, the breadth, the height, the depth of the love of God in Christ. For thy sinnes are the swords and the speares that crucified Christ: and yet thou hast all the benefit of his passion. Lastly, if thou canst beleeve that thou art crucified with Christ, thou shalt further be assured, that he is a partner with thee in all thy miseries and afflictions, to ease thee, and to make thee to beare them, 1 Peter 4. 13. Col. 1. vers. 24.

C

The duties hence to be learned, are these. First, if thou be crucified with Christ, then must thou apply thy heart to crucifie the body of corruption in thee, by prayer, fasting, by avoiding the occasions, by abstaining from the practice of sinne, and by all good meanes. Behold a man hanged upon a gybbet. Thou seest he hath satisfied the law: and there is no further judiciall proceeding against him: and with all thou seest how wee ceaseth from his thefts, murders, blasphemies: even so, if thou canst behold thy selfe spread upon the crosse of Christ, and crucified with him, there will be in thee a new mind and disposition, and thou wilt cease from thine old offences. Againe, being crucified with Christ, thou must be conformable to Christ in thy sufferings. He suffered in love: and the more his passion increased, the more he shewed his love: even so in thine afflictions and sufferings, thy love to God and man must be increased, though man be the cause of thine afflictions. Secondly, Christ suffered in obedience: not my will, but thy will be done: even so, in all thy sufferings, thou must resigne thy selfe to God, and quiet thy selfe in his will. Thirdly, Christ suffered in all humility, humbling himselfe to the death of the crosse: even so we, in, and upon our afflictions, are to humble our selves under the mighty hand of God, confessing our sinnes, and intreating for pardon. Fourthly, he suffered in faith, as man, depending on his Fathers goodnesse, even in the middest of his passion: even so are we to doe. Fifthly, he went on constantly in his sufferings to the very death: even so are we to suffer in the resisting of sin, even unto the shedding of our bloud. Lastly, the principall care of Christ was, to see the fruit of his sufferings: so whē we are distressed, our care must rather be to see the fruit of our distresse, than to seeke deliverance. This conformity with Christ in his passion, is an infallible worke and token of the childe of God, and a signe that we are crucified with Christ.

Againe, here we are to take notice of the false faith of many men. They can be content to beleeve that Christ was crucified for them: but there they make a paute: for they doe not beleeve that they are crucified with Christ: their faith therefore is but a false faith; and their profession is accordingly. For they have the forme of godlinesse without the power thereof. They thinke, that they beleeve the Articles of faith aright: but they are deceived.

ved. For to beleeve in Christ crucified, is not only to beleeve that he was crucified, but also to beleeve that I am crucified with him. And this is to know Christ crucified.

Lastly, here we are to consider the abomination of the church of Rome. For it most abuseth that, which is the greatest treasure in the world, namely, Christ crucified. For they make a very idol of him, in that they worship him, in, at, and before painted and carved crucifixes. For there is no such Christ in heaven or in earth, that will be present when we pray, and heare us at crucifixes. Againe, they give Latria, divine honour, to devised and framed crucifixes: and thus they rob Christ of his honour.

Thus much of our communion with Christ in his passion: now followes the second part of preparation namely, Abnegation; I live, yet not I any more: that is, I live a spirituall life, yet not I as a naturall man. For in that regard, I carrie my selfe as a man crucified, or after the manner of a dead man, suffering nothing that is in me by nature, to reigne in me, that Christ alone may live and reigne in me. Here is a notable duty to be learned: we being crucified with Christ, must carry our selves as men crucified, and that in three respects. First, in respect of corruption of sinfull nature. For in regard of our sinnes, wee are to esteeme our selves unworthy of meat, drinke, sleepe, breathing: yea we are to esteeme our selves to be as vile as any of the creatures upon earth: and we are to denie ungodlinesse, and worldly lusts, not suffering any of them to reigne over us. Secondly, wee must carrie our selves as dead men, in respect of the good things that belong to nature, as honours, riches, pleasures, friends: all which in respect of preparation of minde, we must daily forsake for Christs sake, not suffering any of them to take place in our hearts. Lastly, we must be as dead men in respect of our owne reason and will, and we must tread them under foot, making Gods wil, our wisedome and wil; and giving it Lordship and dominion over us, our owne wils in the meane season lying dead in us. Thus are we to carrie our selves as dead men: and we are to be carefull of it: that God may have pleasure in us, we must forget our owne people, and our fathers house, Psal. 45. 10. That we may buy the pearle, wee must sell all we have, our wils, our affections, and the dearest things in the world. Hee that would live when he is dead, must die while he is alive: and we must now lay out our selves as dead persons. Corruption of nature, reason, and will, must be dead in us, that Christ alone may live and reigne in us.

The third point concerning spirituall life is, touching the Originall and well-spring therof, in these words, That Christ may reigne in me. For the better conceiving wherof, three points are to bee observed. The first, that Christ is not only the Author, with the Father and the holy Ghost, but also the Root of life, having life in himselfe that hee may convey it to all that beleeve in him: Hee is the true vine, and we are the branches, Joh. 15.1. hee is an appointed head to his Church, Eph. 1. 22. he is the prince of life, Act. 3.15. he is a quickening spirit, 1 Cor. 15. 45. And in this regard is hee said to live in us, namely, as a root in the branch, or as the head in the members. The second point is, that there must bee an union with Christ, before we can receive life from him, and he live in us. If ye abide in me, and I in you, ye shall bring forth much fruit, John 15. 4. We must be grafted with him, before we can be conformable to his death and resurrection, Rom. 6. 5. And againe we must be taken out of the wild olive, and set in the true olive. Thus much Paul signifieth, when hee saith, Christ lives in me. Of this conjunction, two things must be noted. The first, that it is a substantiall union; in that the person of him that beleeveth, is united to the person of Christ. For we must eat the flesh of Christ, and drinke his bloud, before we can have life abiding in us, Joh. 6. 35. and our bodies are members of Christ, 1 Cor. 6. 15. Againe, this Union is spirituall, because it is made by the bond of one spirit, 1 Cor. 12. 13. By one spirit we are baptized into one bodie. And no man is to marvell, that we on earth should be joined to Christ in heaven. By civill contract man and wife are one flesh, though distant many miles asunder: why then may not we be joyned to Christ by vertue of the covenant of grace? considering no distance of place can hinder the being of the spirit of Christ in us. The third point is, that after this union with Christ, he must further communicate himselfe unto us, before we can live by him, and he in us. To this purpose Saint John saith, that God hath given us life: that this life is in the Sonne: that he which hath the Son hath life, 1 Joh. 5. 12. For the conceiving of this truth, two questions may be demanded. One, in what order Christ gives himselfe unto us? Ans. Christ first of al gives his flesh and bloud, that is, himselfe: and then secondly, his gifts, namely the efficacie and merit of his death. The institution of the Lords Supper sheweth plainly, that wee are not partakers of the benefits of Christ, unlesse first of all Christ himselfe be given unto us. The second question is, how Christ can bee said to live in us? Answ. He is not in us in respect of locall presence, but by the supernaturall and speciall operation of the spirit, 1 Cor. 6. 17. The operation of the spirit is threefold. The first is, when God imputes the righteousnesse of Christ to them that beleeve, and withall gives the right of eternall life, and the earnest of this right, namely, the first fruits of the spirit. Hereupon justification is called the Justification of life, Rom. 5. The second is, Vivification by the vertue of the resurrection of Christ, Philip. 3. 10. And this vertue is the power of the God-head of Christ, or the power of the spirit, raising us to newnesse of life, as it raised Christ from from the death of sinne. And by this power Christ is said to live in them that beleeve. The third is, the resurrection of the dead body to everlasting glory, in the day of judgement, Rom. 8. 11.

Rom. 11. 24.

Thus then the meaning of the words is evident: that Christ as a root, or head, lives in them that are united to him, and that by the operation of his Spirit, causing them to die unto their sinnes, and to live unto God. And againe, it must be remembred, that Paul speakes this not privately of himselfe, but generally in the name of all beleevers. For hee saith, 2 Cor. 13. 5. Know ye not that Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?

The use. Hence it followes, that they which are true beleevers, cannot make a practice of sinne: and againe, that they sinne not with the full consent, or swinge of their wils, because Christ lives in them, and restraines the will in part. When they sinne therefore, they sinne not of malice, but of ignorance, or infirmity.

Secondly, the true beleever cannot wholly fall away from grace, because the life of Christ cannot bee abolished. As Christ died but once, and for ever after lives to God: so they that are in Christ, die once to sinne, and live eternally to God, Rom. 6 10. The vertue and power of God, that was shewed in raising Christ to life, is likewise shewed in quickning them that doe beleeve, Eph. 1. 19. Hee therefore that is made alive to God, dies no more, but remaines alive as Christ doth.

Thirdly, they which are true beleevers are a free and voluntary people obeying God, as if there were no law to compell them. For they have Christ to live in them. Reade Psal. 110. 2. The Spirit of life that is in Christ, is also in them; and that is their law, Rom. 8. 2. It is the property of the childe of God to obey God, as it is the nature and quality of the fire to burne when matter is put to it.

It may be here demanded, how wee may know that Christ lives in us? Ans. By the spirit of God, 1 Joh. 3. 24. And the spirit is known by the motions and operations thereof. The first whereof is a purpose to obey God, according to all his Commandements that concerne us, with an inclination of our hearts to the said Commandements. Paul saith, he was sold under sinne: and yet withall he addes, that hee delighted in the law of God according to the inward man, Rom. 7. 23. He that loves God, and keepes his Commandements, hath the Father and the Sonne dwelling in him, John 14. 23. Let this bee observed. Pharaoh, when Gods hand was upon him, confessed he was a sinner, and his people, and requested Moses and Aaron to let the people goe. But after God had withdrawne his hand, hee returned to his old course. The like doe sicke men: they make promise to amend their lives, and they request their friends to pray for them: but when they are recovered, they forget all their faire promises. The reason is this: There is conscience in them; and by it they know themselves to be miserable sinners: but they want this purpose to obey God, and the inclination to his lawes; and therfore indeed they hate not their sins, but rather the Commandement of God. The second operation and signe of the Spirit, is a mind and disposition, like to the mind and disposition of Christ, which is to doe the will of God, to seeke his glory, and to apply himselfe to the good of men, in all duties of love. The third and last (to omit many) is to love Christ for himselfe, and to love them that love Christ, and that because they love Christ. This is a true signe that wee have passed from death to life, 1 John 3. 14. It may be here said, how can Christ be said to live in us, considering wee are laden with afflictions and miseries? where Christ lives, there is no misery. Ans. In the midst of all miseries, the life of Christ doth most appeare. Where naturall life decaies, there spirituall life takes place, 2 Cor. 4. 10. I beare in my body the mortification of our Lord Iesus, that the life of Iesus may bee made manifest in me. Gods power is made manifest in weakenesse, 2 Cor. 12. Againe, it may be said, if Christ lived in us, wee should not feele so many corruptions as we doe. Answ. The life of Christ is conveyed unto us by little and little: God having wounded and slaine us, first binders us up, then he revives us, and the third day he raiseth us up, Hos. 6. 1. Againe, nature feeles not nature, nor corruption feeles corruption, but grace; therfore it is the life of Christ in us that makes us feele the masse and body of corruption.

Furthermore, here wee are to take notice of the common sinne of our dayes. Men will not suffer Christ to live in them, and to rule over them. It is reputed a small matter; but it is a grievous offence. The Gentiles say, Let us breake their bands, and cast their cords from us, Psal. 2. 2. And it was the sin of the Jewes to say, we will not have this man to reigne over us, Luk. 19. 14. And therefore Christ saith, bring them hither, and slay them before me, vers. 27.

Lastly, here we learne our duties: and that is so to live, that wee may be able to say with good conscience that Christ lives in us: we must seeke his kingdome above all things, and take his yoake on us. It will be said, what must we doe that Christ may live in us? Answ. Wee must use the meanes appointed, meditation of the word, prayer, Sacraments: and withall wee must spiritually eate the flesh of Christ, and drinke his bloud, John 6. 57. And that we may eat him, we must have a stomach in our soules, like the stomacke of our bodies, and we must hunger and thirst after Christ: and therefore wee must feele our owne sinnes, and our spirituall povertie, and have an earnest lust and appetite after Christ, as after meat and drinke. When Sisera was pursued by the army of the Israelites, hee cried to Iael, and said, Give me drinke, I die for thirst. Judg. 4, 19. even so wee being pursued by the sentence of the law, by the terrours of hell, death and condemnation, must flie to the throne of grace, and crie out, saying, Give me of the tree of life, give me of the water of life: I perish for thirst. Then shall our wretched soules bee quickened and revived to everlasting life, Mat.5.6. Rev.21.6.

In the fourth place, here is set downe the meanes of spirituall life, in these words, And in that I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Sonne of God who hath loved me, and given himselfe for mee. And that the doctrine may the better appeare, I will stand a while to shew the meaning of them. By flesh is meant the mortall body, or the fraile condition of this temporall life, Hebr.5.7. and 1 Peter 4.2. And therefore to live in the flesh, is to live a naturall life by eating, drinking, sleeping. Further, Paul saith, that living in the flesh, hee lived by faith: and for the better conceiving of this, two questions may bee demanded. The first is, Why a beleever is said to live by faith? Answer. There bee two causes. First, faith is an instrument to unite us to Christ: and by meanes of this union, wee receive life from Christ: for Christ dwels in our hearts by faith, Eph.3.17. Secondly, faith is a Guide to order and governe temporal life, in all good manner according to the will of God. And this faith doth by a divine kinde of reasoning framed in the minde, whereby it urgeth and perswadeth to good duties, Rom.6.11.

The second question is, How men live by faith? Answ. The childe of God lives a double life in this world: a spirituall, and a temporall. The spirituall stands specially in three things; Reconciliation with God, renovation of life, and good workes. Now in our reconciliation with God, we live in this world only by faith. For we have, and enjoy pardon of sinnes, imputation of justice, and acceptation to life eternall, only by meanes of our faith, Rom.4.4. and 5.1.

Againe, in the renovation and change of our lives; wee live by faith. For our faith in Christ purifieth our hearts, Act.15.9. partly, by deriving holinesse and purity from Christ unto us, who is our sanctification: and partly, by moving and perswading of us to holinesse and newnesse of life, 1 Iohn 3.3.

Lastly, in the doing of every good worke we must live by our faith. For first there must be a generall faith, that the worke in his kinde pleaseth God, Rom.14.23. Secondly, justifying faith must give a beginning to the worke, I believed, therefore I spake, Ps.116.12. Thirdly, after the worke is done, faith must cover the defects thereof, that it may be acceptable to God; Heb.11.20.

Temporall life stands in cares, or miseries: and miseries are outward afflictions, or inward temptations. And in all our worldly cares, we are to live by faith. For our care must bee to doe our office, and the labour of our calling, with all diligence. This being done, we must there make a pause: and for the successe of all our prayers, and labours, wee must cast our care on God, 1 Pet.5.7.

Likewise, in our afflictions we are to live by faith. For our faith is to assure us, that God, according to his promise, will give a good issue, 1 Corinth.10.13. And though all temporall things faile us, it makes us retaine the hope of mercy, and of eternall life. Thirdly, it makes us wait Gods leisure for our deliverance, Isa.26.28.

Lastly, in our temptations wee are not to live by feeling, but by faith: yea, against feeling, to rest on the bare promise of God, when wee feele and apprehend nothing but the wrath of God. And thus we see how the beleever lives by his faith in this world.

It may bee said, What is the faith wee live by? Answer is here made: It is the faith of the Sonne of God. And saving faith is so called, because Christ is not onely the author of it, and the object or matter of it, but also the Revealer of it. For there was a certaine faith in God which was put into the heart of man in the creation, which also the morall law requireth: but this faith in the Messias was not knowne till after the fall; and then it was revealed to the world by the Sonne of God.

Againe, it may bee said, What is this faith of the Sonne of God? Answer is here made: A faith whereby I beleeve that Christ hath loved me, and given himselfe for me.

These words then thus explained, are an answer to an objection, which may bee framed thus: Why shouldest thou say, that thou livest not, but that Christ liveth in thee; considering thou livest in the flesh, as other men doe? Answer is made, Though I live in the flesh, yet I live by the faith of the Sonne of God.

The use. Here first of all they are to bee blamed, that live by sense, like beasts: beleeving no more than they see, and trusting God no further than they see him. For, if a man whom wee see and know, makes a promise to us, we are comforted: yea rather, God, who is invisible, make in his word farre better promises (as he doth) we are not in like sort comforted. Againe, we put too much confidence in meanes. If we have good callings, house, land, living, wee can then trust in God: but when meanes of comfort faile, wee are confounded in our selves, as if there were no God. Wee are like the usurer, who will not trust the man, but his pawne: even so wee trust not God upon his bare word, without a pawne. If he come to us with a full hand, and with the pawne of his good gifts and blessings, we trust him; else not.

Againe, they are to bee blamed, that live onely by the guidance of reason. For many dispute thus: I deale truly and justly with all men, and live peaceably with my neighbours: therefore God will have mee excused. But there must bee a better guide to everlasting life; life; namely, faith in Christ: else shall we miss of our marke.

Thirdly, they deceive themselves that thinke they may live as they list, and call upon God when they are dying, and so die by faith. It is wel if they can die by faith: but that they may so die, they must live by faith.

Lastly, they are to bee blamed, that spend their dayes in worldly cares, so as no good thing can take place. This is the life of infidels. And where true faith reignes, it cuts off the multitude of cares, and makes us cast them on God.

Moreover, here we see what we are to doe in perillous times, as in the time of plague, famine, sword, when present death is before our eyes: wee must then live by faith. When Noah heard of the flood, hee prepared such meanes as faith would afford for the saving of himselfe and his family, Abraham, Isaac, Iacob, by faith lived as pilgrimes in a strange land, and were content. Moses left Pharaohs court, and feared not the wrath of the King, because by faith hee saw him that was invisible, Hebr.11.27. David in the feare of present death comforted himselfe in the Lord his God, 1 Sam.30.6. When Iehosaphat knew not what in the world to doe, hee lift up the eyes of his faith to the Lord, 2 Chron.20.12. Christ in his agony and passion of the crosse, by faith commended his soule into the hands of his Father. Of the Saints of the new Testament, some were racked, some were stoned to death, and that by faith, Hebr.11.36. Wee must therefore all of us learne to live by faith: and for this cause wee must acquaint our selves with the word, and promises of God, and mingle them with our faith: else shall the life of a man in the world be worse than the life of a beast.

Againe, in these words [who hath loved mee, and given himselfe for me.] the nature and property of justifying faith is set downe, which is to apply the love of God, and the merit of the passion of Christ unto our selves. And therefore the Papists are deceived, who say, that hope applyeth, and not faith. It may bee alleaged, that Paul speakes these words privately of himselfe. Answ. He speakes them in the name of all beleevers, Jewes, and Gentiles. For (as wee may see in the former verses) that which concerned Peter, and the rest of Christian Jewes, hee applyes to himselfe, lest his speech should seeme odious.

Againe, it may be objected, that all beleevers cannot say thus, Christ hath loved me, and given himselfe for me. Answ. If the minde bee fixed on Christ, and there bee also a will and endevour to beleeve and apprehend Christ, there is faith indeed. For God accepts the true and earnest will to beleeve, for faith. We are not saved for the perfection of our faith, but for the perfection of the obedience of Christ, which faith apprehendeth. The Israelites which looked upon the brasen serpent with one eye, or with a squint eye, with halfe an eye, or dimme sight, were healed; not for the goodnes of their sight, but for the promise of God. The poore in spirit are blessed: Now they are poore in spirit, who finde themselves empty of all goodnesse, empty of true faith, ful of unbeleefe, and unfainedly desire to beleeve. So then if wee grieve because wee cannot beleeve as we should, and earnestly desire to beleeve, God accepts us for beleevers.

Againe, in these words [who hath loved me, and given himselfe for me] S. Paul sets down the reason or Argument, which faith (after it is in the minde regenerate) to move men to live to God. And the reason is framed thus: Christ loveth mee, and hath given himselfe for mee, therefore see thou live to God. Reade the like, Rom.12.1. and Ps.116.12.

By this we are to take occasion, to consider and to bewaile the hardnesse of our hearts, who doe not relent from our evill wayes, and turne unto God upon the consideration of his love in Christ. The waters of the Sanctuarie have long flowed unto us: but we have not sweetned us, and made us savour: therefore it is to bee feared lest our habitations be at length turned to places of nettles and salt pits, Ezech.47.11.

21. I doe not abrogate the grace of God: for if righteousnesse bee by the law, then Christ died without cause.

The meaning. Grace in Scripture signifieth two things: the free favour of God, and the gifts of God in us. And where the holy Ghost intreats of justification, grace in the first sense, signifies the good will and favour of God, pardoning sinnes, and accepting us to life everlasting, for the merit of Christ, 2 Tim.1.9. Eph.2.8. And in this sense is the word used in this place. And when Paul saith, I do not abrogate the grace of God, his meaning is; I doe not make void or frustrate the grace of God in respect of my selfe, or in respect of other beleevers, by teaching the justification of a sinner by faith alone. He addes, If righteousnesse be by the law, that is, if a sinner be justified by his owne obedience, in performing the law, then Christ died without cause. The word Dωρεαν, freely, translated without a cause, hath a double signification. One is, when it signifies as much as without price or merit. Matth.10.8. Ye have received freely, give freely. The second is, when it signifies rashly, without just or sufficient cause: as Psalme 69.4. Mine enemies hate me freely, (as the Seventy translate) that is, wrongfully or without just cause. Thus here Christ is said to die freely, that is, in vaine or without cause, because if wee bee justified by obedience to the law, then Christ died in vaine, to make any satisfaction to the Law for us.

These words are an answer to an objection. The objection is this: If thou teach that a sinner is justified onely by his faith in Christ, then thou abolishest the grace of God. The answer is negative. I doe not by this doctrine abrogate the grace of God. And there is a reason also of this answer: If wee bee justified by our owne fulfilling of the law, then Christ died in vaine to fulfill the law for us.

The use. First, let us marke that Paul saith, he doth not abrogate the grace of God: and why? because hee will suffer nothing in the cause of our justification to bee joyned with the obedience of the doctrine of Christ. And hence we learne, what is the nature of grace. It must stand wholly and entirely in itself: Gods grace cannot stand with mans merit. Grace is no grace, unlesse it be bestowed freely, given every way: Romane 4.4. To him that worketh the wages is not given of grace but of debt. Romane 11.6. If election be of grace, then not of workes, else is grace no grace. Grace and workes of grace in the causing of justification, can no more stand together, than fire and water. By this wee are admonished to be nothing in our selves, and to ascribe all that wee are, or can doe, to the grace of God.

Againe, here we see our duty, and that is, to be carefull not to abrogate the grace of God unto our selves. But how is that done? Answ. Wee must strip and empty our selves of all righteousnesse, and goodnesse of our owne, even to the death, and with all hunger and thirst after Christ and his righteousnesse, Mat. 5.6. Luke 1.53.

Thirdly, Paul here sets downe a notable ground of true religion; that the death of Christ is made void, if any thing bee joyned with it in the worke of our justification, as a meanes to satisfie Gods justice, and to merit his favour of God. Therefore the doctrine of justification by workes is a manifest error. For if wee bee justified by the workes of the law, then the judgement of the holy Ghost is, that Christ died without cause. Againe, the doctrine of humane satisfactions is a device of mans braine. For if wee satisfie for our selves, then did Christ by death satisfie in vaine. Thirdly, it is a false and wicked (though a colourable invention) to say, that Christ by his death merited, that wee should merit by our workes. For if wee merit by workes, Christ dyed in vaine to merit by his owne death. This is the sentence of God, who cannot erre. Lastly, here wee see the Church of Rome erreth in the foundation of true religion, because it joynes the merit of mans works and the merit of the death of Christ, in the justification of a sinner. And therefore wee may not so much as dreame of any reconciliation to be made with that religion: for light and darknes cannot be reconciled, nor fire and water. Here the Papists answer, that Paul in this text speakes against them that looked to be justified by the naturall observation of the law, without the death of Christ. But it is false which they say. For Paul here speakes against Christian Jewes, who joyned the law and the Gospell, and looked to bee justified both by Christ, and by the workes of the law: and not by workes of the law, done by the strength of nature, but by workes of grace.

Q. 4. Ap. 1. 2. 3.

1. O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you that ye should not obey the truth, to whom before Christ before you described in your sight, and among you crucified?

THat wee may see how this chapter depends on the former, wee must repeat the principall Argument of the Epistle: If I was called of God, and my doctrine bee true, then yee should not have revolted to another Gospell: but I was called of God, and my doctrine is true: therefore yee should not have revolted to another Gospell.

The first part of the minor, that Paul was called of God, was handled in the first and second Chapters. The second part, that his doctrine is true, is handled in the third, fourth, and fifth; and is propounded in this verse. Moreover, the conclusion of the Argument set downe, chap. 1. vers. 8. is here againe repeated, namely, that the Galatians should not have revolted to another Gospell. And with all Paul here notes the causes of their revolt, and they are two. One is folly: O foolish Galatians. The other is, the deceit of false teachers, Who hath bewitched you?

Whereas Paul saith, O foolish Galatians, that woe mistake not his example, three questions may bee demanded. The first is, in what respect hee gives this hard judgement against them? Answer. Three things are subjected to judgement; the doctrines of men, the lives of men, and the persons of men. Doctrines are to bee judged by the word, and the lives of men: yet ordinarily, the persons of men are not to bee judged. For the saying is true, that three things are not subject to judgement: the counsels of God, the Scriptures, and the persons of men. And in this place Paul gives judgement, not against the Galatians themselves, or against their persons, but against their new conceived doctrine, and against their practice in revolting.

The second question is, whether this judgement be righteous and true judgement? Answ. It is: because it is upon good ground. For first of all, Paul gives this censure, by vertue of his calling: because his office was to reprove and correct vice, Titus 1.9. and 2.15. Secondly, it rests in truth. For indeed they overturned the passion of Christ: and therefore hee could not call them lesse than fooles. Thirdly, this judgement was given in love. For Paul intended and desired nothing in this speech, but their good and amendment. Upon like grounds Isay cals the Israelites, people of Sodome and Gomorrha, Isa. 1. Christ cals the two disciples foolish, and slow of hart to beleeve, Luke 24. 25. Paul cals the Cretians liars and slowbellies, Titus 1.12. But Matth. 5.22. may bee objected, where hee is said to bee in danger of a Councell, that saith, Thou foole. Ans. The place is to bee understood of them that chargemen with follie, with a minde to reproach them, and in way of revenge: which Paul in this place doth not.

The third question is, whether we may use like judgement against men? Answ. Upon like grounds wee may, if wee have a warrant, and calling from God so to doe. For all judgement is Gods, Rom. 14.10. if this judgement bee in truth: if it bee in charitie, for the amendment of the parties, and for the good of others. Otherwise, if these grounds faile us, we may not give judgement against any man, but must follow the judgement of charitie which thinkes no evill, hopes the best, and construes all things in the best part, 1 Cor. 13.

To come to the second cause, Paul saith, Who hath bewitched you? that is, who hath deceived you, as if yee were bewitched by some inchantments? Here Paul takes it for a confessed truth, that there is witchcraft, and witches. And that wee may the better conceive his meaning, two questions are to bee propounded. The first is, what is the witchcraft here meant? Answer. It is a Satanicall operation, whereby the senses of men are deluded. For the devill can by certaine meanes, delude and corrupt the fantasie, or the imagination; and cause men to thinke that of themselves, which is otherwise. There is a disease called Lycanthropia, in which the braine being distempered, men thinke themselves to bee wolves, and carry themselves as wolves. And in this disease the devill hath a great stroke. Againe, the Devill can delude the outward senses, as the hearing, and the sight. This Jannes and Jambres turned their roddes into serpents, before Pharaoh, and brought frogs, by deceiving the eye, and not in truth, Exod. 7. and 8. Thus the Witch of Endor made a counterfeit Samuel to rise out of the earth, 1 Sam. 28.

The second question is, if this witchcraft bee an operation of Satan, how men should bee said to doe it: for Paul saith, who or what man hath bewitched you? Answer. Men doe it by league and confederacy with the Devill. The Inchanter charmes by joining societie, Psalm. 58.5. The devill seekes whom hee may devoure: and therefore, where hee findes a fit person to worke upon, hee insinuates and offers himselfe. And after men be in league with him, he hath a word and sacraments for them, as God hath: and hee requireth faith, as God doth. And looke as thieves, some are in the way, some in the wood, and they in the way (when a booty comes) give a watch-word to the rest, and then all are bound together: so even so, when a man in league with the Devill useth charmes, imprecations, curses, praises, superstitious invocations, according to his appointment, and other Satanicall ceremonies, a watch-word is likewise given unto him, and he is straight at hand to the intended feat. Thus, and no otherwise, are men said to bewitch, or delude the eye.

That which Paul saith to the Galatians, if he were now living among us, he would likewise say to us, O foolish nation, who hath bewitched you? We are wise in matters of the world: but in matters concerning the kingdome of heaven, the most of us are fooles, besotted, and bewitched with worldly cares and pleasures, without sense in matters of religion, like a peece of wax without all forme: fit to take the forme and print of any religion. And wee must take heed, lest this our foolishnesse, and intoxication of our senses, lead us head-long to perdition. And therefore we must learn the way of life in humility, Psalme 25.9. We must obey it, and in obedience wee shall learne it, Joh. 7.17. Wee must as heartily love the word of God, as in minde we conceive it; lest by not loving of it we be given up to strong illusions to beleeve a lie, 2 Thes. 2.10. Lastly, we must pray to God to bee taught and guided by his word and Spirit, in things pertaining to everlasting life.

To proceed further, the delusion or bewitching of the Galatians is set forth by two arguments. The first is the end in these words, That ye should not obey the truth. Before I come to the consideration of these words, a doubt must be resolved. For some man may say, that this Epistle is corrupted, because these words are wanting in sundry translations and editions of the Bible: and Jerome saith, that they were not found in the copies of the Bible in his daies. Ans. In the editions and translations of the Bible, there are sundry differences, and diversities of readings: and these differences are not the fault of the Scripture, but of the men which used to write out the Bible: for the Bible heretofore was spread abroad, not by printing, but by writing. Againe, though in the bookes of the Bible there be sundry varieties of reading, yet Gods providence hath so watched over the Bible, that the sense thereof remaineth intire, sound & incorrupt, specially in the grounds of religion: and not the words principally, but the sense is the Scripture. And that which I say, appeareth in this text: for whether these words be left in, or put out, the sense of the verse is one and the same.

The words, That ye should not obey the truth, are instant of the obedience of faith, Rom. 1.5. and 16.26. And the obedience of faith is propounded unto us without adding, detracting, or straining. And this the Galatians did not: for they added justification by works, to the doctrine of Paul, touching justification by faith alone: by which addition they deprived the truth, and shewed that indeed they believed not the truth.

Here let us obserue the scope of all the malice of the Deuill: and that is to hinder or ouerthrow our faith. The first thing the deuill aimed at in our first parents was to ouerthrow their faith, and to cause them to doubt of the truth of Gods word. The first temptation where with our Saviour Christ was assaulted, was against his faith, as hee was man: If thou bee the Sonne of God thou canst cause these stones in thy hunger to bee made bread: but thou canst not cause these stones to bee made bread: therefore thou art not the Son of God. The deuil desired to sift out all the faith of the Apostles, and to leave in them nothing but the chasse of unbeleefe, Luke 22. The deuill blinds the eyes of men, That the light of the Gospell of Iesus Christ may not shine unto them, 2 Cor. 4.4. This must teach us that we must not only hold and know the true religion for the time, but also build our selves upon our faith, Iud. v. 20. and bee rooted and stablished upon our faith and religion, Col. 1.23. and the rather, because it hath beene the manner of this nation, wickedly to change religion with the times. And that wee may indeed be rooted upon our religion, wee must not boast of the greatnesse and strength of our faith, but rather labour to see in our selves a sea of unbeleefe, heartily to bewaile it, and to strive to beleeve, and to goe on from faith to faith.

The truth here mentioned, is the heavenly doctrine of the Gospell: so called for two causes. First, because it is an absolute truth without errour. It is a principle not to be called in question, that the Apostles & Prophets in writing and preaching could not erre. It may be said, they were men, as we are: and therefore subject to erre, and be deceived in judgement. Answer. Judgement is two-fold. One, conceived by the discourse of naturall reason: the other, conceived by the apprehension of things revealed by God. In the first, the Apostles and Prophets might erre, and bee deceived; as Nathan and Peter were. In the second, they could not: because it was framed in them by the inspiration, and instinct of the holy Ghost. And therefore they never erred, either in preaching or writing. The second cause why the Gospel is called the truth, is because it is a most worthy truth, namely, the truth which is according to godlinesse, Tit. 1. It may be said, what is the truth? and how shal we know it, considering there be so many dissentions? Ans. First, make thy selfe fit to know and then shalt thou know the truth. And thou shalt be fitted to know the truth, if thou first of all give thy selfe to obey it. Reade the golden text, Iohn 7.17. Obey, and ye shall know.

The second thing, whereby the delusion of the Galatians is expressed, is the figure thereof, in these words, to whom Iesus Christ was described, &c. That is, to whom I have preached the doctrine of salvation by Christ, in lively and evident manner even as if Christ had beene painted before your eyes, and had beene crucified, in or among you. And this is a manifest token that the Galatians were deluded, because they could not acknowledge the truth, when it was set forth unto them (as it were) in orient colours. And where Paul saith, that Christ was before described, I referre it to the time before their revolt.

Here first wee are to obserue the properties of the Ministery of the word. The first, that it must bee plaine, perspicuous, and evident, as if the doctrine were pictured, and painted out before the eyes of men. Therefore the Church of Rome deales wickedly, in keeping the Scriptures in an unknowne tongue. For this is to cover that from the people, which is to bee painted before the eyes of their mindes, Againe, that kinde of preaching is to be blamed, in which there is used a mixed kinde of variety of languages, before the unlearned. For this is a signe to unbeleevers, 1 Corinth. 14.22. And in this kinde of preaching wee doe not paint Christ, but wee paint out our owne selves. It is a by-word among us: It was a very plaine sermon. And I say againe, the plainer, the better.

The second property of the Ministerie of the word is, that it must be powerfull and lively in operation, & as it were crucifying Christ within us, and causing us to feele the vertue of his passion. The word preached must pierce into the heart, like a two-edged sword, Hebr. 4.12. true prophecie judgeth men, discovereth the things of the heart, and causeth men to say, The Lord is within you, 1 Cor. 14.25. The scepter of Christ wherby hee sanctifieth the nations, is in his mouth, Isa. 11. 4. that is, in the Ministery of the word, Ier. 15.19. And it is the same Ministerie, which shaketh heaven, and earth, Agg. 2.5. By this it appeareth, that to take a text, and to make discourse upon something in the said text, shewing much invention of wit, & much reading, and humane learning, is not to preach Christ in a lively manner. It will be said: what then? I answer with Paul, who is sufficient either for the speaking, or doing of these things? yet something may bee shewed. Know therefore, that the effectuall and powerfull preaching of the word standes in three things. The first is true and proper interpretation of the scripture, and that by it selfe: for Scripture is both the glosse, and the text. The second is savourie and wholesome doctrine gathered out of the Scriptures truly expounded. The third is the application of the said doctrine, either to the information of the judgement, or to the reformation of the life. This is the preaching that is of power. Let all the sonnes of the Prophets thinke upon these things, and study to be doers of them.

Furthermore, two questions are here resolved. The first is, whether images be necessary in the congregations of the people of God? Answ. There are Christian Images, and Pictures, and they are very necessary. And these these Images are Sermons of Christ, and the right administration of the Sacraments. For in them Christ is described and painted out unto us. As for the painted and carved images of the Papists, we utterly detest them as idols. They alleage, that they are lay-mens bookes: but Habacuck saith, they are doctrines of lies, Hab. 2.18. And where the lively preaching of the word is, there is no need of them. And therefore Images were not established in Churches in these West parts, till after 700. yeares. As long as the church had golden teachers, they had no Images, but when the teachers did degenerate and become wooden teachers, then came both golden and wooden Images. It is further said, why may not we paint Christ in our Churches with colours, as with words in sermons? Answ. The one the Lord alloweth, namely, the description of Christ in speech, but the carving or painting of images in churches, and that for religious use, he condemneth, Exod. 20. 6.

The second question is, Whether there be now in the Church of God any sacrifice or oblation of Christ? Ans. There is after a sort. For there is a lively representation of the passion of Christ, in the preaching of the word, and in the administration of the Lords Supper, as if Christ were yet in crucifying, and as though his bloud were now distilling from his hands and sides. As for the sacrifice of the Masse, it is an abomination and a meere mockerie. For there the Priest, when he saith, Accept these gifts, &c. is become a Mediator betweene Christ and God: and the bodie and bloud of Christ is offered in an unbloudy manner; that is, bloud is offered without bloud: and the priest, when hee hath offered Christ, eats up all that hee hath offered. Yet for this damnable oblation many stand: because they are bewitched and inchanted with pretended shewes of Fathers, Councels, Antiquitie, Succession, &c.

Lastly, here we learne, what is the duty of al beleevers: namely, to behold Christ crucified, Cant. 3.11. O daughter of Sion, behold your king. But where must we behold him? Not in Roods and Crucifixes after the Popish manner: but wee must looke on him, as he propounds himselfe unto us in the word and Sacraments. For thus is he the true object of our faith. And how must we behold him? by the eye of faith, which makes us both see him, and feele him (as it were) crucified in us. Here note, that implicite faith (which is to beleeve as the Church beleeves) is a blind faith: for by it we cannot contemplate and behold Christ. And the common fault is here to bee noted, whereby men neglect and passe by this contemplation of Christ. There is among us the evill eye that devoureth all it seeth: there is the adulterous eye: but where is the eye of faith to behold Christ? where is the force of this eye to bee seene, which maketh the thing which it beholdeth to be ours, and us like unto it? We love to trickle and paint our bodies, and some to set fine complexions on their faces, (and therefore complexions at this day are made a kinde of merchandize) but away with such vanities. If ye love to be painted, I will tell you what ye shall doe. The office of the Ministers is to describe and paint out Christ unto us: let them paint Christ crucified in the heart, and set up his image there, and then shalt thou have a favourable complexion in the eye both of God and man.

That this contemplation of Christ by faith may take more place, and bee the better practised, consider the use of it. First, by beholding Christ crucified, we see our miserie and wickednesse. For our sins are the swords and speares which have crucified him, Zach. 12. 10. Secondly, this sight brings us true and lively comfort: for beholding Christ crucified, we see Paradise as it were in the midst of hell, we see the hand-writing against us, cancelled, Colos. 2.14. we see the remission of our sins written with the heart bloud of Christ, and sealed with the same. Thirdly, the sight of Christ makes an universall change of us. The camelion takes to it the colours of the things which it seeth, and are neere unto it: and the beleeving heart takes to it the disposition and minde that was in Christ crucified, by viewing and beholding of Christ. This sight makes us mourne and bleed in our hearts for our offences, when wee consider that Christ was crucified for us: and it makes us love Christ, when wee consider the love of God in Christ crucified.

Lastly, this thing must be a terrour to all the ungodly. For they have no care to behold Christ, but by their lewd lives they crucifie him: and for this cause in the day of judgement, they shall see with heavie hearts, Christ to bee their Judge whom they have pierced, Revel. 1.7. Better therefore it is, now in the day of grace to behold him with the eye of faith to our comfort, than now to despise him, and then to behold him to our everlasting shame with the eye of confusion.

2. This only would I learne of you, Received ye the Spirit by the workes of the law, or by the hearing of faith?

3. Are ye so foolish, that after yee have begun in the spirit, ye would now be made perfect by the flesh.

The sense of these words. When Paul saith, this would I learne of you, he meets with the conceit of the Galatians, who thought themselves wise: and the effect of his speech is this: I have counted you fooles: but it may be that you think your selves wise, and me foolish: well, let it be so: then with all your wisdom teach me, and let me learne but one thing: and that is, by what meanes ye received the Spirit. Touching the phrase, Received ye the Spirit, three things must be observed. The first, that the Spirit sometimes signifies the essentiall essentiall spirit of the Father and the Sonne, as 1 Cor. 12.4. There is a diversitie of gifts, but one spirit. Sometimes againe it signifies the effects, operations, or gifts of the spirit, as namely, when flesh and spirit are opposed, as in this text. And further, when it signifies gifts, yet then the presence of the spirit is not excluded, but included. The second is, that here the Spirit signifies the spirit of adoption, Eph. 1.13. Rom. 8.16. The third is, that to receive the spirit, is not barely to receive the gifts of the spirit, (as we are said to have the Sunne in the house, when we receive the beames of the body of the Sunne being in heaven:) but in this receiving there are two things. One is, that the spirit is present in us; the other, that the same spirit testifieth his presence, by his speciall operation and gifts of grace. Paul saith, Eph. 4.30. Grieve not the spirit. Which is not meant of gifts, but of the very person of the spirit. And it must be remembred, that the effects and gifts of the spirit presuppose the presence of the spirit. By workes of the law we are to understand the doctrine of justification by the works of the law. By the hearing of faith is meant the doctrine of the Gospel: hearing being put for the thing heard, namely, preaching: and faith, for the doctrine of justification by faith in Christ crucified. For faith signifies not onely the gift whereby we beleeve, but also that which is beleeved.

In the third verse, spirit signifies the operation of the spirit, whereby the inward man is renewed and made like to God; or againe, the exercises of the inward man: and flesh signifies outward things or actions, that properly pertaine to the outward man, as circumcision, and such like. Thus 2 Cor. 5.17. flesh and the new creature are opposed. And Paul saith, Rom. 9.29. He is a Iew, that is a Iew within in the spirit, having the circumcision of the heart. To begin in the spirit, is to begin in godlinesse and religion, inwardly in the exercises of the renewed heart.

The Resolution. In these words is contained the first argument, whereby Paul proves the truth of his doctrine. It is framed thus: If ye received the spirit by my doctrine, my doctrine is true, and ye foolish that adde unto it justification by the workes of the law: but ye received the spirit by my doctrine: therefore it is true: and ye deale foolishly that have added to it justification by workes.

The major or first proposition is not expressed, but the proofe thereof in the third verse, thus: it is a point of extreme folly, when ye have begun in the spirit, to end in the flesh: therefore it is folly in you having received the spirit by my doctrine, to adde any thing unto it of your owne.

The use. When Paul saith, Let me learne one thing of you, he notes the fault of the Galatians, and of sundry others, who when they have attained to a certaine measure of knowledge in Gods word, are presently puffed up with pride, and often thinke themselves wiser than their teachers. This was the fault of the Corinthians, 1 Cor. 8.10. and of sundry in our daies, who separate wholly from all our congregations, presuming to know that which they never learned of their teachers. That this overweening pride may not take place, we must joyne the knowledge of our selves, with the knowledge of Gods word, and mix our knowledge with love. For love edifies; and bare knowledge swels the heart.

Againe, here when it is said, Received ye the spirit? that is, ye did not receive the spirit by the workes of the law, but by the hearing of faith: Here, I say, we see the difference between the law and the Gospell. The law doth not minister the spirit unto us: for it onely shewes our disease, and gives us no remedie. The Gospell ministreth the spirit. For it shewes what we are to doe: and withall the spirit is given, to make us doe that which we are injoyned in the Gospell.

Here also we learne, that the preaching of the Gospell is necessarie for all men, because it is the Instrument of God to conferre the spirit. While Peter was yet speaking, the spirit of God fell upon the Gentiles, Act. 10.44. Paul saith, his ministery is the ministery of the spirit, 2 Cor. 3.5. saving the ministers and others, 1 Tim. 4.16. And the most learned have need of this ordinance of God. For suppose they have knowledge sufficient, yet have they need of the spirit of God to guide and governe them. Further let it be observed, what is the scope of all our hearing and teaching, namely, that we may receive the spirit of God: without which spirit we can doe nothing.

Moreover, Paul here fets downe an infallible argument, whereby wee may bee assured that the Scripture is the word of God. For the Scriptures in their right use (which is in reading, hearing, meditation) have the divine and supernaturall operation of the spirit joyned with them, to comfort in all distresses, and in the very pang of death, and to convert the heart of man, making him in respect of righteousnesse and holinesse like unto God. This privilege have the Scriptures, Isa. 59.21. and no word else.

Lastly, let us here observe the certain marke of true religion: and that is, that the preaching thereof conferres the spirit of adoption. This doth not the pretended Catholike Religion of the Papists: it doth not conferre unto men the spirit to assure them that they are the children of God; because it teacheth that we are to be in suspence of our salvation. Againe, by teaching humane satisfactions and merits, it ministreth the spirit of pride and presumption, as also the spirit of cruelties, and not of meeknesse: for they of that religion commonly delight in bloud: and there have been no warres, or seditions, or rebellions in Europe, for many ages, but they of the Romish religion have beene at one end of them.

When Paul saith, vers. 3. Began ye in the spirit, &c. he teacheth a divine instruction, that true godlinesse and Religion stands in the spirit, that is, the grace of the heart, or in the exercises of the inner man, whether we respect the beginning, the middle, or the accomplishment thereof. The kings daughter is all glorious within, Psal. 45.13. True worshippers worship God in the spirit, Joh. 4.23. Rom. 1.12. He is a Iew that is one inwardly, not without, but within the spirit, in the circumcision of the heart, Rom. 2.29. Gods kingdome stands in justice, peace of conscience, and joy in the holy Ghost, Ro. 14.17. He that is in Christ must not know him in any carnall respects, but be a new creature, 2 Cor. 5.17. Gal. 6.15. Baptisme is not the washing of the spots of the flesh, but the promise that a good conscience makes to God. By this doctrine we see the fault of the world, which for the most part place religion in ceremoniall performance of some outward duties. The Jewes fet to come to God with sacrifices, and to draw neere to him with his lip, his heart being farre from God. The Papist hath turned the Apostolike and Catholike religion into a masse of ceremonies, borrowed partly from the Jewes, and partly from the Gentiles. And the multitude among us place their religion in comming to the Church, in outward hearing, in receiving the Sacraments, in some kinde of formall praying. These things may not be condemned, but the power and life of religion lies not in these things. Wherefore wee must not stand upon outward and painted shewes: but looke what thou art betweene God and thy selfe, that only art thou in religion. Thou praiest in the Church: but thou maist deceive the world in this. Tell me, dost thou pray at home? dost thou pray in thine owne heart unto God, by the spirit of prayer? then thou praiest indeed. If thou canst approve thy heart unto God for any act of religion, then it is done indeed, else not. Remember this.

Furthermore, Paul here teacheth that our after proceedings in religion must be answerable to our first beginnings in the spirit. And hence we may be advertised of many things. First, here we must take notice of the folly of Popish religion. For it begins in Gods election and the merit of Christ: and it ends in our merits and satisfactions. Secondly, wee must take notice of the common sinne of our times. For in the practice and our religion we are deceived. We are not now that which we have beene twentie or thirtie yeares agoe. For now we see the world abounds with Atheists, Epicures, Libertines, Worldlings, Newters: that are of no religion: and such as that have heretofore shewed some forwardnesse, begin to falter and stagger, and to looke another way. This is not to begin and end in the spirit: but to begin in the flesh. Wee are bettime to amend this fault, lest if our former zealebee tumed to prefunctuke warmenesse, God in his anger spue us out.

Young men must here be advertised, as they grow in yeares and stature, so to grow up in good things, that both the first beginning and the after proceedings may bee in the spirit. Thus did Christ increase in grace, as hee increased in stature.

Lastly, aged persons that have begunne the spirit, must looke that they grow up in the grace of the spirit more than others, that they may end in the spirit. It is said of Hannah, the daughter of Phanuel, a widow of the tribe of Aser, that her love, services, and workes, were more at the last than at the first, Rev. 2.19. The same should be said of all aged persons. They which are planted in the house of God, bring forth fruit in their old age, Psal. 92.14. It is the commendation of the old man, that by reason of his manifold experience, he knowes the Father more than others, 1 Joh. 2.14. It is the praise of Anna, that she continually served God in fasting and prayer being 80. yeares old. When the outward man decaies, the inward man should be renewed. I speake all this the rather, because aged persons are much wanting in this duty. For none commonly are so ignorant in the things of God as they: they begin in the spirit, but the affections of their hearts usually end in the love of this present world. But they must be warned, that as they goe before others in age, so must they also exceed in the graces of the spirit. We use to say of children, God make them good old men: and it is well said. An old man is to bee regarded: but specially a good old man, who is more to be respected than a world of younger yeares. Now aged persons when they grow in age, and not in the spirit, they lose their honour, for age is a crowne of glory, when it is found in the way of righteousnesse, Prov. 16.31. Let them therefore pray with David, Forsake me not, O Lord, in mine old age, Psal. 71.9.

Have ye suffered so many things in vaine? if so be it be even in vaine.

The interrogation, have ye? as much as ye have. Because the question in this place contervailes a speech affirmative. And the words carry this sense: Ye have professed the Gospel, and ye have suffered many afflictions for the same: but now have yee revolted from the Gospell, and therefore all your former sufferings are void, or in vaine.

The words, if so be it be in vaine are a limitation or qualification of that which was said before: and they carry this sense: Whereas I have said that your sufferings are in vaine, I speake it, not simply, but with some hope of your repentance: which if it be, then that which I would be in vaine, shall not be in vaine.

In this verse Paul fets downe a second reason, to prove the proposition of his first argument, on this manner: If yee received the spirit by my doctrine, then is my doctrine true, and ye fooles in revolting from it. For by this meanes the things which you suffered suffered well, ye now suffer in vaine.

The use. When Paul saith, Have ye suffered, &c. hee signifies unto us the estate and condition of all beleevers in this life, that they must be bearers and sufferers. The reason. To this are we called, 1 Pet. 2. 21. for we are called to resigne all revenge to God, and therefore of our selves to be bearers and sufferers, Matth. 5. 39. Resist not evill. And we are called to imitate the passion of Christ, who suffered being innocent, & being reviled, reviled not againe. Moreover, it is for our good that wee should beare and suffer, 1 Pet. 1. 6. and Psal. 119. 71. It may bee demanded, What if my cause bee good, must I then suffer? Ans. Yea; The better thy cause is, the better are thy sufferings: they are blessed that suffer for righteousnesse. Paul commends himselfe by the multitude of his sufferings, 2 Cor. 11. 23. Againe, it may be demanded, how long we must suffer? Ans. Even to the shedding of our bloud, if it be for the resisting of sin, Heb. 12. 4. Lastly, it may bee said, how shall we be able to doe this? Answ. God is faithfull, & will not lay on us more than we shall be able to beare, 1 Cor. 10. 3. By this we are admonished, not to make a reckoning in this world, of pleasure and delight, as though the Gospel were a Gospel of ease, and as we use to say, a gospel made of velvet; but every one of us must take up his owne crosse, Luk. 9. 23. If thou wilt bee my disciple, denie thy selfe, take up thy crosse, that is, the particular affliction and miserie which God laies on thee. Againe, if in this world we must be sufferers by condition, then in dissentions and differences wee may neither give nor take the challenge, but must bee content to beare and put up wrongs and abuses. Lastly, in these daies of our peace, we must looke for daies of triall and affliction. For as yet we have suffered little for the name of Christ. The harvest of the Lord hath beene among us more than 40. yeares: therefore (no doubt) the time of threshing, fanning, and grinding come on, that as the Martyr said, we may be good bread to the Lord. And that wee may be able to suffer for the name of God, we must pray for this gift at Gods hand. For power to suffer is the gift of God, Phil. 1. 29. and we must observe the commandement of God, not to feare the terrours of men, Rev. 2. 10. 1 Pet. 3. 14. And for this cause, we must (as Peter saith) sanctifie God in our hearts: being assured by our faith, of the presence, protection, and providence of God.

When Paul saith, Have ye suffered so many things? he shewes that we must indure manifold miseries in this life. Iacob said to Pharao, his daies were few and evill. Many are the afflictions of the righteous, Psal. 34. 20. Christ saith, Take up thy crosse every day, Luk. 9. 23. and thereby he signifies, that every new day that comes over our heads, we must looke for a new crosse. And for this cause it is not enough to be patient for a fit, but we must shew all patience and long suffering, and that with joyfulnesse, Col. 1. 11.

When Paul saith, Have ye suffered so many things in vaine? he signifies that our sufferings are of great use, unlesse our sinnes be the hinderance. It may then be demanded, what is the use of our sufferings? The Papists answer, that in our baptisme or first conversio, Christs sufferings doe all; and abolish the whole fault and punishment: but if we sin after our conversion, then they say, Christs sufferings abolish the fault and the eternall punishment, and our owne sufferings abolish the temporall punishment. But this doctrine lessens and obscures the mercy of God: and it must be observed, that Paul holds all their sufferings to be in vaine, that seeke remission of sins, or justification in any thing out of Christ.

Now wee for our parts make five other uses of our sufferings. First, they serve for triall of men, that it may appeare what is hidden in their hearts, Deut. 8. 2. Secondly, they serve for the correction of things amisse in us, 2 Cor. 12. 23. Thirdly, they serve as documents and warnings to others, specially in publike persons: thus David suffers many things after repentance, for his murther and adulterie. Fourthly, they are markes of adoption, if we be content to obey God in them, Heb. 12. 7. Lastly, they are the troden and beaten way to the kingdome of heaven, Act. 14. 23.

When Paul saith, If they be in vaine, we are to observe his moderation. He reproves and terrifies the Galatians, yet so as he is carefull to preserve the hope of mercy in them, and the hope of their amendment in himselfe. The like hath beene the practice of the Prophets. Ionas preached, yet forty daies and Ninive shall bee destroyed: but withall he added, It may be the Lord will repent, and turne from his fierce wrath, Ion. 3. 9. Peter saith to Simon Magus, Thou art in the gall of bitternesse: but withall he addes, Pray God that the thought of thy heart may be forgiven thee, Act. 8. 21. See the like, Ioel 2. 14. and Amos 5. 15. And thus are Ministers of the Gospell to delay and qualifie their reproofes and censures.

5. He therefore that ministreth to you the spirit, and worketh miracles among you, doth he it by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?

These words are a repetition of the second verse, whence the exposition must be fetched. The words [and worketh miracles among you] are added: and they carry this meaning; That God gave to the Galatians not only the spirit of adoption, but also other extraordinary gifts of the spirit, as to speake with strange tongues, to cure diseases, and such like.

Repetitions in Scripture are not idle, but of great use, and signifie unto us the necessitie of the thing repeated; and the infallible certainty of it. The substance therefore of this verse must carefully be remembred, and that is this; Ye received the spirit by my doctrine; therefore it is true, and of God. The argument is of great use. For by it we come to an infallible infallible assurance of the certainty of Scriptures, and of true religion derived thence.

The Galatians are now revolted from Pauls doctrine, and they erre in this foundation: and yet Paul saith in the time present, He that ministreth the spirit unto you. Hence it appeares, that fals of infirmitie in the childe of God, doe not utterly extinguish the spirit, but onely grieve, or make sad the spirit.

Againe, Paul here teacheth, that God is the only & proper author of miracles. For he that ministreth the spirit, worketh miracles, namely God. A miracle is a worke above the strength of nature: therefore it can be effected of none but the Author of nature. It may be objected, the Apostles, Prophets, and others, had a gift to worke miracles: Iosuah commanded the Sun to stand, Ios. 10. 12. and Elias commanded fire to come downe from heaven, 2 King. 1. Ans. God never gave to any man power to worke and effect a miracle, either mediately or immediately. The gift was the faith of miracles. The faith was grounded upon revelation: and the revelation was, that God himselfe would worke such or such a miracle, when they prayed; commanded; or imposed hands. Men therefore properly are but the mouth of God, and messengers to signifie what he will doe. Againe, it may be objected, that the devill can worke miracles. Answ. He can worke a wonder, or things extraordinary, in respect of the ordinarie course of nature. Thus he caused fire to fall from heaven: and hee caused ulcers to arise in the body of Iob, and that true ulcers. And this he did by the force of nature, better knowne to him than all the world. But as for a true miracle that exceeds the strength of nature, he cannot possibly doe it: no not Christ himselfe as man, though he be exalted above all men and Angels. By this we see that they are deceived, who thinke that the devill can make raine, thunder, and lightening. Indeed when the matter of raine and thunder is prepared by God, he can hasten it and make it more terrible: but raine and thunder hee cannot make, for that is indeed as much as any miracle. Againe, it is a falshood to thinke, that Alchymists are able to turne baser mettals into gold. For it is a worke of creation to turne a creature of one kinde into a creature of another kind. It is also as foolish to imagine that witches by the power of the devill are able to turne themselves into cats and other creatures. None can doe this, but God that made the creature.

Here againe we see the use of miracles, that is, to confirme doctrine in the Apostolike Churches. That their use is further to confirme doctrine even at this day, it cannot bee proved.

Lastly, here in the Galatians we see what an easie thing it is to fall from God, from our faith and allegeance to him. They were taught by Paul, they had received the spirit of adoption: they were enabled to worke miracles: and yet for all this, they fall away to another Gospell. They must be a looking glasse to us. In peace we are now constant: but triall shall come, our frailty shall appeare. That our frailtie and weaknesse may not be hurtfull to us, wee must remember two rules. One is, not to have a conceit of any thing in us, but to build our faith and religion in weare, as in the presence of God, Rom. 11. 20. The second, to take heed that there be not in us an evill, corrupt, and dissembling heart. For if our heart bee naught, our faith cannot be good, Heb. 4. 12.

6. As Abraham beleeved God, and it was imputed to him for righteousnesse.

7. Know ye therefore that they which are of faith, are the children of Abraham.

The words, Even as Abraham, &c. have reference to that which went before, on this manner. Ye Galatians received the spirit by my doctrine; and my doctrine was the preaching of justification by faith without works: which doctrine is like and sutable to the example of Abraham, who beleeved God, and it was imputed for justice.

Here Paul sets downe the second argument whereby he proves the truth of his doctrine. And it is framed thus: As Abraham was justified, so are the children of Abraham. Abraham was justified by justice imputed; and apprehended by faith, vers. 6. Therefore the children of Abraham are thus justified. This conclusion is the principall question: it is not here expressed, but in the roome thereof a declaration is made, who are the true children of God, namely, they that are of Abraham, in respect of faith.

That which is said here of Abraham, is a maine ground concerning the justification of a sinner, in the bookes of the old and new Testament: therefore I will more carefully search the true interpretation of it.

Some expound the words thus: Abraham beleeved God, and the world reputed him for a good and vertuous man. But if this be the right sense, then Paul is deceived, who brings this text to prove the justification of Abraham, not onely before men, but also before God. Now vertue and goodnesse, which is in estimation among men, is not sufficient to acquit and justifie us before God.

The second exposition is of the Papists, who by faith here understand a generall faith, whereby the articles of faith are beleeved: and by imputation, they understand reputation, whereby a thing is esteemed as it is indeed. And they teach that faith is reputed for righteousnesse, because (say they) faith formed with charitie, is indeed the cause whereby a sinner is justified before God. But this exposition hath his defects and errors. The first of all, Charitie is not the formall cause of faith, but the fruit and effect of it, 1 Timoth. The end of teaching is love out of a pure heart, good conscience, and faith unfained. It is objected, cted, that *as the body is dead without the soule, so to faith without works, Iam.*2.26. and therefore that works are the life of faith. Ans. Saint Iames by faith understands a pretended faith, or the profession of faith, as appeares by the words, v.14. though a man say he hath faith: and v.18. shew me thy faith. Now of this profession of faith, workes are the life.

Secondly, this exposition makes faith, or the act of beleeving, to be our whole and intire justice before God: whereas indeed if it bee justice, it is but one part thereof. And in the act of beleeving, love cannot be included.

Thirdly, faith joyned with charitie, is not the justice whereby a sinner is justified. For our faith and love are both imperfect: and faith is imputed for righteousnesse without workes, *Rom.*4.6. and therefore without charitie. For this is charitie, to keepe the commandements of God, *Ioh.*15.10. Paul saith, that the righteousnesse whereby we are justified, is by or through faith, *Phil.*3.9. & therfore our justice & our faith are two distinct things.

The third exposition is also from the Papists, that faith is reputed for righteousnesse: because it is reputed to bee sufficient meanes to prepare men to their justification: but this cannot be the sense of this place. For this was spoken of Abraham after he was justified, and therefore needed no preparation to justification.

Let us now come to the true sense of the words. In them I consider two things, Abrahams faith, in these words, Abraham beleeved God: and the fruit of his faith, in these words, and it was imputed to him for righteousnes. Touching his faith, I consider three things. The first is the occasion, which was on this manner: After the conquest of the heathen kings, Abraham was stil in some fearein this regard the Lord comforts him, *Gen.*15.1. I am thy buckler, and thy exceeding great reward. But to this Abraham replies, I want issue: and the Lord answers, *I will make thy seed as the stars of heaven, Gen.*15.5. Now then looke as God renewes and inlarges his promise to Abraham, so Abraham renewes his faith: and hereupon Moses and Paul say, Abraham beleeved God. God doth not now inlarge his promises to us as to Abraham: nevertheleese, the promises recorded in the Bible, are renewed to us partly by preaching, and partly by the use of the Sacraments: and we accordingly are to renew our faith, ſpecially in the time of feare and danger.

The second thing is the object, or matter of his faith, and that is, the multiplication of his posterity. It may be said, how could Abraham be justified by such a faith? Ans. The promise of the multiplication of his seed, was a dependant of a more principall promise, *I am thy God all-sufficient, Gen.*17.1. and *I am thy exceeding great reward, Gen.*15.11. In this carnall seed, Abraham specially respected (by the eye of faith) the blessed seed of the woman. He therefore beleeved the promise of a seed, as it was a pledge unto him of a thing more principall, namely the favour of God, and as it was a meanes to effect the incarnation of the Son of God. In his example we are taught how we are to respect and use earthly things: we are to respect them as pledges of Gods favour, and to use them as meanes to further us to Christ, and to the attainment of our salvation.

The third point is, the propertics of Abrahams faith, which was a faith against hope. For he beleeved a promise of a seed, when his bodie was halfe dead, and Sarai was barren. In like sort we keeping true religion and good conscience, must in all our temptations, crosses, miseries, infirmities, against reason, sense, and feeling, beleeve the promise of remission of sinnes, and life everlasting.

In this effect and fruit of Abrahams faith, three things must be considered. The first is, what is meant by Imputation. To impute properly, is a speech borrowed from merchants: and it signifies to reckon, or to keepe a reckoning of expences and receits. Thus Paul saith, *Philem.*18. If he have done thee any wrong, impute it to me; that is, set it on my reckoning. And this word is here applied to the judgement of God, because hee is our soveraigne Lord, and we are his debters: and he doth adjudge unto men for their sins, either pardon, or punishment.

Imputation in God is two-fold: one Legall: the other Evangelicall. Legall is, when God willeth and adjudgeth the reward to him that fulfilleth the law. Thus Paul saith, *Rom*4.5. that the wage is imputed to him that worketh, and that of debt. Evangelicall imputation is, when God accepts the satisfaction of Christ our suretie, as a paiment for our sins. In this sense is the word Impute, taken ten times in the 4. chapter to the Romans, and in the same is it used in this place.

The second point is, what is imputed? And it was imputed, that is, faith. Faith here must be considered two waies; first, as a qualitie in it selfe, and thus it is imperfect, and consequently cannot be imputed to us for our justification. Againe, faith must be considered as an instrument, or hand holding and receiving Christ: and in this regard beleeving is put for the thing beleeved. And thus must this text be understood. It was imputed to him, that is, the thing which his faith beleeved was imputed to him by God: for the act of beleeving is not our justice, as I have shewed.

The third point is, what is meant by righteousnesse? Ans. That which is called in Scripture the Justice of God, which is sufficient to acquit a sinner at the barre of Gods judgement. Thus then the sense is manifest: Abraham beleeved the promise of God, specially touching the blessed seed; and that which he beleeved, namely, the obedience of the Mediator (the blessed seed,) was accepted of God

God as his obedience for his justification.

It is objected, that the obedience of Christ is to bee imputed to none, but to Christ, who was the doer of it. Answ. It is to be imputed, that is, ascribed to him as to the author thereof: and withall, because he did performe it in our roome and stead, and that for us, it is to be imputed to us.

Secondly, it is objected, that workes are also imputed as well as faith, Psalme 106.31. Phines executed judgement, and it was imputed to him for righteousnesse. Answer. There is justice of the person, and justice of the act. Iustice of the person is that which makes the person of man just: Iustice of the act is that which makes the act of the person just, and not the person it selfe. Now the Psalme speakes onely of the justice of Phines action: and the meaning of the words is this, that God reputed his action as a just action, whereas men might haply condemne it. This place therefore proves not that workes are imputed for the justification of any man.

Thirdly, it is objected, that imputed justice was never knowne in the Church till 1500. yeares after Christ, Ans. It is false. Bernard saith expreſly, death is put to flight by the death of Christ, and the justice of Christ is imputed to us: and againe, the satisfaction of Christ is imputed to us. Againe, sundry of the fathers, as Augustine, Hierome, Chrysostom, Theodoret, Anselme, entreating upon the text of Paul, 2 *Corin.*5.21. avouch, that the justice whereby we are justified, is not in us, but in Christ. And it is a received doctrine with them, that a sinner is justified by faith alone: now faith alone presupposeth an imputation of justice.

Serm. ad mil. Temp. c. 11. Epist. 190.

The use. Hence it followes, that there is no merit of mans workes, either in the beginning, or in the accomplishment of our justification. For faith is imputed for justice to him that beleeveth and worketh not, *Rom.*4.5.

Againe, by this wee see there is but one justification: and that the second by workes, whereby a man of a good man, is made better, is a meere fiction. For just Abraham is not justified by his good workes where with he abounded, but after his first justification, faith still imputed to him for righteousnesse.

Thirdly, here we see what is that very thing whereby wee are to appeare just before God, and to bee saved, and that is, the obedience of Christ, imputed to us of God, and apprehended by our faith.

Lastly, here wee see our duty. God sits as a Judge over us, hee takes a reckoning of us for all our doings, the Law is an hand-writing against us: to some he imputes their sinnes, to some hee remits them. Wee therefore must come into the presence of God, plead guilty, and acknowledge our selves to bee as bankrupts, and intreat him to grant pardon for us, and to accept the satisfaction of Christ for us: then will God not impute our sinnes, but the obedience of Christ for our justification: and accept him as our surety in life and death.

The declaration of the conclusion followes in the ninth verse, and it shews who are the true children of Abraham. The meaning of the words must first bee considered. To bee of faith, is to bee of Abrahams faith, *Rom.*4.16. And to be of Abrahams faith, is to beleeve and apply the promise of righteousnesse, and life everlasting by Christ, as Abraham did: and to rest in it for our justification and salvation, verſ.10. They are said to be of works, who doe the workes of the law, and looke to be justified thereby: therfore they are of faith, who beleeve in Christ, and looke to bee saved and justified thereby.

And they which thus beleeve with Abraham, are said to be his children. It may be demanded, how? Answer, Children of Abraham, are of two sorts: some by nature, some by grace. By nature are they which are of Abraham by the flesh, or naturall generation, as Ismael was. By grace, all beleevers are children of Abraham: and that three wayes. First, by Imitation, in that Abraham is set forth unto us as a patterne, in the steps of whose faith all true beleevers walke, *Rom.*4.12. Secondly, beleevers are children of Abraham by succession, in that they succeed him in the inheritance of the same blessing. Thirdly, they are children to him by a kinde of spirituall generation. For Abraham by beleeving the promise of a seed, did after a sort beget them. Indeed properly the promise and election of God makes them children: and Abraham by his faith, beleeving the foresaid promise, receives them of God as his children. In this regard beleevers are called *children of the promise, Rom.*9.8. and the seed that is of the faith of Abraham, *Rom.*4.16. Now then the meaning of the text is, that beleevers, though uncircumcised, are the children of Abraham. It may be said, what privilege is this? Answ. Great: for the children of Abraham are children of the covenant, and children of God.

Act.3.25. Rom.9.8.

The use. In this verse Paul sets downe one thing, namely, the true marke of the childe of Abraham, and that is, to bee of the faith of Abraham. Here then marke first of all, the Jews, though descending of Isaac, are no children of Abraham, because they follow not the faith of Abraham. Secondly, the Turkes are no children, though they plead descent from Agar sometimes, and sometime from Sara, terming themselves Agarens, and Saracens. For they tread under foot the faith of Abraham. Thirdly, the Papist will nothing helpe himselfe by the plea of Antiquity, Succession, and universall consent, except he can shew some good evidence, that hee is of the faith of Abraham, which hee cannot; for this faith hee hath corrupted, as I have shewed. Lastly, our profession of Abrahams faith, partly in teaching, and partly in hearing, and in the use of the Sacraments, is not sufficient to prove us the children of Abraham. For not every one that saith, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdome of heaven. Mat. 7.22.

Therefore we must labour to be indeed and in truth of the faith of Abraham, and to walk in the steps of his faith. And to this end, wee must do three things: first, we must have knowledge of the maine and principall promise touching the blessing of God in Christ, and of all other promises depending on the principall: and wee must know the scope and tenour of them, that we be not deceived. Secondly, wee must with Abraham beleeve the power and truth of God, in the accomplishing of the said promises, or in the working of our vocation, justification, sanctification, glorification, Rom. 4.21. Thirdly, we must by faith obey God in all things, shutting our eyes, and suffering our selves (as it were) to bee led blind-fold by the word of God. Thus did Abraham in all things, even in actions against nature, Hebr. 11. But this practice is rare among us. For there are three things which prevaile much among us, the love of worldly honour, the love of pleasures, and the love of riches: and where these beare sway, there faith takes no place. It will be said, that faith is much professed. Ans. Faith was never more professed, yet there was never lesse true faith. For the common faith of men, is a false faith. For in some it is conceived without the meanes of the word, prayer, Sacraments; and in others, it is severed from the purpose of not sinning. Now faith conceived without the true means, and faith joyned with a purpose to live as we list, is nothing but presumption. And surely, this is the faith, though not of all, yet of the most.

Moreover, that which Paul hath said of the children of Abraham, hee proves by the testimony of the Galatians, in these words, Know yee therefore, or yee know: that is, upon the saying of Moses, in the former verse, ye your selves know this to bee a truth, which I said. Marke here, Paul requires such a measure of knowledge in beleevers, that they must bee able to judge of the gathering of this or that doctrine, out of this or that place of scripture. This shewes the contempt of knowledge in these our dayes to be great: for most men reject the preaching of the Gospell, and content themselves with teaching and schooling of nature.

8. For the scripture foreseeing that God would justifie the Gentiles through faith, preached before the Gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all the Gentiles be blessed.

9. So then, they which are of faith, are blessed with faithfull Abraham.

Against the argument in the two former verses, a doubt, or exception might bee moved, on this manner: Wee grant, that they which are of the faith of Abraham, are justified as he was, so they be Jewes, and not Gentiles. Now this doubt, exception, or objection, Paul removes in these verses, thus: When God said to Abraham, In thee shal all the Gentiles be blessed: hee signified the justification even of the Gentiles by faith: therefore all that are of faith, even the Gentiles, are blessed of God, as Abraham was.

In the 8. verse I consider three things: the occasion of the speech of God to Abraham, namely, God. free knowledge: the manner of his speech, the preaching of the Gospel to Abraham, and the testimonie it selfe, In thee, &c.

Touching the occasion: first, it may be demanded, whether this foreknowledge in God bee a bare foreknowledge, severed from the will of God, or no? Ans. Not: Gods foreknowledge is in all things joined with his decree or will. If God should fore-see things to come, and in no sort will or mll them, there should be an idle providence. Christ was delivered by the will and foreknowledge of God, Act. 2.23. and the Jews for their parts did nothing in the crucifying of Christ, but that which the hand and counsel of God had determined to be done, Act. 4.28. Neither is God by this doctrine made the author of sinne. For sinne comes to passe, not from the will of God, but according to his will: in that he foresees evill, and withall wils not to hinder the being of it; and evill not hindered, comes to passe.

Againe, it may bee demanded: In what order the foreknowledge of God stands to his will. Ans. The foreknowledge of things that may possibly come to passe, goes before his will: the foreknowledge of things that shall certainly come to passe, follows the will and decree of God. For things come not to passe because they are fore-seene, but because they are come to passe according to the will of God, therefore they are foreseene. Now then because foreknowledge in God is joyned with his will, and is always a consequent of it, it is often put for the counsell, will, and decree of God, as in this place.

In this text two things are to bee considered of Gods foreknowledge. The first is, who or what foresees? Answer is here made, The Scripture foresees; that is, God foresees, and the Scripture records things foreseene by him. Hence it appeares, that the things of Moses are the word of God. For they foretell things to come 2000. yeares after, as the calling and benediction of the Gentiles in the seed of Abraham. In the same regard the writings of Paul are the word of God. For there hee reveales and sets downe in writing more than 1000. yeares after, what was the intention of God, when he said to Abraham, In thee shal all the Gentiles be blessed.

The second point is, what is foreseene? Answer is made, that God justifieth the Gentiles, that is, God will as certainly justifie them in time to come, as if he had then done it, when hee spake the words. Some teach, that the Predestination of God is his decree, in which he purposeth to redeeme and justifie all men, of all ages and times, so bee it they will beleeve.

beleeve. But I finde no such decree in the word. Here wee see Gods decree is onely to justifie all the Gentiles in the last age of the world. And thus the text of Paul must be understood, God would have all men to be saved, 1 Tim. 2. namely, all men, or all the Gentiles in the last age of the world, and not all the Gentiles of all ages and times.

In the next place, the manner of the speech and testimony of God must bee considered, in that he is said to preach the Gospell to Abraham. Here marke the antiquity of the Gospell: and the markes of true religion, which for his substance was knowne not onely to the Apostles, but also to the Prophets and Patriarkes. So ancient is the true way of life, and the doctrine of justification by faith without workes. Papists plead Antiquity for their religion: but in vaine: for the proper points and heads of their religion were taken up since the dayes of Christ, some two hundred yeares after: some 400. some 600. some 800. some a thousand, and some 1400. yeares after.

The third point is the speech or testimony it selfe: In thee shal all the Gentiles be blessed. In thee, that is, in thy seed, Christ, Gen. 22.18. who is in thy loines: into whom the Gentiles are ingrafted by faith, and consequently into thee. For they are the seed of Christ, Isay 53.10. who is the seed of Abraham. Againe, here it is said, All the Gentiles: but Gen. 17.4. Abraham is called the father, not of all, but of many nations. Answ. He is the father of many, in respect of his flesh: and hee is a father of all the Gentiles, in regard of his faith. Againe, it is usuall in Scripture, to put the word, all, for many, Rom. 5.15. 18. And the benediction here mentioned, comprehends all the spirituall graces of God, as vocation, justification, glorification, Eph. 1. vers. 3.

The use. In that the Lord saith, All the nations shall bee blessed in Abraham, hence I gather, that the nations of the Jews shall be called and converted, to the participation of this blessing: when, and how, God knowes: but that it shall bee done before the end of the world we know. For if all nations shall be called, then the Jewes.

Againe, that which was fore-told to Abraham, is verified in our eyes. For this our English nation, and many other nations are at this day blessed in this seed of Abraham. Upon the consideration of this, wee are admonished of many things. First, wee are to give to God great thankes and praise, that wee are borne in these dayes. For many Prophets, and great Kings, desired to see that which wee see, and could not obtaine it. Secondly, wee must every one of us in our hearts mend, and turne unto God, and unfainedly beleeve in Christ, that wee may now in the acceptable day bee partakers of the promised blessing. The Lord saith, Gen. 22.18. In thy seed all the nations of the earth shal be blessed, or bless themselves: because they shall use all good meanes, that they may bee filled with the blessings of God. Thirdly, we must blesse all, use good to all, and hurt none: for we are heires of blessing, 1 Pet. 3.8. Lastly, wee must here marke our comfort: if we truly turne to God, and beleeve in the holy seed of Abraham, all things shall goe well with us: God shal blesse them that blesse us, and curse them that curse us, Gen. 12.3.

The ninth verse is the conclusion of Pauls answer: and it is in effect and substance one and the same with verse 7. and it signifieth that all men that bee of Abrahams faith, (though otherwise forreigners and Gentiles to Abraham) shall be partakers of the same blessing of God with him. It may be said: How shall we have the same blessing, when wee have not the like faith? Ans. God respects not the greatnesse of our faith, so much as the truth of it. And if faith erre not in his object: that is, if we make Christ crucified our Redeemer, and joyne nothing to him: if there be further, a will to beleeve and to apprehend Christ, with care and constancy to increase in faith, and a purpose not to sinne, God will accept this true and honest will, for the deed.

10. For as many as be of the workes of the law, are under the curse. For it is written, Cursed is every one that continues not in all things written in the law, to doe them.

In these words, Paul sets downe a second reason, whereby hee proves, that not onely the Jewes, but also the Gentiles, are blessed as Abraham was, by faith. And the reason is drawne from the contraries, thus: They that are of workes, that is, that looke to be justified by workes, are under the curse. Therefore, they that are of faith, are blessed, and justified with Abraham. Moreover, Paul addes the proofe of this second reason, in the next words, and it is framed thus: They which fulfill not the law are accursed, they which are of workes, fulfill not the law: therefore they are accursed.

Whereas Paul saith, that they are under the curse, that will be of workes, wee see the whole world almost, walkes in the way of perdition: it is a conclusion of nature, that wee must bee saved and justified by our workes. The young Prince in the Gospell, said, Good master, what must I doe to be saved? The Jewes would not bee subject to the justice of God, but they established their owne righteousnesse of the Law. Romanes 10.3. Our common people, and they that shew to be wise, say, they looke to be saved by faith: but indeed they turne their faith to workes. For what is their faith? surely nothing else (as they say) but their good meaning, or their good dealing, or their good serving of God.

Hence against it followes, that the Papacy or Popish religion is the way to perdition, in that it prescribeth and teacheth justification by workes. On the contrary, our religion is the safest and surest from danger, because it it teacheth the free justification of a sinner by the blood of Christ. And this makes the Papists, in the day of death, to renounce justification by their workes. Steven Gardiner, a bloody persecutor, being on his death-bed told of free justification by the blood of Christ, said; You may tell this to me, but doe not open this gap to the people. One of late in a publike execution of justice said hee would die a Catholike, and withall hee added, that hee looked to bee saved onely by the passion of Christ.

In the proofe of the reason, three things are to bee considered: what the curse is: who are accursed: and when.

The curse is eterhall woe and misery: and it is either in this life, in the end of this life, or in the life to come.

The curse in this life, is either within man or without him. The curse within man is manifold. In the minde there is ignorance of God, of our selves, of true happinesse, and of the meanes to attaine to it. Againe, there is a great difficulty with much paine, to learne and retaine things to be learned and retained. And this is a curse of God upon our mindes. In the conscience there are manifold accusations, terrors, and feares, arising upon every occasion, and they are flashings (as it were) of the fire of hell, unlesse they bee quenched in this life by the blood of Christ. In the will there is an inclination to all manner of sinnes without exception. Againe, there is hardnesse of heart, whereby the will of man is unpliable to that which is good, unlesse it bee renewed. In the body there are more diseases than the Physitians bookes can expresse: and as many diseases as there bee in us, so many fruits of sinne there are, Iob. 5. 14.

The curse without us is three-fold. The first is, a spirituall bondage under the power of the devill, who by reason of sinne, workes in the hearts of unbeleevers, Eph. 2. and hath the power of death, Heb. 2. 14.

The second is an enmitie of all the creatures with man since the fall. And this appeares, because when God receives us to bee his people, he makes a covenant with all creatures, in our behalfe, Hos. 2. 18.

The third containes all losses, calamities, miseries, in goods, friends, good name. Reade Deut. 28.

The curse in the end of this life is death, which is the separation of body and soule, Rom. 5. 12. and death in his owne nature is a fearefull curse, and the very downefall to the pit of hell.

The curse after this life is the second death, which is separation of body and soule from God, with a full apprehension of the wrath of God. And if the paine of one tooth or finger bee oftentimes so great, that men rather desire to die than live, how great then shall the paine bee, when all the parts of body and soule shall be tormented? And the eter-

A nity of this death increaseth mans misery. If a man might suffer so many yeares as there are drops in the sea, and then have an end, it were some comfort: but when that time is expired, man is as farre from the end of his woe as ever he was.

This in summe and substance is the curse here mentioned: and it were to bee wished, that men would more thinke and speake of it, than they doe: then would there be more conscience of sinne.

The next point is, who are cursed. Answer. They which do not all things according to the law. Here is an Item for them that will keepe some Commandements, but not all. Herod would doe some things at the motion of Iohn Baptist, but hee would not leave his incestuous marriage with his brothers wife, Marke 6. 20. There bee at this day that are very forward in good things; yet some of them will not leave their swearing, some their lying, some their uncleannesse, some their usury. But God will not part stakes with man: hee will have all, or none. He that breakes one commandement, is guilty of all, Iam. 2. And there is good reason, that he which obeyes, should obey in all. For where God renewes, hee sanctifies throughout, and fils him with the seed of all grace, that they may performe obedience according to all the Commandements of the Law.

Againe, hee is cursed that doth not all things which the Law prescribeth; or if hee doe them, yet doth not continue in all. So then hee is cursed, that breakes the Law but once, and that onely in one thought: for such an one doth not continue in all things. Now then, O sinfull man, what wilt thou doe, to avoid the curse? For thou hast in thought, word, and deed, broken the law. Doest thou thinke to appease the wrath of God with gold and silver? the whole world, and all things therein, are the Lords, and thou maist not thinke to hide or withdraw thy selfe from the presence of God: for all must come and appeare before his tribunall seat, in their owne persons. Neither may we thinke to escape because God is mercifull. What wilt thou then doe to escape this horrible curse? when thou hast done all thou canst do, thou canst no way helpe or releeve thy selfe.

The only way of helpe is this: Thou must fly from this sentence of the law, to the throne of grace for mercy; instantly asking, seeking, knocking at the gate of mercy, for pardon of thy sinnes. And that thou maiest bee encouraged to this duty, consider with mee, that at thy first purpose to amend, and to turne unto God, thy sinnes are pardoned in heaven. David saith, Psalme 51. 5. I thought I will confesse my sinne against my selfe. And thou forgavest me. Marke the speech, I thought. The prodigall childe, Luk. 15. upon his purpose to return to his father, (before he had indeed humbled himselfe in word) was received to mercy.

When

When David said, I have sinned, Nathan in the name of God said, Thy sinne is forgiven thee. It may be, thou wilt say, the curse is absolute. Ans. The threatning of the Law must bee understood with an exception, which the Gospell makes on this manner: The Law saith, Cursed is the transgressour: and the Gospell saith, Except he repent, Ninive preached, Yet forty dayes and Ninive shal be destroied: yes without there is added an exception: I surely bow the Lord will repent of his former threatning, Ioel 2. Againe, thou wilt say, my sinnes are very grievous, therefore I feare I shall not escape the curse. Ans. Full forgivenesse is promised without any limitation, to any number or kindes of sinne: (onely the sin against the holy Ghost excepted.) Therefore appeare with boldnesse in thy heart to the throne of grace, intreat for forgiveneſſe, as for life and death, and thou shalt escape the curse.

The third point is, when is a sinner accursed. Ans. In present, in the time of this life. For the Lord saith not, he shal be accursed, but he is accursed. There bee among us whom no sermons or exhortations will amend: and such persons thinke themselves without the reach of any danger: for they thinke the time is very long to the last judgement. But they are deceived touching themselves. For God with his owne mouth hath given the sentence, that they are accursed; there remaines nothing but the execution. The halter is already about their necke, and there remaines nothing but the turning of the ladder only: the execution is already in blindnesse of minde, and hardnesse of heart. He that beleeves not, is already condemned, Iohn 3.

Lastly, a memorable conclusion of Paul is here to be observed; That it is impossible for any man, within himselfe, for the time of this life, to fulfill the Law of God. For Paul here takes it for a confessed and granted conclusion: otherwise his argument will not hold: which must bee framed on this manner: Hee which fulfils not the law, is cursed: hee which is of workes, fulfils not the law: therefore hee is accursed. If further prove it thus: If we could fulfill the law, wee might bee justified by the law: but no man can bee justified by the law, or by workes: therefore no man can fulfill the law. Againe, Paul saith, Roman. 7. 14. that the law was spirituall, requiring inward and spirituall obedience, and that hee was carnall, and therefore not conformable to the law: that hee was sold under sinne: that when he would doe good, evill was present: that he carried about him the bodie of death. And all this he saith of himselfe, about twenty yeares after his owne conversion. Such as our knowledge is, such is our love to God and man. Now we know God onely in part: therefore wee love in part; and consequently, wee doe not fulfill the law. Againe, the Scripture puts all men, even the regenerate, under the name of sinners to the very death, Isa. 64. 4. All our righteousnes is as a defiled cloth, Pro. 20. 9. Who

A can say, my heart is cleane? Iob cannot answer God for one of a thousand, Iob 9. The righteous man shall pray for the pardon of his sinnes in a time when he may be heard, Psalm. 32. 6. If we say we have no sinne, we deceive our selves, 1 Iohn 1. 9. The Papists say, that all these places are meant of venial sinne. Ans. There are no venial sinnes, which in their owne nature are not against the law of God, but onely before it. The stipend of every sinne is death, Rom. 6. 23. If we were perfectly sanctified, and consequently fulfillers of the Law in this life, then Christ should not be a Saviour, but an instrument of God, to make us our owne Saviours. And to say this, is blasphemy. Lastly, that which man could not doe by creation, so much the Law requires at our hand: but man by creation could love God with all the powers of his soule, and with all the strength of all the powers: which now (since the fall) no man can doe. It remaines then for an infallible conclusion, that it is impossible for any man in the time of this life to fulfill the Law.

The use. This point serves notably to condemne the folly of the world. The Israelites say at Mount Sinai, that they will doe all things which the Lord shall command them, Exodus 19. 8. The young Prince said, that hee had kept all the commandements from his youth, Mar. 10. 20. Our common people say, that they can love God with all their heart, and their neighbour as themselves.

Secondly, this doctrine serves to confute sundry errors of the Papists, who blasphemously teach, that a man after justification may fulfill the law in this life: that a man may for a time be without all sinne: that workes of the regenerate are perfect, and may be opposed to the judgement of God: that men may supererogate, and doe more than the law requires. The ground of all these conclusions is this: They say, there is a double degree of fulfilling the law. The first is in this life, and that is; to love God truly above all creatures, and to love our neighbour as our selves, in truth. The second is, to love God with all the powers of the soule, and with all the strength of all the powers: and this measure of fulfilling the Law is reserved to the life to come. I will briefly consider the reasons and the ground of this blasphemous doctrine.

Obiect. 1. God promiseth the Israelites, that he will circumcise their harts, that they may love him with all their harts, with all their soules, and with all their strength, Deut. 30. 6. And thus Iosiah turned to God with all his heart, with all his soule, and with all his strength, according to all the law of Moses, 2 Kin. 23. 25. Answ. The phrase [with all thy heart] is taken in a double signification. Sometimes it is opposed to a double heart, and then it signifies a true and upright heart, without guile or dissimulation. Thus they of Zebulon are said, not to be with a double heart, 1 Chron. 12. 33. but with a perfect heart, v. 38. Where marke the opposition of an whole or perfect heart, to a double heart. In this sense are the places before-named to be understood. Nevertheless the whole heart, soule, and strength, in the summe of the morall law, signifies all powers of the soule, and all the strength of all the powers. Thus doth Paul, Rom. 7. expound the law, when he saith, the law is spirituall; and by the prohibition of lust, gives the meaning of the whole Law. For concupiscence, or lust, comprehends the first thoughts or motions.

Object. II. Noah is said to bee just and perfect, Genes. 6. and God commands Abraham to walke before him, and to be perfect, Gen. 17. 1. Paul saith, Let as many as bee perfect bee thus minded, Philippians 3. 15. Answer. There is a double perfection; perfection of parts, and perfection of degrees. Perfection of parts is, when a man hath in him, after hee is regenerate, the beginnings of all vertues, and the seedes of all graces, by which hee endevours to obey God in all his lawes and Commandements. Perfection of degrees is when the law is fulfilled both in matter and manner, according to the rigour of the Law. Now the former places speake onely of the perfection of parts: and that is such a perfection in which wee are to acknowledge our imperfection, and it is no more but a true and general endevour to obey God, Isa. 38. 1.

Object. III. Sundry holy men are said to fulfill the law: David turned from nothing that God commanded him all the daies of his life, save in the matter of Vriah, 1 King. 15. 5. Zacharie and Elizabeth walked in all the commandements of God, & that without reproofe before God, Luk. 1. 6. Answ. There are two kindes of fulfilling the law: one Legall, the other Evangelicall. Legall is, when men doe all things required in the law, and that by themselves, and in themselves. Thus none ever fulfilled the Law, but Christ, and Adam before his fall. The Evangelicall manner of fulfilling the Law, is to beleeve in Christ, who fulfilled the law for us: and withall to endevour in the whole man, to obey God in all his precepts. And this endevour joyned with the purpose of not sinning, is called the righteousnesse of good conscience; and though it be not really a fulfilling of the law, yet it is accepted of God as a fulfilling of the law in all them that are in Christ. For God accepts the endevour to obey, for perfect obedience. Thus David, Zachary, Elizabeth, and others are said to fulfill the law.

Object. IV. Wee pray that wee may fulfill the law, whē we say, let thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven, Mat. 6. 10. Ans. We pray not that we may fulfill the law in this, but that we may strive as much as may be, to attaine to the fulfilling of the Law. That is the scope of the petition. Wee desire not to bee equall to the Angels and Saints, but onely to imitate them more and more, and to be like to them.

Object. V. Roman. 7. 18. To will is present with mee: therefore (say they) in will the law may be kept, though the flesh relent. Answer. When Paul saith, that to will was present, hee doth not signifie that hee could perfectly will that which is good. For his will being partly renewed, and partly unrenewed, the good which he willed, he partly willed; and the evill which he willed, he partly willed.

Object. VI. Christ tooke our flesh, that the righteousnesse of the law might be fulfilled in us. Roman. 8. 4. Answer. The righteousnesse of the law is fulfilled in us, not because wee doe all things required in the law, but because we have faith in us; and by that faith wee apprehend the obedience of Christ in fulfilling of the Law.

Object. VII. Rom. 13. 8. Love is the fulfilling of the Law: and the regenerate love their neighbours. Ans. If we could love our neighbour as our selves perfectly, wee should then fulfil the whole law. But our love is imperfect.

Object. VIII. He that is borne of God, sinneth not, 1 Ioh. 3. 9. hee that sinneth not, fulfilleth the law. Answer. He that is borne of God sinneth not, that is, hee doth not commit sinne, or make a practice of sinne. Hee may fall of frailty, yet then hee recovers himselfe, and doth not keepe a course in sinning. This is the meaning of Saint John.

Object. IX. The commandements of God are not grievous, 1 John 5. 3. Answ. They are not grievous three wayes: first, in respect of promise, because they that beleeve in Christ, have the transgression of the law pardoned: secondly, in respect of imputation; because Christs obedience in fulfilling the law, is imputed to every beleever. Thirdly, in respect of inchoation. For they that beleeve receive the Spirit of God, whereby they are inabled to endevour themselves to obey God in all his commandements. Otherwise, in respect of our owne personall obedience, they are a yoke that no man can beare.

Object. X. The workes of God are perfect, Deut. 32. 4. Good works are workes of God, therefore they are perfect. Answer. Workes that are meerely workes of God, which hee worketh by himselfe, and not by man, they are all perfect: and thus must the text in Moses bee understood. Now good workes are workes of God in us: and withall they are our workes, having their beginning in the minde and will of man: and hence they are defiled. For when the first and second cause concurre in a worke, the said worke takes unto it the condition of the second cause. Water pure in the fountaine is defiled when it passes by the filthy channell.

Object. XI. If God have given us an impossible Law, hee is more cruell than any tyrant. Answ. When God first gave the law, hee also gave power to fulfill the Law. If the Law be impossible, it is not Gods fault, but mans, who by his owne fault hath lost his power of keeping the law.

The ground before-named of the double ful-fulfilling of the law, one for this life, the other for the life to come, is false. For there is onely one generall and unchangeable sentence of the law, Cursed is every one that continues not in all things written in the law to doe them.

I now come to other uses of the former conclusion. If the law bee impossible, then must wee seeke for the fulfilling of it, forth of our selves in Christ, who is the end of the law for righteousnesse to them that beleeve. Hence it followes necessarily, that our justification must be by the imputation or application of Christs justice unto us.

Because we cannot fulfill the law, we must make it a glasse to see our impotencie, and what we cannot doe: and it must bee our schoolemaster to drive us to Christ. And by our impotency we must take occasion to make prayer to God for his Spirit to inable us to the lawes of God. Thus come we to be doers of the law, and no otherwise.

Againe, it may be demanded, (considering we cannot fulfill the law) how our workes can please God? Ans. In every good worke there is something that is Gods, and something that is ours alone. The defect of the worke is ours alone, and that is pardoned to the beleever. That which is good in the worke, is from God, and that hee approveth as being his owne. And thus every good worke is said to please God.

Lastly, after that we have begun to please God in obedience to his lawes, considering we fulfill them not, all boasting of our goodnesse must be laid aside; and we must humble our selves under the hand of God even to the death. Read the practice of David, Psal. 143. 2. and Psal. 130. 3. Iob 9. 2.

11. And that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is manifest. For the just liveth by faith.

12. And the law is not of faith: but he that shall doe these things, shall live in them.

The meaning. [By the law] that is, the law not onely ceremoniall, but also judiciall and morall. Indeed the occasion of Pauls disputation in this place, is taken from Circumcision, pertaining to the ceremoniall law: but hee inlargeth his disputation, from one part to the whole law. For they which thought Ceremonies necessary to justification, would much more thinke morall duties necessary. And that Paul speakes here of the morall, it appeares by the 10. verse, where he alleageth a sentence that specially appertaines to the morall law: Cursed is every one, &c. Againe, the law may be considered two waies, in the justification of a sinner: first, as it justifieth without Christ: secondly, as it justifieth with Christ: and both waies it is excluded from justification, and here specially in the second regard. For the intent of the Galatians was, to joyne Christ and the law, in the worke of our justification.

Before God] that is, in the judgement of God, before whose judgement seat wee must all appeare, and be judged.

The just shall live by faith.] The scope of these words is this: The Jewes were oppressed by the Babylonians, and it was further told them by the Prophet, that they should be led into captivity by the said Babylonians. Now in this distresse of theirs, the Lord sets downe the duty of the faithfull Jewes, namely, that they must stay themselves by their faith in the Messias, and consequently that they shall have safetie in this life in the middest of all dangers, and in the end have eternall life. And Paul applies this text to his purpose, thus. Life eternall comes by faith: and therefore true righteousnesse before God is by faith. For righteousnesse is the foundation of life eternall: and therefore it is called justification of life, Rom. 5. 17.

The law is not of faith.] The meaning of these words must be gathered, by the opposition in the latter part of the verse: but he that doth these things shall live in them. And the meaning is this. The law doth not prescribe faith in the Messias: neither doth it promise life to him that beleeveth in the Messias, but to him that doth the things contained in the law.

In these words, Paul addes a new argument to the former, thus: Justice is by faith: the law is not of faith: therefore the law is not our justice. Or againe, thus: He that is justified, is justified by faith: the law justifies no man by faith: therefore the law doth not justifie. The conclusion is first in the 11. verse. The proposition is expressed and confirmed by the testimony of the Prophet Habacuk. The assumption is in the 12. verse.

The use. When Paul saith, No man is justified by the law in the sight of God; he makes a double justification: one, before God: the other before men. Justification before God is, when God reputes a man just, and that onely for the merit and obedience of Christ. Justification before men is, when such as professe faith in Christ, are reputed just of men. By this distinction, Paul who saith, that a man is justified by faith without works, Rom. 3. 28. and James, who saith, that Abraham was justified by faith and workes, Iam. 2. 24. are reconciled: for Paul speakes of justification before God, as hee himselfe expressly testifieth, Rom. 4. 2. and S. James speakes of justification before men, which is not onely by the profession of faith, but also by workes.

In the same sort, there is a double Election. One speciall, whereby God knowes who are his. The other is more generall, whereby we repute all men to be Elect, that professe faith in Christ, leaving secret judgements to God. Thus Paul writes to the Ephesians, Philippians, &c. as Elect. And the Ministers of the Word are to speake to their congregation, as to the Elect people of God.

In

In the same manner, there is a double sanctification: one before God in truth, Eph. 4. 28. the other before men in the judgemene of charity. Thus men are said, to tread under foot the bloud of Christ wherewith they were sanctified, Heb. 10. 29. Thus all that are of right to bee baptised, are holy and regenerate: not in the judgement of certainty, which is Gods; but in the judgement of charity, which is mans; secrets alwayes reserved to God.

Againe, when Paul saith, in the sight of God, he gives us to understand, that there is an universall judgement of God, before whom we must all appeare and be judged. And when Paul saith in the time present, that God justifieth (though not by workes) he signifies, that this judgement is already begun upon us, even in this life. This must teach us, to walke in godly and holy conversation in the feare of God; and to watch and pray, that we may be found worthy to stand before God. Malefactors, when they are going to judgement, and when they see the Judge set, lay aside scorning, and bethinke themselves what to say or doe. Now we are these malefactors: and wee know that God hath already begun to give judgement of us: and therefore we must prepare our selves to make a good reckoning.

In the testimonie of the Prophet our duty is set downe, and that is, that we must in this world live by faith. That we may live by faith, we must doe two things. One is, to chuse the true God for our God: the second is, in our hearts to cleave unto him, and that according to his word. First therefore, we must cleave fast to his commandements, by entring into the way of his precepts, and by walking in them. For this cause we must have alwayes about us the eye of knowledge, to direct our steps in the wayes of God, that we ever keepe our selves in our callings, that is the duty we owe to God and man. Secondly, while wee stand in the waies of God, we shall be assailed with many Temptations on the right hand, and on the left: therefore wee must further cleave to the promises of God: beleeving his presence, protection, and assistance, in all temptations and dangers. And this our faith must be as it were a hand to stay us. Here two caveats must be remembred. One, that we must not prescribe unto God the manner of his assistance, but leave it with other circumstances of time and place to God. The second is, when all earthly things faile us, we must rest upon the bare word of God, and beleeve the promise of remission of sins, and life everlasting. This is to live by faith. And this duty must be practised, when we are in the field to fight for our country, when we lie on our deathbeds, and when we are in any danger.

Marke further, Paul saith, the just man lives by faith: he therefore that is justified, continues to be justified by his faith: and therefore the second justification, that is said to be by our workes, is a meere fiction. And in that none lives by faith but he that is a just man, we see that true faith is alwaies joyned with the purpose of not sinning, or with the justice of good conscience: and where they are severed, there is no more but a meere presence of faith.

When Paul saith [the law is not of faith] he sets downe the maine difference betweene the Law and the Gospell. The law promiseth life to him that performes perfect obedience, and that for his workes. The Gospell promiseth life to him that doth nothing in the cause of his salvation, but onely beleeves in Christ: and it promiseth salvation to him that beleeveth, yet not for his faith, or for any worke else, but for the merit of Christ. The law then requires doing to salvation, and the Gospell beleeving, and nothing else.

Object. I. The Gospell requires repentance, and the practice of it. Ans. Indeed the law doth not teach true repentance; neither is it any cause of it, but only an occasion. The Gospell onely prescribes repentance, and the practice thereof: yet onely as it is a fruit of our faith, and as it is the way to salvation in which wee are to walke, and no otherwise.

Object. II. The law requires and commands faith. Answ. The law requires faith in God, which is to put our affiance in him. But the Gospell requires faith in Christ the Mediator, God-man: and this faith the law never knew.

Object. III. In the Gospell there are promises of life, upon condition of our obedience. Rom. 8. 13. If by the spirit ye mortifie the deeds of the flesh, ye shall live. 1 Joh. 1. 9. If we confesse our sins, God is faithfull to forgive them. Anf. The promises of the Gospell are not made to the worke, but to the worker: and to the worker not for his worke, but for Christs sake, according to his worke. As for example: promise of life is made not to the worke of mortification, but to him that mortifieth his flesh, and that not for his mortification, but because he is in Christ, and his mortification is the token or evidence thereof. And therefore it must be remembred, that all promises of the Gospel that mention workes, include in them Reconciliation with God in Christ.

Object. IV. Faith is a vertue, and to beleeve is a worke: therefore one worke is commanded in the Gospell, and is also necessarie to salvation. Answ. The Gospell considers not faith as a vertue or worke, but as an instrument or hand to apprehend Christ. For faith doth not cause, effect, or procure our justification and salvation, but as the beggers hand, it receives them, being wholly wrought and given of God.

This Distinction of the law and the Gospel must be observed carefully. For by it we see that the Church of Rome hath erroneously confounded the law and the Gospel, for these many hundred yeares. The law of Moses (say they) written in tables of stone, is the law: the same law of Moses, written in the hearts of men, men by the holy Ghost, is the Gospell. But I say againe, that the law written in our hearts is still the law of Moses. And this oversight in mistaking the distinction of the law and the Gospel, is and hath beene the ruine of the Gospell.

We must here further observe, that *beleeving and doing, are opposed in the article of our justification. In our good conversation they agree: faith goes before, and doing followes: but in the worke of our justification, they are as fire and water. Hence I gather, that to the justification of a sinner, there is required a speciall and an applying faith, for generall faith is numbred among the workes of the law: and the devils have it. This kind of beleeving therefore and doing are not opposite. Againe, hence I gather, that workes of faith and grace are quite excluded from justification, because the opposition doth not stand betweene beleeving and the workes of nature, but simply betweene beleeving and doing.

*Credere, Facere.

Lastly, it may be demanded, why the Lord saith, He that doth the things of the law shall live; considering no man since the fall can doe the things of the law? Answ. The Lord since mans fall, repeats the law in his old tenour, not to mocke men, but for other weightie causes. The first is to teach us, that the law is of a constant and unchangeable nature. The second is, to advertise us of our weaknesse, and to shew us what we cannot doe. The third is, to put us in mind that we must still humble our selves under the hand of God, after we have begun by grace to obey the law; because even then we come farre short in doing the things which the law requires at our hands.

13. Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, when he was made a curse for us: (for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on the tree:)

14. That the blessing of Abraham might come to the Gentiles through Christ Iesus, that we might receive the promise of the spirit by faith.

Paul having proved the truth of his doctrine by sundry arguments, in the former part of this chapter, he here answereth an objection, the occasion whereof is from the 10. verse. It may be framed on this manner: if they bee accursed that continue not in all things written in the law to doe them, then all men are accursed: and the Gentiles are not partakers of the blessing of Abraham (as you have said.) Answer is here made, that to them that beleeve, there is full redemption from the curse of the law. And Paul for the better inlightning of his answer, here makes a description of our redemption by foure arguments. The first is the author: Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law. The second is the forme or manner of our redemption, in these words, when he was made a curse for us. And this forme is further declared by the signe, in these words: for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on the tree. The third argument is in the end, in these words, that the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles. The last is also another end, that we might receive the promise of the spirit.

Touching the author, in these words, Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, sundry things may be learned: first of all comparing these words with the 10. verse, or comparing the answer and the objection together, wee see and are to observe, that the threatnings of the law are to be understood with an exception from the Gospell. All are cursed, saith the law, that doe not continue to do all things written therein, Except they have pardon, and be redeemed by Christ, saith the Gospell. And thus are all curses of the law to be conceived, with a limitation or qualification from the Gospell.

Againe, in that Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, here is our comfort, that neither hell, nor death, nor Satan hath any right or power over us, for eit we doe unfainedly beleeve in Christ. For we are bought with a price. And for this cause we must be admonished, not to feare any evill: overmuch, as the revilings and curses of evill tongues, witchcraft, the plague, pestilence, famine, the sword or death. For the curse which makes all these, and many other things hurtfull unto us, is removed from them that are in Christ. And therefore all immoderate feare should be restrained.

Thirdly, our duty is, to glorifie God and Christ who hath redeemed us, and that both in body and soule. The redeemed must live according to the will of their redeemer, 1 Cor. 6. 20. This is all the thankfulnesse that wee can shew to our redeemer for his mercy.

Lastly, here an objection made by some may be answered. If (say they) we were redeemed by Christ, being captives to the devill, the price of our redemption was paid to him, and not to God. Answ. We were captives properly to the justice of God in the law, to the order whereof we stand subject: and by this meanes wee are captives to the curse of the law, and consequently to the devill, who is the minister of God, for the execution of the said curse. And being captives to the devill, no otherwise than as he is the minister of God for the inflicting of punishment, the price must not be paid to him, but to God, who is the principall, and hath a soveraigny over him and us.

Come now to the forme of our redemption; when he was made a curse for us. For the better understanding of these words, foure points are to be handled. The first is, what is this curse? Answer. A double death: the first of the body, the second of the soule. The first is, the separation of the body and soule. The second is, the separation of the whole man from God: not in respect of his universall power and presence (for the very damned have their moving and being from him,) but in respect of of his favour and speciall love, whereby God ceaseth to be their God. And this is death indeed, whereof the first is but a shadow: and this is the curse of the law.

The second point is, How Christ was a curse or accursed, who is a fountaine of blessednesse? Ans. He is not so by nature: for he is the naturall Sonne of God: nor by his owne fault: for he is the unspotted lambe of God: but by voluntarie dispensation: and therefore Paul saith, he was made a curse. And hee was made a curse, first, because he was set apart in the eternall counsell of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost, to be our redeemer, and consequently to be a curse. In this regard, the Father is said to have sealed him, Joh 6. 27. and he is said againe to be preordained before all worlds, 1 Pet. 1. 20. and given according to the counsell and foreknowledge of God, Act. 2. 22. Secondly, he was made a curse, in that he was in time consecrated to bee our mediator and so a curse. And this consecration was first in his baptisme, in which he put upon him our guilt, as we put off the same in ours; and secondly on the crosse and passion, in which he tooke unto him the punishment of our sinne. And thus was he made a curse. It may be objected, that he is the Sonne of God: and therefore no curse. Answ. Christ must be considered as the Sonne of God, and againe as our pledge and suretie, Heb. 7. 22. In the first respect he was not accursed, but in the second.

The third point is, In wat nature was Christ accursed? Answ. Whole Christ God-man, or Man-god, was accursed? For the Lord of life (saith Paul) was crucified, and consequently accursed, 1 Cor. 2. 8. Yet this limitation must bee added, that the curse was not upon the godhead of Christ, but onely in his flesh or manhood. For he suffered (saith Peter) in the flesh, 1 Pet. 4. 1. Moreover, the soule of Christ was the more principall seat of the curse, as it was the principall seat of sin. Therefore the Prophet saith, he made his soule an offering for sin, Isa. 53. 10. and Christ said, My soule is heavie to the death.

The fourth point is, How far forth Christ was accursed? Answ. In the first death there are two degrees, separation of the body and soule, and the putrifaction of the body separated. And Christ entred onely into the first, and not into the second. For his body being dead indured no corruption. Againe, in the second death there are two degrees. The first is a separation from God in sense and feeling: and the second is an absolute separation from God. Into this second degree of death Christ entred not, because he saith in the midst of his passion, My God, my God. And this absolute separation could not be without the dissolution of the personall union. Into the first degree of the second death he entred: namely, into the apprehension and feeling of the wrath and indignation of God due to mans sinne. And this appeares by his bloudy sweat of thicke and clotted bloud; by his complaint he was forsaken: by his feare and sorrowes in the time of death; in which he comes short of sundry martyrs, unlesse we acknowledge that he indured further paines of death than ever they did, by his condition, in that he takes upon him the condition of the first Adam, who upon his fall was to indure the first and second death. Here two questions are to be demanded: the first, How and in what manner Christ suffered the wrath of God? Answ. He indured it willingly of his owne accord: he did not only in mind see it before his eyes, but also he felt it: it was laid and imposed on him, and he encountred with it: but it had no dominion or lordship over him, Act. 2. 24. The second is, How much he suffered of the wrath of God? Ans. The punishment hee suffered was in value and measure answerable to all the sinnes of all the Elect, past, present, and to come: the Godhead supporting the manhood, that it might be able to beare and overcome the whole burden of the wrath of God. If it be said, that a creature cannot have an infinit apprehension of the wrath of God: I answer, it sufficeth that God laid infinite wrath upon him, and that he apprehended it according to the condition of a creature. For in so doing he incountred with the whole wrath of God. One man in a breach, or at a bridge, may stand against a whole armie, and beare the burnt of it: why may not then the manhood of Christ supported by the Godhead, beare the fiersse of the whole wrath of God? Against this doctrine sundry things may be objected.

Object. I. The Scripture ascribes all to the bloud of Christ, and therefore to the death of the body. Answ. By bloud is meant, a bloudie death: by the bloudie death, the death of the crosse: by the death of the crosse, a death accursed, or the death the body joyned with the malediction of the law.

Object. II. The suffering of the anger of God was not figured in Sacrament or sacrifices. Ans. The beast whereof of the burnt offering was made, was first tyed to the hornes of the altar: his bloud then was shed: and lastly, hee was all burnt upon the altar unto God, and hereby was figured the fierce wrath of God.

Object. III. Temporall death, or the curse for halfe a day, cannot countervaile eternall death. Ans. Yes, in Christ. For if man could suffer and overcome punishment in measure infinite, hee should not suffer eternally: but this no man nor angell can doe: and therefore man must suffer punishment for measure finite, for time infinite: because the punishment must bee answerable to God, whose majestie is infinite. Now Christ being God and man, suffered punishment indeed infinite: and therefore it was not necessary that he should indure it eternally. Againe, here the dignitie of the person helpeth: for in that the Sonne of God suffered the curse of the law for halfe a day, day, it is more than if all men had suffered eternall death. Therefore the death of Christ in respect of the measure of the punishment, as also in respect of the value and dignitie thereof, countervailes death everlasting.

Object. IV. It is hard to say, that Christ suffered the paines of hell. Answ. The Latine translation (commonly received,) hath as much, that he could not be holden of the sorrowes of hell, Act. 2. 24. And there is no offence to say, he suffered the paines of hell, so farre forth as this suffering may stand with the purity of his manhood, and with the truth of the personall union.

The use. Friers teach, that if Christ had pricked his finger, and let fall but one drop of bloud, it had beene sufficient to redeeme all the world. But they dreame. For Paul saith, He was made the curse of the law to redeeme us. This had beene a needlesse worke, if a pricke in the finger, or any punishment without death, would have done the deed.

That Christ became a curse for us, it shewes the greatnesse and horriblenesse of our sinnes: it shewes the grievous hardnesse of our hearts, that never almost mourne for them: it shewes the unspeakable love and mercie of God, for which we are to be thankfull for ever, and that all manner of waies.

In that the Sonne of God became a curse for our sinnes, we are put in minde to see, acknowledge, and consider them, and withall to bewaile them, and to humble our selves for them: and to detest them more and more unto the very death. For what is more worthy of hatred, than that which causeth the Sonne of God to be accursed? They which beleeve that Christ by being a curse hath redeemed them from the curse of the law, doe in truth die unto all their sinnes, and live unto God. Many indeed professing Christ, make no change of life at all: and the reason is, because a secret Atheisme makes them say in their hearts, There is no Christ, there is no curse that was endured by Christ. Cleanse your hearts of this hidden Atheisme, and looke that inwardly in your spirits you die unto your sins, and live to God.

In that Christ was obedient to his Father in bearing the curse of the law, we are taught in all things to subject our selves to the will of God. Our obedience must not only be in doing this or that, but also in suffering the miseries laid on us to the death: this is the best obedience of all, and the truest marke of Gods childe, to obey in our sufferings.

Moreover, that Christ was accused, it is confirmed by the sentence and decree of God: Cursed is every one that hangeth on the tree, Deu. 21. 23. The ground of this sentence is the sin of the malefactor: for whom God curseth, he curseth for his offence. And here it may be demanded, why he that is stoned to death is not likewise accursed? Answ. He also is accursed: but there are speciall reasons, why the man hanged on the tree is cursed. Fitst, among the Jewes, they which were hanged; were most grievous malefactors, as blasphemers, and Idolaters: and their punishment was accordingly, most grievous. Secondly, hanging (as among all nations, so among the Jewes) was a most odious and infamous death. Thirdly, God did foresee that the Messias should die on the crosse, and therefore hee accursed this kinde of death. If it be said, that there was no fault or offence in Christ; and therefore hee could not be accursed: I answer, that he became sinne for us, in that our sinne was applied and imputed to him. It may be further objected, that the theefe which repented, was not accursed, though hee were hanged on the tree. Answ. As a theefe he was accursed: as he was a theefe and repented, the curse was removed. For the law in the curses thereof, gives place to the Gospell: judgement yeelds to mercy: and the Gospell puts an exception to the law.

The use. If the malefactor hanged, be accursed and defile the earth: how vile and accursed is the living malefactor, the blasphemer, adulterer, murtherer, &c. who hath entred no degree of punishment? Let this bee considered, to terrifie offenders.

Againe, let us consider the scope of this law. Because he that hangs on the tree is accursed, therefore saith the law of God, he must be taken downe and buried. Marke the equity of this law: and that is, that things evill and accursed, are to bee removed from the eye and sense of man. This charge the Lord gives of lesse matters, namely, of sights undecent and unseemely, Deut. 23. 15. Againe, we are commanded not so much as to name fornication, uncleannesse, covetousnesse, jesting, foolish talking, &c. Eph. 5. 3. Here we are to be put in mind, that the Plaies (commonly in use) are to be banished out of all Christian societies. For they doe nothing els but revive and represent the vile and wicked fashions of the world, and the misdemeanour of men, which are things accursed, and therefore to be buried, and not once to be spoken of. Againe, all evill in our example, whether in word, or in deed, must be buried as much as may be: for it defileth, and is accursed.

Here it may be demanded, how this law of God (he is accursed, therefore let him be taken downe and buried) stands with the order used in this and other countries, in which men are hanged in chaines for the terror of the world? Ans. Judiciall lawes, if they have in them morall equity, and serve directly to sence in the precepts of the Decalogue, are perpetuall, and bind all men, else not. As for the judiciall determinations of this or that manner of punishment, they concerne us not: for God hath left every nation free, though not in respect of punishment, yet in respect of the manner and order thereof.

The third point, whereby our redemption is is described, is the end thereof, that the blessing of Abraham, that is, righteousnesse and life everlasting may come upon the Gentiles. Here two things are to bee considered. The first is, whence comes the benediction of Abraham? Answ. From the cursed death of Christ. For thus are the words, He was made a curse for us, that the benediction of Abraham might come on the Gentiles. Marke here how God workes one contrarie by the other. In the creation, hee made something, not of something, but of nothing: hee called light out of darknesse: hee kils, and then makes alive, Hos.6. hee sends men to heaven by the gates of hell: he gave sight by a temper of spittle and clay, a fit meanes to put out sight. In the worke of our redemption he gives life, not by life, but by death, and the blessing by the curse. This shewes the wisdome and power of God: and it teacheth us in the worke of our conversion and salvation, not to goe by sense and feeling; because God can and doth worke one contrarie, in, and by the other.

A

The second point is, where this benediction of Abraham is to be found? Ans. The text saith, It is extant in Christ Iesus, who is as it were the store-house of Gods blessing, and the dispenser of it to all nations. In him are hid all treasures of wisdome and knowledge, Col. 2. God and the Lambe are all things to all the Elect in the kingdome of heaven, Revel. 21. Here wee see the right way to become rich: and that is, above all things to seeke to be true and lively members of Christ: for if he bee ours we can want nothing, Rom. 8.32. Mat. 6.33. Psal. 34.10. This is a most sure way to procure unto us all good things; that hee sees to be necessarie for us. For Christ is the storehouse of the benediction of Abraham. Againe, this must teach them that beleeve in Christ, to be content in any estate, be it better or worse, for true riches is the blessing of God; and this blessing is in Christ. This is the truth, if we could discerne of things that differ. Thirdly, in our povertie, and in the middest of all our wants and losses, we must comfort our selves. For though wee lose never so much, yet we retaine the principall, and that is Christ, who is the benediction of Abraham.

The fourth point is, another end of our Redemption, That we might receive the promise of the Spirit by faith. For the better understanding of this, foure questions may be demanded. The first is, what is meant by the promise? Ans. The promise of God made in the old Testament, that he would powre out his spirit upon all flesh, Isa. 44.3. and Ioel. 2.28. And here it is said, that this promise is fulfilled to the nations when they beleeve. Marke here how the promises of God lye as void, dead, and of none effect, till the particular time of their accomplishment. God promised Iacob that his posterity shall bee a great nation after 430. yeares: for which time they remaine in thrall and bondage; but the very night after the former time was expired, nothing, no not the raging sea could stop their deliverance, Exod. 12.41. God promised deliverance after 70. yeares captivitie to the Israelites of Babylon. When this time was expired, Daniel prayed; and at the very beginning of his supplications, the decree of God for deliverance came forth, Dan. 9.23. The vision of God (saith the Prophet) is for an appointed time, Hab. 2.1. And so is the promise. This must teach us to bee content, if after much praying, we finde not the fruit of our prayers: because there is an appointed time for the accomplishing of them. In this respect David saith, that his eyes failed, and he was hoarse in praying, Psal. 69.4.

The second question is, what is meant by the giving or sending of the Spirit? Answ. Without any alteration or change of place, it signifies two things. The first is, Order betweene the persons, whereby the Father and the Sonne worke mediately by the holy Ghost, and the holy Ghost immediately from them. The second is, that the Spirit doth manifest his presence by divine effect in us. In this respect he is said to be sent, or given of the Father and the Sonne.

C

The third point is: In what order is the spirit given? For it seemes, that we first our selves beleeve, and then receive the spirit? Ans. Men are said to receive the spirit, when they receive some new gift of the spirit, or the increase of some old gift, Ioh. 20.22. Againe, to speake properly, faith and the receiving of the spirit, are for time both together. For first of all, we heare the promise of God; then we begin to meditate, and apply the said promise to our selves to strive against doubting, and to desire to beleeve: and in doing of all this, we receive the spirit. To beleeve, is the first grace in us that concernes our salvation: and when we begin to beleeve, we begin to receive the spirit; and when we first receive Gods spirit, we begin to beleeve. And thus by our faith receive we the spirit: & thus also the spirit dwels in us by faith, Eph. 3.17. And wee must not imagine, that we may or can beleeve of our selves, without the operation of the spirit.

D

The fourth point is, for what end wee receive the spirit? Ans. For six. For illumination of our minds, 1 Ioh. 2.27. 1 Cor. 2.12. for regeneration, whereby the image of God is restored in us, Iohn 3. for the government of our counsels, wils, affections, actions, Isa. 11.1. Rom. 8.14. for the effecting of that conjunction whereby we are united to Christ our head, 1 Cor. 6.17. for consolation, Rom. 8.16. Lastly, for confirmation in our faith and every good duty, 2. Cor. 1.22. Eph. 1.3.

This receiving of the spirit is one speciall end of our redemption: and therefore it is most necessary for us, to have the Spirit of God dwelling in us. If we have not the Spirit, we are not Christs: and without it we can doe nothing.

We

Wee must for this cause doe such things, whereby we may obtaine and receive a plentifull measure of Gods Spirit. Repent (saith Peter) and yee shall receive the Holy Ghost.

A

Againe, we must carefully retaine and preserve the grace of the Spirit in us, by meditation in the word of God, by earnest and frequent prayer, by avoiding all such acts in word or deed, that may make a breach in conscience: for whatsoever offends conscience, quenches the Spirit. Lastly, by savouring the things of the Spirit, Rom. 8.5. that is, by thinking on things spirituall, by affecting of them, and delighting in them.

15 Brethren, I speake as men doe: though it be but a mans covenant, when it is confirmed no man doth abrogate it, or adde any thing thereto.

16 Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to the seeds, as of many; but, And to thy seed, as of one, which is Christ.

17 And this I say, that the Law which was 430. yeares after, cannot disannull the covenant that was before confirmed of God in respect of Christ, that it should make the promise of none effect.

18 For if the inheritance be of the Law, it is no more by promise; but God gave it unto Abraham by promise.

In these words Paul meet with a second exception, or objection, made against that which hee here principally stands upon: namely, that the blessing of Abraham is conveyed to the Gentiles, and that by Christ. The objection may bee framed thus: The promise made to Abraham cannot now pertaine to the Gentiles, because the Law was added to it, and by the Law it is abrogated: and therefore the Gentiles are to bee justified and saved by the observation of the Law. To this objection Paul makes a double answer. One is, that the promise cannot bee abrogated: the second, that if it might bee abrogated, yet the Law cannot doe it. The first hee confirmes on this manner:

The Testament of God confirmed, cannot be abrogated:

The promises made to Abraham and his seed, which is Christ, are his Testament confirmed:

Therefore they cannot be abrogated.

The Proposition is expressed in the 17. verse, and is confirmed by comparison thus. The testament of man after it is confirmed, may not bee abrogated, much lesse the testament of God, verse 15. The minor is propounded in the 16. and 17. verses. Now I come to speake of the words as they lie.

Brethren] Paul had before called them fooles; and that justly, because they fell from the doctrine which hee taught them, to another Gospell. And yet here hee cals them Brethren. And hence let us learne, that in division of judgement and opinion, there must be no division but unitie of affection. It is and hath been alwayes the plague of the Church, that division of heart and affection there takes place; where any division is in judgement, though men erre of infirmitie. This evill causeth more to be condemned for heretikes, than indeed ought to bee: it maketh schismes where none should bee: it maketh dissentions to be incurable, which otherwise might be cut off. And therefore if dissentions in judgement arise, we must remember to suppresse envie, hatred, pride, selfe-love, and let Christian love beare sway.

Againe, here wee see it is lawfull to speake in Sermons as men doe, so it bee done after the example of Paul, with these cautions. First, it must bee done sparingly and soberly, without ostentation. Secondly, it must bee done upon a just cause, as when the sayings of men serve to convince the hearers, and that in their consciences. Thirdly, a difference must be made between the word of man and the word of God, lest in adding the one to the other, the word of God lose his grace and excellencie. Lastly, Gods word only must bee the foundation of the doctrine which is taught, and the word of man is too added, in respect of our infirmitie, to give light, or to convince.

That which Paul speakes after the manner of men, is a principle of Law, or a conclusion of the light of nature, namely, that a covenant or testament confirmed, may not bee abrogated. Paul saith, it is the propertie of them that are of reprobate minds to be truce-breakers, Rom. 1.30. Hence sundrie questions may be resolved. The first is, whether Legacies given to the maintenance of the Masse, may bee applyed to the maintenance of the true worship of God? Answ. The Testator in the giving of such Legacies, hath a double intention: one is generall, and that is to preserve the worship of God: the other is speciall, and that is, to preserve the idolatrie of the Masse. In this hee erreth, and therefore his will may be changed. For testaments unlawfully made may be abrogated. In the generall hee erred not: and therefore the goods may lawfully be applyed to the maintenance of the true worship of God. But it may bee said, that the next heires may recall them when the Masse is abolished. I answer, No; Because they may still bee applyed to the publike good of the Church. The affection of the dead was good in this case, though their judgement was naught: and therefore regard is to be had of their affection and intent.

The second question is, whether we are to keepe covenant with heretikes and enemies? Answer. Yea: for the principle, A covenant confirmed may not be abrogated, is the conclusion of Nature, which bindes all men without exception, at all times, if the covenant be lawfull.

The third question is, what if dammages and losses follow upon the covenant made and confirmed, must it then bee observed? Answ. Of covenants some are single, that is, bare promises, not confirmed by oath; and some againe are with oath. Againe, some covenants are meere civill, being made of man to man; and some are more than civill, being made of man to God, as contracts of marriage. Now if covenants bee single covenants, and meerely civill, then may they bee changed by the makers, or by their successours, if hurts and losses arise. Yet if covenants bee confirmed by oath, and if they bee made to God, they may not bee changed, so long as they are lawfull, though great losses ensue. Read the example of Iosua. Ios. 9.18. A good man sweareth, and changeth not, though he lose thereby, Psal. 15.4.

The fourth question is, Whether a contract may not be dissolved, when one of the parties hath a disease contagious in deadly manner, and incurable? Answ. If such a disease follow the contract, the marriage not consummate, wee may presume that God doth dissolve the contract. And the covenant dissolved by God, wee may without danger hold to bee abrogated.

The last question is, Whether the Church of Rome hath not deale wickedly in altering the last testament of Christ, when it ministereth the Lords Supper under one kinde? Answer. They sinne against the light of nature, which teacheth us not to abrogate the testaments of men, much lesse the testament of God. It is alleaged, that wee receive whole Christ under one kinde. Answer. True indeed. But wee must consider, the end of the Sacrament is to signifie and represent perfect nourishment, in and by Christ: now perfect nourishment is not in bread alone, but in bread and wine, and by them both joyned together, is signified that Christ is the bread and the water of life: now to abolish the cup, is to abolish the principall use of the Sacrament, and to lessen our comfort.

In the 16. verse Paul saith, The promises were made to Abraham, in the plurall number: because they were sometime made to Abraham, sometime to his seed, and sometime to both: and they were often repeated to Abraham, and therefore are called promises, though in substance they are but one. The seed of Abraham here mentioned, is the seed not of the flesh, but of the promise, Rom. 9.7. and this seed is first Christ Jesus, and then all that beleeve in Christ. For all these are given to Abraham as children by the promise and election of God. Moreover, this seed is not many (as Paul observeth) but one, that is, one in number. It is objected that the word seed is a name collective, and signifies the whole posteritie of Abraham. Answ. It doth sometime, but not alwaies: for Eve saith of Seth, God hath given me another seed, Gen. 4.25. that is, another sonne.

Lastly, it is said, that this one particular seed of Abraham is Christ Jesus. Here by the name Christ, first and principally the Mediator is meant, and then secondly all Jewes and Gentiles beleeving, that are set and grafted into Christ by their faith. For Paul saith, Rom. 9.8. that the children of God, or the children of the promise, are the seed of Abraham: Againe, Gal. 3.29. They which are of Christ are the seed of Abraham. And the name Christ signifies not only the head or Mediator, God and man, but also the Church, gathered partly of Jewes and partly of Gentiles. The bodie (saith Paul) is one, but the members are many, even so is Christ, 1 Cor. 12.12. that is, the Church of Christ. Againe, I beare in my body the remainders of the sufferings of Christ, Coloss. 1.24. and the Church is called the complement of Christ, Ephes. 1.23. It may be objected, that by this meanes the seed of Abraham is many, and not one; because Christ and all beleevers are the seed. Answ. They are all one in respect of one and the same blessing of God, which is first given to Christ, and by Christ to all that beleeve in him. All are one in Christ, Gal. 3.28. and hee gathers things in heaven and earth into one head, Ephes. 1.10.

It is here to be observed, that the promises made to Abraham are first made to Christ, and then in Christ to all that beleeve in him, be they Jewes or Gentiles. This conclusion is of great use. First, by it wee learne the difference of the promises of the Law and the Gospell. The promises of the Law are directed and made to the person of everie man particularly: the promises of the Gospell are first directed and made to Christ, and then by consequent to them that are by faith ingrafted into Christ.

Secondly, by this wee learne to acknowledge the communion that is between Christ and us. Christ as Mediator is first of all elected, and we in him: Christ is first justified, that is, acquit of our sinnes, and we justified in him: he is heire of the world, and we heires in him: he died upon the crosse, not as a private person, but as a publike person representing all the Elect: and all the Elect died in him, and with him. In the same manner they rise with him to life, and sit at the right hand of God with him in glorie.

Thirdly, here wee see the ground of the certaintie of perseverance, of all them that are the true children of God. For the office of Christ, to which hee is set apart, is to receive the promise of God for us, and to apply it unto us; and this worke is done by Christ without impediment, and without repentance on his part. The seale and foundation of our salvation is this, that God accepts and knowes us for his, 2 Timoth. 2.19. and that which concernes us is, that we must worship God in spirit and truth, and depart from iniquitie.

Lastly, here is comfort against the consideration of our unworthinesse. Thou sayest thou art unworthy of the mercie of God, and therefore hast no hope. And I say againe: Doest thou truly exercise thy selfe in the spirituall exercises of faith, invocation, repentance? bee not discouraged: thou must not receive the promise immediately of God, but Christ must doe it for thee. Though thou be unworthy, yet there is dignitie and worthinesse sufficient in him. If thou say that thou must at the least receive the promise at the hand of Christ, I adde further, that hee will not quench the flax that doth but smoake, neither will hee breake the bruised reed. Hee accepts the weake apprehension, if it be in truth. And our salvation stands in this, not that wee know and apprehend him, but that he knowes and apprehends us first of all.

V. 17. Thus I say] In the former verses Paul hath laid downe two grounds: one is, that testaments of men confirmed may not bee abrogated: the other, that the promises were made to Abraham and his seed, which is Christ. Now what of all this, may some man say? Paul therefore addes these words, This I say, that is, the scope and intent of all my speech is, to shew that the covenant or testament confirmed by God cannot bee abrogated: and secondly, if it might so be, yet that the Law could not abrogate the testament, because it was given 430. yeares after the confirmation of the said testament. And because it might be doubtfull what Paul means, when he saith, The covenant confirmed cannot be abrogated, he explanes himselfe in the end of the verse by saying, the promise cannot bee made of no effect.

It is here to bee observed, that Paul saith, The promise made to Abraham is a covenant or testament. It is a covenant or compact, because God for his part promiseth remission of sins and life everlasting, and requireth faith on our part. In respect of this mutuall obligation, it hath in it the forme of a covenant. It is also a will or testament in two respects: First, because the promise is confirmed by the death of the Mediator, Heb. 9.15. Secondly, the things promised, as remission of sins, and life everlasting, are given after the manner of legacies, that is, freely, without our desert, or procurement. In this wee see the great goodnesse of God, who vouchsafeth to name them in his Testament, that have made a covenant with the Devill, and are children of wrath by nature, as weall are.

Againe, in that the promise is a Testament, remission of sinnes and life everlasting is a Legacie: and for the obtainment of them, we must bring nothing unto God, but hunger and thirst after them, and make suit unto God for them, by asking, seeking, knocking. Thus are all Legacies obtained, and therein no more acquired on our part, but to receive and accept them. And though wee bee never so unworthy in our selves, yet shall it suffice for the having of the blessing of God, if our names bee found in the Testament of God.

Againe, Paul saith, that the promise made to Abraham is a covenant confirmed of God. It may bee demanded, by what meanes it was confirmed? Answ. By oath, Heb. 6.17. Againe, it may be demanded, to whom it was confirmed? Answ. To Abraham, as being the father of all the faithfull, and then to his seed, that is, first to the Mediator Christ, and consequently to everie believer, whether Jew, or Gentile. For Abraham in the first making, and in the confirmation thereof, must bee considered as a publike person, representing all the faithfull.

Here againe we see Gods goodnesse. Wee are bound simply to beleeve his bare word: yet in regard of our weaknesse, hee is content to ratifie his promise by oath, that there might be no occasion of unbeleefe.

Againe, here we are admonished to rest by faith on the promise of God, as Abraham did, when there is no hope. Some may say, I could doe so, if God would speake to me, as he did to Abraham. I answer againe, when God spake to Abraham, in him hee spake to all his seed: and therefore to thee whosoever thou art that beleevest in Christ.

And hence wee are to gather sure hope of life everlasting. For in the person of Abraham God hath spoken to us, hee hath made promise of blessing to us; he hath made covenant with us, and hee hath sworne unto us. What can wee more require of him? What better ground of true comfort? Heb. 6.17, 18.

Lastly, in that God thus confirmes unto us the promise of life everlasting, it must incourage us to all diligence in the use of all good meanes, whereby we may attaine to the condition of Abrahams seed: and it must arme us to all patience in bearing the miseries and calamities, that fall out in the streit way to eternall life.

Further, Paul saith, that the promise is a covenant confirmed, and that in respect of Christ: because he is the scope and foundation of all the promises of God: partly by merit, and partly by efficacie. By merit, because he hath procured by his death and passion, remission of sinnes and life everlasting. By his efficacie, because he seales up unto us in our consciences remission of sinnes, and withall restores in us the image of God. The Use. If Christ be the ground of the promise, then is hee the ground and fountaine of all the blessings of God: and for this cause, the right way to obtaine any blessing of God, is first to receive the promise, and in the promise Christ: and Christ being ours, in him and from him wee shall receive all things necessarie.

The second answer of Paul to the former objection objection is, that if the promise made to Abraham might bee disanulled, yet the Law could not doe it. And hee gives a double reason. The first is drawen from the circumstance of time; Because the promise or covenant was made with Abraham, and continued by God 430. yeares before the Law was given: therefore, saith Paul, the Law was not given to disanull the promise.

Against this reason it may bee objected, that Abrahams seed was but 400. yeares in a strange land, *Gen.*15.13. Ans. Moses speakes of the time that was from the beginning of Abrahams seed, or from the birth of Isaac to the giving of the Law: and Paul here speaks of the time that was betweene the giving of the promise to Abraham, and the giving of the Law: and that was 30. yeares before the birth of Isaac.

Againe, it may be objected, that the Israelites were in Ægypt 430. yeares, Exod. 12.40. The dwelling of the children of Israel, while they dwelled in Ægypt, was 430. yeares. Therefore it seemeth there was more time betweene the promise and the Law. Answ. The meaning of Moses in this place is thus much: that the dwelling of the children of Israel, while they dwelt as pilgrimes, was for the space of 430. yeares: and that in part of this time they dwelt in Ægypt as strangers. The words may thus be translated, The dwelling or peregrination of the children of Israel, in which they dwelt in Ægypt, was 430. yeares. And this peregrination begins in the calling of Abraham, and ends at the giving of the Law.

In Pauls example, we see what it is to search the Scriptures, not only to consider the scope of whole bookes, and the parts thereof, but to ponder and weigh everie sentence, and everie part of everie sentence, and everie circumstance of time, place, person. This is the right forme of the studie of divinitie to bee used of the sonnes of the Prophets.

The second reason used by Paul is in the 18. verse, it may be framed thus: If the Law abolish the promise, then the inheritance must come by the Law: but that cannot bee. He proves it thus: If the inheritance of life eternall be by the Law, it is no more by the promise: but it is by the promise, because God gave it unto Abraham freely by promise: therefore it comes not by the Law.

The opposition betweene the Law and the promise shewes, that Paul in this Epistle speakes not only of the Ceremoniall, but also of the Morall. For the greatest opposition is betweene the Morall Law, and the free promise of God.

Let us againe marke here the difference betweene the Law and the Gospell. The Law promiseth life but to the worker, for his works, or upon condition of obedience. The Gospell (called by Paul, the promise,) offers and gives life freely without the condition of any worke, and requires nothing but the receiving of that which is offered. It may bee objected, that the Gospell promiseth life upon the condition of our faith. Answ. The Gospell hath in it no morall condition of any thing to be done of us. Indeed faith is mentioned after the forme and manner of a condition: but in truth it is the free gift of God, as well as life eternall: and it is to bee considered not as a worke done of us, but as an instrument to receive things promised. This difference of the Law and the Gospell must be kept as a treasure: for it is the ground of many worthy conclusions in true religion. And the ignorance of this point in the Church of Rome hath beene the decay of Religion, specially in the article of Justification.

Thirdly, we must here observe the opposition betweene the Law and the free promise of God in justification of a sinner. For if life come by the Law, it comes not by the promise, saith Paul. And *Rom.*4.14. If they which are of the Law are heires, the promise is of none effect. By this wee see the Church of Rome overturnes and abrogates the free promise of God. For they of that Church teach, that the first justification is by meere mercie: and that the second is by the works of the Law. But the Law and the Promise cannot be mixed together, more than fire and water: the Law joyned with the free promise, disanulls the said promise.

Lastly, in that Paul saith, God gave and freely bestowed the inheritance by the promise, it must be considered, that this giving is no private, but a publike donation. For Abraham must be considered as a publike person: and that which was given to him, was in him given to all that should beleeve as he did. Art thou then a true beleever? doest thou truly turne unto God? here is thy comfort: the inheritance of eternall life is as surely thine, as it was Abrahams, when he beleeved. For thou art partaker of the same promise with him: and when God gave him life, hee gave thee also life in him. Againe, persons back-ward and careleſse must bee stirred up with all diligence, to use all good meanes that they may beleeve truly in Christ, and truly turne to God. For so soone as they begin to beleeve, and to turne unto God, they are entred into the condition of Abraham, and if they continue, they shall sit downe with Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, in the kingdom of heaven: and after this life they shall rest in the bosome of Abraham. For that which was done to Abraham, shall be done to all that walke in his steps.

19. Wherefore then serves the Law? it was added, because of transgressions, untill the seed was come to which the promise was made: and it was ordained by Angels in the hand of a Mediator.

20. Now a Mediator is not of one: but God is one.

Paul hath proved before, that the Law doth not abolish the promise: his last reason was, was, because then the inheritance should bee by the Law, which cannot bee. Against this reason in the nineteenth and twentieth verses, there is an objection made and answered. The objection is this; If life and justice come not by the Law, the Law then is in vaine. And this objection is expressed by way of interrogation; Wherefore then serves the Law? The answer is in the next words, It is added for transgressions, that is, for the revealing of sin, and the punishment thereof, and for the convincing of men touching their sins, Rom. 3. 19, 20. Moreover, Paul sets downe the time or continuance of this use of the Law, when he saith, Till the seed came to which the promise was made: that is, till Christ come and accomplish the worke of mans redemption. Here two questions may be demanded. The first is, whether the Law serve to reveale sin after the comming of Christ? For Paul saith, It is added for transgressions, till Christ. Answ. The Law serves to reveale sinne, even to the end of the world: yet in respect of the legall or Mosaicall manner of revealing sinne, it is added, but till Christ. For the Law before Christ did convince men of sinne, not only by precepts and threatnings, but also by rites and ceremonies. For Jewish washings and sacrifices were reall confessions of sinne. And they were an hand-writing against us, as Paul saith. And this manner of revealing sinne ended in the death of Christ, *Col.*2.14. Againe, the ministerie of condemnation which was in force till Christ, at his comming is turning into the ministerie of the Spirit and of grace; 2 Cor. 3. 11. For under the Law there was plentifull revelation of sinne, with darke and finall revelation of grace: but at the coming of Christ men saw heaven opened, and there was a plentifull revelation of sin, with a more plentifull revelation of grace and mercie. And in this respect also the Law is said to be till Christ.

The second question is, whether the seed of Abraham were before Christ, or no? Ans. All that followed the steps of Abrahams faith before Christ were his seed. Yet were they not that seed, that is, the principall seed, who is Christ, who is the seed blessed in himselfe, and giving blessednesse to all other. And the beleevers that were before Christ, or after him, are the seed of Abraham, in respect they are set into Christ, who is principally the seed mentioned in this Text.

When Paul saith, ordained by Angels, in the hand of a Mediator, he makes a declaration of that which hee had said before by an evident signe, on this manner. That the Law serveth to discover transgressions, it appeares by this, that the Jewes could not abide to receive the Law immediately from God, but it was delivered by Angels, and received by the hand of a Mediator: and this argues mans guiltinesse, and his disagreement with God; because a Mediator is of two at least, and of two being at difference between themselves.

The Law is said to be ordained or disposed by Angels, because they were attendants on God in the Mount, when the Law was delivered. Secondly, they were witnesses and approvers of the deliverie. Thirdly, it may bee the voice of God whereby the Law was published in the hearing of all the Israelites, was uttered and pronounced by the ministerie of Angels: for the Holy Ghost saith, *The word spoken by Angels was stedfast, Heb.*2.2. that is, the Law. It may be said, all this proves not that Angels ordained the Law. Answ. Often in Scripture, the worke or action of the principall Agent is ascribed to the instrument or Minister. The Saints are said to judge the world, 1 *Cor.*6. whereas indeed they are no more but witnesses and approvers of this judgement. In the same manner Timothie is said to save himselfe and others, 1 Tim. 4. 16. The last trumpet is sounded by Angels, Mat. 24. 31. and it is called the voyce of an Archangell, and the trumpe of God, 1 *Thess.*4.

Moreover Paul saith, The Law was delivered by the hand of a Mediator, that is, of Christ, (as some thinke:) but that cannot be: for the hand of a Mediator signifies the ministerie and service of a Mediator, and this service is inferiour to the service of Angels; because the Law was delivered by Angels, and received of them by a Mediator. Therefore the Mediator here mentioned is Moses, who stood betweene the people and God, in the deliverie of the Law, Deut. 5. 5. It may be objected, that there is but one Mediator Christ, 1 *Tim.*2.8. Ans. Mediator for reconciliation is only one, and that is Christ: and Moses is a Mediator only in the relating and reporting the Law from God to the Israelites.

Paul addes, that a Mediator is not of one, that is, that everie Mediator is of two at the least, and of two at variance and disagreement. And he saith further, that God is one, that is, alwayes the same, and like himselfe, without change. And the reason of the speech is this: Paul hath taught, that the Law was given by a Mediator, and that this declared a difference betweene God and man. Now it might be said, where is the fault in this difference, and who is the cause of it? Paul saith, not God, but man; because God is alwayes one and the same.

The Use. In that the Law is for transgressions, wee are taught to examine and search our hearts and lives by the Law of God. Zephan. 2. 1. Fan you, O nation, not worthy to be loved, Lam. 3. 40. Let us search our hearts, and turne again to the Lord. That wee may the better examine our selves, foure rules must be observed.

The first, when any one sinne is forbidden in any commandement of the Law, under it all the sinnes of the same kinde are forbidden, all causes of them, and all occasions.

The second, a commandement negative includes the affirmative, and bindes us not only to abstaine from evill, but also to doe the contrarie good.

The third is, that every commandement must be understood with a curse annexed to it, though the curse be not expressed.

The fourth is, that we must especially examine our selves by the first and last commandements. For the first forbids the first motions of our hearts against God, and the last forbids the first motions of our hearts against our neighbour: though there bee no consent to doe the evill which we thinke. Paul saith of himselfe, that the commandement, Thou shalt not lust, was it that especially humbled him, Rom. 7.

According to these and other rules, (which now I omit) wee must with speciall care examine our selves. The want of this dutie causeth men to rot away in their sinnes, without remorse or true repentance: and it is the cause that so many men profit so little in hearing the word preached, because they know not what sinne meanes, neither can they search aright their consciences and lives.

Moreover, after we have begun to practise this duty, wee must often (as occasion shall be given) renue it to the end. Consider Davids example, Psal. 119. 59.

Where Paul saith, that the law is added till Christ, wee see that the Legall ministerie of death is abolished now; and that wee are under the ministerie of the spirit and life. And for this cause wee in these last dayes, that are Ministers of the word, must preach the doctrine of salvation plainly, to the very consciences of men, 2 Cor. 4. 1. Againe, the people of these dayes ought to abound in knowledge, and their obedience should be answerable to the measure of their knowledge. And if after much preaching in these dayes of light, the Gospell be hid, (as it is to very many, who remaine still in ignorance and disobedience) it is a fearefull signe unto them of their condemnation, 2 Cor. 4. 4.

In that the Law of God was ordained or delivered by Angels, we are put in minde to reverence it, and to esteeme it as a treasure. Secondly, wee are to feare to breake the least commandement of the law, because the Angels that were ordainers of the law, doe (no doubt) observe the keepers and the breakers of it, and are ready prest to bee witnesses and revengers against them that offend. Stephen upbraids the Jewes, that the Law was given by the dispensation of Angels, and yet they brake it, Acts 7. 53. Thirdly, if thou offend and breake the law, repent with speed: for that is the desire and joy of Angels. They that delivered the law, rejoyce to see the keeping of it. Lastly, if thou sinne and repent not, looke for shame and confusion before God and his Angels.

Because Moses was a mediator to the Jewes, Papists gather, that therefore Angels and Saints may bee mediators. Answ. It followes not. Moses was ordained a mediator, so are not they. Moses was present with the Jewes, and had fellowship with them whose mediator he was. Saints are absent in heaven, and Angels though they be about us, have no fellowship with us. Moses was a mediator but once, and that only in one thing: Saints are made continuall mediators. Lastly, Moses was a mediator in relating and reporting the Law from God to the people: Saints and Angels are made mediators to relate and report our prayers, and the secrets of our hearts to God.

Whereas Paul saith, that a mediator is not of one, but a third, betweene two at the least: it may be demanded, how Christ can be mediator betweene man and God, considering he is God? Answer. Though Father, Sonne, and holy Spirit, be one and the same in respect of Godhead, yet are they distinct in respect of person, or in respect of the manner of subsisting: so as the Father is the Father, not the Sonne or holy Ghost; the Sonne, the Son, and not the Father, or the holy Ghost; the holy Ghost, the holy Ghost, and not the Father, or the Sonne. The Son then, and the Father, being persons really distinct, the Sonne may bee, and is Mediator, first of all, in respect of order to the Father, and in him, to the Sonne, and the holy Ghost. For the three persons being of one nature and will, when the Father is appeased, in him also the Sonne, and the holy Ghost are appeased. Thus John saith, If any man sinne, wee have an advocate with the Father. It may bee said, that Christ cannot bee Mediator to himselfe. Ans. In Christ consider his nature, and his office; by nature, hee is the sonne of God: by office, he is Mediator: and thus he is God-man, or Man-god: and as Mediator by voluntarie dispensation, hee is inferior to himselfe as he is the essentiall sonne of God. And in the same manner, Christ as God-man is Mediator to himselfe as hee is the Sonne of God. For as hee is the Sonne of God, he is the partie offended; as hee is Mediator God-man, he is the partie that makes reconciliation.

Lastly, the property of God must bee observed, that hee is unchangeable, Iames 1. 17. Mal. 3. 16. It may bee objected that God is said in Scripture to repent. Answ. God is said to repent, not because hee changeth either nature or will, but because he changeth his actions of mercie and love into effects of anger, after the manner of men. Againe, it may be objected that God changed the Law and abolished ceremonies. Ans. This God did by an unchangeable decree, before all worlds, and so the change is in the law, and not in God. For God can decree to change this or that, without change.

The use. Gods unchangeablenesse is the foun-foundation of our comfort. S. Paul saith, If we love God, wee are knowne of him, 1 Cor. 8. 3. Now the first wee may certainly finde in our selves, namely, the love of God and Christ: and for the second, God is unchangeable. For they which are once knowne of God, are ever knowne of him, and that even then when they feele nothing but Gods anger.

Againe, wee are put in minde to bee unchangeable in good things, as in faith, hope, love, good counsels, honest promises, and such like, especially in the maintenance of true religion. For we ought to be like unto God. It is the poesie of our gracious Queene, Semper eadem, Alwaies one and the same; no doubt in good things, especially in the religion established among us. The same must be the minde of all good subjects and all good people, 1 Cor. 15. 58.

21. Is the law then against the promise of God? God forbid: for if there had beene a law given, which could have given life, surely righteousnesse should have beene by the law.

22. But the Scripture hath included all under sinne, that the promise by the faith of Iesus Christ should be given to them that beleeve.

In these words, Paul propounds and answers another objection, in number the fourth. The occasion of the objection is taken out of the former words, in which Paul saith, the law is for transgressions. It may be framed on this manner. If the law serve to convince and condemne us of sinne, it serves not to give life but to kill, and so it is contrarie to the promise which giveth life. The answer is made negatively, God forbid. And a double reason is rendred of the deniall. The first is this: If the law could give life, it should also give justice, or justification: and so it should be contrarie to the promise (because then there should be two contrarie waies of justification, one by faith alone, the other by faith with workes.) Therfore in that it kils and condemnes, it is not contrarie to the promise. The second reason is in the 22. verse. Things subordinate, whereof one serves for the other, are not contrarie: the law and the promise are subordinate; for the law prepares the way for the accomplishing of the promise, in that it shuts all under sinne, that the promise may be given to them that beleeve in Christ.

The use. In that Paul rejects the blasphemous objection, with God forbid; wee are taught to avoid things said or done to the dishonour of God, with loathing and detestation. When it was related to Ahab and Iezabel, that Naboth had blaspheмed God, they being idolaters, solemnize a fast, pretending danger by the sinne, 1 King. 21. 12. Caiphas supposing that Christ had blaspheмed, rent his garments, Matth. 26. When Iob did but suspect his children of blaspheming God, hee called them and sanctified them, Iob 1. 5. It is the fault of our daies, that many blaspheme by cursing, swearing, &c. without feare, and many doe it (as many dissolute souldiers) in a braverie: and hearers thereof for the most part are nothing moved thereat; so ordinary is the offence. This shewes the wickednesse of our times.

In the first reason, Paul delivers a notable conclusion, namely, that the thing which is the meanes to procure life unto us, is also the meanes of our justice or justification before God. And good reason. For justice causeth life, and that which giveth life, first of all giveth justice. Hence it followes that workes cannot meritoriously deserve eternall life. For if life be by the workes of the law, then justice also: but that cannot be: for we must first of all be justified, before wee can doe a good worke. Let the Papists consider this. Againe, they which teach, that faith is alone in justification, and that both faith and workes concurre as causes of salvation, are deceived. For by the former conclusion of Paul, if workes be causes of salvation, then must they also have a stroake in our justification, which they have not. And therefore they are the way of our salvation, but not any cause at all. Lastly, here we see that many among us do not hold Christ, or beleeve in him aright, for their justification: because they hold him without change of heart and life. For by Pauls conclusion, whom Christ quickneth, them he justifieth: and whom he doth not quicken, them he doth not justifie. Examine thy selfe then: if Christ have sanctified and renued thy heart, thou art justified: if thy heart be yet unsanctified, and thy life unreformed, deceive not thy selfe with fond imaginations: thou art not yet justified.

The 22. verse followeth, containing the second reason. And first let us consider the meaning of the words. The Scripture] the words are in the Originall thus, That Scripture, namely, the Scripture before named, the written law in the bookes of the old Testament. And further, by the law, we must understand, God in the law, Rom. 11. 32. God hath concluded all under unbeleefe.

Concluded] The law is compared to a Judge, or sergeant: sinne to a prison. And the law is said to conclude or include men under sinne; because it doth to the full accuse and convince us of sinne, so as our mouthes are stopped, and we have no way to escape.

All] All men that came of Adam by generation, with all that comes from them, their thoughts, desires, words, and deeds.

The promise] The thing promised, which is remission of sinne, and life everlasting.

By the faith of Christ] That is, the faith whereof Christ is both the author and matter. This is added, to signifie unto us who are true beleevers, namely, they which are beleevers by the faith of Christ.

Against this text of Paul, blinde reason moveth many questions, as namely, why God created man, and then suffered him to fall?

fall? why God did not restraine the fall of Adam to his person, but suffers it to inlarge it selfe to all mankind, so as all be shut up under sinne? why the promise is not given to all, but only to beleevers? But there are two speciall grounds, upon which wee are to stay our mindes. The first is, that God hath an absolute soveraignty and lordship over al his creatures. We may not therefore dispute the case with God, Rom. 9. 20. He may doe with his owne what he will, Matth. 20. 15. The second is, that the waies and judgements of God are a gulfe, into which the more we search, the more we plunge our selves; because they are unsearchable, Rom. 11. 33.

Marke the phrase of Paul the Scripture concludes all under sinne if it conclude or shut up, then it determines what is sinne, what not. And if this be so, then it may also determine what is true, and what is false; and so be truly tearmed a Judge of controversies in religion. If it shut up sinners under their sinne, then also it shuts them that erre under their errour, for errours be sinnes and fruits of the flesh. It is said blasphemously, that if the Scripture bee a Judge, it is but a dumbe Judge. And I say againe, that offenders may plead for themselves on this sort, that the law is but a dumbe Judge, when it condemnes them, and shuts them under sinne: but they shall finde it hath a loud voice in their consciences, when they reade it seriously, and examine themselves by it: even so the Scripture speakes sufficiently for the determination of truth and falshood, in matters of salvation, when it is searched with care and humility.

When Paul saith, we are all shut up under sinne, he puts us in minde of our most miserable condition, that we are captives of sinne and Satan, inclosed in our sins as in a prison, like imprisoned malefactors that wait daily for the comming of the Judge, and stand in continuall feare of execution. And seeing our condition is such, we must labour to feele by experience this our spirituall bondage, that we may say with Paul, We are sold under sinne, and that we know there is no goodnesse dwelling in our flesh, Rom. 7. 14. 18. This is one of the first lessons that we must take out in the schoole of Christ. Againe, if we seriously bethinke our selves that wee are captives of sinne and worthy of death, it will make us with contentation of minde to beare the miseries of this life, sickneſſe, poverty, reproach, banishment, &c. considering they come farre short of that we have deserved; who are no better than slaves of sinne and Satan.

Whereas Paul saith, that all men with all that proceeds from them, is shut under sinne, he teacheth that all actions of men unregenerate are sinnes. The wisedome of the flesh, that is, the wiseſt cogitations, counsels, inclinations of the flesh, are enmity unto God, Rom. 8. 5. To the uncleane all things are uncleane, Tit. 1. 15. An evill tree cannot bring forth good fruit,

A Matth. 7. It may be objected, that naturall men may doe the workes of the morall law, as to give almes, and such like, Rom. 2. 14. Ans. Sinnes bee of two sorts. One is, when any thing is done flat against the commandement of God. The second is, when the act or worke is done which the law prescribes, yet not in the same manner which the law prescribes, in faith, in obedience, to the glory of God. In this second regard, morall workes performed by naturall men are sinnes indeed. Hence it followes, that Liberty of will in the doing of that which is truly good, is lost by the fall of Adam: and that man cannot by the strength of naturall will helped by grace, apply himselfe to the calling of God.

B Whereas Paul saith, that the promise is given to beleevers, it is manifest that the promise is not universall in respect of all mankinde, but only indefinite, and universall in respect of beleevers. Wherfore their doctrine is not sound, that teach the Redemption wrought by Christ, to be as generall as the sinne of Adam. Indeed, if we regard the value and sufficiencie of the death of Christ, it is so: but if we respect the Communication and donation of this benefit, it is not. For though all be shut under sinne, yet the promise is only given to them that beleeve. It is objected, that God was in Christ reconciling the world to himselfe, 2 Cor. 5. 19. Answ. The text in hand shewes, that by the world, we are to understand all beleevers through the whole world. And whereas Paul saith, God shut up all under unbeleefe, that hee might have mercy upon all, Rom. 11. 32. his meaning is here set downe, that he shut both Jewes and Gentiles under unbeleefe, that hee might have mercy upon all that beleeve, both of Jewes and Gentiles.

C Marke further, the end of the law is conviction: and the end of our conviction is, that the promise of mercy may bee given to them that beleeve. Here is notable comfort, with encouragement to all good duties. Doth the law as it were in the name of God arrest thee? doth it accuse and convince thee of manifold sinnes? doth it arraigne thee at the barre of Gods judgement, and fill thy soule with terrour? dost thou by the testimony of the law and thine owne conscience, see and feele thy selfe to be a most miserable and wretched sinner? Well. It may bee thou thinkest that all this is a preparation to thy damnation; but it is not. For it is contrariwise a preparation to thy salvation. For the law with a loud voice in thy heart proclaimes thee a sinner, and threatens thee with perdition; but the end of all this is, that Jesus Christ may become a Saviour unto thee, so bee it thou wilt come unto him, and beleeve in him. For hee saves no sheepe, but the lost sheepe, and hee calles not just men, but sinners to repentance. Let us therefore with all our hearts come unto Christ and beleeve in him, and that by the faith of Christ, that is, with a faith joyned with hope, love and and new obedience. Then shall the promise of pardon and life everlasting be given to us. Upon this ground, persons in desperate and grievous offenders may see a plaine way to helpe and succour themselves. For the worke of the law concluding us under sinne, by the mercy of God tends to our salvation, if we will use the good meanes.

Lastly, Pauls saith, the promise is made not to every one that beleeveth according to any faith of his owne, but to them that are true beleevers by the faith of Christ. Therefore every man shall not be saved in his owne faith and religion, but only they that are of the faith of Christ.

Vers. 23. For before faith came, wee were kept under the law, and shut up unto the faith which should afterward be revealed.

24. And therefore the law was our schoolemaster to Christ, that wee might bee made righteous by faith.

25. But after that faith is came, we are no more under the schoolemaster.

Paul in the 19. vers. had said, that the law was for transgression, till the seed came, to which the promise was made. And here he makes a more large declaration of his owne meaning. The summe of all that he saith may bee reduced to a comparison of things unlike, on this manner. Before the comming of faith, we were under the dominion of Moses law: but after faith was come, we were free. The first part of the comparison is amplified by a double similitude: the law was a guard unto us, verse 23. and the law was our schoolemaster, verse 24. The second part of the comparison is in the 25. vers.

Faith] That is, the Gospel, or the doctrine of remission of sinnes and life everlasting by Christ exhibited in the flesh.

We.] We Jewes: I Paul a Jew, and the rest of that nation.

Law] That is, the whole Oeconomie, Policie, and Regiment of Moses, by lawes partly morall, partly ceremoniall, and partly judiciall.

Kept] Compassed or guarded. Because the law before Christ was to the Jewes as a guard of armed men, to inclose and keepe them, that they should not depart from God, and from their allegiance to him, unto the Gates, idolatries, and superstitions of the Gentiles.

Vnto the faith] That is still the faith to come.

Afterward revealed] From the creation, to the law, the Church of God was in one family; and the rest of the world beside was no people of God. From the law till Christ, the Church of God was inclosed in the nation of the Jewes, and all the world beside no Church or people of God. And this distinction of a people, and no people, stood sometime after the comming of Christ, Matthew 10. 5. Goe not into the way of the Gentiles, and into the cities of the Samaritans enter ye not. After the ascension of Christ, this distinction ended: because the

M mystery of mans redemption was then more plainly revealed; and it began then to bee revealed to the whole world, Coloss. 1. 26, 27. and Rom. 16. 25.

Thus wee see that the law served for transgressions: because it was to the Jewes as a guard to keepe them in the compasse of their duty, that they fell not away to sundry transgressions.

The use. This shewes the greatnesse of our corruption, and that the very frame of our heart is evill continually, that the Lord must be faine so set his law about us as a guard of armed men, to keepe us that we sinne not.

Againe, here we see the use of Gods lawes, which serve to prevent, restraine, and cut off sinne, into which otherwise men would fall, unlesse they were compassed and guarded by lawes. Some object for freedome of will, on this manner: If the lawes of God cannot be kept, they are in vaine: but they are not in vaine: therefore they may be kept. Ans. The major, or first part of the reason, is not true. For there are other uses of the law of God, than the keeping of them: for they serve to restraine, and prevent open offences: and to keepe men in order, at the least outwardly.

Another use of the law of God, was to conclude and shut up the Jewes into the unitie of one faith and religion. For this cause the Jewes had but one Temple, one Mercie-seat, one high Priest, &c. Hence it followes, that in a godly and Christian Common-wealth where true religion is established, there may be no toleration of any other religion. For that which is the end of Gods lawes, must also be the end of all good lawes in all Common-wealths and kingdomes, namely, to shut up the people into the unity of one faith.

The Church of the Jewes is called a fountaine sealed, a garden inclosed, Cant. 4. 12. a vineyard hedged in, Isa. 5. 5. Psalm. 80. 13. And here we see, what is the hedge or wall of this garden, or vineyard; namely, the regiment or policie of Moses by a threefold kind of law. This admonisheth us to respect, and with care to observe good lawes, because they are as it were hedges and fences of all good societies: and the breaking of them is the pulling down of our fence.

Where Paul saith, that faith should be revealed, note, that the faith, or the Gospel, was not revealed to the world till the last age, after the comming of Christ. It may be said, it was always revealed to all men, but not so clearely as in these last daies. Answ. It was not revealed to all, either darkly or clearely, before the comming of Christ. Act. 14. 16. God suffered the Gentiles to walke in their owne waies. Ephes. 2. 12. they were without God, and without Christ. Rom. 15. 20. Paul preached where Christ was not so much as named. Hence it followes, that the Vocation of men to life everlasting is not universall: because Christ was never universally revealed. Neither is mans redemption universall in respect of the whole world. For Redemption by Christ was not revealed to all nations before the comming of Christ: and a benefit to be apprehended by faith, if it be unknowne, is no benefit. Lastly, it is erroneous that some teach, namely, that grace supernaturall is universall: that is, that the power to beleeve in Christ, and the power to turne to God, if men will, is generally given to all. But this cannot be: because it is not given to all men, so much as to heare of Christ, and to know him.

Seeing faith is now come, it may bee demanded: what is the guard whereby we are kept now? Answ. The precepts of the morall law. The sayings of the wise are as nailes or stakes fastened, to range men in the compasse of their owne duties: Eccles. 12. 11. Againe, the peace of God, or the assurance of our reconciliation with God, is a guard to keepe our hearts and senses in Christ. Phil. 4. 7. If this will not doe the deed, God hath in store his corrections and judgements, to be as an hedge to hemme us in, Hos. 2. 6. This being so, our duty is to guard and inclose our selves, especially our hearts, Prov. 4. 23. and all the senses and powers of our soules, Psal. 141. 3. by the wholesome precepts and counsels of God. Considering we lie open to so many enemies, we should continually bee armed and fenced from the head to the foot, Ephes. 6. 13. otherwise we shall upon every occasion be overturned.

To come to the 24. verse, the Jewes might haply say, seeing we are thus kept and shut up by the law, what meanes have we of comfort and of salvation? The answer is made, the law is further our schoolemaister. Here by schoolemaister, understand one that teacheth little children or petits, the first rudiments or elements, A. B. C. And the law is a schoolemaister to Christ, for two causes. One, because it points out and shadowes forth unto us Christ, by bodily rudiments of ceremonies and sacrifices. The second is, because the law, specially the morall law, urgeth and compelleth men to goe to Christ. For it shewes us our sinnes, and that without remedie: it shewes us the damnation that is due unto us and by this meanes it makes us despaire of salvation in respect of our selves, and thus it inforceth us to seeke for helpe out of our selves in Christ. The law is then our schoolemaister, not by plaine teaching, but by stripes and correction.

In this verse, Paul sets downe the manner & way of our salvation, which is on this manner, first, the law prepares us by humbling us: then comes the Gospel, and it stirres up faith: And faith wrought in the heart, apprehends Christ for justification, sanctification, and glorification. Paul sets this forth by a fit similitude. They that would be the servants and children of God, must come into the schoole of God, and be taught of him. In this schoole are two formes, and two masters. In the first forme, the teacher and master is the law. And he teacheth men to know their sins, and their deserved damnation, and he causeth us to despaire of our salvation in respect of our selves. And when men have beene well schooled by the law, and are brought to acknowledge their sinnes, and that they are slaves of sinne and Satan; then must they bee taken up to an higher forme, and bee taught by an other schoolemaister, which is Faith, or the Gospel. The lesson of the Gospell is, that men after they are humbled, must flie to the throne of grace, beleeve in Christ, and with all their heart turne unto God; that they may be justified and glorified. When wee have by the teaching of this second master, learned this good lesson, we are become children and servants of God.

By this then it is manifest, that there are two sorts of bad schollers in the schoole of Christ, among us. One sort are they which come to the Gods table, and yet learne nothing, either from the law, or from the Gospel: but content themselves with the teaching of nature. The second sort are they, which learne something, but in preposterous manner. For they have learned that mercy and salvation comes by Christ: and with this they content themselves: not suffering themselves first of all to be schooled by the law till they despaire in respect of themselves: nor to be schooled by the Gospell, till they beleeve in Christ, and repent of their sinnes.

In a word, hee is a good scholler in the schoole of Christ, that first learnes by the law to humble himselfe, and to get out of himselfe: and being humbled, subjects his heart to the voice and precept of the Gospel, which bids us beleeve in Christ, turne to God, and testifie our faith by new obedience.

In the second part of the comparison 25. verse, Paul sets downe one point, that at the comming of the faith, the Jewes were freed from the dominion of the law of Moses, and consequently that the said law was abrogated. The lawgiver, that is, the expounder of Moses law was to last but till the comming of Shilo, Gen. 49. 10. The law of commandements standing in ordinances, was abrogated by the death of Christ, Ephes. 2. 15. And the change of the priesthood brought the change of the law, Hebr. 7. 12.

For the better clearing of this point, three questions are to be demanded. The first is, when was the policie, regiment, or law of Moses abrogated? Answ. At the comming of the faith, or when the Gospel first began to bee published to the world: which was at the Ascension of Christ. And hee in his death cancelled the ceremoniall law, and tooke it out of the way, Colos. 2. 14. When the old Testament ended, and the new began, then was the abrogation of the law: now the ending of the old Testament, and the beginning of the new, was in the Resurrection of Christ. For then was the beginning of the new world, as it were.

The second question is; How farre forth the law is abrogated? Answ. The law is threefold: Morall, Ceremoniall, Judiciall. Morall is the law of God, concerning manners, or duties to God and man. Now the morall law is abrogated, in respect of the Church, and them that beleeve, three waies. First, in respect of justification: and this Paul proves at large in this Epistle. Secondly, in respect of the malediction, or curse. There is no condemnation to them that are in Christ, Rom. 8. 1. Thirdly, in respect of rigour. For in them that are in Christ, God accepts the endevour to obey, for obedience it selfe. Nevertheless, the law, as it is the rule of good life, is unchangeable, and admits no abrogation. And Christ in this regard did by his death establish it, Rom. 3. 31.

The Ceremoniall law is that which prescribed rites and gestures in the worship of God, in the time of the old Testament. Ceremonies are either of figure and signification, or of order. The first are abrogated at the comming of Christ, who was the accomplishment of them all, Coloss. 2. 17. The second being ceremonies of particular order to the times of the old and new Testament, concerne not us. For example: In the commandement of the Sabbath, some things are morall, some ceremoniall, some judiciall. That in one day of seven there should be an holy rest, it is morall: Rest upon the seventh day from the creation is ceremoniall, in respect of order. Strictnes of rest from all labour, is ceremoniall in respect of the signification of rest from sinne, and rest in heaven. Therefore the particular day of rest, and the manner of rest, is abrogated: and Christ by his owne example, and by the example of the Apostles (examples not being contradicted in Scripture) appointed the eight day, or the day of Christs resurrection, to bee the Sabbath of the new Testament.

Judiciall lawes are such as concerne inheritances, lands, bargaines, controversies, causes criminall; and they pertaine to the regiment of the common-wealth. If the Common-wealth of the Jewes were now standing, they should be governed by these lawes. For to them were they given. The case is not like with us. Some are of minde, that all judiciall lawes are abrogated: and some are of contrarie minde, that all Common-wealths are to be governed by them. But they are both deceived: and the meane betweene both is the truth. Know then, that of judiciall lawes of Moses, some are abrogated, some are not. Such lawes as are meerely judiciall, that is, judiciall and not morall, and doe particularly concerne the nation of the Jewes, the land of Canaan, the times before Christ, the things of the old Testament, are abrogated. Of this kinde is the law that commands the brother to raise up seed to his brother, Deut. 25. 5. The law of tenths is partly ceremoniall, and partly judiciall, and specially concernes the land of Canaan. For as countries are richer or poorer than Canaan; so must their allowance to the Ministerie be more or lesse: The sevenths, the eighths, the ninths, the elevenths, the twelfths, and not the tenth. And the allowance of the Tenths, stands not in force in this and other Common-wealths by the Judiciall law of God, but by positive lawes of countries: For if it did, then Ministers should not meddle with their Tenths, either for the gathering, or for the disposing of them, but they should be brought into the store-houses by certaine overseers, and they should dispose of them according to the need of every Minister, 2. Chron. 31. Malac. 3. The law, that the theefe must restore foure-fold, or be a bondman, concernes Canaan, and those countries. In Europe, (specially in the Northerne and Westerne parts,) a straighter law is required. For the people are much given to idlenesse, and consequently to robbing: and they are of fierce disposition, and therefore with theft joyne violence, and disturbance of the common peace. And for this cause (excepting in some cases) theft is punished with death. And this must not seeme hard. For even the Jewes, when the theft was aggravated with other circumstances, might punish it with death, 2 Sam. 12. 6. And it is in the power of the Magistrate, when sinne is encreased, to increase the punishment.

Now judiciall lawes that are in foundation and substance morall, are not abrogated, but are perpetuall. For the better discerning of them, I give two notes. The first is this: If a judiciall law serve directly and immediately to guard and fence any one of the ten Commandements, in the maine scope, and end thereof, it is morall in equitie and perpetuall, because the end & use of it is perpetuall. I wil give sundry examples. It is the law of God, that he of the Israelites that shall intice them to goe and worship other gods, shall be put to death, Deut. 13. 6. This law serves to maintaine and uphold the first commandement, the end whereof is to injoyne us to take the true God for our God: and this end is most necessarie both for Gods glorie, and for the salvation of men: and therefore, whatsoever thing or person overturneth or abolisheth this end, it must be cut off from the society of men. Here note by the way, that they which have beene borne, baptised, and brought up among us, and yet afterward become Masse-priests, seeke maliciously and obstinately, without ceasing to seduce our people, deserve in this respect to be put to death.

Example 2. Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live, Exod. 22. 18. This law againe is a fence to the first commandement. For witches renounce God, and humane societie; and therefore are worthily cut off, though they doe no hurt.

hurt: even because they make a league with the devill.

Example 3. He that blasphemeth the name of God, shall be put to death, Lev. 24.16. Understand this law of manifest and notorious blasphemies, that pierce through God, as the words import: and then it is a maine sense to the third commandement. For Gods name may in no wise be abused, and troad under foot: and therefore blasphemers piercing God are to be cut off. This is the very law of Nature, as appeares by Nabuchadnezzar, who gave in commandement to his people, that whosoever blasphemed the name of the true God, should be put to death, Dan. 3. 29. Here note, that manifest and convicted Atheists, if they bee put to death, have but their deserts.

Example 4. He that curseth father or mother shall die the death, Levit. 4.9. This law is a necessarie sense to the fifth commandement, and upholds the honour that is due to parents.

Example 5. He that smites a man that hee die, shall die the death, Exod. 21.12. To this law there is no exception made but one, and that is, when a man is killed at unawares. And it is for his equitie perpetuall. For it is a maine and direct sense to the sixth commandement: Consider another reason, Numb. 35.33. The whole land (saith the Lord) shall be defiled with blood, till the blood be shed that killed a man.

Example 6. The adulterer and the adulteresse shall both be put to death, Levit. 20. This Judiciall serves to uphold and maintaine chastitie, which is the end of the seventh commandement. Marke withall the reasons, Levit. 20. 22, 23. Lest the land spue you out: and for these things, that is, for suffering this and other sinnes unpunished, the Gentiles were cast out. It may be said, that Christ did not condemne the woman to death, which was taken in adultery. Answer. He came to be a Mediator, and not a Judge, or Magistrate. It is alleaged, that David was not put to death for adulterie. Answer. Hee was the highest in the kingdome: there was none to judge him. Againe, it may be said, that if adulterie be death, then innumerable persons must die. Ans. We must doe that which we finde to be the will of God; and the events of things must be left to God.

The second note, whereby we may discerne a judiciall law to be morall for his equity, is this; If it follow necessarily and immediately from the light, principles, and conclusions of nature. For example, Deut. 22.5. The man shall not put on the things that appertaine to the woman, nor the woman the things that appertaine to the man. This law is more than Judiciall: for it is a Rule of common honestie, practised in those countries, by the light of nature, where the written law was never known. And things good and honest which nature teacheth, are morall and must be done. This is Pauls rule, Doth not nature teach this? 1 Cor. 11. 14.

This I speake, not to censure and condemne the lawes of this or any other Commonwealth: but only to shew how farre Judiciall lawes have morality in them, and stand in force.

The third question is, what is our guide now in the time of the new Testament, seeing the Regiment and law of Moses is abrogated? Answ. The outward guide is the doctrine of the morall law, and of the Gospel. It is therefore called the rod and the staffe of God, Psal. 23. and the rod of his mouth, Isa. 11. 4. The inward guide is the Spirit of God, writing the lawes of God in our hearts, and by them guiding us, and being a law unto us, Rom. 8. 3. 14. Thirdly, God by manifold afflictions nurtures and schooles us, partly to prevent sinnes to come, and partly to humble us for that which is past, 1 Cor. 11. 32. Ier. 31. 18.

The use. Seeing the law is abrogated, (as I have said) wee must be a free and voluntarie people, serving God not of constraint, but willingly, as if there were no law to compell us. All nations shall flow as waters to the mountaine of the Lord, Isa. 2. 2. The people shall come willingly in the day of assembly, Psal. 110. 3. In the daies of Iohn Baptist, the kingdome of heaven suffered violence. Ieremie saith, they shall teach every man his neighbour and his brother, Ierem. 31. 31. because men shall learne freely without compulsion, or calling upon. Here is the fault of our times. Many say in heart to Christ, Depart from us, wee will none of thy wayes; and many againe are zealous for the things of this life, but for duties pertaining to Gods worship, and the salvation of their soules, they are neither hot nor cold. This negligence and slacknesse is ful of danger: and therefore with speed to be amended. For cursed is hee that doth the works of God negligently: and the Lord will spue out such persons.

26. For ye are all the sonnes of God by faith in Christ Iesus.

27. For all ye that are baptised into Christ, have put on Christ.

28. There is neither Iew nor Grecian: there is neither bond nor free: there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Iesus.

Paul had said before, v. 25. that the beleeving Jewes after the publishing of the Gospel, were no more under the law as under a schoolemaster: In this 26. verse hee renders a reason hereof; and it may be framed on this manner: If we Jewes were still under the law as under a schoolemaster, then we should bee still after the manner of servants: but we are not after the manner of servants, because we are children: for even ye Galatians, and that all of you, are children of God, not by circumcision, or by the keeping of the law, but by faith in Christ. Againe, that they are children of God, hee proves it thus: Ye are baptised into Christ, and in baptisme ye have put on Christ, in that ye are joyned with him, and have fellowship with him, who is the naturall turall sonne of God: therefore yee are sonnes of God. It may be said, All children of God? all baptized? all put on Christ? how can this bee? seeing some are Jewes, some Gentiles? some bond, some free; some men, some women. The answer is made, verse 27. there are differences of men indeed, but in Christ all are as one.

In these words, I consider two things. The first is, the benefit or gift bestowed on the Galatians, which is sonne-ship, adoption, or the condition of Gods children. The second is, the discription of this benefit by foure Arguments. The first is, by the circumstance of the persons, ye all are children of God. The second is, the inward meanes, namely, faith in Christ Iesus. The third is, the outward meanes, or the pledge of adoption, Yee are all baptized into Christ. The last is, the foundation of adoption, and that is, to put on Christ, or to bee one with him.

For the better conceiving of the benefit, 3. questions may bee moved. The first is, whose sons the Galatians were? Answ. The sonnes of God. It may be said how the sons of God? I answer againe: God is called a father in 2. respects: first, he is a father in respect of Christ, the essentiall word: and then God signifies the first person. Againe, God is called a Father in respect of men elect to salvation: then the name God is put indefinitely: and it comprehends not onely the first person, but also the Son & holy Ghost. For all three do equally regenerate them that are adopted. And Paul saith of the God-head indefinitely: there is one God and Father of all, Eph. 4.6. And when we pray saying, Our father, &c. we invocate not onely the first person, but also the Sonne, and holy Ghost. And the Son of God, is expresly called the Father of eternity, in respect of us, Isay 9. vers. 6. and he is said to have his seed, Isay 53. verse 11.

The second question is, in what respect are the Galatians the children of God? Answer. A childe of God is two wayes: by nature; by grace. The childe of God by nature, is Christ, as hee is the eternall Sonne of God. A childe by grace, is three wayes. By creation: thus Adam before his fall, and the good Angels are the children of God. Secondly, by the personall union: thus Christ as he is man is the childe of God. Thirdly, by the grace of adoption: thus are all true beleevers, and in this text the Galatians are said to bee the children of God. In this grace of adoption, there bee two acts of God: one is Acceptation, whereby God accepts men for his children. The other is Regeneration, whereby men are borne of God, when the image of God is restored in them, in righteousnesse, and true holinesse.

The third question is, what is the excellency of this benefit? Answ. Great every way, John 1. 12. hee which is the childe of God, is heire and fellow heire with Christ, Rom. 8. 17. and that of the kingdome of heaven, and of all things in heaven and earth, 1 Cor. 3. 22. he hath title in this life, and shall have possession in the life to come. Againe, hee that is Gods child hath the Angels of God to tend on him, and to minister unto him for his good and salvation, Hebr. 1. 14.

The first argument whereby the Adoption of Gods children is set forth, is concerning the persons to whom it belongeth, in these words, All yee are children of God. So Paul saith, all the Ephesians are Elect, Ephes. 1. 3. And Peter cals all them to whom hee writes, 1 Per. 1. 1. Elect: and John 1. epist. 3. the children of God. And herein they follow the judgement of charity, leaving all secret judgements to God. Here I observe one thing, that every grievous fall doth not abolish the favour of God, and extinguish the grace of regeneration. For the Galatians erred in the foundation of religion, and had fallen away to another Gospell: and yet Paul saith, that they were (for all this) the children of God, and not some, but all of them. This truth may bee seene by experience. The childe of God before his fall, hath a purpose not to sinne: in the time of temptation when hee is in falling, hee hath a strife: after he is fallen, he lieth not in his fall, as wicked men doe, but hee recovereth himselfe by new repentance. And this shewes, that the childe of God by his fall doth not returne againe to the estate and condition of wicked men. When Saint Iohn saith, hee that is borne of God sinneth not, his meaning is this; hee that is borne of God, if hee fall into any offence of frailty, yet doth he not make a practice of sin, as the wicked and ungodly doe.

It may bee said, the Galatians, and all the Galatians are the children of God: but what is that to us? Ans. They among us that professe true faith in Christ, with care to keepe good conscience, are likewise to hold themselves to bee children of God. Hee beleeveth not the Gospell, that doth not beleeve his owne adoption. For in the Gospell there is a promise of all the blessings of God, to them that beleeve? and there is also a Commandement to apply the said promise; and consequently, to apply the gift of Adoption to our selves. When we are bidden to say, Our father, wee are bidden to beleeve our selves to bee children of GOD, and so to come unto him. Therefore with Paul I say, that all wee that truly beleeve in Christ, and have care to lead a good life, all I say, are indeed the children of God.

The use. Comforts arising by this benefit, are many. First, if thou be Gods childe, surely hee will provide all things necessary for thy soule and body, Matth. 6. 26. Our care must bee to doe the office and duty that belongs unto us: when this is done, our care is ended. As for the good successe of our labours, we must cast our care on God, who will provide that no good thing bee wanting unto us, Psal. 34.10. They that drowne themselves in worldly cares, live like fatherlesse children.

Secondly, in that we are children, we have liberty to come into the presence of God, and to pray unto him, *Eph.*3.12.

Thirdly, nothing shall hurt them that are the children of God, *The plague shall not come neere their Tabernacle: they shall walk upon the Lion and the Aspe, and tread them under foot. Psalm.*91.13. All things shall turne to their good, Romanes 8.28. And the rather: because the Angels of God pitch their tents about them.

Lastly, God will beare with the infirmities and frailties of them that are his children, if there bee in them a care to please him, with a purpose of not sinning. *Mala.*3.7. If a child be sicke, the father or mother doe not cast it out of doores: much lesse will God.

The duties. First, if ye bee Gods children, then walke worthy your profession and calling. Bee not vassals of sinne and Satan: carry your selves as Kings sonnes, bearing sway over the lusts of your owne heart, the temptations of the devill, and the lewd customes and fashions of this world. When David kept his fathers sheepe, hee behaved himselfe like a shepheard: but when hee was called from the sheepefold, and chosen to be king, he carried himselfe accordingly. So must we doe, that of children of the devill, are made the children of God. And if wee live according to the lusts of our flesh, as the men of this world doe, whatsoever wee professe, wee are in truth the children of the devill, Iohn 8. verse 44. 1. Iohn 3.

Secondly, we must use every day to bring our selves into the presence of God, and wee must do all things as in his sight and presence, presenting our selves unto him, as instruments of his glory in doing of his will. This is the honour that the childe of God owes unto him, *Mal.*1.6.

Thirdly, our care must bee (according to the measure of grace) to resemble Christ in all good vertues, and holy conversation. For he is our eldest brother the first borne of many brethren: and therefore we should be like unto him, 1 *Iob.*3.3.

Fourthly, wee must have a desire and love to the word of God, that we may grow by it, in knowledge, grace, and good life. For this is the milke and food whereby God feeds his children, 1 *Pet.*2.2. Such persons then among us, that have no love or liking of the Word, but spend their dayes in ignorance, and security, shew themselves to bee no children of God. The childe in the armes of the mother or nurse, that never desireth the breft, is certainly a dead childe.

Lastly, wee must put this in our accounts, that we must have many afflictions, if wee be Gods children: for hee corrects all his children. And when we are under the rod of correction, we must resigne our selves to the will and good pleasure of God. This is childlike

A obedience: and this must bee done in silence, and with all quietnesse: then God is best pleased.

The internall meanes of Adoption is Faith in Christ. And for the better conceiving of it, three questions are to be propounded. The first, what a kinde of faith is this? Answ. A particular or speciall faith: and it hath three acts or effects. The first is, to beleeve Christ to bee Iesus, that is a Saviour: the second is, to beleeve that Christ is my or thy Saviour: the third is, to put the confidence of heart in him. When Thomas felt the wounds of Christ, he said, My Lord, and my God: and thereupon Christ said, *Because thou hast seene thou beleevest, Ioh.*20.29. Here marke, that to beleeve Christ to bee my Christ, is faith. Against this speciall faith, the Papists object 3. arguments. The first is this: Every speciall faith must have a speciall word of God for his ground: but there is no speciall word that thy sinnes, or my sinnes, are forgiven by Christ: therefore there is no speciall faith. Answer. We have that which in force and value is equivalent to a speciall word: namely, a generall promise, with a commandement to apply the said promise to our selves. Secondly, I answer, that the word and promise of God generally propounded in Scripture, is made particular in the publike Ministery, in which when the word is preached to any people, God reveales 2. things unto them: one, that his will is to save them by Christ: the other, that his will is that men should beleeve in Christ. And the word thus applied in the publike Ministery in the name of God, is as much as if an Angel should particularly speak unto us from heaven.

The second Argument. Speciall faith (say they) is absurd; because by it a sinner must beleeve the pardon of his sinnes, before hee hath it: inasmuch as faith is the meanes to obtaine pardon. Answ. The giving and receiving of pardon and faith, are both at one moment of time: for when God gives the pardon of sinne: at the same instant hee causeth men to receive the same pardon by faith. For order of nature, faith goes before the receiving of the pardon (because faith is given to them that are to be ingrafted into Christ, and pardon to them that are in Christ) for time it doth not: and therefore this second Argument is absurd.

The third Argument. The full certainty and perswasion of Gods mercy in Christ, followes good conscience and good workes: and therfore faith followes after justification, Answ. There be 2. degrees of Faith. A weake faith, and a strong faith. A weake faith is that, against which doubting much prevailes, in which there is a sorrow for unbeleefe, a will & desire to beleeve in Christ, with care to use good meanes, and to increase in faith. Strong faith is that, which prevailes against doubting, and it is a full perswasion, or resolution of

A of the love and mercy of God in Christ. This second degree of faith is no iustification, vpon the observation and experience of the providence and goodnesse of God: but the first degree of speciall faith before named, for order goes before justification, and for time is sometimes with it.

This good question is: when faith begins first to breed in the heart? Answer. When a man begins to be touched in the conscience for his sinnes, and upon feeling of his owne spirituall poverty, earnestly hungers and thirsts after Christ and his righteousnesse above all things in the world. Christ saith, *I will give to him that thirsteth of the well of the water of life freely, Reuel.*21.6. This promise declares but in thirsting there is a measure of faith. To eate and drinke Christ the bread and water of life, is to beleeve in him: and to hunger and thirst, having in it were a spirituall appetite to Christ, is the next step to his eating and drinking. Therefore this must be remembred, that professors of the Gospel, yea teachers of the same, that want this sense of their unworthinesse, and this thirsting, are farre wide, what gifts soever they have: for they are not yet come to the first step of true faith.

B

The third question is, how faith in Christ is conceived in the heart? Answ. It is not faith to conceive in minde a bare perswasion, that Christ is my Saviour: and thereupon to thinke to be saved. But faith in Christ is conceived in spirituall exercises of invocation and repentance. When I see mine owne sinnes, and Gods anger against me for them by the Law: when I see mine owne guiltinesse, I draw my selfe into the presence of God, making confession of mine offences, and prayer for pardon of them, and in this prayer I strive against mine unbeleefe, I will, desire, and endevour to assent to the promise of God touching forgivenesse: and withall I purpose with my selfe to sinne no more. This is my daily practice: and thus is faith truly conceived and confirmed. Againe, faith is conceived in the use of holy meanes, namely the preaching of the word and Sacraments, for in hearing, and receiving the Lords Supper, to meditate upon the promises of mercies, and in meditation to apply the said promises to my selfe, is the right way to conceive true faith. Therefore so must be remembred, that faith conceived without the exercises of invocation and repentance, or conceived without the use of the word and Sacraments (as commonly it is) is not true faith, but an imagination or fiction of the braine, which will have no end.

The third point to bee considered, of the signe, or the outward meanes of Adoption, and that is baptisme. It may bee demanded: how baptisme can bee a meane or signe of the childe of God, considering all sorts of men are received to Baptisme? Answer. Baptisme is no marke of Gods childe, but baptisme joyned with faith: for so must the Text bee con-

A ceived: As yee Galatians that believe, are Baptized into Christ. For Paul had said immediatly before, Yee are the sons of God by faith. Again, the Scripture speaking of baptisme, comprehends both the outward and the inward baptisme, which is the inward baptisme of the spirit, *Matth.*3.11. and 1 *Pet.*3.21. And thus is baptisme alwaies an infallible marke of the childe of God.

In may further bee demanded, what are the markes of the inward baptisme? Answer. The new birth, whereby a man is washed and cleansed by the spirit of God, hath three speciall markes. The first is the spirit of grace and supplications, *Zach.*12.10. that is, the Spirit of regeneration causing men to turne to God, and with all, to make instant prayer and supplication for mercy and forgiveneese of sinnes past. The second is, to heare and obey the voyce of God in all things, Iohn 8.47. and 10.27. The third is, not to sinne, that is, not to live in the practice of any sinne after this new birth is begun, 1 Iohn 3. Hee that is borne of God, doth not commit sinne. He may fall in this or that speech, and doe amisse in this or that action: but after his calling and conversion, the tenour and course of his life shall bee according to the Commandements of God. And this is a speciall marke to discerne the inward baptisme.

Some alleage, that having long agoe beene baptized with water, yet they feele not the inward baptisme: and therefore they feare that they are not the children of God. Ans. If there bee in thee a sorrow for thy corruption and sinnes past; if thou hast a purpose to sinne no more; if thou avoydest the occasions of sinne, and feares to offend; if having sinned, thou lest not in thy sinne, but recoverest thy selfe by new repentance: thou art verily borne of God, and baptized with the baptisme of the holy Ghost.

C

Others alleage, that although they have bene baptized, yet they feare they have no faith: and therefore they thinke they are not the children of God. Answ. If there be in thee a sorrow for thine unbeleefe, a will and desire to believe, and a care to increase in faith by the use of good meanes, there is a measure of true faith in thee; and by it thou maiest assure thy selfe that thou art the childe of God.

D

Others alleage: that they have long made prayer unto God, and that according to his will, and yet their prayers have not been heard: and therefore they often doubt, they are no Gods children. Answer. If thou doest pray, though thy prayer be not heard according to thy desire, content thy selfe, for the praier of the heart is the marke of the spirit of Adoption, *Rom.*8.15.16. And by it thou maist know that thou art the childe of God.

Thus then wee see what is the infallible marke of the childe of God; namely, baptisme joyned with true faith in Christ, or the outward baptisme joyned with the inward bap-tisme of the Spirit. The use. Many avouch the present Church of Rome to bee the true Church of God: and that because, they say, in it there is true baptisme, which is a marke of the Church of God. But they are deceived: for baptisme in the Church of Rome is severed from true faith, or from the Apostolike doctrine: and the outward baptisme is severed from the inward baptisme. For they of that Church overturne justification by the meere mercy of God, which is the principall part of the inward baptisme. Againe, the ten Tribes retained circumcision after their apostasie: yet for all that condemned to be no people of God, Ose. 1. 9. The light in the lanthorne pertaines not to the lanthorne, but to the passengers in the street: even so the confession of faith in the Symboll of the Apostles, and baptisme, that are retained in the Papacy, pertaine not to the Papacy, but to another hidden Church, which by these and other meanes is gathered out of the middest of Romish Babylon. And therefore baptisme is rather a signe of this, than of the Romish Church.

Again, we must be warned to take heed that we deceive not our selves, thinking it a sufficient matter that we have bin baptized. For except Christ inwardly wash us by his spirit, we have no part in him, Joh. 13. 8. Circumcision (saith Paul) availeth not, unlesse thou bee a doer of the law. Rom. 2. 25. Baptisme indeed saveth, 1 Pet. 3. 21. but that is not the baptisme of water, but the stipulation of a good conscience, by the resurrection of Christ. The outward baptisme without the inward, is not the marke of Gods childe, but the marke of the foole that makes a vow, and afterward breakes it, Eccles. 5. 3.

Moreover, baptisme is not onely a signe of our Adoption, but also a seale thereof, and a meanes to convey it unto us: and for the better understanding of this point, and for a further clearing of the 27. verse, I will speake of the whole nature of baptisme. That which is to be delivered, I reduce to eight heads. I. the name of baptisme, and the phrases. II. the matter. III. the forme. IV. the end. V. the efficacy of baptisme. VI. the necessity thereof. VII. the circumstances. VIII. the use.

Touching the name; Baptisme is taken six waies. First, it signifies the superstitious washings of the Pharisies, who bound themselves to the baptismes or washings of cups and pots, Mar. 7. 4. Secondly, it signifies the washings appointed by God in the Ceremoniall Law, Heb. 9. 10. Thirdly, it signifies that washing by water which serves to seale the covenant of the new Testament, Mat. 28. 19. Fourthly, it signifies by a metaphor, any grievous crosse or calamity. Thus the passion of Christ, is called his baptisme, Luk. 12. 50. fifthly, it signifies the bestowing of extraordinary gifts of the holy Ghost, and that by imposition of hands of the Apostles, Act. 1. 5. and 11. 16. Lastly, it signifies the whole Ecclesiasticall ministery. Thus Apollos is said to teach the way of the Lord, knowing nothing but the baptisme (that is, the doctrine) of John, Act. 18. 25. In the third sense is baptisme taken in this place, when Paul saith, ye are all baptized into Christ.

The phrases used in Scripture of baptisme, are strange in reason: and therefore they are to bee explained. Here it is said, To be baptized into Christ, put on Christ. The reason of this speech is three-fold. The first is this: the washing of the body with water is an outward signe to represent to our eies and minde, the inward washing, and our union or conjunction with Christ: therefore they that are baptised, are said to put on Christ. The second reason is, because the washing by water, seals unto us our inward ingrafting into Christ: for as certainly as the body is washed with water; so certainly are they that beleeve ingrafted into Christ. The third reason of the speech is, because baptisme is, after a sort, an instrument whereby our insition into Christ, and fellowship with him is effected. For in the right and lawfull use of baptisme, God according to his owne promise ingrafts them into Christ that beleeve: and the inward washing is conferred with the outward washing. For these causes they that are washed with water in baptisme, are said to put on Christ. In the same manner must other phrases be understood, as when it is said, that baptisme saveth, 1 Pet. 3. 21. that men must be baptized for the remission of sinnes, Act. 22. 16. that we are buried by baptisme into the death of Christ, Rom. 6. 4.

The second point concernes the matter of baptisme. Here I consider three things, the signe, the thing signified, the analogy of both. The signe is partly the element of water, Act. 8. 36. and partly the rite by divine institution appertaining to the element, which is the sacramentall use of it in washing of the body: & these 2. water, and external washing of the body, are the full & complete signe of baptisme.

Here a question may be made: whether washing of the body in baptisme, must be by dipping, or sprinkling? Answ. In hot countries, and in the baptisme of men of yeares, dipping was used, and that by the Apostles: and to this Paul alludes, Rom. 6. 3. and dipping doth more fully represent our spirituall washing, than sprinkling. Nevertheless it is cold countries, and in the baptisme of infants new borne, sprinkling is to be used, and not dipping in respect of their health and life. For the rule is, Necessity and charity dispense with the Ceremoniall lawes. Upon this ground, David did eat the shewbread: circumcision was not alwayes the eighth day, as appears by the Israelites in the wilderness: and for the same cause in these countries dipping may be omitted, though otherwise a sacramentall rite. And it must be remembred, that baptising signifies not only that washing which is by diving of the body, but also that which is by sprinkling.

The thing signified, or the substance of baptisme, is Christ himselfe our Mediator, as he gave himselfe to wash and cleanse us. Thus Paul saith, that he cleanseth his Church by the washing of water, Eph. 5. 6.

The Analogie, or proportion of both, is on this manner. Water resembles Christ crucified, with all his merits. Saint John saith, The blood of Christ cleanseth us from all our sinnes, 1 Joh. 1. 7. that is, the merit and efficacie of Christ crucified freeth us from our sinnes, and from the guilt and punishment thereof. Externall washing of the body resembles inward washing by the spirit, which stands in justification and sanctification, 1 Cor. 6. 11. Titus 3. 5. The dipping of the body, signifies mortification, or fellowship with Christ in his death: the staying under the water, signifies the burial of sinne: and the comming out of the water, the resurrection from sinne, to newnesse of life, Rom. 6. 3, 4.

The third point concernes the Forme of baptisme, Matth. 28. 19. Goe teach all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, &c. I explane the words thus: Marke, first it is said, Teach them, that is, make them my disciples, by calling them to beleeve, and to repent. Here wee are to consider the order which God observes in making with man the covenant in baptisme. First of all, hee eals men by his word, and commands them to beleeve and repent: when they begin to beleeve and repent, then in the second place God makes his promise of mercy and forgiveneesse: and thirdly, he seales his promise by baptisme. This divine order Christ signifieth when he saith, make them disciples: and it was alwaies observed of God. Before hee made any covenant with Abraham, and before he sealed it by circumcision, hee saith to him, Walke before me and be upright, Gen. 17. 1. And of his seed he saith, they must first doe righteousnesse and judgement, and then he will bring upon them all that he hath spoken, Gen. 18. 19. To the Israelites he saith, that they must turne and obey, and then he will make all his promises and covenant: good, Deu. 30. 1, 6. and Isa. 1. 16, 17, 19. To the Jewes Peter saith, Repent first, and then they shall be baptized for the remission of sinnes, Act. 2. 38, 42. And Philip said to the Eunuch, If thou beleevest with all thy heart, thou maiest be baptized, Act. 8. 37.

The use. By this order wee see, that the commandement to beleeve and to repent, is more large and generall than the promise of mercie in Christ. For the commandement is given to all hearers to turne and beleeve, and the promise is made onely to such hearers as doe indeed turne and beleeve: therefore it is a fallhood to imagine that the promise of salvation belongs generally to all mankinde.

Againe, by this order it appeareth, that Repentance belongs to baptisme: and it is one of the first things that are required: and therefore it is folly to make repentance a distinct meanes of salvation, and a distinct Sacrament from baptisme.

Thirdly, if it be demanded, why so many persons that have beene baptized, live for all this, as if they had not beene baptized, in the common sinnes of the world, like prophane Esaus: and yet doe comfort themselves in their baptisme? Answ. They doe not know and consider the order which God used in covenanting with them in baptisme: but they deale preposterously, overslipping the commandement of repenting and beleeving, and in the first place lay hold of Gods promise made to them in baptisme. This is the cause of so much prophanenesse in the world.

Againe, there bee many persons that have beene baptized, who nevertheless cannot abide to heare and read the word of God: and the reason is, because they observe not the order of their baptisme, first of all to become disciples, and then to lay hold of the promises of God.

They likewise are to be blamed, that bring up their youth in ignorance. For they are baptized upon condition that they shall become disciples of Christ, when they come to yeares of discretion. And they are by this meanes barred from all the mercies of God: for we must as good disciples obey the commandement, that bids us turne and beleeve, before we can have any benefit or profit by any of the promises of God.

Lastly, we are here taught in the working of our salvation, to keepe the order of God, which he hath set downe unto us in baptisme, which is, first of all to turne unto God, according to all his lawes: and secondly, upon our conversion to lay hold on the promises of God, and the confirmation thereof by the Sacraments. Thus shall wee finde comfort in the promises of God, and have true fellowship with God, if wee begin where he begins in making of his covenant with us, and end where he ends. And this we must doe not onely in the time of our first conversion, but also afterward in the time of distresse and affliction, and at such times as by frailtie wee fall and offend God. In a word, if for practice we alwayes keepe our selves to this order, wee shall finde true comfort in life and death.

It followes, Baptizing them into the name, or, in the name of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost. These words signifie: first, to baptize by the commandement and authoritie of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost: secondly, to baptize by and with the invocation of the name of the true God. Whatsoever you doe in word or deed, doe it in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that is, by the invocation of the name of Christ, Colos. 3. 17. Thirdly, to baptize in the name, &c. signifies to wash with water, in token that the party baptized hath the name of GOD named upon him, and that he is receiued into the houshold or family of God, as a childe of God, a member of Christ, and the temple of the holy Ghost. Thus Iacob saith in the adoption of Ephraim and Manasses, Let them be mine, and let my name be called upon them. Gen. 48. 5. 16. And Paul saith, that the Corinthians might not be named and distinguished by Paul, Cephas, Apollos, because they were not baptized into their names, but into the name of Christ, 1 Cor. 1. 13. And this I take to be the full sense of the phrase.

Here we see what is done in baptisme; the couenant of grace is solemnized betweene God and the party baptized. And in this couenant some actions belong to God, and some to the parties baptized. Gods actions are two. The first is, the making of promise of reconciliation, that is, of remission of sinnes, and life everlasting to them that are baptized and beleeve. The second is, the obligation or sealing of this promise: and that is twofold; outward, or inward. The outward seale is the washing by water: and this washing serues not to seale by nature, but by the institution of God, in these words, baptize them, &c. and therfore Paul saith, cleansing the Church by the washing of water in the word, Eph. 5. 26. The inward sealing is by the earnest of Gods spirit, Eph. 1. 13. The action of the party baptized, is a certaine stipulation or obligation, whereby he bindes himselfe to give homage to the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost. This homage stands in faith, whereby all the promises of God are beleeved, and in obedience to all his commandements. The signe of this obligation is, that the party baptized willingly yeelds himselfe to be washed with water.

It is not said, In the name of God, but in the name of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost: to teach us the right way to know & to acknowledge the true God. This knowledge stands in six points, all here expressed. The first is, that there is one God and no more. For though there bee three that are named, yet there is but one name, that is, one in authoritie, will, & worship, of all three. And elswhere, men are said to be baptized in the name of the Lord, Act. 10. 48. The second is, that this one true God is the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost. A mysterie unsearchable. The third, that these three are really distinct, so as the Father is first in order, the Sonne the second, and the holy Ghost, not the first or second, but the third. The fourth is, that they are all one in operation, Ioh. 5. 19. and specially in the act of reconciliation, or couenant making. For the Father sends the Sonne to bee our Redeemer: the Sonne workes in his owne person the worke of redemption: and the holy Ghost applies the same by his efficacie. The fifth is, that they are all one in worship: for the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost, are joyntly to be worshipped together, and God in them. The last is, that we are to know God, not as he is in himselfe, but as he hath revealed himselfe unto us in the covenant of Grace: and therefore we must acknowledge the Father to be our Father, the Sonne to be our Redeemer, the holy Ghost to be our comforter; and seeke to grow in the knowledge and experience of this.

It may bee demanded, whether baptisme may not bee administred in the name of Christ alone, or in the name of God, without mention of the persons in the Godhead? Ans. No. For the true forme of baptisme is here prescribed. If it be said, that Peter bids them of Jerusalem, repent and be baptized into the name of Christ, Act. 2. 38. I answer, that Peters intent in that place is, to set downe not the forme of baptisme, but the end and scope thereof, which is, that we may attaine to true fellowship with Christ.

The fourth point is, concerning the ends of baptisme, which are foure. The first is, that baptisme serues to be a pledge unto us in respect of our weaknesse, of all the graces and mercies of God, and specially of our union with Christ, of remission of sins, and of mortification. Secondly, it serues to be a signe of Christian profession before the world: and therfore it is called the stipulation or interrogation of a good conscience, 1 Pet. 3. 21. Thirdly, it serues to bee a meanes of our first entrance or admission into the visible Church. Lastly, it is a meanes of unitie. Reade Ephes. 4. 5: 1 Cor. 12. 13.

The fifth point concernes the efficacy of baptisme. Of which there be foure necessarie questions. The first is, whether the Efficacy of baptisme extend it selfe to all sinnes, and to the whole life of man? For answer, I will set downe what we teach, and what the Papists. We teach, that the use of baptisme inlargeth it selfe to the whole life of man, and that it takes away all sins past, present, and to come: one caution remembred, that the partie baptised, stand to the order of baptisme, which is, to turne unto God, and to beleeve in Christ, and so to continue by a continuall renovation of faith and repentance, as occasion shall bee offered. Reasons may be these. First, the Scripture speakes of them that had long before beene baptized, and that in the time present, baptisme saveth, 1 Pet. 3. 21. and ye are buried by baptisme into the death of Christ, Rom. 6. 4. And in the future tense it is said, he that beleeveth and is baptised shall be saved. And Paul saith, that the Church is cleansed with the washing of water, that it may be presented glorious and without spot unto God, Eph. 5. 26. And all this shewes that baptisme hath the same efficacie after, which it had before the administration thereof. Secondly, the covenant of grace is everlasting, Isa. 54. 10. Mos. 2. 19. and the covenant is the foundation or substance of baptisme: therefore baptisme is not to be tied to any time: but it must have his force so long as the covenant is of force. And this appeares peares by the example of the Galatians, who are now fallen away to another Gospell after their baptisme, and yet are instructed and directed by their baptisme. Lastly, it hath beene the doctrine of the ancient Church, that all sins are done away by baptisme, even sins to come.

The doctrine of the Papists is, that baptisme takes away all sinnes that goe before the administration thereof: and that sinnes after baptisme are not taken away by baptisme, but by the Sacrament of penance. But the doctrine is erroneous, as may appeare by the arguments which they use for it.

Argum. first. Circumcision had no vertue to the administration thereof, for the abolishing of sinne. Therefore neither hath baptisme. Ans. Circumcision had. And this appeares, because the Prophets put the Jewes in minde of their circumcision, when they fell away from God, bidding them to circumcise the foreskin of their hearts, Jerem. 4. 4.

Argum. second. The Apostles used to call them that sinned after baptisme, to confession of sinne and repentance, or penance, Act. 8. 21. 1 Joh. 1. 9. Ans. This makes for us: for in so doing they bring men to their baptisme, and to the order set downe there, which is, that the party baptized must first of all turne to God, and beleeve in Christ: and there is no new order set downe afterward, but only a renewing of this first baptismall order, both in the ministerie of the word, and in the supper of the Lord. And whereas they make a distinction of penance the vertue, and penance the Sacrament, placing the vertue before and after baptisme, and the Sacrament onely after; for this they have no word of God.

Argum. third. If a man be inlightned, that is, baptised, and then fall againe, he cannot be renewed by repentance, which is in baptisme, Heb. 6. 6. Ans. The text speakes not of them that fall after baptisme, but of them that fall away by an universall apostasie, denying Christ. For it is said, v. 7. that they crucifie Christ againe, that is, crucifie Christ crucified, and so make a mocke of him, and tread under foot the bloud of Christ, Heb. 10. 29. Againe, the text speakes not particularly of repentance in baptisme, but of all repentance whatsoever; yea, of repentance after baptisme. For there is no place for repentance where Christ is renounced.

Argum. fourth. Penance (secunda Hieronymi) saith a second table after shipwracke. Ans. Repentance indeed is a second table or boord, whereby a sinner fallen from his baptisme returnes againe to it, and so comes to the haven of everlasting happinesse. Thus then wee see that baptisme is the true Sacrament of repentance: for repentance pertaines to the inward baptisme.

The use. If baptisme serve for the whole life of man, then if thou be in any miserie or distresse, have recourse to thy baptisme, and there shalt thou finde thy comfort, namely, that God is thy God if thou truly turne and beleeve in him. Secondly, remember every day the obligation of homage, wherewith thou hast bound thy selfe to God: specially in thy temptations remember it: and see thou stand to it, and make it good.

The second question is, whether baptisme abolish Originall sinne, or no? The answer of the Papist is, that it doth; so as in the partie baptized there remaineth nothing that God may justly hate; and therefore he saith, that Originall sinne after baptisme, ceaseth to be sinne properly. Wee reach, and are to hold, that the perfect and intire baptisme (in which the outward and inward baptisme are joyned together) abolisheth the punishment of sinne, and the guilt, that is, the obligation to punishment, and the fault: yet not simply, but in two respects; first, in respect of imputation, because God doth not impute Originall sinne to them that are in Christ: secondly, in respect of dominion; because Originall sinne reigneth not in them that are regenerate. Nevertheless, after baptisme, it remaines in them that are baptized, and is still, and that properly, sin. Paul saith, Rom. 7. 20. If I doe that I would not, it is no more I that doe it, but sin that dwelleth in me doth it. Here marke, Paul calls concupiscence in himselfe after regeneration, sinne; and that properly: because he saith it is the same that maketh men to sinne. And Coloss. 3. 5. he saith, Mortifie your earthly members: and among the rest he nameth, evill concupiscence. And to the Ephesians 4. 22. Be ye renewed in the spirit of your minds. Therefore after baptisme some portions remaine still of the old man, or of originall sin. Saint Iohn saith, 1 Iohn 1. 8. If we say we have no sin, we deceive our selves. Answer is made, that this is spoken of veniall or small sinnes: but how can they be small sinnes that are to bee washed away with the bloud of Christ, as he saith, vers. 7? And if these words bee spoken of infants (as they are) then must concupiscence be a sinne in them: for they have no actuall sinnes. Lastly Christ saith, Joh. 13. 10. He that is all washed must have his feet (that is, his carnall affections) washed. Here observe two things. One, that defilements of sinne remaine in them that are washed. The second, that they are after the first washing, to bee done away by Christ, and not by the acts of our penance.

The grounds of Popish doctrine in this point are two. The first is this. They make three degrees of Concupiscence. The first is, the pronenesse in the flesh to rebell against the law of the minde, or the pronenesse to evill. The second stands in the first motions to sinne, which goe before consent of will. The third stands in acts of lust joyned with consent of will. The third, they say, is forbidden in the morall law, which forbids and condemnes dernes voluntary concupiscence: and the two first are not. Because (as they speake) concupiscence it selfe with the first motions are not in mans power: and therefore they are rather to bee termed defects or infirmities, than sinnes: and that men are no more to be blamed for them than for the diseases of their bodies. Answ. The doctrine is false: for it is an evident truth that Concupiscence with the first motions thereof to evill, is condemned in the Morall law. It is a Principle in expounding the Law: where any actuall sinne is forbidden, there all causes, occasions, and furtherances thereof, are likewise forbidden. Therefore considering actuall concupiscence joyned with consent, is forbidden in the law, Originall concupiscence with the first motions thereof, being causes of the former, are likewise forbidden. And Paul saith, hee had not knowne Lust to be sinne, unlesse the law had said, Thou shalt not lust, Rom. 7.7. Now he was a Doctor of the law, and knew that lust with consent was a sinne: for thus much the light of nature teacheth: therefore the law speakes of an higher degree of lust, namely, of lust going before consent.

Aug. de nupt. & concup. l. c. 33. ad Bon. l. 2. c. 13.

Rom. 7. 17.

The second ground is this. When sinne is remitted, it doth not make men guilty, but ceaseth to be a fault: Originall sinne therefore ceaseth to bee sinne after baptisme. Answer. Though actuall guilt be taken away, yet potentiall guilt remaineth, namely, an aptnesse in Originall sinne, to make men guilty: and though it be not the fault of this or that person, yet it is a fault in nature, or as it is considered in it selfe.

The use. If originall sinne remaine after baptisme to the death, then we must humble our selves, and use to the very death; the plea of mercy and pardon, denying our selves, and resting on Christ.

Againe, if persons baptized bee sinners to the death, it may bee demanded, what difference there is betweene the godly and ungodly? Answ. In them that are regenerate, there is a sorrow for their inward corruptions, and for their sins past, with a detestation of them: and withall there is a purpose in them to sin no more, and with this purpose there is joyned an endevour to please God in all his commandements: so as if they doe sinne, they can say with good conscience, that they sinned against their purpose and resolution. This cannot the ungodly man doe.

The third point is, how baptisme confers grace? Answ. It confers grace, because it is a meanes to give and exhibit to the beleeving minde Christ with his benefits; and this it doth by his signification. For it serves as a particular and infallible certificate to assure the party baptized, of the forgivenesse of his sinnes, and of his eternall salvation. And whereas the Minister in the name of God applies the promise of mercy to him that is baptized, it is indeed as much as if God should

A have made a particular promise to him. In this regard baptisme may be well said to conferre grace, as the Kings letters are said to save the life of the malefactor, when they doe but signifie to him and others, that the Kings pleasure is to shew favour. Againe, baptisme may be said to confer grace, because the outward washing of the body is a token or pledge of the grace of God: and by this pledge faith is confirmed, which is an instrument to apprehend or receive the grace of God. And this confirmation is made by a kinde of reasoning in the minde, on this manner: Hee that useth the signe aright, shall receive the thing signified: I (saith the party baptized, being of yeares) use the signe aright in faith and repentance: therefore I shall receive the thing
B signified, remission of sinnes, and life everlasting. A king saith to his subject; Hee that brings the head of such a traytor, shall have a thousand pounds. Well, the head of the foresaid traytor is cut off: and hee that hath the head may say, Here is a thousand pounds, or this will bring me a thousand pounds, because it is unto him as a pledge upon the kings word of the reward of a thousand pounds. And so is the washing in baptisme an infallible pledge to him that beleeves, of the C pardon of his sinnes. Thus doe the Sacraments conferre grace, and no otherwise. One reason for many may bee this. The Word of God conferres grace (for it is the power of God to salvation to them that beleeve) and this it doth by signifying the will of God, by the eare to the mind: now every Sacrament is the Word of God made visible to the eye: the Sacrament therefore conferres grace by vertue of his signification, and by reason it is a pledge by the appointment of God, of his mercy and goodnesse. It may be said, a Sacrament is not onely a signe and a seale, but also an instrument to convey the grace of God to us. Answ. It is not an instrument having the grace of God tyed unto it, or shut up in it; but an instrument to which grace is present by D assistance in the right use thereof: because in and with the right use of the Sacrament, God conferres grace; and thus is it an instrument, and no otherwise, that is, a morall and not a physicall instrument.

The doctrine of the Papist is, that the Sacrament conferres grace by the worke done; that is, that the outward action of the Minister conferres grace by his owne force, when the Sacrament is administred. And that it may confer grace, some say, that the said action hath vertue in it for this purpose, which passeth away when the action is ended: others say, it hath no vertue in it, but that Gods using of the action elevates it, and makes it able to conferre grace. But this doctrine is a fiction of the braine of man. Iohn the Baptist, Matth. 3.11. makes two baptisers, himselfe, and Christ; and hee distinguisheth their actions: his owne action is, to wash with water; and

and the action of Christ is, to wash with the holy Ghost. This distinction hee would not have made, if he by the washing of water had conferred the holy Ghost. Paul saith, Christ sanctifieth his Church by the washing of water, through the word, Eph. 5.26. Baptisme therefore doth not conferre grace, because the body is washed with water: but because when it is washed, the word of promise is beleeved and received. The Apostles are called fellow-workers with God, 1 Cor. 3.9. and yet in the worke of regeneration, and in giving life, they are not any thing, verse. 7. Peter saith directly, that the washing away of the filth of the flesh doth not save, but the stipulation that a good conscience makes to God, 1 Pet. 3.21. The worke of B creation is from God immediately and only: now regeneration is a worke of creation: and therefore it is of God immediately, and not immediately from the Sacrament, and mediately from God. The flesh of Christ is elevated and exalted above the condition of all creatures: nevertheless vertue to give life, is not in the flesh of Christ, but in the Godhead: much lesse then shall the Sacraments have vertue in them to conferre grace. Faith is said to justifie, yet not by his owne vertue: for it doth not cause our justification, but serves as a meanes to apprehend it, when it is caused by God: how then shall the Sacraments cause
C justification? Lastly, if the outward washing of the body bee elevated above his naturall condition, in the administration of baptisme, then so oft as the outward element is used in any Sacrament, there is a miracle wrought: and Ministers of Sacraments are workers of miracles, which may not be said.

Againe, their doctrine is erroneous, in that they teach, that the outward act in the Sacrament performed by the Minister, conferres grace, where there is no gift of faith to receive that which is conferred, contrarie to that saying; Iohn 1.12. As many as received him, he gave this power to be the Sonnes of God. Indeed they say, there must be faith and repentance to dispose the party: but this disposition serves onely to take away impediments, and not to inable us to receive that which God
D giveth.

The use. Wee must not thinke it sufficient that wee come to the Church, heare Gods word, and pray, contenting our selves in the worke done. For thus shall wee deceive our selves: but in doing these acts of religion, we must in our hearts turne unto God, and by faith imbrace his promises: otherwise the best actions we doe shall be unprofitable unto us, Heb. 4.2.

Againe, if the using of the element in the Sacrament doe not conferre grace, then bee altered the charmes and spells, be the words never so good, have no vertue in them to doe us good but by a diabolicall operation.

The last question is, whether baptisme imprint a Character or marke in the soule,

A which is never blotted out? Ans. In Scripture there is a two-fold marke of distinction, one visible, the other invisible. Of the first kinde, was the bloud of the paschall lambe, in the first passeover: for by it the first borne of the Israelites were marked, when the first borne of the Ægyptians were slaine. Of this kind is baptisme: for by it Christian people are distinguished from Jewes, Turkes, and infidels. The invisible marke is two-fold. The first, is the eternall election of God, 2 Tim. 2.19. The foundation of God standes sure, and hath this seale, The Lord knowes who are his. By vertue of this, Christ saith, I know my sheepe, Ioh. 10. And by this the Elect of all nations are marked, Apoc. 7. and 9. The second is the gift of regeneration, which is nothing else but the imprinting of the image of God in the soules of men: and by this beleevers are said to be sealed, Eph. 1.13. 2 Cor. 1.22. And baptisme is a meanes to see this marke in us; because it is the laver of regeneration.

The Papists have devised another worke, which they call the Indeleble character: and they make it to bee a distinct thing from regeneration: and they say, it is imprinted in the soules of all men, good and bad, and remaines in them when they are condemned. What this marke should be they cannot tell; some make it a qualitie; some a relation; but indeed there is no Scripture for it, the C truth is, it is a meere fiction of the braine of man.

The sixth point to be handled concernes the Necessity of Baptisme. Here we must put difference betweene the covenant of grace, and baptisme, which is the confirmation or seale of the covenant. To make covenant with God, and to be in the said covenant, is absolutely necessary to salvation: for unlesse God be our God, and we the servants of God, we cannot be saved.

Baptisme it selfe is necessarie in part: first, in respect of the commandement of God, who hath injoyned us to use it: secondly, in respect of our weaknesse, who have need of all helps that may confirme our faith. Yet baptisme is not simply necessary to salvation: for D the want of baptisme (when it cannot be had) doth not condemne; but the contempt of it when it may be had: and the contempt is pardonable, if men repent afterward: for the children of beleeving parents are borne holy, 1 Cor. 7.14. and theirs is the kingdome of God: and therefore if they die before baptisme, they are saved. The theefe upon the crosse, and many holy Martyrs have died without baptisme, and are in the kingdome of heaven.

It is objected, that the male childe, which is not circumcised, must (by Gods commandement) be cut off from the people of God, Gen. 17.14. and therefore he that is not baptized must also be cut off. Answ. The text is spoken and meant, not of infants, but of men of yeares, who being all their vncircumcised, despise the ordinance of God, and refuse to bee circumcised. And this appeares by the reason following: for he hath made my covenant void: now infants doe not this, but their parents, or men of yeares.

Secondly, the speech of Christ is objected, Ioh. 3.5. Except a man be borne of water and the holy Ghost, he cannot enter into the kingdome of God. Answ. Christ alludes to the washings of the old Testament, Exod. 30. 25. and withall gives an exposition of them, on this manner. Thou art a Pharisie and lovest much washing: but if thou wouldest enter into the kingdome of heaven, thou must be washed with cleane water, that is, borne anew by the holy Ghost. Againe, I answer, that if the words be meant of baptisme, they carry this sense. The kingdome of heaven doth not signifie life eternall, but the Church of the new Testament, and that in his visible estate, Mark. 9. 1. and baptisme makes men visible members of the Church, and regeneration by the spirit makes them true and lively members. Here then baptisme is made necessary, not in respect of eternall life, but in respect of our admission and entrance into the Church whereof it is now the onely meanes.

The seventh point is touching the Circumstances of baptisme, which are five. The first concernes the persons which are to administer baptisme, of whom I propound foure questions.

The first is, whether not onely Ministers of the word, but also lay-persons (as they are called) or meere private men, may administer baptisme? Answ. Ministers of the word only. For, to baptize is a part of the publike Ministery, Matth. 28.18. Goe teach all nations, baptizing them. And marke how preaching and baptizing are joyned together: and things which God hath joyned, no man may separate againe. Hee that must performe any part of the publike Ministery, must have a calling, Rom. 10.14. Heb. 5.5. but meere private persons have no calling to this businesse. And what lower is not of faith, is sinne: now the Administration of baptisme by private persons is without faith. For there is neither precept, nor first example for it in the Word of God.

The example of Zipporah alleaged, Exod. 4. who circumcised her childe. Answ. The example is many wayes discommendable. For she did it in the presence of her husband, when there was need; shee did it in haste, that she might have prevented her husband; shee did it in anger, for she cast the foreskin at the feet of Moses. And it seemes shee was no believer, but a meere Madianite. For shee condemned circumcision, when shee called her husband a mand of bloudy to vs [illegible] of the circumcision of the child, v. 26. and in this respect it seemes, Moses either put her away, or shee went away when he went downe to Egypt.

Againe, it is objected, that private persons may teach, and therefore baptize. Answ. Private teaching, and ministeriall teaching are distinct in kinde, as the authority of a master of a family is distinct in kinde from the authority of a Magistrate. A private person, as a father or master, when he teacheth the Word of God, he doth it by right of a master or father, and he is moved to doe it by the law of charitie: but Ministers when they teach, are moved to teach by speciall calling, and they doe it with authority, as Embassadors in the rooms and stead of Christ, 2 Cor. 5.21. Againe, though a private man might dispense the word alone: yet doth it not follow, that he may administer both the word and the seale thereof, both which are joyned in baptisme, and joyntly administred.

The second question is, whether baptisme administred by a wicked man, or an heretike, be indeed true baptisme? Answ. If the said party be admitted to stand in the roome of a true Pastor or Minister, and keepe the right forme in baptizing, according to the institution, it is true baptisme. The Scribes and Pharisies the chiefest Doctors of the Jewes, were not of the tribe of Levi, but of other tribes: and they were indeed, even the best of them, but heretikes and apostataes: and consequently to bee deposed and excommunicate: nevertheless, because they were in the place of good teachers, and sate in Moses chaire, that is, taught sundry points of Moses doctrine, therefore Christ saith, heare them, Matth. 23.1. And to this effect was the conclusion of the Churches in Africa, against Cyprian.

Upon the same ground the same answer is to bee made, if it be demanded, whether baptisme administred by him that cannot preach, bee of force or no? It were indeed to bee wished that all Ministers of holy things were preachers of the word: nevertheless, if such as preach not, stand in the rooms of lawfull Pastors, and keepe the forme of baptisme, it is baptisme indeed.

The third question is, whether an intention to baptize, be necessarie in him that baptiseth? Answ. If the word of Institution come to the Element, it is a Sacrament whatsoever the Ministers intend. Paul rejoyced that Christ was preached, though many preached him of envie or contention, intending no good, Phil. 1.16. And the Priest in the Masse pronouncing the words of consecration, if he intend not to consecrate (in Popish learning) there is no consecration: and thus the bread elevated is meere Bread, and not the body of Christ: and consequently the people adore not Christ, but an idole. The intention also of the minde is not necessarie, so he use the Institution be observed. And the efficacy of the Sacrament depends not on the will of man, but on the will of God.

The last question is, what is the duty of the Minister

Minister in baptising? Answ. He stands in the roome of God: and what he doth according to the Institution, it is as much as if God himselfe had done it with his owne hand from heaven. And therefore, when the Minister applieth water, (which is the signe and pledge of grace,) to the body, he doth withall apply the Promise of remission of sinnes and life everlasting to the party baptized. And that is as much as if God should say to the partie, calling him by his name. I freely give unto thee the pardon of thy sinnes, and life everlasting, upon condition thou keepe the order set downe in baptisme, which is, to turne unto me, and to beleeve in Christ. Here wee see a ground of speciall faith: for if God for his part by the hand of the Minister apply the promise of mercy unto every particular beleever: every particular beleever is againe by a speciall faith to receive the promise. Againe, the consideration of this which God hath done for us in baptisme, must move us seriously to turne unto him according to all his lawes, and by faith of our hearts to apprehend his mercifull promises, and to rest on them. For when God shall speake unto us particularly, and as it were assure us of his mercies with his owne hand and seale, wee must needs bee much moved and affected therewith.

The second circumstance is concerning the persons to be baptized: and they are all such as be in the Covenant, in likelihood, or in the judgement of charity. For the seale may not bee denyed to them that bring the tables of the covenant. And they are of two sorts; Men of yeares, and Infants.

Men of yeares that joyne themselves to the true Church, are to be baptized: yet before their baptisme, they are to make confession of their faith, and to promise amendment of life, Act. 2.38. and 10.38. And thus places of Scripture that require actuall faith, and amendment of life in them that are baptized, are to be understood of men of yeares.

Infants of beleeving parents are likewise to bee baptized. The grounds of their baptisme are these. First, the commandement of God, Matth. 28.18. Baptise all nations, &c. in which words, the baptisme of infants is prescribed. For the Apostles by vertue of this commission baptized whole families, Act. 16. 15. and 33. Againe, circumcision of Infants was commanded by God, Gen. 17.14. and Baptisme in the new Testament, succeeds in the roome of Circumcision, Col. 2.11. therefore baptisme of infants is likewise commanded. The second ground is this: Infants of beleeving parents, are in the covenant of grace: for this is the tenour of the covenant. I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed, Gen. 17.7. It may bee said, that this promise was made in this sort onely to Abraham, because he was to be the father of the faithfull. Answ. It pertaines to all beleeving parents. Exodus 20. God promiseth to shew mercy to thousands of them that love him. Act. 2. v. 39. Peter saith to the Jewes that heard him preach, The promises belong to you, and to your children, Paul saith, If the parents beleeve, the children are holy, 1 Cor. 7. 14. If holy, then are they in the Covenant: now they are holy, because we are in the judgement of Christian charity, to esteeme them all as regenerate and sanctified, secret judgements (in the meane season) left to God. Now then, because infants are in the covenant, they are to be baptized. For this is the reason of Saint Peter: To whom the promises belong, to them belongeth baptisme: but to you and your children belong the promises: therefore you and your children are to be baptized, Act. 2. 38. 39.

It may be objected, that wee cannot tell, whether infants bee indeed the children of God, or no: & if they be not children of God, we may not baptize them. Answ. The same may be said of men of yeares: for we know not whether they bee indeed the children of God. And therefore we may by the like reason exclude them from all Sacraments. Againe, wee are to presume (in all likelihood) that infants of beleeving parents, are the children of God, because in their conception and birth, God begins to manifest his election: shewing himselfe a God, not only to the parents, but also to their seed.

Secondly, it is objected, that infants have no faith; and consequently, that baptisme is unprofitable unto them. Answ. Some thinke, they have faith, as they have regeneration, that is, the inclination or seed of faith. Others say, that the faith of the parents is also the faith of their children: because the parents by their faith, receive the promise of God, both for themselves and their children: and thus to be borne in the Church of beleeving parents is in stead of the profession of faith. To this second opinion I rather incline, because it is the ancient and received doctrine of the Church.

Thirdly, it is alleaged, that infants know not what is done, when they are baptised. Answ. For all this, baptisme hath his use in them: for it is a seale of the covenant, and a meanes to admit them into the fellowship of the visible Church, whereof for right they are members. A father makes a purchase for himselfe and his children: at the time of the sealing the children know not what is done; and yet the purchase is not made in vaine for them.

It may be demanded, whether the children of Turkes and Jewes are to be baptized? Anf. No: because the parents are forth of the covenant.

Secondly, it is demanded, whether the children of professed Papists, are to be baptized. Answ. The parents are persons baptized in the name of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost. And though the Papacie be not the Church

Church of God, yet is the Church of God hidden in the Papacie, and to be gathered out of it: and for this cause baptisme remaines still in the Church of Rome. For this cause I thinke, that infants of professed Papists may be baptized, two cautions observed: the first, that the foresaid parents desire this baptisme: the second, that there be sureties which ptomise the education of the children in the true faith.

Thirdly, it may bee demanded, whether the children of wicked Christians, that is, of such as hold in judgement true religion, and deny it in their lives, may be baptized? Answ. They may: for all without exception, that were borne of circumcised Jewes, (whereof many were wicked) were circumcised. And wee must not onely regard the next parents, but also the ancestours: of whom it is said, If the root be holy, the branches are holy, Rom. 11. Upon this ground, children borne in fornication may be baptized, so be it, there bee some to answer for them beside their parents. And there is no reason, that the wickednesse of the parent should prejudice the childe in things pertaining to life eternall.

Lastly, it may be demanded, whether the children of parents excommunicate, may bee baptized? Answ. Yea, if there be any beside the parents to answer for the childe. For the parents after excommunication remaine still (for Right) members of the Church, having still a right to the kingdome of heaven: out of which they are not cast absolutely; but with condition, unlesse they repent: and in part; that is, in respect of communion, or use of their liberty, but not in respect of right or title: even as a free man of a corporation imprisoned, remaines a free man, though for the time he hath no use of his liberty.

The third circumstance concernes the time. Here one question may bee moved: How oft baptisme is to be administred? Ans. But once: for the efficacy of baptisme extends it selfe to the whole life of man: and we are but once borne againe, and once ingrafted into Christ. Here let it be observed, that the gift of regeneration is never utterly extinguished: for if a man bee the second time borne againe, he must be baptized againe and againe: because baptisme is the Sacrament of initiation. It may be said, that a man may remaine still ingrafted into Christ, and by his owne wickednesse make himselfe a dead member. I answer, that all the members of the mysticall body of Christ, are living members. The spirituall temple, is made of living stones, 1 Pet. 2. 5. And marke what Paul saith, All the body of Christ increaseth with the increasing of God, Col. 2. 19. and Eph. 2. 21. Beleevers are of the bone and flesh of Christ: now there is no part of the bone and flesh of Christ that dieth.

The last circumstance is touching the place: and that is, the publike assembly or congregation of the people of God. Because baptisme is a part of the publike ministery, and a dependance upon the preaching of the word of God. Secondly, the whole congregation is to make profit by the exercise of the institution of baptisme: and Lastly, the said congregation is by prayer to present the infant baptized unto God, and to intreat for the salvation thereof, the prayer of many being most effectuall.

The Eighth and last point followes, concerning the use of baptisme. And first of all, our baptisme must put us in minde, that wee are admitted and received into the family of God: and consequently, that we must carry our selves as the servants of God. And that wee may doe so indeed, wee must divide our lives into two parts; the life past, and life to come. Touching the life that is past, we must performe three things. The first is Examination, whereby we must call our selves to an account for all our sinnes, even from the cradle: the second is Confession, whereby we must with sorrowfull hearts bewaile and acknowledge the same sinnes in the presence of God, accusing and condemning our selves for them. The third is Deprecation, whereby we are to intreat the Lord in the name of Christ, and that most instantly from day to day till we receive a comfortable answer, in the peace of conscience and joy of the holy Ghost.

And for the life to come, there must bee two things in us: the first is, the purpose of not sinning: and it must be a lively and distinct purpose daily renewed in us, even as we renew our dayes: for as wee may say, if wee sinne it is against our purpose and resolution. The second is, an endevour to performe new obedience according to all the commandements of God. These things if wee doe, wee shall shew our selves to bee the servants of God. And of all these things, baptisme must bee (as it were) a daily sermon unto us: and so oft to thinke on them, as oft as we thinke or speake of our names given us in baptisme. This is the doctrine Paul, who teacheth us that we must be conformable to the death and resurrection of Christ, because we have beene baptized, Rom. 6. 3, 4.

Againe, our baptisme into the name of the Father, &c. must teach us, that we must learne to know and acknowledge God aright; that is, to acknowledge him to be our God, and father in Christ: to acknowledge his presence and therfore to walke before him; to acknowledge his providence, and therefore to cast our care on him; to acknowledge his goodnesse and mercy, in the pardon and free forgivenesse of our sinnes.

Thirdly, our baptisme must be unto us a store-house of all comfort in the time of our need. If thou bee tempted by the Devill, oppose against him thy baptisme, in which God hath promised and sealed unto thee the pardon of thy sinnes, and life everlasting.

If

If thou be troubled with doubtings and weakenesse of faith, consider that God hath given thee an earnest and pledge of his loving kindnesse to thee. We use often to looke upon the wils of our fathers and grand-fathers, that we may be resolved in matters of doubt: and so, often looke upon the will of thy heavenly father, sealed and delivered to thee in thy baptisme, and thou shalt the better bee resolved in the middest of all thy doubts. If thou lye under any crosse or calamity, have recourse to thy baptisme, in which God promised to be thy God, and of this promise hee will not faile thee.

Lastly, if a man would bee a Student in Divinity, let him learne and practise his baptisme. Commentaries are needfull to the study of the Scriptures: and the best commentary to a mans owne selfe is his owne baptisme. For if a man have learned to know ought, and to practise his owne baptisme, he shall the better bee able to understand the whole: and without this helpe, the Scriptures themselves shall be as a riddle unto us.

The fourth point whereby the gift of adoption is described, is the ground thereof, in these words, To have put on Christ: and all are one in Christ. The phrase which Paul useth is borrowed from the custome of them that were baptized in the Apostles dayes, who put off their garments, when they were to be baptized, and put on new garments after baptisme. To put on a garment, is to apply it to the body, and to use or weare it. And to put on Christ, is to be joyned neerely to Christ, and to have spirituall fellowship with him. Here then the foundation of our adoption is in two things, our union with Christ, and our communion with him. Of which we are somewhat to bee advertised, for the better understanding of the text.

The union with Christ is a worke of God whereby all beleevers are made one with Christ. Here two questions are to be demanded. The first, in what respect, or for what cause are they said to bee one with Christ? Answer. They are not one with him in conceit or imagination: for this conjunction is in truth a reall conjunction, Ioh. 17. vers. 22. Christ prayes, That all beleevers may bee one with him, as he is one with the Father. Secondly, they are not one barely by consent of heart and affection: for thus all families and friends are one: and they of Jerusalem are said thus to be of one heart and minde, Act. 4. 32. Thirdly, they are not one in substance, for so many beleevers as there are, so many distinct persons are there: and every one of them distinct from the person of Christ: and the substance of the Godhead of Christ is incommunicable: and the flesh of Christ is in heaven, and shall there abide untill the last judgement: whereupon it cannot be mixed or compounded with our substances. Lastly, beleevers are not one with Christ by transfusion of the properties and qualities of the Godhead or manhood unto us. It may be said, how then are they one with him? I answer, by one and the same spirit dwelling in Christ and in all the members of Christ, 1 Cor. 6. 17 He that cleaveth to the Lord, is one spirit. Paul saith in this sense, Eph. 2. 14. that Christ maketh the two distinct nations of Jewes and Gentiles one new man. Saint Iohn saith, that Christ dwels in us, and we in him by the spirit, 1 Iohn 3. v. 24. For the better conceiving of this, suppose a man whose head lies in Italy, his armes in Germany and in Spaine, his feet in England: suppose further, that one and the same soule extends it selfe to all the foresaid parts, and quickens them all: they are all now become one, in respect of one and the same soule, and all concurre as members to one and the same body: even so, all the Saints in heaven, and all beleevers upon earth, having one and the same spirit of Christ dwelling in them, are all one in Christ.

The second question is, how are all beleevers made one with Christ? Ans. By a donation on Gods part, whereby Christ is given unto us, and by a receiving on our part. The donation is whereby Christ is made ours for right, so as a man may say truly, Christ is mine with all his benefits. Of this donation 4. things are to bee observed. The first is, that Christ himselfe and whole Christ is given to us: for here we are said to put on Christ. Here a distinction must be observed: the Godhead of Christ is given to us, not in respect of substance which is incommunicable, but only in respect of operation. But the very flesh or manhood of Christ is really given to the beleeving heart, Ioh. 6. 54, 56. By it we receive eternall life from the Godhead, and by it God is joyned to man, and man to God. The 2. is, that Christ gives his merit and satisfaction to them that beleeve. And this satisfaction imputed, is the cover whereby our sins are covered, Psal. 32. 1. and the white robes dipped in the bloud of Christ, Rev. 7. 14. Thirdly, Christ gives the efficacy of his spirit to make us conformable to himselfe in holinesse and newnesse of life: and thus he makes us put off the old man, and put on the new man, created after God in righteousnesse and holinesse, Eph. 4. 24. The 4. is, that the Word preached and the Sacraments are (as it were) the hand of God, whereby he exhibits and gives Christ unto us with all his benefits.

Of our receiving of Christ given by God, two things must be observed: one is, that we must there receive Christ, where God offers and gives him, that is, in the Word and Sacraments. The second is, that faith is our hand, whereby wee receive Christ, and this receiving is done by a supernaturall act of the mind, whereby we beleeve Christ with his benefits to be ours, Ioh. 1. 12. Thus we see how we are one with Christ, and Christ with us.

Communion with Christ is, when we have, possesse, and enjoy Christ and his benefits: and that is partly in this life, and fully in the life to come. Of this communion speakes Salomon at large in the Song of Songs, and David, Psal. 45.

The use. In that we are to put on Christ, we are put in minde to consider our fearefull nakednesse. What is that? Answ. There is a nakednes of creation, and a nakednesse following the fall. The nakednes of creation is when the body (without all covering) is in health, full of glory and majesty in respect of other creatures. Nakednesse arising of the fall of man, is either inward, or outward. Inward, is the want of the Image of God, the want of innocency, of good conscience, of the favour of God, and affiance in him. For these are (as it were) the coverings of the soule. Outward nakednesse is, when the body being uncovered, is full of deformity and shame. Now that inward nakednesse of heart is noted as a speciall evil, Gen. 3.7. Exod. 32.25 Pro. 29.18. Rev. 3.17. we must labour to see and feele this nakednesse in our selves: for by it we are deformed and odious in the eye of God.

Secondly, we are here put in minde to have a speciall care of the trimming and garnishing of our soule. And for this cause wee must put on the Lord Iesus, Rom. 13.14. And that is done two wayes: First, by uncovering our nakednesse before God, and by praying him to cover it. To uncover our shame, is the way to cover it, Psalme 32.1,2,3. The second way is to subject our selves to the word and spirit of God, and to bee conformable to Christ both in his life and death. It stands us in hand thus to put on Christ. For the King of heaven hath long invited us to the marriage of his Sonne: wee have yeelded our selves to be his guests: and there is a time when the King will take a survey of all his guests, whether they have the wedding garment, which is Christ himselfe: and they which are not glad with this robe, shall bee cast into utter darknesse. Wee are as naked infants expoted to death, Ezech. 16. 7. The merit and obedience of Christ is as swadling cloathes and swadling bands. If wee would then live, wee must lap and unfold our selves in them. The rather I speake this, because in these dayes men and women are intoxicated with a spirituall drunkennesse, or rather madnesse, whereby they are alwaies tampering and trifling about their bodies, and let their soules lie naked. It may be said, we have all put on Christ in baptisme. I answer: wee have had in England peace and prosperity these 43. yeares; and wee have lived all this while, as it were in the warme sunne-shine: and therefore many of us (no doubt) have worne this garment very loosely.

Thirdly, there is a great temptation arising upon the consideration of our owne indignity. For when our sinnes come to our remembrance, they drive us from the presence of God, and make us that wee dare not pray. Now the remedy is this. We must come cloathed with Christ into the presence of God: we may not come in our owne names, but we must come in his name, and present the merit of Christ unto the Father, even as if wee were one and the same person with him: thus shall we be accepted.

Fourthly, it may bee demanded, what wee must doe for our selves in the time of plague, famine, sword? Wee must put on Christ, then shall wee walke in safety in all dangers. This garment serves not onely for a covering of our shame, but also for protection, Isa. 4.6. And if wee bee taken away in any common judgement, being cloathed with Christ, there is no more hurt done to us than to him: and he carrieth us in his breast, as if wee were part of his bowels.

Lastly, though we be cloathed with Christ in baptisme, yet wee must further desire to be cloathed upon, 2 Cor. 5.4. In this life wee are clad with the justice of Christ, 1 Corin. 1.30. this is one garment. In the life to come, wee shall be clad with immortality. This is the second garment to be upon the former.

Verse 28. There is neither Iew nor Grecian, &c. These words (as I have said) containe an answer to an objection, which is this: If all beleevers among the Gentiles bee children of God, and all put on Christ, then there is no difference betweene Jew and Gentile, and the prerogative of the Jew is nothing. Paul answers thus: there bee sundry differences of men in respect of nation, condition, sex: yet in respect of Christ, all are one. Moreover, I have shewed, that these words containe the ground of the adoption of the Galatians, which is an union with Christ, whereby all beleevers are made one with him. There remaine other things to be added.

By occasion of this text, two questions are moved, the answer whereof, serves much to cleare the meaning of Paul. The first is, whether Magistracy and government be necessary in the societies of Christians? Answ. Yea, Kings and Queenes shall be nursing fathers and nursing mothers to the Church of God (saith the Prophet Esay 49.23.) Paul bidsus pray for Kings, and all in authority, that wee may live in peace and godlinesse, 1 Tim. 2.1. The fifth Commaundement, Honour thy Father, &c. requires subjection to authority: and this Commandement is eternall.

Obiect. I. All beleevers are one in Christ: therefore there is no subjection among them. Answ. Beleevers are under a twofold estate or regiment: the first is, the regiment of this world, in civill society: the second is, the regiment of the kingdome of heaven, which stands in iustice, peace & conscience, joy in the holy Ghost. In the first estate there are sundry differences of persons that beleeve: some fathers and mothers, some children, some masters, and servants, some magistrates and subjects. In the second estate, there are no outward differences of men, but all are members of Christ, and all one in him. Thus must the text bee understood.

Obiect. II. Beleevers are governed by Gods spirit, and therefore outward government by magistrates is needlesse. Answer. In the visible Church hypocrites are mingled with true beleevers, and they are not governed by Gods spirit, but by the spirit of the devill: and therefore in respect of them, civill authority is requisite. Againe, true beleevers are but in part governed by the spirit, for the time of this life. And for this cause, civill government is requisite, for the ordering of the outward man, and for the protection of the Church.

Obiect. III. They that are in Christ, are freed from sinne, and consequently from subjection which followes upon sinne. Ans. Subjection is either politike, or servile. Politike is, when men are subject for their owne good: and this was before the fall, yeelded by Eve to Adam. Servile subjection, when they are subject for the good of their masters: and this only comes of sin. Againe, subjection with joy was before the fall: subjection joyned with paine and misery, followes upon sin, Gen. 3.16.

The second question is, whether bondage, in which some are Lords, others bond-men, or slaves, may stand with Christian religion? Answer. It may, in the Countries where it is established by positive lawes, if it be used with mercy and moderation. Righteous Abraham had in his owne house bond slaves, Genesis 17.13. God did permit the Jewes to buy the children of the Canaanites, Leviticus 25. 45. Paul saith, If any man bee called being a servant or bond-man, let him not care for it, 1 Cor. 7.21.

Obiect. I. Bee not servants of men, 1 Cor. 7. 23. Ans. That is, in respect of conscience, the subjection whereof must be reserved to God.

Obiect. II. Christians have liberty by Christ: and where liberty is, there may bee no bondage. Answer. Christians obtaine by Christ spirituall liberty in this life, and bodily liberty in the life to come.

Obiect. III. Bondage is against the Law of nature. Ans. Against the law of pure nature created in innocency, not against the Law of corrupt nature, the fruit whereof is bondage.

Obiect. IV. All are one in Christ: therefore the difference of bond-men and free men must cease. Ans. All are one in respect of the inward man, or in respect of faith and fellowship with Christ: but all are not one in respect of the outward man, and in regard of civill order.

The sense then of the text is this. There are distinction of men in respect of Nation, some Jewes, some Gentiles: in respect of condition, some bond, some free, some rich, some poore, some in authority, some in subjection, &c. In respect of sex, some men, some women: yet in Christ Jesus, all are even as one man.

The use. By this Text we may expound another, 1 Tim. 2.4. God would have all men to be saved; that is, not all particular persons upon earth, but all kindes. For here Paul saith, all are one in Christ: that is, men of all nations, of all conditions, and of all sexes.

Againe, the name [Iew] opposed to Gentiles, signifies not onely men of the tribe of Juda, but all circumcised persons of all tribes, Num. 1.28. and thus it is all one with an Israelite. And thus wee see how to expound the place of Scripture, 2 Chron. 21.2. where Iehosaphat King of Juda is called King of Israel. The words Juda and Israel, are sometime opposed, Juda signifying the kingdome of the two Tribes, Juda and Benjamin: and Israel signifying the ten Tribes. Sometimes againe, they are Synonima, and are put one for another, as Psal. 114.1,2. and in this Text. And Juda at this time was indeed the true Israel of God, and Iehosaphat without any fault in the text (as some suppose) is truly called King of Israel.

Thirdly, they which are of great birth, and of high condition, must be put in minde not to bee high minded, nor to despise them that are of low degree, for all are one in Christ: the obscure and base person hath as good part in Christ, as the greatest men that bee. Therefore wee may not swell in pride for outward things, the king must not lift up his heart against his brethren, Deut. 17.20. Rich men (saith Paul) must not be high minded, 1 Tim. 6.17. Iob would not despise the cause of his handmaid, Iob 31. 13. Naaman a great man, respected the counsell of his servants, 2 King. 5.13.

Fourthly, all beleevers must be of one heart, and minde, 1 Corin. 1.10. In the kingdome of Christ the Wolfe and the Lambe dwell together, Esa. 11 6. And good reason: for all are one in Christ. And wee have great cause to bee humbled, when schismes, contentions, and differences arise in points of religion. For thus shewes that hypocrites are mingled with true beleevers, and that wee are but in part (as yet) united to Christ.

Lastly, hence wee learne not to hate any man, but alwayes to carry in minde a purpose to do good to all, by thought, word, and deed; and to doe good to men in respect of their names, their goods, their lives. And this holy minde and purpose must alwayes beare sway in us. There is no hurt in the mount of the Lord, Esa. 11.9. Men turne their swords and speares into mattockes and sythes, that are of the kingdome of Christ, Esa. 2.4. because they are one with Christ by the bond of one spirit.

Verse 29. And if yee be Christs, then are yee Abrahams seed and heires by promise.

Before, Paul had taught, vers. 28. 29. that all beleeving Gentiles were the children of Abraham, and not the Jewes onely. Here hee returnes to the same point againe, and proveth it by a new Argument, thus: Christ is the seed of Abraham, ver. 16. and all Gentiles beleeving in Christ, are parts of him, and one with him, therefore they also are children of Abraham, and heires of all the blessings of God.

The intent of Paul in these words is to establish and confirme an argument which before he had urged in this Chapter against patrons of workes in the case of our justification: it may be framed thus: As Abraham was justified, so are all they that beleeve in Christ, justified: for they are Abrahams children, and succeeded him, verse 29 but Abraham was justified by faith without workes: therefore al beleevers in Christ are so justified. Let the argument be observed: for it makes against the Papist, who if he study till his head and heart ake, shall never answer it.

In this verse, Paul sets downe the fruit and benefit that comes by the gift of Adoption, to them that beleeve. And that is, to be children of Abraham, and heires of all the blessings of God. And therefore learne here one golden lesson, namely, that the baseſt person that is, if hee beleeve in Christ, is in the place of Abraham, and succeeds him in the inheritance of the kingdome of heaven. Some man may say; Oh this is excellent comfort, if I might know that I were in the case of Abraham. Answ. Thou maist know it certainly, if thou wilt doe as Abraham did; namely, follow the calling of God, and obey the Gospell, that is, subject thy heart to the Commandements of God, which bid thee repent and beleeve in Christ: for then all the good things revealed in the Gospell shall bee thine.

The use. Beleevers in this world must bee content with any estate that God shal lay upon them. For they are heires with Abraham of heaven and earth. In this regard Abraham was content to forsake his country, and his Fathers house, and as a pilgrime to dwell in tents to the death, *Heb.*11.8.9.

Secondly, they that beleeve in Christ must moderate their worldly cares, and not live as drudges of the world. For they are heires of God, & have a title or right to all good things promised in the covenant. Therefore they shall never want any good thing that is needfull for them. He that hath made them heires, will carefully provide for them. Therefore our care must bee to doe the duties that belong unto us: and all other cares we must cast upon God. They in this world, that are borne to land and living, are content to live sparingly, and oftentimes very barely with a little, upon hope of further inlargement, after the deceaſe of some friends.

Lastly, our speciall care must bee for heaven: for the things of this world are but trifles in respect. The city of God in heaven is thy portion of childes part. Seeke for the assurance of that above all things. Thus did Abraham, *Heb.*11.15,16.

CHAP. IIII.

1. And I say that the heire, as long as he is a childe, differeth nothing from a servant, though he be Lord of all.

2. But is under tutors and governours till the time appointed of the Father.

3. Even so we, when we were children, were in bondage under the rudiments of the world.

4. But when the fulnesse of time was come, God sent forth his sonne made of a woman, and made under the law.

5. That hee might redeeme them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sonnes.

6. And because yee are sonnes, God hath sent forth the spirit of his son into your hearts, which crieth, Abba, father.

7. Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a sonne: and if thou bee a sonne, thou are also an heire of God through Christ.

THese words depend on the former Chapter, as an answer to an objection, which may bee framed on this manner: Paul, thou saist that the Jewes before Christ were under the Law as under a schoole-master, Chapter 3. Verse 24. and that wee are free from the same Schoole-master, verse 25. being children of God and heires by Christ, verse 29. but wee for our parts thinke our selves servants under the Law, as well as the ancient Jewes, and that they are as well the children of God, as wee. To this objection Paul maketh answer in these seven verses, as the very first words import. And I say, that is, whatsoever you suppose, I say thus. And then hee propounds the reason of his answer, which may bee framed thus: If the time of our bondage bee ended, and the full time of our liberty come, then are wee sonnes, and not servants: but the time of our bondage is ended, and the full time of our liberty is come: therefore we are not servants, but sonnes.

The Maior is omitted, because it is manifest. The Minor is in the six first verses: the conclusion is expressed in the seventh verse.

Againe, the Minor [the time of our bondage is ended, and the time of our liberty is come] is first of all declared by a similitude, and then confirmed. The similitude is borrowed from the Civill Law; and it may bee framed thus: Heires in their Minority live in subjection to Tutors and Governours; but when they are of riper yeares, at the appointment of their parents, they are at their owne liberty. Even so, the people of God before Christ were in their infancy under the Law, as under a Tutor: but when the fulnesse of time was come, which God had appointed, they entred into the fruition of their liberty. The first part of the similitude is expressed in in the two first verses, and the second, in the third and fourth.

Againe, the minor is confirmed by two reasons. The first is this: Your liberty is procured by Christ: therefore the time of your liberty is come. This reason is in the 4. and 5. verses. The second reason is taken from the signe, You have received the Spirit of adoption, therefore the time of your liberty is come: verse 5. Of these points in order.

First, where he signifies, that the father hath authority to dispose of his childe; this is the law of nature, and the law of Nations. Paul saith, *Col.*3.10. that children must obey their parents in all things. When the devill had obtained liberty to afflict Job in all things that belonged to him, save his person, hee destroyed his children, Job 1.12.18. And this shewes, that the children in respect of their bodies, are the goods of their parents. In this respect the Jewes are permitted to sell their children, Exod. 21.7. And so sacred a thing was the authority of the parent, that hee which rebelliously despised the same, was put to death, *Deut.*21.21.

This authority shewes it selfe, specially in two things: in the marriage, and in the calling of the child. In the marriage of the childe the parent is the principall agent, and the disposer thereof, *Deuter.*7.3. *Exod.*34.16. 1 Cor. 7.38. Where observe, that the Commandement touching the marriage of the childe, is given, not to the childe, but to the parent: and the parent hath authority by the said commandement to give and bestow his childe, and to take wives to his sonnes. Thus Abraham tooke a wife for Isaac, and Isaac suffered himselfe to bee disposed at the appointment of his father. For a more full declaration of this authority, I propound these three questions.

The first is, whether the father may command his childe to marry? Answ. Presuppose two things; one, that the commandement is without compulsion: the second, that the father knows what is for the good of the childe: then I answer, that hee may command his childe to marry, and to marry a person thus or thus qualified. Thus Isaac commanded Iacob to marry in the house of Laban, Genesis 28.1, 2. And Iacob obeyed. Now whether a father may command his childe to marry this or that person, I doubt, and therefore suspend.

The second question is, whether parents may make voyd the contract secretly made by their children, without or against their consent? Answ. The Scripture giveth them authority either to ratifie such contracts, or to make them void, *Num.*30.6. the father may make voyd the vow of the childe pertaining to Gods worship: much more a matrimoniall promise. If a young man defloure a maid, and this be found, in equity hee is to be compelled to marry her, *Deuteron.*22.28. yet by Gods law this may not be, except the father consent, *Exod.*22.17.

The third question is, whether a marriage made without and against the consent of parents, be a marriage or no? Answ. It may be called a politike or civill marriage, because it is ratified in the courts of men, according to humane lawes, and by this meanes the issue is freed from bastardy. Nevertheleſſe it is not a divine or spirituall conjunction, or marriage (as it ought to be) because it is flat against the commandement of God.

Touching the callings of children, they are to bee ordered and appointed at the discretion of parents. For if the parent may order the vow and the marriage of the child, then much more the calling.

Here take notice of the impiety of the Romane religion. There are three speciall estates whereby man liveth in society with man: the Church, the commonwealth, the family. In the Church, that religion sets up another head beside Christ: in the commonwealth it sets up an authority that serveth to curbe and restrain the Supremacy of Princes in causes ecclesiasticall. In the family, it puts downe the authority of the father: for it ratifieth clandestine contracts, and it gives liberty to children past 12. or 14. yeares of age, to enter into any order of Religion against the consent of their parents.

Against, parents must bee put in minde to know their authority, to maintaine it, and to use it aright, for the good of their children, specially for their salvation. And children must be warned in all things honest and lawfull, to yeeld subjection to their parents: and in this subjection shall they finde the blessing of God.

Against, here is set downe the office of parents, and that is, to provide meet Overseers and Tutors for their children after their departure. When Christ upon the crosse had the pangs of death upon him, hee commends his mother to the tuition of John, *Joh.*19.26. When widowes and orphanes are wronged, God himselfe takes upon him the office of a Tutor in their behalfe, Exod. 22.22. And this shews that it is a necessary duty to be thought upon.

Thirdly, here the duty of children is set downe, and that is, that they must be subject to their Tutors and Governours, as to their owne fathers and mothers. Ruth loved Naomi, and clave unto her as to her owne mother, Ruth 1.16. Christ was subject to Ioseph, who was but a reputed father, Luke 2. last. The sonnes of the Prophets obey their masters as their owne fathers, 2 *King.*2.12. and so doe the servants to their master, 2 *King.*5.23.

Now I come to the second part of the similitude, verse 3. Even so we] that is, the Jewes, and all the people of God in the Old Testament. Were children] were as children in respect of the Christian Church, in the New Testament.

Were in bondage] The Iewes are said to be in bondage in respect of us, because they were subiect to more lawes than wee are, and they wanted fruition of the liberty which wee enioy. They had the right of sonnes: but they enioyed not their right as wee doe: and this is their bondage. For otherwise liberty in conscience from hell, death, and sinne, they had even as we now have.

Rudiments of the world] that is, the Law or ministery of Moses, and it is so called, in respect of a more full and plentifull doctrine, in the ministery of the new Testament. And it is called the Rudiments of the world, because Iewry was as it were a little schoole set up in a corner of the world, the law of Moses was as it were an a, b, c, or Primar, in which Christ was revealed to the world, in darke and obscure manner, specially to the Iewes.

The use. Here we see, that the people of the old Testament were (for right) heires as well as wee, and therefore they had right to all the blessings of God. The difference betweene us and them, is onely in the manner, which God used in dispensing the fore-said blessings to us.

Againe, the fathers of the Old Testament before Christ were but as children in respect of us now. Thus much saith Paul in expresse words. And they were so two wayes. First, in respect of the Mosaicall regiment, because they were kept in subiection to more lawes than wee. Secondly, they were so in respect of revelation, because God hath revealed more to us than to them. Reade Luke 10.24. It may be said, we now are (the best of us) but children to Abraham and the Prophets, whether we respect knowledge, or faith. Answ. It is so if we compare person and person: but it is otherwise, if we compare body with body, and compare the Christian Church with the Church of the Iewes before Christ: then wee exceed them, and they are but children to us. This must teach us all to be careful to increase in knowledge, and in the grace of God, that wee may be answerable to our condition. For to live in ignorance (as the most doe) is the shame of us all. For in respect of the time, wee should all bee teachers, Hebr. 5.12. and yet God knowes, the most are very babes. For aske a man how he lookes to be saved, he will answer, by serving God, and by dealing truly. Now his serving of God, is his saying of his praiers: and his praiers are the Beleefe and the ten Commandements. This is a poore serving of God, fitter for babes than for men of yeares. It is further to be observed, that Paul saith, the fathers of the old Testament were in bondage under the law, after the manner of servants, specially by reason of rites and ceremonies. And hence it followes, that the observation of a religion, in which are manifold bodily rites and figures, is a kinde of bondage, and pertaines to the Church, for the time of her infancie or minority. Let this bee remembred against the Romish religion: for it is like to that of the Iewes in the old Testament, standing (for the greatest part) in bodily rites, differences of times, places, garments, in exercises, and afflictions of the body, in locall succession, in the collation of grace by the worke done, and such like. This is manifest to them which know the masse, which indeed is nothing but a masse of ceremonies. Therefore the Romane religion is a childish and babish religion: and if it were of God, yet is it not fit for the Church of the new Testament, that is come forth of her minority. Religion that stands in the afflicting of the body, is but a shadow, and an appearance of humility, Col. 2.23. and the true worshippers of God in the new Testament, worship him in spirit and truth, Ioh. 4.v.24.

The fulnesse of time, or the full time, is that time in which the captivity of the Church endeth, and her liberty beginnes. This time was ended 4000. yeares from the creation; and it is called a full time, because it was designed and appointed by the will and providence of the heavenly Father. For hee is Lord of time, and all seasons are in his hand: and his will or providence makes times fit or unfit. Marke then, that is the onely full and fit time for the enioying of any blessing of God, which he by his providence appointeth. This must teach us, when by prayer wee aske any good thing at Gods hand, not to prescribe any time unto God, but to leave it to his providence. Againe, if thou live in any misery, wait on the Lord, and be content. For that is the fit and best time of thy deliverance, which God hath appointed. Lastly, thou must bee admonished to pray to God for grace and mercy, and to turne to him this day before to morrow. For this is the time which God hath appointed for these duties: This is the day of grace, and therefore the onely fit time, Heb. 3.7. Psal. 32.6.

Thus much of the similitude; now I come to the first reason, whereby Paul confirmes his maine argument. Christ hath purchased and procured your liberty: therefore the time thereof is come and past. For the better clearing of this reason, Paul sets downe the way and order which was used in procuring this liberty. And it containes five degrees. The first is, the sending of the sonne; the second, his incarnation; the third, his subiection to the law; the fourth, our redemption from the law; the fifth, the fruition of our adoption, verse 4,5.

The first, the sending of the Sonne is in these words, In the fulnesse of time God sent forth his son. That we may attaine to the sense of this great Mystery, six questions are to be propounded.

The first is, what is meant by God? Answ. The father, the first person, Ephes. 1.3. Blessed bee God the Father of our Lord Iesus Christ, 2 Cor. 1.3. and Iohn 20.17. And hee is called God,

God, not because hee partakes more of the Godhead than the sonne, or the holy Ghost: but because he is the first in order of the three divine persons: and hee is the beginning of the sonne and the holy Ghost, and hath no beginning of his owne person; because he doth not receive the Godhead by communication from any other. In this respect hee is called God more commonly than the sonne, or the holy Ghost.

The second question is, How the father sends the sonne? Ans. By his counsell and eternall decree, whereby the sonne was designed to the office of a Mediator, and consequently to become man, Act. 2.23. And thus is he said to be sealed of the father, Ioh. 6.27. and to be sanctified and sent into the world, Ioh. 10.36. And therefore this sending implies no alteration or change of place.

The third question is, whether the sonne was sent with his owne consent or no? Answ. Yea, the decree of the father in the decree of the sonne and the holy Ghost: because as they are all one in nature, so are they all one in will. All the persons then have a stroke in this sending, yet for orders sake, the father is said to send, because he is first.

The fourth question is, how the father can send the sonne, considering they are both one? Ans. In the doctrine touching the Trinitie, Nature and Person must be distinguished. Nature is a substance common to many, as the godhead. A Person is that which subsisteth of it selfe, and hath a proper manner of subsisting, as the father begetting, the sonne begotten, the holy Ghost proceeding. Now the father and the sonne are one indeed for nature or Godhead, but they are not one for person. Nay thus they are really distinct. The father is not the sonne, nor the sonne the father. And thus doth the father send the sonne.

The fifth question is, why the sonne is so called? Ans. Because he was begotten of the father, by a perfect and eternall generation, not to be uttered of man, or conceived. And we must be warned, not to conceive it in any carnall or humane manner. For an earthly father is in time before the sonne, and the sonne after: but God the father and the sonne are coeternall, and not one before or after the other for time. An earthly father is forth of the sonne, and the sonne forth of the father: but God the father is in the sonne, and the sonne in the father. An earthly childe is from his father by propagation, but the sonne is from the heavenly father not by propagation, but by communication of substance. Lastly, the heavenly father begets the sonne by communication of his whole substance, and so doth no earthly father.

The last question is, whether the sonne be God? For it is here said, God sent his sonne. Ans. He is God. For he that is sent forth from God, was before he was sent forth. And the sonne is said to be sent forth, because he was with God the father before all worlds, Ioh. 1.1. and because he came from the bosome of his father, v. 18.

Obiect. I. The sonne is sent of the father: and he that is sent, is inferiour to the father; and he that is inferiour to God, is not God. Answ. Two equals by common consent may send each other: and therefore sending alwaies implies not inequality. Againe, inferiority is of two sorts, inferiority or nature, and inferiority of condition. The first doth not befall Christ, because for nature hee is one and the same with the father. The second agrees unto him, because of his owne voluntarie accord he abased himselfe, and tooke upon him the shape of a man, Phil. 2.5.

Obiect. II. God hath his beginning of none: the sonne hath his beginning of the father: therefore he is not God. Ans. The sonne in respect of his person is of the father: but in respect of his godhead he is of none. The Son of God considered as hee is a sonne, is of the father, God of very God. But considered as he is God, hee is God of himselfe, because the godhead of the sonne is not begotten more than the godhead of the father.

Obiect. III. The sonne was made Lord in time, Act. 2.36. therefore no God. Ans. Christ as he is the sonne of God, was not made Lord in time, but is by nature an eternall Lord, as the father. And he is said to be made Lord in respect of his condition as hee is God-man, and that in time, in respect of both his natures. In respect of his manhood, because it is received into the unity of the second person, and exalted to the right hand of God in heaven. In respect of his godhead, the majestie and Lordship whereof, he declared and made manifest in the flesh after his resurrection. Thus was hee made Lord by declaring himselfe to be so indeed, Rom. 1.4. 1 Tim. 3.v.16.

Thus we see how God sent forth his sonne: The use followes. This act of God in sending, declares his infinite love: for this sending was for their sakes that were the enemies of God. And it further signifies unto us the most free love of God. For nothing in us moved him to send, but his owne goodnesse. This love of God must move us to love God againe, and to be thankfull.

The sonne of God takes not to himselfe the office of a Mediator, but he is called and sent forth of the father: whereby two things are signified; one, that the office of a Mediator was appointed of the father: the other, that the sonne was designed to this office in the eternall counsell of the blessed Trinitie. And so, that wee may please God in our callings and places, we must have a double assurance in our consciences: one, that the offices and callings which we performe are good, pleasing unto God: the second, that wee are designed and called of God to the said offices and callings. By this must we stay our minds in all our miseries.

The

The sonne is sent forth, that is, hee comes from his father, laies aside his majestie, and takes on him the condition of a servant. The same minde must bee in us, to humble and abase our selves before God, to thinke better of others than of our selves, to be content with our condition, to bee well pleased when we are despised and contemned, because wee are worthy of it. This is to conforme our selves to Christ.

That the sonne of God himselfe must bee sent forth from the bosome of his father, this shewes the greatnesse of our sin and misery, which was the occasion of this sending. And this must teach us with bitternesse to hate and detest our sinnes, which fetched the sonne of God from heaven, and to humble our selves with David even to the deeps, and thence to pray to God for his mercy, Psal. 130. 1.

The second point, namely the Incarnation of the Sonne, is expressed in these words, Made of a woman, that is, made man, or made flesh of a woman. The word was made flesh, Ioh. 1. 14. Here three questions are to be handled. The first is, why the Sonne was made flesh? Ans. There be two speciall causes hereof. First, the order of divine justice requires that Gods wrath should be appeased, and a satisfaction made, in the same nature in which his majestie was offended. Now the offence was in mans nature: and therefore in it must satisfaction to God bee performed. Secondly, the Mediator betweene God and man must bee both for nature and condition in the meane betweene God and man, that is, both God and man: and thus the Sonne of God is a perfect Mediator.

The second question is, how farre forth the Sonne of God was made flesh? I answer three things. The first, that he tooke unto him the whole and perfect nature of man in respect of essence, namely, the intire substance of a reasonable soule, and humane body. Here remember, that quantitie, that is, length, bredth, and thicknesse, is not an accident which may passe and repasse, but it is of the substance of every body, and therefore of the body of Christ. And for this cause it is impossible that the body of Christ in his quantitie, being foure or five foot in length, should be included in the compasse of a peece of bread that is but two or three inches in quantitie. The second is, that the sonne of God tooke unto him the properties of mans nature, the powers of life, sense, motion, the faculties of reason, will, and affection. The third is, that he tooke to him the infirmities and miseries of mans nature. Here two caveats must bee remembred. The first, that hee tooke to him onely such infirmities as are meere infirmities, and no sinnes. For example, upon the words of Christ, Let this cuppasse, Matth. 26. some say, that there was oblivion in Christ: but this may not be said. For oblivion is a sin, namely, a forgetting of that which a man ought to remember: and there may bee in Christ or other men, a suspending of the memorie, by some externall and violent cause, without oblivion. The second caveat is, that the sonne of God tooke to him the infirmities which pertaine to the nature of man, and not such as pertaine to the persons of men, as dropsies, gouts, consumptions, and such like. For he tooke not the person of any man, but the nature of all men, with all the appurtenances thereof, except sinne.

The third question is, How was he made flesh? Answ. The flesh or manhood of Christ was first framed, then sanctified, and then united to the godhead of the Sonne. And thus was he made man. Remember here that the forming of the flesh of Christ, the sanctifying of it, and the personall Union are all together for time: and I distinguish them in this sort, onely for doctrines sake.

In the framing of the manhood, I consider the matter, and the manner. The matter was the substance of the Virgin, signified in these words, Made of woman: by this Christ is distinguished from all men in the world: from Adam, because he was neither of man nor woman, but of red clay. From Eve, because shee was made of man, and not of woman. From all that come of Adam and Eve, for they are both of man and woman; whereas Christ is of woman, and not of man. Againe, Paul addes these words, made of a woman] to note the accomplishment of the promise, The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpents head, Gen. 3. 15.

The manner of framing is expressed, when Paul saith, made, not begotten of a woman. The manhood then of Christ was framed without naturall generation, by an extraordinary worke of the holy Ghost. Here a doubt is answered. Some man may say, if hee were made of a woman, he comes of Adam, and consequently he is a sinner. Answ. The order set downe by God with Adam in the creation is, that whatsoever he loseth, all his posteritie shall lose that comes of him by generation. Upon this order all that are begotten of Adam, with the nature of man, receive the sin and corruption of nature. And so should Christ have done, if he had descended of Adam by generation. But considering his flesh was made of the substance of a woman, and not begotten of any man, therefore he takes the nature of man, and not the corruption of nature.

The sanctifying of the manhood of Christ is a worke of divine power, whereby at the time of the framing thereof, it was filled with the gift of the holy Ghost above measure, that he might in both natures bee a perfect Saviour. Here observe, that Christ by the actions of his life did not merit for himselfe glorie and eternall happinesse, because he was most worthy of al glory and honour at the very first moment of his conception. Againe, observe observe that Christ in his manhood increased in grace, as in age and stature, Luke 2. And this increase was without all imperfection: for in his infancy Christ received a full measure of grace fit for that age: when hee was twelve yeares old, he received a further measure fit for that age: and so when hee was thirty yeares old. And thus increase of grace, and the perfection thereof, stand both together. And this increase is not onely in respect of experience, and the manifestation of grace before God and men, but also in respect of the habit or gift: though the Schooles for 400. yeares have taught the contrary, ever since the dayes of Lumbard.

The third thing is, the uniting of flesh to the godhead of the Sonne: and that is done, when the Sonne of God makes the flesh or nature of man a part of himselfe, and communicates unto it his owne subsistence. The like example to this is not to bee found againe in the world: yet have we some resemblance of this mystery in the plant called Misselto, which hath no root of his owne, but growes in a tree of another kind, and thence receives his sap. And so the manhood of the Sonne hath no personality or personall subsistence, but is received into the unity of the second person, and is sustained of it. It must bee observed, that there is a difference betweene the manhood of Christ and all other men. Peter is a person subsisting of himselfe, and so is Paul, and every particular man: but so is not the manhood of Christ: and therefore it is to be termed a nature, and not a person. And it is no disgrace, but an exaltation to the nature of man, that it subsists by the uncreated subsistence of the second.

It may be objected, that all beleevers are joyned to the Sonne of God, as well as the flesh of Christ: I answer, they are so, but in another kind, and in a lower degree, by communication of grace, and not by communication of personall subsistence.

Thus we see how the Sonne was made flesh: The use followes. Hence wee learne to use all meanes, that we may become new creatures, and bee borne of God. God becomes man, that we men might be partakers of the divine nature. Christ is made bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh by his incarnation, that we might be made bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh by regeneration. The Sonne of God was made the Sonne of man, that we which are the sonnes of men might bee made the Sonnes of God.

To be made flesh, is the abasement of the Sonne: in this abasement he goes on, till hee become even as a worme of the earth, Psal. 22. 7. so must we abase our selves, till we be annihilated and brought to nothing: then shall we be like to Christ, and filled with the good things of God.

Our sinnes are a wall of partition betweene God and us; so as we are farre from God, and God from us, Isa. 59. 2. and this partition is of our owne making: and by this meanes wee have no accesse to God of our selves, though we pray unto him, and fill heaven and earth with our cries. Now the Sonne of God made man is Immanuel, that is God with us, Isa. 7. 14. and his incarnation is a meanes whereby we have accesse to God, and he is neere unto us when we pray unto him in truth, 2 Chron. 15. 2. This must teach us to draw neere to God in the hearing and obeying of his Word, in prayer, and in the use of the holy Sacraments. If this be not done, great is our wickednesse, and great shall be the punishment, Iob 21. 14. Psal. 73. 27.

The incarnation of Christ is the foundation of all our comfort, and all good things which we enjoy. By it God comforts Adam, The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpents head. Iacob is comforted by the vision of a ladder reaching from heaven to earth: and this ladder is the Sonne of God made man, Iob. 1. 51. Iob comforts himselfe in this, that his Redeemer of his owne flesh (as the word signifieth) liveth, Iob 19. 25. In the old Testament, they which sought unto God, came to the Arke or Propitiatory, and there were they heard, and received the blessings of God. Now Christ, God and man, is in stead of the Arke, Rom. 3. 25. and therefore we must come to him, if we would receive any good thing of God. The godhead is the fountaine of all good things, and the flesh or manhood is a pipe or conduit to convey the same unto us. If we would then receive true comfort, we must hunger and thirst in our hearts after Christ, and by our faith eat his flesh and drinke his bloud, Ioh. 6. 54. 56.

The third point or degree is, the subjection of the Sonne of God to the law, expressed in these words, made under the Law.

Here two questions are to bee answered. The first is, who is made subject to the law? The Sonne of God. And this may not seeme strange, that hee which is Lord of the law, should be subject to the law: for hee must be considered as hee is our pledge and suretie, Heb. 7. 22. and as one that stands in our place, roome, and head; and before God represents the person of all the elect: and in this respect is he subject to the law, not by nature, but by voluntary abasement and condition of will.

The second question is, how the Sonne of God was subject to the law? Ans. By a twofold obedience, namely, by the obedience of his passion, and by his obedience in fulfilling the law. The obedience of his passion stands before God as a satisfaction for the breach of the law. In it consider two things; the foundation of the passion, and the passion it selfe. The foundation is, that the Sonne of God was made sin for us, 2 Cor. 5. 21. that is, all the sinnes of all the Elect were imputed to him, and he in our roome and place was accounted a sinner.

The

The passion it selfe is the curse of the law, laid on the Sonne of God, namely, the first death, and the paines of the second death, which is in effect and substance, the paines of hell, as I have shewed in the 3. chap. vers. 13. of this Epistle.

By the second Obedience in fulfilling the law, the Sonne of God performed for us, all things contained therein, that we might have right to life everlasting, and that according to the tenour of the law, Levit. 18.5. Doe these things and live. Of this obedience two questions are demanded. The first is, whether it be necessary for the justification of a sinner? Ans. It is: The summe of the law is, Love God with all thy heart, and thy neighbour as thy selfe: now every jot and tittle of the law must necessarily be fulfilled, Matth. 5.18. Much more then the summe and substance of the law. And it cannot be fulfilled by us being sinners: therefore there must needs be a translation of the law from our persons, to the person of the Mediator, who is to accomplish every jot of the law for us. Againe, He that doth not all things contained in the law, is accursed, Gal. 3.13. He therefore that would eschew the curse of the law, and come to life everlasting, must by himselfe accomplish all things contained in the law: and if this cannot bee done, the law and all the contents thereof, must needs bee accomplished in the person of the Mediator: otherwise the curse cannot be avoided. Lastly, wee owe unto God a double debt or tribute. The first is, homage or subjection to be performed with all the powers of the soule, and with all the strength of all the powers, and that from the first conception. The second is, a satisfaction by death for the breach of the law. And the law is the bond that binds us to the paiment of this double debt. And till the justice of God in the law be answered to the full, this bond cannot be cancelled. Therefore the Sonne of God the Mediator, must not onely die for us, but also performe homage for us to God, according to the tenour of the law. Therefore he saith, that hee must perform all righteousnesse, Matth. 3.v.15. And Paul, that Christ is the end of the law for righteousnesse, Rom. 10.4.

It is alleaged, that Christ as man fulfilled the law for himselfe: and therefore not for us. Ans. The flesh or manhood of Christ considered by it selfe apart from the godhead of the Sonne, is a creature that owes homage unto God. Yet if it be considered as it is received into the unity of the second person, and is become a part thereof, it is exempted from the common condition of all other men, and is not bound to performe subjection in all respects. For if the Sonne of man bee Lord of the Sabbath, then also is hee Lord of the whole law. And Paul here saith, that the Sonne of God is not borne, but made under the law.

Againe, it is alleaged, that the blood of Christ taketh away all sin, 1 Iob. 1.7. and when all sinne is taken away, the law is fulfilled, and the person justified. Answ. When Saint Iohn saith, the blood of Christ purgeth us from all sin, he excludes the blood of beasts, and all meritorious meanes of salvation in man out of Christ, and hee excludes not the obedience which the Mediator yeelded to the Father in all his sufferings. Againe, it is not true that a sinner is justified when all sinne is abolished, unlesse justice bee added. For justification is an alteration of a sinner from one contrarie to another, from evill to good, from life to death: and therefore sinne must depart, and justice come in the roome thereof. That a darke house may bee inlightned, darknesse must first be abolished, and light must come in the stead thereof. And that a man may bee justified, sinne must bee covered, and righteousnesse imputed.

The second question is, how the Sonne of God performed this obedience? Ans. He was obedient to his Father to the death, and that according to all the duties of love in the first table: and for the second table, he loved his enemy as himselfe; yea more than himselfe, because hee gave his life for man. Marke then, he did all things contained in the law, and more too, in respect of the duties of the second Table. For the law bindes us to love our neighbours as our selves, and not more than our selves. This obedience therefore is truly to bee termed a worke of supererogation: and there is none in the world beside.

The use. That the Sonne of God was conformable to the law, it argues the goodnesse, perfection, and excellency thereof. Here againe marke the difference betweene the man Christ, and all other men. Hee was not borne subject to the law, but made subject; not subject by nature, but by will and by voluntary abasement. All other men are subject, not by will, but by nature: not made, but borne subject. Therefore Paul saith, the Gentiles doe by nature the things of the law. The remainder of the law since the fall are naturall in all men: therefore the whole law was naturall before the fall. Man was at the first created in righteousnesse and holinesse, Eph. 4.24. and therefore in a perfect subjection and conformity to the law. It is a naturall property of a reasonable creature, to doe homage to the Creator. It is an error then in the Papist to teach, that the Image of God in our first parents was supernaturall.

The fourth point or degree is, the Redemption of man from under the law, in these words: [that he might redeeme them which were under the law.] Here five things are to be considered. The first is, what is meant by being under the law? Ans. The law must be considered two wayes: first, as the Rule of life. Thus Angels are under the law, and Adam before his fall, and the Saints now in heaven. And none yeeld more subjection to the law than they they: and this subjection is their liberty. Againe, the law must be considered as a grievous yoke which none can beare. Is is a yoke three waies: first, because it did binde the Church of the old Testament to the observation of many, and that very costly ceremonies, for the maintenance of the clergie at Ierusalem was a matter of great charges. Secondly, it is a yoke because it bindes every offender to everlasting death, Gen. 2.17. Gal. 3.13. Thirdly, it is a yoke as it increaseth sinne, and as it is the strength of it, 1 Cor. 15. 56. Rom. 5. 20. and 7. 8. And it increaseth sinne, not as a cause, but as an occasion: For the wicked nature of man is, the more to doe a thing, the more he is forbidden. The Israelites are bidden to goe on to Canaan, when they like Ægypt well. They are forbidden to goe to Canaan, and commanded to stay in the wildernesse: but then they will needs goe to Canaan. Circumcision commanded, was loathed of all nations: when it was abolished, then men of sundry nations imbraced it as needfull to salvation. To bee under the law then, is to be in subjection to it, as it is a burden and yoke in the three former respects, specially to bee subject to the curse of the law.

The second point is, who are under the law. Answer. The Jewes before the comming of Christ were under the law in respect of ceremonies: and all men naturally are under the law in respect of the malediction and curse thereof, all being borne children of wrath, Eph. 2. 3. Here comes a lamentable matter to be considered. Very few in respect, know themselves to be in bondage to the curse of the law. For they thinke it an easie matter to observe the law: and it is used for a forme of prayer whereby men use to bleese themselves morning and evening. Learne therefore this one lesson, that thou are by nature in thy selfe under the curse of the law, and for thine offences by it bound over to everlasting death. If thou shouldest be proclaimed an out-law, or a writ of rebellion should be served on thee, it would make thee an hy wit send. Now behold, the law proclaimes thee a traitor and rebell against God, thorow heaven and earth. The law shuts heaven against thee: it sets hell and death wide open for thee, and it armes all the creatures of God against thee. Therefore it stands thee in hand to looke about thee, and to flie from the sentence of the law, to the throne of grace for mercy and forgivenesse. It hath bin the fashion of all holy men to acquaint themselves with this one lesson, that they were by nature under the law, specially then when they were to humble themselves in the presence of God. Daniel in his prayer ascribes shame and confusion to himselfe, Dan. 9. according to the voice and true of the law: and the prodigall sonne confesseth, that he had sinned against his father, and against heaven, and that he was unworthy to be accounted a child of God, according to the law, judging and condemning himselfe.

The third point is, what is the price where by men are bought or redeemed from under the law? Answ. The obedience of the Sonne, whereby he stood in subjection to the law for us: as Paul signifies in the words immediately going before. It may bee said, how can the obedience of one man bee a price of redemption for another? I answer, wee must consider Christ not as a mere man, but as God-man, and by this meanes his obedience is of infinite merit and efficacy. Againe, wee must consider him not as a private, but as a publike person, representing all the elect in his obedience to his Father. And by this meanes his obedience serves for all that believe in him. Againe, it may be alleaged, that the law saith, Thou shalt love thine neighbour as thy selfe, &c. And The soule that sinneth, it shall die, Ezech. 18.20. And, A murtherer shall not redeeme the life of his brother, Psal. 49.7. Answ. The law requires that every man performe obedience and make satisfaction in his owne person, and the law knowes no other obedience. But this must be considered, that the law is but one part of the revealed will of God: and that the Gospell is another distinct part, revealing more than the law ever knew. And the Gospell teacheth a translation of the law in respect of obedience, from the persons to the person of the Mediator: and thereby admits an exception to the Law.

The fourth point is, who are partakers of this Redemption? Ans. They which see, and feele, and bewaile their condition, that they are under the Law, and flye from the sentence thereof to the throne of grace for mercy. Christ came to save sinners, Mat. 9. that is, such as are convicted by the Law, and know themselves to be sinners. He offers ease to them that travell and are heavy laden, Matth. 11.28. He preacheth deliverance to captives Luke 4.18. Here wee are to bewaile the misery of our people, that know not themselves to bee under the Law: nay they love and delight to bee under it. For they alleage for themselves, that they say their prayers duly and truly, that they meane well to God ward, and deale truly with men: and therefore they thinke God will have mercy on them, and have them excused for all their offences.

The last point is, what benefits arise of this deliverance from under the law? Answ. They which turne to God, and believe in Christ, reape foure benefits hereby. The first is, that no sinne shall have dominion over them, Rom. 6.14. Here marke by the way, that they which are in Christ, cannot wholly fall from grace. For they which wholly fall away, are under the dominion of sinne.

The second is, that God will accept the indevour to obey, for obedience, because they are freed from the rigor of the Law. Reade Malac. 3.17.

The third is, that they have libertie to live and serve God without feare of damnation, or any other evill, Luke 1.74.

The last is, that afflictions cease to bee curses, and are turned to blessings: and for this cause they are delayed and qualified for the good of them which are afflicted, *Psal.*89.32. I will correct them that offend with a rod, but I will not take my mercy from them. Prov. 3.11. Grieve not for the correction of the Lord: for he loveth whom he correcteth, Ierem. 10.24. Correct us in iudgement: and powre forth thy wrath upon the nations that have not knowne thee. This must teach men that professe or teach Christ, not to be discouraged when they be abused, railed on, slandered, or cursed. For if they be from under the law, and so from under the sting of a guilty conscience, nothing shall hurt them. They must bee content for a while to suffer the snatches and bitings of the Devill: for in the end his head shall bee bruised in peeces.

To end this point, it may bee said, if wee that beleeve be not under the law, then wee may live and die as we list. Answ. We are free from the law, as a yoke, but not free from it, as it is the rule of obedience and good life. And because we are freed from the bondage of the law, therefore we must be a law to our selves: we must be Voluntaries, Psal. 110.4. without constraine, freely yeelding subjection to the will of God, and not for feare of hell, and the last judgement.

The third and last degree, is the Fruition of adoption, in these words [That we might receive the adoption of sonnes] Here two questions are to bee considered. The first is, How the Church of the new Testament is said to receive the adoption which was before received in the old Testament? Answ. In Scripture a thing is often said to be done, when it is done more fully and plentifully. Christ telleth Nathaniel, that he shall see heaven open, Ioh. 1. 51. that is, more plainly opened. For it was not shut in the old Testament. And, the holy Ghost was not yet, Ioh. 7.39. that is, in the full measure. And, The way into the Holiest, was not open while the Tabernacle was standing, Heb. 9. 8. that is, plainly made manifest. And in this place, Beleevers of the new Testament receive the adoption: because they receive it in a more full and plentifull manner, in that the spirit of children is powred forth upon them in larger measure, whether wee regard Illumination, or the gifts of Regeneration. This must teach us that live in these latter dayes, to put on the condition of sonnes and daughters of GOD, in reverence, obedience, and thankfulnesse. But alas, among the multitude, it is farre otherwise. For the most live even as Atheists in ignorance, according to the lusts of their owne hearts. The faith and repentance which they professe, is but Ceremoniall faith and Repentance.

The second question is, whence springs our adoption? the answer is plaine in the words: from the obedience of the sonne, whereby he stood in subjection to the law. Here the question of all questions is answered, namely, what is that thing by which and for which a sinner is justified before God, and saved? Answ. The obedience of the Sonne of God made man, and made under the law for us. For this is it that frees us from under the law, and gives us the adoption of sonnes. And this alone is it, whereby we stand before the tribunall seat of God, which also wee are to oppose to the judgement of God, to hell, death, and condemnation.

Therefore our common people erre, that looke to be saved by their good deeds, that is, by their good meaning and dealing. They thus tread the blood of Christ under their owne feet, and become Iesuites or Saviours to themselves.

Secondly, they erre, that teach justification by the effinciall justice of the Godhead of the Sonne: for that is incommunicable: and they which are justified by it, are also deified.

Thirdly, the Papist erreth, which teacheth justification, partly by remission of sins, and partly by that which we call inward sanctification: which is imperfect and mixed in this life with our corruption, and therefore unfit to acquit and absolve us before God.

It may be said, what must we doe that wee may be justified and saved by this obedience of the Mediator? Answ. In the old Testament, when a man had sinned, he brought a sheepe or an oxe to the doore of the Tabernacle, and when the Priest cut the throat of it, the party laid his hand upon the head of it, Exodus 29.10. And hereby he signified, that the beast had done no hurt, and that hee as a guilty malefactor had deserved death. Now all this was done in figure: and it teacheth us, that we miserable sinners must come to God; that we must bring our sacrifice with us, namely, the Lambe of God, which is the Son of God, made man, and made under the law: that we must present this Lambe and the oblation thereof, to the Father for us, laying our hands on the head of it: that is, confessing our guiltinesse, and that wee have justly deserved death and perdition from the presence of God. In the last place, wee must intreat the Lord to accept the bloud of the Lambe for us, and the whole obedience of the Mediator. Thus shall wee bee justified and saved. Thou wilt say: I will therefore doe this, when I am dying. I say againe, let it be thy daily exercise to the very death. Thou wast seven yeares in learning of thy trade; thinke not therefore in an houre or two to worke thy reconciliation wih God. If thou set many yeares in learning such things as are done by the strength of nature, thinke not to attaine to things above nature, when and how thou wilt. It is a rule received of all men, that they must bleese themselves: now the the right way to bleese thy selfe, is to pleade guilty before God, and to intreat him to accept the obedience of the Mediatour for thee.

Verse 6. [Sonnes] that is, such as enjoy the liberty of sonnes. Sent forth is a speech borrowed from Embassadors, which are sent forth with instructions, what they shall say or doe: & it signifies that the Spirit reveales nothing but that which is the will of the Father and Sonne, *Ioh.*16.14. Crying] making us to cry, *Rom.*8.26. For if the words be taken properly, the Spirit must pray to it selfe. Abba] the next word is the exposition, Father.

The sense. The Father hath sent forth the Spirit of his Sonne unto you: this Spirit sent forth, dwels in your hearts, dwelling in your hearts, it maketh you pray to God as to a father: and all this it doth, because you are indeed sonnes of God.

The scope. The question is, whether beleevers of the new Testament, bee servants to the law, or children? Paul answers, No: and he gives two reasons. The first, was in the former verse: the second in this. And it is drawn from the signe, thus. Yee have received the spirit, crying, Abba, father: therefore yee are sonnes indeed.

In the words I consider five things: the person sent forth, the spirit of the Sonne: the person sending, God: the manner of sending: the place, whither the spirit is sent, your hearts: the office of the spirit, crying, Abba.

Of the first: the spirit of the sonne it is, who is sent forth. He is so called, first, because he proceeds by communication of substance, or godhead, not onely from the Father, but also from the Sonne. Secondly, because in his manhood he is annoynted and filled with the holy Ghost above measure: Thirdly, because by his death, hee hath merited the giving and sending the holy Ghost unto us.

Moreover, the Spirit of the Sonne is here described. First, he is a person subsisting of himselfe, in that he is said to bee sent forth: secondly, he is a divine person and no creature, because hee dwels in the hearts of all beleevers: thirdly, hee proceeds from the Father, and the Sonne; from the Father, because hee is sent of him; from the Sonne, because hee is the Spirit of the Sonne.

The Vse. By this we learne, that the intercession of Christ, is of force with God. For he prayed for the sending of the Spirit, and it is accomplished. Reade Iohn 14. 16.

And it is a superfluous doctrine, to teach the Real presence of the flesh of Christ in the Sacrament. For Christ is departed from us in respect of his manhood: because the Spirit is sent. Iohn 16.7.

Thirdly, that which the Spirit inwardly teacheth, is the same with that which the Sonne hath revealed by the ministery of the Prophets, and Apostles, because the Spirit is the Spirit of the Sonne. Reade Iohn 16. 14.

Doctrines, then concerning salvation, that contradict, or contrary to the Scriptures (as a great part of the Romish religion is) are not revealed by the Spirit of God, but are the fictions of the Devill.

The person sending is God, that is, the Father, in these words, God sent forth the Spirit of his Sonne. Where marke the distinction of the persons in Trinity. There is the Father, the Sonne, and the spirit of the Sonne. And here remember, that this action of sending forth, argues not superiority in the person sending, nor inferiority in the person sent: (for equals may send each other by common consent) but it argues Order, and a distinction of persons in respect of their beginning. For the Father is of none, the Sonne is of the Father, and the holy Ghost is of both: and hence it is that he is sent of both.

The manner of this sending forth, was on this sort. Wee may not imagine that in this sending there was any change of place, for the holy Ghost is every where. But he is said to be sent forth, when he manifests his presence by his divine operation, or by special & supernaturall gifts in the hearts of beleevers, as by the gift of illumination, faith, regeneration, life, sense & motion, are the gifts of the spirit, & so are civill vertues, but the sending of the spirit is onely in respect of such gifts as are bestowed in the Church, in the receiving of which, the spirit is acknowledged.

The place or mansion of the spirit is the heart, that is, the mind, will, & affection. The heart is the very sinke of sinne; yet that doth the Spirit chuse for his aboade. Hence wee learne:

1. That the beginning of our new birth is in the heart, when a new light is put into the minde, a new and heavenly disposition into the will and affection.

2. The most principall part of our change or renovation, is in the heart, where the spirit abides. The end of all teaching is, *love out of a pure heart, good conscience, and faith unfeined, 1 Tim.*1.5.

3. The beginning and principall part of Gods worship is in the heart. He that serves God in the righteousnesse of his heart, in peace, and joy in the holy Ghost, is accepted, *Rom.*14.17.

4. In our hearts no wicked or carnall thought, will, desire or lust must raigne, but onely Gods word and spirit. For thy heart is the house where the spirit dwels, and he must be Lord of his owne house.

5. Above all things keepe watch and ward about thy heart: and fill it with all good cogitations and desires, that it may be a fit place of entertainment for the Spirit, who is (as it were) an Embassadour sent from the great GOD unto thee.

The last thing is, the office of the Spirit, which is to make beleevers cry Abba. Here I consider foure things: 1. The meanes whereby this Crie is caused. 2. The nature of it. 3. To whom it is directed. 4. The manner of direction.

For the first, in the effecting or causing of this Cry, there are foure workes of the Spirit. The first is Conviction, when a man in his judgement and conscience is convicted, that the Scriptures of the Prophets and Apostles are indeed the Word of God. To this purpose there are many arguments which now I omit. This conviction is a common worke of the spirit, yet necessary, because much Atheisme lies lurking in our hearts, which maketh us call into question every part of the Word of God.

The second worke is Subjection, whereby a B man is convicted, that the Scripture, and every part of it is the Word of God, subjects himselfe in his heart to the commandement of God, which bids him turne to God and beleeve in Christ. And this second, is a worke of the spirit of grace proper to the Elect.

The third is, the Certificate or testimony of the spirit, which is a divine manner of reasoning framed in the mindes of them that beleeve and repent on this manner:

Hee that beleeves and repents, is Gods Childe.
Thou saith the Gospell.
But I beleeve in Christ, and repent: At the least I subjecte my will to the commandement which bids me repent and beleeve: I detest mine unbeliefe, and all my sinnes: and desire the Lord to increase my faith.
Therefore I am the Childe of God.

This is the practicall syllogisme of the holy Ghost. It is the testimony of the spirit, that we are the sonnes of God: it is the earnest of the spirit, and the seale whereby we are sealed to the day of our redemption: and it containes the certainty of speciall faith.

The fourth thing that followes upon this Testimony, is peace of conscience, joy, and affiance of God. And from this affiance comes the crying here mentioned, whereby every true beleever with open throat (as it were) cries unto God the Father. This doctrine is of great worth, it is the hinge upon which the gate of heaven turnes: and therefore to be remembred.

The Use. By this we see a manifest errour in the Popish Religion, which teacheth that wee can have no other salvation in this life, but that which is probable or conjecturall, that is, a certaintie joyned with feare, suspition and some doubting. Certaintie in respect of God, that promiseth: feare and doubting, in respect of our owne indisposition. But this doctrine is false. For they which are Gods children receive the spirit crying Abba: and this crying argues affiance or confidence in God. By faith we have confidence in God, and entrance with boldnesse, Ephes. 3.12. and boldnesse is opposite to feare, and excludes doubting in respect of our selves.

Againe, by this doctrine wee see it is ordinarie, and possible, for all that beleeve and repent, to be certainly assured that they are the children of God. For if they have the spirit of God crying in them (as all Gods children have) they cannot but perceive this cry, and withall they have the testimony of the spirit in their soules, which is the ground of this cry: Rom. 8.16. And seeing this is so, we must bee admonished to use all meanes, that wee may be assured that wee are the children of God: 2 Pet. 1.10. Give all diligence to make your election sure. Paul bids rich men lay up a good foundation against the time to come, 1 Tim. 6.19. And this foundation must bee laid, not in heaven, but in the conscience. God of his mercie, hath made a covenant of bargaine, with us that beleeve and repent: in this bargaine he hath promised to us pardon of our sinnes, and life everlasting: let us then never be at rest till we have received earnest from the hand of God, and have his promise sealed unto us by the spirit in our hearts. You will say, what shall I doe to be assured that I am Gods childe? Ans. Thou must examine thy selfe of two things. The first is, whether thou art convicted in thy judgement, that the Scripture is indeed the word of God: if thou art not yet convicted, then inquire and use meanes that thou maist indeed be convicted: otherwise all is in vaine. Secondly, inquire whether thou doest indeed, and in good earnest, submit and subject thy will to the commandement of God, C which bids thee beleeve in Christ, and turne unto God. For if thou canst say, that thou dost will to beleeve, & will to repent, if thou shew this will indeed in the use of good meanes, if thou condemne and detest thine unbeliefe and all other thy sinnes, thou hast received the earnest of the spirit, and thou are indeed the childe of God. And this assurance shall be unto thee of great use. For it will make thee rejoyce in afflictions: and it will worke patience, experience, hope, Rom. 5.5. It will make thee despise this world, it will take away the feare of death, and kindle in thy heart a desire to be with Christ.

II. Touching the nature of this Cry, it D stands in the desires and groanes of the heart, directed unto God. And these desires may be distinguished from all carnall desires by three properties. First of all they are in the hearts of them that are turned to God, or at the least begin to turne unto him. For God heareth no sinners. Secondly, they are conceived in the minde, according to the revealed will of God, Rom. 8.27. 2 John 5.14. Thirdly, they are divine and spirituall, touching things which concerne the kingdome of God. Rom. 8.5.

Desires thus qualified, have the force of a lowd cry in the eares of God, Psalm. 10.17. God heareth the desire of the poore. Psalme 38.9. All my desire is before thee. Psalme 145.19. Hee fulfilleth the desire of them that feare him. Esay 65.24. Before they cry I will answere: that is, so soone as a desire of my helpe is conceived, ceived, and before it be uttered, I will answer.

That the desires of our hearts are cryes, it is by meanes of the intercession of Christ. This Intercession is not a vocall, but a vertual prayer, in that the Sonne of God presents his manhood and his merits before the Father in heaven, willing as GOD, and desiring as man, that the Father should accept the said merits for us. Now this will and desire of the Sonne is of great force with the Father. It is a Crie in which the Father is well pleased: & by it the desires of our hearts are cries in the eares of God.

Of these desires there bee two speciall examples in the Scriptures. The first is, when wee are touched in our hearts for our sinnes to flie to the throne of grace, and to desire, B reconciliation with God in Christ. When David did but desire the pardon of his sins, and therefore purposed in his heart to humble himselfe, he received pardon, Psalme 32.5 I said I will confesse my wickednesse against my selfe unto the Lord, and thou forgavest the punishment of my sinne. When the Prodigall sonne conceived a desire to be reconciled to his father, with a purpose to confesse his offence, before he had uttered his desire, hee is received to mercy, Luke 15.21.

The second example is a desire of Gods presence and protection in common judgements. When Moses stood at the red sea, in great danger, having the sea before him, and Pharaohs Chariots behind him, no doubt hee C lifted up his heart unto God, but wee reade not of any thing that hee said, and yet the Lord saith, Why cryest thou to me, Exod. 14.15. When Jehosaphat was in great distresse by reason of the army of the Ammonites, confounded in himselfe, he saith, O Lord, we know not what to do, but our eies are towards thee, 2 Chron. 20. verse 12. and hereupon hee obtained deliverance.

The Use. By this we learne to lay aside formall praying and lip labour, and to learne to lift up our hearts to God in heavenly sighes and desires: for that is indeed to pray. It is the very first thing, that the Childe of GOD D doth, inwardly to sigh and desire reconciliation with God in Christ: and he which cannot doe this, is not as yet borne of God.

Againe, many are cast down in themselves, because they see their mindes full of ignorance, their wills full of rebellion, and subject to many temptations; and they finde little goodnes in themselves, but they must bee comforted by this: if they can but groane and sigh unto God in their hearts for mercy and forgiveneſse, they have the Spirit of God crying in them Abba; and they have received the first fruits of the spirit. The desires & cries of our hearts are fruits of the intercession, or cry of the Sonne of God in heaven for us.

Others are grieved, because they have prayed long, and they finde not the fruit of their prayers: but if they can pray, sighing & A groaning in their hearts for grace and mercy, let him be content, for it is the spirit of grace and prayer, that makes them sigh and groane. And every sigh of a contrite heart, hath a lowd crie in the eares of God.

It fals out often, that men in extremitie of danger confounded in themselves, know not what in the world to say, or doe. Ezechias in his sicknesse could not say any thing, but chatter in his throat, and mourne like a dove, Isa. 38.14. Some lie under the sword of the enemy, others in a tempest are cast over shipboard into the sea. Now this must bee their comfort, if they can lift up their hearts unto God, if they can but sigh and groane for his presence and assistance, the Lord will heare the petitions of their hearts: for the inward sobs, groanes, and sighs of repentant sinners, are lowd and strong cryes in the eares of God the Father.

The third point is, that the crie of the spirit is directed to God; because it makes us crie Abba, father. Here first observe, that Prayer to Saints and Angels, is carnall prayer. For the prayer which is caused by the Spirit, is directed to the Father. And good reason: for it is the property of God to heare the cry of the heart, Rom. 8.27 Some say, that the Saints in heaven are with GOD, and that in him they see the desires of our hearts; but it is false which they say. For the Scripture saith, that God alone searcheth the heart, 1 Kings 8.29. None knowes what is in man but God, and the spirit of man, 1 Corimb. 2.11. Though Abraham had the sight of God, yet it is said, Thou art our father, and Abraham knowes us not. Esay. 63.16. And for this cause Invocation of Saints, whether it be called Latria, or Dulia, is flat Idolatry.

Againe, Prayer is to be made to God as he hath revealed himselfe in the Word; that is, to God, who is the Father of Christ, and in him our father, who also sends his spirit into our hearts, crying Abba. It is an heathenish practice (which is also the practice of many among us) to pray to an absolute god, that is to God out of the Father, Sonne, and holy Spirit.

Thirdly, here we see that true and spirituall Invocation of God, is a marke of the childe of God: because it is a fruit of the spirit of God in them that are the children of God. And by this the people of GOD are noted, Act. 9.14. 1 Cor. 1.2. and on the contrary, it is the marke of an Atheist not to pray, Psalme 14 verse 4.

The last point is, the manner of directing our cries to God. First of all, they are to bee directed to him with reverence, as being present with us: for to crie Abba, is not to speake words into the ayre, but to direct our hearts to one that is present with us in all dutifull and childe-like manner. Thus did David Psal. 119.58 and Paul, Ephes. 3.14. Secondly, our cryes are to be directed to God, with subiection to his will. Reade the example of Christ, Mark. 14.36. and of David, 2 Sam. 15. 26. This condemnes the practice of many men. Balaam desired to die the death of the righteous, but without subiection to God: for hee would not live the life of the righteous. And many among us have often good motions and desires in their minds, but there is no soundnes in them: because they are not ioyned with a change and conversiō of heart and life. Thirdly, our desires are to bee directed unto God with importunity and instancie. For the spirit makes us cry Abba, Father: that is, My father, and thy father. God requires this importunity of us, Luke 18.1. It is practised by David, Psal. 69.4 by the woman of Canaan, Matth. 15. Wee must doe as Iacob did, wrastle with God, and give him no rest till he fulfill the desires of our hearts, and give us the blessing. And our constant desires and groanes to heaven for mercy, shall never boe in vaine. For if we aske any thing according to his will, hee heareth us indeed, 1 Iohn 5. verse 14.

Verse 7. These words, are the conclusion of the former doctrine of Paul. The time of your liberty is come, in that your liberty is procured and purchased by Christ, and yee have received the spirit of sonnes, crying Abba: therefore ye are not servants to the Law, but sonnes of God. And from this conclusion Paul derives a second, which is the summe and substance of the whole disputation, from the beginning of the third chapter, to this place, namely, that they which are soonnes, are also heires, not by the Law, and the works thereof, but by Christ.

This verse is a repetition of the 26. and 29. verses of the third chapter: therefore I will not stand any longer in the handling of it.

One thing is to be observed, namely, the change of the number. Paul said before, Yee are sonnes, here he saith, Thou art a sonne. And this hee doth to teach us, that they which turne to God, and beleeve in Christ, must bee assured that they are the sonnes and heires of God. Paul hath set downe immediately before, the infallible signe, whereby a man may know himselfe to be the child of God: therefore in the next words he saith; therfore thou art the sonne of God S. Iohn saith, These things we write unto you that beleeve, that ye may know that ye have life everlasting, 1 Iohn 5.13. Thus must every beleever apply the Gospell, and the benefits thereof to himselfe.

The meditation of this point serves greatly to sweeten all the crosses unto us: for if we know that we be Gods children, that is comfort enough: and wee may then assure our selves that in every crosse, God comes unto us as a father. Againe, this meditation workes a contentation in every losse. For if thou bee the childe of God, thou canst have no great losse. For all things are thine, thou Christs, and Christ Gods, 1 Cor. 3. 22. Lastly, this meditation must stirre up in us, a care to leade a heavenly & spirituall life 1 Iohn 3.3. that we may be like our eldest brother Christ Iesus.

Verse 8. But even then when ye knew not God, ye did service unto them, which by nature are not Gods.

Verse 9. But now seeing yee know God, or rather are knowne of God, how turne yee againe unto impotent and beggarly rudiments, whereunto as from the beginning, yee will bee in bondage againe.

Verse 10. Ye observe dayes and moneths, and times, and yeares.

Verse 11. I am in feare of you, lest I have bestowed labour in on you vaine.

Here Paul returnes againe to the principall conclusion of the whole Epistle, which is on this manner. If I Paul be called to teach, and my doctrine be true: ye have done evill to revolt from it to another Gospell: But I am called to teach, & my doctrine is true: this Paul proved in the first, second, and third chapters. Therefore ye have done evill to revolt from my doctrine. This conclusion he propounded before, and here againe he repeates it, and withal amplifies it two waies. Fitst, by setting downe the particular matter of the revolt and apostasie of the Galatians, verse 9, 10. Ye returne to impotent rudiments: Ye observe dayes, and times. Secondly, he sets downe the greatnesse of their revolt: first, by comparison, thus: Once yee served false gods: but there is some excuse of that offence: because ye did not know God: but that yee have returned to the Rudiments of the world, there is no excuse of it: for ye then knew God, or rather were knowne of God. Againe, hee sets forth the greatnesse of their revolt, by the effect, verse 11. It makes mee feare lest I have lost my labour among you.

Here Paul sets downe a threefold estate of the Galatians: their estate in Gentilisme before their conversion, their estate in their conversion, and their estate in the Apostasie.

Their estate in Gentilisme stands in two things: Ignorance of God [Then yee knew not God] Idolatry or superstition, ye served them which are not gods by nature.

Touching their ignorance of God, it may be demanded, how they can bee said not to know God, whereas Paul saith, That which may be knowne of God is made manifest unto the Gentiles? Rom. 1.20. And thus God did not leave himselfe without witnesse? Acts 14.17. Answ. Knowledge of God is twofold, Naturall, or revealed knowledge. Naturall is, that which all mē have in their minds by the light of nature, which also they may gather by the view and observation of the creatures. This knowledge hath two properties. The first, it is imperfect: because by it we know some few and generall things of God: as namely, that there is a God: and that he is to be worshipped, &c. In this respect, this knowledge is like the ruines of a Princely Pallace. Againe, it it is weake: because it serves onely to cut off excuse, and it is not sufficient to direct us in the worship of God. Nay when by it we begin to set down the worship of God, we then run headlong into superstition, and vanity. Revealed knowledge is, that which is set downe in the written word, whereby wee may know what God is in himselfe, & what he is to us: namely, a father in Christ, giving pardon of sinne & life everlasting. This knowledge the Gentiles altogether want: nay, by reason of the blindnes and impotency of their minds, they iudge it foolishnesse. Thus then in effect, though the Gentiles by nature know some things of God, yet doe they not know God as he will be knowne of us.

Againe, it may be demanded, whether this ignorance be a sinne in the Galatians? Ans. Yea. For all men are bound to know God by the first commandement. And this ignorance is a want of the Image of God in the minde, Col. 3.10. and every defect of the Image of God, is a branch of originall sinne. And vengeance is the punishment of this sin, 2 Thess. 1.8.

It may bee obiected, that Paul here excuseth the Galatians by their ignorance. Answ. It excuseth à tanto, non à toto, that is, the degree and measure of the sinne, and not the sinne it selfe, Luke 12.48.

Againe, it may be said, that this their ignorance is invincible, because as the Gentiles do not know God, so they cannot know him. Answ. That they cannot know him, it is not Gods fault, but the fault of their first Parents, and consequently their fault: and this ignorance spreads it selfe over all mankinde; as a punishment of the first offence.

The third point is, that this ignorance is a great and grievous sin: for here Paul makes it the mother of superstition and Idolatry. This must teach us all to detest this ignorance of God and his will, and to seeke by all meanes to know God. God hath a controverse with men, because they know him not, Hosea 4. verse 1.6.

Againe, this serves to warne all Ministers of the word, to be carefull to roote out ignorance out of the mindes of the people, and to plant the knowledge of God. And by this we see, it is falle which the Papist teacheth, that Ignorance is the mother of Devotion.

The second sinne of the Galatians is, that they served them, which are not gods by nature, that is, false gods, nor gods indeede, but gods in opinion.

It may be obiected, that the wisest of the Gentiles worshipped the true God, Creatour of heaven and earth. Ans. False gods are set up two waies. The first is, when that which is not God, is placed and worshipped in the roome of the true God; as when the Sunne, Moone, and Starres are worshipped, &c. and this is the grossest kinde of Idolatry. The second is, when men acknowledge the true God, but doe not conceive him, as hee will be conceived, and as he hath revealed himselfe in the Word. In this respect the Ephesians are said to bee without God, Ephes. 3.12, and the Samaritans to worship they know not what; Iohn 4.22. For they conceived the true God in a false manner, because they conceived him forth of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost: and therefore they set up a false god unto themselves. False worship given to God, presupposeth a false opinion of God: and a false opinion of God, sets up an Idol or false god in the roome of the true God. For it is not sufficient to conceive some true things of God, but we must precisely conceive him, as hee hath revealed himselfe, without addition or detraction. And thus did the wisest of the Galatians worship false gods.

This Idolatry is a common sin, and bred (as it were) in the bone. The Turkes at this day worship a false and fained god. For they conceive and worship a god creatour of heaven and earth, that is neither father, sonne, nor holy Ghost: and the Iewes worship God out of Christ: and so a fained god. For Hee which hath not the Sonne, hath not the Father, 1 Iohn. 2.23. Likewise the religion of the Papist teacheth and maintaineth the worship of false gods. For it gives to Angels and Saints a faculty or power to know the desires of our hearts, to heare, and help us in all places, at all times: and hereupon prayer is made to them: but all this is indeed the prerogative and priviledge of the true God: and in as much as it is given to Angels and Saints departed, they are set up in the roome of the true God.

Again, that religion teacheth men to worship God, in, at, and before Images. And this worship presupposeth an Opinion or imagination that there is a God that will bee present to heare and helpe us, in, at, and before Images: now this god is a god devised by the braine of man. Papists alledge, that their intention is to worship the true God, the Father, Sonne, & holy Ghost. And I say againe, that the true God hath revealed his will, that he doth detest this manner of worship: and therefore the worship is directed either to the Images themselves, or to the god devised in the braine.

Thirdly, they of the Popish religion worship a fained Christ of their owne devising: namely, a Christ that sits at the right hand of the Father in heaven, and is withall in the hands of every priest, after the words of consecration. And they worship a god set up by themselves, namely, a god that will be appeased by humane satisfactions, and at whose hands a sinfull man may merit everlasting life, that is to say, a God all of mercy, and little or no iustice.

Though our Religion teach no Idolatry, yet certaine it is, that many among us practise a spirituall Idolatry in their hearts. For looke what a man loves most, and cares most for, and delights moſt in, that is his God; ſome therefore have their riches for their god, ſome their pleaſures, ſome their beaſtly luſts. For where thy heart is, there is thy god. Againe, the ignorant multitude worſhip a god of their owne coyning, which is a god made of all mercy, and no juſtice. For they perſwade themſelves that there is mercy with God, though they repent not, but goe on in their ſinnes; whereas the true God is infinite, not onely in mercy, but alſo in iuſtice, Exod. 34.

That this ſinne of Idolatry may be rooted out of the mindes of men, there muſt be firſt an Illumination of the minde, with the knowledge of the true God and his will: and there muſt alſo be a renovation of the heart and affections, that they ſet not up ſomething elſe in the roome of God.

The eſtate of the Galatians after their converſion is in theſe words, Te know God, or rather are knowne of God.

The knowledge whereby men know God, is either literall knowledge, or ſpirituall knowledge: literall, is when the doctrine of God, and his will is known, without reformation of life. Spirituall knowledge is, when the minde is inlightned by the ſpirit of God, with the knowledge of God, by the word, and according to the word; ſo as thereupon men are transformed into the Image of God, 2 Cor. 3.18. And this kinde of knowledge is here meant, when Paul ſaith, Te know God.

The foundation of this knowledge is, that GOD is to be knowne in Chriſt: for in him God hath manifeſted his infinite wiſedome, iuſtice, mercy. Therefore he is called The ingraven image of the perſon of the father, Heb. 1.2 And Paul ſaith, That We have the knowledge of the glory of God, in the face of Ieſus Chriſt, 2 Cor. 4.6.

The properties of this knowledge are three. The firſt is, that it muſt bee a Special knowledge, whereby wee muſt acknowledge God to be our God in Chriſt. The firſt commandement of the law requires, that we take the true God for our God. The commandement of Chriſt is, Beleeve the Goſpel. Now the ſtipulation of the covenant of grace (which alſo is the ſubſtance of the Goſpel) is this, I am thy God, Ier. 31.33. this therefore muſt we beleeve: and to this knowledge is the promiſe of life everlaſting annexed, Iob. 17.3. Iſ. 53.11.

The ſecond property is, that this knowledge muſt not bee confuſed, but diſtinct. Firſt, we muſt acknowledge the true God in reſpect of his preſence with us in all places. Thus Moſes is ſaid to know the inviſible, Hebr. 11 27 Secondly, we muſt know and acknowledge God in reſpect of his particular providence over us. Thus David knew God, when he ſaid, that he numbred his ſtattings, and put his teares into his bottle, Pſalme 56.8. Thirdly, we muſt know God in reſpect of his will, in all things to be done, and to be ſuffered: and

A this is the right knowledge of God, to have regard to his will, Rom. 12.2. Eph. 5.17. David ſaith, All thy lawes are before me, 2 Sam. 22. verſ. 23. and when Shimei reviled, hee ſpake thus, Heeraileth becauſe God bids him raile, 2 Samuel 16.10. Laſtly, we muſt know and acknowledge God in the power which hee ſhewed in the death & reſurrection of Chriſt. Reade and conſider, Epheſ. 1.17. where Paul placeth the knowledge of God in two things: in the knowledge of the riches of eternall life, and in an experimentall knowledge of the vertue of the reſurrection of Chriſt in our ſelves.

The third property is, that this knowledge muſt bee an effectuall and lively knowledge, working in us new affections and inclinations, He that ſaith he knowes God, and keepes not his commandements, makes him a lyar, 1 Iohn 2.4. and 3.6. 1 it. 2. verſe laſt.

The Vſe. Seeing the converſion of a ſinner ſtands in the ſpirituall knowledge of God, we muſt be ſtirred up to ſeeke to know God according as he will be knowne of us. Wee deſire to ſerve God: and we cannot ſerve him, unleſs we know him; nay, ſo long as we know him not, we doe nothing but ſerve the falſe gods of our owne hearts. Againe, we deſire life eternall: and this is life, in right manner to acknowledge God, Iohn 17. 3. And the whole matter of our boaſting, muſt bee the knowledge of God, Ierem. 9.24. God himſelfe miniſtreth unto mee a further argument to move you to this deſire: namely, by the mooving of the earth yeſterday. For though Philoſophers aſcribe all to nature, yet the truth is, that the trembling and the ſhogging of the earth, is a ſigne of the great and extraordinary anger of God. The cauſe of this anger is, that we know not God, neither doe we for the moſt part care to know him. Wee have had the Goſpel long, but we bring forth but ſmall fruits. For this cauſe the earth in his trembling doth, as it were groane to bee diſburdened of ſo rebellious a Nation, and it doth after a ſort crave leave of God; that it may devoure a ſinfull people, as it once devoured Dathan, and the company of Abiram. Now our duty is, in this iudgement of God to acknowledge his Maieſty, his anger, and his iuſtice: and with feare and trembling to humble our ſelves for our ſinnes paſt, thereby to prevent his anger to come. The earth a bruite and dumbe creature in his kinde, is become a preacher unto us: and his trembling muſt teach us to tremble in our hearts, and to ſinne no more.

Againe, if we muſt know God, wee muſt remember God and Chriſt: and as wee muſt know God, ſo muſt we remember him. Now wee muſt not know Chriſt according to the fleſh, 2 Corinth. 5.17. and therefore we may not remember Chriſt according to the fleſh, that is, in any worldly and carnall manner. This therefore is not to keepe a Memory of Chriſt

Chriſt, to ſpend twelve dayes in revell and riot, in masking and mumming, in carding and dieing (as many doe:) this is rather to bury the memory of Chriſt, and to doe homage to the god of pleaſure. Of them that ſaid, Let us eate, drinke, and ſleepe, Paul ſaith thus; Awake and doe righteouſly: for ſome of you doe not know God, 1 Cor. 15.34.

Paul ſaith further, But rather ye are knowne of God. The knowledge whereby God knows men, ſtands in two things: His Election of them to his ſpeciall love, 2 Tim. 1.19. and the execution of Election, whereby he makes men his peculiar people, by calling, iuſtifying, and ſanctifying of them, Tit. 2.14.

Hence obſerve: firſt, that Gods Election is B the root of all the gifts of God in us. Wee know God, becauſe he firſt knowes us. Paul ſaith, that we were elected that we might be holy Eph. 1.4. Therefore wee are not elected (as ſome teach) either for our faith, or according to our faith, but to our faith, that is, elected that we might beleeve.

Secondly, hence we learne, that we can neither thinke, will, or doe that which is good, unleſſe God prevent us with his grace. God muſt firſt vouchſafe to acknowledge us, before wee can acknaowledge him. Iohn 10. 14. Preventing grace is two-fold. The firſt, and the ſecond. The firſt, when God in our firſt converſion takes away the ſtony heart, and puts a fleſhy heart in the roome. The ſecond C is, after we are regenerate: for then God ſtill prevents us with good motions and deſires. Or both reade Ezek. 36.26. Some teach, that if we do that which we can, God will give us his grace: but this is falſe: for then we ſhould prevent God.

Thirdly, by this we ſee, that the workes of grace in God imprint their image in the hearts of them that belong to God. And this is worth the marking. There is a knowledge in God whereby he knowes who are his: and this knowledge brings forth another knowledge in us, whereby we know God for our God. There is an election in God which workes in the Elect another election, where- D by they chuſe God for their God. The love, whereby God loves us, workes in us another love whereby we love God, 1 Iob. 4.19. Chriſt firſt apprehends us: and this apprehenſion of his, workes in us the apprehenſion of faith, whereby we lay hold upon him, Phil. 3. 12. When Chriſt makes intercceſſion for us in heaven, there is another intercceſſion wrought in our hearts by the ſpirit, whereby we cry Abba father, Rom. 8. 26. The death of Chriſt hath a vertue in it to worke in us the death of ſinne. Thus doth the Spirit of God ſeale us to the day of our redemption. By this may we know that we belong to God, if we finde any impreſſion of the grace of God in us. The ſunne by his light ſhines upon us, and by the ſame light we view and behold the ſunne.

Laſtly, here is the foundation of true com- A fort. Our faith doth not ſave us, becauſe it is a perfect vertue; but becauſe it apprehends a perfect obiect; namely, the perfect obedience of Chriſt. So then, if our faith erre not in his obiect, but be rightely fixed on the true cauſes of our ſalvation, though it bee but a weake faith, and doe no more but cauſe us to will, deſire, & indeavor to apprehend Chriſt, it is true faith, and iuſtifieth: the weakneſſe of it ſhall not hinder our ſalvation, which ſtands not in this, that we doe know God, but in this, that God knowes us, whoſe knowledge is perfect, and cannot faile. Againe, our ſalvation ſtands not in our apprehenſion of Chriſt, but in Chriſts apprehending of us, Phil. 3.12.

This knowledge of God whereby he knows us, hath two properties. Firſt, it is ſpeciall, whereby hee knowes all the Elect even by name, Exod. 33.17. Againe, it is a perpetuall and unchangeable knowledge. For whom God once knowes, hee never forgets, Iſay 49.15.

The third eſtate of the Galatians is their eſtate in their revolt or Apoſtaſie, in theſe words: How turne ye againe to impotent and beggarly rudiments, whereunto as from the beginning ye will be in bondage againe? or thus, to which ye will doe ſervice againe as from the beginning?

The words carie this ſenſe: How turne ye againe? that is, it is an intolerable offence in C you, having knowne God, to returne againe to the rudiments of the law. By rudiments we are to underſtand circumciſion, the Iewiſh ſacrifices, and all the ceremonies of the law of Moſes. And it may not ſeeme ſtrange, that they are called impotent and beggarly rudiments. For they muſt bee conſidered three waies; with Chriſt, without Chriſt, & againſt Chriſt. With Chriſt, when they are cõſidered as types and figures of Chriſt to come, and as ſignes of grace by divine inſtitution for the time of the old Teſtament. Without Chriſt, when they are uſed onely for cuſtome, whether before or after the death of Chriſt. Againſt Chriſt, when they are eſteemed as meritorious cauſes of ſalvation, and the iuſtification of a ſinner is placed in them, either in whole or in part: as though Chriſt alone were not ſufficient. In this reſpect Paul calls them impotent and beggarly rudiments.

And, Paul having ſaid, that the Galatians returned againe to the rudiments of the law, in the next words he ſhewes how they doe it: namely, by ſerving them againe. They ſerved, or yeelded obedience to them three waies: In opinion, becauſe they iudged them to be neceſſary parts of Gods worſhip, and meanes of their ſalvation. In conſcience, becauſe they ſubiected their conſciences to them. In affection, becauſe they placed part of their affiance in them for their iuſtification and ſalvation.

It may be demanded, how the Galatians can be ſaid to returne againe to the rudiments of the law, and serve them againe, that were never used to them before? Ans. In the speech of Paul there is that which is called Catechresis, that is, a kinde of speaking somewhat improper in respect of finenesse and elegancie. The like we have, Ruth 1.22. when Ruth is said to returne to Iuda with Naomi, and yet shee was never there before. Nevertheless, the speech in sense is most significant and proper. For Paul (no doubt) signifies hereby, that when the Galatians subiected themselves to the rudiments of the Law, and placed their salvation in part even in them, they did in effect and in truth as much as returne againe to their old superstitions, and serve againe their false gods.

Here then we have a description of the Apostasie of the Galatians. It is a voluntary sin (for Paul saith, ye will serve) after the knowledge of the truth, in which they returne again to the rudiments of the law, by yeelding subiection and service to them: which act of theirs is indeed as much as if they had served againe their false gods. Here some may say, if this be so, then they sinned against the Holy Ghost. Answer. The sinne against the Holy Ghost, is indeed a voluntary sinne: but that is by reason of the obstinacy and malice of the will: and this offence in the Galatians was voluntary onely by infirmity. Againe, the sinne against the holy Ghost is an universall Apostasie, in respect of all the Articles of religion: for that sin makes men crucifie Christ crucified, Heb. 6.6 and to tread under foot the sonne of God: the Apostasie of the Galatians was particular, onely in the Article of Iustification.

The Vse. In that the ceremonies of the law set up against Christ, in the cause of our iustification and salvation, are called impotent and beggarly rudiments, Paul teacheth a waighty conclusion: that Christ stands alone in the worke of redemption, without collegue or partner, without deputy, or substitute, whether we respect the whole worke of redemption, or the least part of it. Againe, that all the workes of mediation stand alone by themselves, and admit nothing to be added and adioyned to them, There is no other name whereby we can be saved beside the name of Christ, Act. 4.12. Christ saves them perfectly that come unto him. Heb. 7.25. In him we are complete. Col. 2.10. He alone treades the wine-presse of Gods wrath, and none with him, Isa. 63.3. If Christ be a Saviour, he must be a perfect Saviour, considering he is God and man: and being a perfect Saviour in himselfe, hee needs no partner, and because hee is every where at all times, therefore he needs no deputy in his stead. Againe, every worke of redemption is acted by whole Christ, according to both his natures: and as there are in him two natures, so are there two operations of the said natures, and as both natures concurre to make the compound worke of a mediatour, which is an admirable worke, not meerly humane, but Theandricke, that is, humane-divine. For this cause no action pertaining to redemption, can be performed by a meere creature, whether man or Angell.

Obiect. 1. Iohn 20.23. The Apostles have the power to remit and retaine sinnes: therefore it is not proper to Christ. Answ. To remit by meriting and by efficacie in the conferring of pardon, is proper to the Mediatour. The Apostles and other Ministers remit by preaching and by declaring remission. The Ministers of the Word doe not procure our reconciliation with God as Christ doth, but they exhort men to be reconciled to GOD, 2 Cor. 5.20.

Obiect. 11. 1 Pet. 3.18. Baptisme saveth: therefore not Christ alone. Answ. Baptisme saveth by signifying and by sealing unto us the grace and mercy of God: and the effecting of our salvation is in the same place ascribed to Christ and his resurrection.

The conclusion then of Paul is to be remembred: for it serves as an engine to overturne the maine grounds of Popery. The primacy of the Pope is a certaine estate, in which hee is substituted into the place and roome of Christ: for he takes upon him to make lawes, that properly & truly bind conscience, even as the lawes of God. Againe, he takes unto him a proper and iudiciall power, to remit or retaine the sinnes of men. Now these actions indeed, are the proper actions of God and Christ, no meere creature is capable of them. In this respect the primacy of the Pope is an impotent and beggarly invention. Againe, the Romish religion, beside the al-sufficient oblation of Christ upon the Crosse, sets up the Sacrifice of the Masse for the sinnes of the quicke and the dead: besides the intercession of Christ, it sets up the intercession of Saints and Angels: beside the perfect satisfaction of Christ, it sets up humane satisfactions: beside the infinite merite of Christ, it maintaines and magnifies the merit of humane workes. But all these are but impotent and beggarly devices of men. For Christ in his Sacrifice, Satisfaction, Intercession, Merit, admits no corrivall or associate. All actions of his are perfect in their kinde, and need no supply.

This againe must teach us, to content our selves with Christ alone, and not to set up any thing with him or against him. This is the safest and the surest course. A certaine Papist writeth to this effect, that wee Protestants in our iustification, cleave onely to the body of the tree, and that the Papists cleave both to the body and the branches. And I say againe, it is the safest with both the hands to cleave to the body of the tree: and he that with one hand layes hold upon the body of the tree, and with the other stayes himselfe upon the branches, is in great danger of falling.

The

The second conclusion of Paul is, that to set up any thing out of Christ, as a meritorious cause of salvation, and to place our justification in it, either in whole, or in part, is indeed the service of idolls. And the reason is plaine. For this is to set up something in the place and roome of Christ: and men put a confidence in that which they make a cause of their owne salvation.

The doctrine then of Iustification by workes, is a doctrine that maintaines idolatrie; for if they iustifie, we may put our trust in them: and if we put our confidence in them, we make idols of them. That workes may merit at Gods hand, they must not onely be sanctified, but also deified.

The distinction used by the Papists, of Latria, and Dulia, that is, of worship, and service, falls to the ground. They say they give worship to God, and service to Angells and Saints. It is a toy. For here Paul condemnes the very service to heathen gods: and the service of the rudiments of the law, is the Apostasie of the Galatians. And to give service or worship to any thing, are all one.

The third conclusion of Paul is, that they which have given their names to God, and Christ, must not returne to any thing, that they have forsaken, or ought to forsake. Hee that puts his hand to the plough, must not looke backe: he that goes to the land of Canaan, must not looke backe to Egypt. We in England have beene long deliyered from the superstition of Popery, and wee must not so much as dreame of any returne. It is a common fault among us, that in outward profession we cleave to Christ, and yet in affection and practice we cleave to the world, and walk after the lusts of our owne hearts. This is in shew to goe forward, but indeed to turne backe againe. But our duty is, in thought, conscience, will, affection, word, and deed, to goe on forward, and no way to goe backe.

Ver. 10. In the former verse, Paul sets down the Apostasie of the Galatians in generall termes, saying, How turne ye againe to the Elements of the world? In the 10. verse, he shewes what these elements be, Ye observe dayes, and moneths, and times, and yeares. By dayes, are meant Iewish Sabbaths: by moneths, the feasts observed every moneth in the day of the new Moone. By times, some understand the feast of the Passeover, the feast of Pentecost, and the feast of Tabernacles. But the word (καιρὸς) signifies seasons, or fit times, for the doing of this or that businesse. So is it translated, Acts 1.7. It is not for you to know the times and seasons. It was the manner of the Gentiles to make difference of times in respect of good or bad successe, and that according to the signes of heaven. And it is very likely, that the Galatians observed dayes not onely in the Iewish, but also in the heathenish manner. By yeares, are meant every seventh yeare, and the Iubilie yeares, which the Galatians observed after the fashion of the Iewes.

Againe, there is a fourefold kinde of observation of dayes; one naturall, the other civill, the third Ecclesiasticall, the fourth superstitious. Naturall is, when daies are observed according to the course of the Sunne and Moone, Gen. 1.14. thus day followes night, and night followes day, and every yeare hath foure seasons, Spring, Summer, Autumne, Winter. And the observation of these times is according to the law of nature. Civill observation is, when set times are observed for husbandry, in planting, setting, reaping, sowing: for houshold affaires, and for the affaires of the common-wealth, in keeping of faires, and markets, &c. And thus to observe daies, is not unlawfull. Ecclesiasticall observation of times is, when set dayes are observed for orders sake, that men may come together to worship God: these dayes, are either dayes of thanksgiving, or dayes of humiliation. Of daies of thanksgiving, take the example of the Iewes, Hest. 9.26. who observed yeerely the feast of Purim, for a memory of their deliverance. In like manner they appointed and observed the feast of Dedication: and it seemes that Christ was present at Ierusalem, as an observer of this feast, Iohn 10.22. And thus, for orders sake, to observe certaine dayes of solemnitie, is not forbidden. Superstitious observation of daies, is twofold, Iewish, or heathenish. Iewish, when set daies are observed with an opinion that we are bound in conscience to observe them, and when the worship of God is placed in the observing of this or that time. Heathenish, when dayes are observed in respect of good or bad successe. Now then, to come to the point, the intent of Paul is onely to condemne the Iewish manner of observing of dayes, in these words, Ye observe daies, moneths, yeeres: and the heathenish manner, in these words, ye observe seasons.

Against this interpretation, the place of Paul may be obiected, Rom. 14.6. He that observes the day, observes it to the Lord. Ans. Indeed Paul in these words excuseth the Romanes that observed dayes, & saith, that their intention was to observe them to the honour of God: and this he saith, because as yet they were not fully instructed touching Christian liberty: but withall let it be remembred, that in milde sort he notes this to bee a fault in them, when hee saith, that they were weake in faith. Now the case was otherwise with the Galatians: because they observed dayes after they had beene informed touching their liberty in Christ: and withall they placed their salvation, in part, in the observation of dayes: and thus they mixed the Gospell with the law. And therefore they were iustly to bee blamed.

Againe, it may be obiected, that now in the time of the new Testament, wee in religious maner observe the Lords day. Answ. Some men both godly and learned are of opinion, that the Lords day was appointed by the Apostles for orders sake: and that it is in the liberty of the Church to appoint the Sabbath upon any other day in the weeke, because they say, all dayes without exception are equall: and they add further, that when the publike worship of God is ended, men may then returne to their labours, or give themselves to recreation, on the Lords day. But this doctrine seemes not to stand with the fourth Commandement.

It seemes to bee a truth more probable, that every seventh day in the weeke must be set apart in holy rest unto God: for this is the substance of the fourth Commandement. And it is also very probable, that the Sabbath of the new Testament is limited and determined by our Saviour Christ to the Lords day. For Paul and the rest of the Apostles observed the first day of the weeke for a Sabbath day, Act. 20.7. and he saith, Whatsoever ye have heard, and what ye have seene in me, that do, Phil 4.9. Againe, it was the decree or constitution of Paul, that the collection for the poore should be the first day of the weeke at Corinth: now this collection in the Primitive Church, followed preaching, prayer, Sacraments, and it was the conclusion of all other exercises in the assembly, 1 Cor. 16.2. And this first day of the weeke is called the Lords day, Apoc. 1.11. and it is so called, because it was dedicated and consecrated to the honour of Christ our Lord. And who is the author of this dedication but Christ himselfe the Lord of the Sabbath? It is alledged, that the Sabbath, and the commandement touching the Sabbath, is ceremoniall: & upon this ground they take libertie, and keepe no Sabbath at all. But the truth is, that the commandement touching the Sabbath is not wholly ceremoniall. It may bee, the first words, Remember the Sabbath day to sanctifie it, and the words, In it thou shalt doe no manner of worke, &c. are spoken of the Iewes Sabbath: but the words, Six dayes shalt thou labour, and the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God, are morall, and containe a perpetuall truth. Therefore the words of Paul must be conceived with an exception of the Sabbath day, which is the seventh day in every weeke; which day Christ hath limited by his Apostles to the Lords day.

The Vse. This text of Paul discovers unto us a great part of the superstition of the Popish Church, in the observation of holy daies. First, beside the Lords day, they appoint many other Sabbaths: whereas it is the privilege of God to appoint an ordinary day of rest, & to sanctifie it to his owne honour. Secondly, they binde mens consciences to the observation of their holy dayes, which Paul here forbids, and Col. 2.16. Thirdly, they place the worship of God in the observation of their holy dayes: but God is worshipped in vaine by mens precepts, Matth. 15. Fourthly, they place a great holinesse in their festivall daies, more than in other daies. Fiftly, they dedicate many of their holy dayes to the honour of Saints and Angels: whereas the dedication of ordinary and set dayes, is a part of divine or religious worship. Lastly, their holy daies for number are more than the festivall dayes of the Iewes: and thus they bring people into their old bondage, nay to a greater bondage than ever the Iewes endured, in respect of daies & times. It may be said that the Church of the Protestants observes holy daies. Answ. Some Churches doe not: because the Church in the Apostles dayes had no holy day, beside the Lords day: and the 4. commandement injoynes the labour of sixe dayes. Indeed the Church of England observeth holy dayes, but the Popish superstition is cut off. For we are not bound in conscience to the observation of these daies: neither do we place holines, or the worship of God in them: but we keep them onely for orders sake, that men may come to the Church to heare Gods word. And though wee retaine the names of Saints daies, yet we give no worship to Saints, but to God alone. And such dayes as contained nothing in them but superstition, as the conception, and assumption of the virgin Mary, wee have cut off. Thus doth the Church with us observe holy dayes, and no otherwise. Indeed the ignorant multitude among us faile greatly in the observing of dayes. For they greatly solemnize the time of the birth of Christ: and then they keepe few or no markes: but the Lords day is not accordingly respected: and men will not be disswaded from following of fayres on that day.

Againe, to observe dayes of good and bad successe, according to the constellations of the heavens, is an heathenish fashion to be avoyded. For it is here condemned in the Galatians. Here therefore wee must bee put in minde, not to observe the planetary houres: for men suppose that the houres of the day are ruled by the planets, and hereupon, that some houres are good, and lucky, (as they say) and some unlucky: that men are taken with planets, and borne under unlucky planets. But these are heathenish conceits. Neither must wee respect our Horoscope, or the time of our birth, and the constellation of the heavens then, as though wee could hereby know, what should befall us to the end of our dayes. And wee must not put difference of dayes, as though some were lucky unto us, and some unlucky, according to the course of the starres. The like I say of the Criticall daies, that is, the 7. and the 14. day after that a man begins to be sicke. For they are grounded upon the aspects of the moone, which are not to bee regarded. And the Climatericall yeares are not to bee observed as dangerous and dismall. The observation of the signes, is of the same nature. For the 12. signes are nothing else, but 12. parts of the first moveable, which is but a supposed heaven. Therefore there there is no danger in the thing, but in our conceit. We are to feare God, and not to feare the starres: neither are we to make differences of dayes in respect of them, as though the affaires we take in hand, should prosper the better or the worse, in respect of their different operation. Gods commandement is, Feare not the signes of heaven, Ieremy 10.2. And good reason. For no man can by learning know the operation of the Starres: because their lights and operations are all mixed together in all places upon earth: and therefore no observation can bee made of this or that starre, more than of this or that herbe, when all herbes are mixed and compounded together. Againe, the operation of the starres is by their light, and light hath no operation but in heat or cold, moysture and drinesse. In this respect, (though we may well observe the full and change of the Moone) it is foolishnesse to ascribe the regiment of our affaires to the starres, they being matters contingent, which depend on the will & pleasure of man. Lastly, it is a great oversight to hold sundry of the starres to bee malignant and infortunate, in respect of us: whereas they are the creatures of God, and their light serves for the good of man. In a word, we are not to make difference of dayes, neither in respect of holinesse, nor in respect of good or bad successe.

Vers. 11. I am afraid, &c. In these words the Apostle sets down the greatnesse of the apostasie of the Galatians, by the effect thereof, which was to cause him to feare, lest hee had bestowed labour in vaine among them.

First, the occasion of the words must bee considered, and that is expressed in the former words, Ye observe dayes and moneths. And hereupon he saith, I am in feare of you. And thus Paul teacheth, that workes set up as causes of salvation with Christ, make void the Ministery and grace of God. It may be sayd, that is meant of ceremoniall workes, and so it is true. I answer, it is indeed spoken of ceremoniall workes, but it must be inlarged to all workes without exception. For Paul saith, *c.*5.v.3. If ye be circumcised, ye are bound to fulfill the whole law. Hence then it followes, that the doctrine of justification by workes, is an error in the foundation, and being distinctly, and obstinately maintained, there is no hope of salvation.

Againe, here wee see the fidelity of the Apostle Paul, and it stands in two things: the first is, his painfull and wearisome labour, to gaine the Galatians to God. The second is, his care that the foresaid labour be not in vaine. And in this example of his, we learne three things. The first, that they which are, or desire to be dispensers of the word, must doe it not for the belly, or for lucres sake, or for the praise of men, but simply for this end, that they may gaine soules to God. The Scribe that would have followed Christ for gaine, was repelled with this answer, that Christ had not so much as a place where to lay his head, Mat. 8. 20. and to preach for by-respect, is to make a merchandise of the word of GOD, 2 Cor. 2.17. The second is, that Ministers after the example of Paul, must bee labourers indeed, 2 Cor. 5.9. and workmen, 2 Tim. 2.15. And they must shew themselves to be so, by their care and industry in winning soules to God. And it is not sufficient now and then to make a discourse upon a Text. Thirdly, Ministers of the word must be watchmen, Ezek. 3.14. and Heb. 13.17. their office is not onely to guide and call men to God, but also to preserve and keepe them in Christ, which are already called.

Thirdly, here we see the condition of the Church of Galatia, and of all other visible Churches upon earth, that they are subject to Apostasie. It may be laid, how can this bee, considering true beleevers cannot fall away? Answ. In the visible Church on earth, there are foure kinds of beleevers. The first are they, which heare the word without zeale, & they are like the stony ground. The second are they, which heare, know, and approve the word. The third are they, which heare, know, and approve the word, and have a taste of the power thereof, and accordingly yeeld some outward obedience. The fourth are they, which heare, know, approve, and keepe the word, in that they believe it, and are framed into the obedience of it. The three first may fall quite away, the fourth cannot. And by this meanes it comes to passe, that visible Churches upon earth may fall away: because of them that professe the faith, three to one may utterly fall away.

The use. This must teach us that are members of the visible Church, to feare and to suspect our selves: and not to content our selves, because we have some good things in us: but we must labour to be sealed up to the day of our redemption, and to lay up a good foundation against the time to come, 1 Tim. 6. 18. by seeking to have in us such good things, as are proper to the Elect, as unfained faith in Christ, and conversion to God from all our sinnes.

It may be demanded, how Pauls labour should be in vaine? Answ. It was in vaine in respect of his owne desire and affection to save all the Galatians: secondly, it was in vaine, in respect of the whole body of that Church, where of many were hypocrites. It was not in vaine in respect of the elect, nor in respect of the counsell of God, Isay 55.11.

Againe it may be demanded, what must be done when the labours of our callings are in vaine? Answ. We must follow the calling and commandement of God, whether wee have good successe or no, and whatsoever come of it. Paul feares lest his labours is in vaine, and yet hee still labours. When Peter had laboured all night and caught nothing, he saith, at the commandement of Christ, In thy they word will I cast out my net, Luke 5.5. And thus to doe, (whatsoever followes) is true wisedome, and the feare of God. For it must suffice us; that the workes we take in hand is pleasing unto God. And though it bee in vaine, in respect of men, it is not so before God, Iser 49.4. and 2 Cor. 2.28. This must every man remember in his place and calling, for the establishing of his minde against all events.

Verse 12. Be you as I, for I am even as you: I beseech you brethren ye have not hurt me at all.

The words in this verse, to the sixteenth verse, are an answer to an objection. The objection is this, We see now by these sharpe reproofes, that Paul hath changed his mind towards us, and that he hath turned his love into hatred. The answer is, be as I, I am as you: the speech is very effectuall and significant, and it is like the common proverb, amicus, alter ego, alter idem: that is, A mans friend is all one with himselfe. The sense of the words is, be as I, look that your mindes be not estranged from me, but render me even as your owne selves: for I Paul am the same that ever I was, I respect and tender you even as mine owne selfe. And lest the Galatians should say, see ye not how Paul commands imperiously, be ye as I? therefore he addes, I beseech you brethren, I command you not. In the next words he addes a reason of his answer, thus. Hatred presupposeth a hurt or wrong to bee done: ye have done me no hurt or wrong, therefore ye may not thinke that I hate you.

When Paul saith, Be as I: I am as you: we learne, that there must be a speciall and mutuall love betweene the teachers and the people. Paul saith, that he did enlarge his heart for the Corinthians, and hee requires the like of them, 2 Cor. 6. 11. 13. Teachers must shew their love, by tendering the salvation of the people by all meanes, even as their owne soules. Paul could have found in his heart to have beene accursed for his countrimen the Iewes, Rom 9.1. He desired that he might be offered up as a drinke offering upon the sacrifice of the faith of the Philippians, Phil. 2. 17. When the Israelites had sinned, Moses stands in the breach, as it were in the face of the Cannon, betweene the wrath of God and them, by his prayer to stay the judgement of God, Psal 106.23. Againe, the people must shew their love to their teachers; first, by praying for them, as for themselves, Rom. 15.30. Secondly, by having in singular price the worke of the Ministery, 1 Thessalon. 5.13. and that is, by wholsome doctrine to repaire the image of God, and to erect the kingdome of God in the hearts of men. When this thing is loved and desired, then are Ministers loved. This mutuall love is of great use, it encourageth people to obey, and the Preachers of the word to labour in teaching.

When Paul saith, I beseech you brethren, hee shewes what moderation is to be used in all reproofes. He tells the Galatians his minde plainly to the full, and withall he endeavours to shew his owne love to them, and to keepe theirs.

It may be asked, how Paul can say, Ye have done me no hurt at all. For when a beleever in Corinth committed incest, Paul tooke it for a wrong to himselfe? 2 Cor. 2. 10. And no doubt to call the doctrine of the Apostle into question, was a great wrong unto him? I answer, the wrong was no wrong in his estimation and affection, who was content to put up and to forgive the wrong. Here we see the meeknesse of Paul, in that he quietly beares the crosses and wrongs laid upon him. The like was in Moses, who 40. yeares together indured the bad manners of the Israelites, Act. 13. 18. but the perfect example of this vertue, is in Christ, who saved them that crucified him. We likewise are to exercise our selves in this vertue. And that we may indeed so doe, we must first of all have a sense of our spirituall poverty, and a faith in the mercy, presence, and protection of God.

Againe, marke the mind of the Apostle, that he may winne soules to God, he is content to suffer any wrong. The Priests and Iesuits among us in England, are content to venture life and limme that they may winne Proselytes to the Church of Rome: much more then must the true Ministers of the Gospell be content with any condition, so they may gaine men to God. In this case, hurts and abuses must be no hurts nor abuses.

13. And ye know how through the infirmity of the flesh, I preached the Gospell unto you at the first:

14. And the tryall of mee which was in my flesh ye despised not, neither abhorred: but received me as an Angell of God, yea as Christ Iesus.

15. What then was your felicity? for I beare you record, that if it had beene possible, you would have plucked out your eyes to have given them to mee.

16. Am I therefore become your enemy, because I tell you the truth?

The answer to the objection in the former verse was this; Be as I: I am as you. And the reason was this: hatred presupposeth an offence: ye have done me no offence or hurt: therefore ye may not thinke that I hate you. The minor is in the 12. v. the conclusion in the 16. verse.

Againe, the minor [ye have done me no hurt] is confirmed in the 13, 14, 15. verses. The sum of the argument is this: Though my outward condition was subject to contempt; yet did the Galatians shew love and reverence to me: therefore ye did me no hurt. Againe, Paul sets forth both the parts of his argument. And first of all he describes his owne condition, by three things; that he preached in weakenesse of the flesh: that he preached the first? that hee preached having the tryall of himselfe in his owne flesh. Secondly, the love and reverence of the Galatians is set out by three signes, or effects: They despised him not; they received him as an Angel, or as Christ himselfe: they would have plucked out their eyes to have done him good.

The first thing in Pauls condition, is, that he published the Gospell in the infirmitie of his flesh, that is, in a meane and base estate, without the shew of humane wisedome, and authority and subject to many miseries. In this sense Paul opposeth infirmitie to the excellencie of humane wisedome, 2 Cor. 2. 1. 3. and under it hee comprehends all the calamities and troubles that befell him, 2 Cor. 12. 10.

This was the condition of the rest of the Apostles. For they were but fishers and preached the word in their fisher-like simplicitie. Nay, this was the condition of Christ himselfe. For he hid the Majesty of his Godhead under the veile of his flesh: and his outward man was subject to reproach and contempt, Esa. 53 3. And this is the order of God. The word must be dispensed in the infirmity of mans flesh for sundry causes. First, that wee might not exalt our teachers above their condition, who are no more but instruments of grace. When the men of Derbe and Listra would have offered sacrifice to Paul, and Barnabas, Paul forbids them saying, that they were men subject to the same passions with themselves, Acts 14. 15. The second cause is, that we might ascribe the whole worke of our conversion, not to men, but to God alone, 2 Cor. 4. 7. The third is, that God might by this meanes confound the wisedome of the world, and cause men that would be wise, to become fooles, that they might be wise, 1 Cor 3. 18. The last is, that we might be assured that the doctrine of the Apostles is of God: because it prevailes in the world without the strength and policy of man.

And as the word is preached in weakenesse, so it is beleeved of men; and the grace of God is conferred to us, and continued in us, in the weakenesse of the flesh. Gods love is shed abroad in the hearts of men: but when? Even then when we were in the middest of manifold afflictions. Rom. 5. 2 5. Paul bears about him the mortification of our Lord Iesus, not for his damnation, but that the life of GOD, might be manifest in his mortall flesh, 2 Cor. 4. 10. And the faith plainly, that the grace of God is made perfect through weakenesse, 2 Cor 12. 9. By this we are taught a high point in Religion, and that is, not onely to be content with the miseries and troubles of this life, but to rejoyce therein: because when we are weakest, we are strongest: and when we thinke our selves forsaken of God in the time of distresse, we are not forsaken indeed, but have his speciall favour and protection, 2 Cor 12. 10. Let this bee thought upon: for the workes of God in the cause of mans salvation, are in, and by their contraries. This is the manner of Gods dealing.

The second thing is, that Paul preached the Gospell to the Galatians at the first, as it were breaking the ice, where none had preached before. In this he claimes his priviledge, that hee was to be esteemed as a master-builder, that laid the foundation of the Church of Galatia: and withall, hee gives a close item to the false apostles, who did not plant Churches, but onely corrupt them after they were planted. Againe, Paul here notes the condition of Gods Church, or Kingdome: in which first comes the husbandman and sowes good seed, and then after comes the Devill with his tares, Mathew 13.24. and all this is evident in the Church of Galatia, first planted by Paul, and then seduced by false teachers.

The third thing is, that Paul preached, bearing about him the tryall of God. This tryall is a worke of God whereby he discovers unto us, and to the world, either the grace or the corruption of our hearts. Thus God tried Abraham, Heb. 11. 17. the Israelites, Deuteronomy 6.1. and Ezechias, 2 Chron. 32, 31. and Paul in this place.

The Vse. We must not thinke it strange, when we are afflicted any way. Nay, we must looke for trials, and bee content when they come, 1 Pet. 4 v. 12. Iames 1 2. We are either gold indeed, or gold in shew: if in deed, we must be cast into the furnace, that we may be purged; if we be gold in appearance, we must againe into the furnace, that we may be knowne what wee are. The best Vine in the Vineyard must be lopped and cut off with the pruning knife, that it may beare the more fruit, John 15.2.

Againe, we must take heed least there be any hidden corruptions reigning in our hearts: and we must labour to be indeed that which we appeare to bee. For wee must be tried by God: and then that which now lies hid, shall be discovered to our shame.

Lastly, wee must looke to it, that there bee soundnesse of grace in us, that we may be able to beare the trials of God, and shew forth some measure of faith, patience, obedience.

The 1. signe of reverence in the Galatians is, that they did not despise Paul in his base condition. This is a matter of commendation in them, & it is to be followed of us. And he is a blessed man that is not offended at Christ.

The second signe of reverence is, that they received Paul as an Angel of God, or as Christ Iesus. Here first we must distinguish betweene Pauls person, and his doctrine or ministerie. And he is said to be received as an Angel, or as Christ; because his doctrine was received even as if an Angel, or Christ had delivered it. Secondly, wee must put a difference betweene an Apostle, and all ordinary Pastors & teachers. And to be received as an Angel, or as Christ, properly and simply concernes Paul, and the rest of the Apostles. For to them it was said, It is not you that speake, but the spirit Mat. 11. 6.

*of the father in you, Mat.*10.20. Againe, *He that heareth you, heareth mee, he that despiseth you, despiseth me, Luk.*10. 16. The Apostles were called of God immediatly, taught & inspired immediately, & immediately governed by the spirit, both in preaching & writing, so as they could not erre in the things which they delivered to the Church; and therfore they were to be heard even as Christ himselfe.

As for other ordinary Teachers, they are in part, and in the second place to be heard as Angels, and as Christ, so farre forth as they follow the doctrine of the Apostles. Thus are they also called *the Angels of the Lord of hostes, Mal.*2.7. And Embassadours in the stead of Christ, 2 *Cor.*5.21.

Here Paul notably expresseth the Authority and honour of an Apostle, which is to be heard even as Christ himselfe: because in preaching, he is the mouth, and in writing, the hand of God. This authority is to bee maintained: and the consideration of it is of great use. The Papists say, we know the Scripture to be the word of God, by the testimony of the Church: but indeed the principall meanes whereby we are assured touching the truth of Scripture, is, that the bookes of Scripture were penned by men, whose writings, and sayings, we are to receive, even as from Christ himselfe, because they had either prophetical or apostolicall authority, and were immediatly taught and inspired in writing: & all this may bee discerned, by the matter, forme, & circumstances of the foresaid bookes.

Secondly, they are to be blamed that call the Pope, the spouse of the Church, and Christ by annoyntment (as Bernard did) for thus is hee more then an Apostle.

De consid. ad Eugen.

Thirdly, here we see the goodnes of God, that doth not speake to us in his Majestie, but appoints men in his stead, who are his Embassadours to beseech us to be reconciled unto him.

Fourthly, there must bee fidelity in teachers, because they stand in teaching, in the stead of Christ: and therefore must onely deliver that which they know to be the will of Christ.

Fiftly, they must have a speciall care of holinesse of life, because they speake in the name and roome of God, Reade Levit 10.2.

Sixtly, the people are to heare their Teachers with all reverence, even as they would heare the very Angels of God, or Christ himselfe.

Seventhly, the comfort of the Ministery, is as sure and certaine, as if an Angell came downe from heaven, or Christ himselfe to comfort us, so be it we doe indeed truly turne to God, and repent.

Vers. 15. What was your felicity? (that is, you esteemed it to bee your felicity, that you received me and my doctrine, To would have plucked out your eyes, and have given them to me) a proverbiall speech, signifying the speciall

A love of the Galatians to Paul, so as nothing which they had could be too deare for him: If it had bin possible:) this he saith, because no man can pluck out his eie to doe another man good: or thus, no man can possibly give his eye and the sight thereof to another.

In these words Paul sets downe the third signe of the love & reverence which the Galatians shewed to him, and that is, that they thought themselves happy by reason of Pauls ministerie, and would have parted with their owne eyes for his good.

Hence wee learne, that there is a felicitie in the time of this life, and that is, to receive and embrace the doctrine of the Gospell. So saith Christ elsewhere, Luke 8.13. and 11. 28. *Math.*7.26. True happinesse stands in our reconciliation with God in Christ. And this
B reconciliatiō is offered and given us on Gods part by his word and promise, and it is received of us, when we turne to God, and by faith rest on the said promise. To be in Gods kingdome is happinesse: and this is the kingdome of God, when we resigne our selves in subjection to his will and word. The preaching of the word is the key of this kingdome, Mat. 16.19 and when it is received into our hearts by faith, heaven is set open unto us even in this life, *John.*1.51.

The Philosophers therefore have erred, that place our happinesse in honours, riches, pleasures, or in civill vertue.

C Secondly, our common people are deceived, who thinke because they deale truly and justly before men, that they are in as good a case, as they that heare all the sermons in the world: as though true happinesse stood in civill conversation.

Thirdly, this doctrine serves to beare down a point of naturall Atheisme in the heate of man, which makes many thinke it a vaine thing to serve God, and to heare his word, Iob 21.15. *Malac.*3.14. David was troubled with this corruption, Psalme 73.15. Many of them which professe the name of Christ, will not be brought to keep the Sabbath day: and in their dealings they use fraud, and lying, as other men doe: and all is because they thinke
D they cannot live by their religion.

Fourthly, the only way to establish a kingdome or cōmon-wealth, is to place the Gospell there: for this makes an happy people. And this is the maine cause of our happinesse and successe in this Church and Land. And the obedience of the Gospel is it that makes every man in his trade, office, and calling whatsoever it be, to prosper. Reade *Psal.*1.3.

5. On the contrary, they are wretched and miserable that live without the Gospel, Prov. 29.18. 2 *Cor.*4.3. 2 *Tim.*3.7.

6. To receive the doctrine of the Apostles, is an unfallible marke of the Church of God, for this is it that makes a people blessed and happy.

7. Wee may not despise the preaching of the the word, 1 *Thes.*5.20. If we doe, we despise A our owne happinesse. If it be said, Preachers sometime are deceived: Answ. Marke the addition of Paul, Prove all things, hold that which is good, 1 *Thes.*5.21.

Touching the speciall love of the Galatians to Paul, first it may bee demanded what was the cause of it? Ans. The very Ministerie of the Apostle, whose office it was to make Disciples, *Mat.*28.19. and so to plant the Church of the new Testament. And for this cause, he had a priviledge to preach the truth, so as he could not erre in things which he delivered to the Church. 2. Hee preached with authority, as having power to correct rebellious offenders, 2 *Cor.*10.6. 1 *Cor.*4.20. 3. He preached with unspeakeable diligence. B Reade *Act.*20.31. 4. He had a prerogative (as the rest of the Apostles had) after he had made Disciples, by imposition of hands to give unto them the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost, Acts 8.17. And these are the meanes whereby this speciall love was procured.

Secondly, it may be demanded whether the Galatians did not more then keepe the law, when they would have plucked out their owne eyes, and have given them to Paul? for thus they love him more then their owne selves. Answ. The commandement, [Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thy selfe] doth not prescribe that wee must in the first place love our selves, and then in the second love our C neighbour: but it sets downe the right maner of loving our neighbor, & that is, to love him as heartily, & unfeinedly, as our owne selves.

The measure of love is expressed when Christ saith, We must love one another, as Christ loved us, John 13 34.

There is a certaine case in which we must consider our neighbour, not onely as a neighbour, but also as a speciall instrument of God: and thus are we in some respects to love, and to preferre him before our selves. Thus a subject is more to love the life of the Prince then his owne life. Thus Paul was content to be accursed for the Israelites, *Rom.*9. 1. And the Galatians would have given their eyes to Paul, that was so worthy an instrument of the grace of God.

In their example we are taught to bee willing to forsake the dearest things in the world for the Gospel of Christ, even our eies, hands, feete, yea and our life.

Verse 16. Because I tell you the truth] Wee must after Pauls example speake the truth to all men, *Eph.*4.25. Am I therefore your enemy] the conclusion of the Apostles argument. Here we see a corruption of nature, which makes us that we cannot abide to heare the truth in things that are against us. We hate them that speake the truth; selfe love makes us conceive the best things of our selves. Here then learne,

1. To search thy heart and life, that thou mayest know the very worst by thy selfe: If thou wilt not know it now, thou shalt know it to thy shame in the day of judgement.

2. Be vile and base in thine owne opinion, Iob 39.37.38.

17. They are jealous over you amisse: yea they would exclude you, that you should altogether love them.

18. But it is good to love earnestly alwaies in a good cause; and not onely when I am present with you.

The word Zeale hath many significations; here it is fitly translated Iealousie: They are jealous] hereby much is signified; that there is a spirituall marriage betweene Christ and his Church: that the Church is the Bride, Christ the Bridegroome, or Husband; the Gospell an instrument drawne touching the marriage: the Sacraments as seales, the graces of the spirit as love-tokens, the Ministers of Christ, as friends of the Bridegroome, and suters for him. In this respect they put on the affection of Christ, and are zealous for him. This Iealousie is two-fold, pretended jealousie, and true jealousie. Pretended jealousie is, when men falsely pretend the love of the Church for Christs sake. Thus Paul saith, They are jealous, that is, they pretended a love unto you for Christs sake, but indeed they doe it amisse. And the reason followes, They would exclude you, namely, from loving of me. Others reade the words thus; they would exclude ipsos us: the difference in the originall is onely in one letter, and the sense is the same, that the false apostles would exclude Paul from the love of the Galatians, that they onely might bee honoured and loved.

It is good] These words may be understood either of the Galatians, or of Paul. I rather chuse to apply them to Paul, that for jealousie he may make an opposition betweene himselfe, and the false teachers. The sense is this: that jealousie is a good thing, if it be in a good cause, that is, if it be indeed for Christs sake, and be alwayes the same. And Paul addeth further, that this kinde of jealousie is in him selfe: because hee is jealous over the Galatians, not onely when he is present with them, but also when hee is absent: and this he further confirmes in the two next verses.

D The scope. In these words Paul meets with a conceit of the Galatians: for they might happily say, that their new Teachers loved them exceedingly, and were zealous for their salvation. Paul therefore answers by a comparison, thus they are jealous over you, but it is amisse: my jealousie for you is good. The first part of the comparison is in the 17. verse, the second in the 18.

The Vse. When Paul saith, that the false Apostles were jealous over the Galatians amisse, he sets out the fashion of men in the world, which is to do things which are good in their kinde, but to doe them for wrong ends. It is an excellent office to preach the word, but some doe it of envy & contention, Phil. 1.15. others made merchandise of the word. It is an excellent thing to embrace the Gospell; and yet many men doe it amisse, for feare, or for honour, or for profit, or for other sinister respect; and not for the Gospels sake. This temporall life is an excellent thing, yet few there are that know the end of this life. For men commonly spend not their time to seeke the kingdome of heaven, and to serve God in serving men, but with all their might, they ayme at honours, profits, pleasures: and thus they live amisse, not for the honour of GOD, but for themselves. This must teach us, not onely to doe good, but to doe it well, & to propound good ends to our selves: and to seeke to be upright in the Statutes of God, Psalme 119. 80. To this end, three things must be done. First, we must set before us the will and commandement of God, and this must move us to doe the good we doe. Secondly, the outward action must be conformable to the inward motions of the inward man: and they must both goe together. Thirdly, we must directly intend to obey God in the things we doe, & to approve our hearts and doings to him.

In that the false apostles are said to bee jealous, or zealous, we see how nature can counterfeit the grace of God: and that which the childe of God doth by grace, that the naturall man doth by nature. Thus Pharaoh fained repentance, Exodus 9. 27. and Ahab, that sold himselfe to worke wickednesse, 1 Kings 21.27. and Judas in the midst of his despaire is said to repent, Mat. 27.1. Daily experience shewes the like in such persons, who in their extremity, with teares use to bewaile their lives past, and with many vowes, and protestations promise amendment: and yet afterward when they are on foot againe, they returne to their old bias. In a word, there is nothing that the godly man doth by the spirit of God spiritually, but an hypocrite may doe the like carnally. Nature can play the part of the Ape in imitating good things. Therefore it stands us in hand to pray, and examine our hearts, lest we be deceived in our selves. For there may lye a depth of deceit and falshood lurking in the heart. And that we bee not deceived, two things must be observed. One is, that we must cherish in our hearts an universall hatred of all and every sinne; first in our selves, and then in others. The second is, that we must be changed and renewed in our mindes, consciences, and affections.

Thirdly, here wee see the property of envy, and ambition, in these false teachers. Paul must be excluded from the love of the Galatians, that they alone may be loved. Thus Iosua would have excluded Eldad and Medad from prophecying, and he would have Moses to be the onely Prophet, but Moses saith, I would to God all the people could prophesie, Numb. 11.29. Iohns Disciples would have excluded Christ from baptizing; but Iohn saith, He must increase, and I must decrease, Iohn 3.30. The Disciples of Christ would have excluded one that cast out Devils in the name of Christ, but did not follow him; and Christ forbad them, Luke 9.49.

Lastly, wee here see the property of deceivers is to make a division between the Pastor and the people.

Beside the former pretended jealousie, there is a good jealousie, which the Apostle takes to himselfe, and elsewhere hee cals it the jealousie of God, 2 Cor. 11.2.

This jealousie presupposeth the office of the Apostles and all Ministers, which stands in three things. The first, is, to become suiters to the Church, or to the soules of men, in the name of Christ, and to make the offer or motion in his name, of a spirituall marriage: and this is done in the Ministerie; and dispensation of the Gospell. The second is, to make the Contract betweene mens soules and Christ. Now to the making of a Contract, the consent of both the parties (at the least) is required: Christ gives his consent in the word, Ose. 2. 20. and we give our consent to him, and choose him to be our head, when we turne to God, and beleeve in Christ. And the ministery of the word serves to signifie the will of Christ unto us, and to stirre up our hearts to an holy consent. The third is, after the contract, to preserve them in true faith, and good life, that they may be fit to be presented to Christ in the day of judgement, and so be married to him eternally: for then, and not before, is the marriage of the Lambe: These duties are all noted by Paul, when hee saith, That he prepared the Corinthians, that hee might present them as a pure Virgine unto Christ, 2 Cor. 11.2. And because this charge and office is laid upon the Apostles and Ministers: therefore they are said to be jealous.

This Jealousie stands in three things. The first is, to love the Church, in deed and truth, for Christs sake. The second is, to feare lest by reason of weaknesse, and by meanes of the temptation of the Devill, the Church and they that beleeve should fall away frō Christ. The third is, after the fall of the Church, to be angry with holy anger and indignation, for Christs sake. Thus Moses was jealous, when the Israelites worshipped the golden Calfe; and Elias with like zeale slue the priests of Baal. Thus is Paul said to be jealous in this place, and Acts 14.14.

If the Apostle be thus jealous, how much more then is Christ himselfe jealous, who hath espoused himselfe to his Church? This plainely shewes, that he cannot brooke, either partner, or deputy. And therefore his sacrifice on the crosse must stand without the sacrifice of the Masse, his intercession without the intercession of the Saints, his merits without the merit of workes, his satisfaction without any satisfaction of ours. Hee will have the heart alone, and all the heart, or nothing thing: and he will not give any part of his honour to any other.

This Iealousie in the Ministers must teach all faithfull servants of God, that they keepe themselves as pure virgins for Christ, and set their hearts on nothing in the world, but on him. Therefore they must hunger after Christ: they must account all things dung for him: they must have their conversation in heaven with him: and love his comming unto them by death, Psal. 45. 10. Contrariwise, they that set their heart on any other thing, beside him, are said to goe a whoring from him, and therefore they are accursed, Psalme 73.27. Thus many Protestants doe in their practice, whatsoever they professe. Thus doth the Church of Rome both in word and deed. For beside Christ she hath many other lovers: and shee goes a whoring after them when shee worships Angels, and Saints, the Images of God, and Christ, with religious worship.

Againe, by this wee are put in minde to yeelde an universall subjection to Christ: for this is the duty of the espoused wife to her husband.

Lastly, that good things may be well done, good ends must bee propounded: and wee must bee constant in the good which wee doe. And thus Paul saith, It is a good thing to be jealous.

19. My little children of whom I travell in birth againe, till Christ be formed in you.

20. I would I were now with you, that I might change my voyce: for I am in feare of you.

Paul hath said before, that his jelousie over the Galatians was good: because it was in a good cause, and it was constant, not only in his presence, but even in his absence: and this he declares here by two signes: his love now in his absence, in the 16. verse, and his desire in the 20. verse.

The word, ωδινω, translated, I travell in birth, signifies not onely, the travell of the woman at the birth of the child, but also the painfull bearing thereof, before the birth. And the words have this sense, O ye Galatians, once heretofore I bare and brought you forth, when I first preached Christ unto you: and because now yee are revolted from my doctrine, I am constrained once againe to beare you, and to travell with you in my ministery, till by the operation of the holy Ghost, the right knowledge, & the true Image of Christ defaced by the false Apostles, be once againe reformed, and restored.

In these words (My little children) Paul takes to him the condition of a mother, and hee signifies his most tender and motherly affection to the Galatians. It is the fashion of mothers, when their children prosper and doe well, to rejoyce: when they are sicke or dye, to mourne exceedingly, and to bee moved with pity and compassion. The Galatians deserved no love at Paules hand: for their apostasie was very foule: yet because there were some good things remaining in them, and there was hope of recovery, hee inlargeth his bowels towards them, and shewes his love with compassion. If this bee the case with Paul, then great is the love and compassion of God to his children. If the childe be sicke and froward, the mother doth not cast it forth of the doores, when shee tenders it, and carefully lookes unto it: much more then will the Lord have pity and compassion. Here then a maine comfort is to be remembred: if we be of the number of them that beleeve in Christ, hating vice, and having a care to please God, our weaknesses and falls of weaknesse, doe not abolish the mercy of God, but are occasions to illustrate the same. The weaknesse of the childe stirres up compassion in the mother: and David saith, As the father hath compassion on his children, so hath the Lord compassion on them that feare him: and marke the reason, for hee knowes our frame, and that wee are but dust, Psal. 103.14.

When Paul saith, I travell, he signifies the measure of his ministeriall paines, that they were as the travell of a woman with childe: and this he shewes plainely in the particulars, 2 Cor. 11.23. Elias that was sent in his time to restore Religion, was at length so wearied in this businesse, that he desired the Lord to take him out of the world, 1 King. 19 4. The paines of the Prophet Esay, made him crie My leanenesse, my leanenesse: and Jeremie cryeth, My belly, my belly: signifying that his griefes and his paines in the Ministery, were as the paine of the Colike. By this wee see, that they have much to answere for before God, that are in this calling, and yet take little or no paines therein. And that they which take the most paines, come farre short of their duty.

Againe, when he saith, I travell, he signifies the dignity of the Ministery, that it is an instrument appointed of God for the worke of regeneration: for Paul compares himselfe to a woman in travell, and the worke of his ministery, to the travell it selfe, whereby children are borne to God. This serves very well to stoppe their mouthes, that condemne the vocall and externall ministery.

When he saith, I travell againe, hee teacheth, that if men fall after their first initiall repentance, there is still a possibility of mercy, and a place for a second repentance. We must forgive till seventy times seven times. Mat. 18.22. Much more will God doe it. The Parable of the prodigall sonne shewes, that they which fall from God after their calling and first conversion, may againe by new repentance be recovered.

An objection: Pauls second travell presupposeth a second regeneration in the Galatians: and if they were borne againe the second time, then in their apostasie they fell wholly from God, Answ. When Paul saith I travell againe, hee doth not presupposе any second spirituall generation: for the childe of God is but once begotten to the Lord; and Paul here calls the Galatians, little children, because even in the time of their fall, the seed of God still remained in their hearts. And because the Image of Christ was againe to bee reformed and restored in the Galatians, in this respect he saith, I travell againe of you.

The end of Pauls Ministery is expressed in the words, till Christ be formed in you: that is, till (as it were) the counterfeit or Image of Christ be stamped and imprinted in your hearts. This Image hath two parts. The first is, a right knowledge of Christ in respect of his natures and offices, as they are set forth in the word. This knowledge was defaced in the Galatians, when they joyned workes with Christ, for then they made him to be an imperfect Saviour. The second part of this Image, is a conformity with Christ, Rom. 8. 29. It is twofold, conformity in quality, and conformity in practice.

Conformity in quality is againe twofold. The first is, conformity to the death of Christ, when the vertue thereof works in us a death of sin, and when we suffer as Christ suffered, in silence, contentation, obedience, subjecting our selves to the will of God. The second is a conformity to the resurrection or life of Christ, and that is, when we live not onely a naturall, but also a spirituall life, which is, to submit our selves to be ruled by the word and spirit of Christ.

Conformity in practice is, when we carry our selves as Prophets in the confession of the name of Christ, in teaching, exhorting, and admonishing one another; as Priests to offer our bodies and soules in sacrifice to GOD: as spirituall Kings, bearing sway over the lusts and corruptions of our owne hearts. And thus is Christ to bee framed in the hearts of men.

The Vse. Here we see the end of all preaching, is to make sinfull men to become new creatures, like unto Christ; this is the drift of the Ministery: and the doctrine that tends to this purpose, is sound and wholesome. Again here we see, that in the new Testament, there is but one rule and order of all men, and that is the rule of Christ, Take up thy crosse, and follow me: and for this cause the Ministery serves to frame Christ in the hearts of all beleevers. Therefore the severall rules and orders of Monkes and Friars in the church of Rome, are meere superstitions.

Furthermore, Paul here makes two degrees of Gods children; one is, when they are begotten of God, and Christ is formed in them. The second, when they are begotten of God, yet so, as they are yet unformed. Such were the Apostles when they confessed Christ to be the Sonne of the living GOD, Matth. 16. for then they knew not the article of Christs death, resurrection, ascension, at that time, nor the manner of his kingdome. Of this sort was Rahab when she received the spies, Hebr. 11. for then she was not informed in the religiō of the Iewes, but only acknowledged the God of Israel to be the true God, and had a resolution to joyne her selfe to the people of God. Of this sort were the Corinthians at the first. For they were carnall more then spirituall, even babes in Christ, 1 Cor. 3. 3. This must teach us where we see any good thing in men to cherish it. For though as yet they be not Christians formed, yet they may be Christians in forming.

When Paul saith, until Christ bee formed, he shewes that the conversion of a sinner, is not wrought in one moment, but by little and little, in processe of time. In the generation of infants, first the braine, heart, and liver are framed: then the bones, veines, arteries, nerves, membrances: and after this, flesh is added. And the infant first begins to live the life of a plant, by growing & nourishing; then it lives the life of a beast, by sense and motion; & thirdly, the life of a man, by the use of reason. Even so God outwardly prevents us with his word, and inwardly he puts into us knowledge of his wil, with the beginnings or seeds of faith & repentance, as if it were a brain and a heart: from these beginnings of faith and repentance, arise heavenly desires; from these desires follows asking, seeking, knocking: and thus the beginnings of faith are increased, and men goe on from grace to grace, till they be tall men in Christ. And for this cause, we must with constancy use the good meanes in hearing, reading, praying.

Lastly, we are all here put in minde to study, and to use all good meanes that wee may be like to Christ, specially in the disposition of the inward man. There is a spirituall madnesse in the minds of many men: they thinke of nothing but of the fashion of their apparell, and of the trimming of their bodies: but let us thinke how to imprint the gracious Image of Christ in our hearts: thus shall wee be lovely, and have favour in the eyes of God.

Thus much of Pauls love: now followes his desire in the 20. verse. In which I consider three things: the desire it selfe, I would I were with you now: the end of his desire, that I might change my voyce: the occasion thereof, for I am in doubt of you.

When Paul saith, I would I were with you now, he shewes, that the presence of Pastours with their people, is a thing most necessary. And there are two reasons thereof. One is, to prevent spirituall dangers, which are manifold and continuall, in that the devill seekes continually whom hee may devoure: 1 Pet. 5. 8. and wrastles against principalities & powers in heavenly things, Ephes. 6. 12. In this respect Pastours are called Watchmen and Overseers. Secondly, the presence of Pastours with their people, serves to redresse things things amisse, and to recover them that be in apostasie: as Paul saith in this place. Therefore it were to be wished, that this minde of Paul were in all Pastors, that with one consent they might say to their people, I would I were with you now.

In the words [that I might change my voice] Paul continues the allusion (which he made in the former verse) to a woman with childe: and hereby he signifies two things. The first is, that he will leave further disputing with the Galatians, and fall to lamenting and crying, as mothers doe in the time of their travell, by reason of their paine. This is to change the voice. It was the manner of Paul to abase himselfe, and to mourne for the sins of others, 2 Cor. 12. 24. and he reproves the Corinthians, that they were puffed up, & did not mourne for the incestuous person. Like was the practice of David, Psalm. 119. 136. of Lot, 2 Pet. 2. 7. of Ieremy, Lament. 2. 11. of the friends of Iob, Iob 2. last. of the godly in the dayes of Ezekiel, c. 9. 4. of Christ in respect of Ierusalem, Luke 19. 41. And it hath beene alwayes the practice of holy men, when there was no helpe, with teares to commend the case to God.

If sorrow for other mens offences make Paul change his voice, much more are men to doe it for their owne. Peter, in his repentance left his presumptuous speaking, and fell to bitter and secret teares: and so did the woman that stood at the feet of Christ weeping, and washed his feet with her teares, Luke 7. 38. The like ought we to do for our offences and sinnes. The earth-quake this winter past must stirre us up to this duty. For it is a matter full of terrour, 1 Sam. 14. 15. and the sicknes which hath taken hold of thousands, as a gentle warning must bee respected. And it must be considered, that the changes of the great world bring with them like changes in the little world, that is, in the bodies of men.

Againe, to change the voice, is to conferre with the Galatians, and upon conference to temper his voice to their manners and conditions, as nourses stammer and lisp with children. For some are with pitty to bee recovered: and some with terrour, Iude 22, 23. Hence I gather.

That the conference of Pastours and people, is a thing very necessary. Paul here ascribes more to it than to his Epistle. It is the life of preaching. For by it the teachers know better what to teach, and the people better to conceive things that are taught. Here then we see a common fault. Men are content to heare, but they will not confer with their teachers: and in the time of sickness, the first person that is conferred with, is the Physitian, and the Minister is last sent for: whereas on the contrary, the cure of the soule is the cure of the body, Iob 33. 23, 25.

Againe, here is set downe the way to attaine all good learning: and that is, that learners be present with their teachers: and the teachers againe temper their voyces to the capacity of the learners. Thus Samuel was with Eli at the doore of the Tabernacle: thus Christ was in the Temple among the Doctors, hearing them and asking them questions, Luke 2. 44.

Thirdly, Paul here sets downe the way to make a pacification for Religion in these last dayes: and the way is, that the Pastors of the Church be assembled together by the authority of Princes: and being assembled, they temper their voyces one to another according to the written Word. Thus may they that lye now under the Apostasie of Antichrist, be recovered, Act. 15. 6. And the promise of God is, that when two or three come together in his name, he will be with them, Mat. 18. 18.

Lastly, the Ministers (as here we see) are to temper their gifts and speech to the condition of their hearers. The Corinthians were babes in Christ, and Paul feeds them with milke, 1 Cor. 3. 3. To the Iew he became a Iew, to the Gentile a Gentile, that he might winne some, 1 Cor. 9. 18. For this cause it were to bee wished, that Catechising were more used than it is of our Ministers. For our people are for the most part rude and uncatechised: and therefore they profit little or nothing by Sermons. A Sermon to such persons is like a great loafe set before a child. And it is no disgrace for learned Ministers, in plaine and familiar manner to catechise: for this is to lay the foundation, without which all labour in building is in vaine. Againe, our ignorant people should bee content even in their old age to learne the catechisme: for by reason of their ignorance, they lye as a prey to the Atheist and Papist: and in much hearing they learne little; because they know not the grounds of doctrine that are usually in all sermons. And it is a fault in many, that they love to heare Sermons which are beyond their reach, in which they stand and wonder at the Preacher: and plaine preaching is little respected of such.

The occasion of Pauls desire is in these words, I doubt of you; or thus, I am in perplexity for you: and this Paul speakes as a mother in some dangerous extremity, in the time of her travell, as Rachel was in the birth of Benjamin, Gen. 35. And the words carie this sense, I am troubled for your recovery, and I feare it will never be.

Here we learne, how dangerous a thing it is to fall from grace, though it be but in part. For a man cannot recover himselfe when hee will. Wee doe not the good wee can, unlesse God makes us doe it, Ezech. 36. 27. Cant. 1. verse 4. Ierem. 31. verse 19. Therefore it is an errour to thinke that we may repent and turne to God when wee will, as many suppose. And this must bee a warning unto us to preserve the good things that God hath put into us, and not to quench the Spirit.

And though Paul doubt of the recovery of the Galadans, yet he spares not to send his Epistle to them, and to use meanes. And thus in desperat cases, we must use the best meanes, and leave the successe to God. Thus the Israelites when there was no other helpe, went into the sea, as into their death-bed, or grave, by faith staying themselves on the promise of God, Heb. 11.29. 2 Chron. 20.12.

That which Paul here saith, may be said of many among us in whom Christ is not yet framed, whether we respect knowledge, or good life: for they give just occasion of doubting whether they will ever turne to GOD or no.

21. Tell me ye that will be under the law, doe ye not heare the law?

22. For it is written, that Abraham had two sonnes, one by a servant, and another by a free woman.

23. But hee which was of the servant, was borne after the flesh: and he which was of the free woman, by promise.

From the 8. verse of this Chapter, to the 20. verse, Paul hath handled the conclusion of the principall argument of this Epistle, touching the apostasie of the Galatians: and here he returnes again to his former doctrine touching the justification of a sinner by faith without the workes of the law: and he confirmes it by another Argument, the summe and substance whereof is this: Your libertie from the law was prefigured in the family of Abraham: therefore yee are not bondmen to the law, but free-men.

The argument is at large propounded, and it hath foure parts: a preface in the 21. verse: an history of Abraham and his family, verse 22, 23. the application of the history from the 24. verse to the 30. the conclusion, verse 31.

And first of the Preface. Law] the word law in the first place, is taken properly for the morall and ceremoniall law of Moses: and in the second place, for the bookes of Moses, and namely, for the booke of Genesis. And in this sense the word is taken, when Christ is said to expound the Law and the Prophets. Luke 24. And sometimes it signifies all the bookes of the old Testament, John 15.25.

Under the Law] to be under the law, is to hold our selves bound to the fulfilling of the law, and to looke for life eternall thereby.

Doe ye not heare the law? that is, yee reede and heare indeed, but yee understand not the scope and drift of that which you reade.

In this Preface, first Paul meets with the pride of mans nature, whereby the Galatians went about to establish their owne righteousnesse by the law, when he saith, ye that will be under the law, &c. with this pride were the Jewes tainted, Rom. 10 3. and the young Prince that came to Christ and said, Good master, what must I doe to be saved? And the Papists of our time, who will not bee subject to the justice of God, but set up their owne justice in the keeping of the law. The like doe the ignorant people among us, who hold that they are able to fulfill the law, and that they are to be saved thereby. And when they say, they looke to be saved by their faith, they understand thereby their fidelity, that is, their good dealing.

Againe, Paul here notes the servile disposition of men that love rather to bee in bondage under the law, than to be in perfect liberty under the grace of God. This we see in daily experience. All professe Christ among us: yet it is even a death to the most, to forsake the bondage of the flesh. Christ we professe, yet so as we take libertie to live after the lusts of our owne hearts.

When Paul saith, doe ye not heare the law? he notes the cause of out spirituall pride, and of the servile disposition before named, namely, ignorance in mistaking and misconceiving the true scope of the law: for the Galatians did not consider that Christ was the scope of the law, but they supposed that the very observation of the Law even since the fall of man, did give life and justifie. This ignorance was to the Jewes as a veile before their eyes in the reading of the law, 2 Cor. 3. 14. And this ignorance hath blinded the Papists to this day: for he supposeth that the Gospell is nothing else but the law of Moses, and that Christ indeed is but an instrument to make us keepers of the law, and consequently saviours of our selves.

In the history of Abraham I consider three things; the fact of Abraham in taking two wives; the event upon this fact, hee had two sonnes by them; the condition of these sonnes.

Touching the fact of Abraham, it may bee demanded, what is to bee judged thereof? The ground to the answer shall be this: that marriage is the indivisible conjunction of one man and one woman onely. This Christ of purpose teacheth, Mat. 16. where he saith that God created them at the first man and woman, and not women, v. 4. that a man must forsake father and mother, and cleave to his wife, not to his wives, v. 5. that they twaine shall be one flesh, v. 6. And in all this Christ makes no new law, but onely revives the first institution of mariage made in Paradise. And Moses having let downe this divine institution, addes withall, that Lamech was the first that brake it, by taking many wives.

Now then, the answer to the question is twofold. Some say, that Abraham and the rest of the Patriarchs had a dispensation from God to marry many wives, and therefore that it was no sinne in them. Of this minde are sundry learned men, both Protestants and Papists. But the answer is onely conjecturall, and hath no evidence in Scripture.

The second answer is, that God did not approve approve the polygamy of the Fathers, or commend it, but did onely tolerate it, as a lesser evill, for the preventing of a greater. This toleration appeares, in that God commanded, That the King must not multiply his wives, Deut. 17.17. and that the childe of the hated wife, (though she be the second wife) if it be first borne, shall be the heyre, Deut. 21 15. The occasions of this toleration were two. One was a desire in the Patriarches to multiply their posterity, that if it were possible, the Messias might descend of their line. The second was, the common custome of men in the east Countries, who made no matter of it to marry many wives: and common custome bred a common error, and a common error bred common ignorance, whereby that which was indeed a sinne, was esteemed no sinne.

It may be objected, if the having of many wives were an offence, that Abraham and the rest of the holy Patriarches lived and dyed in a sinne without repentance: because we finde nothing in Scripture teaching their repentance for this sinne. Answ. Knowne sins require particular repentance: but if sinnes bee unknowne, or unconsidered, by reason that men are caried away with a sway of the times (as the Patriarches were) a generall repentance sufficeth, Psal. 19.12.

Againe, it may bee alledged, that Abraham tooke Agar by the consent of Sara. Answer. That sufficeth not to make a full excuse for Abraham. For if mariage were a meere civill contract, as it is made by the consent of men and women, so it might bee dissolved by like consent: But it is more than a civill contract: because in the making of it, beside the consent of the parties, the authority of God is interposed: and therefore Saraes consent (in giving Agar to Abraham) is nothing without the allowance of God; and wee may not thinke that God will allow of that which is directly against his owne ordinance.

Thirdly, it may bee alledged, that if the having of many wives be a fault, then Abraham and the rest were adulterers. Ans. Not so, the polygamy of the fathers is to bee placed in the middle, betweene adultery and holy wedlocke. They tooke not wives of a lewd minde, for the satisfying of their lust, but of a conscience not rightly informed in this point.

The event upon the fact of Abraham was, that his two wives bare him two sonnes. He had indeed more sonnes by Ketura, Genesis 25. 2. but these two, Ismael and Isaac are only here mentioned, because by the speciall appointment of God, they were ordained as types of true beleevers, and hypocrites: reade Rom. 9.7, 8.

The condition of the two children is set forth by a double difference. The first is, that one was borne of a bond-woman, and therefore a bondman; the other of a free woman, and therefore a free man, and the heyre. Here it may be demanded, how the same person can bee both a wife and a bond woman? Answer. Among the heathen (as also among the Iewes) there were two sorts of wives. Of the first kinde were they that were joynt governours of the family with the husband, and they were called mistresses of the house. Of the second sort were they, that served onely for propagation, and were in all other respects as servants or strangers. Of the first kinde was Sara; and of the second, Hagar, and Ketura. Vxor mater familias. Vxor usuaria.

The second difference of the children was this: one, that is Ismael, was borne after the flesh, that is, by the strength of nature, and according to the fleshly counsell of Sara, who did substitute Hagar into her owne roome. The other, namely Isaac, was borne by the promise, that is, according to the order of nature, yet not by the strength of nature, but by the vertue of the promise of God.

In the birth of Ismael, Saraes desire was good, that the promise of God might be accomplished: but the meanes was carnall, the substitution of her handmaid. This is the condition of the godly: they entend and desire the best things, but they faile in the manner of doing. The spirit stirreth up good motions, and the flesh corrupteth them. Paul sayth, That to will was present with him, but he could not doe that which was good, as hee ought. This must cause us alwayes to humble our selves for our best workes.

Againe, wee are here taught not to make haste to accomplish our desires, but when God promiseth any thing, to wait his leisure, and in the mean season to live in subjection. Sara with all her haste could not prevent Gods providence. She hath her desire in the birth of Ismael, but yet he is borne according to the flesh, in bondage, and hee is not the promised seed.

In the birth of Isaac wee see the vertue of the promise of God, when it is mixed with our faith: for then it makes things possible, that are otherwise impossible, Malph. 17.20. If then wee desire any good things at the hands of God, our duty is in silence and patience to rest on the promises of God, and then our desires shall indeed bee accomplished.

24. By the which things another thing is meant. For these mothers are the two Testaments, the one (which is Agar) of mount Sina, which gendreth to bondage.

25. For Agar, or Sina, is a mountaine in Arabia, and it answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and she is in bondage with her children.

The application of the former history here beginneth: and the sense of the words is, Another thing is meant] the words are thus: These things are spoken by an allegory: that is, one thing is said, and another thing is meant.

Two mothers] Agar and Sara. Are two] they represent or signifie the two Testaments. Est is put for significat. Of the two Testaments I will speake afterward.

The one] the one Testament, which is the covenant of workes [which is Agar] which Testament is figured by Agar [is of Mount Sina] came from mount Sina, where the law was delivered to the Israelites. And gendreth to bondage] that is, it makes all men bondmen that looke to bee justified and saved by the workes of the law.

For Agar or Sina] Here the Translators are deceived, supposing that Mount Sina had two names, Agar and Sina: but this opinion of theirs hath no ground, and the words are thus to be read, Agar is Sina. Here Agar signifies not so much the person of Abrahams handmaid, as that which is said in the former history of Agar. For the words are τὸ Ἄγαρ. And Sina must bee considered as a place, where it pleased God to publish the law. And the words thus considered, have this sense, Agar is Sina, that is, Agar figures Sina, two wayes: First, in condition: for as Agar was a bond woman, so Sina in respect of the law, was a place of bondage: and in this respect also it is called Sina of Arabia, which was a desert out of the land of Canaan. Secondly, in effect: for as Agar bare Ismael a bondman to Abraham; so Sina or the law, makes bond men. And it answereth] Sina answereth to Ierusalem, that is, as Agar figures Sina; so Agar figures Ierusalem: and by this meanes, Sina and Ierusalem are like, and stand both in one order. Now Agar figures Ierusalem two wayes, in condition, and effect. In condition: for as Agar was a bond woman, so Ierusalem, or the nation of the Iewes refusing Christ: and looking to be saved by the law, are in spirituall bondage. In effect: for as Agar brings forth Ismael a bond man; so Ierusalem by teaching the law makes bond men. Therefore Paul saith in the last place, of Ierusalem, and she is in bondage with her children.

The use. These things are said by allegory] Here the Papists make a double sense of Scripture, one literall, the other spirituall. Literall is twofold. Proper, when the words are taken in their proper signification. Figurative, when the holy Ghost signifies his meaning in borrowed termes.

Spirituall sense they make three. One allegorical, when things in the old Testament are applyed to signifie things in the new Testament. The second is Tropologicall, when Scripture signifies something touching manners. The third is Analogicall, when things are in Scripture applyed to signifie the estate of everlasting life. Thus Ierusalem properly is a City: by allegory, the Church of the new Testament: in a tropologicall sense, a State well ordered: in an analogicall sense, the estate of eternall life. Their senses they use to apply to most places of the Scripture, specially to the history. But I say to the contrary, that there is but one full and intire sense of every place of Scripture, and that is also the literall sense, sometimes expressed in proper, and sometimes in borrowed or figurative speeches. To make many senses of Scripture, is to overturne all sense, and to make nothing certaine. As for the three spirituall senses (so called) they are not senses, but applications or uses of Scripture. It may bee said that the history of Abrahams family here propounded, hath beside his proper and literall sense, a spirituall or mysticall sense. I answer, they are not two senses, but two parts of one full and intire sense. For not only the bare history, but also that which is thereby signified, is the full sense of the holy Ghost.

Againe, here we see the Scripture is not onely penned in proper tearmes, but also in sundry divine figures and allegories. The Song of Salomon is an allegory borrowed from the fellowship of man and wife, to signifie the communion betweene Christ and his Church: and so is the 45. Psal. The booke of Daniel, and the Revelation, in an allegoricall history. The Parables of the old and new Testaments, are figures or allegories. When David saith. Psal. 45.4. Ride on upon the word of truth, meeknesse, and justice, hee describes a Princes Chariot by allegory. The Guide is the Word; the horses that draw it, are three, truth, meeknesse, and justice. And thus the throne of God is described by like allegory, Psalme 89.v.14. the foundation of the throne are righteousnesse and equity: the maine bearers to goe before the throne, are mercy and truth.

If may be demanded, when doth the Scripture speake properly, and when by figure? Answ. If the proper signification of the words be against common reason, or against the analogy of faith, or against good manners, they are not then to be taken properly, but by figure. The words of Christ, Joh. 15.1. I am the true vine, and my Father is an Husbandman; If they be taken properly, they are absurd in common reason: therefore the words are figurative: and the sense is this: I am as the true Vine, and my Father as an Husbandman. The words of Christ, Take, eate, this is my body, 1 Cor 11.24. taken properly, are against the articles of faith, He ascended into heaven, and sits at the right hand of God. And they are against the first Commandement, Thou shalt not kill. And therefore they must bee expounded by figure, thus, This bread is a signe of my body. The like is to bee said of other places: they must be taken properly, if it bee possible: if not, by figure.

Here then they are to be blamed, that make the use of Rhetoricke in the Bible, to bee a meere foppery. For to this purpose there is a booke in English heretofore published. As also they of the Family of Love are justly to be be condemned, who in another extremity, turne all the Bible to an Allegory, yea even that which is said of Adam, and of Christ.

They are two Testaments] they are, that is, they significant so Agar is Sina a mountaine in Arabia, that is, signifies Sina. Thus the Rocke in the wildernesse is Christ, 1 Cor. 10.4. that is, figures Christ. Like to this is the sacramentall phrase, This is my body, that is to say, this bread signifies my bodie. Great is the madnesse of men that hence gather transubstantiation, or the reall conversion of bread into the body of Christ. They might as well gather hence the conversion of Agar into mount Sina.

The two Testaments are the Covenant of workes, and the Covenant of grace, one promising life eternall to him that doth all things contained in the law: the other to him that turnes and beleeves in Christ. And it must be observed, that Paul saith, they are two, that is, two in substance, or kinde. And they are two, sundry wayes. The law, or covenant of workes, propounds the bare justice of God, without mercy: the covenant of grace, or the Gospell, reveales both the justice and mercy of God, or the justice of God giving place to his mercy. Secondly, the law requires of us inward and perfect righteousnesse, both for nature, and action: the Gospell propounds unto us an imputed justice resident in the person of the Mediatour. Thirdly, the law promiseth life upon condition of workes: the Gospell promiseth remission of sinnes and life everlasting, upon condition that wee rest our selves on Christ by faith. Fourthly, the law was written in Tables of stone, the Gospell in the fleshy tables of our heart, Jerem. 31. 33. 2 Cor. 3.3. Fifthly, the law was in nature by creation: the Gospell is above nature, and was revealed after the fall. Sixtly, the Law hath Moses for the Mediatour, Deut. 5.ver. 27. but Christ is the Mediatour of the new Testament, Heb. 8.6. Lastly, the law was dedicated by the blood of beasts, Exo. 24.5. and the new Testament by the blood of Christ, Heb. 9.12.

Here then falls to the ground a maine pillar in Popish religion, which is, that the law of Moses, and the Gospel, are all one law for substance: and that the difference lies in this, that the law of Moses is darke and imperfect, and the Gospell, or the Law of Christ more perfect: because he hath (as they say) added counsels to precepts. Againe, the Law (they say) without the spirit, is the law properly, and with the spirit, it is the Gospell. But all this is false which they teach. For the two Testaments, the Law and the Gospell, are one in nature, substance, or kinde: and the difference lyes not in the presence or absence of the Spirit.

And whereas the Papists make two justifications, the first meerly by grace, the second by workes: besides the two Testaments, they must establish a third Testament compounded of both: and it must be partly legall, and partly Evangelicall; otherwise the twofold justification cannot stand. For the Law propounds onely one way of justification, and the Gospell a second. The doctrine therefore that propounds both, is compounded of both.

God did not approve the polygamy of Abraham, yet doth hee use it to signifie the greatest mystery of our Religion. Here we see a great point of the divine providence of God, who ordereth and useth well the things which hee doth not approve. This is the foundation of our patience, and a meanes of true comfort. Joseph thus comforts himselfe and his brethren, that God ordered and disposed their bad enterprise, to his and their good, Gen. 45.6.7.

Here againe Paul sets downe two properties of the Testament of works, or of the law. The first is, that it comes from mount Sina. And here lies the difference betweene the law and the Gospell: the Law is from Sina, the Gospel from Sion or Ierusalem. For there it was first to be preached, and from thence conveyed to all nations, Micb. 4.1. Exech 47.1.

The second property of the Law is, that it gendreth to bondage: because it maketh them bondmen, that look to be saved and justified thereby. And this it doth, by revealing sinne and the punishment thereof, which is everlasting death, and by convincing all men of their sins, and of their deserved condemnation. In this respect, it is called the ministery of death, 2 Cor. 3.6. and Paul saith, that after he knew his sinnes by the law, he dyed, and the law was the meanes of death unto him, Rom. 7.10. Here is another difference betweene the law and the Gospell. The law gendets to bondage: the Gospell gendets to life. For it is an instrument of the Spirit for the beginning and confirming of our regeneration and salvation: and so is not the Law, which is no cause, but onely an occasion of the grace of God in us.

Whereas Ierusalem that now is, is said to be in bondage, as Sina and Agar; it is to be observed, that there is no Church in the world, nor people, which is not subject to apostasie. For God had made great and large promises to Ierusalem, Psal. 122. and 132. and yet for all this, Ierusalem by refusing Christ, and by establishing the justice of the law, is come into bondage, and deprives her selfe of the inheritance of eternall life. Therefore it is a falsehood which the Papists teach, that the infallible assistance of the Spirit is tyed to the Chaire, and Consistory of the Pope, so as he, and consequently the Church of Rome cannot erre. Here againe, we see what may be the future condition of England. For it may bee said of it hereafter, England that now is, is not that which it hath bin, namely, a maintainer of the Gospel of Christ. Therefore wee must not be high minded, but feare, and now take heed of the first beginning of apostasie. The Holy Ghost, Hebr. 3.12, 13. sets downe the degrees thereof, and they are five in number. The first is, the deceit of sinne: the second is, the hardning of the heart after men are deceived by sinne: the third is, an evill heart, which grows upon hardnesse of heart: the fourth is, unbeleefe, whereby the word of God is called in question, and the truth thereof: and after unbeleefe followes a departure from God and Christ. That this may not be, we must carefully avoid all the deceits of sinne, as namely, covetousnesse, ambition, lust, &c.

Againe, as Agar signifies the law, so doth Ismael all Justiciaries, that looke to bee saved by the law. Here then we see the condition of the world the greatest part whereof are Ismaelites. For the Turke, and the Iew, looke at this day to be saved by their workes. The Papist ascribes his conversion not wholly to grace, but partly to grace, & partly to nature, or the strength of man will helped by grace. And thus are they borne after the flesh, as Ismael was. And our common people, though in shew thy professe reformed Religion, yet in deed a great part of them are Ismaelites. For they looke to be saved by their good serving of God, and by their good deeds: and they little thinke on Christ and his merits. And thus they deprive themselves of all title to eternall life. Therefore it stands them in hand to condemne nature and the strength thereof, and to renounce their owne workes, and to rest onely on the promise of mercy for eternall salvation: thus shall they bee the Children of the promise, and Heyres of God.

A Lastly, in That Ierusalem is in bondage like Agar or mount Sina, wee see how vaine are the pilgrimages to the holy Land, and how needlesse were the wars made for the recoverie thereof.

B 26. But Ierusalem which is above, is free: which is the mother of us all.

Here Paul shewes what is figured by Sara, namely, the new Ierusalem, which is the Catholike Church, Hebr. 12, 22, 23. Revel 21.2. And it is here so termed, because Ierusalem was a type thereof in sixe respects. First, God chose Ierusalem above all other places to dwell in, Psal. 132. 13. And the Catholike Church is the company of predestinate, chosen to be a peculiar people to God. Secondly, Ierusalem is a City compact in it selfe, by reason of the bond of love and order among the Citizens, Psal. 122.3. In like sort the members of the Catholike Church are linked together by the bond of one spirit. Thirdly, in Ierusalem was the Sanctuary, a place of Gods presence, and of his worship, where also the promise of the seed of the woman was preserved till the comming of the Messias: and now the Catholike Church is in the roome of the sanctuary: in it we must seeke the presence of God, and the word of life: therefore it is called the pillar and ground of truth; 1 Tim. 3. 15. Fourthly, in Ierusalem was the throne of David, Psal. 122.5. and in the Catholike Church is the throne or scepter of Christ, figured by the kingdome of David, Rev. 3.7. Fifthly, the commendation of a City (as Ierusalem) is the subjection and obedience of the Citizens: now in the Catholike Church all beleevers are Citizens, Eph. 2.19. and yeeld voluntary obedience and subjection to Christ their King, Psalme 110.2. Esay 2. 5. Lastly, as in Ierusalem the names of the Citizens were inrolled in a Register; so the names of all the members of the Catholike Church, are inrolled in the booke of life, Revel. 20. 15. Heb. 12. 23.

C Againe, the Catholike Church dwelling here below, is said to bee above in heaven for two causes. First, in respect of her beginning, which is from the election and grace of God, and from Christ the Mediatour, of whose flesh and bone we are that beleeve, Eph. 5. 30. The justice whereby we are justified is in Christ; our holinesse and life, flowes from the holines and life of Christ, as from a root. Secondly, the Church is said to be above, because it dwels by faith in heaven with Christ; for the property of faith is to make us present after a sort, when we are absent, Heb. 11.1.

The use. This being so, we are admonished to live in this world as pilgrimes & strangers, 1 Pet. 2.11. and therefore we must not set our love upon any earthly thing, but our mindes must be upon the countrey to which we are travelling. And whatsoever is an hinderance to us in our journey, we must cast it from us, that we may goe lightly: and if we have any wrong done us either in goods or good name we must the rather bee content, because wee are out of our country in a strange place: and hereupon wee must take occasion to make haste to our journies end, that is, to our owne city, and last abode. Thus did the Patriarchs, Heb. 11.13, 15.

D Secondly, we must carie our selves as Burgesses of heaven, Phil. 3.20. And this we shall doe by minding, seeking, & affecting of heavenly things, by speaking the language of Canaan, which is, to invocate and praise the name of God. Lastly, by leading a spirituall life, that may beseeme the Citizens of heaven. Many faile in this point, when they come to the Lords Table, they professe themselves to bee Citizens of the city of God, but in their common dealings in the world, they play the starke rebels against God and his word, and live according to the lusts of their blinde and unrepentant hearts.

Thirdly, when Paul saith, that Ierusalem which is above is free, &c. hee shewes that the Catholike Church is one in number, and no more: Cant. 6.8. My dove is alone, and the onely daughter of her mother. John 10.11. One sheepefold. There bee many members, but one bodie, 1 Cor. 12, 12.

Fourthly,

A Fourthly, hence we gather, that the Catholike Church is invisible. For the company of them that dwell in heaven by their faith, cannot be discerned by the eye. John saw the heavenly Ierusalem descending from heaven, yet not with the bodily eye, but in spirit. Rev. 21.10. The things which make the catholike church to bee the Church, namely, election, vocation, justification, glorification, are invisible, the Papist therefore erreth, when hee teacheth, that the Catholike church is a visible company under one Pastour, namely the Pope. And the places which they bring to proove the visibility of the universall church, concerne either particular churches, or the churches that were in the dayes of the Apostles; or agains, they speake of the inward glory, and the beauty of the Church.

B Free] that is, redeemed from the bondage of death and sinne: and so from the curse of the law. Of this freedome I will speake more afterward.

The mother of us all] she is called a mother, because the word of God is committed to the keeping of the Church, which word is seede, 1 Pet. 1.23. and milke, 1 Corint. 3. 2. and strong meat, Heb. 5.14. And the Church is a mother, which by the ministery of the said word, brings forth children to God, and after they are borne and brought forth, shee feeds them with milke out of their owne breasts, which are the Scriptures of the old and new Testament.

C Here a great question is to bee propounded, namely, where we shall finde this our Mother? for it is the duty of all children to have recourse unto their mother, and to live under her wing. The advocates of the Popish church, Priests and Iesuites say, wee must bee reconciled to the church and See of Rome, if we would be of the catholike church. To this purpose they use many motives, I will here propound seven of them: because heretofore they have beene scattered abroad among us.

The first motive. The church of Rome hath meanes of sure and certaine interpretation, tradition, councils, fathers: wee have nothing but the private interpretation of Luther, Melanthon, Calvin, &c. Answ. Scripture is both the glosse and the text. And the principall meanes of the interpretation of Scripture, is Scripture it selfe. And it is a meanes, when places of Scripture are expounded by the Analogy of faith, by the words, scope, and circumstances of the place. And the interpretation which is fitable to all these, is sure, certaine, and publike: for it is the interpretation of God. Contrariwise the interpretation which is not agreeable to these, though it be from church, fathers, and councils, is uncertaine, and it is private interpretation. Now this kinde of interpretation wee allow: and therefore it is false, that wee have only private interpretations, and that all interpretations of the church of Rome are publike.

D Secondly, I answer, that we are able to justifie our interpretation of Scripture for the maine points of Religion, by the consent of fathers, and councils, as well as they of the church of Rome.

The second motive. We have no divine and infallible authoritie to rest on in matter of religion but they of the church of Rome have. Answ. In the canonicall Scriptures of the Prophets and Apostles, there is divine and infallible authority: for they are now in the new testament, in stead of the lively voyce of God. And this authority we in our church acknowledge. Secondly, I answer, that the church hath no divine and infallible authority distinct from the authority of Scriptures (as the Papist teach) but onely a Ministery, which is to speake in the name of God, according to the written word.

The third motive. Wee have no limitations of opinion, and affection, but they of the church of Rome have. I answer, first: wee suffer our selves to be limited for opinion, by the analogy of faith, and by the written word, and so doth not the Papist, which addes tradition to the Scripture. And for affection wee suffer our selves to bee limited by the doctrine of repentance, and new obedience. Secondly, I answer, that the church of Rome useth false meanes of Limitation. For it teacheth, that for opinion, wee must captivate our senses to the determination of the church, by beleeving as the church beleeveth, though it be not known what the church beleeveth. And it limits affection, by auricular confession, and by canonicall satisfaction, meere inventions of men.

The fourth motive. The Romane religion drawes the multitude. Answ. It drawes them indeed, because it is a naturall religion, but it doth not turne them from darknes to light, from death to life. Secondly, I answer, that Antichrist in his comming shall draw the multitude. 2 Thess. 2.9.

The fifth motive. There were never but two alterations of religion. One in the dayes of Elias; the other in the dayes of John the Baptist. Answ. I will shew a third. Paul saith, that before the end, there shall bee a departure, 2 Thess. 2. and this departure is generall in all Nations, Revel. 13.16. and after a thousand yeares there shall be the first resurrection, Revel. 20. 5. and this resurrection is the reviving and the restoring of the Gospell after long ignorance and superstition.

The sixt motive. The church of Rome hath a Iudge to end controversies: we have none. Answ. Christ is our Iudge: and the Scripture is the voyce of this Iudge, determining all things pertaining to salvation, fully, and plainly to the contentation of any conscience.

The seventh motive. The Roman religion is futable to auncient Tradition. Answer. It is contrary. For it aboliſheth the ſecond commandement touching images, and the tenth, touching luſt. And it overturneth ſundry Articles of faith. For it aboliſheth one of the natures of Chriſt by the reall preſence, and his three offices, by joyning partners, and aſſociates with him.

To theſe ſeven I adde three other. The eighth motive then is this: Our Miniſters (they ſay) tooke unto themſelves new callings: and conſequently that wee are but ſchiſmaticks. Anſw. The offices of the firſt reſtorers of the Goſpell were ordinary: and their vocation to the ſaid offices was ordinary; for they were all either Prieſts, or Schoole-doctours. It may bee ſaid, that they departed onely from the common abuſe of their callings, which they reſtored to their right uſe.

The ninth Motive. The church of Rome hath true baptiſme, and therefore it is a true church. Anſw. Baptiſme in the Papacy, pertaines not to it but to another hidden church in the middeſt of the Papacy: as the light in the Lanthorne, pertaines not to it, but to the paſſenger. Secondly, though the church of Rome hold the outward Baptiſme, yet doth it overturne the inward, which ſtands in the juſtification of a ſinner, by imputation of the obedience of Chriſt. Thirdly, baptiſme ſevered from the preaching of the Goſpell, is no marke of a church. Circumciſion was uſed in Samaria, and yet they were no people of God. Hoſ. 1.9.

The tenth motive. The church of Rome hath antiquity and ſucceſſion from the Apoſtles. Anſwer. They are no markes of the church, unleſſe they bee joyned with propheticall and Apoſtolicall doctrine. The kingdome of darkneſſe, hath alſo antiquitie, ſucceſſion, univerſality, and unity.

Now then wee are to hold the church of Rome as a ſtepmother, nay, as a profeſſed harlot: ſhee is no mother of ours. For the Lord ſaith, Come out of her my people, Rev. 18. Let us therefore come to the true anſwer.

The Catholike Church, our Mother, is to be ſought for, and to be found in the true viſible churches, the certaine markes whereof are three. The preaching of the word of GOD, out of the writings of the Prophets and Apoſtles with obedience, Iohn 10.28. Eph. 2.20. True invocation of God the Father, in the only name of Chriſt by the aſſiſtance of the Spirit, Act 9.14. 1 Cor 1.2. The right uſe of the Sacraments, Baptiſme, and the Lords Supper, Mat. 28.18. And by theſe ſhall we finde the true Church of God in England, Ireland, Scotland, Germany, France, &c.

Againe, in that the church is called our Mother, the Papiſt gathereth, that her commandements muſt be obeyed, Pro. 1.8. and therefore in their catechiſmes, beſide the commandements of God, they propound the commandements of the church. But I anſwer, that the precepts of the father and the mother muſt be one: and then the mother muſt be obeyed.

The church is called the mother of us all, that is, of all true beleevers. Hence it followes, that wicked men are not members of the catholike church (as Popiſh Doctours erroniouſly teach); for then the church ſhall bee a mother, not onely to the children of God, but alſo to the children of the devill.

Laſtly, in that the church is our mother, wee are taught that we muſt deſpiſe our firſt birth, and ſeeke to be borne againe unto God, and ſucke the breaſt of our mother, feeding on the milke of the word, Pſal. 45.11. & Peter 2.2. Thus, to be borne a member of the new Jeruſalem, is a great priviledge. Pſalme 87.5. Rev. 3.12.

27. For it is written, Rejoyce thou barren that beareſt no children, breake forth and cry thou that travelleſt not: for the deſolate hath many more children then ſhe which hath an huſband.

Theſe words are the teſtimony of the Prophet Eſay, cap. 54.1. and they are brought to proove that which Paul ſaid in the former verſe, that the Catholike Church is the mother of us all, that is, not onely of the Iewes, but alſo of all beleeving Gentiles.

In the words I conſider the preface to the Teſtimony, and the Teſtimony it ſelfe. The preface, It is written: where two points are to be conſidered. The firſt is, who ſaith, It is written? Anſ. The Apoſtle Paul, whoſe authority was divine and infallible, becauſe he was led into all truth by the Spirit of God, ſo as hee could not erre in delivering doctrine to the church. And yet for all this hee followes the rule of the written word. And his manner was ſo to doe, Act. 26.22. This ſhewes the ſhamelеſſe impudency of the church of Rome, which takes to it ſelfe an abſolute power of judgement in all matters without, and beſide the Scripture, yea, a power to judge of the Scripture it ſelfe, and of the ſenſe thereof, without the helpe of Scripture, upon a ſuppoſed infallible aſſiſtance of the Spirit.

The ſecond point is, In what queſtion ſaith Paul, It is written: Anſw. In a controverſie between him and the falſe Apoſtles, touching the juſtification of a ſinner. This ſhewes that the Scripture it ſelfe is the meanes to determine and decide controverſies. There was for this purpoſe in the old Teſtament, the lively voyce of God uttered in the Oracle at the mercy ſeate: but in the new Teſtament, there is no ſuch voyce of God; but the written word is in the ſtead thereof, to the end of the world. And therefore Paul ſaith, It is written.

In the teſtimony I conſider three things; the condition of the two churches, the change of the condition, the joy that is upon the change.

The condition of the church of the new Teſtament, in theſe words, Barren thou that beareſt no children: thou that travelleſt not: the deſolate.

Barren] The Chriſtian Church is ſo called, becauſe by the vertue and ſtrength of nature it beares no children to God, no more than Sara did to Abraham, Iohn 1.13. 1 Cor. 3.7. Secondly, it is ſo called in reſpect of the beginning thereof, when the Iewiſh church was yet ſtanding, till the ſpirit of God was powred forth upon all fleſh, after the aſcenſion of Chriſt, and before this, the number of them which were converted to GOD, was very ſmall: and therefore Chriſt himſelfe complained, that he ſpent his ſtrength in vaine, Eſa. 49.4. Thirdly, it is ſo called in reſpect of the latter times of the Church, in which Chriſt ſhall ſcarce find faith upon the earth, Luk. 18.8. Further that the Church is barren, it is declared by the ſigne, becauſe ſhee neither brings forth child, nor beares.

Deſolate] that is, without husband in appearance, by reaſon of the croſſe and affliction: and without children, becauſe at the firſt the chriſtian Church was conſtrained to hide her ſelfe in the wilderneſſe, Rev. 12.14. It may bee demanded how the Catholike Church ſhould be deſolate? Anſ. The eſtate of the Church is twofold; inward or outward. The inward eſtate ſtands in the true knowledge of God in Chriſt, in comfort touching remiſſion of ſinne, and life everlaſting, in the hearing of our prayers, in protection and deliverance from all ſpirituall enemies, in the gifts of the ſpirit, faith, hope, love, &c. In reſpect of this eſtate, the Church is all glorious within, & never deſolate, Pſal. 45.13. The outward eſtate of the Catholike Church, ſtands in viſible aſſemblies, in the publike Miniſtery of the Word and Sacraments, in a government according to the word of God. In reſpect of this ſecond eſtate, the Church may be in deſolation. This was the condition of the church in Paradiſe upon the fall of our firſt Parents, of the Iſraelites at Mount Horeb, when they worſhipped the golden calfe, and in the dayes of Elias, Rom 11.3. and afterward, 2 Chron 15.3. When Chriſt ſuffered, the ſhepheard was ſmitten, and the ſheep were ſcattered. After Chriſts aſcenſion all the earth worſhipped the beaſt, Rev. 13.12.

Hence it followes, that the Catholike Church is not a viſible eſtate or company of men under one viſible head: becauſe in reſpect of her outward eſtate ſhe may bee for a time in deſolation. And as this is the eſtate of the Church, ſo is it alſo the eſtate of the members thereof. They ſhall be hated of all men; Luk. 21.17. Men ſhall thinke they doe God good ſervice, when they kill them, Iob. 16.2. And Chriſt himſelf was a man without forme or beauty, Iſa. 53.2

Having an huſband] in theſe words the condition of the Iewiſh Church is ſet forth, that ſhee is married or eſpouſed to GOD, who is her husband, Ezek. 16.8,9. The like may bee ſaid of any other church, and namely of the Church of England.

The Vſe. This muſt teach us to dedicate our bodies and ſoules to God, and Chriſt, and to give the maine affections of our hearts unto him, as our love, and joy, &c.

Secondly, we muſt adorne and trimme our ſelves with grace, that we may pleaſe our husband, Pſal. 45.12.

Thirdly, wee muſt bee the glory of Chriſt, as the wife is to her husband, 1 Cor. 11.7. and that is, by ſubjecting our ſelves to Chriſt and his lawes.

Againe, if we betroth our ſelves to Chriſt indeed, we may aſſure our ſelves that Chriſt is our Chriſt, and that he hath given himſelfe unto us, and conſequently, that hee will ſanctifie us, Ezec. 16.9. proteſt us as an husband doth his wife, Gen. 20.16. and indowe us with all things needfull for this life, and the life to come, Ezec. 16.10,11.

The ſecond point is the change of the Church of the new Teſtament, becauſe ſhee ſhall ceaſe to be barren, and bring forth many children. This is the promiſe of God: and hereupon Paul concludes, that the Church is a mother of all beleevers, both Iewes and Gentiles. Obſerve, that the promiſe of God is of infinite vertue in this time and place. In the beginning God ſaid, let there bee this or that, and it was ſo. Of like vertue is Gods promiſe, if we can waite his leiſure. God promiſed that after 430. yeares, the Iſraelites ſhould be delivered out of Egypt, preſently when the time was expired, nothing could hinder the promiſe. Reade Exodus 12.41. Therefore our duty is, to reſt on Gods promiſes in all times, both in life and death.

The third point is the joy upon the change. Rejoyce] Here are two things to be conſidered. The firſt, who muſt rejoyce? Anſ. The Church. Gods kingdome is the place of joy, Rom. 14.17. Rejoycing belongs to the people of God, Pſalm. 68.3. and 106.5. The muſicke of the Temple was cypicall, and figured the joy of the Catholike Church, where is the aſſurance of remiſſion of ſinnes, and life eternall.

The ſecond point is, in what muſt the Church rejoyce? Anſwer. In the redemption of Chriſt, and the fruit therof, the converſion of ſinners to God. For the Prophet had ſhewed at large the paſſion and ſufferings of Chriſt, Iſa. 53. and hereupon he ſaith, Rejoyce thou barren. The Iſraelites were commanded to feaſt, and to bee merry before the Lord, Leviticus 23. verſe 40. 1 Chronicles 29.22. that is, before the Lords Arke, which was the pledge of his preſence. Now this Arke was a figure of Chriſt: and the myrrh before the Arke, ſignified, that the foundation of all our joy, lies in our Reconciliation with God in Chriſt. The Angels in heaven greatly rejoyce at the converſion of a ſinner: and at the returne of the prodigall ſonne; the fat calfe is killed.

The Vſe. It is falſe, that Religion breeds Melancholy, and cuts off all mirth. It doth not abolish mirth, but rectifie it: nay, it brings men to true and perfect joy.

Our first and principall joy must be, that we are in Gods favour, reconciled to God by Christ, Luke 10.20. In David, the head of his joy, was the good estate of the Church, *Psalm.*137.6. And all other petty joyes must flow from this, and be suitable to it.

Breake forth] this signifies, that the Church upon earth is (as it were) pent in with present griefe. Our joy in this life is mixed with sorrow. The Paschall Lambe was eaten with sowre herbs, to signifie, that wee feele no sweetnesse in the blood of Christ, till we feele the smart of our sinnes. We here must rejoyce in trembling. *Psal.*2.11. *Joy is sowne for them that are upright in heart. Psal.*97.11.

Cry] in our earthly joyes, we must bee moderate and sparing: we must not eate too much hony lest wee surfet. Yet in spirituall joyes the measure is to rejoyce without measure, if we be ravished with joy in Christ, that we cry againe, it is the best of all.

28 Therefore brethren, we are after the maner of Isaac, children of the promise.

Here Paul shewes, that as Sara figured the Catholike Church, so Isaac was a figure of all true beleevers the children of God.

Therefore] or thus, And we brethren.

We] not only the Iewes, but also beleeving Gentiles.

Promise] the promise made to Abraham, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed: Or the promise made to the Church, that being barren she shall beare many children.

Children of promise] beleevers are so called, not because they beleeve the promise (though that be a truth) but because they are made children of God, by the vertue of Gods promise. For thus was Isaac the child of promise, in that he was borne to Abraham, not by the strength of nature, but by Gods promise. And Paul opposeth the children of the promise, to the children of the flesh, which were borne by naturall strength, *Rom.*9.8.

Hence it followes, that the meere grace of God, is the cause of our election and adoption, and not any thing in us. For the promise of God makes us Gods children: and the promise is of the meere grace of God: and therefore we are Gods children by the meere grace of God. For the cause of the cause, is the cause of the thing caused. Therefore Paul saith, that *the Ephesians were predestinate to adoption, Ephes.*1 5. And he saith, the 7000. that never bowed knee to Baal, were reserved by the election of grace, Rom. 11.5. And it is a false position, to teach, that Election and Adoption are according to Gods foreknowledge of our faith and obedience. For thus shall we elect our selves, and be children, not of Gods promise, but of our owne free will, and faith. Moreover, God forcsees our future faith and obedience, because hee first decreed to give the grace of faith unto us: because the foreknowledge of things, which are to come to passe, depends upon a precedent will in God.

Marke further, the children of God are called the children of the Promise, and this promise is absolute and effectuall. Here a question may be resolved: and that is, whether the child of God in his conversion have a libertie and power to resist the inward calling of God? Ans. No. The absolute will of God cannot bee resisted: now the promise whereby men are made the children of God, is the absolute will of God. Againe, with this promise is joyned the infinite power of God, which without all resistance bringeth that to passe which GOD hath promised. For hee makes men to doe that which he commands, *Ezech.*36.26. he gives the will and the deed, *Phil.*2.13. so as men effectually called, cannot but come, John 6.45.

It may be said, that this is to abolish all freedome of will. Ans. It sufficeth to the liberty of the will, that it be free from compulsion: for constraint takes away the liberty of the will, and not necessity. Secondly, the determination of mans will, by the will of God, is the liberty of the will, and not the bondage thereof: for this is perfect libertie, when mans will is conformable to the will of God.

29. But as he which was borne according to the flesh, persecuted him that was borne after the spirit, so it is now.

These words are an answer to an Objection, on this manner: wee are hated of the Iewes; and therefore we are not the children of promise. The answer is twofold. One in this verse, thus; No marvaile: this is the olde fashion: it was thus in Abrahams family. For Ismael (borne after the flesh) persecuted Isaac (borne after the spirit) and so it is at this day.

Observe that there is a perpetuall enmitie and opposition betweene true beleevers and hypocrites. God put enmitie betweene the seede of the Serpent, and the seed of the woman, Genes. 3.15. The world hates them that are chosen out of the world, John 15.19. Carnall men cannot abide that their opinions and doings, should be judged and condemned of others, John 3.20. And hence comes the opposition that is betweene beleevers, and hypocrites, who cannot abide such as are not like themselves.

This hatred and opposition, shewes it selfe in persecution: of which, three things are to be considered.

The first is, who persecures? Ans. Carnall Ismaelites, such as are of the same Religion and family with Isaac. Thus the Iewes persecuted their owne Prophets, and the Thessalonians were persecuted of their owne Prophets, *1 Thessal.*2.14. Thus Priests and Iesuites that have beene heretofore borne, baptized and brought up among us, are the causes of many seditions, conspiracies, and secke the subversion of Church and Land.

The

The second is, who are persecuted? Ans. Spirituall men, the Children of the promise. They suffer wrong, but they doe none: In the mount of the Lord there is no hurt done, Esay 11. 9. they turne their speares and swords into mattockes and sithes, Esay 2.4. And they which doe no wrong, but are content to suffer wrong (and that for a good cause) are in this respect blessed, *Mat.*5.10.

The third point is, touching the kinde of persecution: and that was scorning or mocking. *Gen.*21.9. It may be demanded, how mocking can be persecution? Ans. Mocking and derision, which riseth of the hatred and contempt of our brother is a degree of murder: Hee that saith Raca to his brother, is guilty of a Councill, Mat. 5.22. Here Raca signifieth all signes & gestures which expresse contempt, as snuffing, tushing, leering, grinning, &c. Cain is rebuked of God even for the casting downe of his countenance, *Gen.*4.6.

Againe, the mocking wherewith Ismael mocked Isaac, proceeded from a contempt & hatred of the grace of God in Isaac: which Paul notes when he saith, that he was persecuted which was borne after the spirit. This hatred of Gods grace in men, is the beginning of all persecution, and the deriding of the grace of GOD, is as much as the spoyling of our goods, and the seeking of our lives. Thus Cain hated his brother, by reason of the grace of God, *Because his deeds were good, 1 Joh.*3.12. A great part of the sufferings of Christ, stood in this, that he was mocked for his confidence in God. Psalm. 22.8. Matth. 27.43. The Children of Bethel mocke Elizeus: first for his person, calling him Baldepate: secondly, for the favour of God shewed upon Elias his master, in saying, Ascend, bald pate: that is, ascend not to Bethel, but ascend to heaven as Elias did, and this prophane scorning hee cursed in the name of God, 2 *Kin.*2.23. The like scorning is used among us at this day. For the practice of that religion which stands by the Law of God, & the good lawes of this land, is nicke-named with termes of Precisenesse, & Purity. A thing much to be lamented: for this bewraies that there is a great want of the grace of God among us. Therefore take heed of it.

30. But what saith the Scripture: put out the bond-woman, and her sonne: for the sonne of the bond woman shall not be heire with the sonne of the free-woman.

The second answer to the former objection, is in these words, that they which hate the children of promise, shall at length bee cast out of the house of God.

Object 1. These words, Cast out the bond-woman, are the words of Sara to Abraham: therefore they are not the words of Scripture. Answ. The words were uttered by Sara, but they were afterward approved by GOD, Genesis 21.12. and thus they are the voyce of Scripture.

Object. 2 I. Sara is commended for her subjection to Abraham, *1 Pet.*3.6. yet here she speakes imperiously. Cast out the bondwoman. Answ. Shee speakes this not as a private woman, but as the voyce and mouth of God. And that (no doubt) by instinct from God. And therefore the words she uttereth, are to bee esteemed as the commandement of God. This her case is extraordinary, and not to be followed.

The Vse. I. All carnall hypocrites, mockers of the grace of God, shall be cast forth of Gods family, though for a time they beare a sway therein. This is the sentence of God. Let us therefore repent of our mocking, and hereafter become lovers of the grace of God as Christ was, Marke 10.21.

II. Consolation: the persecution of the people of God shall not bee perpetuall. For the persecuting bondwoman, and her sonne must be cast out. The rod of the wicked shall not rest upon the lot of the righteous, Psalme 125.3. This is our comfort.

III. All justiciary people, and persons that looke to bee saved and justified before God by the Law, and the workes of the law, either in whole, or in part, are cast out of the Church of God, and have no part in the kingdome of heaven. The casting out of Agar and Ismael, is a figure of the rejection of all such. Behold here the voyce of God casting downe from heaven the greatest part of the earth; the Turk, the Iew, the obstinate Papist, with the stepmother, the Romish church.

31. Then brethren, we are not children of the servant, but of the free woman.

The conclusion of the whole Argument following directly from the 27. verse. If wee be children of the promise, then are we children of the free woman, and not of the bond-woman, and consequently we are justified and saved without works of the law, by the meere grace of God, causing us by faith to rest on the promise of God, whose substance and foundation is Christ.

CHAP. V.

1 Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not intangled againe with the yoke of bondage.

These words are a repetition of the principall conclusion of the whole Epistle. Which was on this manner: I Paul am called to teach, and my doctrine is true: therefore ye did evill to depart from it, and your duty was to have stood unto it.

Further, they are collected and inferred upon the conclusion of the last argument used in the last Chapter, thus: Yee are children of the free woman: and therefore ye are free: and therefore yee should hold fast your liberty.

In

In the words 2. maine points of doctrine A are propounded. The first is, that by nature we are all intangled with the yoake of bondage. For the better conceiving of this, I will handle three points, the nature of this bondage, the signe of it, and the use.

Touching the nature of it. Our spirituall bondage stands in three things. The first, in bondage under sinne, which Paul teacheth when he saith, I am carnall, sold under sinne, Rom.7.14. Remember that by sinne is meant originall sinne, which hath two parts: Guiltinesse in the first offence of Adam, which is imputed to all mankinde; and the disposition of all the powers of the soule to all manner of evill whatsoever. And this rebellious disposition is like a leprosie infecting the whole man: and it reignes like a tyrant over the soule of man, by tempting, inticing, and drawing him from one actuall sinne to another, so as he can doe nothing but sin, Iam. 1. 14.

The second thing is obligation or subjection to all punishment both temporall and eternall. And it hath three parts. The first is, Bondage under Satan, who keepes unrepentant sinners *in his snare according to his own will, 2 Tim.*2. 26. hee rules in their hearts like a God, 2 Cor. 4. 4. and hath power to blinde them, and to harden their hearts; till hee have brought them to eternall death, Hebr. 2. 14. The second is bondage under an evill conscience, which fits in the hearts of offenders as an accuser, and a terrible Iudge, and lies like a wilde beast at a mans doore, ready ever & anon to pluck out his throat, Gen. 4. 7. The third is, bondage under the wrath of God, and the feare of eternall death, Heb. 2. 15.

The third part of this bondage, is the obligation to the ceremoniall law. I pertaines not to all mankinde, but only concernes the Iewes, to whom it was a yoake of bondage, Acts 15.

The signe of this bondage, whereby it may be discerned, is to keepe a course or practice in sinning, John 8. 34 Hee that commits sinne, is a servant of sinne: or againe, a life led according to the custome and fashion of this world in the lust of the flesh, or the lust of the eye (which is covetousnesse,) or in the pride D of life, Ephes. 2. 2. 1 John 2. 16.

The Vse. Wee must learne to see, feele, acknowledge and bewaile this bondage in our selves Deliverance belongs only to such captives, as know themselves to be captives, Luk. 4. 18. and labour under this bondage, Matth. 11. 28. Thus did Paul when he saith, I am sold under sinne: and, O miserable man! who shall deliver me from this body of death? To feele this bondage, is a step out of it: and not to feele it, is to be plunged into it.

Secondly, wee must pray earnestly for deliverance. The dumbe creatures sigh and travell till they be delivered from their bondage, much more then must we doe it, Rom. 8. 22.

Thirdly, we must learne to detest whatsoever is of our selves: because it wholly tends to bondage.

Lastly, we must be content with any affliction that God layes on us, though it bee lingring sicknesse, poverty, imprisonment, banishment. For God might worthily lay on us all shame and confusion: because we are by nature slaves of sinne and Satan.

The second maine doctrine is, that by grace there is a liberty pertaining to the people of God. Here I consider foure things: first, what this liberty is: secondly, the author of it: thirdly, the person to whom it belongs: fourthly, our duty touching this liberty.

For the first, Christian liberty is called, the good or commodity of Christians, Rom. 14. 16.

It is a spirituall right or condition, lost by Adam, and restored by Christ. I say, Spirituall because it pertaines to the conscience. The use indeed of our liberty is in outward things, as meate, drinke, apparell, &c. but the liberty it selfe is in the conscience. And thus it differs from civill liberty, which stands in the moving of the body, in the choyce of bodily actions, and in the free use of our goods.

Christian liberty hath two parts, Deliverance from misery, and Freedome in good things.

Deliverance hath foure parts. The first is a Deliverance from the curse of the Law for the breach thereof, Rom. 8. 1. There is no condemnation to them that are in Christ. And this comes to passe, because there is a translation made of the curse from our persons to the person of Christ, Gal. 3. 13.

The second deliverance is from the obligation of the law, whereby it binds us to bring perfect righteousnesse in our owne persons for the attainment of everlasting life, according to the tenour thereof, Doe this, and live. And this deliverance is procured, because there is a translation made of the fulfilling of the Law, from our persons to the person of our Saviour Christ.

From these two deliverances ariseth the pacification of the conscience, partly for our justification, and partly for our conversation.

Touching Iustification. A sinner in his humiliation and conversion hath by this doctrine a Liberty without respect to his owne workes, or to his owne fulfilling of the Law, to rest on the meere mercy of God for the forgivenesse of his sinnes, and the salvation of his soule, and to appeale from the throne of Divine Iustice, to the throne of Grace, and to oppose the merit of Christ against the wrath and iudgement of God. And this hath beene alwaies the helpe of the godly in their distresse, read 2 Chron. 33. 12. Ezra 9. Dan. 9 Psal. 32. 51. 130. 143. Consider the example of the Publicane, and the Prodigall sonne, who condemne themselves, and make their appeale to the court of mercy and grace.

Here

Here some man may say, how shall I know A that I am freed from the rigour of the Law, and from the curse thereof? Ans. Thou must first set thy selfe at the barre of Gods iudgement, and there thou must arraigne, accuse, and condemne thy selfe: this done, thou must use thy liberty, and make thine appeale to Gods mercy and grace for pardon, by asking, seeking, knocking: and thus at length shalt thou bee resolved touching thy deliverance.

Moreover, touching conversation, our consciences are setled thus: in that they are freed from the rigour of the Law, God in mercy accepts the will and indeavour to beleeve, repent, and obey, for faith, repentance, obedience. He spares them that feare him, as a father spares his childe when he endeavours to doe that which he can, Mal. 3. 17. The law requires perfect obedience at our hands: yet God of his mercy lookes more at the will to obey, than the perfection of obedience. This must be a stay to our mindes, when wee see more corruption than grace in our selves, and our obedience tainted with many spots of disobedience.

The third deliverance, is from the observation of the Ceremoniall law of Moses, Col. 2. 15. And hence ariseth another deliverance from the bondage of humane Traditions, as Paul saith, If ye be dead with Christ from the Elements of the world, why are ye burdened with traditions? Col. 2. 20. C

The fourth deliverance, is from under the tyranny and dominion of sinne. Rom. 6 v. 14. Let not sinne have dominion over you. For ye are not under the law, but under grace. In the first conversion of a sinner, originall sin receives his deadly wound, and the dominion thereof is diminished according to the measure of grace received.

The second part of Christian liberty, is a Freedome in good things: and it is fourefold. The first, is a freedome in the voluntary service of God. Luke 1. 74 We are delivered from our enemies, that we may serve God in righteousnesse and holinesse before him all the dayes of our lives without feare. Paul saith, that the law is not given to the righteous man, 1 Tim. 1. 9. because he is a law to himselfe, and freely does good duties, as if there were no law to binde him. The cause of this freedome, is the gift and donation of the free Spirit of God. Therefore David prayes, Stablish me with thy free Spirit, Psal. 51. And Paul saith, Where the Spirit is, there is liberty, 2 Cor. 4. 17. And, The Spirit of life which is in Christ (is a law to us, and) frees us from the power of sin, and death. D

It may be objected, that this freedome in the voluntary service of God, is bondage. For Christ saith, Matthew 11. 29. Take my yoke unto you. And we are straitly bound to the obedience of the law of God, as Adam was by creation, my more straitly, by reason of our redemption by Christ. Ans. The more we A are bound to obedience, the freer we are: because the service of God is not bondage, but perfect liberty.

The second freedome is in the free use of all the creatures of God. Titus 1. 15. To the pure, all things are pure, Rom. 14. 14. And the reason is, because the dominion over the creatures, lost by Adam, is restored by Christ, 1 Cor. 3. 22. And hence it is, that the Apostle calls the forbidding of mariage, and of meates, with obligation of conscience, doctrine of devils, 1 Tim. 4. 1.

The third freedome, is a liberty to come unto God the Father in the name of Christ, and in prayer to be heard, Rom. 5. 2. Ephes. 3. 12. Whereas according to our naturall condition, our sinnes are a wall of partition betweene us and God, and cause us to fly from the presence of God: and though we cry unto God, and fill heaven and earth with our cryes, so long as we are in our sinnes, we are not heard of him. B

The fourth freedome, is a liberty to enter into heaven in the day of our death: Christ by his blood having made a way, Heb. 10 19.

Thus we see what Christian libertie is. The use followes. The Anabaptists gather hence, that among Christians there must be no Magistrates, for if there must be magistrates, they must have power to make lawes beside the Lawes of God: but this power they have not, because Christians have a free use of all creatures of God by Christian liberty. Answ. We must distinguish betweene the liberty it selfe, and the use of it. And the Magistrates authority deales not with the liberty which is in the conscience, but with the use of it: and he doth neither diminish nor abolish the use of any of the creatures, but restraines the abuse, and moderates the over-common use for the common good. Thus Magistracy and Christian liberty may stand together: and the rather, because liberty is in conscience, and the Magistrates authority pertaines to the body. C

Here is further comfort for all the godly: for even by Christian liberty, their consciences are exempted from the power of all creatures, men, and Angells. 1 Cor. 7 23. Yee are bought with a price, be not servants of men: that is, let not your hearts and consciences stand in subjection to the will of any man.

Here then falls to the ground the opinion of the Papists, namely, that the Lawes and traditions of the Church binde conscience as truly and certainly as the word of God. This doctrine is not of God, because it is against Christian liberty.

Object. 1. Rom. 13. 5. Be subject to the higher powers for conscience. Answer. Conscience here is not in respect of the lawes of the Magistrates, but in respect of the Law of God, that bids us in conscience to obey the law of the Magistrate.

Object. 11. Heb. 13. 17. Obey them that have the oversight of you, and be subject. Ans. We must be subiect to them: because as Ministers of God, they deliver the word of God in the name of God unto us, and that word bindes conscience. Againe, the lawes which they make touching order and comelinesse in the service of God, are to be obeyed for the avoiding of scandall and contempt.

Obiect: III. A thing indifferent, upon the commandement of the Magistrate, becomes necessary. Answ. It is true. But it must be observed, that necessity is twofold; Externall, internall. And the Law of the Magistrate makes a thing indifferent to bee necessary, onely in respect of externall necessity, for the avoyding of the contempt of authority, and for the avoyding of scandall. Otherwise the thing in it selfe is not necessary, but remaines still indifferent, and may be used, or not used, if contempt and scandall be avoided. The Apostles made a law, that the Gentiles should abstain from strangled and blood, and things offered to idolls, Act. 15.28. yet Paul saith, afterward to the Corinthians, All things are lawfull, 1 Cor. 10 23. and whatsoever is sold in the shambles, eate and make no question for conscience sake, v. 25. because their intent was not, that the law should simply binde, but onely in the case of offence: and therfore where there was no offence to be feared, they leave all men to their liberty.

Againe, here is another comfort to all that believe in Christ, that nothing can hurt them, and that no evill can befall them, Psal 91.10. nay all things shall in the end turne to their good, though in reason and sense, they seeme hurtfull. To believe this one thing, is a ground of all true comfort.

The consideration of this benefit of Christian liberty, teacheth three things. The first is, from our hearts to embrace, love, and maintaine Christian Religion, because it is the meanes of this liberty. The second is, carefully to search the Scriptures: for they are as it were the Charter in which our liberties are contained. Thirdly, our Christian libertie puts us in mind to become unfained servants of God in the duties of faith, repentance, new obedience, Rom 6.22. For this service is our liberty.

The second point is, touching the Author of this liberty, in these words, Wherewith Christ hath made us free Christ then is the worker of this liberty, Iohn 8.36. he dissolves the workes of the devill, 1 Iohn 3.8. he binds the strong man, and casts him out of his hold, Matth. 12.29.

He procures this liberty by two meanes: by his merit, and by the efficacy of his Spirit. The merit of his death procures deliverance from death, and it purchaseth a right to life everlasting. The efficacy of his Spirit assures us of our adoption, and withall abates by little and little the strength and power of sinne.

The Vse. Hence we learne the greatnesse and grievousnesse of our spirituall bondage, because there was none that could deliver us from it, but Christ by his death and passion. Hence therefore wee are to take occasion to acknowledge and bewaile this our most miserable condition in our selves.

Secondly, the price that was payd for the procurement of our liberty, namely, the precious blood of the immaculate Lambe of God, shewes that the liberty it selfe is a thing most precious and excellent, and so to be esteemed.

Thirdly, for this liberty we are to give all praise and thankes to God. This did Paul at the remembrance of it, Rom. 7.25. 1 Cor. 15. 57. And not to be thankfull is an height of wickednesse.

The third point is, concerning the persons to whom this liberty belongs; and they are noted in these words, Stand ye fast; he hath made us free. Whereby Paul signifies himselfe and the Galatians that believed in Christ. Beleevers then are the persons to whom this liberty belongs, Iohn 1.12. 1 Tim. 4.3. And true beleevers are thus to be discerned. They use the ordinary meanes of grace and salvation, the word, and sacraments: in the use of the meanes, they exercise themselves in the spirituall exercises of invocation and repentance: & in these exercises they bewaile their unbeleefe, and strive by all meanes to beleeve in Christ. As for them that conceive a perswasion of Gods mercy without the meanes of salvation, and without the exercises of invocation and repentance, they are not true beleevers, but hypocrites.

When Paul saith, Christ hath made us free, that is, me Paul, and you the Galatians, he teacheth that every beleever must by his faith apply unto himselfe the benefit of Christian liberty. But to doe this well, is a matter of great difficulty. The Papists in their writings report our doctrine to bee this: that a man must conceive a perswasion that he is in the favour of God, the adopted child of God; and that upon this perswasion hee hath the pardon of his sinnes, and the benefit of Christian liberty. But they abuse us in this as in many other things. But wee teach that the application of Christ and his benefits, is to be made by certaine degrees. The first is, to use the meanes of salvation, the word, prayer, sacraments: the second is, to consider and to grow to some feeling of our spirituall bondage: the third is, to will and desire to beleeve in Christ, and to testifie this desire by asking, seeking, knocking: the fourth is, a certain perswasion, or a certainty conceived in minde of the mercy of God by meanes of the former desire according to the promise of God, Aske, and it shall be given unto you. The fifth is an experience of the goodnesse of God after long use of the meanes of salvation: and then upon this experience followes the full perswasion of mercy and forgivenesse.

The

The fourth point, concernes the office of beleevers, and that is, to stand fast in their Christian liberty, and in the doctrine of the Gospel, which reveales this liberty. And by this, we in England are admonished to stand fast to the religion which is now by law established among us, and not to returne under the yoake of Popish bondage. For the Popish religion is flat against Christian liberty, two wayes. For our liberty which we have in Christ, frees us from the Law three wayes, in respect of condemnation, in respect of compulsion to obedience, and in respect of justification. (as Paul shewes at large in this Epistle:) and yet the Popish doctrine is, that we are to bee justified by the workes of the Law. Againe, Christian liberty frees our consciences from the Traditions of men, Col. 2. 20. and yet the Popish Religion bindes us in conscience to the Traditions of men: nay, it is nothing else but an heape of Traditions.

Here two things are to be considered, the manner of standing, and the time. The manner is signified in the very words. For to stand fast, is to hold and maintaine our liberty with courage and constancy, whatsoever comes of it, as the souldier keepes his standing, though it cost him his life. We are ready to defend the liberty of our country even with the hazard of our lives: much more are we to defend Christian liberty with the losse of all that we enjoy: sinne must be resisted even unto blood, Heb. 12.4. If men be fearefull, they must pray to God for the spirit of boldnesse and courage: and if God vouchsafe not this gift when opportunity is offered, they may withdraw themselves, and by flying preserve their liberty.

The time of standing, is the evill day, that is, the day of tryall, Ephes 6.13. And then to stand fast, is matter of great difficulty. And for this cause wee are before-hand to prepare our selves by observing these rules following. First, we must labour that religion be not only in minde, and memory, but also be rooted in the affection of our harts, so as we love it, rejoyce in it, and esteem it above all things. Secondly, we must not onely bee hearers of the word of God, but also doers of it in the exercises of faith, repentance, new obedience. Thirdly, we must joine with our religion, the soundnesse of good conscience: for if conscience faile, we cannot be found in our Religion. Lastly, we must pray to God with all manner of prayer and supplication for all things needfull, Eph 6.18.

2. Behold, I Paul say unto you that if ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing.

These words are a reason of the former conclusion, thus: If ye be circumcised, and goe backe from your Christian profession, Christ shall profit you nothing: therefore stand fast.

In the words, I consider a sentence, and the proofe of it. The sentence, If ye be circumcised, &c. the proof, I Paul say unto you. For the better understanding of the sentence, Circumcision must here bee considered according to the circumstance of time, three waies. Before Christ it was a sacrament, and a seale of the righteousnesse of faith, Rom. 4. 11. after the death of Christ, till the destruction of the Temple, it was a dead ceremony, yet sometime used as a thing indifferent. After the destruction of the Temple, when the Church of the new Testament was planted among the Gentiles, it was a deadly ceremony, and ceased to be indifferent: and in this last respect Paul saith, If ye be circumcised, &c. Againe, circumcision must bee considered according to the opinion which the false Apostles had of it: now they put their confidence in it, and made it a meritorious cause of their salvation, and joyned it with Christ. The words therefore carie this sense: If ye will be circumcised, with this opinion, that circumcision shall be unto you a meritorious cause of your salvation, Christ shall profit you nothing. The use. Hence it followes, that the doctrine of justification by workes, is an errour overturning the foundation of Religion, which whosoever obstinately maintaineth, cannot be saved. It will be said, this is true of ceremoniall workes, but not of morall workes. Answ. Yea even of morall. For that which Paul saith here of circumcision, he speaks generally of the whole law: v. 4. Te are abolished from Christ whosoever are justified by the Law. And circumcision must bee considered as an obligation to the obedience of the whole law. Againe, it may be said, this is true of the workes of nature, but not of the workes of grace. Answ. Yea even of workes of grace: for the Galatians were regenerate, and therefore looked not to be justified, and saved, by the workes of nature, but by workes of grace.

Secondly, hence we gather, that to adde any thing to the passion, as a meritorious cause of our justification, and salvation, is to make Christ unprofitable. For he must bee a perfect Saviour, or no Saviour: hee admits neither partner, nor deputy in the worke of our redemption. And the grace of God admits no mixture or composition with any thing. Grace is no grace, unlesse it be freely given every way. Therefore the Popish Religion is a damnable religion: because with the merit and satisfaction of Christ, it joynes humane merits and satisfactions, in the case of our justification. It may be alledged, that the Popish Religion maintaines all the Articles concerning Christ, as we doe. Answ. It doth so in word: but withall it addes to the foresaid articles the doctrine of humane merits and satisfactions, which make voyd the death of Christ. Againe, Papists alledge that it is the glory of Christ, that hee merits for us, and withall makes us to merit for our selves; as it is the glory of an Emperour to make other kings under him. Answer. It is not the glory of the Emperour to make Kings as partners with him, in his kingdome. And workes set up as meritorious causes of salvation, dishonour Christ, for they make him unprofitable, as Paul here teacheth.

Popish Religion therefore is in no wise in any place to be tolerated, where it may be abolished: but it is to be wished that it were banished forth of towne and countrey: and students are to bee warned with great circumspection to reade Popish writers. For no good can be looked for of that religion that makes Christ unprofitable.

Lastly, we are here taught to content our selves with Christ alone, and with his works, merits, and satisfaction: For *in him we are complete, Col.*2.10.

The confirmation of the sentence followeth, I Paul say it: therefore it is so. This kinde of reasoning may not seeme strange: for the Apostles in writing and preaching, had the divine and infallible assistance of the Spirit, so as they could not erre. This must be held as a principle in Religion: and being denyed, there is no certainty of the Bible.

3. For I testifie againe to every man that is circumcised, that hee is bound to keepe the whole Law.

4. Ye are abolished from Christ, whosoever are justified by the law, ye are fallen from grace.

The meaning. Paul saith, I testifie againe: because he hath spoken thus much in effect before, *Gal.*3.10.

That is circumcised] who is of opinion of the false Apostles, that will bee circumcised, and looke for justification thereby.

Bound to the whole law] that is, to the whole ceremoniall law, to the judiciall law, and to the whole morall law. And further, bound in respect of justification, and life, to doe all things in the law. For he that will be justified by one act of the Law, is bound to performe the rest for his justification.

Abolished from Christ] that is, Christ is become an idle and empty Christ unto you.

Whosoever are justified by the law] that is, are of opinion that they are to be justified by the workes of the Law. For indeed a sinner cannot be justified by the Law, but onely in his owne false opinion.

Grace] that is, the love, and favour of God.

The resolution. The 3. verse is a confirmation of the reason in the 2. verse, and it may be framed thus: He which is bound to keepe the whole Law, hath no part in Christ: hee which is circumcised, is bound to keepe the whole law: therefore he which is circumcised hath no part in Christ. The 4. verse is a repetition of the 2. verse, with a declaration thereof: for he shewes what he meanes by circumcision, namely, justification by circumcision, & consequently by the whole law. And therfore when he said, If yee be circumcised, hee changeth his speech, saying, Whosoever is justified by the law. Againe, lest men might thinke it a small matter to be abolished from Christ, he shewes that it is indeed to fall from grace.

The use. These verses are as it were a thunderbolt against all Popery. And first of all, I urge the argument of Paul against the Popish Church, and against the Popish Religion: If ye be justified by the law, yee are abolished from Christ, and fallen from Christ. Answer is made, that the words are to be understood of such workes of the law, as are from nature, and goe before faith; and not of such workes as are from grace, and follow faith: for such workes (they say) are from Christ, and stand with him. Ianswer, the words of Paul are to be understood of all workes of the law, whether they be from nature or from grace. For This Epistle of Paul was written about six yeares after the conversion of the Galatians: therefore they were and had beene long regenerate persons: now men regenerate look not to be justified by works of nature, but by good workes, which are workes of grace. And Paul saith, *Eph.*2.10. We are not saved by works which God hath ordained, that we should walke in: and these are the best workes that are or can bee. Againe, *Tit.*3.5. Of his mercy he saved us, and not of workes of righteousnesse.

By this text we further see, that we and the Papists differ not about circumstances: unlesse Grace and Christ be circumstances. Againe, we see that the Church of Rome is indeed no Church: because by maintaining justification by workes, it is abolished from Christ, and fallen from grace.

Againe, I urge Pauls argument against them, on this manner: He which is debtor to the whole law, hath no part in Christ: hee which is justified by workes, is debtor to the whole law: therefore he which is justified by workes, hath no part in Christ. Let them answer, if they can.

Iturne the same argument another way, thus: He which is justified by works, is bound to keepe the whole law: but no man can keep the whole law: therefore no man can be justified by workes.

They answer to the minor, by making a double fulfilling of the law, one for this life, the other for the life to come: and both in their kinde perfect. The fulfilling of the law for the time of this life (they say) it is to love God above all creatures in truth: and that he which doth thus much, fulfils the law, and is no offender. Hereupon they infer, that works may be answerable to the law, and bee opposed to the judgement of God. And for this doctrine they alledge S. Augustine. Ianswer againe, that Paul in this place takes it for a confessed truth, that no man can fulfill the law: and he urgeth it as a great inconvenience, that any man should be bound to keepe the whole law. And before he had said, *Hee which is of the workes of the law, is cursed, Gal.*3.10. which could not be, if there were a fulfilling of the law for the time of this life. As for for Augustine, it is true he makes two fulfillings of the law, and one of them for the time of this life: but this he saith is imperfect: and this imperfection he makes to be sin, where, as the Papists of our time teach, that even they fulfill the law for the time of this life without sinne.

Where Paul saith, If yee be circumcised: marke how the false Apostles abuse circumcision. It is by divine institution a seale of the righteousnesse of faith, and they make it a meritorious cause of salvation. It is indeed rather Gods worke than our worke: and they make it their owne worke, and that meritorious before God. Like doe the Papists at this day. Baptisme is a signe and seale of Gods mercy, by divine institution: and they turne it into a physicall cause which containes and conferres grace. In like sort they turne the workes of the Spirit, almes, prayer, fasting, contrition, yea their owne traditions, confession, satisfaction, and such like, into meritorious causes of justification, and life. And this is the fashion of deceivers, to retaine the names of holy things, but not to retaine the right use of them.

As here we see Circumcision was an obligation to the keeping of the whole law in the old Testament: so is Baptisme in the new, an obligation or bond, whereby we have bound our selves to live according to all the lawes of God, *Matth.*28.19.20. This discovers the Atheisme and unbeleefe of persons baptised in these our dayes: for few there be that thinke upon, and performe this obligation.

Wee are further to observe the condition of the Law: It is wholly copulative. All the parts of it are linked one to another. Hee that is bound to one commandement, is bound to all: he that keepes one indeed, keepes all: he that breakes one, in respect of the disposition of his heart, is a breaker of all, *Iam.*2.10. hee that makes no conscience to keepe some one commandement, if occasion be offered, will breake any. Hence it followes, that true regeneration is that which is a reformation and change according to the whole law of God, and containes in it the seeds of all good duties. Christ saith, He that is washed is all cleane, Iohn 13. verse 10. Iosias turned to God according to the whole law. Zachary and Elizabeth walked in all the commandements of God without reproofe, Luke 1. David saith, *He shall not be confounded, when he hath respect to all the commandements of God, Psal.*119.6. On the contrary, he which hath many excellent things in him, if he live in the manifest breach of some one commandement, is found in none, nay indeed hee is guilty of all. Herod did many good things; and yet all was nothing: because hee lived in incest, Marke 6. 20. The Devill is able to bring a man to perdition as well by one sinne, as by many.

Whereas Paul saith, If ye be justified by the law, ye are abolished from Christ: First, I gather, that the Law and the Gospell are not one in substance of doctrine, as the Papists teach: for they say the Gospell is nothing but the law made more plaine, and plaine: which if it were true, a man might be justified both by Christ and the law, which Paul saith cannot be. Secondly, I gather hence, that it is a meere devise of mans wit, to say, that Christ by his death and passion merited, that wee should merit by our owne workes our justification and salvation. For if this were true, that the merit of our workes, were the fruit of Christs passion; Paul would not have said, that justification by the law, should abolish Christ unto us. For the cause and the effect, both stand together: whereas Christs merit, and the merit of our workes, agree even as fire and water. And no marveile. For the reason why Christ merited, is the personall union of the godhead with the manhood: which union, because it is not to bee found in any meere man, neither is there any true and proper merit to be found.

Whereas Paul saith, Ye are fallen from grace, some gather, that the children of God may fall quite from the favour of God. Answ. Men are said to be under grace two wayes: First, in the judgement of infallibility: and thus onely the Elect are under the grace of God. Secondly, in the judgement of Christian charity: and thus all that professe Christ, (though indeed hypocrites;) are under the grace of God. And in this sense Paul saith, that the whole Church of Galatia is under the grace of God. And they are said to fall from grace, not because all were indeed under the favour of God, and at length cast out of it: but because God makes it manifest to men, that they were never in the favour of God. Thus Christs enemies are said *to be blotted out of the booke of life, Psal.*69.28. when God makes it manifest that their names were never written there. Secondly, I answer, that Paul speakes this not absolutely, but upon condition, If ye will be justified by the law. And therefore vers. 10. he saith, that he is perswaded better things of them.

Lastly, here we see it is false that every man shall be saved by his Religion: for hee that is abolished from Christ, is quite out of the favour of God. And therefore no Religion, but that which is truly Christian, saveth.

5. For we in the Spirit by faith wait for the hope of righteousnesse.

6. For in Iesus Christ neither circumcision nor uncircumcision availeth any thing, but faith which worketh by love.

The meaning. We] I Paul, the rest of the Apostles, and all other Christian Churches. In Spirit] that is, in the powers of the soule sanctified and renewed. In this sense Paul saith that the true circumcision is that which is in the heart, in spirit, *Rom.*2.29. and Christ saith, that *the true worshippers of God is in spirit. Iob.*4.24. and that spirit is here taken in this sense, it it is manifest, because it is opposed to circumcision which is in the flesh.

By faith we wait] Faith apprehends the promise, and thereby brings forth hope: and faith by meanes of hope makes them that beleeve to wait. Hope of righteousnesse] that is, salvation or life eternall, which is the fruit of righteousnesse, Tit. 2.13. or againe, righteousnesse hoped for. Righteousnesse indeed is imputed to them that beleeve, and that in this life, yet the fruition and the full revelation thereof is reserved to the life to come, when Christ our righteousnesse shall appeare, and when the effect of righteousnesse, namely, sanctification, shall bee accomplished in us, Rom. 8.23. 1 John 3.2.

The sense then is this: All the Apostles and Christian Churches with one consent in spirit by meanes of their faith, wait for the full revelation of their imputed righteousnes, and for everlasting life: whereas the false Apostles place their righteousnesse in circumcision of the flesh, and looke to have the fruition of it in this life.

V. 6. In Christ] that is, in the Church, kingdome, or Religion of Christ, 2 Cor. 5.17. If any be in Christ, that is, if any be a Christian, he is a new creature.

Uncircumcision] that is, the condition and workes of men uncircumcised.

Availeth any thing] is of no use, respect, or acceptation with God. Faith working] faith effectuall in duties of love.

The resolution. These words containe a second reason, where Paul confirmes the former conclusion, and it may bee framed thus: That thing which makes us waite for the hope of righteousnesse, that justifies: not circumcision, but faith makes us wait for the hope of righteousnesse: therefore not circumcision but faith justifies. The proposition is omitted, the minor is in the 5.v. And it is confirmed by two arguments. The first, is the consent of all Churches, We wait. The second is taken from the property of faith, in the sixt verse, thus: It is faith, and not circumcision that availes before God: therefore faith and not circumcision makes us wait.

Againe, in these two verses, Paul meets with an Objection, which may bee framed thus: If ye abolish circumcision and the ceremoniall law, ye abolish the exercises of religion. The answer is, in stead of them we have other exercises in our spirit, namely, the inward exercises of faith, hope, and love. The use. In the 5. verse, foure things are to be considered. The first is, who waits? Paul saith, we wait. Before hee hath justified his doctrine by the Scriptures, now he addes the consent of the churches. Here then we see what is the office of all faithfull dispensers of the Word, namely, to declare such doctrines as are founded in Scriptures, and approved by the cõsent of the true Church of God. Paul an Apostle that could not erre, respected consent, much more are all ordinary Ministers to doe it.

Againe, it is the office of all Christian people to maintain and defend all such doctrines and opinions as are founded in the Scriptures, and ratified by the consent of the true churches of God, and no other. This to doe, is to walke in the way of unity and peace: and to doe otherwise is to walke in the way of schisme and heresie.

The second point is, what is waited for? Paul saith, the revelation of righteousnesse, and eternall salvation. Here I observe, that there is no justification by the observation of the law: and I prove it thus: The righteousnesse whereby a sinner is justified, is apprehended by faith, and expected by hope: but if righteousnesse were by the law, men should have the fruition of their righteousnesse in this life, and consequently, the hope thereof should cease.

Secondly, here is comfort for the godly. They complaine of the want of sanctification: but they are to know, that in this life they shall never feele righteousnesse, as they feele sinne; here they must hunger and thirst after righteousnesse, living in some want of it. If we have the first fruits of the Spirit, the hatred of our sinne, the purpose of not sinning, the feare of God, and such like, wee must content our selves, and wait for the fruition of further grace till the life to come.

Thirdly, wee must become waiters for the mercy of God, and for life everlasting; Gen. 49.18. Iude v.21. For this cause we must doe as they doe which wait and attend for some great benefit: wee must daily stand with our supplications knocking at the mercy gate to the death: and wee must daily prepare our selves against the day of death, and it must be welcome unto us: for then is the end of all our waiting and attending.

The third point is, by what we are to wait? Paul saith, We wait by faith. Hence is followes, that faith brings with it a speciall certainty of the mercy of God, and of life everlasting. For men use not to wait for the things whereof they are uncertaine. Waiting presupposeth certainty. The Papists therefore that make speciall hope, should also make speciall faith.

The last point is, where is this waiting? Paul saith, in spirit. Here observe, that all the exercises of Christian Religion, are to bee in the spirit. God must be worshipped in spirit, Iohn 4.24. Rom. 12.9. The heart must be rent, and not the garment, Joel 2. The inward motions of the spirit, are of themselves the worship of God, whereas our words and deeds are not simply, but so farre forth as they are founded in the renewed motions of the heart. Men in our dayes thinke they doe God high service, if they come to Church, heare Gods word, and say some few prayers. Indeed these things are not to be condemned: yet are they not sufficient sufficient, unlesse withall we bring unto God a renued spirit, endued with faith, hope, love.

In the 6. verse, Paul propounds three conclusions. The first is this: that externall & bodily privileges are of no use and moment in the kingdome of Christ. Paul saith, 2 Tim. 4.8. Bodily exercise profiteth little, and that godlinesse is profitable for all things. It was a great privilege to be familiarly acquainted with Christ, & to have eaten and drunk with him: yet is it of no use in the kingdome of Christ. For of such Christ saith, Luke 13.26. Depart from me ye workers of iniquity. It was a great priviledge to be allied to Christ in respect of blood, yet in the kingdome of Christ, it is of no use: and therefore Christ saith, Hee that doth the will of my Father, is my brother, sister, & mother, Marke 3.33. To conceive and beare Christ, was a great honour to the Virgin Marie: yet was shee not by this meanes a member of the kingdome of Christ, but by her faith in him. And if shee had not borne him in her heart, as well as shee bare him in her wombe, she had not beene saved. To prophecie or preach, and that in the name of Christ, is a great dignitie: and yet many having this prerogative shall be condemned, Matth. 7.22. It may bee alleaged, that some outward exercises, as Baptisme, and the Lords Supper, are of great use in the Church of Christ. I answer, the outward Baptisme is nothing without the inward. Not the washing of the flesh, but the stipulation of a good conscience saveth, 1 Pet. 3.18. Circumcision is profitable, if thou keepe the law, Rom. 2.25.

By this wee are taught, not to esteeme of mens religion by their riches, and externall dignities. For the fashion of the world is, if a man have riches and honour, to commend him for a wise, vertuous, and Godly man. This is foolishly to have faith in respect of persons, Iam. 2.1.

Secondly, by this we are taught to moderate our affections in respect of all outward things, neither sorrowing too much for them, nor joying too much in them, 1 Corinth. 7. verse 30.

The second conclusion. Faith is of great use and acceptation in the kingdome of Christ. By it, first our persons, and then our actions please God: and without it, nothing pleaseth God. It is the first and the greatest honour we can doe to God, to give credence to his word: and from this flowes all other obedience, to all other commandements. Hence we learne.

First, that wee must labour to conceive faith aright in our hearts, by the use of the right meanes, the word, prayer, sacraments: as also in, and by the exercises of spirituall invocation, and repentance. This being done, wee must rest upon the bare word and testimony of God, without, and against sense and feeling, and quiet our hearts therein, both in life and death.

Secondly, faith in Christ must reigne and beare sway in our hearts, and have the command over reason, will, affection, lust. And by it what soever wee doe or suffer, specially the maine actions of our lives, are to be ordered and disposed.

Lastly, it is a thing to be bewailed, that the common faith of our dayes is but a temporall faith, conceived without the ordinary meanes, and severed from the exercises of invocation and repentance.

The third conclusion is, that true faith workes by love. Hence the Papists gather, that love is the forme and life of faith, not because it makes faith to bee faith, but because it makes it to bee a true faith, a good faith, a lively faith. But this their doctrine is false and erroneous. For faith is the cause of love, and love is the fruit of faith, 1 Tim. 1.5. Love out of a pure heart, good conscience, and faith unfained Now every cause, as it is a cause hath his force and efficacy in it selfe, and receives no force or efficacie from his effect. Secondly, true faith is lively and effectuall in it selfe, and hath a peculiar forme of his owne, and that is a certaine power to apprehend Christ in the promise. For in faith, there are two things, knowledge, and apprehension, which some call application, or speciall affiance; which affiance, because the Papists cut off: they are constrained to make a supply by love. Thirdly, the operation of faith (according to the doctrine of the Papist) is to prepare and dispose a sinner to his future justification. Now, if this operation bee from love, then love is before justification; and that cannot bee: because (as they teach) justification stands in love. Love therefore is not the forme of faith. They alleadge for themselves this very text in hand, where it is said, faith worketh by love: or (as they translate it) faith is acted and moved by love. Answer. The meaning of the text is, that faith is effectuall in it selfe: and that it shewes and puts forth his efficacy by love, as by the fruit thereof. And it cannot hence be gathered, that faith is acted and moved by love, as by a formall cause.

Againe, they alleadge, Iam. 2.26. As the body is dead without the spirit, so is faith without worker. Answer. 1. The soule of man is not the forme of his body, but the whole man. 2. Spirit may as well signifie breath, or breathing, as the soule. And so it carries a fit sense, for as the body without breath is dead, & it shewes it selfe to be alive by breathing: so faith that is without workes, is dead, and it shewes it selfe to bee alive by workes. 3. There is a false composition of the words to be considered: Faith that is without workes is dead, is true: but to say, Faith is dead without workes (as though workes gave life to faith) is false; and not the meaning of Saint Iames, but the former onely.

Againe, the Papists hence gather, that faith and love are joynt causes in the justification of a sinner, and that faith worketh by love in justifying men before God. But this Interpretation is against the whole scope of this Epistle, in which Paul proves that there is no justification by the law, chap. 2. vers. 4. and therefore no justification by love. Again, Paul saith, Romans 1. 17. that righteousnesse is revealed without the law: and therefore without love. And againe, that wee are made the righteousnesse of Christ, as Christ is made our sinne, namely, by imputation, and therefore not by infusion of love, 2 Cor. 5. 21. Thirdly, faith justifies by apprehending Christ in the promise, and therefore not by love. The consequent I prove thus: Faith and love are two hands of the soule. Faith is an hand that layes hold of Christ, and it doth (as it were) pull him & his benefits into our soules. But love is an hand of another kinde, for it serves not to receive in, but to give out the good it hath, and to communicate it selfe unto others. Therefore faith cannot justifie by love. Lastly, love in order of nature followes justification, and therefore it doth not justifie. For first of all, faith layes hold on Christ: then followes justification: upon justification followes sanctification, and love is a part of sanctification.

They urge for themselves the words of Paul, that faith workes by love. Answer. Paul doth not shew in this verse, what justifieth, but what are the exercises of godlinesse in which Christians must be occupied. And he doth not shew how faith justifieth, but how it may be discerned to be true faith, namely, by love.

Secondly, they object, that faith and love are alwaies joyned, and therfore joyntly work in justification. Answ. They are joyned in one person or subject: and they are joyned in the exercise of Christian life: but they are not joyned in the act of justification.

Thirdly, they urge the 2. of Saint Iames, where it is said, that a man is justified not onely by faith, but also by workes, verse 24. Ans. Faith in Saint Iames, is put for an historicall knowledge of religion; or for the bare confession and profession of faith. Againe, justification, is two fold: one of the person, the other of the faith of the person. Justification of the person is, when a sinner is absolved of his sinnes, and accepted to life everlasting, for the merit of Christ. Justification of the faith of the person is, when faith is approved and found to bee true faith: and a beleever justifies himselfe to be a true beleever. Of this second justification speakes Saint Iames; and it is not onely by faith, but also by workes.

Lastly, it may be objected, that love is of no use, if it doe not justifie. Ans. Justification, and sanctification, are two distinct benefits, 1 Cor. 1. 30. and 6. 11. Justification ministers unto us deliverance from hell, and a right to life everlasting. Sanctification is a fruit of the former, and serves to make us thankfull to God for our justification: and love serves for the same use, because it is a special part of Sanctification.

Thus much of the depravation of the text by the Papists. Hence further I gather, that many falsely in these last dayes boast of faith: because it is not joyned with profiting in knowledge, with true conversion unto God, with fruits of love to God and man: whereas all true faith is fruitfull in good workes.

7. Ye did runne well: who did let you, that ye should not obey the truth?

The meaning. Ye did runne well. In these words Paul alludes to the games of running used among the heathen. And he compares the word and precepts of God, to a way or race, beleevers to runners, life eternall to the price, God to the Vmpire or Iudge, the lookers on are men and Angels, good and bad; and the Exercise of religion, is the running of this race. Reade of this, 1 Corinth. 9. 24. Phil. 3. 13, 14.

Who] the interrogation hath in it the force of a reproofe or complaint. And the sense is this: they did evill, which turned you forth of the way, and you have done evill that you obeyed not the truth. The like is, Psal. 2. Why doe the heathen rage, that is, it is great wickednesse for them to rage.

Let] stop, intercept your course, turne you out of the way.

That you should not obey] that you should not give credence to the doctrine of Paul, and not obey it.

The scope. These words are a repetition of the principall conclusion of the whole Epistle. And this repetition is not in vaine. For it serves to bring the Galatians to a consideration of their offence, and to amendment of life. Hence I obserue, that the often and serious consideration of our sins and lives past, is a meanes to worke in us a detestation of our sinnes, and a reformation of life. Thus David saith, that upon consideration of his wayes, he turned his feet to Gods commandements, Psal. 119. 59. And the cause why there is so little amendment among us, is, because wee never so much as thinke what we have done.

In these words, Paul sets downe three duties of Christian people. The first is, that they must be runners in the race of God. Indeed the Sabbath of the Iewes figured a rest which is contrary to running: but this rest is from sinne, and not from good duties. This duty of running teacheth us foure things. The first is, that we must make haste without delay to keepe the commandements of God, specially the commandements of faith, repentance, new obedience, Psal. 119. 32. 60. Contrariwise, it is a great fault for youth, and others, to deferre amendment till old age, or till the last and deadly sicknesse. For that is the time to end our running, and not to begin.

The second is, that wee are to increase and profit in all good duties, specially in knowledge, faith, repentance. But wee in this age doe otherwise. For either we stand at a stay, or goe backe, and very few of us proceed forward in good duties. And there are two causes of this. One is blindnesse of minde, which makes us that wee see not how little our faith and repentance is, and how great in the masse of our corruption: the second is our unbeliefe in the Article of life everlasting.

The third duty is, that wee must neither looke to the right or left hand, or looke to things behind us, to set our affection on them, but we must presse on forward to the price of eternall life. Phil. 3. 13. Luke 9. 62. Here comes a common fault to bee considered: we in respect of profession goe forward: yet we looke backe in our course, and minde earthly things.

Lastly, we must not bee moved with the speeches of men, which are given of us either to or fro: they are lookers on, and must have their speeches, and our care must bee not to heed them, but to looke to our course.

The second duty of Christian people is, that they must not onely be runners, but they must runne well: and this is done by beleeving, and by obeying the true religion, or as Paul saith, by having faith and good conscience, 1 Timothy 1. 18 These are as it were the two feete by which we runne to life everlasting. Vnder faith we care to comprehend the true acknowledgement of God, affiance in him, and invocation, &c. Vnder good conscience, is comprised the purpose of not sinning, and the care to obey God in all his Commandements. To apply this to our selves: runners we are, but alas, few of us are good runners. We have one good foote, & that is our faith or religion which is sound and good: but wee halt on the other foote; our care to keepe conscience is not suitable to our religion. And three things cause a lamenesse or feeblenesse in this foot, the lust of the eye, that is, covetousnesse: the lust of the flesh, and pride of life.

The third duty is, that we must runne the race from the beginning to the end, and finish our course, so as we may apprehend life everlasting, 2 Timothy 6. 12. 2 Timothy 4. 7. 1 Cor. 9. 24. And for this cause we must cherish in our hearts a love and fervent desire of eternall life, and by his meanes we shall bee drawne on through all miseries, and enabled to runne the end. Secondly, wee must build and maintaine a constant and daily purpose of new sinnings: and where we are too weake, at least we must current-ly endeavour to be strongest. And this shall well be confirmed by the doctrine

8. The perswasion of him that calleth you

The meaning. This opinion of justification by the workes of the law, is not from God, who hath called you from bondage to liberty.

The scope. Paul here meetes with a conceit of the Galatians, which was this: Why doest thou so often and so sharply reprove us? for we hold nothing against conscience, but are perswaded of the thing which we say. To this Paul answers here: this perswasion is not of God, because it is against the calling of God, for he cals you to liberty; and this your opinion drawes you into bondage.

Here wee see the cause of mens declining from God and his word, and that is this; Men deny credence to Gods word, and listen to plausible perswasions, and to fall away. Thus Eve fell in the estate of innocency by listening to the false perswasions of the devill. The Papists nuzzle themselves in their superstitions, by the presumption that the Church cannot erre, and that God will not leave his Church destitute of the assistance of his Spirit. Our common people boulster themselves in their blinde wayes by a presumption that God is all of mercy, and that if they doe their true intent, serve God, say their prayers, deale justly, and doe as they would be done unto, they shall certainly bee saved. Tradesmen often use many practices of fraud and injustice, and that upon a perswasion, that they have a charge and family which must bee maintained. If men now adayes will not blaspheme, drinke, and rior, as souldiers doe, they shall be charged with precisenesse: and that comes upon a perswasion, that it sufficeth to avoid the outward and notorious crimes which are mentioned and condemned in the law. Thus the whole world is misled by blind perswasions.

Secondly, hence we learne to close up our eyes (as it were) and absolutely to follow the calling of God, and to subiect all our powers of our soules unto it. Thus did Abraham when he was called to goe he knew not whither, and Paul without using consultation, went and preached in Arabia at the calling of Christ.

Thirdly, Paul here sets downe a meane to discerne of false doctrines and opinions in religion. If they be suitable to the calling of God, they are good: if they bee against the calling of God, they are naught. This is Pauls rule. God calls us to liberty: therefore the doctrine of justification by the workes of the law is naught: for it drawes us into bondage. In like sort, God cals us to free justification, and therefore the doctrine of humane satisfactions, and of the merit of workes is naught. Againe, God calls us to an utter denialll of our selves; and therefore the Popish doctrine of preparation, and of freedome of will in the conversion of a sinner, is naught.

him that calleth you] for the same cause, because Paul saith in the verse precedent, before the which I tell you] for the same cause, because God commands and call the Galatians, even after their fall, in which they fell away to another Gospel, and as much as in them lay, abolished themselves from Christ. This shewes Gods patience: and that there is a possibility of mercy after great and grievous fals.

It may bee said, how long doth God continue to call men unto him? Answ. So long as hee vouchsafeth them the benefit of the publike Ministerie. Thus then more than forty yeares hath God called us in England. And for this cause it is our part to pray to God for hearing eares, to be pierced in our hearts: and we must answer the calling of God, Psal. 27.8 at the least in the desires and groanes of our hearts. And lastly, we must in life and conversation be futable to the calling of God.

9. A little leaven leaveneth the whole lumpe.

The sense. As a little leaven leaveneth and savoureth the whole lumpe of dowe: even so one errour or point of corrupt doctrine, corrupteth the whole body of Christian religion: because all the points of religion are linked and compounded together, so as if one bee corrupt, the rest cannot remaine sound and incorrupt.

The scope. The objection of the Galatians, is: Put case, that we erre in joyning Circumcision and Christ: yet there is no cause why thou shouldest so sharply reprove us: for it is no great errour to joyne workes and Christ in the cause of our Iustification. Paul answers to this objection by a proverbe, saying, that a little leaven of false doctrine, corrupts the whole body of religion: and one error, though it seeme to bee of small moment at the first, may at length bring with it the corruption and depravation of many other points.

The use. In the example of the Galatians, wee see what is the common fashion of men, namely, to extenuate their faults, and to make small matters of great offences. The Pharisees taught, that sundry of Gods commandements, were small and little commandements, Matth 5.19. To them that make no conscience of sinne, great sinnes are little sinnes, and little sinnes are no sinnes. Pride is cleanlinesse, covetousnesse is nothing but worldlinesse, drunkennesse good fellowship, fornication a tricke of youth. Thus men put visards upon their ugly sinnes. The Politician that is of no religion, saith, that wee and the Papists differ not in substance, but in small circumstances: and that if they erre, it is but in small points. But on the contrary, wee are to esteeme every sinne for a great sinne, to humble our selves for the least sinnes, and to bring our selves in subjection to God in the least of our actions.

Here we are taught by all meanes to maintaine the purity of found religion, whatsoever betall us. And for this cause wee are to resist and withstand every erroneous opinion that shall be broched. For it is the policy of the devill, by fosting in some one errour, to deprave and confound the whole body of truth. It may be said, how may wee discerne errour from found doctrine, considering oftentimes they are like, as leaven is like dowe? Ans. Leaven is discerned from dowe, not by colour, but by taste: even so they which are spirituall, and have the gift of discerning, directed by the analogy of faith, discerne truth from falsehood. For whatsoever is against one Article of faith, or against any of the commandements of the decalogue, is not sound doctrine, but leaven.

Againe, that which is said of false doctrine, may bee said proportionally of bad manners. Here therefore we must be put in minde of three duties. The first, to resist and withstand every particular sinne. For even one sinne is able to defile the whole life of man. One flie is sufficient to marre a whole boxe of sweete ointment. One offence in our first parents, brought corruption upon them and all mankinde, yea, upon heaven and earth. Hee that makes no conscience of some one sinne, is guilty of the whole law, Iam. 2.

Secondly, we must doe our indeavour to the uttermost, to cut off every bad example in the societies of men. For one bad example is sufficient to corrupt a whole family, a whole towne, a whole countrey. The example of one incestuous man, was sufficient to corrupt all Corinth. Therefore Paul saith, Purge out the old leaven, 1 Cor. 5.6. The law of God is, that blasphemers, murderers, adulterers, &c. shall be put to death: the reason is, that evill may be taken away out of Israel: that is, the evill of wicked example, which being suffered, spreads abroad, and doth much hurt. The barren figtree must be cut down, lest it make the whole ground barren, Luke 13.7.

Thirdly, we are to withstand and cut off the first beginnings and the occasions of every sinne. We lay of a trand theeves, that first they begin to practise their wickednesse in pinnes and points. For this cause idlenesse, fulnesse of bread in excessive eating, drinking, and swilling, riot, and vanity in apparell, are to be suppressed in every society, as the breeders of many vices.

On the contrary, no one point of evill doctrine brings with it many other: so any one little grace of God, brings many other with it. The entrance into Gods word, gives light, Psal. 119.130. In this respect Christ saith, The kingdome of heaven is like to a mans child in three pookes of meale, &c. Gods kingdome is first up in the heart in the first ponorery small beginnings, Matth. 13.33. This must teach us to use the meanes of our salvation, and not to breed discouragement, though wee have in us but some small beginnings of Gods grace.

10. I have an affiance of you in the Lord, that ye will bee none other wise minded: but hee that troubleth you, shall beare his judgement, whosoever he bee.

The sense. I trust Lord, by the gracious assistance of God, who no doubt will give ability and sufficiency to my Ministery, you shall not be Nonotherwise minded: that is, thinke not otherwise then I have taught you. He that troubleth you: the Church is troubled three wayes: 1. by false doctrine, thus Achab troubled Israel, 1 King. 18.18. and the false Apostles troubled Galatia. 2. By wicked examples thus Achan troubled Israel, Iosua 7.25. 3. By force and cruelty, thus tyrants and persecutors trouble the Church.

Shall beare: shall have his due and deserved punishment, partly in this life, and partly in eternall death. See this verified in the end of the booke of English Martyrs, in the desperate, horrible, and stinking ends of persecutors. But yet this threat must bee understood with the Exception of repentance.

The scope. The words are an answer to an Objection, which may be framed thus: It seemes by your former proverbe of leaven, that you hold us to bee a people corrupted, and unsavoury unto God. To this Paul answers by a distinction: I hope better things of you: but the false Apostles for troubling the Church, shall surely be punished.

The Vse. When Paul saith, I have an affiance in you, hee teacheth in his owne example, that we are to hope the best of men so long as they are curable. It may bee said, they that hope the best are sometimes deceived. Answ. They are only deceived in their judgement, and that in things whereof they have no certain knowledge, and they are not deceived in practice. For it is a duty of love to hope the best. And they which use to suspect the worst are often deceived. Againe, it may be said, that we must judge of things as they are indeed. Answ. Iudgement of things, and judgement of persons must bee distinguished. Of things, upright judgment is to judge of them as they are: and if they bee doubtfull to suspend. Now our judgement of the persons of men, must be to take things in the better part as muchas possibly may bee. Lastly, it may be alleadged, that we must love our neighbor as our selves: and that we despaire in respect of our selves. Ans. We are to despaire in respect of our selves, because we are privy to our own estate; but wee are not privy to the estate of any other man: and therefore we are to hope the best of them. This shewes the fault of our times: if any professing the Gospell fall upon frailty, there are numbers of men that will make no bones of it to condemne them to the pit of hell, for hypocrites: but such persons are not carried by the spirit of Paul, who hopes the best of them that fall.

Againe, here we see how wee are to put affiance in men. Wee are to put affiance in God for all things whatsoever, whether concerning body or soule: but our affiance in men, must bee onely for such things as they are able to performe. Secondly, wee must put affiance in God absolutely for himselfe, and therefore wee say, I beleeve in God, &c. but all our affiance in men whatsoever, must be in the Lord. When Paul saith, that he had affiance of them in the Lord, he shewes that renewed repentance is the gift of God. And there are two graces required unto it, helping grace, and exciting grace. Helping grace preserves and confirmes the first and initiall repentance. Exciting grace gives the will and the deed: and without these graces the child of God, if hee fall, cannot repent and recover himselfe. They therefore are deceived, who thinke that they may have repentance at command, and that they may repent when they will.

I may be demanded, why Paul useth milde rearmes, and doth not excommunicate the Galatians? Ans. So long as men are curable, meanes must be used to recover them. The sheep or oxe that goes astray, must be brought home againe, Exod. 23.4. much more thy neighbour. Christ himselfe brings home againe the lost sheepe, and so must every shepheard. Ezech. 34.4. Now the Galatians were in all likelihood persons curable: and therefore not to be cut off. For the censure of Excommunication pertaines to them alone, of whose recovery there is no hope.

Some there be that mislike the preaching used in these dayes, because we use not severity, and personall reproofes, after the manner of Iohn Baptist. But these men are deceived. We have not the like calling that hee had, nor like gifts: neither are we in the like times. For Iohn the Baptist was in the very time of the change betweene the old and the new Testament. Christ did not follow him in the same manner of teaching, neither doth the Apostle in this place, when hee saith of the Galatians in apostasie, that hee hoped better things of them.

In the last place, the commination which the Apostle useth, is to be observed, that troublers of the Church shall beare their judgement. Hence I gather,

1. That God watcheth over his Church with a speciall providence. Wee in England have found this by experience: and we are to be thankfull for it.

2. That the doctrine of the Apostles is of infallible certainty: because the oppugners of it are plagued by the just judgement of God.

3. On the contrary, our duty is, to pray for the good estate of the Church of God, and for the kingdomes where the Church is planted, and for the countenance of the Gospel specially in England. For what will all the things we have doe us good, if we be forth of Gods kingdome, and lose our soules?

11. And brethren, if I yet preach Circumcision, why doe I yet suffer persecution? Then is the scandall of the crosse abolished.

12. Would to God they were cut off that trouble you.

The sense. Yet preach] now while I am an Apostle. Here Paul takes it for granted, that when he was a Pharisee he taught and maintained Circumcision; but he denies that he ever taught it after his conversion in his Apostleship. The crosse] The Gospel which is a doctrine teaching deliverance from hell, & life everlasting, to bee obtained by the death and passion of Christ crucified, 1 *Cor.*1.18.23.

More plainely, the words are thus much in effect: It is reported, that I Paul an Apostle, preach circumcision: but the truth is, there is no such matter: For if I taught circumcision, the Iewes, maintainers of circumcision, would not persecute me as they doe: neither would they take offence at the preaching of Christ crucified, If I joyned circumcision with Christ.

The drift. Paul here answers a new objection, which is on this manner: There is no cause, Paul, why thou shouldest thus reproove us, for thou thy selfe art a teacher of circumcision. To this Paul makes a double answer. First, hee denies the report, and prooves his deniall by a double reason; one is, because the Iewes still persecured him; the other is, because they tooke offence still at his preaching of Christ crucified. Secondly, Paul answers by pronouncing a curse upon the false Apostles.

The Vse. In the words I consider two thing, the report given forth of Paul, and his Apologie. The report was that Paul preached circumcision. In this we see what is the condition of the Ministers of the Word, namely, to be subject to slander and defamation, not onely in respect of their lives, but also in respect of their Ministery and doctrine, as if they were heretickes. Thus the Papists at this day reproach the Ministery of the Church of England, charging it with sundry foule heresies, and many amongst us spare not to charge it with the heresie of Puritanisme. And I doubt not to avouch it, that some are condemned for hereticks in the history of the Church, who (if all were known) should bee found to bee good servants of God.

1. This verifies the saying of Ecclesiastes, c.8.v.14. There are righteous men to whom it befals according to the worke of the wicked.

2. Ministers must hence bee put in minde to use circumspection both of the matter and the manner of their preaching.

3. Being defamed, and that wrongfully, they must hence take occasion to bee more carefull to please God, as David did in the like case. Psalme 119.69.

But how came this report of Paul? Answ. Sometime hee tolerated circumcision, as a thing indifferent for a time: and hereupon circumcised Timothy. And upon this occasion a report is raised that Paul preached circumcision. In this we see the fashion of the world, which is to raise fames, reports, and slanders of all persons, specially upon Magistrates and Ministers, and that upon every light and unjust occasion. But good men will take no such occasions of raising reports, *Psal.*15.3.

But how did Paul take this report? Answ. He did not requite evill for evill (as the manner of men is,) but he returnes love and goodnes for evill: and for this cause (no doubt of purpose) he beginnes his speech on this manner, Brethren, if I yet preach circumcision.

The apology and defence followes. And first hee denies the report. And his proofe is this: because for his preaching he is persecuted of the Iewes. Here observe, that they which are called to teach, must preach the Gospell, what trouble or danger soever follow, as Paul did. It may be demanded, whether a Minister may not in teaching conceale any part of the truth at any time without sin? Answ. In the case of Confession when a man is called to give an account of his faith, no truth, no not the least truth may be concealed. Againe, when the soules of men are to bee relieved, and saved, all concealments are damnable. Yet in the planting or in the restoring of the Church, doctrines most necessary may be concealed. Paul was about two yeares at Ephesus, and spake nothing against Diana, but in generall tearmes. If he had, he had planted no Church at Ephesus. Againe, when people be uncapable of doctrine, it may bee concealed till they be prepared for it. Christ told his Disciples, that hee had many things to tell them, which they could not then learn. Some beleevers must have no strong meate, but milke onely. Thirdly, when the teaching of a lesser truth hinders the teaching of a fundamentall truth, the lesser truth may be concealed, that the fundamentall truth may bee taught, and take place.

Here we see the fidelity of Paul: if he had sought himselfe, his honour, profit, and pleasure, he would not have taught any doctrine that should have caused persecution. The like minde must be in all teachers, nay, in all beleevers, who are to receive the Gospel for it selfe, without respect to honour, profit, or pleasure.

Paul addes further in way of defence, that the scandall of the crosse was not abolished. Hence it followes, that the Gospell must be preached though all men bee offended. God must not be displeased, though all men bee displeased, Act. 5.29. Indeed Christ pronounceth a woe against them by whom offences come: but that is meant of offences given, and not of offences taken: of which Christ hath another rule, Matth. 15.14. Let them alone, they are the blind leaders of the blind.

Againe, by the offence of the Iewes, wee see the minde of men, who cannot be content with with the death and passion of Christ, unlesse they may adde workes, or something else of their owne, for their justification and salvation. This doe the Papists at this day: and the like doe many of the ignorant people among us, that will be saved by their owne good dealing, and their good serving of God.

Touching the imprecation in the 12. verse three questions are to bee propounded. The first is, whether Paul did well thus to curse his enemies? I answer, yea: for first we must put a difference betweene the private cause of man, and the cause of God. Now Paul accuseth the false Apostles, not in respect of his owne cause, but in respect of the cause of God; and not as his owne enemies, but as the enemies of God. Secondly, wee must distinguish the persons of evill men. Some are curable, and some again are incurable, of whose salvation there is no hope. Now Paul directs his imprecation against persons incurable. And how knew them to bee incurable by some extraordinary inspiration or instinct, (as the Prophets and the rest of the Apostles did in sundry cases) and hereupon he curseth sometime even particular persons, as Alexander the coppersmith, 2 *Tim.*4.14. Thirdly, wee must distinguish the affections of men. Some are carnall, as rash anger, hatred, desire of revenge &c. some againe are more spirituall and divine, as a zeale of Gods glory, and of the safety of Gods Church. Now Paul in pronouncing the curse, is not caried with a carnall affection, but with a pure zeale of Gods glory, and with the same spirit by which he penned this Epistle.

The second question is, whether we may not curse our enemies as Paul did? Answ. No: for we have not the like spirite to discerne the persons of men what they are: and our zeale of Gods glory is mixed with many corrupt affections, and therefore to be suspected. We in our ordinary dealings have another rule to follow, *Mat.*5. Blesse, and curse not. If wee dare goe beyond the limits of this rule, wee must heare the speech of Christ, Ye know not of what spirit ye are, Luke 9 55.

The third question is, how we should use the imprecations that are in the Psalmes of David: as *Ps.*109. and in other places of Scripture? Answer. They are to be directed generally against the kingdome of the devill: and they are further to bee used as Prophesies of the holy Ghost comforting his church, and procuring a finall sentence upon the enemies of God.

The word which is translated disquiet, is to be considered, for it signifies to put men out of their estate, and to drive them out of house and home, as enemies doe when they sacke and spoile a towne.

By this we see that the doctrine of justification by works or by the law, is a doctrine full of danger and perill, because it puts men out of their estate, in Christ, and bereaves them of their salvation in heaven. Therefore behold then the folly of the Papists, that think they should fare the better for their workes or Merits, when they should provide well for themselves and their posterity, and place themselves in a good estate, must take this course. They must consider that there is a way of God in heaven, the graces and subjections of the upon earth in the assemblies of the Church: that this city hath many mansions and habitations, and many liberties; that the law whereby this citie is ruled, is the word of God, specially the doctrine of the Gospell. In this way is all happinesse, and out of it there is nothing but woe and misery. Enter therefore into the suburbes of this Citie of God: as yee professe the Gospell, so labour in your mindes and consciences, and all your affections to it; and bee doers of it in the exercise of faith, repentance, new obedience. Thus shall you have a good estate in Christ, and joyfull habitation in heaven.

13. For brethren, ye have been called to liberty: onely use not your liberty as an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another.

The first part of the Epistle touching the faith of the Galatians is ended: and here begins the second part touching good life, and it continues from this verse to the 11. verse of the sixt chapter. Into Paul doth 2. things: first he propounds the summe of his doctrine, and then after makes a particular declaration of it. The summe of all is propounded in this 13. verse, in which Paul first sets downe the ground of all good duties, and then two maine rules of good life. The ground is in these words, Brethren, ye have beene called to liberty. And it must bee noted, that as these words are the foundation of that which follows, so are they also the reason of that which goes before, and therefore Paul saith, for brethren &c. The two rules are in the words following: One in these, Use not your liberty as an occasion to the flesh: the other in these, Do service one to another by love.

In the ground of all good duties, namely, the calling to liberty, 4 things are to be considered. 1. who calls. 2. who are called. 3. what is the calling of God. 4. why it is here mentioned by Paul.

To the first, who calls: I answer, God the Father in Christ by the Spirit, for he is absolute Lord of all his creatures: and therefore he may call out of the kingdome of darkness into his owne kingdome, whom he will. And it is God alone that *calleth the things that are not, as though they were, Rom.*4.17.

The second is, who are called? Answ. All they that any way answer the calling of God, for Paul saith indifferently of all the Galatians, that they were called. Now men answer the calling of God, some in profession, some in heart, and some in both. And all these are called to be called, yet with some difference. The calling of God is first of all and principally to the elect: and then in the second place, it pertaines to them which are not elect, because they are mixed inseparably with the elect. And hence ariseth the distinction of the calling of God: sometimes it is operative, because God signifies and withall workes his will in the elect: sometimes again in respect of others it is only significative, when God reveales his will and mind, but spares to worke it for just causes known to himselfe.

The third point is, what is the calling to liberty? Answ. An action of God translating men from the kingdome of darknesse to his own kingdome. Which two parts, Invitement & admission. Invitement is, when God offers remission of sins and life everlasting to them that beleeve, outwardly by the preaching of the Gospell, inwardly by the inspiration of heavenly desires. Admission is, when men are entred into the kingdome of grace. And it is either outward or inward. Outward admission is, when men are taken out of old Adam, and by faith ingrafted into Christ: for by this insition into Christ, men are made reall members of Gods kingdome.

The last question is, why Paul mentions the calling to liberty in this place? Answ. It is the ground of all comfort, by it Paul comforts the Corinthians, 1 Cor. 1. 9. Againe, it is the ground of good life. Therefore Peter saith, Be ye holy, as he that hath called you is holy, 1 Pet. 1. 15. And Paul, Walke worthy the calling wherewith he hath called you, Ephes. 4. 1. If the calling of God doe not move us to amendment of life, nothing will doe it.

We in England have heard the calling of God more than forty yeares: and yet very few of us are moved to change and amend our lives. This shewes our Atheisme and unbeleefe: here is almost nothing but heaving, shoving, and sifting for the world. Some are held captives of their covetousnesse, some of their pride, some of their damnable and fleshly lusts: and all this shewes that few or none, so much as dreame of a calling to spirituall libertie.

The first rule follows: Onely use not your liberty, as an occasion to the flesh.

The sense. Flesh] hereby the Papists understand sensuality or carnall appetites: but hereby is meant the corruption of all the powers of the soule, even of reason and conscience. Paul saith, that the wisedome or understanding of the flesh is enmity to God, Rom. 8. 7. fleshlinesse therefore pertaines to the understanding. Againe, he saith of some, that they are puffed up in the minde of the flesh, Col. 2. 18. and he wills the Ephesians, to be renewed in the spirit of their minds, Eph. 4. 23.

The meaning then of the rule is this, use not the benefit of spirituall liberty as an occasion to the flesh to live according to the flesh. Here I consider three things; what is the abuse of liberty? where is this abuse to be found? and what is the right use thereof?

The first question is, what is the abuse of Christian liberty? Answ. To use it as an occasion of fleshly and carnall liberty: and that, in done three waies. The first is when men make those things indifferent than God ever made. Thus the Corinthians used fornication as a thing indifferent, 1 Cor. 6. To many in these dayes drunkennesse and surfetting is but a thing indifferent. Men use not to distinguish a thing indifferent, and the use of it: but they commonly thinke that if the thing be indifferentin it selfe, then also the use of it is indifferent. Thus all abuses of meat, drinke, apparell, all rioting and gaming, dicing and carding, &c. are excused by the names of things indifferent.

Secondly, our liberty is abused by an immoderate use of the gifts of God. The use of them is immoderate three waies; first in respect of time, as when Dives fared deliciously, and was arrayed in rich attire every day. Thus many Gentlemen and others offend, when they turne recreation into an occupation. Secondly, the gifts of God are immoderately used, in respect of themselves; as when men exceed in eating & drinking, as the Prophet saith, Deut. 29. 19. Adding drunkennes to thirst.

Thirdly, in respect of the callings and conditions of men: for every man is to use the gifts of God according to his place and condition. They then offend, that being but meane persons, and living by trades, yet for their diet and apparell, are as great gentlemen and gentlewomen.

Thirdly, liberty is abused when the blessings of God are made instruments, and (as it were) flagges and banners to display our riot, vanity, ostentation, pride; for this cause sundry things, whereof some are indifferent in themselves, are condemned, Isay 3. 16.

The second question is, Where is this abuse? Answer. Even among us in England. It is the fashion of men to take unto themselves a toleration of sinning, some upon the patience of God, others upon the doctrine of the gracious election of God, saying, that they will live as they list, because if they be elected to salvation, they shall certainly bee saved whatsoever they doe. And some there be that take occasion to continue in their sinnes, upon the mercy of God in the death and passion of Christ. A certaine dweller in this Towne of Cambridge made away himselfe. In his bosome was found a writing to this effect, that God did shew mercy on great, grievous, and desperate sinners: and therefore he said that he hoped for mercy though hee hanged himselfe. Of this minde are many ignorant persons, who persevering in their sinnes, yet perswade themselves of mercy: because they have heard that Christ dyed for mankinde. And thus the death of Christ is as it were a licence licence or letters patents to commit sinne. Againe, great is the abuse of meate, drinke, and apparell. To Elias there came an Angell, and said, Arise and eate, 1 King. 19. 7. but to the men of our dayes, there had needs come an Angel and say, Cease to eate, cease to drinke, cease to game.

The third question is, what is the right use of Christian liberty? Answ. It stands in two things: first of all wee our selves must bee renewed and sanctified, To the pure all things are pure, Tit. 1. 15. The person must first please God, before the action can please him. The second is, that beside the lawfull use of the creatures, we must have a spirituall and holy use of them. The lawfull use of the creature I call the politicke use thereof, commonly allowed, and taken up among men. The spirituall use is whereby we receive and use the creature, as from the hand of God the Father in Christ according to his will and word. And the godly are not to separate the one use from the other, but are bound by vertue of the third commandement to take up an holy use of every gift of God. When Noe came out of the Arke, so soone as hee set foot upon the earth, he built an Altar, offered sacrifice, and called on the name of God: not onely for this end to worship God, but also to sanctifie the earth, and all the creatures of God unto his use. The like did Abraham when he came into the land of Canaan. And to this end wee must observe 5. rules. The first, that the creatures of God must be sanctified by the word and prayer, 1 Tim. 4. The word must shew us, what we may doe: and prayer obtaines the doing of it. The 2. rule, wee must bee circumspect lest we sinne in the use of the creatures. In this respect Iob tends for his children, after they had feasted togethers: and hee sanctifies them, Iob 1. 5. The 3. rule: We must use the gifts of God with thanksgiving, Rom. 14. 6. Commonly in these dayes there is no feasting or rejoycing unleisse all memory of God be buried: for that is said to breed melancholy. The 4. rule; We must suffer our selves to be limited and moderated in the use of our liberty, partly by the law of the Magistrate, and partly by the law of charity, in the case of offence. I say in the use: because liberty it selfe is inwardly in the conscience: and the use of it is often in the outward action: and therefore under the order of humane law. The 5. rule: Our liberty must be used for right ends, as namely the glory of God, 1 Cor. 10. 31. the preservation of nature, and not the pampering of the flesh, Rom. 13. 13. the good of our neighbour.

Make conscience to observe this rule, and the rather, because the holy and spirituall use of Christian liberty, is a signe and token that thou art in the kingdome of God, and a true member thereof: as on the contrary, the abuse of Gods blessings shewes thee to be still in the kingdome of darknesse. When men sell things of great worth for a little value, and then afterwards give themselves to rioting and spending, we commonly say that they are thewes, and no right owners of the goods which they sold. The like may bee said of them that abuse spirituall liberty, that they are but usurpers, and no right owners of it.

Lastly, it must be observed, that this rule hath two branches. The first is, that wee must not minister to the flesh any occasion of sinning. The second is, that we must give no occasion of sinning by meanes of Christian liberty.

The second maine rule follows, Serve one another by love. For the right conceiving of it, I will propound three questions. The first is, why is this rule propounded in this place? Ans. It sets downe the end of all Apostolike doctrine, as Paul teacheth, 1 Tim. 1. 5. The end of the commandement is love out of a pure heart, good conscience, faith unfained. Here men commonly understand by the commandement, the morall law. That is indeed a truth, but it is not the meaning of the place. In the third verse Paul lets downe a commandement or denunciation to Timothy, that he and the Pastours of Ephesus, teach no other doctrine but the doctrine of the Apostles: then in the 5. verse hee propounds the summe and substance or the end of the aforesaid commandement: in the 18. verse after a long antepodosis he injoynes Timothy to observe it carefully. So then the end of all sound doctrine is love out of a pure heart: and all our preaching must tend to this.

The second question is, what is the love of our neighbour, specified in this rule? Ans. It is an affection renewed, whereby we are moved to to wish well to our neighbour in the Lord. I say, an affection to confute Lumbard, who saith that love is not an habit in us, (as other vertues are,) but the holy Ghost. I say; it is an affection renewed, to confute the Papist, who teacheth, that we have the true love of God and our neighbour by nature, and that wee want nothing but the second act, or the exercise of love, which they say is from grace. Further, I adde, that love inclines us to wish well to our neighbour: for this is the formall and proper effect of love, and all this is done when we thinke well, speake and doe well, and that in respect not onely of the body, but also in respect of the soule of our neighbour. Lastly, I say, that love to our neighbour must be in the Lord. Because we are to love him in respect that hee is a creature of God, and beares his image: and not in respect of honour, profit, or pleasure, which we receive from him. Love for such ends, is selfe love.

The third question is, what is the use of love? Ans. It serves to make us serviceable to our neighbour. Love stoopes not her owne things, 1 Cor. 13. Christ was servant to his enemies in bearing their sinnes upon the crosse. Paul that was free from all, became a servant to all, to misme some, 1 Cor. 9. 19. To Christ we are to doe service: and he hath put our neighbour in his stead, so as that which is done to our neighbour, shall be done to him: our neighbour therefore must bee served of us. And this is not against our liberty. For we are free inwardly in conscience, yet in the outward use of our liberty, we must bee servants to men.

The Vse. If we examine our lives by this rule, we shall finde that there is very little power of religion among men. There are six sorts of men that live in the breach of this rule. The first are usurers, who lend for advantage, when they should lend freely to them that are in need; these serve themselves and make a prey of all. The second sort are ingrossers, who gather in commodities to inrich themselves. The third sort are idle persons of what degree soever, that spend their time in eating, drinking, sleeping, gaming: such are but unprofitable burdens of the earth. To this sort I referre beggars and vagabonds. The fourth sort are riotous persons that use to goe from alehouse to alehouse, from taverne to taverne, and misspend that whereby they should maintain their families, and be serviceable to their country. The fift sort are Tradesmen, who in their dealing use lying, dissembling, fraud, injustice. They seeke nothing but their private advantage. And this kinde of men abounds in the world. The last sort are drowsie and carnall Protestants, who onely seeke the things of this world, and never so much as give good example to servants or children, or any good counsell. Beside all this, it is the common fault of the world, for men to serve themselves, according to the common saying, Every man for himselfe, and God for us all. And the best men that are, if they examine themselves, shall finde that they faile many wayes, and come short in the duties of love to men with whom they live.

This being so, we are to acknowledge before God this maine offence of ours: and to intreat for the pardon of it for Christs sake. And ever hereafter to change our lives, and to reforme them according to this rule. And that is done on this manner. Every man hath or ought to have 2. callings, a generall, and a particular. The generall is, whereby we are called to be Christians. In this calling we are to doe good to all men, by teaching, admonishing, exhorting, and by example of good life. A particular calling is, whereby men are called to some estate of life in the family, Church, or common-wealth. And according to the severall conditions of particular callings, must every man in his place, doe the good he can. The Magistrate must use his office, first for the maintenance of the Gospell, and then for the execution of justice. The Minister must preach sound Religion in love of the soules of men. The Master of the family must cause his houshold to imbrace the Gospell, and frequent the exercises of religion. Lastly, every man that is in a trade or office, must apply himselfe to the uttermost of his power to doe all he can for the good of his country: and he must so deale that he may be helpfull to all with whom he deales, and hurtfull to none. We are, or should be, trees of righteousnesse: our fruit must bee meat for others, and our leaves for medicines. Wee must be as candles that spend themselves to give light to others.

14. For all the law is fulfilled in one word, which is this, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thy selfe.

Fulfilled] comprised, Rom. 13. 9. One word] One precept: for the holy Ghost calls precepts, words. It may bee demanded, how the whole law should bee fulfilled in the love of our neighbour? Answ. The love of God, and the love of our neighbour are joyned together, as the cause and the effect: and the love of God is practised in the love of our neighbour. For God that is invisible, will be loved in the person of our neighbour, whom we see, and with whom wee converse. And the first commandement of the law, must be included in all the Commandements following, and thus the love of God is presupposed in every Commandement of the second Table: hee therefore that loves his neighbour, loves God also.

Thou shalt love] understand both the affections, and the duties of love. Thy neighbour] any one that is neare unto us in respect of mans nature. Isay 58. 7. though he bee our enemie, yet if by any occasion he be offered unto us of God, he is our neighbour.

As thy selfe] These words signifie not the measure of our love: as though wee should love our selves in the first place, and then our neighbour in the second place, for there are some cases in which we are to love our neighbour more than our selves. As for example, we are more to love the soule of our brother, than our temporall life: and a good subject is more to love the life of his Prince, than his owne life: here then the holy Ghost signifies, what must bee the manner of our love; the word [as] signifies not quantity, but quality: and that wee are as truly and earnestly with love to imbrace our neighbour, as our selves.

The scope. The words containe a reason of the second rule, which may bee framed thus: to serve our neighbour in duties of love: is the keeping of the whole law: therefore this service must be carefully performed.

The use. Here wee see that the end of a mans life is to serve God in serving of man, for this is the summe of the whole Law. Servants are commanded in serving their masters, to serve God, and to doe whatsoever they doe, as unto God, Col. 3. 23. And so every man in his place in dealing with men must so deale, as if he were to deale with God himselfe.

selfe. Therefore most men prophane their lives, when they make the scope and drift thereof, to be the getting of riches and honours. And though they have great charges, that is no excuse for the principall end of our living, here is to performe service to men: and in this service to doe homage to God: for which, homage God will give the honour and riches which he sees to be convenient for us.

Secondly, here we may observe what is true religion and godlinesse, namely, to love and serve God in serving of man. He that saith he loves God, and hates his brother, is a lyer, 1 Iohn 4. 20. And hence it followes, that to live out of all societie of men, though it be in prayer and fasting, (after Monkish fashion) is no state of perfection, but meere superstition: for that is true and perfect love of God, that is shewed in duties of love, and in the edification of our neighbour. Against the hypocrisie of sundry Protestants is here discovered. If they come to the Church, and heare Sermons, and frequent the Lords Table, they thinke they may doe afterward what they will; and many such are frequenters of tavernes and alehouses, and are given to riot and licentiousnesse. But it is not enough for thee to be holy in the Church; thou must be a Saint in the Church, & a devill at home. True religion is that which shewes it selfe in thy private house, private dealings, and in the course of thine owne life: such as thou art in thy particular calling, such art thou in deed and truth, what showes soever thou makest before men.

15. If ye bite and devoure one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another.

The sense. If ye bite] Here Paul alludes to the fashion of wild beasts, as lyons, wolves, &c. And by biting wee are to understand all injuries in words, as railing, cursing, slandering, backbiting, &c. Devoure] Here Paul understands all injuries in deed, or violence, even to the shedding of blood. Take heede] Here Paul signifies, that contentions and dissentions breed the destruction and desolation of the Church.

The scope. These words are a second reason of a second rule drawne from the dangerous effect of the contrary, thus: Contentions breed the desolation of the Church: therefore doe service one to another by love.

The contents. In these words Paul delivers 3. things. The first is, that there were grievous contentions in the Church of Galatia. The like also were in the Church of Corinth, 1 Cor. 3. The cause of the former contentions were differences in points of religion. Some of the Galatians (no doubt) withstanding circumcision, and the most of them standing for it. For hereupon great were the dissentions of the Churches in Iudea, Acts 15. 2. Observe then, that unity is not an infallible and an inseparable marke of the Church of God, Vnitie may be out of the Church, and dissention in the Church, as here we see. It may bee objected, that there is a peace in the Kingdome of God, and that there the wolfe and the lambe dwell together, Isa. 11. Ans. This is but in part verified in the kingdome of grace upon earth: and it is fully accomplished in the kingdome of glory in heaven. Againe, it may be alledged, that the Church is the company of them that truly content in one and the same faith. Ans. That is properly meant of the Catholike Church: but the case is otherwise in particular Churches, where true beleevers are mixed with hypocrites, whereupon ariseth much dissention. And of true beleevers, some are more carnall than spirituall: and that is another cause of dissention, 1 Cor. 3. 3.

The 2. point concernes the quality of these dissentions. When Paul saith, If ye bite and devoure, &c. he signifies that they were fierce and violent. And such commonly are dissentions for religion, as appeares by the persecution in Queene Maries dayes, the heat whereof nothing could slake, but mans blood. Againe, he signifies in them very words, that they were brutish and beastlike, more beseeming wolves, lyons, dogs, than men. This must teach us to detest railing, cursing, evill speaking, fighting, unlesse it be in the case of necessary defence, for by these actions we degenerate to the condition of beasts, and repell from us the worke of grace: for Christ of lyons, wolves, beares, hath made us his sheepe and lambs, Isa. 11.

The third point is touching the effect of contention, and that is the ruine & desolation of the Church. The division of the members among themselves, is the dissolution of the whole body. Differences in points of religion breed doubting; doubting hinders faith and invocation, & the free course of the Gospell: and where these be hindred, the Church goes to decay. And by reason of the dissentions that be in these last dayes, many live as Atheists, and will be of no religion.

By this we are to be admonished to study, and to use all meanes to maintaine Christian peace and concord, Eph. 4. 3. To this end we must remember one generall rule, Rom. 12. 18. Have peace with all men. And withall we must observe the cautions which Paul addes: one is, if it may be with good conscience, for there are some, with whom there is no peace, unlesse we sooth them in their vices, or deny our religion, either in whole, or in part. The second is, If it lye in you, for sometime men are accused, and must of necessity defend themselves. These two cautions observed, peace must be had with all men.

It may then bee demanded, why doe not the Protestants make a pacification with the Papists? Answ. Wee are content so to doe in respect of civill society, but not in respect of Religion. Wee have a commandement to the the contrary, Rev. 18.2. Come out of Babylon my people, and touch no uncleanly thing. Where a pacification is made, both the parties must yeeld somewhat: but wee may not yeeld in any point of our religion, to the Papists. In an instrument of musicke, the strings out of tune are set up, or set downe, to the rest: but the strings that are in tune are not stirred: even so the Papists are to come to us, we are not to turne to them: our Religion being the doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles.

Peace is threefold; Church peace, Civill peace, Household peace. All these are to be maintained. Touching Church peace, I give three Rules. The first is, that for the ending of differences in religion, there must be conferences in state in christian Councils: The spirits of the Prophets are subject to the Prophets, 1 Cor. 14. 32. When there arose differences in the Churches of Judea, The Apostles and Elders came together to inquire of the matter, Act. 15.6. & this is a thing much to be desired in these dayes, specially in these Westerne parts of the world. It may be demanded, Why did not the Protestants joyne with the Papists at the Councill of Trent? Answ. From the first Session it was more than sixe yeares before any safe conduct was given to the Protestants: and at their appearing in the Councill, exception was taken against their letters, and they dismissed. And when they appeared the second time upon the new safe conduct, the Councill was the next day adjourned for 2. yeares. And when safe conduct was given the 3. time the Protestant Princes refused to send their Divines, because they had beene twice mocked. Moreover, the Councill was not a free Councill, because the Pope himselfe was both party, and Iudge.

The second rule, There must be a Christian toleration one of another, Eph. 4 2. Here that we mistake not, I propound two questions. One is, in what must there be a toleration? Answ. A toleration presupposeth an errour or defect in our brother. An errour is either in judgement, or manners. An errour in judgement, is either in the foundation of religion, or beside the foundation, in lighter matters: if the errour be in the foundation, there is no toleration of it. If it be in some lesser matter, a toleration is to bee used according to the rule of the Apostle, If yee be otherwise minded, God will reveale it, Phil. 3.15 When others see not that which we see, we must not presently condemne them, but tolerate their ignorance, till God reveale his truth unto them. Againe, errours in manners be of two sorts; some without offence, as hastinesse, frowardnesse, vaine-glorioustesse, &c. these we must tolerate, Prov. 19. 11. And others with open offence, and such as dishonour no toleration, 1 Cor. 5. 11.

The second question is, to what end must we tolerate the infirmities and ignorances of our brethren? Ans. Toleration must tend to the good and edification of men, Rom. 15.2. We must not so tolerate as that we approve of the least vice, or betray the least part of Gods truth.

It may here be demanded, Whether there may not be a toleration for Popery? Answ. No: The toleration of two Religions in one kingdome, is the overthrow of peace. Againe, Popery is a religion both heretical and schismaticall. It may be said, that faith and conscience is free. Answer, though faith in the heart and conference in it selfe be free in respect of mans authority: yet is not the publishing of faith, and the profession of conscience free in like sort, but it stands subject to the power of the Magistrate.

The third rule. Every man in his place, specially Teachers, must set themselves to build the Church, Iude v. 20. Eph. 4.12. Indeed the truth is to be defended: but marke how: The truth must be confessed when time and occasion serves, without ostentation: this done, all contentions layd aside, wee must set our selves to build the Church. And the rather Ministers of Gods word in England must remember this: because while we are striving among our selves in sundry points of difference, the Papist our common enemy gets ground.

Touching Civill peace, it must bee remembred, that the peace and good estate of Ierusalem stood in this, that it was made the seat of Gods sanctuary, and the throne of Iustice, Psal. 122. When the Arke was in the house of Obed-Edom, all things prospered with him. Now in the new Testament the preaching of the Gospell, invocation of Gods name, with the use of the Sacraments, come in the roome of the Sanctuary. Civill peace then is maintained, when men yeeld subjection to the Gospell of Christ, which brings peace to all that receive it.

Touching Household peace, I give two rules. One is, that governours of families must urge and compell all under them to admit (at the least outwardly) the practice of religion in the exercises of faith, repentance, new obedience. Thus did Abraham, Gen. 17 and Iosh. cap. 24. They that doe not first of all consent in Christ, cannot consent among themselves. Secondly, it must be observed, that a family is the schoole of God, in which he will exercise our faith, invocation, love, patience, long suffering, &c. And there is more vertue to bee seene in the well ordering of a family, than in the pretended holinesse of Monkish cloisters.

Thus we see how we are to maintaine the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. For the better inforcing of this duty, Paul (Eph. 4.4.) gives 7. reasons: One body, one spirit, one hope of eternall life, one Lord, one faith, one baptisme, one Father of all. It may bee said, we are at peace, what needs all this adoe? Answ. The peace of many is peace in drunkennesse, (called good fellowship) peace in prophanenesse and wickednesse. This is the devills devils peace, where he beares the sway. The peace of which I now speake is, in the Lord, & in the true worship of God: of which reade Isa. 2. where men are said humbly to goe up to the mountaine of the Lord, that they may heare his will, and joyntly obey it.

16. Then I say, walke in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lusts of the flesh.

The scope. Here Paul returnes to the first rule, verse 13. and shewes the way how it is to be observed, thus: If ye walke in the spirit ye shall not fulfill the lusts of the flesh: & when the lusts of the flesh are not fulfilled, there shall not occasion be given to the flesh, by the use of christian liberty,

The words containe two parts: a Rule, walke in the spirit: and the benefit that comes by the rule, ye shall not fulfill the lusts of the flesh.

In the rule I consider two things, what is the spirit, and what is walking. The spirit is the gift of regeneration, lost by Adam, restored by Christ. I say it is a gift: and this gift is ear-mered by the name of the spirit: because the spirit worketh it immediately in us, from the Father and the Sonne. Againe I say, it is a gift of regeneration, to make a distinction betweene it, and civill vertue. For there is a gift of regeneration which mortifies corruption; and a gift of restraint which serves onely to keepe in corruption. Of this second kinde, are all civill vertues, in naturall and heathen men, & not of the first. Ioseph is chaste, and so was Xenocrates: Iosephs chastity is a part of regeneration, and proceedes from the spirit here mentioned, but the chastity of Xenocrates is not so, proceeding onely from the generall providence in God, and not from the spirit of sanctification. The like I say of all other civill vertues.

More plainly. The spirit is a Divine nature, quality, or condition, whereby wee are made conformable to Christ, in righteousnesse, and holinesse.

The spirit hath five properties. The first, that it is a rich and liberall grace of God. For it containes in it the seede of all vertues, and all necessary graces of God: because it comes in the roome of originall sin, which containes in it, the seeds of all vices or sinnes.

The second is the largenesse of it, for this spirit is in all the powers of them that are regenerate, that is, in the minde, conscience, will, affections, and in the sensuall appetite, 1 Thess. 5.23. And he that is sanctified in one part, is sanctified in all. Hence it followes, that they which have plenty of illumination, without change of affection, and life, are indeed carnall, and not spirituall.

The third property is sincerity, for the grace of God is without falsehood or guile. Psalme 32.2. hence ariseth the difference betweene the godly man, and an hypocrite: betweene the works of nature, and the works of grace. There are men that in distresse desire the assistance and favour of God: and they doe it without the Spirit of God: for they doe it deceitfully, desiring Gods favour not for it selfe, but in respect of some evill, from which they would be delivered; as the Mariners in Ionas, and Pharao did. Againe, there are men that mourne for their sinnes without the Spirit of God: for there is much falsehood in their mourning: because they mourne for sinne in respect of the punishment thereof, and not in respect of the offence of God. Lastly, there are that pretend a love to God, and yet want the Spirit: for they love God in respect of his benefits: as Saul loved God for a Kingdome, such lovers are mercenary, and a worke of nature, whereas the love which is from the Spirit, maketh us love God for himselfe.

The fourth property is excellency, for the spirit of grace in Christians is more excellent than the grace of creation, in two respects. First, in respect of the beginning thereof. For the spirit is from Christ the second Adam, both God and man. The grace of creation should have beene conveyed unto us from the first Adam, but a mere man, if he stood. Secondly, in respect of constancy, for God gave to Adam the will to persevere if hee would: he giveth further to beleevers, both the will to persevere, and the deed.

The fift property is livelinesse, whereby the spirit is effectuall in operation, Ethu saith that the spirit compelled him, and was in him as a vessell of new wine, which must have a vent, Iob. 32.19. Of the operation of the spirit, I deliver three things. The first, that the spirit workes in, and by the word of God: which therefore is called the Ministery of the spirit, 2 Corinth. 3 6. The second, that the spirit worketh by certain degrees. The first degree, & the very first beginning of this divine operation, is, to make us feele in what great neede we stand of Christ, and to desire to bee reconciled and turned unto God. This is the first motion of the spirit in us; and they which want this, have nothing as yet of the grace of God in them. The third, that the whole work of the spirit may be reduced to three actions: The first is, to cast downe every thing in us, that exalts it selfe against God, 2 Cor. 10. as namely, to beare downe erroneous reason, and rebellious affection, and to put a man out of heart with his chiefe delights, and with his owne selfe. The second action is to kindle in our hearts a care and desire of reconciliation with God in Christ: hence the spirit is called the spirit of grace and supplication, Zach. 12. The third action is, to write the Law in our hearts, and that is done by putting a new light of knowledge into the minde, and new inclinations into the will, and affections.

Thus much of the spirit. Walking in the spirit is, to order our lives according to the directions and motion of the spirit. For, as the spirit renewes our nature within, so it makes us to change and renew our actions, in three respects. First, it makes us put a further beginning to our actions, than nature can afoord, causing us to doe them in faith, whereby wee beleeve, that our persons please God in Christ, that our worke to be done pleaseth God, that the defect of the worke is pardoned. Secondly, the Spirit makes us doe our actions in a new maner, namely, in obedience to the written word. Thirdly, it makes us put a new end to our actions, that is, to intend & desire to honour God in the things that wee doe. For example. A man is wronged by his neighbour: and nature tels him that hee must requite evill with evill: yet he resolves to doe otherwise: for (faith he) God in Christ hath forgiven me many sinnes: therefore must I forgive my neighbour. And he remembreth B that vengeance is Gods: and that he is taught so to aske pardon, as he forgives others. And hereupon hee sets himselfe to requite evill with goodnesse. This is to live in the spirit.

The Vse. By this rule we see that most of us faile in our duties. For many of us professing Christ, live not according to the lawes of nature, in our common dealings. Wee minde earthly things, and therefore wee are carnall. It is a principle with many, that if wee keepe the Church, observe the Kings lawes (which are indeed to be observed) and avoide open and grosse sinnes, we doe al that God requires at our hands. Hereupon to walke in the spirit, is thought to bee a worke of precisenesse, more than needs. And they which deeme it to be a worke of precisenesse, walke not in the spirit: and indeed they which have received the greatest measure of the spirit, must say with Paul that they are carnall, sold under sinne, Rom.7.14. C

Secondly, this rule teacheth us, that we must become spirituall men, such as make conscience of every sinne, and doe things lawfull in spirituall manner, in faith and obedience, and not as carnall men doe them carnally. It may be said, that Ministers of the word must bee spirituall men. I answer, if thou, whatsoever thou art, be not spirituall, thou hast no part in Christ, *Rom.*8. And the rather, thou must be spirituall; because a naturall man may doe the outward duties of religion in a carnal sort. D

Thirdly, we must not iudge any mans estate, before God, by any one, or some few actions, either good or bad: but by the walking, or by the course of his life, which, if it be carnall, it shewes the partie to be carnall: if it be spirituall, it shewes him to be spirituall.

The benefit that ariseth by the keeping of the rule followes, in these words, Yee shall not fulfill the lusts of the flesh.

Flesh] the corruption of nature, the roote of all sinnes.

Lusts] inordinate motions of the minde, will, and affections. Thus largely is lust taken in the tenth Commandement, which condemneth the first motions to evill.

Fulfill] fulfilling is not a simple doing of evill, but the accomplishing of lust with love, pleasure, and full consent of will: as also perseverance in evill, by adding sinne to sinne.

A question. How farre doth the childe of God proceed in the lust of the flesh? Answ. He is assaulted by the lusts of the flesh: but he doth not accomplish them. More plainely: there are five degrees of lust, Suggestion, delight, consent, the act, perseverance in the act. Suggestion, and delight, whereby the minde is drawne away, are incident to the childe of God. Consent is not ordinarily: and if at any time the childe of God consent to the lusts of his flesh, it is but in part, against his purpose, because he is overcarried. Likewise the act or execution of lust, is not ordinarily and usually in the childe of God: if at any time he fall, he may say with Paul, I doe that which I hate. Lastly, perseverance in evill doth not befall the childe of God: because upon his fall he recovers himselfe by new repentance. In this sense Saint John saith, He that is borne of God sinneth not, 1 John 3.9.

The Vse. Hence it followes, that the lust of the flesh is in the childe of God to the death: and consequently they doe not fulfill the law, neither can they be justified thereby, as Popish doctrine is.

Secondly, our duty is, not to accomplish the lusts of the flesh, but to resist them to the uttermost, *Rom.*13.14.

Thirdly, here is comfort for the servants of God. Some man may say, I am vexed and turmoiled with wicked thoughts and desires, so as I feare I am not Gods childe. I answer againe, for all this despaire not. For, if thou hate and detest the lusts, that are in thee: if thou resist them, and wage battell against them: if being overraken at any time, thou recover thy selfe by new repentance, they shall never be laid to thy charge to condemnation, *Rom.*8.1. It is here made a prerogative of Gods child, when the lusts of the flesh are in him, not to accomplish them, or to live in subjection to them.

17. For the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh, and they are contrary one to another, so that yee cannot doe the things which ye would.

These words are a reason of the former verse, thus: If ye walke in the spirit, yee shall not fulfil the lusts of the flesh; for the flesh and spirit being contrary, mutually resist & withstand one another, so as yee can neither doe the good, nor the evill which ye would.

Paul here sets forth a spirituall combate, of which sixe things are to be considered. The first is concerning the parties by whom the combate is made; namely, the flesh, & the spirit. The flesh signifies the corruption of the whole nature of man: and the spirit is the gift of regeneration, (as hath beene shewed.) It may be demanded, how these twaine being but qualities can be said to fight together? Answ. The flesh and the spirit are mixed together in the whole whole man regenerate, and in all the powers of the soule of man. Fire and water are said to be mixed in compound bodies: light and darknes are mixed in the ayre at the dawning of the day. In a vessell of lukewarme water, heat and cold are mixed together: we cannot say, that the water is in one part hot, and in another cold, but the whole quantity of water is hot in part, and cold in part. Even so the man regenerate, is not in one part flesh, and in another part spirit, but the whole minde is partly flesh, and partly spirit, and so are the will and affections throughout, partly spirituall, and partly carnall. Now upon this mixture it comes to passe, that the powers of the soule are carried and disposed divers wayes: and hereupon followes the combate.

The second point concernes the meanes whereby this combate is made: and that is a twofold Concupiscence, expressed in these words, The flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh. The lust of the flesh shewes it selfe in two actions. The first is, to defile and represse the good motions of the spirit. In this respect Paul saith, when I would doe good, evill is present: and *the law of the flesh rebels against the law of the minde, Rom.*7.21.23 Hereupon the flesh is fitly resembled by the disease called Ephialtes or the mare, in which men in their slumber, think they feele a thing as heavy as a mountaine lying on their brests, which they can no way remove. The second action of the flesh, is, to bring forth, and to fill the mind with wicked cogitations, and rebellious inclinations. In this respect concupiscence is said to tempt, intice, and draw away the minde of man, James 1.14. Againe, the lust of the spirit hath two other actions. The first is, to curbe and restraine the flesh. Thus S. John saith, that the seed of grace keepes the regenerate that they cannot sinne, 1 Joh. 3 9. The second action of the Spirit is, to ingender good motions, cogitations, and inclinations, agreeable to the will of God. Thus David saith, that *his reines did teach him in the night season, Psal.*16. And the Prophet Isay saith, Thine eare shall heare a voyce, saying, here is the way, walke in it, when thou turnest to the right hand or to the left, cap.30.v.21. And this voyce, (no doubt) is not onely the voyce of such as be teachers, but also the inward voyce of the Spirit of God in us. And thus by the concurrence of these contrary actions in one and the same man, is the combate made.

The third point is, concerning the cause of this combate; in these words [and these are contrary one to another.] The contrarietie of the flesh and spirit, makes the combate. And the contrariety is very great, for the spirit is the gift of righteousnes: and the flesh stands in a double opposition to it; for the first of all, the want of righteousnesse, and secondly, a proneness to all unrighteousnesse: that is to say, not a single, but a double privation or want of the grace or gift of God. Hence I gather that man hath no freedome of will in good duties, before his conversion, because he is then wholly flesh, and wants the Spirit of God: and the flesh is flat contrary to the Spirit: and one contrary hath no power at all to bring forth the effect of his contrary. And hence it followeth, that there are no such works, whereby a man may prepare himselfe to his own justification, for though the mind be enlightned with a generall faith, yet man before he be justified, is nothing but flesh: and flesh being in nature opposite to the spirit, can make no preparation for the spirit, no more than darknesse can make preparation for the entrance of light.

The fourth point is, concerning the persons in whom this combate is to bee found. And they are beleevers. (not unbeleevers or wicked men:) such as the Galatians were, to whom this combate is said to belong. It may bee alledged, that naturall men have a combate in them. For they can say, I see and approve that which is good, but I doe that which is naught. Answ. This combate is betweene the naturall conscience, and rebellious affection, and it is incident to all men that have in them any conscience, or light of reason. But the combate of the flesh and the spirit, is of another kind, for in it the minde is carried against it selfe, the will against it selfe, and the affections against themselves by reason they are partly spirituall, and partly carnall. Secondly, not all beleevers have this combate in them, but onely such as be of yeares: for infants, though they have the seede of grace in them, yet doe they want the act or exercise thereof, and therefore they feele not this combate, because it stands in action. Thirdly, this combate is in the godly for the time of this life onely, because in death the flesh is abolished, and consequently the combat it selfe.

The first point is, in what things doth this combate shew it selfe? Ans. In all the actions of men regenerate, which Paul signifies, when he saith, ye cannot doe the things which ye would. For example; in prayer, sometime we feele fervent desires, and sometime againe deadnesse of spirit; sometimes faith, sometimes doubting. This combate is in all the actions of the godly, specially in good actions. Thus much Paul teacheth, when he saith, *I finde by the law of God, that when I would do good, evill is present, Rom.*7.21. And, I doe not the good which I would but the evill which I would not, that doe I, v.19. And that we mistake not, it must be remembred, that Paul speakes all this of himselfe, as being regenerate; that he speaks it not of this or that action, but of the course of his life, in which he willed and indeavoured to doe that which was good, and acceptable to God. And that appeares by the very words, which hee saith, to will is present with me. And, I would doe good, but I doe it not. Marke further, while Paul wils & indeavors to do that which is good, if he faile & do amisse, he may well say, It is not I that doe is, but the flesh that dwels in me. And ungodly men for the covering of their wickednes, if they say (as they doe) that it is their flesh that sinneth, and not they, they abuse the holy doctrine, and example of Paul.

The last point, concernes the effect of the combate, which is to hinder the godly, that they cannot doe that which they would, and that three wayes. First, it makes them that they cannot sinne, that is, live in practise of any one sin, 1 Iohn 3.9. Secondly, if at any time they fall, it stayes and keepes them, that they sinne not with full consent of will. For they say when they sin, The evill which I hate, that doe I. Thirdly, though in the ordinary course of their lives they doe that which is good, yet by reason of this combate, they faile in the doing of it, Rom. 7.18. To will is present with me, but I finde no meanes to fulfill or accomplish that which is good. Even as a sick man that is in recovery, for his affection, thinks he is able to walke a mile or twaine, and yet by reason of faintnesse and weaknesse he is scarce able to walke once or twice about his chamber: So the regenerate man, for affection, inclines to the best things; and yet by reason of the flesh, failes in the doing of them.

Thus much of the combate, the use followes. Hence I gather, that concupiscence or lust after baptisme, in the regenerate, is a sinne. For the lust of the spirit, is the thing that God requireth and approveth: now the lust of the flesh is directly contrary to it, as a defect or privation thereof: and therefore the lust of the flesh is properly a sin, whether consent of will goe with it, or no.

Againe, hence it followes, that workes of the regenerate, are mixed workes, that is, good workes indeed, yet not perfectly good, but partly evill, for such as the cause is, such is the effect: now the mind and will of man, are the cause of his workes, and the minde is, partly carnall, and partly spirituall: so also is the will: and therefore the workes that proceed from them, are partly spirituall, and in part carnall. Vpon this ground it followes, that all the workes of regenerate men, are sinfull, and in the rigour of justice deserve damnation. Objection. Sinne is the transgression of the law: good workes are no transgression of the law: therefore good workes are no sinnes. I answer to the minor. The transgression of the law is two fold: One, which is directly gainst the law, both for matter, and manner: the second is, when that is done which the law requires, but not in that manner it should be done. And thus good workes become sinfull. The duty which the law requires, is done, but it is not done perfectly as it ought to be done, by reason of the flesh. Secondly, it is alleadged, that good workes are from the Spirit of God: and that nothing proceeding from the Spirit of God is sinne. Answ. Things proceeding from the Spirit of God alone, or from the Spirit immediately are no sinnes: now good workes proceed not onely from the spirit, but also from the minde and will of man, as instruments of the spirit. And when an effect proceedes from sundry causes that are subordinate, it takes unto it the nature of the second cause; hereupō works are partly spirituall, and partly carnall, as the minde and will of the doer is. Thirdly, it is alleadged, that good workes please God; & that things pleasing God, are no sinnes. Anſ. They please God; because the doer is in Christ, and so pleaseth God. Againe, they please not God before, or without pardon: for they are accepted, because God approves his owne worke in us, and pardons the defect thereof. Lastly, some object on this manner: No sinnes are to be done: good workes are sinnes: therefore not to be done. Anſ. They are not simply sinnes, but onely by accident. For as God commands them they are good; and as godly men doe them, they are good in part. Now the reason holds onely thus; that which is sin, so farre forth as it is a sin, or if it be simply a sinne, is not to bee done. Now then upon this doctrine it followes, that there is no justification by works, nor no fulfilling of the law, for the time of this life.

Thirdly, hence it followes, that the grace of God for the time of this life, is mixed with his contrary, the corruption of the flesh. This mixture the godly feele in themselves, to the great griefe of their hearts. When they would beleeve, their mindes are oppressed with unbeliefe. They see more ignorance in themselves, then light of knowledge. There are a number amongst us, that say, they know as much as all the world can teach them, that they doe perfectly beleeve in Christ, and ever did, that they love God with all their hearts, and did never so much as doubt of the mercy of God. But these men are voide of the grace of God; they are like empty barrels that make a great sound: they never knew what is meant by the combate of the flesh and spirit.

Fourthly, we are hereto be admonished, in all duties of religion to use industry, & paines, by willing, striving, and indeavouring to the uttermost, to doe that which we ought to do. We must use asking, seeking, knocking. Mat. 7.7. We must with Paul use wrastling in our prayers to God. Rom. 15.30. They that would have knowledge in the booke of God, must doe more then heare a Sermon: they must strive against their ignorance, and blindnesse, and laboriously exercise their senses in the discerning of good and evill. They that would beleeve, must strive against their naturall unbeliefe, and endeavour to beleeve. Blessed (saith Salomon, Prov. 28.) is the man that feares himselfe, or inures himselfe to feare. Paul saith of himselfe, that hee laboured and tooke paines to keepe a good conscience, Act. 24.16.

Lastly, by reason of this combate, wee are put in minde to use sobriety, and watchfulnesse over our owne corruptions, with much and and instant prayer, lest we fall into temptation, Matth. 26.41. We should practise these more then wee doe: for beside the enemies without, we have an enemy within that seeks our perdition.

18. And if yee be lead by the spirit, ye are not under the law.

In the 13. verse Paul propounds a maine rule of good life, Give no occasion to the flesh; and for the better keeping of this, hee gives a second rule, vers. 16. Walke in the spirit. Of this second rule he gives two reasons. The first is taken from the contrariety of the flesh and the spirit v. 17. The second is in these words: They that walke according to the spirit, are freed from the curse of the law.

In these words, Paul sets down three things. The first is the office of the Spirit, which is first of all, to regenerate & renew all the powers of the soule; and secondly, to guide and conduct them that are regenerate, Psal. 143.10. In this guidance or conduction, there are foure actions of the spirit. The first is, Preservation, whereby the holy Ghost maintaines the gifts of regeneration in them that are regenerate. The second is, Cooperation, whereby the will of God, as the first cause, workes together with the regenerate will of man, as the second cause. And without this cooperation mans will brings forth no good action; no more then the tree which is apt to bring forth fruite, yeelds fruit indeed, till it have the presence and cooperation of the Sunne, & that in the season of the yeare. The third, is Direction, whereby Gods spirit ordereth and establisheth the minde, will, and affections in good duties, 2 Thes. 3.5. The last, is Excitation, whereby the spirit stirres and still moves the will and minde, after they are regenerate: because for the time of this life, the grace of God is hindered and oppressed by the flesh. Hereupon after regeneration, there must still be new inclining, Psal. 119.36. new drawing Cant. 1.3. new working of the will and the deed, Phil. 2.13.

Hence it followes, that beside the antecedent, and first grace, there is necessary a subsequent, or second grace. For we doe not that good which we can doe, unlesse God by a second grace make vs doe it, as he made us able to doe it by the first grace.

The second thing is, the office of all true beleevers: and that is, to resigne themselves in subiection to the worke of Gods Spirit. Now Gods Spirit workes in and by the word of God. And hereupon this subjection hath two parts. The first is, to make triall, inquiry, & examinatiō, what is the good will of God, in every thing Rom. 12.2. Thus did David, Psal. 119.49 I am thine, save me, for I seeke thy commandements. The second part is, to deny our selves, and to conforme our mindes, consciences, wils, affections, in all things, to the foresaid will of God, Rom. 12. verse 2. Let all such as desire to be spirituall, remember and make conscience to practise this.

The third is the priviledge of beleevers, in the last words, Ye are not under the law. Understand this, in respect of the curse and condemnation of the law, for otherwise, we are al under the law, as it is the rule of good life. The priviledge then is, that God doth not impute the defects of obedience to such as truly beleeve and repent, but he accepts their imperfect obedience, as perfect and absolute. This serves to comfort them that grieve, because they feele the want of sanctification in themselves. For if they can, and doe will that which is good, & endeavor themselves in the course of their lives according to their will, let them not feare over much, when their obedience is defective: because they are not under the rigour of the law: & therefore God accepts the will and endeavour to obey, for obedience. And the consideration of Gods mercifull acceptation, must stirre us up to an earnest care and conscience of all good duties.

19. Moreover, the workes of the flesh are manifest, which are adultery, fornication, uncleanes, wantonnesse.

20. Idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, debate, emulations, wrath, contentions, seditions, heresies.

21. Envy, murthers, drunkennesse, gluttony, and such like: whereof I tell you before (as I also have told you before) that they which doe such things shall not inherit the kingdome of God.

Paul before delivered this rule in generall termes, Give no occasion to the flesh, and fulfill not the lust of the flesh. Now hee proceeds further in way of declaration, to make a Catalogue or rehearsall of the particular workes of the flesh, which were in use, and knowne to the Galatians. And this hee doth for weighty cause. For we are full of blindnesse, and see not our corruption: and we are full of hypocrisie: and therefore ready to esteeme our selves spirituall, when wee are carnall. And therefore this Catalogue serves fitly as a table or glasse to discover the corruption of mans heart, by the fruits thereof.

After Pauls example every man shall doe well to make a Catalogue of the sinnes of his whole life. By this meanes shall wee better know our selves, and take a manifest view of our sinfull condition.

In this Catalogue I consider three things: the condition of the workes of the flesh: the kindes of them: and the punishment thereof. The condition is, that the workes of the flesh are said to be manifest, not onely to God, but even to men that have the light of reason, and natural conscience. Hence it follows, that there is a matter sufficient for the condemnation of them, that never knew the Gospell. For though the flesh it selfe be secret and hidden, yet the workes of the flesh are manifest to the naturall man. And this must further admonish us, never to hide or excuse our sinnes, but freely to confesse them before God, and before men also, when need requires.

Whether we confesse them or no, they are manifest, and the ingenuous confessing or uncovering of them, is the way to cover them, Psal. 32.1.4.

Touching the kinds of sorts of the workes of the flesh, they are in number seventeene: and I may reduce them to foure heads. The first sort are against chastity, the second against religion, the third against charity, the last against temperance.

The workes of the flesh against chastitie, are foure: and they are placed in the first ranke for just cause: for by them, men are brought to reprobate minded, Rom 1.28. and to bee without sense or feeling, *Eph.*4.19. and the body which should be the temple of the holy Ghost, is made a stable and a stie for the devill.

Adultery] it is the incontinency of persons married, or of persons whereof one at the least is married, or betrothed. I say betrothed: because one and the same punishment is designed to married and betrothed persons: and therefore the sinne is like in both.

Deut.22.22,23,24.

If adultery, which is the breach of wedlocke, be a worke of the flesh, then damnable is the decree of Pope Syricius, that mariage it selfe was the pollution of the flesh. It may be objected, that young widowes by marying have damnation, and breake the faith of baptisme, 1 Tim. 5.12. Answ. They are not said to breake the faith of baptisme, because they may: but because they waxe wanton against Christ, and to marry: that is, cast off the reines of obedience, by committing fornication, and then for to cover their offence, they marry. This I take to be the right sense of that place.

Adultery is named in the first place, and that for speciall cause. For as it is a common, so it is also a great sinne. For it is the breach of the covenant of mariage, made in the presence of God, and unto God: and therefore it is called the covenant of God, Prov. 2.17. It is the punishment of Idolatry; Rom. 1.24. It is a sinne greater then theft, Prov. 6.30, 32. The committers of this sinne cut off themselves from humane societie, and become men of death, and women of death, according to Gods law. And it will never be well with humane society, till adulterers bee made felons, their lives taken from them, and their goods confiscate. Lastly, this sinne bringeth the ruine of the families of adulterous persons: and it sets a fire in them, that burnes to destruction.

Fornication] it is the incontinency of single persons. Marke how it is made a manifest worke of the flesh. Hence it followes, that fornication is no light matter, or a thing indifferent, as some have taught. It may be objected, that it is numbred among things indifferent, Act. 15.29. for with strangled & blood, is joyned fornication. Answer. The Gentiles indeed esteemed it as a thing indifferent: and here upon it may be, it is joyned with things indifferent. But the judgement of the Church was otherwise: and this opinion of the Gentiles is confuted by Paul, 1 *Cor.*6. Againe, it may be objected, that the Lord commanded the Prophet Ose to take unto him an harlot, Ose 1.2. Ans. It was done in type or figure: and then the words of the Lord carry this sense, Take unto thee a wife of fornication, that is, prophesie and publish, that thou art like one that takes a wife of fornication. Againe, if the thing were done indeed, yet did not the Prophet take an harlot to live in fornication with her, but at Gods commandement, to live with her according to Gods ordinance, namely, in mariage.

Againe, hence I gather, that there is no warrant for the toleration of fornication. For it is a foule and manifest worke of the flesh. Magistrates may not doe evill, that good may come thereof, Rom 3.8. Whosoever doth evill, must feare: because the Magistrate beares the sword to punish, *Rom.*13.4. And the commandement of God was, that *there must be no whore in Israel, Deut.*23. Therefore the permissiō of the Stewes in Rome is without warrant, and the rather, because there the prohibition of mariage (in sundry orders of men) beares sway.

Vncleannesse] the incontinency against nature, as incest, the sinne of Sodome, and such like. Marke, where these sinnes were knowne, there they are named particularly by Paul, as among the Romanes, *Rom.*1.27, 28. and to the Corinthians, 1 *Cor.*6.9,10. but where they are not knowne, as in Galatia, there they are onely mentioned generally, lest by naming of them, he should after a sort teach them.

Wantonnesse] that is, the open profession and ostentation of incontinency: by unchast words, wanton gestures, and wanton apparell. Hence it appeares, that wee are to detest all signes of incontinency: and that we are to be chast, not only in deed, but also in our words, gestures, and behaviours.

The punishment of these sinnes is in verse 21. in these words, They which doe these things shall not inherit the kingdome of God. And it must be remembred, that this threat or curse must be applyed to every one of these sinnes particularly.

The Vse. There are a number of men, that live secretly in these sinnes, adultery, fornication, &c. And because they professe Christian religion, and sometime come to the Church, and to the Lords table, they thinke all is well, and they suppose there is no danger. Thus make they a covenant with hell and death, *Isa.*28. But they deceive themselves: for God is unchangeable, and all his threats shall bee accomplished. And no adulterer, no fornicator, no uncleane person shall enter into the kingdome of God, whatsoever men suppose or dreame.

Secondly,

Secondly, by the consideration of this threat, we are admonished to flye adultery, fornication, wantonnesse, &c. They say, these are but tricks of youth. Belike then it is but a tricke to lose the kingdome of heaven. Salomon saith, *Blessed is the man that feareth, or casteth himselfe to feare, Prov.*28.14. Now that shall be done, when wee terrifie our selves from these offences, by letting Gods judgements before us.

Lastly, some man may say, what shall they doe that are overtaken with these sinnes, if the doers thereof cannot enter into the kingdome of God? Answ. Their case is dangerous: and there is but one way to helpe them in the world, and that is to cease from adultery, fornication, uncleannesse, wantonnesse, and to doe the contrary. Psal. 34.14. And this will doe the deed: for the promise of God is, He that confesseth his sinnes and forsaketh them, shall have mercy, Prov. 28.14. And this promise of God is not contrary to his threat. For so long as men are doers of these sinnes, or any one of them, they are out of Gods kingdome, and when they cease to be doers of them, and contrariwise exercise themselves in the works of chastity, possessing their vessels, that is, their bodies, in sanctification and honour, the case is altered, and they must no more be reputed doers of these sinnes. For God accepts men, not as they have beene, but as they are.

1 Sam. 11.

In that these foure sinnes, Adultery, fornication, &c. are manifest workes of the flesh, we are taught three things. The first is, that we must stocke up the root of these sins, that is, mortifie the passion of concupiscence, Col. 3.5. 1 Thess. 4.5 which is nothing else but an inordinate inclination to these vices. And it is mortified in us, if we learne to feare God in his word, and in the commandement that forbids adultery. For the feare of God cleanseth both heart and life. Joseph tempted by his Mistris to folly, by this meanes eschewed the offence, saying, Shall I doe this, and sinne against God? Further, it must bee remembred, that without holinesse no man can see God, or have fellowship with him, Heb. 12.14. And while the lust of concupiscence beares the sway, there is no holinesse: and therefore no fellowship with God.

The second rule is, that all occasions of these sinnes must bee cut off, two specially, Idlenesse, and the pampering of the body. For Idlenesse, consider David, who when he was out of civill wars, and free from banishment, at peace in his owne house, his wandring affection caried him to commit adultery. And the Israelites when they were stored and pampered with all the blessings of God, gave themselves to the committing of these offences, Iarom. 5.7. 1 *Cor.*10.7. and the people of Sodom and Gomorrha, *Ezec.*16.49.

The third rule is, that all signes of these vices must be avoided and detested, that is, any speech or action, that may signifie or give

A suspition of an inconvenient disposition, as light talke, wanton behaviour, curiositie in fashion and excesse in trimming of the body, suspected company, or company that may in likelihood bee suspected. For it is Gods will, that not only the vice it selfe, but also the appearance of every vice should be avoided, 1 *Thess.*5.22.

Idolatry] The second of sinnes follow, which are against godlinesse: and they are three, Idolatry, Witchcraft, Horesse. Idolatry is the worship of idoll gods. An idoll is taken two wayes. First of all, a fiction, or a thing meerely devised, is an Idoll: against, when we conceive a thing that is, otherwise than it is, it is an Idoll. So likewise Idolatry is twofold. One is, when something that is not God, is set up in the roome of God: and that is done three wayes. One is, when the godhead is ascribed to a creature, as when it was said to Herod, The voice of a god, and not of man. The second is, when any property of the godhead is ascribed to the creature. The third is, when the affections of our hearts are given to the creature. Thus covetousnesse is called Idolatry, Col. 3.5. because it makes men put their affiance in riches.

Acts 12.22.

The second kinde of Idolatry, is to worship the true God with devised worship, as namely with, in, and at images, set up to the honor of God. This Idolatry is forbidden in the second Commandement, as Moses hath expounded the Law, Deut 4.16. Thou sawest no image in the day I appeared in Mount Sinai: therefore thou shalt make no image, namely of God. It is alledged, that the commandement onely forbiddes the making of the images of false gods. I answer, and of the true God also. Aaron calfe was an image of the true God, Exo. 32.5. And it must be observed, that Iehu destroyed the Idols of Baal, 2 Kings 10.26. and withall remained still in the sin of Ieroboam, v.31. which was to worship the calues in Dan and Bethel, which were images of Iehova. And for this he is discommended.

The use. By this we see that the Romish religion is a carnall religion, for it teacheth Idolatry foure wayes. First, it injoyneth men to give to the Consecrated Host the name and honour of God. And thus they set up unto themselves a breaden god made with mans hand. An Idol as abominable as ever was among the Gentiles. Secondly, it teacheth men to invocate Angels, and Saints departed: and thereby it gives unto them the searching of the heart, the hearing and helping of all men, at all times, and places, according to their severall necessities: and these things are the properties of the godhead: and therefore whether they call this invocation, Latria, or Dontia, it matters not: it is flat idolatrie, because the honour of God is given to the creature. Thirdly, it teacheth that wee may put confidence in workes, so it bee done in sobriety. Lastly, it adoreth God, in, at, and before images: and so it bindes the pretence, grace, and operation of God to them, without his word. Papists alledge for themselves, that they intend to worship none in images but the true God. I answer, it is nothing that they say. Not mans intention, but Gods will makes Gods worship. Let them shew Gods will, if they can. If they cannot, then they must know that it is but an Idoll god, which they worship. For there is no such God in nature that will bee worshipped in images, but an Idoll of their owne braines. They alledge againe, that God may as well be worshipped in Images, as a Prince in the chaire of Estate. I answer, the reason is not like. The worship of Images is religious, the reverence to the chaire of Estate, is meerly civill, and in civill respect, and according to the Princes will, and so is not the bowing to Images according to Gods will. Let them prove it if they can. That God was worshipped before the Arke, wee approve of it. For it was his word and will. Let us heare the like word for images of God and Christ, and then we are ready to revoke the charge of idolatry.

Againe, by this we see that many of us are very carnall. For though wee detest outward idolatry, yet the inward idolatry of the heart abounds among us. For looke where the heart is, there is the God. Now the hearts of men are upon the world, and upon the riches, and pleasures thereof. For them we take the most care, and in them we place our chiefe delight, whereas God in Christ should have all the affections of our hearts.

Witchcraft] The word φαρμακεία, properly signifies poysoning, but here it is fitly translated witchcraft: because all poysoning is comprehended under murther which followeth. And the Magitians of Ægypt, Exodus 7. are called φαρμακοὶ in the translation of the Seventy, as also the wise men, Daniel 2. Now if they had bin but poysoners, they had not bin fit for Pharaohs and Nabuchadnezzars turne, neither would they have desired their presence and helpe.

Witchcraft signifies all curious arts, wrought by the operation of the devill. For the better conceiving of it, I will consider two things: The ground thereof, and the kindes of witchcraft.

The ground is a league or compact with the Devill. It is twofold: an expresse or open league, and secret league. The open league is, when men invocate the Devill in expresse words, or otherwise make any manifest covenant with him. The secret league is, when men use meanes, which they know have no force, but by the operation of the Devill. And the very using of such meanes in earnest, is an implicit covenanting with the Devill. If by true faith wee make a covenant with God; then a false faith, in the use of Satanicall ceremonies, makes a covenant with the devill. And without this, there is no practice of witchcraft.

There are three kindes of witchcraft. The first is, Superstitious divination, which serves to tell men their fortunes, or to reveale secrets by the flying of foules, by the intrailes of beasts, by the observation of starres, by consulting with familiar spirits, and such like, Deut. 18. 11. The second is, juggling, which is to worke wonders, or feares, beyond the order of nature, as did the Magitians of Ægypt. The third, is charming or inchanting, which is by the pronouncing of words, to procure speedy hurt, or speedy helpe.

The use. By this we see that we are a carnall people. For in the time of distresse upon extremity, figure-casting, and charming, are over much used. And yet both of them are full of superstition, and folly. For the revealing of things to come is Gods: and the starres are universall causes, working upon all things alike: and therefore it is not possible by them to foresee all events that are contingent, or casuall. And words have no force in them, but to signifie. And therefore when they are applyed to cure diseases, they are abused to a wrong end, and their operation is from the devill. And for this cause they are to be avoided of Christian people. It may be said, how may we discerne of charmes, that we may the better avoyd them? Answ. Keepe this Rule in memory alwayes. Such observations, of whose force and efficacy there is no reason or cause either in the thing done, or in the institution of God, have their operation and efficacy, from some compact and society with the devill. As for example: scratching of the suspected Witch, is said to be a meanes to cure witchcraft: but indeed it is a charme, and a practice of witchcraft. For it hath no such force from the institution of God, because it is against the first Commandement: and no naturall reason can be rendred, why drawing of blood should cure witchcrafte. The action therefore is a sacrifice to the Devill: and in way of recompence, the cure is done by him.

It may be said, What should we doe in distresse, if such helpes may not be used? Answ. We are to use approved & ordinary meanes: and for the rest, namely, the event, to leave it unto God, living by faith, and casting our care on God, and quieting our hearts in his will, whatsoever comes to passe. It is a want of faith thus to make hast for delivery before the appointed time. And whereas it is thought that some persons have the gift of God, by words presently to cure any disease, whereupon they are called wise or cunning men and women, it is false: it is no gift of God, but rather a curse, that leaves them to be deluded by the devill, who is the worker of these cures, when Satanicall and superstitious meanes, and that in a false faith, are used.

For the better conceiving of the sinne, it may be demanded what is a witch? Answ. One that wittingly, and willingly, useth the assistance of the devill himselfe for the revealing of secrets, for the working of some mischiefe, or for the effecting of some strange cure. I say wittingly, to put a difference betweene witches, and some superstitious persons, who use charming, and by it do many cures: perswading themselves, that the words which they use, have force in them, or that God hath given them a gift, to doe strange things. Such people in a naturall honesty, detest all knowne society with the devill; in that respect they are not the witches which the Scripture adjudgeth to death, yet are they at the next doore to them: and therefore they are to bee admonished by Magistrates and Ministers to relinquish their superstitious practices; and that upon a double ground. I. Nothing hath efficacy but by the ordinance of God. And this efficacy was either put into the thing in the creation, or since by some new institution in the word. And the efficacy of things that comes by any other meanes, is by Satanicall operation. II. Charmes, inchantments, and spels whatsoever, have no force, unlesse we beleeve that they can doe us good. Now this faith is a false faith, and the service of the devill. For wee must beleeve nothing, doe nothing, without, or against the word of God. If these two rules be observed, not only charming, but all witchcraft shall be banished out of the world.

Againe, it may be demanded, what are the signes that serve to discover a witch? Answ. This discovery is very hard. For witches doe their feats in close manner, not onely by foule and open cursing, but also by faire speaking, and by praising of things. And hereupon we have a fashion in England, when we praise any thing, withall to blesse it, (as to say, It is a goodly child, God save it,) that our speech may not be suspected of witchcraft. Nevertheless there are five speciall things that serve to discover a witch. One is, the free confession of the accused or suspected witch. The second is, the confession of the associats of the witch. The third is, Invocation of the Devill. For that is to renounce baptisme, and to make a league with the Devill. The fourth is, Evidence, that the party hath entertained a familiar spirit, in the forme or likenesse of some visible creature. The fifth is, Evidence of any action or actions, that necessarily presupposse a league made with the devill. As for example: if the party shew a mans face in a glasse: though he professe angelicall holinesse, hee is in league with the Devill, by whose meanes the feat is wrought.

There are besides these, other signes, but they are either false, or uncertaine. A man is sicke, he suspects that hee is bewitched: hee takes it on his death that such a party hath bewitched him. All this is nothing but the suspition of one man, and therfore no proofe. Likewise the testimony of some wizzard, is but the testimony of one, and it is the devills testimony, and therefore not to bee received.

Againe, neighbours fall out, threatnings are used in anger: after ward, the party threatned, is either sicke, or he dyes; hereupon the party that used threatning words, is accused of witchcraft. And this is the common course. But great circumspection must bee used, for sicknesse and death may arise of many other causes. Lastly, markes in the bodies of men and women, are uncertaine signes of witches. All this I note the rather: because if a judgement befall a man in his family, presently (according to the common fashion) he saith he is hurt by evill tongues, & challengeth some one or other, of witchcraft: whereas his owne ignorance, unbeleefe, contempt of Gods word, and Sacraments, &c. are the onely witches that hurt him, and pull downe Gods judgements upon him.

Heresies] The word heresie generally signifies any opinion, either good or bad. More specially, it signifies any errour in Religion. Thus Ecclesiasticall writers take it. For they condemne for Heretikes such as erred in small points holding the foundation, as Vigilantius, Nouatus, &c. And the very opinion that there are Antipodes, was condemned for heresie, though it be a matter of small moment. Yet most properly, Heresie may bee thus defined: It is an errour in the foundation of Christian Religion, taught and defended with obstinacy. Thus Paul saith, Tit. 3. 11. that an heretike is perverted, that is, put before the foundation: and condemned of himselfe in his sinne, that is to say, he erres obstinately even against his owne conscience.

I say that heresie is an errour in religion, to put a difference betweene an errour in Divinity, and an errour in Philosophy, which is not reatmed heresie: and againe, to put difference betweene schisme, and heresie: for heresie is in doctrine, schisme, in manners, order, regiment. Againe, I say heresie is an errour, in the foundation of Religion, to distinguish it from errours that are in smaller points of Divinitie. Some teach that Abraham was borne the 70. of Terah, some the 130. of Terah: Both cannot be true: yet neither of them are heresie. Some teach that Daniels weekes beginne straight after the reverse out of captivity: others teach that they must beginne 80. yeares after: both cannot be true: yet neither opinion is heresie. So there are sundry opinions touching Ophir, Tarshish (to which Jonah fled) and Decapolis in the Gospell: and all cannot be true: yet they are not heresies, because they concerne onely times, and places, and other circumstances of the Bible. Lastly, I say that heresie is maintained with obstinacy, to distinguish heresie, and a single error. For there are three things in heresie, an errour in the maine doctrine, conviction of the party touching his errour, and obstinacy after conviction.

The use. In that heresie, an errour in the minde or understanding, is made a worke of the flesh: hence it followes, that the word flesh signifies signifies more than sensuality: namely, the corruption of the higher powers, even of the minde and conscience: though Papists teach otherwise.

Againe, if heresie bee a worke of the flesh, our duty is, to detest and eschew heresies: and that we may for ever preserve our selves from them, three rules must be observed.

I. We must propound unto our selves the right Principles of Religion. For as every Art hath his confessed principles, so hath Divinity: The head and chiefe Principle whereof, is this: All Scripture of the Prophets and Apostles, is given by inspiration of God. This is the foundation of all true faith: here is the highest stay and stoppe. This principle is the demonstration of all doctrines, and conclusions; and it hath no principle above it selfe, whereby it is to bee confirmed. As for humane reason, it is no principle of Religion. For it is imperfect and erroneous, and serves onely to make men without excuse. Indeed in the minde of man, there are certaine naturall conclusions that there is a God, and that he is to be worshipped, &c. but the certainty of these, is in the written word. Wee can by reason dispute of the creation of the world, but a full certainty we have not by reason, but by faith in the word, Heb. 11.3. Againe, the Papist makes the authority of the Church a principle. For that is the first ground which they lay downe, that we must captivate our sences to the authority of the Church. But this is no principle in religion. For we cannot imagine a Church without faith: and faith cannot be without the word of God. It may be said, that Scripture is the sense of the written word: and this sense must bee from the Church. Answer. Scripture it selfe is both the glosse, and the text. Scripture is the best interpreter of it selfe. And the sense which is agreeable to the words of the text, to the scope of the place, to other circumstances, and to the analogy of faith, in the plainer places of Scripture, is the proper and infallible sense of Scripture. Thus fetching the senses of Scripture from it selfe, wee shall keepe our selves within the limits of Scripture, and in the matter of our salvation have certainty of faith, which we shall never have, if we listen to reason, tradition, and the authority of men.

II. Reade the Scriptures: and bee a doer of them in the exercises of invocation, faith, repentance, then shalt thou never be a heretike. It is Gods promise, John 7.17. If ye will obey, ye shall know whether my doctrine be of God or no. Psal. 25. 14. The secret of the Lord is revealed to them that feare him. Marke them that make apostasie, and become Papists: they are such as never had a minde to love and obey the religion, in which they have beene baptized and brought up.

III. Col. 2.8. Let no man spoile you through Philosophy. Paul doth not condemne the Philosophy of the Gentiles, but he puts a caveat, that it be used with circumspection, as Merchants use the sea, to wit, in eschewing rocks, and sands, and pyrates. So Students may use the Philosophy of the Gentiles, but they must take heed, lest their minds be corrupted with the errours thereof, which are to be considered. Naturall Philosophy gives too much to nature, or to second causes; and too little to God. It puts downe principles flat against the word, as the eternity of the world, and the mortality of the soule. Morall Philosophy placeth happinesse in civill vertue out of Christ: it teacheth, that vertue is a meane or mediocrity of affection, whereas in true vertue there is not onely restraint or moderation of affections, but also the renovation of them by regeneration. It teacheth that urbanity in jesting and frumping, is a vertue; Paul saith no, Eph. 5. 4. It teacheth that Magnanimity, whereby a man thinkes himselfe worthy of great honour, is a vertue: but it is contrary to Christian humility, Psal. 13. 11. 2. Lastly, it teacheth that man hath a freedome of will in good actions: which doctrine apply'ed by the Schoolemen to matters of religion, is false and erroneous.

The third head of sinnes are such as are against Charity, and they are in number eight.

The first is Enmity: of it I consider three things. The first is, whether it be a sinne, or no? for somewhat may be objected to the contrary.

Object. I. Psal. 139. 21. Doe not I hate them that hate thee? Answ. David here speaks of the hatred, whereby he hated Gods enemies, not in respect of their persons, but in respect of their sinnes, whereby they were enemies of God. And this hatred is commendable, and not here to be understood.

Object. II. Luke 14.26. He that will be a disciple of Christ, must hate father, and mother, and his owne soule. Answer. This hatred is not simply commanded, but onely in a certaine respect, namely, as father, and mother, and a mans owne soule, are in comparison opposed to God, and Christ, in regard of whom they are utterly to be despised.

Object. III. Rom. 9 13. God chose Iacob, and hated Esau: and we must bee like unto God. Ans. We are to be like unto God in holinesse and the duties thereof, and not in the Soveraignty and Lordship over the creatures, whereby he either loves or hates them.

Object IV. It is the universall nature of all creatures to flee their contrary: therefore men may hate their enemies. Answ. Man and man are not contrary in nature, or naturall properties, but are all one flesh; the contrariety that is, is by reason of the corruption of nature.

The second point is, what is this Enmity? Answ. It is a perverse disposition of minde, whereby men remember injuries, discourtesies, and unkindnesses, and cary about them a purpose, and desire to doe like for like, when which time and place shall serve. Thus did Esau hate Iacob, Gen. 27. 41. and Absolom his brother Amnon, 2. Sam. 13.

The third point, where is this Enmity? Ans. Every where among us. For we daily see person divided against person, family against family, and corporation against corporation. This shewes that wee are carnall: and that Gods kingdome takes no place among us as it should. For in it the lambe and the wolfe dwell quietly together, Isa. 11. The remedy of this enmity is, that all be of one mind, desire, and affection, in the receiving and furthering of the Gospell of Christ, 1 Cor. 1.11. If in the maine point there bee a concord, in lesser matters the agreement will be easie.

Debate] It is a contention in words, whereby men strive, who shall shew most courage, who shall get the victory, and who shall carie away the last word, no respect had of equity, or truth. In this respect, crying, or lifting up the voice, in reasoning, is condemned, Eph. 4.31.

Emulation] There is a good emulation, and that is when men strive to bee like to them that excell in vertue, or goe beyond them. And it is commanded by the Holy Ghost, 1 Cor. 14.12. and it were to be wished that it were more common than it is. Beside this, there is a carnall emulation, whereby men that excell in any thing, grieve that any should be equall to them, or goe beyond them.

The use. If to grieve at anothers mans excellency, be a worke of the flesh, then it is our duty to reioyce in the excellency of others. Thus did Moses when Eldad and Medad prophecied, Numb. 11.29. And Iohn the Baptist, when Christ increased, and he decreased, Iohn 3. 29.30. And Paul gave thankes as well for the graces bestowed on the Churches, as for gifts bestowed on himselfe.

Anger] Of it I consider three points. The first is, whether there bee any lawfull anger? Answ. Yea: Christ (in whom was no sin) was angry, Marke 3.5. When there is a just cause of anger, then is anger just. When there is a manifest offence of God, there is a just cause of anger: therefore anger is then just.

The second is, when is anger a sinne? Ans. When men are hasty to bee angry, Eccles. 7. 11. and are offended at every thing that goes against their mindes. Or againe, having a just cause to be angry, yet they keepe no measure in their anger.

The third point is, the Remedy. And that is here set downe. Hastinesse is a worke of the flesh, or of corrupt nature, and it barres men from the kingdome of heaven: and therefore it is to be avoided.

Contention] There are sundry kindes of lawfull contention, as contention with the enemy in just warre: contention at the barre with an adversary in a just cause: contention in disputation with an heretike: contention in Schoole disputation for exercise and trials sake.

Contention is carnall, and sinfull, in respect of matter, and manner. In matter, when men contend for things, for which they should not contend, as the Disciples for primacy, Luke 22. or when contention is without forgiving, forbearing, ut supra; and that in trifling matters, 1 Cor. 6.7. Contention likewise is faulty, in respect of maner, when men wilfully defend their owne private causes, no regard had, whether they be right or wrong, true or false: and by this meanes they often oppugne truth, or justice, or both. Of this kinde are the warres of the Rebels in Ireland: the warres of the Spaniard in the Low-countries: and the suits of many quarrelsome and contentious persons among us.

The use. Doe nothing by contention, Phil. 2.2. And therefore wee must forgive, put up, as much as may be, and yeeld of our right.

Sedition] The originall word signifies such dissentions in which men separate one from another: and that is done two wayes, either by schisme in the Church, or by faction in the Common-wealth.

Quest. Why are not wee schismatikes in England, Scotland, Germany, considering wee have dissenting and separated our selves from the Church of Rome? Answ. We indeed have separated our selves, but they of the Church of Rome are schismatikes: because the cause of our separation is in them: namely, their idolatry, and their manifold heresies. The case is the like: A man threatens death to his wife: hereupon shee separates. Yet not she, but he makes the separation: because the cause of separation, and the fault, is in him.

For the avoyding of schisme and sedition, remember two rules. I. So long as a Church, or people, doe not separate from Christ, wee may not separate from them. II. Prov. 24.21. Feare the King, and meddle not with them that varie, that is, make alterations against the lawes of God, and the King. Indeed subjects may signifie what is good for the State, and what is amisse: but to make any alteration in the state, either civill, or ecclesiasticall, belongs to the supreme Magistrate.

Envy] It is a compound of carnall griefe and hatred. For it makes men grieve and repine at the good things of others, and to hate the good things themselves. Thus the High Priests of envy hated Christ, and all his most excellent sayings and doings, Matth. 27. 18. At this day, they which have any good things in them, are commonly condemned for hypocrites, and their Religion for hypocrisie. All this is but the censure of envy.

The use. That wee may depart from Envie, wee must love them that feare God: and love the gifts and graces of God wheresoever they be: even in our enemies.

Murtherers] Objection. I. A plane lives, a beast lives, and man lives: the cropping of a plant, plant, and the killing of a beast, is no sinne: why is it then a sinne to kill a man? Answer. God hath given liberty for the two first, and hath restrained us in the latter: so goeine, the life of a plant is but the vigour in the iuice, and the life of a beast is but the vigour in the blood, Gen. 9. 4. but the life of man is in spirit and spirituall substance. Thirdly, man is of the same flesh with man, and so is neither plant, nor beast.

Hypocrite.

Obiect. II. The Magistrate kills without sinne. Ans. The killing which is in the name of God by publike revenge, is not murther. And Paul onely condemnes that killing, when men rake the sword, and upon their owne wills slay and kill by private offence.

Obiect. III. Sampson is said to kill himselfe, Iudges 16. 30. and hee sinned not in so doing. Answer. Sampson was a Iudge in Israel, and tooke publike revenge of his enemies: and in this revenge hee hazarded his life, and lost his life. Though he died in the execution, yet his intent was not to kill himselfe, but onely to take revenge. Secondly, his example is speciall. For he was in his death a figure of Christ. The words, Matth. 2. He shall be called a Nazarite, are first spoken of Sampson, and then applyed to Christ, in whom was verified that which Sampson figured. For as Sampson conquered his enemies more in his death, than in his life: even so did Christ.

Obiect. IV. For the avoyding of some great danger, or some great sinne, as the denyall of Christ in persecution, men may make away themselves: so said the Donatists. Ans. Death is no remedy in this case, but faith in the promise of God: which is, that he will give an issue in every temptation, 1 Cor. 10. 13.

The vse. Seeing murther is a worke of the flesh: our duty is by all meanes to preserve both our owne and our neighbours lives. Life is a treasure. For by it we have time and liberty to glorifie God, to doe good to our neighbours, and to save our owne soules.

The sinnes of the fourth sort, are against temperance: and they are two; drunkennesse, gluttony. For the better conceiving of the nature of these sinnes, we are first of all to consider the right manner and measure of eating and drinking, of which I deliver two rules. I. We may use meat and drinke, not onely for necessity, but also for delight, Psal. 104. 15. II. That measure of meat and drinke, which in our experience makes us fit both in body and mind for the service of God, and for the duties of our callings, that measure (I say) is fit, convenient, and lawfull. This is a confessed principle in the light of nature.

Drunkennesse then is, when men drinke either in wine or strong drinke, beyond this measure: so as there followes an intoxication of the powers of the soule. And in the sinne there are two things: excessive drinking, and the distempering of the powers of the soule.

Gluttony is, when men in eating, goe beyond the measure before prescribed. This gluttonny is that, which now adayes is called revelling, vioting, swaggering. And it is fitly ioyned with drunkennesse. For there are men that use to drinke exceedingly, and will not be drunke: and for all this, they are not free from blame: because they drinke out of measure. To be given to drinking, and to love to sit by the cup, when there is no drunkennes, is a sinne, 1 Tim. 3. 3.

These sinnes are said to berise among us. The manner of many is, to meet together, and to fill themselves with wine or strong drinke, while their skinnes will hold. Afterward they give themselves to dicing, cardings, dancing, singing of ribauld songs: and thus they passe the day, the night, the weeke, the yeare.

But we must be put in mind, to detest and to fly these vices. Inducements to this duty are many.

I. Gods Commandement, keepe not company with drunkards and glutronous persons, Pro. 23. 20. Be not drunke with wine, in which is excesse, Eph. 5. 18.

II. The punishment of drunkennesse, is plague, pestilence, famine, captivity, Isa. 5. 11, 12, 13.

III. The example of the bruit beast, that in eating and drinking, keepes measure, and takes no more than will suffice nature. The horse and the asse may bee Schoolmasters to many of us.

IV. If we cannot forsake a cup of wine, or beere, which is not needfull for us, we shal never be able to forsake wife and children, house and land, for Christs sake. If we have not the command of our selves in a trifle, we may never hope for it in waighty matters.

V. There are dangerous effects of drunkennesse. First, it destroyes the body. For it inflames the blood with an unnaturall heat: and this unnaturall heat ingenders unnaturall thirst, which ingenders immoderate drinking, whence comes dropsies, consumptions, all cold diseases, and death. Secondly, it hurts the minde: for the spirits of the heart and braine (being the immediate instruments of the soule) are by drinking distempered and inflamed: and hereupon arise wicked imaginations, and disordered affections. And thus the devill in the roome of Gods image, sets up his owne image, and makes the minde a shop of all wickednesse. Thirdly, the vile imaginations and affections that are in men when they are drunke, remaine still in them when they are sober: so as being sober they are drunke in affection.

In favour of drunkennesse, it is alledged, that Noahs drunkennesse is remembred in Scripture, but no where condemned. Answer. While Moses sets downe the soule effects that followed Noahs drunkennesse, he doth indeed condemne it. Secondly, his example is noted in Scripture: as a warning to all ages following.

following. Thirdly, this sinne may be lessened, though not excused, because hee had no experience of wine.

Obiect. II. Ioseph and his brethren, did drinke and were drunke together, Gen. 43. verse last. Answ. The meaning of the text is, that they did drinke liberally, or that they dranke of the best together. For the word (dadar) signifies not onely to be drunke in drinking, but also to drinke liberally, or to drinke of the best drinke, Hag. 1. 6.

Obiect. III. Learned Physitians, as Rasis, Auicenna, and others teach, that it is greatly for health, to bee drunke once or twice in a moneth. Ans. As learned as they, teach the contrary. And we may not doe any evill, or sinne against God, for any good to our selves.

Obiect. IV. It is said to bee neighbourhood and good fellowship. Answ. It is drunken fellowship. The right fellowship is in the doctrine of the Apostles, Prayer, Sacraments, and the workes of mercy.

Thus much of the workes of the flesh. Now followes the punishment of them, of which I consider three things. First, a Premonition, in these words, whereof I tolt you before, as I also have told you before. Secondly, the designment of the punishment, in these words, shall not inherit the kingdome of God. Thirdly, the designment of the persons, in these words, They which doe such things.

In the premonition is set downe the office of all ministers: and that is, often to forewarne the people of the future judgements of God for their sinnes, Mich. 3. 8. Isa. 58. 1. And this may easily be done. For they may know the sinnes of men by experience, and the judgements of God due to every sinne, they may finde in the word of God.

Againe, all people are warned by this, often to meditate of the future judgements of God. Thus did David, Psalme 119 120. and Paul, who knowing the terrour of the Lord, was moved to doe this durie, 2 Cor. 5. 11. The old world never so much as dreamed of Gods judgements, before they came upon them, and so they perished. Matth. 24. 39.

The punishment of these sinnes is, not to inherit Gods kingdome. Gods kingdome sometime signifies the regiment of God, whereby he rules all things, in heaven and earth. More specially, it signifies a state or condition in heaven, whereby God and Christ is all things to all the Elect, 1 Cor. 15. 28. And thus it is taken in this place. And an entrance or beginning to this happy estate, is in this life, when men in their consciences and lives are ruled by Gods Word, and Spirit. It must here further be observed, that not to enjoy the kingdome of God, is to be in torment, in hell: because there are no more but two estates after this life: and therefore to bee out of heaven, is to be in hell.

The Vse. I. This must teach us above all things to seeke Gods kingdome, and to establish it in our hearts: and that we shall doe, if we know the will of God, and yeeld subjection to it, in the duties of repentance, faith, new obedience.

II. The kingdome of God comes by inheritance; therefore there is no merit of good workes.

The persons which are punished, are such as are doers, and practisers of the workes of the flesh. Marke the words, not such as have beene doers, but such as are doers. The word signifies a present and a continued act of doing amisse.

The Vse. Here is the difference betweene the godly man, and the ungodly. The godly man falls into the workes of the flesh, and being admonished thereof, he repents and recovers himselfe, he doth not stand in the way of sinners, though sometime he enter into it, Psal. 1. 1. The ungodly man, when he fals, lies still in his sinne, and heapes sinne unto sinne, and makes a practice of evill.

I. Warning. They which are privie to themselves of any of the former workes of the flesh, must bewaile their offences, and utterly forsake them. For if we bee found doers of any one worke of the flesh, there is no hope of salvation.

II. Warning. They which have turned unto God from the workes of the flesh, must be constant, and take heed of going backe, lest they lose the kingdome of God.

22. But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentlenesse, goodnesse, faith.

23. Meeknesse, temperance: against such there is no law.

For the better observing, and the more easie understanding of the rule in the 16. vers. Walke in the Spirit. Paul here sets downe a Catalogue of the workes of the Spirit. In the Catalogue I consider three things. The propertie of the workes of the Spirit, in these words, The fruit of the Spirit: the kindes of workes, and they are nine: the benefit that comes by them, in these words, Against such there is no law.

The fruit of the Spirit] It is the propertie of the workes of Gods Spirit in us, to bee called the fruits of the Spirit. And by this much is signified: namely, that the Church is the garden of God, Cant. 4. 16. that teachers are planters and setters, 1 Cor. 3. 9. that beleevers are trees of righteousnesse, Isa. 61. 3. that the Spirit of God is the sappe and life of them: and good workes and vertues, are the fruits which they beare.

In that the workes of the Spirit, are called fruits thereof, hence it followes, that there are no true vertues, & good affections, without the grace of regeneration. The vertues of the heathen, how excellent so ever they seemed to be, were but shadowes of vertue, and served onely to restraine the outward man, and no other.

Againe, here wee see the efficacie of the Spirit, which makes men fruitfull or bearing trees of righteousnesse, Psal. 1. 3. yea, trees that beare fruit in their old age, Psal. 92. 14. Here we have cause to cast downe our selves. For the most of us are barren trees, that beare no fruit, but the bad fruits of the flesh; and therefore we may justly feare the curse that God laid upon the fig-tree, Luke 13. 7. and looke every day to be stocked up, Matth. 3. 10.

Againe, good workes are made acceptable to God even by his grace, and therefore they are called the fruits of the Spirit: and hence it is, that they are acceptable to God, Rom. 15. 16. We that are by nature wild branches, must be taken out of old Adam, and set into Christ: and after our insition draw a new sap and life from Christ, namely his Spirit, and then our actions shall be fruits of the Spirit, and consequently acceptable to God.

Lastly, hence it followes, that free-will of it selfe is like a dead or rotten piece of wood, and that it beares no fruit, but as it is quickened by the Spirit, Iohn 15. 5.

Thus much of the property: now follow the kindes of the workes of the Spirit.

Love] It may be demanded, how it is a fruit of the Spirit? Answ. First, the Spirit God workes faith, then regeneration, then love, 1 Tim. 1. 5. Love followes faith, because wee must know first that wee are loved of God, before we can love God, 1 Iohn 4. 19. And love followes regeneration: because till the will and affection bee changed, there is no place for love. The Papists then erre, who teach, that the first act of love, that is, the inclination to love God and man aright, is in nature: and that the second act, namely, the exercise of love is from the Spirit. Again, they erre in that they teach, that charity or love is the formall righteousnesse of a Christian. For it is a fruite that followes regeneration.

The love here mentioned, is either of God or of man. The love of God is an holy affection whereby wee love God in Christ for himselfe. There are three speciall signes, whereby it is discerned. I. A desire of fellowship with God, and Christ, and the holy Spirit; and therefore to be much and frequent in the use of the word and prayer; because in the word God speakes to us, and in prayer wee speake to him. II. To love the word of God above all earthly treasure: and to tread our owne wils under foot, and to desire that Gods will may be preferred in all things, 1 Iohn. 2. 5. There are many houses among us, where the cards and tables are walking, but the Bible is seldome or never seene. And this argues the want of love. III. The love of them that love God and Christ.

The love of our neighbour, is to love him simply, in, and for the Lord, and for no other by-respect. The signe of this love is, to love not in word, but in deed. And this is to love in deed, to shew love, and to doe good (when we are wronged and abused) to them that wrong us and abuse us.

Ioy] Ioy is two fold; joy of glory after this life, and the joy of grace in this life: and it stands in three things. The first is, to rejoyce in the true acknowledgement of God, that he is our God, and reconciled to us in Christ. The second is, to rejoyce in the worke of our regeneration. The third is, to rejoyce in the hope of eternall glory.

This joy of grace hath a double fruit. First, it moderates all our sorrowes, and makes us rejoyce in the midst of our afflictions, 1 Thess. 5. 16. Secondly, it causeth men to rejoyce at the good of their neighbours, Romanes 12. 15. And this joy is here meant specially. For joy is here opposed to envy and emulation.

This fruit shewes, that we are most of us bad trees. For the joyes of the world be for the most part in iniquity, and in the workes of the flesh. And it is our common sinne not to rejoyce, but to pine away with griefe, as Cain did, when wee see Gods blessing upon our brother.

Peace] It is a care and desire to maintaine concord, as much as may be, if it lye in us, Rom. 12. 18. It is an excellent vertue. For the kingdome of God stands partly in peace, Rom. 14. 17. For the maintenance of peace, observe two rules. I. Neither take offence, nor give offence. Abraham chose rather to lose his sight, than to offend Lot, Genesis 14. and so did Christ, Matth 17. 27. II. Seeke to edifie one another, either doe good, or take good, Rom. 14 19.

Long suffering] is to moderate our anger, and desire of revenge, when manie and great wrongs are done by us. It is an excellent fruit, but it takes very hardly in these parts. For our manner is, a word and a blow: a word and a flabbe: a word, and a writte.

Set and sowe this plant in the furrowes of your hearts, and that the weed of revenge overgrow it not, use these remedies: I. Gods commandement forbids rash anger, Iames 1. 19. for it is a degree of murder. II. The example of God, who is slow to anger: and of Christ, who is meeke and lowly, Matth. 11. III. All wrongs done to us by men, come by Gods providence, to which wee are to subject our selves. IV. The goodnesse of God, who forgives more to us, than wee can forgive. V. There is danger of Gods anger. For unlesse we forgive, wee are not forgiven. And wee crave forgivenesse, as we forgive. VI. It is the duty of love to suffer and beare, 1 Cor. 13. VII. It is a point of injustice, to revenge our selves, for then wee take to our selves the honour of God; and against all equity, we are both the parties, and judge, and witnesse, and all. VIII. We are often ignorant of the mindes of men, in their actions, and of the true circumstances thereof: and so may easily be deceived.

Obiect. I. Anger is a sudden affection; therefore it cannot be ruled. Anf. Meanes are to be used used before-hand, when wee are quiet: then shall we better restraine it.

Obiect. II. It is hard for flesh and blood to doe this. Answ. Wee are more than flesh and blood, For we have the Spirit of God, else we are but hypocrites.

Gentlenesse] Gentlenesse is to give good speech, and to shew good countenances, even to them that wrong us, and abuse us, without any minde, or desire to revenge, Rom. 12. 14. Eph. 4. 32.

The curtesie of the world, in the cap and the knee, and all the complements of humanitie, is commonly severed from good affection: and it is often the maske of enmity; and therefore it is but a worke of the flesh. Right curtesie is with an honest heart, to blesse when we are wronged.

Goodnesse] It is a vertue, whereby wee communicate to others, the good things that are in us, for their good and benefit. It is prescribed by Paul in other tearmes, when he saith, Communicating to the necessities of the Saints, Rom. 12. 13.

Question I. What are wee to communicate? Answer. The gifts of our minde, our temporall goods, yea, our lives too, if need be, 1 Iohn 3. 16.

Question II. Why are we so to doe? Ans. We are members all of one body; and wee are members one of another, Eph. 4. 25. And it is Gods pleasure, that men shall bee instruments of good mutually one to another.

Goodnesse respects either the bodie, or the minde. Goodnesse concerning the body, hath many actions: as to feede the hungry, to give drinke to the thirsty, to harbour the harbourlesse, to cloath the naked, to visit the sicke, and them that are in prison, Matth. 25. 35, 36. to bury the dead, 2 Sam. 21. Lastly, to lend freely and liberally to such as be decaied and impoverished, Deut. 15. verse 7.

Goodnesse concerning the soule, is to endeavour, partly by counsell, and partly by example, to gaine the soule of our neighbour to God: and it stands in foure actions: to admonish the untruly, to comfort the distressed, to beare with them that are weake, and to be patient towards all, 1 Thess. 5. 14.

Goodnesse is hard to bee found in these dayes among men. The common practice is according to the common proverbe, Every man for himselfe, and God for us all. The study of men is, how to gather goods, honour, riches, for themselves, and for their children: and the common good is not aymed at. Good orders hardly take places, as namely, the order for the poore; and the reason is, the want of goodnesse in us. If any professe any shew of goodnesse more than the rest, they are sure to be despised and reproached at: every hand is against them. Faith] First, we are here to understand faith towards God, which is to beleeve the remission of our sinnes, and our reconciliation with God in Christ.

This faith is common to all among us: yet is it but a false, dead, and ceremoniall faith in many men. Reason I. Faith comes by the hearing of the word of God preached, Rom. 10. 14. but this faith in many is conceived without preaching: for they say they beleeve their salvation by Christ, and withall they live in the perpetuall neglect or contempt of the publike ministery. II. True faith is joyned alwayes with the exercises of invocation, and repentance: yet in many among us, this faith is without any conversion or change of heart and life: & therefore is but a dead faith. III. True faith is mixed with contrary unbelieve, so as they that beleeve, feele in themselves a want of faith, and much unbelieve. But there are many among us that say, they perfectly beleeve, & that they never so much as doubted in all their lives. Now such a faith is a vaine perswasion. IV. Many that boast of their faith in Christ, want faith in the providence of God, touching food and raiment. And that is manifest, because they use any unlawfull meanes to helpe themselves: now if their faith faile them in a smaller point, it cannot be found in the greatest of all.

Secondly, by faith is meant faith towards men, and that stands in two things. One is, to speake the truth from the heart: the other is, to bee faithfull and just in the keeping of our honest promise and word.

This faith is a rare vertue in these dayes. For the common fashion of them that live by bargaining, is, to use gloseing, facing, soothing, lying, dissembling, and all manner of shifts. And with many it is a confessed principle, that there is no living in the world, unlesse we lie and dissemble. They that deale with chapmen, shall hardly know what is truth, they have so many words, and so many shifts. In this respect Christians come short of the Turkes, who are said to bee equall, open, and plain-dealing men, without fraud or deceit.

Our care therefore must be to cherish, and maintaine among us, the vertue of faith and truth. Reasons. I. Gods commandement, Put away lying, and let every man speake the truth to his neighbor, Eph. 4. 15. II. By truth we are like to God, whose wayes are all truth; who hates a lying tongue, Prov. 6. 17. whose Spirit is the Spirit of truth. III. Lyars beare the Image of the devill. He is the father of lyes, Iohn 8. 44. so of them as thou liest, thou makest thy tongue the instrument of the devill. IV. Eternall punishment is the lake that burnes with fire and brimstone, Rev. 22. 15. Here marke, that lyars are entertained at the same table with murderers and sheeves; and the lyar never goes unpunished, Prov. 19. 5. V. To speake the truth from the heart, is a marke of Gods childe, Psal. 15. 2. And hee whose faith failes toward men, shall much more faile toward God.

Meekenesse] The same in effect with long suffering. The difference is, that meeknesse is more generall, & long-suffering is the highest degree of meeknesse.

Temperance] It is the moderation of lust and appetite, in the use of the gifts, and creatures of God. For the better practising of this vertue, remember these foure rules:

I. We must use moderation in meates and drinkes. This moderation is to eate and drink with perpetuall abstinence. And abstinence is to take lesse then that which nature desires, and not more. And that measure of meate and drinke, which serves to refresh nature, & to make us fit for the service of God and man, is allowed us of God, and no more.

II. Wee must use moderation in our apparell. And that is to apparell our selves according to our sexe, according to the received fashion of our country, according to our ability. Here the common fault is, to bee out of all order: for none almost know any measure. Every meane person now adayes will bee a gentleman or gentlewoman.

III. Wee must use moderation in getting of goods: and that is, to rest content, if wee have food and raiment for our selves, and them that belong unto us, 1 *Tim.*6.8. Here is our stint, we may not desire to be rich, vers.9. The King himselfe must not multiply his gold and silver, *Dent.*17.17 and yet hath he more needs of gold and silver, than any private man.

IV. There must be a moderation in the spending of our goods: contrary to the fashion of many that spend their substance in feasting and company, and keepe their wives and children bare at home.

Against such there is no law] Here Paul sets downe the benefit that comes by the former vertues. The words carry this sense: Against such vertues, and against persons indued with such vertues, there is no law. And that for two causes. One, there is no law to condemne such. Secondly, there is no law to compell them to obey: because they freely obey God, as if there were no law.

Make then the condition of spirituall men. They are voluntary and free people, serving God freely, without constraint. So as if Christ would not give unto them life everlasting, yet would they love him, and desire the advancement of his kingdome. On the contrary, if there were no hell, and God would not punish adultery, drunkennes, blasphemy, &c. with eternall death, yet would a Christian man abstaine from these things: because he knowes that they displease Christ, and hee is governed with another spirit, to which they are contrary.

Also these words are a reason of vers.16. There is no law against them that doe these things, therefore walke in the spirit.

24. For they that are Christs, have crucified the flesh, with affections and lusts.

The scope. In these words Paul proves that which he said immediately before, namely, that there is no law against spirituall men. And of this hee gives a double reason. One is, spirituall men are Christs: therefore there is no law against them. The second is this, That is crucified in spirituall men, which the law condemneth, namely, the flesh, with the affections and lusts: therefore there is no law to condemne the spirituall man.

In the words I consider three points. The first is: What is a Christian? Ans. A Christian is one that is Christs, (saith Paul:) And he is Christs five wayes. I. By the right of creation. And so are all men. II. By right of redemption, 1 *Corinth.*6.19. III. By the free gift and donation of God the Father, John 17.11. this donation is begun in the eternall election of God, and it is accomplished in our effectuall vocation. IV. By propagation. For all true beleevers spring out of the blood of Christ: and are of his bone, and of his flesh, as Eve was of the bone and flesh of Adam. V. By our donation in baptisme, in which we consecrate our selves to God and to Christ.

The Vse. This must teach us to resigne our selves to Christ, and to suffer him to raigne in our hearts, and to take the yoake of the Gospell upon us. But alas, it is far otherwise with many of us. For some live in the transgression of the very law of nature, so far are they from observing the Gospell. Others think it sufficient to follow the teaching of nature. If they worship God in some generall manner, if they live peaceably, and hurt no man, and meane well (as they say) then all is well: and the doing of further duties, is reputed curious preciensesse. And such persons finally reduce religion to the practice of nature. They will be saved by faith: but their faith is nothing else but fidelitie. They say they worship God, but this worship is nothing else, but their good meaning, and their good dealing. These men are content that Christ shall bee theirs: but they will not be Christs, and suffer him to have a Lordship over them.

II. If thou be Christs, then commend thy soule, and life, and all that thou hast into the hands of Christ. This was the practice of David, *Psal.*23. of Christ upon the crosse of Paul 2 *Tim.*1.12. And this practice is the onely way to obtaine safetie and protection. For Christ no doubt will keepe his owne.

III. Comfort: if thou be Christs, hee will care for thee, and nothing shall be wanting unto thee, that is for thy good, John 21.24. Rom. 8.32. Therefore remember this lesson. Never grieve overmuch, never feare overmuch, never rejoyce overmuch in the things of this world. If thou wert no other thing in the disposing and finding, it were somewhat: but there is one that cares for thee, namely Christ.

The

The second point to bee considered, is, what is the flesh? Ans. It is the corruption of the whole nature of man. For the right conceiving of this, wee must make a distinction of three things: Mans nature, the faculties of nature, and the corruption of both; which corruption hath two parts: the losse of the Image of God, and a pronenesse to all wickednesse. Moreover, this distinction must bee without separation of nature from faculties, or of corruption from either: so as wee may say truly, that the nature, and the powers of the soule of man are corrupted.

In the flesh are two things. Affections, and Lusts. By affections, understand inordinate affections, which shew themselves, and beare sway in carnall men, as anger in Cain, love of pleasures more than of God, in the men of the last times, 2 Tim. 3. 3. immoderate sorrow in Ahab, when he could not obtaine Naboths Vineyard, 1 *King.*21.4.

Lusts are inordinate and insatiable desires after the things of this world, as riches, honours, pleasures, &c. of this sort are covetousnesse, gluttony, pride, the lust of the flesh, &c.

The Vse. By this we see what a carnall man is, namely, one that is carried away with some inordinate affection, or some inordinate lust. Herod did many good things at the advice and motion of John Baptist, whom he reverenced: yet was he a carnall man. For hee was possessed with an inordinate love of his brothers wife. Iudas a disciple of Christ, yet a carnall man, because hee was carried away with the inordinate lust of covetousnesse.

The third point is touching the office of a Christian man; and that is to crucifie the flesh, with the affections and lusts. For the better conceiving of this, Crucifying must be distinguished, it is either the action of Christ, or our action. Crucifying, which is the action of Christ, is threefold. The first is, upon the Crosse, where Christ stood in our roome, and bare the burden of our sinnes, and made an Expiation of them. In this respect we are said to be crucified with him, Gal. 2.19. The second is, in us: when Christ conveies the vertue of his death into the hearts of them that are joyned to him, for the causing and effecting of the death of sinne. The third is, in baptisme, whereby Christ seales the two former to them that beleeve, *Rom.*6.3 6.

The crucifying, which is our action, is nothing else but the imitation of Christ crucified, on this manner. He was first attached: so must we bring our selves into the presence of God. He was arraigned: so must we set our selves at the barre of Gods judgment. He was accused: so must we indite & accuse our selves of our owne sins, at the barre of Gods judgement. He was condemned: and so must wee judge our selves, that we be not judged of the Lord. After judgement, wee must proceed to execution of the flesh: & that is, to use meanes to crucifie it: and they are three. The first is, by faith to apply to our selves Christ crucified: and that is to beleeve not only that Christ was crucified for us, but that wee also were crucified with him. Where this faith is one shall no more have dominion. The second is to beate downe the flesh by the Word of the spirit: and that is done by a serious application of the commandements, and the threatnings of God to our severall affections and lusts. The third is, to flie the occasions of every sin, and to cut off the first beginnings of evill.

The Vse. This doctrine serves to condemne the drowsie Protestants of our time, who professe Christ without making any change in life and conversation. For they are Saints in the Church, but in their common dealings they are worldlings.

II. Secondly, they are here reproved, that have many good gifts of God in them, and yet never proceed to a thorow reformation. For they use to cherish in themselves naughty affections, and damnable lusts. There is some one sweet sinne or other, that they cannot abide to crucifie.

III. They also are to be blamed that cannot abide to heare their owne particular sins, to be noted, and reproved. They are unmortified and unmortified persons. And the word of God is the sword of the spirit that serves to kill and destroy the flesh.

IV. In afflictions be content, and quiet. For we ought to crucifie the affections, and lusts of the flesh: and because we faile in this duty, therefore God himselfe takes the worke in hand; and he will crucifie our corruption by his chastisements.

Further, of this duty of crucifying the flesh, there are three points to bee considered. I. The time when this action must begin; namely, in our baptisme or first conversion. Therefore Paul saith, they that are Christs, have crucified, &c. II. What must be crucified? Ans. The whole flesh, with every inordinate affection and lust. This makes against them that flie and detest some few sinnes, and run headlong into others. III. What is crucifying? Ans. In it are two things, the restraint of the exercise of sinne, (which is in part in civill men,) and the killing of originall corruption, in all the parts and branches thereof. And that is done when wee doe not onely mourne for our corruptions, but also hate and detest them in our selves.

25. If we live in the Spirit, let us also walke in the Spirit.

In these words is contained the last reason of the rule of good life before mentioned, in the 16. vers. For the understanding whereof, two things are to be considered, what it is to live in the Spirit? and what to walke in the Spirit? Touching the first. Life is two-fold: created, or uncreated. Uncreated life, is the life of God. Created is that which pertaines to the Creature. And this is either naturall, or spirispirituall. Naturall life, is lead by naturall causes and meanes, as by meate, drinke, cloathing, breathing and such like Spirituall life, is by, and from the Spirit. Of this there bee two degrees. The first is, when the Spirit of God takes up his habitation in man, and withall governeth all the powers of his soule, by putting into the minde a new light of knowledge, into the will and affections, new motions, and inclinations, whereby they are made conformable to the will of God. The second degree of spirituall life is, when the spirit dwelleth in man, and governeth the powers of the soule, and further doth sustaine the body, immediately without naturall meanes, 1 Cor. 15. 44. It riseth againe a spirituall bodie, that is, a bodie living in the second degree of spirituall life, not being sustained by meanes, but immediatly by the eternall sustentation of the spirit. The first of these degrees is in this life; the second after this life, in, and after the last judgement, when body and soule shall be reunited. And of the former, this place is to be understood.

To walke in the Spirit, is, first, to savour the things of the Spirit, Romanes 8. 5, 7. And that is, to minde, wish, like, desire, and affect them; or, in a word, to subject a mans selfe to the law of God, in all the powers and faculties of the soule. For the things revealed in the law, are the things of the spirit, which spirit must at no hand be severed from the word. Secondly, to walke in the path-way of righteousnesse, without offence either of God or man, Psalme 143. 10. Thirdly, to walke not straglingly, but orderly by rule, by line, and by measure. For so much the word [walke] importeth in the originall; as if Paul should have said, Let us, (whilest we live in this world) not only indeavour to doe some one, or some few good actions, but in the course of our lives and callings, order our selves according to the rule and line of the word of God.

The Vse. This text in the first place, cuts off the shift and excuses of sundry persons in these daies, who professe themselves to be the children of God, and yet for their lives are much to be blamed, because they leade them not according to the spirit, but according to the flesh. And these persons whatsoever they say, doe in deed and in truth, deceive themselves, and are quite destitute of Gods Spirit. For if they lived in the Spirit, they would also walke in the Spirit; It is not an idle spirit in any, but it will shew and manifest it selfe, in a holy and orderly conversation. You will say; If such persons have not the Spirit of God, what other Spirit have they? Answ. If their life bee naught, they have an uncleane spirit dwelling in them: and the god of this world hath blinded their eyes, and makes them that they cannot see the right way wherein they should walke, 1 Cor. 4. 4.

Againe, wee learne from hence, a true and a pregnant signe, whereby to discerne, whether any man hath Gods Spirit in his heart or no? The life of a man will discover and proclaime to all the world, before God, men and Angels, what himselfe is. If a mã in the course of his life and calling be godly and vertuous, leading his life according to the will & word of God in an honest and carefull endeavour, though hee faile in some particulars: what ever the world thinkes of him, he is the man that is endued with the Spirit of God.

Lastly, this teacheth, what is the office of all Christian people, namely, to walke in the Spirit, that is, to frame & order the whole course and tenour of their lives, according to the line and square of Gods word and Spirit. A motive to which dutie, may bee that fearefull threat pronounced upon those that turne aside, and walke in their owne crooked wayes, Psal. 125. 5.

26. Let us not bee desirous of vaine glorie, provoking one another, envying one another.

The scope. From this 26. verse, to the 11. verse of the chapter following, S. Paul handles the second rule, which hee had propounded in the 13. verse of this chapter: By love serve one another. In the handling whereof, he first labours to take away the impediments of love: and then he sets downe the manner, how the rule is to be observed. This 26. verse is a rule, the end whereof, is to remove the impediments of love.

In this verse foure points are especially to be considered. First, what the desire of vaine-glory is? Answ. It is a branch of pride, which makes men to referre all they have, or can do to their owne private glory, and advancement. For better understanding whereof, consider a little the excuses that men have, for the defence or excuse of this sinne.

I. Excuse. Vain glory in affect is no more but the seeking of mens approbation, which may lawfully be done. Ans. To seeke the approbation of men, is no fault, so that it bee sought in a good manner. The right manner of seeking the praise of men, is this: A man must in this life passe through three judgements; the judgement of God, of his owne conscience, and of his neighbour: and the order of going through the, is, in the first place, he must seeke for the judgement and approbation of God: in the next, his owne: and in the last, his neighbors. Now the vain-glorious man takes another course, first & principally aiming at the glory and good liking of man, having small or no regard of the two other.

II. Excuse. There is a good boasting, which David used, and that we may lawfully use, Psal. 7. 8. Answ. Boasting is either lawfull, or unlawfull. Lawfull boasting is in the Lord, when being urged and compelled, wee confesse the good things that are in us, to Gods glory. Of this reade at large, 2 Cor. 11. Vnlawfull is, when men ascribe the gifts that they have of God, unto themselves: or having gifts, do arrogate more unto themselves, than indeed they have: or in a word, doe so esteeme of their gifts, as if they had not received them from God. And this is a damnable boasting.

III. Excuse. Gods blessings we may seeke for: and what are glory and honour, but the blessings and gifts of God? Answ. There are two degrees of honour. The first is, the honour that every man hath in his place and calling. For every calling ordained by God, hath a glory annexed unto it: which being the gift of God, it may bee both sought for, and enjoyed. The other degree, is that which is above a mans place and calling, and that ought not to be sought for. Every person must content himselfe with the honour which is sorted unto his calling. Nevertheless, if God give greater honour, hee may accept it, but where God gives it not, there it must not bee desired. It remaineth therefore, that vaine glory is a branch of pride, wherein men principally referre all their studies, counsels, endeavours, and gifts, to the honouring and advancing of themselves.

The next point to be considered, is, why he admonisheth the Galatians of vain-glory? Answer. The Galatians were men of understanding and knowledge, and were adorned with many excellent gifts. Now, they that have received good gifts of God, many times are most vaine glorious, 2 Cor. 12. 7. Matth. 6. 5. And whereas all other vices feed upon that which is evill, this vice of vaine-glory, feeds upon good things. For a man sometimes will be proud, even because he is not proud.

A third point to be considered, is, where vaine glory is to be found? Ans. It is no rare matter: for it is a common vice, and spreads it selfe farre and wide. Some there are, which never lift up heart nor hand unto God at home, and yet the same persons in the publike assemblies, will make as though they prayed with great devotion. And what is the reason hereof but this, that they are caried with a spirit of pride and arrogancy, seeking the commendation of men that behold them, rather than to approve their hearts and consciences unto God. Of another sort are those, that have beene old and ancient hearers of the word, who notwithstanding doe little, or not at all profit, either in knowledge, or in good life: and the cause is not in the Gospell, or in the dispensers of it, but in themselves: because they receive not the Gospell for it selfe, but for the praise and commendation of men, and for the credit and account they are in, by reason of Christian profession.

The last thing, is the remedie of pride and vain-glory; which is the rather to be thought upon, because it is a great impediment of Christian love. This remedy consists partly in meditation, and partly in practice.

Remedies in meditation, are these, 1. God resisteth all proud persons, and gives grace to the humble, 1 Pet. 5. 5. the reason is, because the vaine-glorious man, seeking himselfe and not God, robs God of his honour. Thus the proud Pharisie exalting himselfe above the poore Publican, went away lesse justified, that is, not approved of God, as the Publican was. 2 It is the worke of the devill, to puffe up the minde with selfe-liking, and conceit, that thereby hee may worke mans perdition, Gen. 3. 5. But God worketh contrarily: for he therefore abaseth men, that hee might in his good time the more exalt them. 3. There is no religion in that heart, that is wholly bent to seeke the praise of men, John 5. 44. And the man that desires to be talked of, and admired by others, doth thereby in effect give notice unto all the world, that his heart is not found in the sight of God.

Remedies consisting in practice, are; first, an indeavour to acknowledge the great Majesty of God, and withall our owne baseneſse and vilenesse before him. 2. We ought to ascribe all good things we have, or can doe, to God alone, and nothing to our selves. For in all that befall us, God is the principall agent, our selves are but tooles and instruments in his hand; by right therefore the commendation belongs unto him, and not to us. 3. In all actions and duties of religion, first wee must indeavour to approve our selves to God, and the next place is to be given to man, not contrariwise. 4. When we are reviled wee must rest content; when we are praised to our faces or otherwise, we must take heed. For then Satan stands at our right hand to pusse us up, and consequently to overthrow us. It is a true saying, that temptations on the right hand are farre more dangerous, than those on the left. In the fift place. Pauls reason to dissuade from this sinne, is taken from two evill fruits of it, Contention, and Envy, provoking one another, envying one another. Men that are ambitious, if they be crossed in their courses, grow contentious, if they prosper in the world, then are they envied by others. Reade for this purpose the history of Samuel and Saul, 1 Sam. 15. Seeing then vaine-glory hath so bad fruits issuing from it, it must reach us to abhorre and detest it with all our hearts, and on the contrary to seeke by all meanes possible to preserve and maintaine love in the whole course of our lives.

The end of the fifth Chapter.

THE SVPPLEMENT, OR, CONTINVATION OF THE COMMENTARIE VPON THE SIXTH CHAPTER.

LONDON,
Printed in the Yeare, 1631.

TO THE RIGHT WORSHIPFVLL SIR BASSINGBVRNE GAVDY, Knight.

RIght Worshipfull, having beene licensed some yeare agoe (according to the ancient laudable custome of the Vniversity) to interpret S. Pauls Epistles: and then earnestly intreated by M. Perkins his Executor, and other his friends (which had some interest in me) to supply that which was defective in his Commentary upon the Galatians: overcome at the last by their importunity, I undertooke the businesse, making triall of my simple faculty in this short Chapter, which I have here according to my poore talent, finished: Yet not daring to publish it to the view of the world, without premising somewhat in way of excuse for my boldnesse. For if Hirtius, or (as other thinke) Oppius, being importuned by his friend to continue the Commentaries which Cæsar left unfinished, durst not presume to make a supplie, without making first an Apology for himselfe, for attempting to take in hand so great a task, seeming therein to compare with him who was incomparable: Iust cause have I to excuse my selfe for this my bold attempt, in undertaking to equall him, who in the judgement of all (save such as esteeme of Writers by tale, and not by touch) is so substantiall, concise, exact, methodicall, that (as it is said of Cæsar) he hath discouraged wise men from writing. But seeing I doe not in the vaine confidence of mine owne sufficiency, or exactnesse of the worke, proclaime a challenge to all mens censures: nor yet take upon me (as [a] some have done in other Writers) so to carie the Author along, that the Reader shall not perceive but that he is still reading him, nor know where he endeth, or where I begin, (for that being impossible to attaine, were folly to attempt:) but onely to finish that which otherwise should have beene imperfect, to satisfie the request of my friends, and to helpe forward the Lords building, though not as a master builder with hewen stones, or polished Saphirs: yet as a server and under labourer, as it were with a handfull of rubbish. I hope I shall obtaine (at least) this favourable construction, to be thought as farre from vanity herein, as my conscience doth witnesse with me I did it in simplicity, and without affectation of singularity. And if it were no presumption in Gillebertus to finish Bernards Sermons upon the Canticles, nor in Clichtoveus to supply [b] foure Bookes which were wanting in Cyrills Commentaries upon Iohn, nor in Wolfius, Reuterus, and other moderne writers, to continue the Commentaries of Martyrs, Zanchius, &c. but rather workes worthy of great commendation, and deserving well of the Church of God: I trust it will not be imputed to me as a vice, which in others is accounted as a vertue. Further, if I shall seeme to any with the unskilfull limmer, to have joyned humano capiti, cervicem equinam, in that I exceed as much the other part in prolixity, as I come short of it in dexterity, I hope I shall the more easily obtaine pardon, considering it was my first draught, not having taken pensill in hand before: and seeing the worke I was to finish, was caput Veneris, the faire face of Venus, I chose rather (because

(because I could not hit of the just proportion which I aymed at) to exceed measure a little, than to be defective: thinking thereby to suite them the better, seeing beauty or faireneſſe (to speake more properly) consists onely in greatneſſe, as the Philosopher saith. And some perhaps may thinke that it falleth out well, in that I have given it more body, because it had leſſe spirit. But what others thinke or say (for as in other things, so in this, lookers on will have their words) it skilleth not, so I may have the approbation of the godly and well affected Reader: especially your worshipfull patronage, to whom I humbly commend it, as the first fruits of my labours, a simple flower growing in a Schollers garden: desiring it may bee suffered to grow either in the shadow or sunneshine of your protection, that so of the godly it may be better accepted, and of the caterpiller the leſſe touched; (those I meane which will correct the Verbe before they understand the Nowne, condemning that which they ought rather to commend, at least which they cannot amend.) Vouchsafe therefore Right-Worshipfull, to receive this poore present, as a pledge of my unfained love, and humble duty: and a testimony of my thankfulneſſe to God for his manifold graces, of prudence, justice, sobriety, meekneſſe, humility, liberality, bestowed upon you, especially your love of his truth, and continuall meditation in his word: which was the thing that moved me (all by-respects set aside) to offer this Commentary to your view, and to have it graced with your countenance: that by this meanes I might the more stirre up and kindle (if it were possible) your love and liking of the word, by adding fewell to the fire, and oyle to the flame. It is recorded of Theodosius the second, that he writ the New Testament over with his owne hand: and of Alphonsus king of Spaine and Naples, that he read the Bible 14. times over with the ordinary gloſſe (the best helpe he had in those dayes.) And I doubt not but that you will peruse this exposition at your leisure, and still continue to reade the holy Scripture, as hitherto you have done, and so be answerable to that which is voiced of you, and to that extraordinary commendation which your faithfull Pastor hath often given of your diligence and dexterity in that behalfe. Now let me adde this one thing, that though there be not the like efficacy in a dead letter, that is in a lively voice, yet the bare reading of the Scripture is of great and singular uſe, which may appeare by this, that it is so often commanded by precept, and so highly commended by the practice of the Saints: and so straitly forbidden, as by cruell Antiochus, so by the Roman Antichrist. Neither dare I deny but that God hath & doth use it, not onely as a meanes of edification, but also of working the conversion of many of his servants; as Augustine confesseth of himselfe, that he was converted by reading that place in Paul, Rom. 13. 14. converted (I say) not as an heretike onely which is reclaimed from his erroneous opinions, but as a lost sheepe which is reduced and brought home from the errour of his way. Notwithstanding, in reading the Scripture to goe alone is not so safe: a guide therefore is necessary, (as the Eunuch confesseth) which may be as the Mercurialis statua, to point a man to the right way. And this guide is either the outward, or the inward guide: the outward guide (I speak of reading onely) is a Commentary, especially such a one as a sanctified spirit hath much breathed upon: seeing it is the best learning the Theoricke of him which is skilfull in the Practicke. The inward guide, is the spirit of Revelation, which dwelleth onely in an humble, docible, and obedient heart, which whosoever bringeth, hath a promise that he shall know the truth, Iohn 7. 17. and understand the secrets of God, Psal. 25. 14. and without which the Scriptures are but as a Riddle or a clasped Booke. For the full and perfect knowledge of the word consisteth (as Epiphanius saith) in understanding, and feeling, that is, not in bare speculation onely swimming in the braine, but in a sensible saving knowledge sinking into the affections of the heart: and by this latter the comfortable meaning of the Scriptures is better understood, than by all the speculations of the most curious Skeptikes: as the sweetneſſe of honey is better knowne in a moment by him that tasteth it, than by thoſe that spend many houres in the contemplation and discourſe of it.

Vid. Augustinum de doctrina Christ.

But I forget my selfe very much in taking upon me to reade a lecture to such an exercised Scholler in the booke of God. Therefore without further insinuation, either for pardon for my boldneſſe, or acceptance of my paines, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you further, and give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified. CHAP. VI.

1. Brethren, if a man be fallen by occasion into any fault, ye which are spirituall, restore such a one with the spirit of meekneſſe, considering thy selfe, leſt thou also be tempted.

HE Apostle having finished the first part of the Instruction, touching the faith of the Galatians in the 12. verse of the 5. Chapter: in the 13. verse hee comes to the second part, touching good life, which continues to the 11. verse of the 6. Chapter, in which he first propounds the summe of his doctrine, v. 13. Secondly, he makes particular declaration thereof. In the summe of his doctrine, first, he sets downe the ground of all good duties, which is, their calling to Christian liberty. Secondly, two rules of good life. The first, that we must not use our liberty as an occasion to the flesh; which is illustrated & handled in particular, from the 16. v. to the 26. The second, that we must serve one another in love, which is amplified from the 26. to the 11. ver. of this Chapter. In handling whereof, he first removes the impediments of love, as vaine-glory, envy, &c verse 26. Secondly, hee prescribes the manner, how it is to be observed, and practised, by sundry speciall rules: the first whereof is contained in this 1. ver. where we may observe these two generall points: First, the duty prescribed: Secondly, the reasons to urge the performance thereof. The duty is, the restoring of our brethren: where we are to consider foure things. First, the duty it selfe, restore. Secondly, the persons who are to be restored, they that are overtaken by any offence. Thirdly, the persons that must restore, those that are spirituall. Fourthly, the manner how, in the spirit of meekneſſe.

For the first, the duty is set downe in the word restore, which in the Originall signifies to set a joynt, or bone that is broken; so as it may become as strong and sound as ever it was: so the word is used, Matth. 21. 16.

By this we learne sundry things. First, that it is the nature of sinne to set all things out of order. It was the sinne of Achan that troubled the Iewes, Ioſ. 7. 25. It was the sinne of Ahab that troubled Israel, 1 King. 18. 18. the sinne of false Apostles that troubled the Galatians, Gal. 5. 10. Nay, it drives men beside themselves, as appeares in the example of the prodigall sonne, who repenting of his sinne, is said to have come to himselfe, Luke 15. 17. Small sinnes are like to slips and slidings, whereby men fall and hurt themselves, but great sins are like downfalls: for as they wound, lame, disjoynt, or breake some member of the body; so these doe wound and waſt the conscience. Therefore as we are carefull for our bodies, to avoid downfals, so ought we to be as carefull, nay a thousand times more carefull for our soules, to take heed of the downfall of sinne, or falling away from grace. And as we shunne an yce or slippery place, for feare of sliding and falling: so ought we to shunne the smalleſt sinnes, and the least occasions of sinne, for feare of making a breach in conscience. Secondly, I gather hence, that sinners are not to deferre their repentance: nor those that are to admonisih, their reproofes: for sinning is the breaking of a bone, or disjoynting of a member: and reproofe, is the setting of it in order againe. Now the sooner a bone newly broken, or out of joynt, is set, the sooner it is restored to his right frame, and cured: So, the sooner a man after his fall is admonished, the sooner and more easily shall he be able to recover himselfe. Thirdly, this shewes, that it is a point of great skill, to bring a soule in order and frame againe. There is great dexterity required in setting a bone, and Chyrurgeons finde it a matter of great difficulty, to set a joynt: much more difficulty is there in the soule: and therfore as it is not for every horſe-leach to meddle with setting of bones: no more is it for unskilfull workmen to temper with mens soules. This is one speciall reason why Paul saith, They that are spirituall ought to restore them that are fallen. Fourthly, hence we are taught, not to wonder though sinners be so loath to bee reproved, and account it so painfull a thing to bee restored, and thinke those offensive unto them, and scarce their friends, which labour to reclaime them: considering the same is to be seene in the body: for hee that hath a bone broken, or out of joynt, can hardly endure to have it touched, or pointed at. Lastly, in that Saint Paul commands those that are spirituall to restore them that are fallen, and prescribes not how often, but speakes indefinitely: we learne that as often, as our brother falleth, wee must restore him; for as wee are not to forgive our brother once or twice, or seven times, (which Peter thought thought very much) but even seuentie times seuen times, that is, as often as hee sinneth against us, Matth. 18. so wee may not restore our brother, twice, or thrice onely, but sinies, quories; as often as hee shall sinne against us. Matth. 18. If he sinne against thee, goe and tell him of his fault, &c. Therefore it were to bee wished, that as men have a care to restore their decayed limmes, so they would restore their brethren being fallen into any sinne, even because they are fellow members of the same mysticall body.

The second thing to be considered, is the person to be restored, and that is, every one that is prevented and overtaken, either by the sleight of Sathan, or allurement of the world, or suggestions of his owne flesh: (so he sinne not against the holy Ghost, nor openly scorne religion and discipline) as Peter, who fell, being overtaken with overmuch feare, and David with overmuch pleasure. Hence we see the subtilty of Sathan, who is alwayes tripping at the heele, labouring to supplant us; as also the deceitfulnesse of sinne, preventing and overtaking us, before we bee aware. We are therefore to be circumspect and carefull, lest we be supplanted. The Apostle admonisheth us to take heed lest we bee hardened through the deceitfulnesse of sin, Heb. 3 13. and, that we walke circumspectly, not as fooles, but as wise, Eph. 5.15. that we walke with a right foot, Gal. 2 14. and, make straight steps unto our feet, lest that which is halting be turned out of the way, Heb. 12. 12. For as those that wrastle and trie masteries, looke warily to themselves lest they be supplanted by their adversaries: so ought we much more, considering, we wrastle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers, Eph 6.12.

Againe, whereas it is said, if a man be overtaken by a sinne, hee acheth, that no man is exempted from falling, or being overtaken and supplanted by sinne: for hee speakes indefinitely, if a man, as S. Iohn saith, If any man sinne, we have an advocate, 1 Ioh 2.1. This makes against the Catharists or Puritanes, who avouch, they neither have sinne, nor can sinne: because they are trees of righteousnesse, and a good tree cannot bring forth evill fruit.

Further, hence I gather, that pardon and restitution is not to be denyed to them that fall, after their conversion, as though there were no place of repentance, or hope of salvation. For Paul would have such to be restored, as are overtaken with any sin, except they be incorrigible, and incurable. Therefore the Novatians doe erre, in teaching, that sinnes committed after a mans conversion, are unpardonable, considering there is hope in store, for great & heinous sinners. For though a man in persecution deny Christ, and renounce his religion, yet hee may be restored, and repent, as Peter did, Luke 22.32. (for that saying of Christ, Whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I deny before my father which is in A heaven, Matth. 10.33. is meant, onely of a totall and finall denniall.) Though a man bee a grievous Idolater, and a forcerer, and given to witchcraft, yet he may be restored, and finde mercy, as Manasses did, 2 Chron. 33. Though a man be defiled and polluted with sinnes against nature, yet hee may bee cleansed and washed from them. Some among the Corinthians were fornicators, adulterers, wantons, buggerers; but yet were washed, sanctified, justified. 1 Cor. 6.9, 11. It may be said, that it is impossible, that they which once have beene inlightned, and tasted of the heavenly gift, &c. if they fall away, should bee renewed againe by repentance, Heb. 6.4, 5, 6. Answ. That text is to be understood of a universall, totall, and finall apostasie. And that text. Heb. 10.26. If we sinne wilfully after we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sinne, is to be understood of a wilfull and malicious renouncing of the knowne truth, as the circumstance of the phee, and collation of it with others, doe manifestly evict. Againe if all sinne committed voluntarily and willingly were simply inexpiable, every mans case were damnable. And though the word ἑκουσίως signifie willingly, as Aristotle takes it, Eth l. 3. cap. 2. yet sometime it signifieth, spightfully, & malicionsly, as it is used by the Seventy, Ex. 21. 13, 14. Obiect. μισοπονηρία, or dolus, may be restored, not συκοφαντία, or peccata. Ans. They are used indifferently one for the other, as might be shewed, if it were needfull. But it is a confessed truth, avouched by Aristotle, and others, upon this text. Lastly, whereas the Apostle speaketh indefinitely; If any man be overtaken, restore him I gather, that the gifts and graces of God bestowed upon us, ought to bee used in restoring those that are fallen, without respect of persons: and herein spirituall men are debtors, to the wise, for foolish, as the Apostle saith of himselfe, Rom. 1.14.

The third thing to bee considered, is, the persons that are to restore their brethren, laid downe in these words, Ye that are spirituall.

Spirituall men are opposed to carnall, as 1 Cor. 3.1. I could not speake unto you brethren, as unto spirituall men, but as unto carnall: and naturall men. 1 Cor. 2.14, 15. The naturall man perceiveth not the things of the spirit of God: but he that is spirituall discerneth all things. Now carnall and naturall men, are of two sorts: either they are such as are altogether fleshly, destitute of grace and godlinesse, being in their pure (or rather corrupt) naturals, of whom S. Paul saith, They that are of the flesh, savour the things of the flesh, Rom. 8.5. and verse the 8. They that are in the flesh cannot please God, Or such as are regenerate, yet are weake, as being but babes in Christ, the flesh being farre stronger in them, than the spirit: such were most in the Church of Corinth: for Paul saith, He could not speake unto them, as unto spirituall men, but as unto carnall, 1 Cor. 3.1. for yet ye are carnal: for when there is among you envying, are are ye not carnall? verie 4. So Spirituall men, opposed to carnall, are of two sorts: First, those that have received the spirit of regeneration, and doe begin to favour the things of the spirit, Rom. 8. Secondly, those that have received a greater portion of the Spirit, and a greater measure of spirituall graces, of whom Paul speakes, 1 Cor. 14. 37. If any think himselfe to be a Prophet or spirituall. Of the latter, the words are to be understood, and by them he meaneth those, whom hee called perfect men, Phil. 3.15. Heb. 5. 4. Now spirituall men are more fit to restore those that are fallen, than any other. First, because they are lesse tainted with sinne than others, and so may more freely reprove. Secondly, because they have more knowledge and love, both knowing how to restore, and willing to doe it with greater compassion, & fellow-feeling. He that must speake in season a word to the weary, must have an ongue of the learned, Is. 50.4. When Peter is converted, he must strengthen his brethren, Luk. 22.32. Hence it follows, the more excellent gifts any man hath received, the more he is bound to bee serviceable unto others. For if spirituall men must restore them that are fallen, the more a man is indued with spirituall graces, the more he ought to restore. For the Apostle saith, As every man hath received a gift, so let him minister it unto others, 1 Pet. 4.10. This duty was practised by our Saviour Christ, Iohn 13.12. And it meets with the sinne of many, who having received great gifts and graces of the Spirit, are so farre from restoring those that sinne against them, that they scorne and disdaine to speake unto them: for if they be at variance with any, the common saying is, I am as good a man as hee, why should I goe to him? let him come to me, &c. These men are farre unlike Abraham, who though he exceeded Lot, as well in outward gifts, as in inward graces; yet stood not upon his priviledge, but was the first man in making the league of unity, Genesis 13.8. Further, in that spirituall men must restore their brethren, wee learne that we have not the gifts of God bestowed upon us, for our selves alone, but for the good of others: the possession of them belongs to us, the use of them to others. Lastly, in that spirituall men, especially the holy men of God, and Ministers of his word, are the Lords Surgeons, to bind up the broken, and raise those that are fallen: as also his Physitians, to restore those that are in a spirituall consumption of grace; we ought to make great account of them, and have them in singular love, for their worke sake, 1 Thes. 5.13. For if we must honour the bodily Physitian (as Syracides saith) Eccl. 38.1. who cureth but the diseases of the body: how much more ought we to honour spirituall physicians, which cure the spirituall maladies of our soules?

The fourth and last point is, the manner how we must restore, laide downe in these

A words, in the spirit of meeknesse.

Meeknesse is the setling or quieting of the minde, freeing it from perturbation, especially in repressing the revengefull affection. A meeke and quiet spirit are joyned together, 1 Pet. 3.4. A notable example hereof we have in Moses, who being provoked, in stead of anger, shewed meeknesse. To further makes a man to yeeld of his right, and not to prosecute the matter in rigour and extremitie, and so it is opposed to severity; 2 Cor. 4.21. Shall I come unto you with a rod, or in love, and the Spirit of meeknesse? Hence ariseth another property; it bridleth the tongue, and the outward man either by silence, as Christ being provoked, was dumbe, and opened not his mouth, Isa. 53.7. was silent, and answered not a word, Luke 23.9. or by a soft and gentle answer, which asswageth wrath, Proverbs 15.1. There is great reason why men should restore their brethren in all meeknesse: for without it there is nothing but swelling and faction, but troubles, and tragedies. Againe, as meeknesse is necessary for every Christian, Colos. 2. 21. Titus 3.2. so it is most necessary for him that would fruitfully and effectually reprove. Hence it is, that the Apostle commands us, to instruct them in meeknesse, that are contrary minded, 2 Tim. 2.25.

B Motives to inforce this duty, are these.

First, the exhortation & example of Christ, take to followers of him, 1 Cor. 11.1. who was lowly & meeke, Matt. 11.29. for he was led as a sheepe to the slaughter, and like a Lambe dumbe before his shearer, so opened he not his mouth, Isa. 53.7. When he was reviled, he reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatned not, 1 Pet. 2.23. as it may appeare by that meeke answer; If I have evill spoken, beare witnesse of the evill: but if I have well spoken, why smitest thou me? Iohn 18.23. Paul hath no stronger argument to exhort the Corinthians, than by the meeknesse and gentlenesse of Christ, 2 Cor. 10.1.

C Secondly, it is a vertue which God doth make great account of, 1 Peter 3.4. A meeke and quiet spirit is before GOD, a thing much set by.

Thirdly, God hath made excellent promises to them that are of a meeke and humble spirit, that he will guide them in judgement, and teach them his wayes, Psal. 25.9. That they shall be hid in the day of the Lords wrath, Zep. 2 3 That they shall inherit the earth, Matt. 5.5.

Fourthly, consider the comfortable effects, and the good that comes thereby. A soft, meeke, and milde answer, turneth away wrath, Prov. 15.1. Meeke, and gentle behaviour heapeth coales of fire upon our enemies head, Rom. 12. 20. A soft tongue breaketh the bones, Pro. 25.15. See the example of Gideon, appeasing the Midianites; Iudges 8.1, &c. and Abigail pacifying David, 1 Sam. 25.
