Fifthly, without meeknesse, wee cannot savingly heare the word, either read, or preached, Iam. 1.21.

D

Aristi. Rhet. ad Theod. lib. 2. c. 3

ἐν πνεύματι φραστικῶς· ἐν φραστικῷ πνεύματι ἐστὶ χαρισμα τὸ δὲ πνεῦμα πᾶν. Oecumen.

It is further said, wee must restore in the Spirit of meeknesse. The word spirit is added, because it proceeds from the Spirit of God, who is both the worker and continuer thereof: as on the contrary, the spirit of jealousie, Numbers 5.14. the spirit of errour, 1 John 4.6. the spirit of uncleannesse, Zach. 13.2. the spirit of giddinesse, Isa. 29 14. the spirit of slumber, Isa. 29.19. are so termed, because they proceed from a wicked spirit. So quicke motions, sudden perturbations, strong affections, proceeding either from the Spirit of God, or of Satan, are rearmed by the name of spirit. Hence we learne, that the holy Ghost is author, not onely of meeknesse, but of all sanctifying graces, and therefore is called the spirit of wisdome & understanding, the spirit of counsell & strength, the spirit of knowledge, & of the feare of the Lord, Isa. 11.12. Secondly, this teacheth us, that all true vertues, are wrought onely by the operation of Gods Spirit in us: for though there be diversities of gifts, yet it is the same spirit, 2 Cor. 12.4. and therefore the vertues of the Heathen are but glittering sinnes.

Thirdly, that when we see the gifts or graces of God in our selves or others, we returne all the praise and glory to God, from whom they proceede, ascribing nothing to our selves.

Fourthly, this shewes to whom wee must have recourse in our need, namely, not to the Virgine Mary, nor any Saint (who stand in as great need of the favour of God, as our selves) but to God alone, who is the fountaine of grace, Ier. 2.13.

Lastly, in that the spirit is set before meeknesse, it shewes that the Spirit of God is present with his graces, to inspire them, to cherish and increase them. Therefore the commandement, Quench not the Spirit, 1 Thess. 5. 19. is to be obeyed, if wee will retaine the graces of God.

Thus much of the duty. The reasons used by the Apostle, to enforce this duty, follow to be considered, and they are two. The first is imply ed in the word Brethren] which is of great force to perswade us to use moderation, lenity, and gentlenesse. Abraham could use no stronger argument to pacifie Lot, than this, Let there be no strife betweene thee and me, for we are brethren, Gen. 13.8. Moses used it as a motive to accord two Ebrewes: Sirs yee are brethren, why doe ye wrong one to another? Act. 7.26. For it is a shame, that those whom nature hath so neatly conjoyned, should bee so farre disjoyned in affection. But the reason being taken from spirituall brethren, such as are not onely brethren in the flesh, but also in the Lord, having the same God for their Father, the same Church for their Mother, Christ for their elder brother, being begotten by the same immortall seede, washed by the laver of one new birth, conglutinate by the sinewes of the same faith, nourished by the milke of the same word; is so much the

A stronger, by how much grace is a straiter bond, than nature: therefore Paul would have us restore one another in the spirit of meeknesse, because we are brethren. Nay, persons excommunicate, are not to be accounted as enemies, but to be admonished as brethren, 2 Thessal. 3.15. The reason why men use no more mildenesse in their reproofes, is because they forget themselves to bee brethren, or consider not that they have to deale with their brethren; as Iosephs brethren, who considering him as an enemy, said one to another, Behold, this dreamer comes, come therefore let us kill him, Gen. 37.v.19,20. But when they consider him as their brother, they say, Come, and let us sell him to the Ishmaelites, and let not our hands be upon him, for he is our brother, and our flesh, v.27.

B The second reason is in these words, Considering thy selfe, lest thou also be tempted. And it is taken from the consideration of our owne estate, that wee are subject to fall into temptation, as well as others, and therefore wee ought to deale with them in all meeknesse, as wee would bee dealt withall in the like case. The words are laid downe by way of admonition or advice, and they carry a double sense: either thus, Considering thy selfe, that is, looking to thy selfe: lest thou also be tempted, that is, lest thou offend, and sin, in being too severe a censurer of thy brother, in reproving sinne with sinne. Or thus, C Consider thy selfe: that is, thine owne frailty, how thou maist easily be overtaken with the same, the like, or a greater sinne, seeing thou mayest be taken in the Devils snare, and deceived with his pleasant baits, as well as he was: therefore deale as mildly with him, as thou wouldest others should deale mercifully with thee. Here Paul forbiddeth us not to consider the actions of our brethren, for wee are to consider one another; First, that we may avoid the contagion of evill example: Marke them diligently which cause division, and offences, and avoide them, Rom. 16.17. Secondly, that we may be able to reprove & censure them. Consider the matter, consult, and give sentence, Iudg. 19.30. Thirdly, that wee may follow their good example, looke on them which walke so, as ye have us for example, Phil. 3. 17. Let us consider one another, to provoke unto love, and to good workes, Hebr. 10.24. But hee would have us especially to consider our selves, that by the consideration of our owne weaknesse, wee might learne more mildnesse towards others in our reproofes: for seeing we stand in need of mercy, we ought to deale mercifully: and seeing God forgiveth us innumerable sinnes, wee ought to forgive seven times, yea, seventie times seven times: seeing he forgiveth us ten thousand talents, wee ought to forgive a hundred pence, Mat. 18.32,33. Obiect. The Pharisee considered himselfe, when as he said, Lord, I thanke thee, that I am not as other men, theeves, adulterers, or like this Publicane, Luke 18.11. and yet he is reproved by our Saviour Christ. Answ. That is true in deed, for he onely considered his owne supposed vertues, which he should not have considered but forgotten, though they had bin true vertues indeed, according to Christs precept, Matth. 6.3. Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doth: and Pauls practice, Philip. 3.13. forgetting that which is behind: and never to much as lightly consider of his owne sinnes, which Paul here would have us to consider, and therefore he is reproved.

Paul would have us to consider our selves; because the serious consideration of our owne weaknesse will move us to practise this duty of meeknesse: for as wee helpe up those that are fallen, relieve the distressed, pity the afflicted, bury the dead, &c. because we consider our selves in them: that their case may be ours: So wee ought to restore those that are fallen, in all meeknesse; because wee may fall, and bee overtaken as well as they: the rather, because God himselfe in correcting and reproving us, doth descend to our weaknesse, and considers that we are but flesh, and a winde that passeth, and commeth not againe, Psalme 78.39. and Christ became like unto us in all things, and was tempted in like sort (yet without sinne): that he might bee mercifull, and a faithfull high Priest: and might bee touched with a sense of our infirmities, Heb. 2.17,18. and 4.15. Obiect. Hee therefore that knows assuredly he cannot be overcome by temptation, is not to reprove: in the spirit of meeknesse. Answ. No man is sure, and therefore man can bee secure. Againe, though a man know he cannot totally nor finally fall away, yet seeing he doth finde by experience, that hee cannot overcome without much adoe, without much striving and wrastling, nay, oftentimes not without resisting unto blood, he ought to use more meeknesse and mildnesse, considering with what difficulty he overcame: our Saviour Christ learned by experience, how hard a thing it was to overcome temptations, that he might have a fellow-feeling of our infirmities. Therefore spirituall men must remember, that they were once carnall, even babes in Christ, those that are strong, must consider that they were once weake: old men that are grave and stayed, must call to minde, that once they were in the heate of their youth, and what difficulties encountred them, and with what contention they passed the vanity of that age: and so they shall the better reprove others in the spirit of meeknesse, if they looke themselves in the glasse of their example: this is Pauls reason, why we should shew all meeknesse to all men, because wee our selves were sometimes foole, unwise, disobedient, &c. Tit. 3.2,3.

Lastly, marke here how Paul changes the number: for having said, Te that are spirituall, restore, &c. in the plurall number, here hee saith, considering thy selfe, in the singular, and

A not Iosuah saith: Art thou also bee tempted, and not yours on which hee doth not through rudenesse of speech; as some of the ancient Divines have thought: but with great iudgement he useth a familiar Hebraisme; changing the number. First, to give the greater force, and to see the sharper edge upon his admonition. For that which is spoken to all, is spoken to none. Secondly, to shew how hard a thing it is for a man to consider himselfe. For it is naturall for men to spie motes in other mens eyes, and not to perceive beames in their owne, Matth. 7.3,4. to looke outward at others, and inward at themselves. Like Plutarchs Lamia, or Fayries, which carried their eyes in their heads when they went abroad, but when they came home put them up in a box. In doing good, and being beneficiall, wee must not so much consider our selves, Phil. 2.v.4. but in judging and reproving, we ought to begin with our selves.

For the better understanding of the doctrine of brotherly correction, and Christian reproofe, I will handle these foure questions. I. who are to be reproved? II. for what? III. by whom? III. in what manner.

I. Who are to be reproved.

Ans. All that are brethren: for so our Saviour Christ saith, If thy brother sinne against thee, reprove him, Matth. 18.16. And saint Paul saith, Brethren, if any man, &c. The name Brethren, is taken foure wayes in Scripture, as Ierome hath well observed against Helvidius. I. for those that are brethren by nature, as Iacob and Esau; the twelve Patriarkes, Andrew and Peter; Iames and John. II. for those that are of affinitie. Thus the kinsmen of Christ are called his Brethren: which the Helvidians not observing, thought they had beene his naturall brethren, by the Virgine Marie: thus Abraham and Lot are called brethren, Genesis 13.8, 14. though Lot was but his brothers sonne, Genes. 14.12. Thus Iacob, the nephew of Laban, called himselfe his brother, Gen. 29.12. and so Laban calleth him, vers. 15. III. for men of the same country. Thus all the Iewes are called brethren one to another, Deu. 17.15. From among thy brethren shalt thou make a King over thee: and Deut. 23.19. Thou shalt not give to usury to thy brother: and Roman. 9.1. Paul saith, he could wish himselfe anathema, or accursed for his brethren, that is, the Iewes. IV. for those of the same religion. 1 John 3.16. We must lay downe our lives for our brethren, Matth. 23.8. One is your Doctour, to wit, Christ and all ye are brethren, 1 Cor. 5.11. If any that is called a brother bee a fornicator, with such a one eat not. To these we may adde a fift acception: for all those that are confederate, or otherwise joyned together, by the bond of nature, humanity, society, or friendship. Thus Abab calls Benhadab his brother, that is, his friend, 1 King. 20.32,33. thus Shimei and Levi are called brethren in wickedwickednesse, that is, consederate in sinne. Thus all men are called brethren one to another, by reason of the bond of nature, Gen. 9.5. At the hand of a mans brother, will I require the life of man: Iewes Christians those that associate themselves together in wirre, after a speciall manner, are called Sworne brethren. Now wee must not restraine the word Brethren, to those that are brethren by nature, or by affinitie, or by couenant, neither enlarge it to all those that are brethren by the bond of nature: but onely to those that are brethren in the fourth exception, that is to say, brethren in religion, or brethren in the Lord, (though they be false brethren) if they bee brethren at least in outward profession: for reproofe being a part of Ecclesiasticall discipline, belongeth not to those that are out of the visible Church, as to Iewes, Turkes, Pagans; because our Saviour Christ saith, If hee heare thee not, tell the Church: and if hee will not heare the Church, let him bee vnto thee as a heathen man, and a Publican. Which cannot bee understood of him that is a heathen or Pagan already. And Paul saith, 1 Corinth. 5.11. If any that is called a brother, that is, a Christian, be a fornicatour, &c. and then hee addes in the next verse, what have I to do to iudge them that are without? that is, such as are no members of the Church, to whom Ecclesiasticall Discipline teacheth not; Doe not ye iudge them that are within? that is, such as are of the visible Church, such as doe subject themselves to the censure and discipline of the Church. It belongeth therefore to those that are of the Church, at least in shew; but specially to those that are of the same particular Church, living under the same particular government. Albeit the case may so fall out, that those of another Church, professing the same religion with us, may be reproved and censured: yea, one Church may admonish another; for they being members one of another, are to procure the good one of another, as Paul teacheth by the similitude of the head, and the members of the same body, 1 Cor. 12. Therefore all that are in the bosome of the Church, even the mighty Princes and Potentates of the earth, are subject to reproofe, if they doe offend: thus Nathan the Prophet reproved David, 2 Sam 12. and Azarias the Priest, rebuked Vzziah, 2 Chron. 26 18. and Paul reproved Peter to his face, Gal. 2.11. Therefore those men, yea, those Magistrates, or Monarchs, that cannot indure the least reproofe, and will not yeeld their neckes to Christ his yoke, and their backes to the rod of Ecclesiasticall censure, are greatly to be censured: for herein they contemne Gods ordinance. Let them consider, that they are not better than king David, who having sinned, patiently endured reproofe by Nathan. Let them remember how king Vzziah was stricken with leprosie for resisting God in the Ministery. And here the Popish sort come to be taxed, who exempt their clergy-men (as they call them) from all reproofes and Ecclesiasticall proceedings, in thrusting them into some one monastery or other, lest their exemplary punishment should bee a blemish or disparagement to their order and profession; whereas Paul would have the Ministers and Elders, yea, all superiours to be reproved as well as others, so it be done in meeke, & with due respect (as after I will shew.) Thus Paul bids the Colossians, that they should say to Archippus, Take heed to thy Ministery, that thou hast received in the Lord, that thou fulfill it, Col. 4.17.

Hieron. in hunc locum.

Gen. 49 5.

II. We are bound to reprove all that are in the church, towhom we owe duty of love, but we are to owe our superiours as much, if not more than others: therefore we are bound to reprove them as well as others. III. There is greater reason wee should reprove them than others. 2. Because they being in higher place, are in greater danger of falling than others, and therefore have more neede of admonitions and reproofs. 2. Because they have many that will flatter them, but few or none that will, or dare reprove them.

It will be said, all are not to bee reproved which live in the Church, for some be scorners, who (as Salomon saith) must not be reproved. And our Saviour Christ forbiddeth us, to cast pearles before swine, Matth. 7.6. I answer, that onely open scorners, contemners, persecuters of the word, are to be excepted: otherwise all wicked men are to be censured and rebuked. For 1. Christ speakes of manifest contemners of religion, when he saith, that they are like swine, which trample precious pearles under their feet: and of persecuters, when he saith, that like dogs they reuerse againe, and all to rend them. 2. Christ being here upon earth, did not hinder the Pharises, Sadduces, Publicans, and harlots, from comming to his Sermons: much lesse would he debar them of this censure of the Church. 3. The woman of Syrophenissa (though called a dogge) yet eateth of the crummes that fall from the childrens table, Mat. 15. 27. 4. Paul did often admonish and rebuke the Corinthians, though they were carnall and fleshly minded: therefore all men, though never so publike and notorious offenders, if they bee not open scorners or persecuters of the known truth) are to be reproved.

Obiect. Prophane men which notoriously offend and scandalize the Church by their wicked lives, have no fellowship with Christ, but are to be accounted as dogges out of the Church.

I answer 1. They are not to bee counted dogges, which doe acknowledge their fault, the greatnesse of their sinne, and the merite of Christ: for such a dogge was the Canonitish woman, who was a true believer. 2. This is agreeable to Saint Pauls practice, who did admonish those amongst the Corinthians, that were carnall, and did not at the very first first excommunicate them, or yet suspend them: and so answerably he commandeth Titus, that he should rebuke the Cretians sharpely, or precisely, for their notable lying and idlenesse, Titus 1.12. 3. Christ denieth not pardon to them that fall by recidivation, but would have them forgiven, not onely till seven times, but till seventy times seven times; and Paul speakes indefinitely in this place, that we should restore him that falleth by occasion into any offence, not specifying how often we should forgive. 4. Wee must distinguish betwixt the Magistrates sword, and the keyes of the Church: notorious offenders, when they repent, are to be received into the bosome of the Church, as sonnes of the Church: yet for that, they may, nay, they ought to be punished by the Magistrate: as the good theefe, (albeit a member of Christ) yet iustly punished for his offence.

II. For what faults men are iustly to bee reproved?

Men are to be reproved for every knowne sinne: This is manifest from the end of reproofes, which is, the gaining of our brother, that he perish not in his sinne: but every sin is of this nature and qualitie, that it bringeth death, being not repented of: therefore for every sinne a man is to be reproved. Secondly, our Saviour doth not restraine this precept to priuate injuries, because in that case we are to follow another rule. Resist not euill. Blesse and curse not. Doe good to them that hate you, &c. Thirdly, it is extended to every sinne, because hee which sinneth against God, or the whole Church, sinneth also against thee, and every particular member of the Church. For every Christian ought, more to bee affected for the sins committed against God, or the body of the Church, than for those that are personally and directly intended or done against himselfe: therefore Christ speaketh not onely of sinnes, as they are priuate wrongs, injuries, or damages, but as they are dishonourable to the Maiesty of God, scandalous to the Church, pernicious to him that committed them; not onely as they offend him against whom they are committed. It will bee obiected, that Christs commandement is to bee understood of those that wrong us; when he saith, If thy brother sinne against thee. Mauth. 18.15. I answer, that phrase and forme of speech [against thee] is not meant onely of private wrongs offered us, (as I have said) but of any sinne committed against GOD, for in every knowne sinne, we are in a sort wronged: first, because wee ought to bee so zealous of the glory of God, that we ought to be more grieved when men sinne against GOD, than when they sinne against us: yea, we must make Gods quarrell our owne quarrell. Secondly, because the which sinneth is in our presence, deeds, or at the least ought to offend us: as Hezechiah was offended when he heard the blasphemies of Rabshekah, 2 Kings 19.21. and Dauid, whose eyes powred out riuers of waters, because men kept not Gods Law; Psal. 119 verse 136. and Lot, who vexed his righteous soule, in seeing and hearing the abominations of the Sodomites, 2 Pet. 2. verse 8. For to expound these words [against thee] thou being privy to it, is far from the meaning of the Text; neither can the phrase be shewed in that sense.

Now that men are to bee reproved for knowne sinnes committed against God, of what nature, qualitie, and condition soever they bee, besides the former reasons, it is manifest, Leviticus 19.17. Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thine heart, but thou shalt plainly rebuke him, and shalt not suffer sinne to rest upon him. Therefore a man is to bee rebuked for every sinne. The Apostle, whersoever hee speaketh of reproofes, never restraines it to one kinde, but extends it to all knowne sinnes; 1 Corinth. 5. he reproves the incestuous person for his incest, and excommunicateth him being impenitent. So in this place, if a man be fallen by occasion into any offence; hee saith not, this or that offence, but in generall, into any offence, whether in life or doctrine, by evill example, or otherwise, against the first or second Table. Yet this is so to bee understood, as that injuries and wrongs offered us, are not to bee excluded: for even for them also, are men to bee reproved. It is the purpose of our Saviour Christ, Matth. 18. to teach this verie point, for having taught, Matth. 18 verse 6 that none should offend or scandal z his brother; in the tenth verse, he shewes what is to be done; if any man did offend his brother by injuring or wronging him: to wit, that he is to reprove him. I. He maketh him that suffered the wrong a witnesse, not an accuser, when he saith, if he heare thee not take yet with thee one or two; that by the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be confirmed, Mat. 18. 16. Hee bidderh him take one or two, that so it may be confirmed by the testimony; not of one or two, but of two or three; therefore the party offended is one of the witnesses. III. If it were unlawfull to reprove men for injuries offered us, what course could bee taken that is secretly wronged, none being privy to the wrong but himselfe, and the partie offending? Thus men would be imboldened to sinne, seeing they could by no meanes bee controlled, and so men might frustrate the Commandement of Christ: I adde further, that he which is injured, is fitter to reprove him that offered the injury, than any other. I. Because the offence both for substance and circumstance is better knowne vnto him, than to any other. II. Because the reproofe (in all likelihood) will take the better place, when as the offended shall have coales of fire heaped upon his head, when he shall see, that the party wronged is desirous of his good, and ready to requite good for evill, in seeking his amendment, whereas he sought his hurt. And whereas it may seeme that it favoureth of revenge, to reprove those that wrong us, I answer, though many in reproving revenge themselves, yet the one may be done without the other; and the right use of a thing is not to be neglected, because of the abuse thereof.

Object. Authors of heresie, schismes, dissentions are to be avoided, Rom. 16. 17. therefore not bee reproved. Answer. Generall places of Scripture, are to bee expounded, according to particular limitation in other places: now that generall text, Rom. 16. 17. is restrained and limited, Tit. 3. 10. Avoide an heretike after once or twice admonition.

Object. Paul commands the Corinthians, that without any more adoe, they should proceede forthwith to publike censure of Excommunication against the incestuous person: and as it may seeme, without any former reproofe, 2 Corinth. 5. besides, hee commands that wee should not eate, that is, familiarly converse with notorious persons, of scandalous life, 1 Corinth. 5. 11. and that we should withdraw our selves from every brother that walketh inordinately, 2 Thessalonians 3. 6. Answer. Pauls practice is not contrary to Christs precept. Hee purposed indeed to excommunicate the incestuous person, if hee persisted in his sinne, yet marke how; In the name, and by the power of our Lord Iesus Christ, 1 Cor. 5. 4. in which words the forme of proceeding against him is limited, and that according to Christ's institution, Matth. 18 the name and power of Christ, signifying the word and institution of Christ. 2. Paul doth plainly expound himselfe in other places, what his practice was, in that behalfe, as 2 Cor. 13. 1, 2. where he signifieth, that hee did not excommunicate uncleane persons, fornicatours, wantons, (mentioned chapter 12. 21.) before the third admonition; making his third coming unto them, in stead of three admonitions, or witnesses against them.

It will be said, that Paul threatneth when he commeth he will not spare the rest, 2 Cor. 13. 2. therefore it seemeth hee was resolved to excommunicate them, without any former proceeding against them. Answer. When Paul saith, I write to them which have sinned, and to all others, that if I come againe, I will not spare. By all others, hee meaneth not some which he purposed to excommunicate without former admonition, (for in writing this Epistle to them, he admonisheth them all to repent, lest when he come he would use severitie) but those which lived securely in the open breach of the Law, to whom hee threatned to come with a rod, if they did not amend, 2 Cor. 4. 21. and whom he now againe admonisheth, threatning, that if hee come the third time, he will not spare. Besides this, Paul should be unconstant, and unlike himselfe, if he should admonish uncleane persons, fornicatours, wantons, and that three times before excommunication: and should at the first excommunicate certaine others, without any precedent admonition.

3. The* word there used, signifieth reproofe inward, as it is taken, Luke 17. If thy brother sinne against thee, rebuke him: therefore the reproofe by many, or of many mentioned 2 Cor. 2. 6. may signifie as well the grave, serious, and effectuall reproofe of the Church, by which the incestuous person was reclaimed from his sinne, and so prevented the thunderbolt of excommunication, as the reall ejection out of the Church: and those words, vers. 10. If you forgive any thing, may as well signifie receiving into favour and familiarity before excommunication, upon his repentance, as restitution after excommunication.

4. Be it granted, hee were indeed excommunicate, (as it is most probable he was) yet hence it cannot be inferred, that they did proceed against him without precedent admonition. The Scripture is silent in this point. Therefore the reason is not good; It is not recorded, therefore it was not practised.

5. Though the Apostle command wee should have no familiaritie with inordinate livers, 2 Thes. 3. 6. but that wee withdraw our selves from them, yet he adds withall, that if there were any amongst them, that would not obey his sayings, they should note him by a letter, verse 14. and he expresly commandeth, that they should admonish the inordinate, 1 Th: 5. 14. for that was his practice, as it may appeare, 2 Th: 3. Those that are such, that is, inordinate livers, wee exhort and command by our Lord Iesus Christ, that they worke with quietnesse, and eat their owne bread.

 ἐπιτιμήσει.*

III. Who are to reprove.

It is a duty which concerneth all men; our Saviour Christ saith, If thy brother sinne against thee, reprove him: and the commandement is generall, Levit. 19. 17. Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart, but shalt rebuke him plainly. Now all Christians are brethren, (as I have shewed) therefore all men are bound to reprove their brethren, as occasion shall serve: Secondly, all Christians are members of the same body, whereof Christ is the head, therefore they are to helpe and further one another, as members of the naturall body doe: and this is done by admonition, and reprehension. Thirdly, the bond of charity bindeth all men to helpe their brethren in what they can for their good, and therefore (if need be) to reprove them. And albeit some may seeme to be unfit, or unworthy reprovers of others, being tainted with like or greater sinnes themselves, and so cannot cast out motes out of other mens eyes, they building beames in their own; yet we must know, that sinne frameth none from their duty: indeed none ought to reprove, either with scandall to others, or with hurt and hinderance of him that is reproved; yet no man is exempted from this dutie. For every man ought to be cleare and blamelesse, specially of open crimes, that so hee may more freely and fruitfully reprove his neighbour; but though he bee not, yet hee remaineth still bound to the performance of this dutie. Our Savior saith not, that he which hath a beame in his eye, is therefore freed from pulling forth the mote out of his brothers eye; but, first cast out the beame out of thine owne eye, and then thou shalt see to pull out the mote out of thy brothers eye. They therefore are severely to be censured, nay, deeply to be condemned, who say with Cain, Am I my brothers keeper? as though it concerned them not a whit whether he sinke or swimme; as though every man were to looke to himselfe alone; for his owne behoofe and benefit, and not upon the things of his brethren, for their good? or as though God had not made every man a gardian to his brother? The dim candle light of corrupt nature condemneth these men, which teacheth, that he which may save, and doth not, doth in effect as much as kill or destroy. The duty therefore lieth upon all, but chiefly upon the Pastours and Ministers of the word, for they are to enquire into the lives of men, specially of those that are committed and commended to their charge, for which cause they are called the Lords overseers, or watchmen, Ezechiel 33. and 34. And if they doe not strengthen the weake, heale the sicke, binde up the broken, bring againe that which was driven away, nor seeke that which was lost, &c. He will require his bloud at their hands. Ez. 34 v. 4. 10. Paul injoynes the Pastours of the Church of Ephesus, that they should take heed to themselves, and to the flocke, whereof the holy Ghost had made them overseers. Act. 20. 28. and hee commandeth Timothy, that he should be instant in season, and out of season; that he should improve, rebuke, exhort, with all long suffering and doctrine, 2 Tim. 4. 1. and Titus, that hee rebuke and exhort with all authoritie. Tit. 2. 15.

Further, it is to be observed, that though all men are bound to reprove their neighbours if they offend, yet in five cases they are not bound.

1. If a man bee ignorant of the offence. For a man that reproveth another, must bee certaine of the fault, otherwise hee doth purchase to himselfe a blot: and private persons are not to pry into other mens actions, that so they may have matter to reprove, Proverb. 24. 15. For we are bound to reprove, as wee are bound to give almes: now wee are not bound in giving almes to seeke some, to whom we may give; if wee give to those whom wee meete, that stand in need of our almes, we have done our duty. The like is in reproofes. And although reproofe be a debt which we owe to our neighbours, yet is it no debt due to any private person (for then wee were bound to search out the party, and discharge the debt) but it is a publike debt, which we owe to all: and therefore it is not necessary we should seek them out. If we discharge it to those we meet withall, it is sufficient. S. Augustine saith well, Admonet Dominus non negligere invicem peccata nostra non quarendo quod reprehendas, sed videndo quid corrigas. De verb. Dom. serm. 16.

II. If he have repented of his fact, he is not to be reproved, for the end of reproofe is to reclaime him, therefore if he be reclaimed already, there is no place left for reproofe: although the Magistrate may punish and correct him in regard of the common good.

III. A man is not to reprove, if hee bee certaine his reproofe will doe no good: for when the end ceaseth, all things tending to the end doe likewise cease; therefore if there be no hope of amendment, (which is the end of reproofe) reproofe is to be omitted; specially if it bee so farre from bettering the party that it make him much worse. Salomon saith, He which instructeth a scorner, getteth himselfe reproach, and he that reproveth a wicked man, purchaseth to himselfe a blot, Proverbs 9. 7. And then hee addes in the next verse, Rebuke not a scorner, least he hate thee, rebuke a wise man, and he will love thee. And verily it were a great folly to spend labor in vain, in telling them of their faults, when our schooling will not better them, but incense them more and more: It were better to bee silent, or to separate from them, than to stirre up hornets, or to thrust our hands into a wasps nest. It is well said of one, that he which shall bestow the seedes of wholesome admonitions on such curst and unprofitable ground, shall reape nothing for his paines, but the thornes of mockes and reproaches. Musset.

It will bee said, the Iudge ceaseth not to punish malefactors, though they bee not bettered by the punishment; therefore seeing brotherly correction is commanded, it must not bee omitted, though the partie repoved be not bettered, but offended thereby, and made worse. I answer. The reason is nothing like, for the Iudge in punishing doth principally intend the good of the common wealth, which consisteth by chastising, or by cutting off malefactours, though they themselves be nothing bettered: but the end of reproofe, is the amendment and good of him that is reproved: therefore a man may not be reproved, except it be for his private good, though the Magistrate may punish him, in regard of the common good.

IV. Reproofe may bee omitted, if it bee certaine that the party will either presently redresse his fault without reproofe: or that some others will admonish him thereof, whom it doth more neerely concerne. As the giving of almes may be omitted, if it be certaine that the partie that is in want will provide for himselfe, or that he will be sufficiently relieved by others.

Phil. 2. 5.

Gen. 4. 9.

V. If it may be done more conveniently and profitably another time, it may be omitted for the time. Except in these five cases, he that doth not reprove his brother, is guilty of his sinne, Levit. 5.1.

VI. Point. In what manner are men to bee reproved?

The manner to be observed in reprouing I will lay downe in ten rules.

I. A man must so reprove his brother, as that it may be most for the advancement of Gods glory, best for the winning of him to God, and least to the defaming of him abroad to the world: and that it may appeare unto him, that hee doth it of love (aiming at nothing but his good) not of any malicious humour, nor sinister affection of revenge, or vaineglory, &c. and that this may be done, two things must bee practised. First, he that reproveth another, must pray that God would so guide his tongue, and move the others heart, that his reproofe may be profitable unto him: for without Gods blessing our admonitions are but words spoken in the winde, 1 John 5.16. If any see his brother sinne a sinne that is not unto death, let him pray, &c. Secondly, we may not traduce him to others, either before or after our reproofe, 1 Pet 4.8. This rule is generall; the rest following are more speciall.

II. Every reproofe must bee grounded upon a certaine knowledge of the fault committed. For wee may not goe upon private surmises and suppoſes, or flying reports and rumours blazed abroad: no nor upon vehement suspitions, or strong presumptions, Dent. 13.verſ.14. for in so doing we shall but offend the party, who knowes himselfe to be innocent of the crime objected, and purchase to our selves a blot of indiscretion, in being zealous without knowledge. Therefore for secret sinners, men are not to be reproved: Secret I call those that are knowne only to God, and the conscience of the doer: or onely to others, but not to us. This was practised by S. Paul, Gal. 2 14. who reproved not Peter, till he was throughly informed of his offence: which condemnes the common practice of the multitude, who censure and reprove others, specially publike persons, as Magistrates and Ministers, upon false reports, or wicked surmises, when as no accusation may be admitted against such, under two or three witnesses, 1 Timothy 5.20. Yet a man may reprove upon credible information, as Paul did the Corinthians for their contentions, grounding his reproofe upon the report of the house of Cloe, 1 Cor. 1.11. which he beleeved to be true in part, 1 Cor. 11.18. If the report be not certaine, we must onely reprove hypothetically, and not peremptorily.

III. In reproving others, wee must consider our selves, specially our owne weakneſs, and beginne the reproofe in our selves, if not for the same fault wee reprove in our neighbour, yet for as great as that (if not a greater) in another kinde: this manner of reproving is injoyned by S. Paul, when he saith, considering thy selfe, lest thou also be tempted: and a man is to consider himselfe in three respects: in regard of the time past, present, and to come: in regard of the time past, that he was as wicked, prophane, and graceleſſe as another: yea that he was (as the Apoſtle speaketh) darkneſſe, and the childe of wrath as well as others: Paul shewes the force of this consideration, when he perswades men to be soft and gentle, shewing all meeknesse to all men: a reason taken from the consideration of our owne frailties and sinnes in time past: For (saith he) we our selves also were in times past unwiſe, disobedient, deceived, serving the lusts and divers pleasures: living in malicious neſſe and envy, hateſull, and hating one another, Titus 3.23. In regard of the time present, that he is but a fraile man, ready to fall every moment, that hee is not able of himselfe to thinke the least good thought, much leſſe to reſiſt the least temptation, and that whatsoever he is, he is out of himselfe, by grace in Christ, as Paul saith, By the grace of God I am that I am So that were it not for this preventing and cooperating grace, he would fall into as great enormities as other men. In regard of the time to come, Consider thy selfe, lest thou also bee tempted: remember Peters Item, 1 Cor. 10.12. Let him that thinketh hee ſtandeth, take heed leſt he fall: for if thou haſt not bin overtaken with the like sin, yet thou maiſt be hereafter: therefore as thou wouldeſt have others to bee compaſſionate towards thee, if thou were in the like case, so be thou to them. The not observance of this rule, is the cause that there are so many censorious Catoes, so many severe Ariſtarchi of others mens actions, so many that are sharpe sighted and Eagle eyde, in spying motes in other mens eyes; and as blind as moles or beetles, in discerning the great beames that are in their owne eyes.

IV. It is very requisite and expedient, that the reprover bee not tainted with the same, or the like fault which he reproveth in another, leſt it bee said unto him, Phyſitian cure thy selfe, Luke 4.23. In that thou judgeſt another, thou condemneſt thy selfe, Rom. 2.verſ.1. Therefore David saith not, Let the wicked smite me, or let him that is as deepe in fault as my selfe reprove me: but Let the righteous ſmite me, for that is a benefit, and let him reprove me, that ſhall be as a precious oile, that ſhall not bee wanting to my head, Pſal. 141.5. For albeit in regard of the reproofe it selfe, it be not greatly materiall, yet it is not so expedient, nor so profitable in regard of the reprover: For becauſe he seemeth unworthy to reprove another, who is to be reproved himselfe, being as deepe in fault as my self: because it will bee thought, that hee which inclineth no conſcience to redreſſe himselfe, will not be so ready to reclaime others, of love to their persons, or hatred hatred of their sinnes, or zeale of Gods glory: but for pride, or businesse in other mens matters, or vanity, or some such sinister ends.

Aut ſumus, aut ſuimus, vel poſſumus eſſe quod hic eſt.

VI. All reproofes must so be miniſtred, as that the party reproved may bee brought to a true sight of his sinne: as also to a lively sense and feeling thereof, and so to a compunction of heart, by reason of it, and of the wrath of God, which attendeth upon him for his sinne: For the performance of this rule, wee have the example of God himselfe, Pſalm 50. verſ. 21. I will reprove thee, and ſet thy sinnes in order before thee: as also of the Prophet Nathan, who by the parable convicted Davids conscience, and so made him condemne himselfe, 2 Sam. 12. And the precept of Saint Paul, commanding Timothy, that he should so reprove, as that he convict the conscience of the sinner, when he saith, Reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long ſuffering and Doctrine: now this is done by shewing the true meaning of the law, and the curse of God annexed to every breach thereof, and so by unfolding the horrible greatneſſe of sinne, to the conscience of him whom wee doe reprove. For reproofes which are not thus qualified, are but cold and perfunctory, such as was that of Eli, in reproving his lewd sonnes. Why doe ye ſuch things? for all this people I heare evill reports of you: doe no more, my ſons, for it is no good report that I heare, 1 Sam. 2. 23, 24. being a meanes rather to cherish sinne in them, than to reclaime them from it. These kindes of reproofes, not unfitly may bee compared to hot and hasty healing salves, which draw a faire skinne over a foule wound; which because it is not soundly cured from the bottome, but overly healed up, doth afterward apoſtemate or fistulate, and becommeth more dangerous and desperate than ever before.

VI. The vineger of sharpe reprehenſion must be allayed and tempered with the oyle of milde and gentle exhortation; we may not onely use the corraſives of the law, but withall we must apply the cordials of the Goſpel: bitter pills of reproofe must bee sugred over with loving and affectionate perſwasion, lest the patient abhorre the phyſicke: every man in this case is to follow the skilfull Chyrurgion, who doth not alway use section and uſtion, in launcing the wound with sharpe instruments, but mollifying ointments, and mundifying waters, to cleanse and supple the wound and heale the sore. Paul saith, That the ſervant of the Lord muſt be gentle toward all men: that hee muſt inſtruct with meeknesſe them that are contrary minded, 2 Tim 2.24, 26. and in this place he commands the Galatians that they should reſtore their brethren with the ſpirit of meeknesſe. The word translated [reſtore] is very emphaticall: for it signifieth to set a bone that is broken, or any member of the body that is out of joynt: and therefore wee are to deale with a man that is fallen, and by his fall hath disjoynted some member of the new man, as the Chyrurgion doth with an arme or a legge that is broken or out of joynt, to handle it prudently, diligently, so as it may be most for his good, at least for his paine. More particularly, this may bee done foure wayes.

1. When a man doth prepound the reproofe in his owne person, as Paul did, 2 Cor. 4. 6. Now theſe things, brethren, I have figuratively applyed unto mine owne ſelfe and Apollos, for your ſakes, that ye might learne by us, that no man preſume above that which is written, &c.

2. When a man doth not directly reprove another in plaine termes, but closely shewes a mislike of the fact, and so prosecuteth a reproofe in an exhortation, and so lappeth up his pill, (as it were) in sugar: as when a man sweares; not alwayes to say, thou, &c. but you and maſter shall ſerve betwixt us: what needs this vehemency betwixt us two? I will as ſoone take your word as your oath, &c.

3. When the reproofe is propounded in a parable: as Nathan did David, Thou are the man, 2 Samuel 12. 7.) wee must so carry our selves, as that the party may see himselfe rather reproved by God, than by us: and not to proceed bluntly to worke, to rebuke and censure at the very first: but to use some preface beforehand; as, that we doe that which we doe in love of his person, for his good, wishing him well, both temporally, the reputation of his name, and eternally the salvation of his soule; and that wee consider our selves herein, how that we may easily bee overtaken as he was. These cautions observed, the inferiour may reprove his superiour, as 2 King. 5. 13.

VII. Every reproofe must be fitted to the quality and condition of him whom we reprove, and to the nature of the offence for which hee is reproved: wee shall fit the reproofe to the person reproved, if wee consider that a man may reprove another foure wayes. First, by friendly admonition: and thus one equall is to reprove another. Secondly, by reverent and ſubmiſſe exhortation: thus the younger must reprove the elder, the inferiour their superiours. It is Gods commandement that we should not rebuke an Elder, but exhort him as a father, 1 Tim. 5. 1. And thus Kings and great Potentates are to be reproved, they being Patres patriæ. That saying of the Philosopher, ἄνακτα παίδευε, hath a place in this case. Thirdly, by ſharpe reprehenſion: thus Elders or Superiours are to reprove their inferiours, specially if the fact bee notorious, scandalous, or dangerous. Paul commandeth Titus that he should rebuke the Cretians ſharpely, that they might bee found in faith, Titus 1.13. Fourthly, by due chaſtiſement and correction: thus the superiours must reprove their inferiours over whom they are set, as the father the childe, the master the servant, the Magistrate the subiect, &c. and thus the inferiour cannot reprove his superiour; nor one equall another, though he doe it with never so great mildnesse.

correction

Secondly, wee shall fit our reproofe to the offence committed; if in spirituall wisedome and discretion wee put a difference betwixt sinne and sinne, as the Apostle teacheth us, Iud.v.22,23. Have compassion on some in putting difference: and other saue with feare, pulling them out of the fire. Sinnes committed of humane frailty, or through ignorance, must bee distinguished from those of malice, of pride, and presumption; both must be reproved, yet after a different manner: for the one must bee wonne with gentlenesse, the other with sharpnesse; the one with lenity, the other with severity: to the one we must come with the pleasant pipe of Christ, to the other with the lamentation of Iohn Baptist. To the one in the spirit of Elias; to the other in the spirit of Moses. When gentle admonition would take no place, Christ thundreth out threats against Corazin and Bethsaida. And Paul threatens severity, when lenity will doe no good, 2 *Cor.*13.

VIII. Every reproofe must bee administred in fit time, when we may doe the most good: therefore if in wisedome we shall foresee fitter opportunitie to win our brother, we are to take that time, and to omit the present: not to tell him of his fault being drunk, or in the heate of his passion, but after when hee commeth to himselfe, as Abigail dealt with Nabal. 1 *Sam.*25. For the commandemene of God touching reproofe, being affirmative, bindeth not to all times, but onely to that which in spirituall discretion wee shall judge the fittest, both to reclaime him, and saue his credit. Salomon saith, That a word spoken in due time, is like apples of gold, with pictures of silver, Prov. 25.11. Now if this be true of a word spoken in due time, it is much more true of a reproofe delivered in due season. *There is a time for al things, Eccles.*3 8. And surely if every thing that commeth to passe in the world have his set time, and opportunitie, reproofe must needes have his time and season.

IX. Secret sinnes, knowne onely to thee, or to a few, must bee reproved secretly betwixt thee and the party alone: they must not be divulged, but concealed in love, which covereth a multitude of sinnes. For if thou hast offended, or *if thy brother hath ought against thee, goe thy way, and bee reconciled to thy brother, Matth.*5.23,24. If he have trespassed against thee, or *thou hast ought against him, goe and tell him his fault betweene him and thee alone, Matth.*18.15. And albeit Salomon say, *That open rebuke is better than secret love, Prov.*27.5. yet it makes nothing against this rule, for he

A understandeth not the reproofe which is uttered before witnesses, but that private reproofe which is given to his face, and not behinde his backe, betwixt them two alone. But open sinnes are to be reproved openly, 1 *Tim.*5.20. Them that sinne, rebuke openly, that the rest also may feare. Which text of Scripture must rightly be conceived: for it is not a generall commandement given to all, (as some have thought, in alledging it to prove that they may lawfully reprove open swearers, and open drunkards, and that openly:) but it is a speciall commandement, given to the Pastours, or governours of the Church, that they should reprove those Elders, and so consequently all such as were convicted of any crime, by witnesses, and that before all men, that is, before the whole Church, and not before all men in every place, and assembly, where they offend. For wee have no warrant in Scripture so to doe. Secondly, this open disgracefull rebuking of men, will rather harden them in their sinnes, than any way reclaime them from sinne. Augustine saith well, Prapudore incipiet defendere peccatum suum, & quem vis correctionem, facis pejorem. Thirdly, they might as well say, a man is to be reproved for every sinne, and that openly before all men; as for open sinners, because Paul saith not, Them that sinne openly, rebuke before all men, but, them that sinne, rebuke openly. Fourthly, the words depend upon the former verse, where it is said, Receive not an accusation against an Elder, under two or three witnesse, and then it followes, Those that sinne, rebuke openly: that is, those Elders that sinne, and have beene first privately admonished, and after that before witnesses: if they be accused by two or three witnesses; then reprove them openly before all men; that is, before the whole Church.

X. Wee must carefully observe the order set downe by our Saviour Christ, *Matth.*18. 15. First, we must try whether by private reproofe our brother will be reclaimed, or not; if hee bee, we must proceed no further, for then we have attained the maine end of all reproofes, if he heare thee, thou hast wonne thy brother: if not, we must take one or two, which may witnesse the fact, and that for sundry causes: the first is given by Saint Hierome, upon the place, That they may witnesse that to be a sinne, for which he is reproved, and that hee is worthily reproved for the same. The second is laid downe by S. Augustine, Epist. 109. to coivince the party offending, of the act committed, if hee should iterate the same againe. The third, by *Chrysostome, Hom.*6. in Matth. to witnesse that he which reproves, hath discharged his duty, and done what in him lay to winne his brother. If he be reclaimed at the second reproofe before witnesses, wee must proceed no further, but rest there, as before: if not, wee must relate it to the Church: if he heare the Church, there is no further further proceedings to bee used: if hee heare A not the Church, he is to be excommunicated and holden as a heathen. Offenders therefore are not to bee excommunicated at the verie first, but orderly to be proceeded against, and lavingly to be dealt withall, and patiently to bee endured, according as the Apostle commandeth; 2 Tim. 4.2. Reprove with all long-suffering. It may be objected, that Paul bideth Titus hee should *avoid an heretike after once or twice admonition, Tit.*3.10. Therefore we are not to proceed against offenders according to Christs commandement. Ans. That text makes nothing against this orderly proceeding commended unto us by our Saviour Christ. For first, this commandement is not given to all, but onely to the Pastours (as here to Titus) or Bishops, who representing the whole Church, are to give sentence of excommunication. Secondly, it is to be understood of publike admonition in the face of the Church, after that the partie hath beene privately dealt withall; and if after this admonition, he doe not recant his errors, and reforme himselfe, then is he to be rejected as an hereticke, that is, αὐτοκατάκριτον, *condemned of his owne selfe, Tit.*3.11.

De verb. Dom. serm. 16.

Nevertheless, there bee certaine cases, in which we are not bound to follow this order or manner of proceeding in our reproofes, and they are principally three.

I. When the sinne committed tendeth to the hurt of the Church, or common-wealth, and there be danger in delay; as also danger to the partie that is privie to it, and doth not detect it; and small hope of hindering of it: (as when a man doth plot treason, or intermeddeth in treasonable practices;) in this case the party offending is not first privately to bee reproved, but publikely to bee detected, and so to be dealt withall of the Magistrate, according to the nature and quality of his offence: for the common good is to bee preferred before any one mans private good: Melius est ut pereat unus, quam multi. Better it is that one man perish, then that the band of unity should be broken.

II. When the fault is greater if it be committed, then the losse of his credit that committed it, though it be published. For example, if one intend to slay another, and lie in waite for him, in this case wee are not bound privately to admonish the party intending murther, or bloodshed, but to detect him to the Magistrate, for his life is to bee preferred before the mans credit that sought his life. When Pauls kinsman (to wit his sisters sonne) heard, that above 40. men had conspired together, and bound themselves with an oath, that they would neither eate nor drinke, till they had killed Paul, he doth not goe and reprove them for this fact, but relates it to Paul: and Paul hearing of it, doth not counsell him to goe and reprove them first, and if they would not hearken to him, to take two or three witnesses, &c. but sent him straight, to Act.24.16,17.

B the chiefe captaine, that hee might take order to prevent their bloody attempt.

III. When a man is assured private reproofe will doe no good, and that the party offending will not brooke it, nor take reproofe at his hand, he is not to follow that order and manner of reproofe: but to acquaint them with it, that can and will redresse it. Thus Iosephus (as it may seeme,) did not reprove his brethren, because he knew well they would not be brethred by him, (seeing they hated him) but *he brought unto his father their evill sayings, Gen.*38.2. Albeit others say, that their sinne was publike, and therefore needed no private admonition, and others, that he did admonish them secretly, before hee did relate it to his father, (although it bee not expressly set downe in the text) Howsoever this example bee understood, the rule is certaine, that private reproofe is to bee omitted, when it will either doe hurt, or no good.

2. Beare ye one anothers burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ.

In this verse the Apostle propounds another rule, touching brotherly love, and it dependeth upon the former, as an answer to a secret objection, which might be made upon the former doctrines in the 1. verse, in this manner: Thou enjoyneth us wee should restore our brother, if he fall by occasion into any sinne, in the spirit of meeknesse: but there are some infirmities in our brethren which cannot be amended or redressed by brotherly correction, what is to bee done in such a case? The Apostle answereth, such infirmities must be borne, and tolerated, in these words, Beare ye one anothers burdens: and this rule is enforced by an argument taken from the excellency thereof, in that the practising of it, is the keeping and fulfilling of the whole law, in these words, And so fulfil the law of Christ.

First, for the rule: The Apostle calleth slippes, infirmities, and sinnes, by the name of burdens, taking his metaphor from travellers, who use to ease one another, by carrying one anothers burden, either wholly or in part: that so they may more cheerefully, and speedily goe on their journey. Mens burdens are of two sorts: either such, as every man is to beare by himselfe alone, without shifting them off his owne shoulder, and laying them upon other men (of which we are to intreat, when we come to the fift verse.) Or such as may bee borne of others, as well as of our selves: of these the Apostle speaketh in this place, when he saith, Beare ye one anothers burdens: and there are foure sorts of them: First, those whereof our brethren may either bee wholly disburdened, or in part eased; such is the heavy burden of poverty, sicknesse, nakednesse, hunger, thirst, banishment, imprisonment, &c. Secondly, the outward and bodily wants, that are in sundry persons, as blindnesse, deafenesse, maimednesse, lamenesse, nesse, &c. Thirdly, personall or actuall sinnes, of men, as anger, hatred, jealousie, envy, &c. Lastly, outward frailties in the actions of mens lives, (which are not sele offencelesse of those that are subject to them, but are heavie burdens to others, with whom they converse) as curiousnesse, nicenesse, slownesse, selfe-conceitednesse, frowardnesse, hastinesse, and such like. The two first sorts are to bee borne three wayes. First, by having a holy sympathy, and fellow-feeling of them, in weeping with those that weepe: and in remembring those that are in bonds, as though wee were bound with them, those that are in affliction, as if we were also afflicted in the body, Heb. 13.3. This was Pauls practice. 2 Cor. 11.29. Who is weake, and I am not weake? who is offended, and I burne not? Secondly, by bearing with them in their wants and infirmities, according to that of the Apostle, Beare with the weake, 1 Thess. 5. 14. Thirdly, by putting under our shoulders, and bearing part of the burden with them, in helping and easing of them in their necessities. Rom. 12.v. 13. Distributing unto the necessities of the Saints. The two latter sorts (being principally meant in this place) are not to be borne by dissembling of them, or yeelding to them, much lesse by bolstering men up in them, or by partaking with them: For albeit the adulterer and unchaste person would gladly make Christ a baud, the theefe would make him his receiver: and many there are who would be content to shift off their sins, in whole, or in part, and lay them upon the shoulders of others: yet in Gods cause and quarrell, in matters of faith wee are not to yeeld a haires bredth; Moses told Pharaoh, that he would not leave so much as a hoofe behinde him, Exod. 10.26. And Paul would not give place to Peter, and them that were with him not not for a moment, that the truth of the Gospell might continue with them, Gal. 2.5. They must therefore be borne by disburdening them of them, by gentle and milde admonition; or if they cannot be redressed, by bearing and tolerating of them, in passing by them, as though wee did not perceive them: for as Salomon saith, It is the glory of man to passe by infirmities: or lastly, by praying for them. For if we shall breake the bond of brotherly love, and Christian societie, by reason of these, or such like infirmities, which wee see to bee in our brethren; we walke not in love, in that we beare not their burdens, as the Apostle commandeth in this place, and Eph. 4 2. Support one another, through love. And surely, this is a most necessary precept, of great use and consequence in the life of man: for except wee beare and tolerate the frailties of men, in passing by them in such sort, as I have said, it is impossible we should lead a quiet or comfortable life in any societie. We must seeke for a new world, or leaving the fellowship of men, betake our selves to some solitary desert, as sundry Eremites, and Anchorites have done,

Rom. 14.1. and 15.1.

Pro. 19.11.

A because they could not (by reason of their froward & wayward natures) digest the manifold inconveniences which they saw to bee amongst men in publike societies. This duty therefore of bearing one anothers burdens, albeit it be difficult, yet it must be practised, especially of those that are strong men in Christ: for as in architecture, all stones are not fit to be laide in every place of the building, but some below, as the fundamentall and chiefe corner stones, to beare up the weigh and burden of the building; others above in the wall, that so the whole building may be firme and compact in it selfe: So in the Church, which is the house of God, (where all beleevers are lively stones, built upon Christ Iesus the chiefe corner stone, bearing up the whole burden, even all the infirmities of the Church:) those that are strong must support the infirmities of the weake, that so the whole building being compact and knit together, may grow up to a holy temple in the Lord. For otherwise the whole frame of the building must needs bee dissolved, and come to a ruine. It is a common proverbe amongst the Italians, that Hard with hard never makes a good wall: By which is signified, that as stones cobbled up one upon another without morter to combine them, make but a tottering wall that may easily be shaken; but if there be morter betwixt them, yeelding to the hardnesse of the stones, it makes the whole like a solide continued body, strong and stable; able to endure the shocke of the ramme, or the shot of the cannon: So, that societie, where all are as stiffe as stones, which will not yeeld a haire one unto another, one being as fast, as froward, as hastie as another, cannot bee firme and durable. But where men are of a soft, a yeelding, and relenting nature, giving place to the stiffenesse of others, and yeelding to the tempest for a time, that societie is compact in it selfe, and so cannot but continue, because one doth beare the infirmities of another. Doest thou therefore see thy brother to be overtaken with some sinne, or to be over-curious, very froward, too selfe-conceited, abounding in his owne sense, exceeding hastie, &c. beare this infirmity now; and so hee (perhaps) may beare with thee in the like case, another time: or beare thou with his curiousnesse, hee will beare with thy dulnes: beare with his sicklinesse, he will beare with thy frowardnes: beare with his hastines, he will beare with thy selfe-conceitednes. For it is to bee observed, that the Apostle saith not, that those onely which are strong, should beare the failties of the weake, but that both strong and weake should beare one anothers burdens, it being a mutuall and reciprocall duty imposed upon all, because there is none so strong, but one time or other hee may slip, and fall, and so may stand in need to bee supported even of the weake: the palsie man being

B

1 Pet. 2.5.

C

Duro con duro non fabricatur murus.

D

ing sicke, had his burden (to wit, his bed) borne, but being restored, could helpe to beare another mans burden: so if thou beare another mans burden that is weak, when he is strong, he will be ready to beare thine, if need require. God commands, that if wee finde our neighbours beast lying under his burden, we must lift him up; how much more ought we to help our brethren, lying under the burden of sinne? Therefore the strong are to support the weak, and the weake must (upon occasion) support the strong: as in the arch of a building, one stone doth beare mutually; though not equally, the burden of the rest: or as barrs swimming over a great water, doe ease one another, in laying their heads one upon the backe of another, the foremost that hath none to support him, changing his place, and resting his head upon the hindermost. Thus in a family, the husband must beare with the nicenes, and frowardnes of his wife: the wife with the fastnesse, or hastinesse of her husband. Those Magistrates, and Ministers, which are too cold and backward in good things, must beare with the over great heate, and forwardnesse of their fellow-Magistrates, or fellow-ministers: and those must beare with them againe, seeing both aime at the same end, the edification of the Church, and good of the Common-wealth. Thus in Gods providence Luther and Melanthon were happily joyned together, and did beare with one another, Luther with his sostnesse, Melanthon with his hastinesse; hee with his boldnesse, he with his timerousnesse: Melanthon did well temper the heate and zeale of Luther with his mildnesse, being as oyle to his vinegre; and Luther on the other side, did warme his coldnesse, being as fire to his frozennesse. Thus the Apostle commandeth that wee should beare with the infirmities of those that are weake, and not sufficiently catechized in the doctrine of our spirituall liberty purchased unto us by Christ, and not to please our selves too much, but rather to please our neighbour in that which is good to edification, Rom. 15.1, 2. For amongst other properties of love reckoned up by S. Paul, 1 Cor. 13. this is not the least, that it suffereth all things, v. 7. that is, all such things as may be borne & suffered with good conscience, for the good of our brother. For looke as a lover doth suffer all things in regard of his love, in three respects: First, in undergoing any labour, that may be for her good, as Hercules did for the love of Omphale. Secondly, in bearing patiently all hard measure that is offered him for her sake, as Iacob did for the love of Rachel. Thirdly, in enduring any thing that is imposed upon him: and putting up what wrong soever is done unto him by her, as Samson did for the love of Dalilah. So Christian charity causeth us to suffer all things. First, pro fratribus, to endure any labour, cost, or travell, for their good. Secondly, propter

August. ser. 21. de verb. Apost. Beda in hunc locum ex Aug.

B

1 Pet. 4.9. ἐις ἑαυτους.

C

D

fratres, to beare all afflictions for their sakes as Paul saith hee did for the Church, 2 Tim. 2.10. Thirdly, a fratribus, to beare wrongs, and put up injuries at their hands, as he did, being shamefully intreated at Philippi, stoned, scourged, &c. This must bee considered of us all, but especially of such as will give a man as good as he bringeth, who are but a word, and a blow: a lie, and a stabbe: a word and a writ: such as cannot beare quiets, (as they say) nor brooke any little wrong, nor indure any small frailty in their brethren. These men must remember, that in bearing coales, that is, in suffering and forbearing, they heape up coales of fire upon their heads (as Paul speaketh, Rom. 12.20.) as also that God doth beare with them in greater matters; even when they wound him with their oathes, Leviticus 24.11. and give him the lie through unbeliefe, 1 Iohn 5.10. as hee bare the manners of the Israelites in the wilderness. That Christ, whose example we are to follow, hath borne our infirmities, Esa. 53. and doth ease them that travell, and are heavy laden, Matth. 11.28. and therefore wee treading in his steps, must forbeare one another, and forgive one another, if any man have a quarrell against another, even as Christ forgave us, Coloss. 3.13. Thus, if when we see any sin in our brother, we reclaime him from it, by reproofes, exhortations, admonitions, we are Gods instruments, to save a soule from death, and so doe cover a multitude of sinnes, even before God, Iam. 5.20. And if when wee perceive common frailties in our brethren, we shall not stand too much upon our right, but shall yeeld unto them in bearing, forbearing, and forgiving, wee shall cover a multitude of sinnes, 1 Pet. 4.8.

ἐπιεικεῖς. Act. 23.18.

Thus much touching the rule, now I proceede to the reason, whereby the Apostle urgeth the practice of this precept, in these words, And so fulfill the Law of Christ. The reason standeth thus: That which is the fulfilling of the Law of Christ, must bee practised of us: but the bearing of one anothers burdens, is the fulfilling of the Law of Christ: therefore wee ought to beare one anothers burdens. For the clearing of this text, sundry things are to be considered.

I. It may be demanded, what the Apostle understandeth by the Law of Christ? Ans. Nothing else but the doctrine, precept, or commandement of Christ; enjoyning the love of our brethren. Iohn 13.34. 35. A new commandement give I unto you, that ye love one another, as I have loved you, &c. And it is all one, as if he had said, beare yee one anothers burdens, and so fulfill the commandement of Christ, who hath after a speciall manner commanded the love of your brethren. Now the Apostle rather useth the word Law, than Commandement, because he would make a clearer antithesis betwixt the Law of Christ, and the law of Moses, so vehemently urged by the false apostles; as if hee should have nesse, &c. Thirdly, personall or actuall sinnes, of men, as anger, hatred, jealousie, envy, &c. Lastly, outward frailties in the actions of mens lives, (which are not felt oftentimes of those that are subject to them, but are heavie burdens to others, with whom they converse) as curiousnesse, nicenesse, slownesse, selfe-conceitednesse, frowardnesse, hastinesse, and such like. The two former sorts are to bee borne three wayes. First, by having a holy sympathy, and fellow-feeling of them, in weeping with those that weepe: and in remembring those that are in bonds, as though wee were bound with them, those that suffer affliction, as if we were also afflicted in the body, Heb. 13.3. This was Pauls practice. 2 Cor. 11.29. Who is weake, and I am not weake? who is offended, and I burne not? Secondly, by bearing with them in their wants and infirmities, according to that of the Apostle, Beare with the weake. 1 Thess. 5. 14. Thirdly, by putting under our shoulders, and bearing part of the burden with them; in helping and easing of them in their necessities. Rom. 12.v. 13. Distributing unto the necessities of the Saints. The two latter sorts (being principally meant in this place) are not to be borne by dissembling of them, or yeelding to them, much lesse by bolstering men up in them, or by partaking with them. For albeit the adulterer and unchaste person would gladly make Christ a baud, the theefe would make him his receiver: and many there are who would be content to shift off their sins, in whole, or in part, and lay them upon the shoulders of others: yet in Gods cause and quarrell, in matters of faith wee are not to yeeld a haires bredth, Moses told Pharaoh, that he would not leave so much as a hoofe behinde him, Exod. 10. 26. And Paul would not give place to Peter, and them that were with him not not for a moment, that the truth of the Gospell might continue with them, Gal. 2.5. They must therefore be borne by disburdening them of them, by gentle and milde admonition; or if they cannot be redressed, by bearing and tolerating of them, in passing by them, as though wee did not perceive them: for as Salomon saith, It is the glory of man to passe by infirmities: or lastly, by praying for them. For if we shall breake the bond of brotherly love, and Christian societie, by reason of these, or such like infirmities, which we see to bee in our brethren; we walke not in love, in that we beare not their burdens, as the Apostle commandeth in this place, and Eph. 4 2. Support one another, through love. And surely, this is a most necessary precept, of great use and consequence in the life of man: for except wee beare and tolerate the frailties of men, in passing by them in such sort, as I have said, it is impossible we should lead a quiet or comfortable life in any societie. We must seeke for a new world, or leaving the fellowship of men, betake our selves to some solitary desert, as lundry Eremites, and Anchorites have done,

Rom. 14.1. and 15.1.

Pro. 19.11.

A because they could not (by reason of their froward & wayward natures) digest the manifold inconveniences which they saw to bee amongst men in publike societies. This duty therefore of bearing one anothers burdens, albeit it be difficult, yet it must be practised, especially of those that are strong men in Christ: as in architecture, all stones are not fit to be laide in every place of the building, but some below, as the fundamentall and chiefe corner stones, to beare up the weigh and burden of the building; others above in the wall, that so the whole building may be firme and compact in it selfe: So in the Church, which is the house of God, (where all beleevers are lively stones, built B upon Christ Iesus the chiefe corner stone, bearing up the whole burden, even all the infirmities of the Church:) those that are strong must support the infirmities of the weake, that so the whole building being compact and knit together, may grow up to a holy temple in the Lord. For otherwise the whole frame of the building must needs bee dissolved, and come to a ruine. It is a common proverbe amongst the Italians, that Hard with hard never makes a good wall: By which is signified, that as stones cobbled up one upon another without morter to combine them, make but a tottering wall that may easily be shaken; but if there be morter betwixt them, yeelding to the hardnesse of the stones, it makes the whole like a solide continued body, strong and stable; able to endure the shocke of the ramme, or the shot of the cannon: So, that societie, where all are as stiffe as stones, which will not yeeld a haire one unto another, one being as fast, as froward, as hastie as another, cannot bee firme and durable. But where men are of a soft, a yeelding, and relenting nature, giving place to the stiffenesse of others, and yeelding to the rempest for a time, that societie is compact in it selfe, and so cannot but continue, because one doth beare the infirmities of another. Doest thou therefore see thy brother to be overtaken with some sinne, or to be over-curious, very froward, too selfe-conceited, abounding in his owne sense, exceeding hastie, &c. beare this infirmity now; and so hee (perhaps) may beare with thee in the like case, another time: or beare thou with his curiousnesse, hee will beare with thy dulnes: beare with his sicklinesse, he will beare with thy frowardnes: beare with his hastines, he will beare with thy selfe-conceitednes. For it is to bee observed, that the Apostle saith not, that those onely which are strong, should beare the failties of the weake, but that both strong and weake should beare one anothers burdens, it being a mutuall and reciprocall duty imposed upon all, because there is none so strong, but one time or other hee may slip, and fall, and so may stand in need to bee supported even of the weake: the palsie man being

1 Pet. 2.5.

Duro con duro non fabricamuro.

Cap. 6.

ing sicke, had his burden (to wit, his bed) borne, but being restored, could helpe to beare another mans burden: so if thou beare another mans burden that is weak, when he is strong, he will be ready to beare thine, if need require. God commands, that if wee finde our neighbours beast lying under his burden, we must lift him up; how much more ought we to help our brethren, lying under the burden of sinne? Therefore the strong are to support the weak, and the weake must (upon occasion) support the strong: as in the arch of a building, one stone doth beare mutually; though not equally, the burden of the rest: or as harts swimming over a great water, doe ease one another, in laying their heads one upon the backe of another, the foremost that hath none to support him, changing his place, and resting his head upon the hindermost. Thus in a family, the husband must beare with the nicenes, and frowardnes of his wife: the wife with the fastnesse, or hastinesse of her husband. Those Magistrates, and Ministers, which are too cold and backward in good things, must beare with the over great heate, and forwardnesse of their fellow-Magistrates, or fellow-ministers: and those must beare with them againe, seeing both aime at the same end, the edification of the Church, and good of the Common-wealth. Thus in Gods providence Luther and Melancthon were happily joyned together, and did beare with one another, Luther with his sofinesse, Melancthon with his hastinesse; hee with his boldnesse, he with his timerousnesse: Melancthon did well temper the heate and zeale of Luther with his mildnesse, being as oyle to his vinegers and Luther on the other side, did warme his coldnesse, being as fire to his frozennesse. Thus the Apostle commandeth that wee should beare with the infirmities of those that are weake, and not sufficiently catechized in the doctrine of our spirituall liberty purchased unto us by Christ, and not to please our selves too much, but rather to please our neighbour in that which is good to edification, Rom. 15. 1, 2. For amongst other properties of love reckoned up by S. Paul, 1 Cor. 13. this is not the least, that it suffereth all things, v. 7. that is, all such things as may be borne & suffered with good conscience, for the good of our brother. For looke as a lover doth suffer all things in regard of his love, in three respects: First, in undergoing any labour, that may be for her good, as Hercules did for the love of Omphale. Secondly, in bearing patiently all hard measure that is offered him for her sake, as Iacob did for the love of Rachel. Thirdly, in enduring any thing that is imposed upon him: and putting up what wrong soever is done unto him by her, as Sampson did for the love of Dalilah. So Christian charity causeth us to suffer all things. First, pro fratribus, to endure any labour, cost, or travell, for their good. Secondly, propter

August. ser. 21. de verb. Apost. Beda in hunc locum ex Aug.

Ecclesiasticus. Act. 13.18.

A fratres, to beare all afflictions for their sakes as Paul saith hee did for the Church, 2 Tim. 2.10. Thirdly, a fratribus, to beare wrongs, and put up injuries at their hands, as he did, being shamefully intreated at Philippi, stoned, scourged, &c. This must bee considered of us all, but especially of such as will give a man as good as he bringeth, who are but a word, and a blow: a lie, and a stabbe: a word and a writ: such as cannot beare coales, (as they say) nor brooke any little wrong, nor indure any small frailty in their brethren. These men must remember, that in bearing coales, that is, in suffering and forbearing, they heape up coales of fire upon their heads (as Paul speaketh, Rom. 12.20.) as also that God doth B beare with them in greater matters, even when they wound him with their oathes, Leviticus 24.11. and give him the lie through unbeliefe, 1 Iohn 5.10. as hee bare the manners of the Israelites in the wildernesse. That Christ, whose example we are to follow, hath borne our infirmities, Esa. 53. and doth ease them that travell, and are heavy laden, Matth. 11.28. and therefore wee treading in his steps, must forbeare one another, and forgive one another, if a man have a quarrell against another, even as Christ forgave us, Coloss. 3.13. Thus, if when wee see any sin in our brother, we reclaime him from it, by reproofes, exhortations, admonitions, we are Gods instruments, to save a soule from death, and so doe cover a multitude of sinnes, even before God, Iam. 5. 20. And if when C wee perceive common frailties in our brethren, we shall not stand too much upon our right, but shall yeeld unto them in bearing, forbearing, and forgiving, wee shall cover a multitude of sinnes, 1 Pet. 4.8.

Thus much touching the rule, now I proceede to the reason, whereby the Apostle urgeth the practice of this precept, in these words, And so fulfill the Law of Christ. The reason standeth thus: That which is the fulfilling of the Law of Christ, must bee practised of us: but the bearing of one anothers burdens, is the fulfilling of the Law of Christ: therefore wee ought to beare one anothers burdens. For the clearing of this text, fundry things are to be considered. D

I. It may be demanded, what the Apostle understandeth by the Law of Christ? Ans. Nothing else but the doctrine, precept, or commandement of Christ; enjoyning the love of our brethren. Iohn 13. 34. 35. A new commandment give I unto you, that yee love one another, as I have loved you, &c. And it is all one, as if he had said, beare yee one anothers burdens, and so fulfill the commandement of Christ, who hath after a speciall manner commanded the love of your brethren. Now the Apostle rather useth the word Law, than Commandement, because he would make a clearer antithesis betwixt the Law of Christ, and the law of Moses, so vehemently urged by the false apostles; as if hee should have said, You Galatians are taught to observe the Law of Moses, circumcision, dayes, and times, moneths, and yeares. Well, if yee will needs be observing of Lawes, here is a Law for you to observe, beare with the frailties one of another, and so you shall fulfill the most excellent Law that ever was, the Law of Christ, which is necessary to be kept, whereas the keeping of the Ceremoniall law, is but in vaine.

11. Quest. Why doth Paul call the love of our brethren, the Law of Christ, rather than the law of nature, or the Law of God, or the law of Moses? seeing it was written in the minde of man in the creation, was given by God himselfe in Mount Sinai, was written by Moses, the reliques whereof are yet remaining in the minde of man? Answ. It is so called, because it is a new commandement given by Christ himselfe, after a speciall manner. But it is hereupon further demanded, why this commandement of loving our brethren, should bee called a new commandement? To which some make answer, that it is so called, only because it shewes a new manner of loving our brethren, after the example of Christ, as he hath loved us. Now this manner of loving our brethren (as Chrysostome expounds it) is this: that as Christ loved us freely, not moved by any profit that should redound unto himselfe thereby: so we should freely love one another, not for any benefit received or expected. But as Cyril of Alexand. upon John, expounds it, it stands in this, that as Christ loved us more than himselfe, so wee should love our brethren more than our selves. But this cannot bee the meaning. For S. John in his 1. Epist. 2. and Epist. 2. repeating this new commandement, saith onely, This is a new commandement, that ye love one another, and never addes, as Christ loved us: the which he should have done, if these words [as I have loved you] be an essentiall part of the new commandement, which he enjoyneth us to observe.

Besides, our Saviour himselfe saith, a little after, By this shall all men know, that you are my Disciples, if ye love one another, not adding, as I have loved you: therefore the new commandement is laid downe in these words, Love one another, not respecting those that follow, as a modification or limitation, as I have loved you. Besides, this exposition takes it for granted, that the morall law, Love thy neighbour as thy selfe, is a certaine rule, by which we are to square our love, viz. that wee must begin at our selves, and looke how much wee love our selves, so much wee ought to love our neighbour, and no more, and that therefore Christ should give a new commandement of greater perfection, than that in the law, to wit, that we love one another, as he loved us, that is, more than our selves. But this is a flatte mistaking of the Scripture: for the commandement, Love thy neighbour as thy selfe, is no exact rule whereby wee are to try and examine our love, (as the Popish doctors, and some others teach.) For then Paul and divers of the Saints of GOD, should have done workes of supererogation, more than the law requires, in loving their neighbours more than themselves, Rom. 5. 1. And if it were a rule, it were but a leaden and false rule: for wee are in some cases bound to love our neighbour more than our selves, especially if he bee a greater instrument of Gods glory, in procuring the good of the Church or common wealth: as to love our godly King more than our selves, and prefer his safety and life before our owne, as the Israelites did Davids: Thou art worth ten thousands of us, 2 Samuel 18. 3. for us, is a note of similitude, and not of equality, signifying, that as wee love our selves heartily, and earnestly, and inwardly, wishing all good to our selves: with the like sincerity of affection we should love our brethren. So that Christ hath added nothing to the law, in commanding to love one another, as he loved us. Others say: it is called a new commandement, because it ought to be kept with as great a care and diligence, as though it were new, and had been now first given: for new lawes (we know) are commonly precisely kept at the first, but after a while, they begin to be neglected: and men do (as it were) antiquate them, accounting them as though they were not.

Others, by a new commandement, understand another divers, or different commandement, for Christ in the beginning of the Chapter, had given them a commandement, to flie pride, to bee humble, to live at peace, and concord one with another: and then he saith, But I give you a new commandement, a commandement differing from the former, that ye love one another.

The word New, is often taken in Scripture in this sense, as, Exo. 1. 18. There arose up a new king, which knew not Joseph: that is, (as the 70 interpreters and Saint Luke, Act 7. 18. translate it) another king, Marke 16. 17. They shall speake with new tongues, that is, other, divers, or different languages, from their usuall tongue: for the meaning is not, that they invented a new language, which was never spoken before, but that they spake in a language divers from that which they used before: for so it is said, Act. 2. 4. They began to speake with other tongues: Thus our Saviour Christ telleth his Apostles, that hee will not drinke any more of the fruit of the vine, till he drinke it new with them in the kingdome of God, Matth. 26. 29. Where by new wine, hee meaneth not the liquor or juyce of the Grape, to preserve animall life, but another different drinke, wherewith he would entertaine all that were invited, and came unto his table. But these expositions are not so fit.

I take it therefore to bee called a new commandement, either in respect of Christ, or of us: In respect of Christ two wayes: 1. Because he renued it, not onely by freeing it from the false glosses and interpretations of the Scribes and Pharisees, the Iewish Rabbins: but also in fulfilling it most perfectly, whereas it was obliterated, and almost antiquated, by the great corruption of man: for none did ever so perfectly observe and keepe the law, as hee did. Therefore in regard of the new manner of fulfilling it, it is called a new commandement. 2. Because he abrogating the ceremoniall law, and many judicials, onely renewed the precept of the morall law, in commanding it as his law to the Church, Ioh. 15. This is my commandement, that ye love one another: as if he should say, Though I have abrogated the ceremoniall law, and antiquated the judicial, yet this commandement shall never bee abrogated: and this I commend unto you againe and againe, as my commandement, which above all others, I would have you carefully to observe, as that whereby yee shall bee knowne to bee my Disciples. In regard of us it is called a new Commandement, and that in two respects: 1. Because it being defaced, and almost cleane blotted out of the minde of man by originall sinne, is renewed againe in the hearts of beleevers, by the powerfull operation of the Spirit of God, both in their mindes and affections: In their mindes, because they are daily enlightned with the true knowledge thereof, in being taught whom they ought to love, viz. not onely their friends, but even their enemies; with what kind of love, to wit, with a fervent love; not in word or tongue onely but in deed and truth: and that with free, sincere, and constant love: in their wils and affections: in that they are perswaded by the inward working of the Spirit, to love: and are inclined thereto, being renewed by grace. 2. Because it doth after a peculiar manner belong unto us, who are under the new Testament, in the kingdome of grace, seeing that this commandement onely is renewed by Christ, as his owne proper commandement, many others being abrogated: as also because it is daily written by the Spirit of Christ, after a new manner in the hearts of new converts: so that they have not onely a new, that is a true knowledge thereof: but also a new, that is, a true sense and feeling of the power of it in their hearts: in that they are become new creatures in Christ Iesus. For in him all old things passe away, and all things become new, 2 Corinthians 4. For to them, the law is no killing letter, written in tables of stone: but a quickning spirit; as being written in the fleshly table of their hearts. This seemeth to be the true, full, and proper meaning of these places; for thus Saint John 1 Epist. 2. 8. doth expound it, when he saith, that it is true in him, and in you, in the sense before specified: both in regard of Christ, and the beleevers in Christ.

11. Question. Seeing the commandement of loving our brethren, is called the law of Christ, and a new commandement, is not the Gospell a new Law? Answ. In no wise: for albeit the Law and the Gospell agree in sundry things, as first, in the Author, GOD being the Authour of them both, of the Gospell, Romanes 16. of the Law, Romanes 9. 22. Secondly, in that both of them were preached, knowne and understood in both Testaments: the Law being written in the heart of man in the creation: the Gospell preached to our first Parents in Paradise, immediately after the fall, and repeated againe and againe to the Patriarkes and Prophets, from time to time. Thirdly, in the generall matter and end of them both, in that both the Law and the Gospell require righteousnesse in him that would come to life eternall. Fourthly, in this that they confirme and establish one another, in that the Law commanding justice, and justifying none, sheweth that a man is justified by the free gift and grace of God, and that Christ is the end of the Law, to every one that beleeveth. In that the Gospell justifieth not by workes, but by faith, and yet so, as that we doe not by our faith abrogate the law, or make it of none effect, but rather establish it, and that in two respects: 1. Because by faith we apprehend the righteousnesse of Christ, and so in him (who hath fulfilled the law for us) wee fulfill it, and so establish it. 2. Because having our hearts purified by faith, we live no more according to the flesh, but according to the spirit, and so by inchoate obedience we fulfill the law.

Lastly, in the end, in that both the law and the Gospell tend directly to the manifestation of the glory of God.

Yet they differ in five things. First, in the manner of revealing: the law before was perfectly knowne by nature, and since the fall in part, Rom. 2. 15. The Gospell is not knowne by nature, neither was it ever written in mans heart, before, or after the fall, as Paul saith, 1 Corinth. 2. 9. Those things which the eye hath not seene, nor the eare heard, nor the heart of man conceived; are they which God hath prepared for them that love him; Therefore the Gospell is called a mystery, Rom. 16. v. 25, 26. First, because the doctrine of the Gospell was made knowne to men and Angels by the revelation of God, Ephes. 3. 5. & 9. Secondly, because there is required a speciall revelation, and worke of Gods Spirit, before a man can yeeld assent unto it. Therfore Paul saith, We have not received the spirit of the world, but the Spirit of God, that we might know the things that are given to us of God, 1 Corinthians 2. 11. Secondly, in the subject or doctrine it selfe, and that in two respects: First, the law preacheth nothing but absolute justice, to the transgressours thereof: the Gospell sheweth how justice is qualified with mercie:

from all things, from which yee could not be absolved by the Law of Moses, by him every one that beleeveth is justified, Act. 13. vers. 39. Secondly, the law teacheth what manner of men we ought to be, and what we ought to doe, that we may come to eternall life, but shewes not how we may become such indeed; the Gospell teacheth, that by faith in Christ we may be such as the law requires, God hath made him to be sinne for us, who knew no sinne, that we might be made the righteousnesse of God in him, 2 Cor. 5.21.

Thirdly, in the object. The Law is given to the unjust and lawlesse, ungodly and prophane, 1 Tim. 1.9.10. that it may shew them their sinnes, and the punishment thereby deserved, and so may accuse and condemne them: the Gospell is to be published and dispensed only to the penitent, which are contrite and broken in heart, and mourne for their sins, Matt. 11. Esa. 57. Luke 4.

IV. The law promiseth eternall life upon condition of work: Do this and live: If thou wilt enter into life, keepe the commandements. The Gospell promiseth eternall life freely without any condition of workes, Rom. 4.5. To him that worketh not, but beleeveth in him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted to him for righteousnesse, Rom. 3.21.22. The righteousnes of God is made manifest without the law, by the faith of Iesus Christ, unto all and upon all that beleeve.

V. In the effects. The law is no instrumentall cause of faith, repentance, or any saving grace, it is the minister of death, 2 Cor. 3.7. causing wrath, Rom. 3.17. But the Gospell causeth life: it is the grace of God which bringeth salvation, Titus 2.11. for this cause Paul calleth the Law a dead, or killing letter: the Gospell a quickning spirit, 2 Cor. 1.

Fourthly, it may bee demanded whether any man bee able to fulfill the law, considering that Paul biddeth us beare one anothers burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ. Answer. No meere man can perfectly fulfill the Law in this life, this conclusion Saint Paul proveth in sundry of his Epistles, specially by these arguments:

First, by the great and generall depravation of nature, which remaineth in part even in the regenerate, staying their best actions, and making them like a menstruous cloath: confessing with all, that his best works are not answerable to the law, by reason of the remainders of originall corruption, Romans. 7. Now perfect fulfilling of the Law, cannot stand with corruption of nature, and transgression of life. For a corrupt fountaine cannot send forth sweet waters: neither can a corrupt tree beare good fruit. S. Iames saith, He that offendeth in one, is guilty of all: and the Scripture pronounceth him accursed, that abideth not in all things written in the booke of the Law, to doe them. Popish Doctours answer, first, that original corruption (which they call the fewell of sinne) and the first motions to evill, preventing all consent of will, are indeed in the regenerate; but they are no sinnes properly. But it is false which they teach. For every transgression of the law, is a sinne, as S. John defines it, 1 Joh. 3.4. but these are transgressions of the teach commandement; for it either forbiddeth these first motions, whether they be primo prime, or secundo prime, (as Schoolemen speake) or it forbiddeth nothing but the motions, which are with consent of will, which were forbidden in the former commandements, and so in effect them are but nine commandements, the teach forbidding no speciall sinne.

Fomes peccati.

Againe, Paul teacheth, that these motions preventing all consent of will, are formally opposed to the law, I see another law in my members, rebelling against the law of my minde. Rom. 7.23. Secondly, they answer, that Paul, Romanes 7. speakes not of himselfe, but in the person of the unregenerate, according to the opinion of Saint Augustine. Answer. Augustine indeed was once of that judgement, but hee after retracted that opinion, (as it is manifest out of his booke of Retractations, and the first booke against Iulian the Pelagian) and that for these reasons: First, because Paul saith, To will is present with me: and I doe not the good I would: and, I delight in the law of God concerning the inward man: all which are proper to the regenerate, and cannot be affirmed of the wicked. Secondly, because hee makes mention of the inward man, which is all one with the new man, or the new creature; which agree onely to the regenerate. Thirdly, because he saith, he is led captive to sinne, ver. 23. whereas the wicked are not drawne to sinne by force, against their wils, but runne riot of their owne accord into all wickednesse, as the horse rusheth into the battell, Ierem. 8.6. Lastly, in that he cries out in a sense and sorrow for his sinnes, O miserable man that I am, who shall deliver mee from this body of death? ver. 24. which cannot be the voyce of the unregenerate, for they feele not the burden of their sinne, nor desire to bee eased of it, but take delight and pleasure in it. His second reason is this: such as our knowledge is, such is our love of God and man: but our knowledge is onely in part: therefore our love is but in part: and so consequently our obedience is but in part, and therefore there is no perfect fulfilling of the law. The advocates of the Romish Church answer, that our knowledge, love, and obedience, are perfect for the condition and estate of this life, as we are viatores, which is sufficient: though they be not perfect for the condition of the life to come, when wee shall bee comprehensores, which is not required at our hands in this life: for they make a double perfect fulfilling of the law: One, for the estate of this life, which is to love God above all things, and our neighbour as our selves. The other after this life, and that is to love GOD with all all the soule, with all the powers and faculties of the soule, with all the strength and vigour of all these powers.

And this distinction they make to bee the ground of their opinion, touching the fulfilling of the law, and justification by workes, &c. But it is a fandie foundation, and therefore that which is built upon it, cannot stand. For besides that, it is a fond and frivolous distinction forged by the Schoolemen, without warrant of Scripture, or consent of Antiquity; it is manifestly false. For there is one onely rule of righteousnesse, and not two one onely generall sentence of the law, more unchangeable than the lawes of the Medes and Persians, even as unchangeable as God himselfe; which is, that, Hee which continueth not in all things written in the law, to do them, is accursed. So that hee which loves not God with all his soule, minde, and might, with all his valde suo, that is, with all the faculties of his soule, and all the powers of these faculties, and that in this life, is accursed. And it is absurd which they teach, that a man is not bound for the rearme of this life, thus to love God, but onely in the life to come. For looke what man could doe by creation, in the state of innocency; the same & so much the Law requires at his hands in the state of apostasie. But Adam by creation could love God with all his soule, with al the faculties of his soule, and all the powers of these faculties: therefore the same perfect, absolute, and intire obedience is now required at his hands. For the sentence of the law, Cursed is he that continueth not in all things, &c. is not onely given to men glorified, but to those that are in the state of grace. And Saint Paul doth so apply this sentence to men even in this life, that hee pronounceth all that are of the workes of the law, to be under the curse. Againe, if this were so, the Iewes had no cause to feare the severity and strictnesse of the law, as they did, when they said, If we heare the voyce of the Lord any more, we shall dye; considering they were able to keepe and fulfill it, according to this Popish opinion. Neither would God have promised them a Messias or Mediatour to redeeme them from the curse of the law: but would rather have comforted them in that their so great feare and astonishment, by giving them to understand, that they were not bound to the full and perfect fulfilling of the law for the time of this life.

Exod. 20. 19. Deut. 18.16.

Deut. 18.18.

Besides, the pathoticall exclamation of Paul, O miserable man that I am, &c. Rom. 7. 24. and that saying of Peter, in calling the Law a yoake, which neither we nor our fathers were able to beare, Act. 15. should be childish, and ridiculous, if that which is impossible in the law (as Paul speakes, Rom. 8.3.) did not appertaine unto us.

The third argument. If a man could fulfill the Law, he should not stand in neede of a Mediatour. For if righteousnesse be by the law, Christ dyed in vaine, Galat. 2.21. It is answered that Christ dyed in vaine, if men by the strength of nature could fulfill the Law: but the fulfilling of the Law is by grace, and so his death is not in vaine: for by vertue of the obedience of Christ, wee are inabled to fulfill the Law. But this were to make Christ no Saviour, but onely an instrument whereby we fulfill the law, and are our owne Saviours: whereas the Scripture saith, that he is made unto us righteousnesse, 1 Cor. 1.30. not that we are made righteousnesse by him. That we are made the righteousnesse of him, 2 Cor. 5.21. not by him, as an instrument. That we are compleate in him, Col. 2.10. and not compleate of our selves, by him.

Lastly, the Scripture shutteth up all men under sinne, even the most sanctified, Prov. 20.9 Iohn 1.9. Iob confesseth he cannot answer one of a thousand, Iob. 9.3. and Dawid saith, If thou, Lord, shalt marke what is done amisse, who can abide it? Psalm. 130.3. and Paul saith of himselfe, that he found no meanes to performe that which is good, Rom. 7.18. Hee saith further, that it is impossible to be kept, by reason of originall corruption, Rom. 8.3. It is answered, that all these places and examples must be understood of veniall sinnes, which make men sinners indeed, yet are not against, but besides the law, and therefore though a man commit them, yet hee may fulfill the law for all that. Answer. The common received opinion in Schooles, that some sinnes are mortall, others veniall, of their owne nature, is a witlesse distinction. For if all sinnes deserve death, as Paul teacheth, Rom. 6.23. either veniall sinnes are no sinnes, or they must needes deserve death. Moses saith, that he that abideth not in all things written in this law, is accursed, Deut. 27.29. where the words, this Law, may not be restrained onely to the Catalogue of great and hainous sinnes, which are there reckoned up, but extended to all sinnes, as Paul applyes it, Galat. 3.10. pronouncing him accursed, that continueth not in all things, written in the law, not this law. So that every sinne, even the least sinne in thought, makes a man subject to the curse, and so in rigour of divine justice, deserves eternall death. And it is but a poore shift, to say that some sinnes are against the law, as all mortall sinnes, and others besides the law, as veniall. For the doing of that which GOD forbiddeth, is a sinne, not beside, but against the law. But idle words, jesting, and gibing, &c. (which the Popish Doctours account veniall sinnes) are expressly forbidden in the word: Mat. 12.36. Of every idle word that men shall speake, they shall give an account at the day of judgement. And Paul forbids all foolish talking and jesting, as things uncomely, Ephes. 5.4. Therefore they are not beside, but flat against the law. Secondly, they answer, that these places and the like, are to be understood of severall workes and actions of the Saints, whereof some were good, as Davids sparing of Saul, &c. some evill, as his adultery, murther, and numbring of the people: and not of the same particular workes. Answer. It is false. For Paul speaking of the same individuall worke, saith, that it is partly good, and partly evill. I finde when I would doe good, that evill is present with me, Rom. 7.21. In my minde I serve the law of God, in my body the law of sinne, ver. 25. And the Prophet saith, that all our righteousnesse is as a menstruous cloath, Isa. 64 4. Therefore every good worke is stained with sinne.

Thus much shall suffice to shew, that it is impossible for any man in the time of this life to fulfill the law: The reasons alledged to the contrary, are sufficiently answered before, Pag. 164. &c. To which place I referre the reader.

It may further be said, if we cannot perfectly fulfill the law, why doth Paul command us to beare one anothers burdens, and so to fulfill the law of Christ?

Ans. The law is said to bee fulfilled three wayes. First, by personall obedience, and thus Christ onely fulfilled it. Secondly, by imputed obedience, thus the regenerate fulfill it in Christ, hee being their righteousnesse, 1 Cor. 1.30. and they compleate in him, Colos. 2.10. Thirdly, by inchoate obedience. Thus Zachary and Elizabeth are said to have walked in all the commandements of the Lord, without reproofe, Luke 1.6. And thus all the faithfull fulfill the law, in labouring to obey God in all his commandements; according to the measure of grace received: and thus wee are said to fulfill the law in this place, God accepting the will for the deed. Wee are further to consider, that fulfilling of the law is sometime opposed to the transgression of the law, as Jam. 2.10. in which sense, no man ever did, or can fulfill it, except Christ God and man, who for this cause is said to be the end of the law for righteousnesse, to every one that believeth, Romanes 10.4. Sometime it is opposed to hypocrisie and dissimulation, as 1 John 2.4.5. and thus all the Saints fulfill it, in that they indeavour to mortifie their corruptions, and in all things to approve their hearts, and lives to God, in keeping faith and good conscience. In which sense Paul here biddeth us to fulfill the law of Christ, in performing duties of love, and bearing one anothers burdens. It will be said, If the law can no otherwise bee fulfilled, than by inchoate obedience, to what end serveth it? Answer. It hath a three-fold use even since the fall. First, it serves to restraine the outward man, by keeping men in order, through feare of punishment, of which use Paul speakes, when he saith, that the law is not given to a righteous man, but to the lawlesse and disobedient, &c. 1 Timothie 1.9. Secondly, to arrowse the drouse consciences: and this it doth many wayes: 1. By revealing sinne, for by the law commeth the knowledge of sinne, Rom. 3.20. 2. By revealing the wrath and anger of God for sinne, for the law causeth wrath, Rom. 4.15. 3. By convicting the conscience; When the commandement came, sinne revived, Rom. 7.9. 4. By arraigning and condemning us for sin; for the law is the minister of death, Corinthians. 3.7. and so putting us out of all heart in our selves, it causeth us to flie to the throne of grace, and so is our Schoolemaster to bring us to Christ, Galat. 3.24. Thirdly, it serves as a rule of good life: David saith, that the word of God (specially the law) is a lanterne to his feet, and a light to his paths, Psalm. 119.105. So that though a regenerate man bee not under the law, in regard of justification, or accusation, or coaction, or condemnation: yet he is under it, in regard of direction and instruction, for it shewes what is good, what is evill, what we ought to doe, and what to leave undone. Lastly, whereas Paul saith, Beare ye one anothers burden, and so fulfill the law of Christ: the word SO hath great Emphasis; for it implies the manner, how the Galatians and all men are to fulfill the law, not by observing circumcision, daies, or times, moneths, or yeares, as the false apostles taught: but by bearing and tolerating the infirmities of their brethren. It may not unfitly bee applyed to the religious order of Franciscans, Dominicans, Cathusians, &c. Let them not thinke that they keepe the law, by abstaining from flesh, by whipping themselves, by single life, counterfeit fasts, voluntary poverty, regular obedience, &c. But let them comfort the afflicted, relieve the distressed, beare with the weake, support one another in love, and SO they shal fulfill the law of Christ.

3. For if any man seeme to himselfe, that he is somewhat, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himselfe in his imagination.

In this verse the Apostle removes an impediment, which hindereth most from performing the former duty, of bearing other mens burdens, and that is a vaine conceit and imagination they have of their own excellency, farre above their brethren: in thinking themselues too good to doe any duty or service unto them, to bee their packhorses to beare their burdens This vaine imagination and swelling conceit (which puffeth up the most) the Apostle laboureth to purge in this place, when he saith, He that seemeth to himselfe, &c where, by the way, wee may observe the method of the Apostle, first, to give rules of direction; after to remove impediments which may hinder our obedience. 2. We see here the force of the word, which searcheth the secrets of the heart, Hebrew. 4.12. in that it casteth down the imagination, and every high thing that exalted against the knowledge of God: and bringeth into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ, 2 Corinthians 10.4. In the words wee may observe these foure things: I. That men are nothing of themselves. II. That though they be nothing, yet they seeme to themselves to bee somewhat, and that of themselves. III. That in so doing they deceive themselves. IV. The remedies against the overweening of our selves.

For the first: it may be demanded how it can be truly said, that men are of themselves meare nothing? Is he nothing that is created after the Image of God, in holinesse, and righteousnesse? Are Princes and Potentates nothing, that are called gods in Scripture? Are they nothing that professe, and worke miracles? Ans. Paul speaketh not of the gifts of God, bestowed upon men; but of the men themselves: and of them, not as they were in the state of innocency before the fall, but as they are now in the state of corruption and apostasie, or in the state of grace, as they are considered of, in, and by themselves. Thus even spirituall men, are nothing of themselves: (for of them especially the Apostle speaketh, as it may appeare out of the first verse.)

For first, all are by nature the children of wrath, and firebrands of hell. 2. the gifts of God bestowed upon us, whether of nature or of grace, are not ours, but Gods, the giver of them. Therefore no man may arrogate more unto himselfe, than an other in regard of them, seeing all of us are but stewards, and the things wee have are but talents, left us to imploy to our masters advantage. *If thou hast received them, (*saith Paul) why boastest thou thy selfe, as though thou hadst not received them? 3. Be it that a man be in Christ, and sanctified, yet he hath no greater right to the merits of Christ, nor greater part in them, than hee which is lesse sanctified: for though sanctification hath degrees, and a certaine latitude, yet justification hath none. So that a man is in truth nothing of himselfe. 1. Because hee hath his beginning and being of nothing, and tendeth of his own nature to corruption, & nothing. 2. In that he is not that which he imagineth himselfe to be. 3. Though he have some gifts and graces of God, yet hee is nothing, because he is farre short of that which he ought to be, 1 Cor. 8.2. Vpon these considerations Abraham acknowledgeth himselfe to be but dust and ashes, Gen. 18 27. David comparing himselfe with the magnificence of Saul saith, What am I, or what is my fathers house? 1 Samuel 18.18. Nay, whether we consider man absolutely in himselfe, or relatively in respect of other creatures, as those glorious bodies, the Sunne, Moone, Starres, we may say with the Prophet David, Lord, what is man, that thou art mindfull of him, or the sonne of man, that thou regardest him? Psal. 8.4.

Paul confesseth himselfe to be nothing in, of, or by himselfe, but by the grace of God (saith he) I am that I am, 1 Cor. 15.10. And againe, I was nothing in/or inso to the very chiefe Apostles although I am nothing, 2 Cor. 12.11. The Apostle affirmeth of every man, which thinketh hee knoweth something, that he knoweth nothing as he ought to know, 1 Cor. 8.2. and of many, that they are puffed up, and know nothing, 1 Tim. 6.4. For a swelling conceit, and emptinesse usually goe together.

The second generall thing to bee observed in the words, is this; That it is naturall for men to thinke too wel of themselves, to magnifie themselves above others in their conceits, and in a manner to deifie themselves; and to nullifie others in comparison of themselves: and this overweaning of a mans selfe, is a branch of pride. For a man looking upon himselfe through the spectacles of selfe-love, doth thinke every small gift of God, which he seeth to be in himselfe, to be farre greater than in truth it is: imagining meere shadowes, to bee substances, or molehills to bee as bigge as mountaines. For as a man that is in love, doth thinke the blemishes and deformities of his Love, to be ornaments, which make her more beautifull? So those which with Narcissus are in love with themselves, and dote upon their owne gifts, judge the vices which they see to be in themselves, to bee vertues. Simon Magus though a wicked wretch, a limme of the devill, a sorcerer, &c. yet had this conceit of himselfe, and gave it out also, that he was some great man, Act. 8.9. to wit, the great power of God, verse 10. The Church of Laodicea thought she was rich, and increased with goods, and had needs of nothing: whereas she was wretched, and miserable, and poore, and blinde, and naked, Apoc. 3.16. And so the skarlet strumpet thought her selfe a Queene, and that she was out of all danger or downfall: when she was already fallen. Apoc. 18.27. Yea this corruption is so naturall, that even the regenerate themselves, who, are in part sanctified, are tainted therewith: and generally they that have received greater gifts of knowledge, of sanctification, &c. are most ready to overweene their owne gifts, except God give them grace to resist this temptation: for knowledge puffeth up, 1 Cor. 8.1. The Apostles themselves contended which of them should seeme to bee the greatest. Luke 22.24. Yea, in all ages there have beene some in the Church overweening themselves; as in Christs time the Iustitiarie Pharisees: after them, the Catharists, or Puritanes, who both proudly and odiously called themselves by that name; thinking themselves without sinne: the Donatists, that they were a Church without spot or wrinkle: the Jovinianists, that a man cannot sinne after the laver of regeneration? The Pelagians, that the life of a just man in this world hath no sinne in it at all: and of later times the Semi-Pelagian heretike, who will be something of himselfe, and will have some stroke in his first conversion, and will concurre with Christ in the worke of Justification. It will be said, Papists ascribe all the praise to God. Answer. So did the Pharisee, Luke 18. vers. 11.

and

Damascene.

and yet a wicked Iusticiary for all that. Now all this ariseth from sundry causes: the first is, the bitter root of pride, that was in our first parents, when as they affected a higher place, in desiring (through discontentment of their owne estate) to deifie themselves, and become equall to the highest Majesty, in knowing good and evill.

The second is, the overmuch considering the good things we have; as when the Pharisie considered that hee gave tithe of all that hee possessed, that he fasted twise a weeke, that he was not thus and thus, as other men, Luke 18.

The third is, the comparing of our selves with the infirmities that wee see to bee in others: the Pharisie was puffed up, by comparing himselfe with extortioners, unjust men, adulterers, and with the Publican.

The fourth is, the false flattering, and applause of men, which sooth us up in our humours, in perswading us to be that which in truth we are not, as the people flattered Herod, when they gave a shout, and said, The voice of God, and not of man, Act. 12.22.

The third point is, that they which thus overweene their gifts, in thinking themselves somewhat when they are nothing, doe notably deceive themselves: as those that thinke they have the substance, when they have but the shadow, or those that dreame they are Kings or Princes, being in truth but base persons: or to use the Prophets similitude, Esa. 29.8. Like as an hungry man dreameth, and behold he eateth, and when he awaketh his soule is empty: or like as a thirsty man dreameth, and lo hee is drinking, and when he awaketh behold he is faint, and his soule longeth. Men are deceived two waies, either by others, or by themselves: by others, as by flatterers, they are deceived occasionally; by themselves casually, or properly. For he that doth judge himselfe to be that which indeed he is not, hee may haply please himselfe, but he doth but please himselfe in an errour: for in truth hee deceiveth himselfe in his imagination: the Apostle Iames saith, If any man seeme (specially to himselfe) to be religious, and yet refraineth not his tongue, he deceiveth his owne heart, his religion is vaine, Iam. 1.26. So likewise they that are only hearers of the word (and therefore thinke that all is well enough with them) though they be not doers thereof) deceive their owne selves, Iam. 1.22. And verily this corruption is so great, that as men can bee content to be deluded by flatterers and clawbackes, which please them in their itching humours: so they willingly suffer themselves to bee deceived, even by themselves, to the end that they may appeare to others to be that which in truth they are not: that so they may advance and magnifie themselves in the account of the world. For as Alexander the great, being in India, caused his souldiers to make and leave behind them bits and horseshooes, of an extraordinary greatnesse, huge speares, massie shields, big helmets, long swords, and other furniture for horse and man, fitting rather Hippocentaurs, or Giants, than men of ordinary stature; and all to the end it might be said in future time, that Alexander was a mighty Monarch indeed: So many there be, who (setting the faire side outward) make goodly glorious shewes in the eyes of men: and so would have others to thinke of them according, (farre above their desert) that posterity might judge them to be that which indeed they are not: and so with Alexander in deceiving others, they wittingly deceive themselves. Which spirituall guile of deceiving our selves in matters touching our salvation, is most dangerous, when men delude themselves, in perswading themselves falsely, that they know sufficient, that God is to be loved above all, our neighbors as our selves, (which is as much as all the Preachers in the earth can say:) that they beleeve; when in stead of faith there is nothing but damnable pride, and presumption: that they repent, when it is nothing but deceitfull counterfeiting, and hypocrisie. Besides the danger, consider the indignity of it: men can abide nothing lesse, than to be deceived and circumvented by others, and yet behold, they are deluders and deceivers of themselves: and that which doth more aggravate the indignity of it, in such things as ought to be best knowne and most familiar unto them, wherein it is a shame they should be deceived, viz. in the knowledge of themselves, and that which is yet more, in a matter of greatest moment, in the salvation of their soules. What marvell therefore is it that men should be deceived by the seducer of all seducers, the devill, who are so easily deceived of themselves, or rather willing to deceive themselves.

Plutarch. in Alexand.

Further observe, that proud conceited persons, such as have an overweening of themselves and their gifts, and of all men thinke soule scorne to bee deceived, even they are easiliest deceived, yea and that of themselves: for so the Apostle saith, Hee that thinketh hee is somewhat, &c. deceiveth himselfe in his imagination.

Againe, mark hence, that no men, be their gifts never so rare, their callings never so high, their places never so great, are too good to beare other mens burdens, for they that thinke themselves to be somewhat, some great men: that is, too good to put under their shoulders to beare the frailties and infirmities of their brethren, doe nothing here in but deceive themselves. Princes and Potentates of the earth are prophesied by Esay, chap. 49. vers. 23. to be nursing fathers and nursing mothers unto the Church, not onely by nourishing and defending it, (as the nurse her childe) but also by bearing with the frailties and wants which are therein.

Lastly (consider that this selfe conceitednesse nesse, and overweening of a mans selfe, is the very bane and poyson of love; for it maketh proud men thinke themselves too good, to become packe horses or drudges to beare other mens burdens, to become serviceable unto them in any dury of love, or to tolerate their frailties, or to yeeld of their right, or to suffer injuries at their hands, or to put up any little indignity, without stomacke and discontent: because they imagine themselves every way better than their brethren, & therefore ought to be tolerated, but not to bound to tolerate and beare with others: So that where selfe-love is, there is no true brotherly love. It was well said of the Poet, Non bene conveniunt, &c. majestas & amor. It may be said may not he that is privy to his owne vertues, in conscience of his owne worth, judge himselfe to be somewhat, that is, to be that which indeed he is, or to have a greater measure of knowledge, grace, and other gifts, than they that have lesse?

Ans. He may. For humility is not sottish: the master in humility cannot thinke his scholler more learned than himselfe, except hee shall thinke against his conscience. For that saying, Phil. 2.3. Let every man thinke better of another than of himselfe, must bee restrained onely to equalls, and not extended to superiours in regard of their inferiours. Secondly, I answer, that the Apostle in that place speaketh not of the gifts and graces bestowed upon men, but of the persons themselves, and of them, not so much as they are in the account of men, as in the account of God. For he saith not, Let every man think another more learned, wise, discreet, sober, than himselfe, (for so he may thinke against his conscience) but, Let every man think another (that is, any other that is his brother in the Lord) better than himselfe, to wit, before God. And this every man may do with good conscience; for albeit another shall outwardly seeme more ignorant, negligent, backward in matters of Religion than himselfe, yet for any thing hee knoweth, hee may be higher in the favour of God, than he. And therefore though a man erre in thinking of another, better than of himselfe, yet he shall not do any thing against his conscience. Thus the Publican accounted the proud Pharisie better than himselfe. For he held him as just, himselfe not worthy to looke up to heaven; yet herein he sinned not, nay he is commended for it, though he erred in his judgement of the Pharisie. And so if the Pharisie had reputed the Publican better than himselfe, that is, higher in Gods favour than himselfe, he had not sinned, nor done against his conscience. For though hee might judge himselfe more just than the Publican, in regard of his life past, yet for his present estate before God hee could not. Though David knew in the particular quarrell betwixt Saul and him, that Saul was unjust, and he innocent, yet if he should have thought better of Saul in generall, than of himselfe, hee should but have done his duty.

The fourth and last point containeth the remedies of this evill, which are the rather to be considered, because it is a great sinne, one of those seven which the Lord doth most of all detest, Prov. 6.17. a dangerous sinne, having a heavy woe attending upon it, Woe to them that are prudent in their owne eyes, Isa. 5.21 a sinne almost incurable, Seest thou a man that is wise in his owne eyes? there is more hope of a foole than of him, therefore the remedies are more carefully to bee knowne, and applyed. The remedies are specially five. Prov. 26.12.

The first is, to looke our selves in the glasse of the law, which will shew what we are without flattery or partiality: and by it wee shall see nothing in our selves but the ugly shape of Satan, cleane defacing the image of God, and that in us there dwelleth no good thing (as Paul saith of himselfe, Rom. 7.18.) that there is nothing but vanity in our minds, rebellion in our wills, confused straxy in all our affections, transgression in our lives. The viewing of our hearts and lives in the Law, and the considering of our wretched estate, in that we are under the fearfull curse, which is a thunderbolt annexed to every breach thereof, will drive us our of all conceit of our selves, from our selfe-love, and selfe-liking: nay it will make us goe out of our selves, not onely to deny our selves, as Christ commands, but even to abhorre our selves, repenting in dust and ashes, as Iob did, chap. 42.6. causing us to become flat nothing in our selves, that wee may be something in Christ, as Paul saith: If any man among you seeme to bee wise in this world, let him bee a foole, that he may be wise. 1 Cor. 3.18.

Secondly, when we feele our selves to bee tickled with the itching humour of selfe-love, and selfe-liking, arising from our hidden corruption, either in regard of outward gifts, or inward graces: we must make our owne evils, sins, blemishes, imperfections (for there is no man but hath one or other) a soveraigne remedy against it, and so (as it were) drive away one poyson with another. As to call to minde some great deformity that is in our bodies, some great infirmity that is in our minde, some crosse or misery in our outward estate, some vile and abominable sinne which we have committed, and the horrible punishment to the which wee are lyable by reason thereof; and no doubt but the serious consideration of these, or any of these, will be availeable to nippe pride in the bud, and kill the serpent in the shell: and in so doing we shall with the Peacocke, now and then cast our eyes downeward to our feet, the foulest and ugliest things we have: and not alway stand in admiration of our gay feathers and glorious traine.

Thirdly, we must consider that the things for which we looke so high, and swell so in our our owne conceits, are not our owne, but lent us for a time. For what is there, that thou hast not received? whether in gifts of body, or graces of minde? Nay, whether thou speake of soule, or body it selfe: and if thou hast received it, why boastest thou thy selfe as though thou hadest not received it? what vanity is it for a man to be proud of another mans garment? or for a woman to boast of her borrowed hayre? The wicked persecutors of the Church are reproved for sacrificing to their nets, and burning incense to their yarne, Hab. 1. 16. Further, we must consider we have not onely received them, but that we have so received them, as that they are not our owne, with which wee may doe what we list, but talents lent us for a time, & left with us to imploy, over which we are but Stewards and Bayliffes, not Lords or masters; and that we must bee countable for the smallest gift, even the least farthing, how we have got it, kept it, bestowed it: the time will come when it shall be said unto thee, Give an account of thy stewardship, Luke 16. 2. Therefore we ought not so much to bee puffed up with the greatnesse of our talents, as to bee humbled with the consideration of the strict reckning that God will require at our hands, seeing that of him, to whom much is committed, much shall be required.

Fourthly, to the end we may avoid this overweening of our selves, let us compare our selves with the Majesty of God, in whose sight we are but as silly wormes, crawling upon the ground, nay in comparison of whom, we are lesse than nothing, and vanity it selfe. Consider, that to him every knee doth bow, of things in heaven, in earth, and under the earth, Phil. 2. 10. and thou wilt not be so conceited of thy selfe that a silly man doth crouch unto thee: that to him every tongue doth confesse, v. 11 and sing his praises, the blessed Angels crying continually, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Sabbaoth, heaven and earth are full of thy glory: and then a short blast of winde, or popular applause, shall not so easily puffe thee up, like an empty bladder, or carie thee away, as it did Herod, Act. 12. But to omit this odious comparison, betwixt a fraile mortall man, and the glorious everliving God (there being no comparison betwixt finite and infinite) let us never compare our selves with our inferiours, but with our superiours & betters, who are eminently above us, in every gift and blessing of God, in regard of whose honours and preferments wee are but base and contemptible: in regard of whose knowledge we are but children, and know nothing: in regard of whose riches, we are but beggars, and have nothing. For as David, when he beheld the wonderfull frame of the heavens, those glorious creatures, the Sunne the Moone, and the Starres, by and by made this use of it to himselfe, to consider his owne vilenesse in regard of them: What is man that thou art mindfull of him? or the Son of man that thou visitest him? So when we compare our selves with others that are as farre above us, as the heavens are above the earth, whose gifts and graces doe as farre excell ours, as the bright sunshine the dimme candlelight: wee cannot chuse but be abashed, and confounded in our selves, acknowledging that there is no such cause why wee should so magnifie our selves above others, and nullifie others in comparison of our selves.

Psal. 8. 5.

4. But let every man prove his owne worke, and then shall he have rejoycing in himselfe onely, and not in another.

Here the Apostle layeth downe another remedy against selfe-love and overweening of our selves; and it is the fift and the last of which I purpose to entreat, and it stands in proving and examining of a mans owne worke by it selfe, without comparing it with another mans worke, and withall in the approving of it unto God. Let every man approve his owne worke. And he gives two reasons, why every man ought to approve his owne workes unto God, and to consider them absolutely in themselves, and not relatively in respect of others: the first reason is in this verse, then shall he have rejoycing in himselfe onely, and not in another: the second in the next verse, For every man shall beare his owne burden.

Touching the remedy. Let every man prove his owne worke. The word translated * prove, signifieth also to approve; as Rom. 14. ver. 22. Blessed is he that condemneth not himselfe in the thing that he approveth. 1 Cor. 16. 3. Whosoever ye shall approve or allow of by letters. And so the word is us'ed in English, when we say such a one is to prove a will, that is, approve it.

* Δοκιμαζετω

The word in this place (I take it) may be understood in both senses, to prove our workes, and to approve them. How we are to prove our workes by taking triall and examination of them, I have already shewed in the former verse. But we are further to approve them to God, according to Pauls commandement: studie to shew thy selfe approved unto God, 2 Tim. 2. 15. and his practice, in coveting alway to be acceptable unto him, 2 Cor. 5. 9. This approving of our workes is a soveraigne remedy against overweening of our selves: for he that alwayes stands upon his tryall, and Gods approbation, cannot be puffed up with selfe-love of himselfe, or selfe-liking of his owne workes: but rather humbled with the consideration of Gods absolute justice, and his owne imperfections, and so stirred up with greater diligence to worke out his salvation with feare and trembling.

Now wee shall approve our workes unto God, if we observe these three things. First, that all our actions (specially in the worship & service of God) be grounded upon the will and word of God; and not upon will-worship, or humane inventions: otherwise it will bee said, Who required these things at your hands?

Secondly,

Secondly, that we performe all our actions sincerely and uprightly, as in the presence of God, with an honest heart, and a good conscience: as Abimelech professeth of himselfe, Gen. 20. 5. and Hezekiah, Isay 38. 3. and Paul Act. 23. 1.

Thirdly, that they alway tend to a good end, as the glory of God: Whether ye eate, or drinke, or whatsoever ye do, doe all to the glory of God, 1 Cor. 10. 30. and the good of our brethren, Let all things be done to edification, 1 Cor. 14. 26.

It may here be demanded, whether we may not approve our selves and our actions to men? To which I answer that we may and ought. For although we may not bee men-pleasers, that is, such as frame and temper our actions and our speeches, so, as they may alway be pleasing to the corrupt humours and wicked affections of men, (for then we were not the servants of God,) Gal. 1. 10. Yet wee are to please them in that which is good to edification, Romanes 15. 2 Cor. 10. 33. And Christ commandeth that our light should so shine before men, that they may see our good workes. And Paul biddeth us to procure honest things in the sight of all men. And whatsoever things are true, and honest, and just, and pure, whatsoever appertaine to love, and are of good report, wee must thinke on them, and practise them, Phil. 4. 8. Yet wee must seeke for the approbation of men, with these cautions.

Matth. 5. 16.

Rom. 12. 17.

First, we must so seeke for the approbation of men, as that we doe not seeke it, nor rest in it alone, but withall seeke to be approved of God. For he that praiseth himselfe, (and so consequently, he that is praised of others) is not approved, but he whom the Lord praiseth, 2 Cor. 10. 18. How can ye beleeve (saith our Saviour Christ) which receive honour one of another, and seeke not the honour that commeth of God alone, John 5. 44.

Secondly, wee must seeke for the approbation of God in the first place; and in the second place, to be approved of men, as Christ did: for he grew in favour first with God, and after with men, Luke 2. 52. and the Elders, who by faith obtained a good report, Heb. 11. 2. reade Rom. 14. 18.

Thirdly, we must never looke for the approbation of the multitude, or acclamation of the most: for that cannot be done without ambition and vaine glory, in seeking popular applause, Woe be to you, when all men speake well of you, Luke 6. vers. 26. Thus Christ saith, He sought not praise of men. For those that are addicted to popular applause, and are over curious of their credit, immoderately seeking to get and keepe a good name with all sores of men, while they seeke for fame, they lose a good name, in seeking fame from the wicked, which is but a shadow, and losing a good name in the opinion of the godly, which is the substance.

John 5. 41.

Fourthly, we must so farre seeke for the approbation of the wicked, that we minister no not the least occasion of offence unto them; 2 Cor. 10. 32. Give not offence, neither to the Iew, nor to the Gentile: but to convict their consciences, and to stop their mouths by our godly and unblameable conversation, which may be a preparative for them against the day of their visitation. 1 Pet. 2. 12. Have your conversation honest among the Gentiles, that they which speake evill of you, as of evill doers, may by your good workes which they shall see, glorifie God in the day of the visitation.

Fifthly, in doing our duties, we must not respect the judgment of the world, neither fearing the faces, nor the censures of men. This was Pauls practice. 1 Cor. 4. 3. I passe very little to be judged of you, or of mans judgement: we must goe through good report, and evill report, 2 Corinth. 6. 8.

Lastly, wee must seeke to be approved of men, not so much in regard of our selves, as that by this meanes Gods glory may be more and more advanced: for, our light must so shine before men, that they may see our good workes, and glorifie our Father which is in heaven, Matth. 5. 16. If we observe these five cautions, wee may with good conscience seek to get a good name, which will bee unto us as a pretious ointment, refreshing us with the comfort of a godly life: Prov. 22. 1. Eccl. 7. 3.

Thus much of the remedy. The reason followeth: And then shall he have whereof to rejoice in himselfe, and not in another. The words translated rejoyce signifie to glory, which is more than to rejoyce. There is a double ground of glorying: one, our of a mans selfe: another in himselfe. Out of himselfe is in God alone: Let not the wise man glory in his wisedome, nor the strong man in his strength, nor the rich man in his riches. But let him that glorieth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me, Ier. 9. 23, 24. 1 Cor. 1. 31. In himselfe, in the comfortable testimony of a good conscience. Our glorying is this, testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity, and godly pureness we have had our conversation in the world, 2 Cor. 1. 12. The one is, glorying before God, the other before men. The one of justification, the other, of holy conversation for time past, and constant resolution for time to come. The one in the testimony of our consciences, the other in the testimony of Gods Spirit, witnessing to our spirits, that we are the sonnes of God, Rom. 8. 16. The first is not meant in this place, but onely the second For no flesh can glory in his presence, 1 Cor. 1. 29.

2 Cor. 1. 12.

It will be said, This glorying in a mans selfe, is vaine glory, and a branch of pride. Answ. It differs from vaine glory: first, in the foundation: for vaine glory hath for his ground our owne vertues and gifts, considered as comming from our selves, and not from God: whereas this true glorying is grounded upon them, as they are fruits of regeneration, proceeding from our justification by Christ.

Christ, and reconciliation with God. Secondly, in the end: Vaine glory tendeth to the advancing of our selves, in an opinion of our proper justice and desert. This true glorying aymeth at the glory of God alone.

Objection. Paul reproves those that consider their owne gifts onely, never comparing themselves with others, 2 Cor. 10. 12. They understand not that they measure themselves with themselves, and compare themselves with themselves. Therefore it seemes that a man, by comparing himselfe with others, may have whereof to rejoyce. Answer. He reproves the false apostles in that place for glorying in the gifts which they had, and the number of Proselytes which they had wonne, never comparing themselves with himselfe, or any other Apostle, which was the cause they were so puffed up with pride. For to compare ourselves with those that are eminently above us, is a notable meanes to abate pride: as I have already shewed. Whereas the measuring of our selves by our selves, with our inferiours, is the onely way to increase it. And this is it which the Apostle reproves in this place.

Further, we may rejoyce or glory in the testimony of a good conscience, if we observe these rules.

I. In our best desires, endeavours, actions, wee must labour to feele our owne defects: that wee doe not the good we should, nor in that manner we ought.

II. We must labour to have even our best works (our almes, prayers, &c.) covered with the righteousnesse of Christ: for it is the sweet odour of his sacrifice that doth perfume all our actions, that they may bee acceptable to God, being offered with the praiers of the Saints upon the golden altar, Rev. 8. 3.

III. Wee must acknowledge all the good things we have, the will and the worke, the purpose and the power, to proceed from God alone, Phil. 2. 13. Iam. 1. 17.

IV. We must rejoyce in them, not as causes, but as fruits of justification: so that if the question be, whether we be justified by them or not? we must renounce them, tread them under our feet, and account them as dung, as Paul did, Phil. 3. 8.

Hence we learne sundry things.

I. That if we would have a light heart, and passe our time merrily with comfort and content, we must looke to approve our hearts to God in all our actions.

II. It confutes the opinion of the multitude, who judge those that make conscience of sinne, and lead a more strict life than the common sort, endeavouring with Paul to have always a cleare conscience toward God and toward men, of all others to lead a most melancholike, sad, and uncomfortable life. For the truth is, this is the onely true joy, all other joy is but counterfeit in comparison: it is radicall, proceeding from the heart: the other but superficiall, from the teeth outward: it comforts a man in the middest of afflictions: whereas a man may have the other, and yet in the middest of mirth his heart will be sorrowfull: this is permanent and during, the other transitory and fading. It is like the joy in harvest, Psalme 4. v. 7. and which they have which divide a spoile, Esa. 9. 3. therfore Salomon saith, it is a continuall feast, Prover. 15. 15. and Peter calls it joy unspeakable and glorious, 1 Pet. 1. 8.

A

B

C

D

Act. 24. 16.

III. This shewes that there is much false joy in the world, consisting wholy in honors, profits, pleasures: none of which have their ground in a mans selfe: and therefore being our of a mans selfe, they are not true and durable, but false and vanishing joyes. Now those which have no comfort but out of themselves, are of foure sorts. First, such as rejoyce and glory in the opinion that the world hath of them, and not in the testimony of their owne conscience. Secondly, such as rejoyce not in their reconciliation with God, but in their blamelesse conversation, in that they have not beene open offenders, or men of scandalous life, Luke 18. 11. Thirdly, such as rejoyce in the vertues of their ancestours, as the Iewes bragged they were the seed of Abraham, John 8. 33. which vaine glorying of other mens vertues, John Baptist repreveth, when he saith, Thinke not to say with your selves, we have Abraham for our father, &c. Matth. 3. 9. Fourthly, such as rejoyce and thinke themselves in a good case, because they see others worse than themselves: this is right the Pharisies joy, O God I thanke thee, I am not thus and thus, or like this Publican, Luk, 18. 11. This is it which the Apostle directly aymeth at in this place: when men thinke themselves just, because others are more wretched than themselves: and pure, because others are more defiled. Whereas other mens hainous sinnes shall not justifie us and our lesser sinnes, save onely as Ierusalem justified her sisters Sodom and Samaria, Ezek. 16. 51. But so a man may be justified, and yet condemned.

5. For every one shall beare his owne burden.

Here Paul layes downe a second reason of his assertion, in the former verse, why every man ought to prove his owne worke, rather than to be curious in searching into the lives, and scanning the actions of other men, because every man shall beare his owne burden, which is all one with that, Gal. 5. 10. To beare a mans owne judgement: and that Roman. 24. 12 To give an account to God for himselfe. It is a proverbiall speech, the meaning whereof is expressed by the like, Ier. 31. 30. Every man that eateth the sower grape, his teeth shall be set on edge. And by that which is common amongst us, Every vessell shall stand upon its owne bottome, that is, every man shall beare the punishment of his owne sinne. For as the Indian is not therefore white, because the Morian is more blacke, or as the sand-blinde is not therefore sharpe sharp-sighted, because some other is stone blinde. So no man is therefore acquit of his sinnes, because others are greater sinners: or exempt from punishment, because others shall undergoe a deeper condemnation. Therfore considering that every man must beare the guilt and punishment of his owne sinne, he ought more narrowly to looke to himselfe, than to others; and to be a more severe censurer of himselfe, than of another.

For the better understanding of the words, sundry questions are to bee discussed.

First, it may bee demanded, how every man should beare his owne burden, seeing wee are commanded to beare one anothers burdens? Answer. There are two sorts of burdens. The first is, of giving an account to God: thus every man shall beare his owne burden, for every man must give an account for himselfe unto God, Romanes 14. 12. The second is, of bearing one anothers infirmities, of which Paul speakes, verse 2. In this sense a man is not to beare his owne burden: but every man his brothers. For the Apostle (to crosse the opinion of those which thought a man was polluted with other mens sinnes,) saith, Every man shall beare his own burden. And to meete with the carelesnesse of others, who respect themselves alone, never minding the good of their brethren: he saith, Beare ye one anothers burdens.

Onus oratoris addende: onus infirmitatis participande. Aug. contra script. Petil. lib. 3. Beda & Lumb. in hunc locum. Hugo de S. Victor. in Gal. quæst. 58.

II. Object. By bearing of our owne burdens, is understood, giving an account for our selves unto God. Now every man is not to give account for himselfe alone, but for those also that are committed to his charge, as the father for his childe, the master for his servant, the magistrate for the subject, the sheepheard for the sheepe, Ezech. 34. His blood will I require at thy hand. Hebrewes 13. 17. They watch over your soules, as they that must give account. Answer Governours and superiours are not to give account for the sins of those that are committed unto them: but for the sinnes which themselves commit, in not looking unto them, not admonishing them, not restraining them, not taking condigne punishment of them for their offences. This is plainly taught, Ezekiel 33. 8, 9. If thou doest not admonish the wicked of his way, hee shall dye for his iniquitie, but his blood will I require at thy hand. Neverthelesse, if thou warne the wicked of his way, to turne from it, if he doe not turne from his way, he shall dye for his iniquity, but thou hast delivered thy soule.

III. Object. Infants which have not sinned after the manner of the transgression of Adam, doe beare the burden of Adams sinne; therefore all doe not beare their owne burden. Answer. First, the words are properly to bee understood of personall or actuall sinnes, which are proper to every man in particular, and not of originall sinne, or the sinne of our nature, which is common to all mankinde, being propagated together with nature. Secondly, I answer, that Adams sinne was our sinne: and therefore seeing infants partake with him in the sinne, it is just with God they should partake with him in the punishment, and so beare their owne burden. For albeit the transgression of Adam was his actuall and personall sinne: yet it is ours by imputation and propagation of nature together with corruption. For as Levi was in the loynes of Abraham, when Melchizedech met him, and payed tythes in Abraham, Hebrewes 7. verse 9. 10. so all mankinde was in the loines of Adam when he sinned, as the branches are in the roote, or in the seed. And therfore when he sinned, we also sinned, as the Apostle saith, In whom all sinned, Romanes 5. 12. For so the words are in the originall, and not as it is commonly translated, for as much as all men have sinned.

In seminali principio.

ἐφ' ᾧ πάντες ἥμαρτον.

IV. Object. In the second commandement, the Lord threatneth to visit the sinnes of the fathers upon the children to the third and fourth generation. Therefore they beare not their owne burden, but part of their parents burden: and parents doe not beare their whole and intire burden, but their children for them. Answer. The clause in the second commandement of visiting the sinnes of the fathers upon the children, doth not contradict that of Ezechiel 18. 19.

The sonne shall not beare the iniquity of the father, neither shall the father beare the iniquitie of the sonne; the same soule that sinneth, that shall dye. For they are reconciled, verse 14. 17. If he (that is, a wicked man) beget a sonne that seeth all his fathers sinnes, which hee hath done, and feareth, neither doth the like — he shall not dye in the iniquity of his father, but shall surely live. Therefore the threatning in the second commandement, is not to bee understood absolutely, as though God would alway plague the children for the fathers sinne, but conditionally, if they persist and continue in their sinnes, walking in their wayes, & treading in their steps. And the same answer is given in the second commandement, that God will not visit the sinne of the fathers upon the children, save upon those that hate him. It may be said, The sinnes of the parents are not vindicated upon the children, because the punishment inflicted upon their posterity, is not felt of the parents. Ans. First, children are (as it were) a part of their parents, and therefore they being punished, their parents are punished with them. Secondly, it is a corrasive and a torment to parents, to know that their children shall be severely punished and afflicted. Thirdly, the punishment of posterity hath a relation to the parent, seeing GOD hath threatned hee will punish the children which walke in the wicked wayes of their fore-fathers, that so he may testifie how extreamely hee abhorreth both their sinne, and the sinne of their progenitors. Fourthly, the parents sinne is often a cause of the childrens sinne, seeing that God in his last judgement, curseth a wicked mans posteritie, by leaving them to themselves to blindnesse of minde, and hardnesse of heart, that so they may fulfill the measure of their fathers, as our Saviour Christ speaketh, Mat. 23.32. and by their owne sinnes, may justly pull upon them condigne punishment. Lastly, God doth more manifest his wrath against the sinne of the parent by punishing the childe.

Object. V. Numb. 25.4. The chiefest of the Israelites were hanged up before the Lord, for the fornication and Idolatry of the people: therefore they did not beare the burden of their owne sinne. Answer. They were punished for their owne sinne, for they consented to worship the Idoll, and commit folly with the daughters of Moab: or rather were principall ring-leaders, and first actors in this Comick-tragedy, as may appeare by the practice of Zimri, Prince of the family of the Simeonites, verse 6. in bringing Cosbi a Midianitish woman, into his tent, in the sight of Moses and the whole congregation. Therefore because they did not hinder them from committing this fact, as they might, being in the place of government, but did partake with them in their sinne, they are first punished, and that more severely: for a thousand of them were hanged up the same day, verse 4. the rest of the people, to the number of 23000. were slaine by the sword, at the commandement of God: verse 5. to which Paul had an eye, when he said, that there fell in one day 23000. 1 Corinth. 10.8. meaning of the common sort, excluding those that were hanged up: for in all there were 24. thousand, Numbers 25.9. Thus the contrariety which seems to be betwixt those two places, may be better accorded, than to say (as some doe) that the pen men or scribes fail'd in copying out the bookes. Or, (as others) that it was κατ' ἐπεξηγησιν in Paul: or as others, that Paul is not contrary to Moses, seeing that if there were 24. thousand, (as Moses saith) there were 23. thousand: for there is no reason why the Apostle should use the lesse number rather than the greater, (except that which I have said) considering the greater is as round a number as the lesse.

Object. VI. David sinned in numbring the people, and they were punished for his sinne: Achan sinned & the people fell slaine before the men of Ai: therefore every man doth not beare his owne entire burden. The like may be said of the children of the Sodomites, and of the first borne of the Egyptians, who bare the burden of their parents sinne. Answ. The people were punished for their owne sinne: & so was David, albeit not in his owne, but in their persons: for God punished him in his kinde, in destroying the people with that fearfull plague, in whose great multitude hee had glorified so much. Indeed their punishment was occasioned by his sinne: but caused by their owne: for no man, though never so holy, is without sinne, and therefore none but deserve punishment: nay, it is Gods mercy that we are not consumed, Lam. 3.22.

And albeit all the infants perished in the Deluge, and in the overthrow of Sodome and Gomorrha, which could neither imitate, nor approve the actions of their fore-fathers: yet their death was deserved. For though infants be truly called innocents, in regard of actuall sinne: yet they are not innocents in regard of originall: for from the wombe they carry a wolvish nature, which prepares them to the spoile, though they never did hurte. The Scorpion hath his sting within him, though he doe not alway strike; and though a Serpent may bee handled whilest the colde hath benummed him; yet when hee is warmed, he will hisse out his venemous poison. Mans practice doth cleare God of unjustice in this behalfe, in killing the young cubbes, as well as the old foxes; the wolves whelpes, as well as the damme. Albeit if wee speake of their finall estate, and come to particulars, wee are to leave secret judgements to God. The example of Achan is more difficult, seeing that for his sinne, 36. of the people were slaine, Iosh. 7.5. and his whole familie rooted out, verse 25. who were not consenting to his fact, nor guilty of his sinne. Yet something may be probably said in this case. First, that they were guilty of this his sinne in part, in not punishing theft so severely as they ought to have done, which was a means to embolden Achan to steale the execrable thing. Secondly, that private good must yeeld to the publike; as the life of every particular person, to the generall good of the whole Common wealth: thus souldiers in the warres, redeeme the publike peace by the losse of their owne lives: now the manifestation of the glory, of the wisedome, power, and justice of God, is the publike good of the whole Church: therefore mens private good, even their lives, must give place to it: especially considering he never inflicts temporall punishment for the publike good of his Elect, whom hee corrects in judgement, not in injury. Thirdly, howsoever Achan did beare the burden of his owne sinne; this judgement might bee inflicted upon them for their good: for temporall punishment, yea, death it selfe, is sometimes inflicted for the good of those that are punished, as we see in the children of the Sodomites, many whereof (no doubt) were taken away in mercy, lest malice should have changed and corrupted their mindes: and sometime for the terror of others, to bee a warning-peece to make them take heede; and sometime for both: as it may bee it was in this particular. Fourthly, sinne committed by a particular man, that is a member of the politike body, doth after a sort belong to the whole body: thus thus the Lord saith, that blood defileth the land, which cannot bee cleansed of the blood that was shed therein, but by the blood of him that shed it, Numbers 35.33. And thus Achans sinne, though not knowne to the people, made the whole army guilty before God, till hee was put to death, Iosh. 7.11, 12. Lastly, if the tything of an army, for the offence of some few, have beene thought lawfull and just: why should the death of 36. men seeme unjust for the sinne of Achan, especially considering it was to make the people more provident to prevent, and take heed of the like evill? If these reasons satisfie not, yet let us rest in this, that Gods judgements are often secret, but alwayes just. See Aug. lib quæst. in Iosu q. 8. and Calvin in 7 cap. Iosh.

Object. VII. If every man must beare his owne burden, David shall as well beare the burden of his murthering Vrias by the sword of the children of Ammon, as Saul the murthering of himselfe with his owne sword: Peter his denying Christ, as Iudas his betraying him, &c. Answ. By the sentence of the Law, every one is to beare his owne burthen, and to satisfie for his owne sinne, in his owne person: but the Gospell, (the second part of Gods word) makes an exception: which is, that they which have their sinnes set upon Christs reckoning, shall not give account for them against: and those that have the burden of them laide upon his shoulders, (who hath borne our sinne in his body upon the crosse, 1 Pet. 2.23.) shall not beare the burden of them themselves at the last judgement. Therefore true beleevers, which have Christ their surety, satisfying the rigour of Gods justice for them, shall not answer or satisfie for them themselves: for they are freed by him from a threefold burden. First, from the burden of ceremonies, (and so consequently of humane lawes and ordinances) which were a yoke (is Peter saith) which neither we, nor our fathers were able to beare, Acts 15. Secondly, from the burden of miseries, and crosses which befall men in this life. He doth ease us of this burden, by his word and Spirit, either in removing them away, Psalm. 81.7. or in giving strength and patience to beare them, 2 Cor. 12.9. or in mitigating and proportionating them to our strength, 1 Cor. 10.13. Thirdly, from the burden of sinne, as well originall, as actuall, in being made sinne, that is, accounted a sinner, and made a sacrifice for sinne, for us: as also by ealing them that are heavy laden, in pacifying the perplexed conscience, Mat. 11.28. It will bee said, if Christ beare the burden of our sinnes, every man shall not beare his owne burden. Ans. Both be true, & may well stand together: for Legally, every man is to beare his own burden, the law requiring personall obedience, or satisfaction, or both. Evangelically, Christ our surety doth beare the burden of them, and satisfie Gods justice for them, 1 Pet. 2.23.

Vse. Hence we learne, first, that no man can pay a ransome for his brother, or redeeme his soule from death, or satisfie the justice of God for his sinne, seeing that every man by the tenour of the Law, is to beare his owne burden: and by the Gospell none can be our surety but Christ.

Secondly, here we see the nature of sinne, that it is a burden to the soule: for it is heavier than the gravell of the earth, and the sand of the sea. It is a burden to the wicked angels: for it weighed them from the highest heaven, and made them fall like thunderbolts into the lowest hell. To man: for as David saith, it is a grievous burden, too heavy for him to beare, Psal. 38.4. To God: for the hypocriticall and ceremoniall service of the Iewes, was such a burden unto him that hee was weary to beare it, Isa. 1.14. Behold, I am prest ed under you, as a cart is prest that is full of sheaves, Amos 2.13. To the creatures, who groane under this burden, being by mans sinne, subject to vanity and corruption, Rom. 8.20, 21. Hence it followeth then, that those which feele not the waight and burden of their sinnes, are dead being alive, as Paul speakes in another case, 1 Tim. 5.6.

Thirdly, wee are not to wonder that sinne, being so heavy a burden, should bee made so light a matter, by carnall men: for it is a spirituall burden, and therefore no marvell though it be not felt of them that are all flesh, and no spirit.

Fourthly, this shewes that the more a man doth feele the burden of his sinnes, the greater measure of grace and spirituall life hee hath: and the lesse he feeleth it, the more he is to suspect himselfe, that the graces of God doe want and decay in him. For corruption is not felt by corruption, but by grace: and therefore the more a man doth feele the burden of his owne corruptions, the more grace he hath.

Fifthly, by this wee see, that the greatest part of the world are dead in their sinnes, in that they have no sense nor feeling of this heavy burden. There is indeed great crying out of the stone in the reynes, because it is felt to be a great torment to the body: but there is little or no complaining of the stone in the heart, because men want spirituall life and sense to discerne it. All men can take pitty upon a beast, if hee lye under his burden, and will bee ready to helpe him upagaine. But al have not the like sight and sense of the spirituall burden of sinne, nor sympathy of the misery of their brethren, groaning under it.

Sixtly, whereas Paul saith, Every man must beare his own burden, he mereeth with the prophanenesse and Atheisme of our time, when men make a mocke at the day of judgement, and the strict account that every man is to give for himselfe. The Iewes were wont to jeast at the threatnings of God, denounced by the Prophets, and to call the visions of the Prophets, onus Iehovæ, the burden of the Lord, in a merriment, using it as a by-word, Ieremy 23.34. 36. 38. Thereby signifying that the threats of God were but vaine bugs, or scarre-crowes, which might perhaps terrifie children, but could not hurt them. The like prophanenesse, infidelitie, atheisme, hath crept into the mindes of many, who otherwise professe the Gospel, which they testifie by their speeches, in saying they are sure sin is nothing so ougly, hell is not halfe so hot, nor the devill halfe so blacke, as preachers say they are: or if they be, they are sure they shall not goe laden alone, with the burden of their sinnes, but shall have company, and shall perhaps abide the brunt as well as their fellows. But alas, they know not that the burden of sin is intolerable, that it will eternally presse them downe to the gulfe of hell, and that they shall never bee able to bee rid or eased of it.

Seventhly, we are here admonished to take heed of every sinne, for there is no sinne so small but hath his waight, and such a waight, as will presse downe to the bottomlesse pit, Rom.6. 23. And though some bee greater than others, and sinke a man deeper into condemnation, yet many small sinnes will as easily condemne, as a few great. Like as sands, though but small in quantity, yet being many in number, will as soone sinke the ship, as if it were laden with the greatest burden.

Eightly, seeing the guilt and punishment of sinne, is so heavy a burden, we are to ease and disburden our selves thereof. And that we may doe this, wee must labour to feele the intolerable waight of it pressing and oppressing the conscience. Therefore as those, who in their sleepe are troubled with the Ephialtes or Mare, feeling (as it were) a great mountaine lying upon them, and pressing them downe, would give all the world the waight might be removed: So wee feeling the waight and burden of our sinnes, are to labour to be disburdened and eased thereof: and this we shall doe by our repentance towards God, and faith in Christ, Matth. 11.28. Come unto me all yee that are weary and laden, and I will ease you.

Verse 6. Let him that is taught in the word, make him that hath taught him partaker of all his goods.

In these words the Apostle layeth downe another rule, touching the maintenance of the ministery, and competency of allowance, for the Ministers of the word: for it seemeth that the Ministery among the Galatians, was at that time much neglected, at least not so respected as it ought.

In handling of the rule, I will first shew the meaning of the words: secondly, the reasons of the rule: thirdly, the objections against it: lastly, the doctrine and uses, that are to be gathered from it.

The meaning.

Let him that is taught] The word translated taught, signifieth him that is catechized or taught familiarly, by word of mouth, or lively voyce, as when children are taught the first principles of religion. But here it hath a larger signification (as Oecumenius hath well observed) for him that is any way taught and instructed, whether it be in the first principles, and rudiments, or in points of greater difficulty, whether plainly and familiarly, (as catechizers use to doe:) or more profoundly, for the instruction of the learned.

Taught in the word] What needs this addition (may some say) is there any catechizing without the word? Answer. The Apostle addeth in the word, to shew that hee meaneth not so much the doctrine of Christian religion, contained in the Scriptures, as the doctrine of the Gospell, which by an excebe, or peculiar excellency, is called the word. Act. 16.6. They were forbidden of the holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia: which is expounded verse 10. to bee the preaching of the Gospell: Thus it is used, Act. 14.25. When they had preached the word in Perga. The sower soweth the word. And so in sundry other places. And it is further called the word of the kingdome, Matth. 13. 19. because it teacheth what is the kingdome of grace and glory: & because it being beleeved, or (as the Apostle speakes, Heb. 4 2.) being mingled with faith in our hearts, doth make us free denizens of the kingdome of grace in this life; and doth advance us to the kingdome of glory, in the life to come. Secondly, it is called the word of God, because he is the Author of it, and no creature, man, or Angell, 1 Thessal. 3.13. Thirdly, the word of salvation, Act. 13.26. because it shewes the way, and meanes of attaining salvation. Lastly, the word of life; Act. 5.20. because it doth not onely shew the narrow way, that leadeth to eternall life; but it is in it selfe a lively word, and mighty in operation, Hebrewes 4. 12. For as the powerfull word of God in the beginning, did give being to things that were not; so the Gospell (being the power of God to salvation to every one that beleeveth) doth make new creatures, by the immortall seed of the word.

Make him that taught him] q.d. catechized him, yet as before it must bee taken generally for any kinde of teaching or instruction; for so the word is used elsewhere in Scripture; as Luke 1. 4. Act. 18.25. Romanes 2.18. 1 Cor. 14.19. so that this text gives us no just occasion to speake of the originall, manner, use, and profit of catechizing.

Partaker of his goods] By goods hee* understandeth food, raiment, lodging, bookes, and other necessaries, without the which, a Minister of the word cannot follow his calling: for Paul calleth these, goods; according to the common opinion, which so judgeth of

* προσὼπου τινὸς. Oecumen.

of them. Luke 12.19. Soule, thou hast much goods laid up for many yeares. Luke 16.25. Sonne, remember that thou in thy life time receivedst thy good things.

Make them partaker] That is, communicate, afford, give unto them these temporall things, seeing they give you spirituall.

Of all his goods] Not in giving all away, but imparting to their teachers what they stand in need of: accounting nothing too deare for them. The Papists upon this ground take tythe of all, as the Priests did in the Levitticall law: whereas Paul speakes nothing of tythes.

There are foure principall duties, which the people are to performe to their Pastour, three of them are recorded elsewhere in scripture. The first is, to heare them as Embassadours sent of GOD, with reverence. The second is, to obey them, and submit themselves unto them in the Lord. The third, to love and honour them for their workes sake. The fourth, the Apostle speakes of in this place, to give them not onely countenance, but also maintenance.

The reasons of this rule are many and waighty.

Wee are bound (even by the bond of nature) to maintaine our parents, if they bee in want; because they maintained us, and gave unto us our being: Paul saith, It is an honest thing, and acceptable before God, for Children to recompence their Parents and Progenitors, 1 Timothy 5.4. Now if this bee so, men are bound by the same right to maintaine their spirituall fathers in Christ, that have begotten them anew, by the preaching of the word: as Paul saith, Hee travelled in paine of the Galatians, till Christ was formed in them, Gal. 4. and that he begat Onesimus in his bonds, Philem. verse 10. And 1 Corinth. 4.15. In Christ Iesus I have begotten you through the Gospell. Hence Paul commendeth the Galatians, Gal. 4. 15. for that, if it had beene possible, they would have plucked out their eyes, and have given them him. And surely we owe unto our spirituall parents, and fathers in Christ, not onely this temporall trash, but even our selves, as Paul saith to Philemon, verse 19. Albeit I doe not say unto thee that thou owest unto me, even thine owne selfe.

II. It is a law of nations, and a conclusion grounded upon common equity, that those that watch, labour, and spend themselves, as a candle to give light to others, and that for the common good of all, should bee maintained of the common flocke by all. And the Lord chargeth all the twelve tribes, even all Israel, Deut. 12.19. Beware that thou forsakest not the Levite, so long as thou livest on the earth.

III. Every trade, calling, and condition, of life, is able to maintaine them that live therein (as experience shewes:) therefore we may not thinke, that the Ministery, being the highest calling, should be so bare, or barren, as that it cannot competently maintaine them that attend thereon.

IV. The Ministers are the Lords souldiers, his Captaines, and Standard-bearers, and therefore are not to goe a warfar at their owne cost: the Lords labourers in his vineyard, and therefore are worthy of their wages, and ought to eate of the fruit of the vineyard: the Lords shepheards, to eat over the flocke of Christ, to feed his sheepe, & therefore ought to eate of the milke of the flocke. And seeing it was forbidden that no man should muzzle the mouth of the oxe, that treadeth out the corne: shall we think that God would have those that thresh in his floore, and separate the wheate from the chaffe, the precious from the vile, to be muzzled, or not to live upon their labours? for they are worthy double honour, that is, all honour, reverence, helpe, and furtherance, which labour in the word and doctrine, 1 Tim. 5 17.

V. The Ministers are to give themselves wholly to reading, exhortation, doctrine, and to continue therein, 2 Tim. 4 13, 15, 16. they are wholly to devote themselves to the building of the Church, and to the fighting of the Lords battels; and therefore not to bee entangled with the cares of this life, 2 Tim. 2 4. therefore they are to have their pay, and their allowance, that so they may attend upon their callings without distraction.

VI. It is the ordinance of God (as Paul saith, 1 Cor. 9. 14. that they which preach the Gospell, should live of the Gospell: therefore those that doe not their indeavour, and enlarge not their liberality to uphold and maintaine the Ministery in good estate, they withstand (as much as in them lyeth) the ordinance of God: besides they waste & make havocke of the Church of God, and are guilty of the blood of all that perish for want of instruction.

I adde further, it is the will of God, that the Ministers which labour in the word and doctrine, should be plentifully and liberally provided for: (yet with moderation, that they draw not all mens wealth into their purses, as the Pope, and church of Rome have done into their coffers, of whom it is truely verified, Religio peperit divitias, sed filia devoravit matrem.) which I prove from the Levitticall law: for the whole Land of promise, being no bigger in compasse than Wales, or the fourth part of England: yet yeelded unto the Levites, at the appointment of God, besides the share which they had out of the sacrifices, besides tenths, first fruits, &c. 48 Cities, with their suburbes.

It may here be demanded, whether the Ministers of the word are now to be maintained by common contribution, and liberality of the people, or not?

Answ. We must consider, that if the Ministers bee sufficiently provided for, by set stipends, as by some foundation, or by the revenewes of the Church, men are not bound to contribute unto them, and make them partakers of all their goods; although in regard of thankfulnesse, they owe unto them even themselves, as Paul telleth Philemon; but onely such as have not else wherewith to maintaine themselves. And wee must consider the reason why Paul commandeth all that are instructed in the word, to make them that instructed them partakers of their goods, to wit, because in Pauls time, and long after, the Church was not endowed with lands or goods, whereby the Ministery might bee upholden, neither had it publike Christian Magistrates, but was under cruell tyrants in persecution: and therefore those that were taught in the word, were to maintaine their teachers by liberall contribution, otherwise they might starve: but now the Church being greatly inriched, they may without contribution be sufficiently maintained of the Church goods.

And that it is much more convenient for the Ministers to bee maintained by set stipends, arising from goods proper to the Church, than by voluntary contribution, it may appeare by this, in that it cuts off sundry inconveniences, which in voluntary contributions either cannot bee, or are hardly avoyded. First, flattery, and suspition of flattery, in being thought to have some persons in admiration, because of advantage. Secondly, the poorer sort are no way disgraced by this means, as they should bee in contributions, except they did give ratably as the rest. Thirdly, dissembling and deceit, in making as though they received little, when as they have much, is cut off in a set stipend. Fourthly, the evill disposed would not so easily cast off their Minister, and seeke a new that would teach for lesse; or would give nothing at all, if they were touched to the quicke, and galled for their sinnes. Fifthly, ostentation in some in giving much, and disdaining those that give lesse. Sixtly, suspition of covetousnesse and filthy lucre in the Ministers in seeming to take of those to whom they ought to give. Seventhly, disgrace of the Ministery, in gathering themselves, or sending others to gather the peoples liberality from doore to doore. Lastly, a set stipend comes nearer the order appointed by God, in maintaining the Priesthood under the Levitticall law.

In the next place, I will answer the common objections that are made to the contrary, by such as thinke it is as easie a matter to say service in the Church, and to doe service in the house: to stand at the altar of God, as to follow their masters Plough; to preach in the Pulpit, as to talke in the Taverne.

I. Objection. 2. Thessal. 3.10. They which will not worke, must not eate. But Ministers never plough, nor sowe, nor hedge, nor ditch, nor use any painfull labour: for of all men they have the easiest lives: their greatest paines is to reade over a few bookes, or to speake a few words once or twice a weeke. Therefore they are not to bee maintained.

Answer. There is a twofold labour, one of the body, another of the minde: now albeit the Ministers doe not weary themselves in bodily labour, yet they are not therefore idle: for the labours of the minde, doe farre exceede the labours of the body: they are more painfull, they spend the spirits more, they consume naturall moisture, and bring olde age sooner. The holy Ghost calleth the Ministery, the worke of the ministery, Ephes. 4. 12. nay, a worthy worke, 1 Tim. 3.1. therefore Paul saith, that those Elders are worthy double honour, that labour in the word and doctrine, 1 Tim. 5.17. & he exhorts the Thessalonians, that they would know them that labour among them; and that they have them in singular love, for their workes sake, 1 Thess. 5. 12, 13. Hence it is that the Scripture doth usually compare the worke of the ministery, to the most toylsome labour that may bee, as to the worke of the husbandman, to setting, to plowing, to sowing, to reaping, to the labour in the vineyard: and the Minister to a builder: to a shepheard that watcheth his flocke; to a soudier that fights in the warres, &c. Againe, we may not judge of the painfulnesse of the calling, by the outward appearance: for so a man would thinke a King had the easiest life of all: when as the truth is, the toyle which he takes, & the care wherewith he is possessed, doe exceed all other cares: if a man knew the travaile that is required to the weilding of a sceptre, and the paine that is taken in wearing of a heavy crowne, he would hardly stoope downe to take the one into his hands, or to set the other upon his head. The master builder doth not hew the stones, nor worke the morter, nor carry the rubbish, nor any such like drudgery: but onely standeth by, and directeth the workemen; and yet his labour is double to any of theirs. The master of a Ship (a man would thinke) were idle, and did nothing: he stands not to the tackling, he stirreth not the Pumpe, hee driveth not the Oares, hee soundeth not the deepe, he rideth not the ropes: but onely sitteth still at the sterne, and looketh to the Pole-star, and guideth the compasse; yet his labour passeth all the rest, were it not for him, the ship would runne her selfe under the water, or strike upon the Rocks, or split upon the sands, or fall foule with another (as Marriners speake.) Even so for all the world fareth it with the Ministers of the word: they seeme to sit still, to be at ease, to do nothing, and yet their labour is double and treble to other mens bodily labour, except they be unfaithfull, and doe the worke of the Lord negligently.

II. Objection. Paul laboured with his hands in making of Tents, Act. 18.13. that he might not not be chargeable to any, Act. 20. vers. 34. 2 Thess. 3.8. Therefore Preachers are to maintaine themselves by their handy labour, and not bee chargeable to the Church. Ans. Pauls example proveth not, that the Minister ought to live by the labour of his hands: for first, himselfe received a contribution of the Philippians, when he was absent from them, Phil. 4. 16. When I was in Thessalonica yee sent once, and afterward again for my necessity. Therefore if Paul received exhibition from other Churches, where he did not labour, it is lawfull for the Ministers to receive of those whom they doe instruct. Secondly, consider the reasons why Paul would not take wages of the Church of Corinth, and some others. I. Lest hee should bee a burden unto them, 2 Thess. 3.8. We wrought with labour and travell, day and night, because we would not bee chargeable to any of you. 2 Cor. 11.9 In all things I kept and will keepe my selfe, that I should not bee grievous unto you. II. That he might give a president or example to others to treade in his steppes, 2 Thess. 3.9. Not but that we had authoritie, but that we might make our selves an example to them to follow us. III. That he might manifest what his end was in teaching the Gospell, not to seeke himselfe, but the salvation of his hearers. 2 Cor. 11. 14. I seeke not yours, but you. And v. 19. We doe all things for your edification. Phil. 4. 17. Not that I desire a gift, but the fruit which may further your reckoning. IV. That he might confound the false apostles, which taught not freely, but received wages for their labour, whereas he received none: or lest they should slander him and his ministery, if he should receive wages, that he did it for filthy lucre. 2 Cor. 11. 12. But what I do, that will I do, that I may cut away occasion from them which desire occasion, that they might be found like unto us in that wherein they rejoyce. Therefore Pauls example is altogether impertinent, and proves nothing. For 1. he himselfe tooke wages: 2. when as hee refused it, it was upon speciall consideration: 3. he did not onely permit, but also command that the Ministers should be maintained.

III. Object. Matth. 10.8. Freely yee have received, freely give: therefore as it was unlawfull for the Apostles to take any reward for their labour, so is it for Preachers at this day. Answ. I. This Text is specially to be understood of the extraordinary gift of working miracles, which Christ having freely bestowed upon them, he would have them to use freely, not seeking thereby to inrich themselves by exacting or taking any thing, or to win reputation and glory among men. II. If we understand it of the whole Ministery, as well of preaching, as of working miracles, it is to be taken as a precept forbidding onely filthy lucre, that they should not make merchandize of the word of God, setting it to sale, in preaching the word with purpose to benefit themselves, to feed their bellies, or to get a name and reputation in the world, which is forbidden in other places, as 2 Tim. 3.3. Tit. 1.7. but for the glory of God, the discharge of their duties, and the salvation of their hearers. Great reason there is of this precept. 1. Because the graces of God exhibited unto us in the preaching of the word, are so precious, that they cannot be valued at any price, all earthly things a man can desire, are not to be compared to them, as the Wiseman saith: therefore Peter said to Simon Magus, Thy money perish with thee, because thou thinkest that the gift of God may bee obtained by money. Act. 8.20. 2. Because it is not in mans power to sell them, seeing he is not Lord over them, but steward and dispenser of them, 1 Cor. 4. vers. 1. 3. Because that which God hath given freely, ought not to be sold basely: seeing by that meanes that is made saleable, which God would have free, which kind of merchandize is used in the Church of Rome at this day, in their Indulgences, wherin they sell pardons for remission of sinnes, and set even heaven it selfe to sale, for a small summe of money. III. This Text must so be expounded, as that it crosse not other precepts in this commission, and that Christ bee not contrary to himselfe; which he should be, if it were unlawfull for preachers to take any thing for their paines: for in the 10. verse he saith, The workeman is worthy of his meate: therefore he may receive it: and vers. 11. hee enjoynes them to enquire in every Towne where they came, who is worthy, and there abide. Therefore they were not utterly barred from taking all necessaries, for they might take their lodging, their food, their rayment, with this they were to be content, and more than this they might not take, though it were offered them, or forced upon them. Thus Elizeus refused the gift offered him by Naaman, for curing his leprosie, lest Gods gifts should be made a gaine, or lest that which was given to set forth Gods glory immediately, should bee an occasion of satisfying mens greedy desires.

IV. Objection. Matth. 10.9. The Apostles are forbidden by Christ to possesse gold, or silver, &c. Ans. We may not precisely urge the letter of the text, for so we shall make the Apostles practice contrary to Christs precept: and so he should condemne himselfe; for he had his bagge, which Judas bare. He had besides his upper garment, John 13.4. and coat without seame, John 19.23. Luk. 22.36. Peter had sandalls, Act. 12. Paul had a cloake, 2 Tim. 4. Yea Christ afterward saith unto them, But now he that hath a bag let him take it, and likewise a scrip, &c. II. It was a temporary precept, given them in commission onely for that present; and their going without gold, silver, a scrip, two coats, shooes, a staffe, signifies, that they should goe in hast, committing themselves wholly to the providence of God, not caring for provision or victualls, which is signified by a scrip, by silver & gold: nor of change of raymen, signified by two coats: nor of defending themselves against violence, by the staffe.

Vse. Here we see that there are two sorts of men in the Church, some teachers, others to be taught, called in Scripture teachers and hearers. The ground of this distinction, is taken from the good pleasure of God, who hath ordained that man should be taught by man, partly because of mans weakenesse, who could not endure the glory and majesty of God, speaking unto him: partly, that nothing might bee ascribed to the excellency of the instrument, in the conversion of men, but that God might have all the glory of it, as the Apostle speakes, 2 Cor. 4. 7. We have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of that power might be of God, and not of man. There is set downe, Deut. 5. 23. &c. a notable ground for the institution of the holy Ministery by man, in stead of Gods lively voice from heaven. And it was one of the ends which God had in giving his law in so great majesty, to teach us, that it is for our good that hee doth not instruct us with his owne lively voyce from heaven, and speake unto us in his owne person: and that therefore we should be content, nay desirous rather to bee taught by man. For when the people desired that they might not heare the voyce of the Lord any more, but that Moses might speak unto them, the Lord answered, They have done well to say so, I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and I will put my words in his mouth, and he shall speake unto them all that I command him, Deut. 18. 17. 18. This offseth the curiosity of those, who not contenting themselves with the word of God delivered by the ministery of man, desire that God would speak unto them with his own mouth from heaven. For the Israelites found it by experience, that it was a fearfull thing, full of horrour and astonishment to heare the voice of God, therefore they desire they may heare it no more, lest they die, Deut 18 16. But the Anabaptists of late, that under the New Testament, all shall be taught of God, Iohn 6. 45. and they shall not teach every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord. Therefore the publike ministery is now needlesse. Answ. The words must not be understood simply, but comparatively, and synecdochically. Comparatively, that there shall be far greater knowledge under the new Testament, than was under the Old, Isa. 11 9. The Apostle saith not, that there shall bee no teaching at all, (for Christ hath given some to bee Prophe s, others Pastors and Teachers, for the worke of the ministery, and the edification of the body of Christ, Eph. 4. 11, 12.) But that there shall be no need of this kinde of teaching, to catechize them in the first rudiments, as to teach them what God is. Synecdochically, not of perfect and absolute knowledge, for we all know but in part, 2 Cor. 13. 12. but of initiate or inchoate knowledge, which shal be consummate in the life to come.

Ier. 31. 34. Heb. 8. 11.

Further, upon this distinction it followeth, that hearers are not to intermeddle with the publike duties of the ministery; for every man is to abide in the calling wherein God hath placed him, and therein to live contented, 1 Corin. 7. For no man may take unto himselfe this honour, but he that is called, as was Aaron, Hebrewes 5. 4. For albeit it be true which Ambrose writeth, that in the beginning of the preaching of the Gospell, and founding of the Church of the New Testament, all Christians did teach and baptize indifferently: yet afterward, when the Churches were founded, it was not lawfull, neither is it now. And though there be neither male nor female in Christ, but we are all one in him, Gal. 3. 28. namely, in receiving of the Gospell: yet in dispensing of it, there is great difference: it being unlawfull for a woman to preach, or publikely to teach; I permit not a woman to teach, 1 Tim. 2. 12. Let women keepe silence in the Churches, for it is not permitted unto them to speake, 1 Cor. 14 34. Apoc. 2. 20. This condemneth the fantasticall opinion of the Anabaptists, that all men may speake publikely without any difference, according to the instinct of the Spirit, and measure of his gifts.

In comment. in 4. ad Ephes.

1 Tim. 1. 3. ut irrogabiscertis. Nec aliud, ut hæc, nec aliter, ut Pulg. edit.

Againe, when Paul saith, He that is taught in the word, &c. him that taught him in the word, &c. He shewes what the duty of the Minister is, that lookes to live by his ministery, namely, not to feed his auditory with Philosophy, or fables, or lying Legends: not to preach poeticall fictions, Thalmudicall dreams, Schoolemens quiddities, Popish decrees, or humane constitutions, or to tickle the itching eares of his auditory with the fine ringing sentences of the Fathers (for what is the chaffe to the wheate?) but hee must preach the word of God: for there is no word nor writing in the world besides, that hath a promise to be the power of God to salvation, Rom. 1. able to make men wise to salvation, 2 Tim. 3. 15. to give an inheritance amongst them that are sanctified, Act. 20. To be lively and mighty in operation, sharper than any two edged sword, entring through, even to the dividing asunder of the soule and spirit, the joynts, and the marrow, and to be a discerner of the thoughts & intents of the heart, Hebr. 4 12. and that can make the man of God absolute to every good worke, 2 Tim. 3. 17. but onely this word given by divine inspiration. Is being not onely the seed by which wee are begotten and borne anew, but the food by which we are nourished: both milke for the babe, that is, a novice in religion, & strong meate for him that is of yeares: and therefore being perfect nourishment, the bread of life for him that is hungry, and the water of life for him that is thirsty, what needs there any more?

more? Besides no word nor writing hath the property of fire, save onely the word of God, to dispell the darknesse of ignorance, by enlightening the minde with the saving knowledge of the truth, and to heat, yea to inflame the affection with a zeale of Gods glory, by burning up the corruption of nature. Againe, Divinity is the Mistris, all liberall Arts, tongues, histories, &c. are but handmaids to attend upon her: now when the Mistris is speaking, it is good manners for the maid to hold her peace. To this word alone the Prophets were tyed by their commission: What I shall command thee, that shalt thou say. And the Apostles, You shall teach what I have commanded you. Christ himselfe taught nothing but that which he had heard and received of his Father, John 8. 28. Paul delivers nothing but that which he received of Christ, 1 Cor. 11. 23. and taught nothing but that which Moses and the Prophets had written, Act. 26. 22. Paul commands Timothy to charge the Pastors of Ephesus, that they teach no divers doctrine, either for matter or manner, for substance or circumstance. Yet here wee must take heed of extremities, for in some cases is it lawfull in preaching to use Philosophy, the testimony of prophane writers, and quotations of Fathers.

I. When we have to deale with heathen men (who will not be so easily moved with the authority of the Scriptures) we may convict them by the testimony of their owne writers, as Paul did the Athenians, Epicures, and Stoikes, by the testimony of Aratus, Act. 17. 28. and the Grecians, by the testimony of Epimenides, Tit. 1. 12.

II. In preaching to a mixt congregation, where some are infected with Popery, or some other heresie, and will not receive the doctrine delivered, nor yeeld unto the truth, except it have the consent of the Fathers of the Church.

III. In handling of some controversall point of Divinity, shewing that the doctrine we teach is no new doctrine, but that which was taught in the Primitive Church, especially in speaking to the weake, who have not as yet left their old superstition wherein they were nuzzled.

IV. To cut off the calumniations of the malicious adversaries, who must needs have their mouthes stopped by some other meanes than by the Scriptures.

V. In the necessary unfolding of the meaning of certaine places of Scripture, which without Philosophy cannot bee conceived. In such a case we may use humanity, in descending to the reach and capacity of the auditory, and so teach heavenly things by earthly things, as our Saviour Christ taught regeneration by the similitude of the winde, Ioh. 3. Yet all these must be used, first, sparingly; secondly, when there is just cause; thirdly, without ostentation; fourthly, delivering nothing to the people, the, ground whereof is not in the word.

This shewes, that the maine scope of the ministery, is to preach the word purely, and to apply it powerfully to the consciences of men: and it condemnes all deceitfull handling of the word, and all huckster-like dealing, in mingling wine and water together, wheat and chaffe, gold and drosse, in preventing it with aguish and sottish conceits, in wresting it with allegories, tropologies, and anagogies, and in wringing the Text they make it bleed, and so (as an ancient Writer saith) presse the two dugges of the Scriptures, the old and new Testament, that in stead of milke they drinke nothing but blood. This teacheth the hearers likewise to rest contented with the bare word, without hungring after new doctrines, as the Athenians after newes, or being drawne away from the simplicity that is in Christ, by the subtilty of seducers; or by devices and quiddities of mans braine. Let those therefore which loath Manna, and long for Quailes, remember that if God give them their desire, hee will also give them their desert. Let them take heed lest hee punish them with a famine, not of bread, nor a thirst of water, but of hearing the word, Amos 8. v. 11. And let those that have itching eares, in heaping up to themselves a multitude of teachers, take heed also that they have not tingling eares, when they shall heare of the judgements of God for the contempt of his word.

Volusian. epist. ad Nicol. 1. Scripturarum mammillas dum diutius presserunt, sanguinem prolexisse videntur.

2 Tim. 4. 3.

1 Sam. 3. 11.

Further, whereas Paul saith, He that teacheth is to be maintained: it is a good Item for all idle drones that will not labour, and all dumbe dogges that cannot barke, they may not expect the maintenance which is due unto the Ministers: for it is generally true of all men, and much more true of the Minister, that he which will not labour, must not eate. And great reason it is that hee which looketh for his hire, should doe his worke: he that would live of the sacrifice, must minister at the Altar: hee that lookes to be fed with corporall bread, should breake unto his hearers the bread of life: hee that would reape carnall things, should sow spirituall things; hee that would not have his mouth muzled, should thresh out the corne: he that would drinke of the wine, should plant the grape: he that lookes for milke, should feede the flocke: that is, he that will live of the Gospell, should teach the Gospell. It is a maxime not onely of the Canon law, but grounded upon the law of nature, that beneficium postulat officium, a benefit requireth a duty; or more plainly, a benefit requireth an office, and diligence in the office. They therefore that care not so much for the feeding of the sheepe, as for the feeding of themselves, and feare not so much the losse of the flocke, as the losse of the fleece; doe not onely violate the law of God, but even the law of nations, and the law of nature.

2 Thess. 3. 10.

1 Cor. 5.

Againe,

Againe, hence I gather, that those that labour in the word and doctrine, may lawfully take wages, albeit they have sufficient of their owne to maintaine themselves: it is the very equity of this text. For if they that are instructed in the word, are to make those that instructed them partakers of their goods: then it is lawfull for them which instruct and teach, to receive something in recompence of their labour, seeing that the labourer is worthy of his wages. Yet this one caveat must bee remembred, that if receiving of wages bee a hinderance to the Gospell (as it would have beene in Paul) it is not lawfull: for wee may not so use our liberty, as that we thereby hinder the free course of the Gospell.

We may here further perceive the great want of devotion which is in most men of these daies. For as the cry of the poore in the streets, and at our doores, is an argument that there is no mercy, no bowels of pitie and compassion: So, in that there are so many needy poore wandring Levites, which would gladly serve for a morsell of bread, or a sute of rayment, it is a pregnant proofe there is very small devotion in men for the maintenance of religion; especially in those which are so strait laced, and short sleeved, in bestowing any thing for the good of the Ministery; and yet in keeping of hounds and hawkes, and worse matters, in maintaining players, jesters, fooles, and such like, are very lavish and profuse, to their great cost. This hath been the practice of the world, and the contemptible estate of the Ministery in former time. Foure hundred false Prophets were richly provided for at Iezabels table, 1 King 18. 19. whereas the true Prophets of God in the meane time were faine to hide their heads, having scarce bread and water, and that not without danger. Well, her practice shall condemne a number of professors; nay, our forefathers zeale and forwardnesse, (notwithstanding they lived in blindnesse) shall condemne our coldnesse in this behalfe: what speake I of our forefathers? even the stones in the ruinated Abbyes, and other religious houses, shall rise up in judgement against us: for those places could maintaine thirty or fortie idle bellies, which did nothing but nuzzle men in superstitious idolatry: whereas now the same place will not competently maintaine one or two to instruct them in the way to eternall life. And no marvell: for we take from the Church as fast as they gave to it. In old time they were wont to say, What shall wee give the man of God? 1 Sam. 9. but now with the sacrilegious church-robbers, they say, Come, and let us take the houses of God in possession, Psal. 83. 12. The Iewes were exceeding forward and liberall in their contribution to the Tabernacle; some brought gold, others silver, silke, pretious stones; the meaner sort, rams-skinnes, goats-haire, &c. so that more than enough was offered by them, in such sort that Moses was forced to cause a proclamation to bee made to stay the people from offering, Exod. 36. 5, 6. This their example in being so forward to contribute to the materiall Temple, shall condemne our backwardnesse in conferring so little to the Ministers, who are the living Temples of God, and to the ministery which is in the place of the altar: for looke by how much God hath diminished the cost of the Altar, and the charges of the ceremoniall worship under the Old Testament, by so much more doth he require the Ministerie to be maintained, and spirituall worship furthered in the New.

Lastly, if they that doe not put to their helping hand to uphold the Ministerie, are to be condemned, what condemnation trow we then belongs to sacrilegious persons, that rob the Church of her renenues, and devoure holy things.

7. Be not deceived, God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reape.

Here the Apostle preventeth sundry secret objections against the former precept, verse 6. For the Galatians might plead for themselves in this manner. Whereas thou enjoynest us to make those which instructed us in the word, partakers of all our goods: alas, wee cannot doe it. It is an unreasonable thing thou exactest of us: for, as for some of us, we have a great family and charge to looke unto, wife and children to provide for: and for them we must provide, otherwise we deny the faith, and are worse than infidels, 1 Tim. 5. 8. others are poore and needy, sitter a great deale to receive, than to give: and those that can give, are not so to give, that others may be eased and they themselves pinched, 2 Cor. 8. 13. And as for the Ministers themselves, many of them are covetous and insatiable, and therefore it is evill spent that is bestowed upon them: some of them need not, and therefore we need not to give: and why doe not those that are needy, follow Pauls example, who laboured with his hands, and got his living by making of Tents, because hee would not be chargeable unto any? or why doe they not lead a single life (as in former times they did) that so they may bee lesse burdensome to the Church, and more beneficiall to their brethren? Besides all this, God hath promised he will bee the portion and inheritance of the Levites, and therefore wee need not bee so hastie to share with them in all our goods.

To these and all other vaine and frivolous excuses of the same kinde, made by worldlings of corrupted minds, the Apostle answereth in these words, Be not deceived, God is not mocked; as if he should say, I know right well, you are very cunning in seeking out shifts, and pretending reasons to excuse your faults, and to exempt your selves from the performance of the former duty, and so to cover the cursed covetousnesse of your hearts with colourable colourable excuses: But, be not deceived brethren, they are but figge leaves, ye doe but dance in a netre, you cannot bleare the all-seeing eyes of God: howsoever these reasons may perswade you, and goe for currant with men, yet they are but counterfeit in Gods estimate, (with whom you have to deale) who is not mocked, nor can be deceived, neither will be deluded with such vaine excuses: therefore take heed lest in going about to deceive them, you deceive your selves: for looke how you deale with them, God will deale with you: and with what measure you mete unto them, the same he will measure to you againe; for as you sow, so shall you reape. So that in these words the Apostle doth summarily comprise these three things. First, a dissuasion from this their vaine reasoning, and wicked practice, laid downe by way of prevention, Be not deceived. Secondly, a reason of the dehortation, shewing that these their excuses are but frivolous and vaine, God is not mocked. Thirdly, a confirmation or proofe of his former reason, for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he reape. The dissuasion is laid downe in these words, Be not deceived. The like phrase of speech we have in sundry other places, as in that advertisement which Hezekiah giveth the Levites, 2 Chron. 29. 11. Now my sonnes be not deceived: And Paul the Corinthians, 1 Cor. 6. 9. Be not deceived, neither fornicators, &c. 1 Cor. 15. 33. Be not deceived, evill speeches corrupt good manners. Now men erre and are deceived sundry wayes, both in divine and humane things, (which appertaine not to this place.) Touching the deceit here mentioned, we are to know that a man may be deceived, and that by himselfe two wayes. First, through ignorance, in judging that to be no sinne, which is a sinne, as when a man is perswaded that God is to bee worshipped in an image: that when he persecutes the Saints of God, hee doth God good service. Secondly, when men are so wickedly wilfull, that they wittingly deceive themselves, in thinking they can deceive God himselfe, and so cunningly handle the matter, that hee shall not know their words, nor see their workes, nor understand their thoughts: that whether they doe good or evill, give to the Ministery, or not; live according to the flesh, or according to the spirit, it is all one, seeing he considereth it not, and so promise to themselves impunity, though they sinne willingly, as Eve did in putting a peradventure, where Gods threat was peremptory. Both these sorts of deceit are here understood, specially the latter.

Vse. Hence we may observe the deceitfulnesse of sinne, which maketh men thinke all is well with them, and that there is no danger &c. when the case is farre otherwise. This shewes that the heart of man is deceitfull above measure, (as the Prophet saith) who can finde it out? or who can sound the depth of the deceit of his owne heart? for who knowes the infinite windings & turnings which are in this intricate Labyrinth: Now this commeth to passe, partly by reason of originall corruption, which the Apostle saith is deceitfull, Heb. 3. 13. Take heed lest any of you bee hardned through the deceitfulnesse of sinne: partly, by reason of long custome in sinne, whereby the heart is inured to deceit, Psal. 32. 2. Blessed is the man — in whose spirit there is no guile. For from this double ground it commeth to passe, that men are so witty in defrauding the Ministers of their due, in cutting them short of their allowance, in embezeling and purloining from them what they can: and so ingenious in inventing probable reasons, and plausible arguments, to deceive themselves withall, in accounting all to be gained that is thus gotten. This teacheth us first of all, to pray instantly that God would open our eyes that we may see our hidden corruptions, and that hee would anoint them with the eye-salve of the Spirit, that wee may clearly see, and rightly discerne of things that differ, considering that sinne doth often apparell it selfe with the cloake of vertue. Secondly, we are to suspect our selves of our secret sinnes, and to aggravate our knowne sinnes by all circumstances, seeing wee may so easily deceive our selves, in flattering our selves to bee cleare of this or that sinne: or at least not to be so grievous sinners as in truth we are. Thirdly, that it is the duty of the Ministers to warne the people to take heed that they bee not deceived, as Paul doth, Eph. 5. 6. Let no man deceive you with vaine words: for, for such things commeth the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience.

Againe hence I gather, that in the prime of the Church, in the Apostles dayes, when the Church of the New Testament was but in founding, the Ministery was in contempt: and (as it may appeare out of other places) the Ministers were not onely neglected, or contemned, but reviled, persecuted, accounted as the filth of the world, and the off-scouring of all things, 2 Cor. 4. 13. or where they were better intreated, they were but abused, scorned, reputed braine-sicke fellowes, as the Prophet was, 2 King. 9. 11. and Paul, Acts 29. 24. This hath beene, and is the account which the world maketh of the Ministers of God, which must bee so farre from discouraging us, that it should minister rather matter of joy unto us, in that wee are conformable by this meanes to Christ our head, who was not onely neglected of all, not having where to rest his head, Luk. 9. 58. but laughed to scorne, accounted a por-companion, a drunkard, and a glutton, a forcerer, one that had a devill, and was mad, John 10. 20. For if we suffer with him, we shall bee glorified with him, Rom. 8. 17.

Thus much of the dehortation: the reason followes to bee considered in the second place.

place, in these words, God is not mocked, where the Apostle shewes that their excuses are but vaine, because God is not mocked, nor will be deluded with such pretences.

First, here the Apostles dealing is worthy to bee observed, in that, reproving them which neglected their duty to the Ministers of the word, he bringeth in God himselfe taking the matter into his owne hand, making the Ministers quarrell his owne quarrell: and this he doth, to the end we might see whom we have to deale withall, and whom we doe abuse, when wee abuse the Ministers of the word, to wit, that we abuse not man, but God. For albeit it bee true of all and every sinne, which David confesseth of his owne particular murther and adultery, that it is against God, yea against him alone, Psalm 51.4 yet in these and such like cases which tend to the undermining of his Church, and the decay of his religion and worship, hee taketh himselfe more directly aimed at, and more neerly touched. When the Israelites refused to have Samuel and his sonnes to rule over them, the Lord saith, They have not cast thee away, but they have cast me away, that I should not reigne over them, 1 Samuel 8. 7. When the Levites were defrauded of their due, the Lord by his Prophet telleth the people, Ye have spoyled me in tithes and offerings, Mal. 3 8. So in this place, when the Galatians did wrongfully withhold and keepe backe that competent allowance that was due to their teachers, he telleth them, that it was a sin tending against God, who is not, nor will not, nor cannot be mocked: for what wrong soever is done to the messenger that is sent, the same is done to his Lord that sent him: and whatsoever disgrace or indignity is offered an Embassador, the same redounds to the Prince, whose Embassadour he is. This ought to bee a Caveat unto us, to take heed how wee contemne or neglect the Ministers of God, seeing whatsoever wrong is done them, Christ takes it as done to himselfe, Matt. 25. 45. Act. 9. 4. This lets us see the hainous sinnes of many that professe the Gospell, specially in this kinde, who, now at this day (if ever) are ingenious in defrauding, and eloquent in declaiming against the Ministers of the word: in laughing them to scorne, as they did our Saviour Christ, Marke 5. 40. and abusing them in termes and taunts, calling them bald Priests, as young children called Elisæus bald-pate, (no doubt following the example of their parents, of whom they learned it,) ascend thou balde pate, ascend thou balde pate, 2 King. 2. 23. that they are too full of the spirit, as they derided the Apostles, in saying, They were full of new wine, Act. 2. 13. in making them their table-talke, making songs of them, as the drunkards did of David, and Ieremy. In scourging them with the whippe of the tongue, as the Stoicks called Paul a babler, Act. 17. 18. and Festus, a madde man, Act. 26. Now in that they thus scornfully abuse his Ministers, and so indignedly, and disdainfully intreat his messengers and Embassadours; what doe they else but abuse Christ Iesus himselfe, & through their sides, wound and crucifie him againe? When Senacherib, King of Assur, reviled Ierusalem and Hezekiah the King, what sayes the Lord? O Virgin daughter of Sion, hee hath despised thee, and laughed thee to scorne: O daughter of Ierusalem, hee hath shaken his head at thee. Whom hast thou raised on, and blasphemed? and against whom hast thou exalted thy voyce, and lifted up thine eyes on high? even against the holy One of Israel, Esay 37. 22. 23.

The use. Hence we learne, that God hath an exact knowledge of all our actions, and cannot be deluded, Prov. 15. 11. Hell and destruction are before him, how much more, &c. Psal. 11. verse 4. His eyes consider, his eyelids try the children of men, Psal. 139. 2. He knowes our thoughts long before they bee, Heb. 4. 12. All things are naked and bare in his sight. Reason it selfe shewes, that hee which made the eye, cannot but see, hee that made the heart and minde, cannot but understand the frame and motion thereof, Psal. 94. v. 9, 10, &c.

II. This shewes the madnesse of those which say, God heareth not, seeth not, understandeth not; or which say in their hearts, How should he heare? is there knowledge in the most High? or can hee see through the thicke cloud?

III. Hence we are taught in our prayers, to powre forth our hearts before the Lord, without concealing so much as the least sin, seeing we may easily delude men, & deceive our selves, but God we cannot deceive.

IV. It ought to be a bridle to us to curbe and keepe in our corruptions, considering his eyes pierce the darknesse, the most secret and hidden places, yea even the secret closets and cabinets of our hearts.

Thus much of the reason: I proceed to the confirmation or proofe of his reason, in these words, For whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reape Where the Apostle proves, that God will not be mocked with vaine excuses, seeing he will render to every man according to his workes, which is signified by this allegoricall speech of sowing and reaping, so often used in Scripture, as 1 Corinthians 9. verse 11. 2 Cor. 9. 6. in which places, labour and cost in doing good, and being beneficiall, specially to the Ministers of the word, is compared to seed; the workers to seedsmen; the Ministers to whom this benefit is conferred, to the tilled ground: the gaine that accrewes unto them thereby, to the harvest; wherewith God will reward them, and that according to their workes, in the generall day of retribution. This metaphor of sowing, doth elsewhere signifie all the morall actions of a mans life, whether they be good or evill: Of good actions, Salomon saith, He that soweth righteousnes, hath hath a sure recompence, Proverbs 11. 18. Of evill actions, he saith, He that soweth iniquity, shall reape affliction, Prov. 22. 8. But here Paul restraines it, to those good workes of liberality, which are performed in the maintenance of the Ministery. And he calleth that which is bestowed upon the Ministers of the word, seed, which being sowne, doth recompence the cost, thirty, sixty, & an hundredfold: that so they might not thinke their labour lost, nor their cost bestowed in vaine, seeing they were to receive that which they laid forth with advantage.

But here it may bee said, this proverbiall sentence is not alwaies true: for sometime men sow much, and gather but little, Deuter. 28. 38. Agg. 1. 6. nay sometime they sow, and reape not, Mich. 6. 15. Againe, experience shewes, that that which is sowne, may degenerate into another kinde. Answ. It is not necessary that proverbiall sentences should bee true at all times, and in every particular: if they be true for the most part, or in that for which they are brought, it is sufficient, as that, Matt. 13. 57. A Prophet is not accepted in his owne country, is for the most part true, though not alwayes. So, whatsoever a man soweth, the same commonly, and usually, he doth reape.

But it will be said, how can a man reape that which he soweth, seeing that Christ affirmeth it to bee a true saying, that one soweth, and another reapeth? John 4. 37. Ans. In that one soweth, and another reapeth, it is not to be imputed to nature, but to the speciall providence of God: the words are to bee understood of the Prophets, who were the seedsmen, in sowing the seeds of the Gospell: and of the Apostles, who were the reapers, whose plaine and powerfull preaching of the Gospell, did as farre exceede that of the Prophets, as the harvest doth the seede time. Thus the time under the Law, is resembled to childehood and infancy, that under the Gospell, to mans estate, Gal. 4. 1. &c. Againe, it may be said the husbandman soweth not the body that shall be, 1 Corinthians 15. 37. Therefore hee reapeth not that which he sowed. Answer. Hee reapeth not the same individuall, but yet the same specificall body. It may further bee doubted of the truth of that which is signified by this proverbiall sentence, namely, whether every man shall receive according to his workes, for so every man should bee condemned. To which I answer, that it is not universally true, for if the righteous commit iniquity, all his righteousnesse shall bee no more remembred: and, if a wicked man turne from his sinne, none of his sinnes that he hath committed shall be mentioned unto him, Ezec. 33. 13. 16. It must therefore be restrained thus: Hee that doth wickedly, and persevereth therein to the end: He that doth well, and continueth in well doing, shall receive according to his workes; the seeds of his former sinnes, shall not grow up to the harvest of condemnation. For it is the priviledge, yea, the happinesse of a righteous man so to have his sinnes covered with the robes of Christ his righteousnes, as that they shall never be uncovered to his shame, Psal. 32. Esa. 43. 25. Againe, it may hence be proved, that sanctification in death is perfect, originall corruption being utterly abolished: & therfore though the book of a regenerate mans conscience be opened at the day of judgement, yet nothing shall bee found in it, but his good workes, which follow him till the resurrection, Apoc. 14. 13. Besides this, in the last sentence pronounced by our Saviour Christ, Mat. 25. only their good workes are mentioned, Come ye blessed of my father, inherit the kingdome prepared for you, for I was hungry and ye fed me, &c. their sins and imperfections, not so much as once named, but concealed and passed over.

II. Objection. It may be said, that neither the good nor the bad doe reape that which they have sowne: the godly for the seedes of good workes, reape nothing but affliction: the wicked for the cursed seeds of a damnable life, comfort and contentation. To which I answer, that it is not true if wee restraine it to the rearme of this life, for so all men reape not as they have sowne. But it is undoubtedly true of the life to come: for the justice of God requires that all should be rewarded according to their workes, Romanes 2. Hence therefore wee may gather, that seeing men must reape as they sowe, and yet doe not reape, nor receive their reward in this life: that there is another life after this, in which God will give to every one as his workes shall be, and therefore there shall be a judgement. And because the body was partaker with the soule either in doing good or evill, it is just likewise it should be partaker either of misery or felicity: and therefore there shall bee a resurrection.

III. Objection The whore of Babylon must bee rewarded double. Apoc. 18. 6. In the cup that she hath filled to you, fill her the double. And the Saints pray thus to God, Render to our neighbours sevenfold into their bosome, Psalme 79. 11. Therefore it seemeth that some men shall not be judged according to their works, because they are punished above their deserts. Answ. She is rewarded double, yet not above, but according to hee deserts, give her double according to her workes, v. 6. the meaning is not: that she should bee punished twice as much as shee had deserved, (for it is the Law of God that the malefactour should bee beaten with a certaine number of stripes, not above, but, according to his trespasse, Deut. 25. 2.) but that shee should bee tormented twice as much as shee had tormented others. Againe, these phrases and formes of speech, of rewarded double, or sevenfold, signifie, that God will pay wicked men home to the full (a definite number being put for an indefinite) as Gen. 4. 15. Doubtles, whosoever slayeth Cain, shall be punished sevenfold. The meaning is not, that the murtherer of Cain should bee punished sevenfold more than hee was punished for killing his brother Abel, (for it should not have beene so great a sinne for a man to have killed him, as it was for him to kill his brother) but that he should be most severely and grievously punished.

IV. Objection. Infants have no workes whereby they may be judged, seeing they doe neither good nor evill, as the Scripture speaketh of Iacob and Esau, Romanes 9.11. therefore all shall not bee judged according to workes. Ans. These phrases of Scripture, As a man sowes, so shall he reape: every one shall receive according to his workes, &c. are not to bee extended to all, but must bee restrained to such as have workes, and knowledge to discerne betwixt good and evill, which, infants have not. For besides that they are destitute of workes, they also want the use of reason: and therefore they shall not be judged by the booke of conscience, but by the booke of life. For to say as Hugo de S. Vict. doth upon the Romines, quæst. 59. that they shall bee condemned for the sinnes which their parents committed in their conception and nativity, as though they themselves had actually committed them, is contrary to that, Ezech. 18.20. The sonne shall not beare the iniquitie of the father.

V. Object. But how shall they be pronounced just, who being come to yeares of discretion, yet have no good workes, as Lazarus, & the theefe upō the crosse, who living lewdly all his life long, was converted at the last gaspe? Answer. That Lazarus had no good workes, whereby he might be declared just, it cannot be prooved: the contrary rather may bee gathered out of Scripture: and that the good theefe had no good workes, it is flat against the text, Luk. 23.40, 41. where hee maketh a notable confession of Christ, and rebuketh his fellow, labouring to bring him to the faith, which was a memorable fact of Christian charity. Secondly, though it were granted that they had no good workes in action; yet they were full of good workes in affection, & by these they were to be judged, God accepting in his children the will for the deed: Lazarus by reason of his extreame poverty, and the theefe by reason of the shortnesse of time which hee had to live in the world, could not be plentifull in good works, thereby to give sufficient testimony of their unfained faith: yet God accepteth a man according to that which hee hath, and not according to that which he hath not, accepting the will for the deed, as hee accepted the willingnes of Abraham to sacrifice his sonne, as though hee had sacrificed him indeed, Gen. 22.

VI. Object. God doth not proportionate the reward to the worke, because he doth reward workes which are finite and temporall, with infinite and eternall punishment. Answ. Sinne being considered in respect of the act, as it is a transient action, is finite. But in a threefold cōsideration, it is infinite. First, in respect of the object against whom it is committed: for being the offence of an infinite Majesty, it doth deserve infinite punishment: for if he that clippes the Kings coyne, or defaceth the Kings armes, or counterfeiteth the broad seale of England, or the Princes privy seale, ought to die as a traitour, because this disgrace rendeth to the person of the Prince: much more ought he that violates the Law of God, die the first and second death, seeing the breach thereof doth not only tend to the defacing of his owne Image in us, but to the person of God himselfe, who in every sin is contemned, & dishonoured. Secondly, sinne is infinite in respect of the subject. For seeing that the soule is immortall, and that the guilt of sin & the blot together, do stain the soule, as the crimsin or skarlet die, the silke or the wooll, and can no more be severed from the soule, than spots from the Leopard: it remaineth, that sinne is infinite in durance, and so deserveth eternall punishment. Thirdly, it is infinite in respect of the minde, desire, and intent of the sinner, whose desire is still to walke on in his sins, and except God should cut off the line of his life, never to give over sinning, but to runne on in infinitum, committing of sinne even with greedinesse.

Thus having the meaning of the words, let us come to the doctrine and use. There be two principall reasons which hinder men from being beneficiall and liberall to the Ministery. The first is, because they thinke all is lost that is bestowed that way. The second is, because they are afraid lest themselves should want. To both which the Apostle makes answer in this place, comparing our beneficence in the upholding, maintaining, countenancing of the Ministery, to seed, to teach us that as the husbandman doth sow his corne in the ground; never fearing the losse thereof, but hoping for a greater increase: nor doubting his owne want, but assuring himselfe of greater plentie: So wee in sowing the seedes of good workes, must never dreame of losse, or cost, considering the more we sowe, the more we shall reape: wee must never feare want, seeing wee shall receive an hundredfolde, Marke 10. 30. If men could bee perswaded of this, that the time of this life is the seed-time; that the last judgement is the harvest; and that as certainly, as the husbandman which sowes his seed, looks for increase, so we for our good works, a recompence to the full; O how fruitfull should wee bee, how plentifull, how full of good workes? But the cursed roote of infidelity, which is in every man by nature, doth drie up the sappe of all Gods graces in us, and make us either bad, or barren trees, either to bring forth sower fruits of sinne, or no fruit at all, but to become unprofitable both to our selves and others. But the reason why men are so cold in their liberalitie, so fruitlesse, so unprofitable, is, because they doe not beleeve the promises of God, that hee is true of his word, that whatsoever they give to the poore, or the Ministers of his word, they lend unto the Lord, and whatsoever they lay out, the Lord will restore to them again, Pro. 19. 17. For if they were as well perswaded of a recompence at the last day, as the husbandman is of a harvest, they would be more frequent in duties of charity, and more plentifull in good workes; than commonly they be.

Further, let it bee observed, that though these words be but generally expounded in the verse following; where the Apostle saith, He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reape corruption: he that soweth to the spirit, shall of the spirit reape life everlasting: yet are they more particularly and distinctly set downe elsewhere in Scripture: as 2 Cor. 9.6. He that soweth sparingly, shall reape sparingly, and he that soweth liberally, shall reape liberally: that is, the harvest shall not onely be answerable to the seed, and the reward to the worke; but greater or lesse according to the quantity, and qualitie of the worke. For every man shall receive his reward according to his proper labour, 1 Corinth. 3.8. For the more the husbandman sowes, the more he doth usually reape, (except God blowe upon it) inverting the old, as he did the Israelites, who sowed much, & gathered but little) and the more he sowes, the lesse shall his croppe bee. Even so, the more plentifull we are in sowing the seeds of good workes, the more we shall reape: and the more sparing we are, the lesse shall our harvest bee. Hence I gather: First that there are severall degrees of punishments in hell, according to the greatnesse and smalnesse of sinnes: for some sinnes are but as motes, others as beames, Matth. 7.4. some as gnats, others as camels, Matth. 23.24. and therefore some shall be beaten with many stripes, some with few, and it shall bee easier for them of Sodome and Gomorrha at the day of judgement, than for the Citie Capernaum. Secondly, that there are sundry degrees of glory and felicity in heaven, proportionall to mens workes: for all men do not sowe alike: all men are their workes equall, but there be sundry degrees of goodnesse in them, and therefore there are answerable degrees of glory, wherewith they are to be crowned. This truth is taught elsewhere more plainly, as Dan. 12.3. They that be wise, shall shine as the brightnesse of the firmament, and they that turne many to righteousnesse, shall shine as the starres for ever and ever. Therefore as there is a greater brightnesse in the starres, than in the firmament, so there shall be a greater glory in one heaven than in another. And 2 Cor. 9.6. He that soweth sparingly, shall reape sparingly, &c. Therefore seeing all mans labours are not alike, their reward shall not be like. This is further confirmed by the parable of the talents, Luke 19. where the master of the servants doth proportionate his wages to their workes, making him that had gained with his talent five talents, ruler over five cities, him that had gained tenne, ruler over ten. And whereas it may bee said, that all the labourers in the vineyard received an equall reward, namely a penny; as well as those that wrought but an houre, or those that bearethe burden and heate of the day: I answer, it is true of essentiall glory, all the Elect shall have equall glory: but it is not true of accidentall glory, therein all shall not be equall. Take sundry vessels of divers bignes, & cast them into the sea, all will be filled with water, though some receive a greater quantity, others a lesse: so all shall have fulnesse of glory; that is, the same essentiall glory: though in respect of accidentall glory, some shall have more, and some lesse. Secondly, the scope of the parable is not to shew the equalitie of glory in the world to come; but that they which are first called, ought not to insult over their brethren, which are not as yet called, seeing they may be preferred before them, or (at the least) made equall with them. It remaines therefore for a conclosion, that there shall be degrees of glory in heaven, as there are degrees of torments in hell; and that as mens labors differ in goodnes, so their rewards shal be different in greatnesse. Now mens labours differ in goodnesse three wayes; in the kinde, in the quantity, and in the quality. In the kinde; in that some are more noble in their kinde, some more base; as to cure the maladies of the soule, is a more excellent work in its kind, than to cure the diseases of the body: & therefore it hath a greater degree of glory promised. They that turne many to righteousnesse, shall shine as the starres for evermore. In the quality, or manes, in that some are done with greater love, some with lesse, some with greater zeale, some with lesse; some with greater care and conscience to discharge our duties, some with lesse: now, those that are performed with greater love, zeale, care, and conscience, shall receive a greater reward: those that are done with lesse, a lesse: for so is the promise, Every man shall receive his wages according to his owne labour, 1 Corinth. 3.8. In the quantity, in that if the labour bee not houre, or here bee the burden and heate of the day, and so according to the greatnesse and smalnesse of their sins, they shall have a greater or lesser reward. He that had so carefully imployed his talent that hee had gained with it ten others, was made ruler over ten cities: and he that had taken lesse pains, and gained but five, was made ruler but over five, that is, had his reward lesse, a lesse weight of glory to weigh him downe. Further, as God doth reward the good works of his servants according to the kinde, the quantity, and quality: so he rewardeth sinnes not only according to their degree (as we have heard) but also in the same manner, according to the nature and quality of the sinne. 2 Thess. 1. 16. It is a just thing with God to recompence tribulation to them that trouble you. Th is hee threatneth, that to the froward he will shew himselfe froward, Psal. 18. 26. And, He that sheddeth mans blood, by man shall his blood be shed, Genesis 9. 6. And, All that take the sword, shall perish by the sword, Matthew 26. 52. And, He that stoppeth his eares at the cry of the poore, shall cry unto the Lord, and hee will not heare him, Proverbs 21. 13. And, Judgement mercilesse shall be to him that sheweth no mercy. And, Woe bee to thee that spoilest, and wast not spoiled, and doest wickedly, and they did not wickedly against thee: for when thou shalt cease to spoile, thou shalt be spoiled: and when thou shalt make an end of doing wickedly, they shall doe wickedly against thee. For with what judgement men judge, they shall be judged, and with what measure they meate, it shall be measured to them againe. Neither doth God barely threaten this, but hee doth it in deedes, in handling sinners in their kinde, Genes. 2. 17. Because thou hast eaten of the tree, cursed is the earth for thy sake, in sorrow shalt thou eate of it all the dayes of thy life. Thus God punished the filthy Sodomites in their kinde, in that, for their burning lust he rained upon them fire and brimstone from heaven, Genes. 19. 24. Nadab and Abihu censing with strange fire, were consumed with fire from heaven, Levit. 10. 1, 2. The like may bee said of Adonibezek; for as hee caused seventy Kings having their thumbs of their hands, and of their feet cut off, to gather crummes under his table, so the Lord rewarded him, Judges 1. 7. Even Agags sword made women childelesse, for his mother was made childelesse among other women, he being hewen in pieces before the Lord in Gilgal, 1 Samuel 15. 33. Thus God punished the adultery and murther of David: for as he defiled another mans wife, so his owne sonne Absolon defiled his wives in the sight of all Israel, Samuel 16. 22. and his murther in slaying Urijah, by the sword of the children of Ammon, in that the sword did never depart from his house, 2 Samuel 12. 10. Because the Grecians accounted preaching foolishnesse, it pleased God, (as a fit and just punishment of this their sinne) by the foolishnesse of preaching to save them that believe, 1 Corinth. 1. 21. Thus as Chrisostome hath observed, the rich glutton was met with in his kinde: for whereas he would not give Lazarus a cromme of bread, to slacke his hunger, God would not give him a drop of water to coole his thirst, Luke 16. and therefore hee saith, Hyems non seminavit misericordiam, venis ejus & gibi messuit. Thus he punisheth spirituall fornication, with bodily pollution, because the Israelites went a whoring from God, therefore their daughters became harlots, and their spouses, whores, Hosea 4. 13. And this is verified in the Church of Rome at this day; for as he gave up the then to reprobate minder, thy reason of their idolatry; so hath he given them up, as we may see in their unclean cloysters, their Sodomiticall sinnes, their beastly brothelhouses, and the like. So they that delight in looking at the redresse of the wise, shall have redde eyes; as a punishment of their sinne, Prov. 23. 30. Thus God punished the pride of the women of Jerusalem, for in stead of a sweete savour, there was a stinke, in stead of a girdle, a rent; in stead of a stomacher a girding of sackcloth, and burning in stead of beauty, Esa. 3. 24. And thus the Lord shut up every wombe of the house of Abimelech, because of Sara Abrahams wife, Gen. 20. 18. Thus the wise man saith, Because the Israelites worshipped serpents which had not the use of reason, and vile beasts, the Lord sent a multitude of unreasonable beasts among them for a revenge, that they might know, that where with a man sinneth, by the same also shall hee be punished. And this manner of punishing sinners in their kinde, Job acknowledged to bee most just, when he saith, If mine heart have been deceived by a woman, or if I have laid waite at the doore of my neighbour: let my wife grinde unto another man, and let other men bow down upon her. Job 31. 9, 10.

Vse. First then we see the justice of God in awarding the last sentence; nay, his bounty and severities: his bounty in recompencing men above their desert, as we may see in punishing sinners according to their desert. For as hee will render to every one according to his deedes, so hee promised to Dives a drop of water to coole his tongue, Luke 16. 24. to shew his recompences any thing in mercy, than will a recompence a cup of cold water, Matth. 10. 42. This integrity in judgement without partiality, is signified by the white throne, Revel. 20. 11. and he serves as a patterne and example for all Iudges and Magistrates to follow, in laying judgment to the line, and righteousnesse to the ballance, Isai 28. 17. that is, in hearing causes indifferently, and determining equally, examining them (as it were) by line & square, as the Mason or Carpenter doth his worke. The Grecians placed Iustice between Love and Liberty, thereby signifying that there must not onely be courage in executing, but also indifference in determining. The Egyptians expresse the same by the hieroglyphicall figure of a man without hands, with a wing, by the want whereby is meant, that partiality, with which no hands of reason, bribes, nor any thing beholde, the person of rich, poore, or friend, therefore the rich and poore, as well as the friendless were commonly painted with a ballance in one hand, and a sword in the other, signifying by the ballance, just judgement, by the sword, execution of judgement: for as the ballance pendeth no difference between Gold and Lead, but giveth an equall or uneven poyse, as there hath been giving a greater weight to the gold for the excellency of the metall, because it is gold, nor a lesse to the lead for the basenesse of it, because it is lead. So they were with an even hand to weigh the poore mans cause as well as the rich. But it is most notably set out by the throne of the house of David, mentioned, Psalm. 122. 5. which was placed in the gate of the City towards the Sun-rising: in the gate, to signifie, that all which came in and out by the gate of the City might indifferently be heard, the poore as well as the rich, and might have accesse and regresse, too and from the judgement seate. Towards the rising of the Sunne, in token that their judgement should be as cleare from corruption, as the Sunne is cleare in his chiefest brightnesse.

Secondly, this confutes the common opinion of the Schoole-men, who as they truly affirme that God rewardeth his Elect, supra meritum, above their desert; so they erroniously teach, that hee punisheth the reprobate, citra condignum, lesse than they have deserved. For God powreth upon the wicked after this life, the full viols of his wrath, punishing them in the rigour of his justice, without all mercy, not onely according to their workes in regard of the nature and quality, but in respect of the measure and quantity.

Lastly, this doctrine seriously considered and thought upon, that we shall drinke such as we brew, reape such as we sowe, and that men shall have degrees of fecility, or misery, answerable to their workes, answerable to the kinde of their worke, to the quantity and quality thereof, will make us more carefull to avoide sinne, and to be more plentifull in good workes: then if with the Papist, wee should teach justification by workes.

Againe, in that every one shall reape as hee soweth, that is, shall bee rewarded not according to the fruit and successe of his labour, but according to his labour: bee it more or lesse, better or worse: it serves (first of all) to comfort the Ministers of the word, which are set over a blinde ignorant people, who are alway learning, and never come to the knowledge of the truth: they must not bee discouraged, though after long teaching, there bee little profiting, but rather a coldnesse, a backwardnesse, & declining in all sorts & degrees. They must remember, that if their Gospell being delivered with such simplicity, with such assiduity, with such evidence & demonstration of the spirit, bee hid, it is hid to them that perish, In whom the god of this world hath blinded the mindes of the infidels, that the glorious Gospell of Christ should not shine unto them, 2 Cor. 4. 3, 4. Besides, let them consider, that though they seeme to labour in vaine, & to spend their strength in vaine, and that their words take no more effect, then if they were spoken in the winde; yet, that their judgement is with the Lord, and their worke with their God, Isa. 49. 4. remembring that God will give to every man according to his worke, according to the kinde, the quantity, the quality thereof, and not according to the fruit or successe of his worke.

It may serve also as a cordiall to every man that is painfull and faithfull in his calling, though never so base and servile, as to a sheepheard which watcheth his flocke, or a poore drudge that attends upon his masters businesse: he is to comfort himselfe with this, that though hee see no great good that comes by his labour and travell, yet if he be obedient to him that is his master according to the flesh, in all things; not with eie-service, as men-pleasers, but in singlenesse of heart, serving God, and whatsoever he doth, doing it heartily as to the Lord, and not to men: let him know, and assure himselfe, that of the Lord he shall receive the reward of inheritance, Col. 2. 22, 23, 24. And the promse is more generall, Ephes. 6. 5. Know ye, that whatsoever good thing any doth, the same shall he receive of the Lord, whether hee be bond or free.

It serveth further, as a comfort against inequality, whereas the wicked flourish in all manner of prosperity, and the godly lye in contempt and misery; for the time shall come, when every one shall reape even as he hath sowne. When God will punish the sinnes of the reprobate with eternall torment according to their deserts; and crowne the good workes of his servants with an eternall waight of glory, above their desert: for piety shall not alway goe unrewarded, neither shall impiety alway goe unpunished: for as the Psalmist saith, Psalme 10. 18. The patient abiding of the righteous shall not perish for ever. And againe, Psal 58. 11. Doubtlesse there is a reward for the righteous, doubtlesse there is a God that judgeth the earth.

Againe, this condemneth the damnable opinion of the Atheists, who thinke all things come to passe by nature or fortune; and that doomes day is but a dreame: and that stick not to say, Mal. 3. 14. It is in vaine to serve God, and what profit is it that wee have kept his commandements, and that we have walked humbly before the Lord of hosts? as though good workes should never be rewarded, nor sinne punished: albeit the Lord hath said, Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give to every one as his workes shall be.

Besides, it meets with the practice of those men which sow nothing but cockle, and yet expect a croppe of wheate, and nothing but darnell, and yet looke to reape a barly harvest; that is, such as sow nothing but the cursed seeds of a damnable life, and yet looke to reape the harvest of eternall life: for as a man soweth, so shall he reape: such as he bruteth, such shall hee drinke: Every one shall eate the fruit of his owne wayes, and be filled with his owne devises, Prov. 1. 31.

It doth further detect the folly of those which fraught the shippe of their soule, with nothing but faith, resting (in carnall presumption) upon a vaine opinion of faith, and never caring for good workes: against whom Saint Iames writeth, chapter 2. verse 14. What availeth it, though a man say hee hath faith, when he hath no workes? can the faith save him? v. 20. Wilt thou understand, O thou vain man, that faith which is without workes, is dead? Wee must therefore sow the seeds of good workes in this life, if after this life we looke to reape the harvest of eternall life: and give all diligence by good workes to make our calling and election sure, that as it is sure in it selfe in Gods unchangeable decree, 2 Tim. 2. 19. (so we may make it sure) to us, 2 Pet. 1. 10. and so lay up in store a good foundation against the time to come, that we may obtaine eternall life, 2 Tim. 6. 19.

Lastly, it crosseth the wicked conceit and imagination of those men, that sing a requiem to their soules, in promising to themselves an impunity for sinne, and an immunity from all the judgements of God, notwithstanding they goe on in their bad practises: and all because God doth not presently take vengeance on them for their sinnes. For they doe not consider that their sinnes are as seedes, which must have a time to grow in, before they come to maturity; but being once ripe and full-eared, let them assure themselves God will cut them downe with the sickle of his judgements, as we reade, Genesis 15. 16. They remember not what the Lord saith by Jeremy, Ier. 2. 24. that he will not weary himselfe with following after these wilde asses, used to the wildernesse, which snuffe up the winde by occasion at their pleasure, and none can turne them backe, but will seeke for them, but finde them in their moneths, that is, when their iniquity shall be at the full, the Lord will meet with them.

8. For he that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reape corruption: but he that soweth to the spirit, shall of the spirit reape life everlasting.

Here Saint Paul specifieth that in particular, which before he had delivered in generall, viz. what hee meant by sowing, and reaping. And this he doth by a distribution, or enumeration of the kindes of sowing and reaping: shewing that there are two sorts of seeds which men sowe in this life; good and evill. Two kindes of sowers, spirituall men, and carnall men. Two sorts of ground, in which this seede is sowne; the flesh, and the spirit. Two sorts of harvests, which men are to reape according to the seed; corruption, and life: as Paul saith, If ye live after the flesh, ye shall dye: but if ye mortifie the deeds of the body by the spirit, ye shall live, Rom. 8. 13. These two sorts of harvests being answerable to the seed: corruption and death being the harvest of the seed sowne to the flesh: life and immortality of that to the spirit.

Tacianus the heretike, and author of the sect of the Encratites, doth gather from this and the like places, that mariage is in it selfe simply evill, because it is a sowing to the flesh. To him wee may adjoyne the Popes holinesse Syricius, who reasoneth after the same manner, to prove that Priests ought not to mary, because (saith hee) they that are in the flesh, cannot please God, Romanes 8. 8. where hee condemneth all mariages as uncleane, both in the Clergy, and the Laity, Distinct. 82. (Understanding, as though Paul should speake properly of seed, and of the flesh.) But worthily was Tacianus his opinion confuted, and hee condemned for an heretike: for the Apostle speaketh not of the workes of nature, but of corrupt nature, which overturneth the divine order which God set in nature, in the creation. Besides, the Apostolike writer saith, Heb. 13. 3. that mariage is honourable among all men: (not the first onely, but also the second, third, &c. and among Clergy-men, as well as others:) and therefore the mariage bed being undefiled, that is, being used in holy maner, is no sowing to the flesh, but to the spirit, as Popish (a) Doctours are enforced to confesse. Lastly, Paul saith not, He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reape corruption: but, hee that soweth to his flesh, &c. Now no man (except hee bee worse than a bruit beast) doth abuse himselfe by sowing to his owne flesh (as Jerome saith upon this place.) Others, by sowing to the flesh and spirit, understand the following after the fruits of the flesh, and of the spirit, mentioned in the former chapter, verse 19. 22. But this exposition cannot stand in this place; because the illative particle [for] in the beginning of the verse, sheweth evidently, that these words depend upon the former, as an exegesis or exposition thereof, where Paul spake not generally of all, but particularly of those workes which serve directly to uphold the Ministery.

(a) Catharin. in comm. in hunc locum.

By sowing to the flesh therefore the Apostle meaneth nothing else, but to live in the flesh, to walke in it, to take pleasure in it, to follow the desires of it, and to fulfill the lusts thereof. More plainly: it is wholly to give and addict a mans selfe to the pleasures, profits, honours, and preferments of this life, and to spend himselfe, his strength, and wit, in compassing of them, having little or no respect of the life to come, how he may compasse the rich purchase of the kingdome of heaven: which, who so doth, shall reape nothing at the harvest but corruption: that is, shall have for his reward, eternall death, understanding by corruption, the corruption of good qualities, not of the substance. On the contrary, to sow to the spirit, is to live in the spirit, and to walke according to the spirit, and to mortifie the deeds of the flesh by the spirit, and to doe those things, which otherwise we would never doe, if we were not moved and led by the spirit, as to bestow a mans goods, his labour and travell, his strength strength, his wit, and all, in those things that may further true religion and pietie, with relation to eternall life: which, whosoever doth, shall reape life everlasting, as a just recompence of his worke, according to the mercifull promise of God.

Salustrius ver. 10. Rhemens. in ver. 9. Bellar. de Justif. lib. 5. cap. 3.

Here sundry objections are to bee answered, for the clearing of this text. First, the Papists reason thus: Workes are seeds: but seeds are the proper cause of the fruit: therefore good workes are the proper cause of eternall life, and not faith onely. So that as there is a hidden vertue in the seed, to bring forth fruit; so is there a dignity in good workes to merit eternall life. Answ. First, as in a parable, so in a similitude, whatsoever is beside the scope and drift thereof, (as this their dispute is) proveth nothing. The scope of the similitude is this, that as he which soweth wheat, shall reape wheat; so hee that soweth to the spirit, shall of the spirit reape life everlasting: and as he that soweth tares shall reape nothing but tares: so hee that soweth to the flesh, the cursed seeds of a wicked life, shall of the flesh reape nothing but corruption: and as hee that soweth plentifully either of these, shall reape a plentifull harvest of either of them; so he that sowes the seed of a godly, or wicked life, in plentifull manner, shall reape a plentifull increase, either of misery, or felicity. When the Papists reason thus: Seeds are the cause of the fruit, and have in them a hidden vertue, whereby they grow, and bring forth fruit: therefore good workes are the proper cause of life, and have a dignitie and excellency in them, whereby they are worthy of eternall life: they misse of the drift and intent of the Apostle, and so conclude nothing. Besides, this their collection and discourse, is contrary to their owne doctrine. For they teach: that good workes are meritorious by merit of condignity: which may be understood 3. waies, either in regard of the dignity of the worke alone: or in regard of the promise of God alone, and his divine acceptation; or partly in regard of the dignity and excellency of the worke; partly in regard of the promise of God. Now albeit some of them hold, that good workes doe merit in respect onely of Gods promise, and mercifull acceptation, Scotus, Ariminensis, Durandus, Vega, Bunderius, Coster. and the like: others in respect partly of their owne worthines, partly of Gods promise and acceptance, as Bonaventure, Biel, Driedo, Clingius, Jansenius, Bellarmine, &c. it being the common received opinion among the Schoolemen, (as Bintfuldius witnesseth:) yet none of them (excepting onely Cajetan) affirme that they are meritorious onely in regard of the dignity of the worke: which notwithstanding, the Rhemists and others, labour to prove out of this similitude, urging the analogy betwixt seed and good workes, contrary to the current and streame of their owne Doctors. Thirdly, I answer that good workes are seedes, yet faith is the roote of these seeds: and in that good workes are made the seeds of eternall life, it is to be ascribed to Gods mercifull promise, not to the merit of the worke: for in that wee, or our workes, are worthy of the least blessing, it is more of Gods mercie, than our merit. Fourthly, the Apostle sheweth onely who they are that shall inherit eternall life; and the order how life is attained: but not the cause wherefore it is given. It will bee sayd, not onely the order, but the cause is set downe, as it may appeare by the Antithesis: for as sowing to the flesh is the cause of destruction, so sowing to the spirit, is the cause of eternall life. Answer. It is true in the one, but not in the other. For first, sinnes or workes of the flesh, are perfectly evill, as being absolute breaches of the Law, and deserve infinite punishment because they offend an infinite Majestie: whereas workes of the spirit are imperfectly good, having in them wants, and imperfections, (there being in every good worke a sinne of omission) comming short of that perfection that is required in the Law: they being good and perfect, as they proceed from the Spirit of God; imperfect and vicious, as they come from us. Even as water is pure, as it proceeds from the fountaine: but troubled, as it runneth through a filthy channell; or as the writing is imperfect and faulty, as it comes from the young learner: but perfect and absolute, as it proceedeth from the Scrivener which guideth his hand. So that if God (setting aside merci) should try them by the touch-stone of the Word, they would bee found to bee but counterfeit. And if hee should weigh them in the ballance of his justice, they would bee found too light. Secondly, there is a maine difference betwixt the workes of the flesh, and the workes of the spirit, in this very point; in that the workes of the flesh are our owne workes, and not the workes of God in us: and so wee deserve eternall death by reason of them, they being our owne wicked workes: whereas good workes proceed not from us properly, seeing wee are not sufficient of our selves to thinke any [good] thing as of our selves, 2 Cor. 3. verse 5. but from the Spirit of God, who worketh in us both the will and the deed; and are his workes in us: therefore being not ours, wee can merit nothing by them at the hands of God. Thirdly, observe that it is not sayd, hee that soweth to the spirit, shall of that which he hath sowne reape life everlasting, but, shall of the spirit reape life everlasting. Where wee see the Apostle attributes nothing to our workes but to the grace of Gods Spirit. Lastly, Rom. 6. verse 23. the holy Ghost putteth manifest difference betweene the workes of the flesh, and of the spirit, in respect of merit, when hee saith, The wages of sinne is death: but eternall life is the gift of God. He saith not, that eternall life is the reward of good workes, but the gift of God: now in the reward of sin there is merit presupposed; in the gift of eternall life, nothing but grace and favour.

Object. II. God giveth eternall life according to the measure and proportion of the worke. v. 7. As a man soweth, so shall he reape. 2 Cor. 9. 9. Hee that soweth sparingly, shall reape sparingly, and he that soweth liberally, shall reape liberally. 1 Cor. 3. 8. Every one shall receive his proper wages according to his owne labour. Therefore in giving eternall life he hath no respect of the promise or compact, but of the dignity and efficacy of the worke. Ans. Fulnesse of glory, called by Schoolmen essentiall glory, is given onely for the merits of Christ in the riches of Gods mercy, without all respect of workes. Accidentall glory (when one hath a greater measure of glory, another a lesse, as when vessells of unequall quantity cast into the sea, are all filled, yet some have a greater measure of water, some a lesse) is given, not without respect of workes: yet so as that it is nor given for works, but according to works: they being infallible testimonies of their unfained faith in the merits of Christ. If it be said, that eternall life is given as a reward, meritoriously deserved by good workes, because it is said, Come ye blessed: for I was hungry, and ye gave me meat, Mat 25. 34, 35. I answer, it is one thing to be just, another thing to be declared and knowne to be just. We are just by faith, but wee are knowne to be just by our workes: therefore men shall be judged at the last day, not by their faith, but by their works. For the last judgement serveth not to make men just that are unjust, which is done by faith, but to manifest them to the world what they are indeed, which is done by workes. Men are often compared to trees in Scripture. Now a tree is not knowne what it is by his sappe, but by his fruit: neither are men knowne to be just by their faith, but by their workes. Indeed a tree is therefore good, because his sappe is good: but it is knowne to be good by his fruit. So, a man is just, because of his faith, but he is known to be just by his good workes: therefore seeing that the last judgement must proceed according to evidence that is upon record, (for the bookes must be opened, and men must be judged of those things that are written in the books) all must be judged by their workes, which are evident and apparant to the view of all men, and not by their faith, which is not exposed to the sight of any. And hence it is that the Scripture saith, we shall be judged according to our workes, but it is no where said, for our good works. Gregory saith, God will give every one according to his workes: but it is one thing to give according to workes, another thing for workes. For workes are no way the cause of reward; but onely the common measure, according to which God giveth a greater or lesser reward. Take this Pſal. 1. 3. Ier. 17. 8. Matth. 3. 10.

Apoc. 2. 23.

In Pſal. 142. Reddendum cuique ſecundum opera, ſed aliud eſt ſecundum, & aliud propter opera reddere.

resemblance. A King promiseth unequall rewards to runners, (the least of which would equall the riches of a kingdome) upon condition, that hee which first commeth to the goale, shall have the greatest reward; the second the next, and so in order. They having finished their race, the King giveth them the reward according to their running. Who would hence but childishly inferre, that therefore they merited this reward by their running? And whereas they urge that text, Mat. 25. Come ye blessed—for I was hungry, and ye fed me; I answer, first, that the word [for] doth not alway signifie a cause, but any argument or reason taken from any Topicke place: as Rom. 3. 22, 23. The righteousnesse of God is made manifest unto all, and upon all that believe. For there is no difference: for all have sinned, and are deprived of the glory of God. Where, sinne is no cause of the righteousnesse of faith, but onely an antecedent, or adjunct, common to all men. So when we say, This is the true mother the childe, for she will not have it divided. There [for] doth not imply the cause, as though her refusing to have it divided, did make her the true mother of it: but onely the signe, that she was the true mother indeed. Secondly, be it granted that it implyeth the cause, yet not the meritorious cause: for good workes are said to bee causes of eternall life, not as meriting, procuring, or deserving any thing at the hands of God; but as they are the kings high way to eternall life, God having prepared good workes, that wee should walke in them. If a King promise his subject a treasure hid in the top of a steep and high mountaine, upon condition that he climbe and dig it out: his climbing & digging, is the efficient cause of enjoying the treasure, but no meritorious cause of obtaining it: seeing it was freely given. If it be further said, that the word [for] doth here signifie the cause, as well as in the words following, Go ye cursed for I was hungry and ye gave me no meat: seeing our Saviour Christ speaketh after the same manner of the reward of the godly, and punishment of the wicked; I answer. The parity of the reason stands in this, that as by good workes wee come to eternall life, so by wicked workes, we runne headlong to perdition. The dissimilitude is this, that evill workes are not onely the way, but also the cause of death: good workes are the way, but not the cause, as Bernard saith, they are via regni, non causa regnandi.

Object. III. Here God promiseth eternall life to good workes: therefore good workes merit eternall life. Ans. There is a double covenant, Legall and Evangelicall. In the legall covenant, the promise of eternall life is made unto workes. Doe this and live. If thou wilt enter into life, keepe the commandements. But thus no man can merit, because none can fulfill the Law. In the Evangelicall covenant, the promise is not made to the worke, but to the worker, worker; and to the worker, not for the merit of his worke, but for the merit of Christ, as Apoc. 2. 10. Be faithfull unto the end, and I will give thee the crowne of life: the promise is not made to fidelity, but to the faithfull person; whose fidelity is a signe that he is in Christ, in whom all the promises of God are yea, and Amen, that is, most certaine and infallible. Secondly, if any thing be due to works, it is not of the merit of the worke, but of Gods mercifull promise. Augustine saith, God made himselfe a debtor, not by owing any thing, but by promising. Thirdly, no reward is due to works of regeneration, upon compact and promise: first, because we are not under the covenant of works, in which God doth covenant with us upon condition of our obedience: but under the covenant of grace, the tenour of which covenant runneth upon condition of the merits of Christ apprehended by faith. Secondly, though wee were under the legall covenant, yet wee merit not, because our workes are not answerable to the law. Lastly, whereas the pillars of the Romish Church teach, that the promise made upon condition of performing the worke, maketh the performer to merit, is very false. This is not sufficient to make a meritorious worke: it is further required, that the worke be answerable and correspondent in worth and value, to the reward; as if one shall promise a thousand crownes to him that will fetch a little water out of the next. Well; it is debt indeed in the promiser, but no merit in the performer, because there is no proportion between the worke and the reward.

Object. IV. Sowing to the spirit is a good worke, and reaping eternall life, the reward: but reward presupposeth merit: therefore saveing or by spirit doth merit eternall life. Ans. There is a double reward, one of favour, another of debt, Rom. 4. 4. To him that worketh, the wages is not counted by favour, but by debt. So Cyprian. There is one reward of liberalitie and favour, another reward, which is the stipend of victorie, and recompence of our labour. Therefore reward signifies generally any recompence, or any gift, that is bestowed upon another, whether it be more or lesse, whether answerable to the worke or not, whether upon compact or otherwise: for this Scripture maketh mention of reward, where there are no precedent workes; as Gen. 15. 1. Feare not, Abraham, I am thine exceeding great reward, that is, thy full content and happinesse. Psal. 127. 3. The fruit of the wombe is a reward; that is, a blessing, and free gift of God. In this sense (I grant) eternall life is a reward. Yet it is no proper reward, but (as called by a catachresis, which put is not an improper speech) as it is Bellarmine, rather ignorantly or maliciously affirmeth, the usuall and familiar; for in the 2 place of the Scripture, eternall life is called reward, in a generall signification, when it is used absolutely, and not relatively, to signifie the heele, or end of any thing; and so the Hebrew word which signifieth a heele, signifieth also a reward, because it is given when the worke is ended. And eternall life hath this resemblance with a reward, in that it is given at the end of a mans life, after that his travell and warfare is ended. Thus the Greek words which signifie a reward and an end, are used indifferently one for the other. 1 Pet. 1. 9. Receiving the end of your faith, the salvation of your soules; that is, (as Beza hath fitly translated it) the reward of your faith: for to translate it the end of your faith, cannot agree to the word receiving, for we receive not an end, but a reward. Thus reward signifieth a free gift, or free remuneration, as when the master giveth his servant something, for his faithfull service, (though done upon duty) when as he oweth him nor thankes, much lesse reward. Luke 17. 9. Doth he thanke that servant, because hee did that which was commanded unto him? I trow not. Thus God giveth us eternall life, not because he is bound in justice so to doe (for he oweth us not) as reward, nor thankes for our labour, because when we have done what we can, we have but done our duty, v. 10. but because his goodnesse and mercifull promise made thereupon, doth excite him thereunto. And yet eternall life is called a reward, because it doth as certainly follow good workes, as though it were due: and good workes are mentioned in the promise, because they are tokens that the worke is in Christ, for whose merit the promise shall be accomplished. And it is further called the reward or fruit of our faith, (as here the harvest) because, it is the way and meanes of obtaining it.

Eternall life is called a reward of good workes, not causally, as procured by them, but consequently, as following them. For albeit it be given gratis, for the merit of Christ apprehended by faith only, it is given consequently, as a recompence of our labours: as an inheritance given to the heyre not for any duty or service, but because he is the heyre: yet by consequent it is given in recompence of his obedience, Freedman for obedience and mother of charity are an inducement more then the sire, and the world to come is eternall life, Mark 10. 30. Reward doth morally presuppose debt, but is oftentimes, as here it is said, Matth. 5. 46. If you love them that love you, what reward shall you have? and in Luke 6. 32. What thanke shall ye have? by which we see that reward doth not alway signifie desert, but thankfull remembrance, and gracious acceptation of, and remuneration for our labours. Gal. 3. 24. Eternall life is called the inheritance, that is, the heyre hath no right to it as a reward, and an inheritance is given, because it is given for labours upon compact: as inheritances, because ἐπὶ τέλος τὴν πίστιν.

Hebeh, Pſal. 19. 11. a heele, Prov. 23. 18.

Bellarm. de Juſtif. l. 5. c. 3.

μισθὸς κατὰ χάριν μισθὸς κατ' ὀφείλημα. Euſt. l. 11. Alia eſt merces liberalitatis & gratiæ: aliud virtutis ſtipendium, alia laboris remuneratio.

In Pſal. 127. Non debendo, ſed promittendo, Deus ſecit debitorem.

Non communicatio vel affectio ſed conſequutio, ſive conſequutivè.

Of which sort I take mutuall and reciprocall covenants, to be excepted.

because it is given to none, but those that are children. But the word misthos translated reward, signifieth a gift freely given without respect of desert, it being all one with Xen, as Basil teacheth upon the 7. Psalme.

V. The Scripture teacheth that God giveth rewards to our wayes. First, he giveth reward of due debt, in respect of merit; thus he giveth eternall life, as a reward due, not to our merits, but to the merits of Christ: for none can merit at the hands of God, but hee which is God. Secondly, he gives a reward, in respect of his free and mercifull promise, and thus he rewards only beleevers. Thirdly, he giveth rewards to hypocrites, infidels, heathens, &c. being neither bound by his owne promise, nor by their merit, when they performe the outward works of the law, and lead a civill life conformable thereto; as when Ahab humbled himselfe before the Lord, 1 Kings 21. And this God doth to the end hee may preserve humane society, and common honesty, and that he may restifie what hee approveth, and what he disliketh. Lastly, he giveth good successe in enterprises & attempts according to his owne decree, and the order of divine providence: which metaphorically is called a reward, Ezech. 29. v. 19, 20. because it hath a similitude therunto: as when wicked men through ignorance, doe that wickedly, which he hath justly decreed shal come to passe, suffering them to fill their houses with the spoile of the poore, which they have for their worke, as a man hath wages for his honest labour. Thus the spoile of Judea, is called the hire or reward given to Tiglath-Pelasser for his Syrian warre, Isa. 7. 20. and thus the spoile of Egypt is said to bee wages given Nebucodonosor, for his service against Tyrus.

Further, let us here observe the different manner of speech which the Apostle useth, in speaking of the flesh & of the spirit. Of the former he saith, He that soweth to his flesh, &c. Of the latter, He that soweth to the Spirit, not to his spirit, by which is signified that what good soever a man doth in being beneficiall to the Ministery, in furthering the Gospell, &c. he doth it not by any goodnes that is in himselfe, but by the Spirit of God, who in every good motion worketh in the will, and in every good action, the deed, Phil. 2. 13. Therefore no man ought to flatter himselfe in this respect, or to thinke highly of himselfe, as though he had attained an extraordinarie measure of sanctification, either for affecting, or effecting any thing that is good: for whatsoever good thing is in us, is the gift of God, as Perasius saith. On the contrary, what evill soever a man doth, hee doth it of himselfe: and being never the nearer to the fulfilling, nor the abolishing of the law.

Againe, we heare that the flesh and spirit are generate persons: and how can the flesh be cause that before their conversion they doe nothing but those things that are pleasing to the flesh: so that dying in that estate, they can reape nothing but corruption? therefore it hence followeth that Philosophers, heathen, and all meere civill, and naturall men, being such as never sowed to the spirit, shall reape nothing but corruption, death, and condemnation, contrary to the opinion of some ancient, and moderne writers.

Further, observe here, that though there bee some that are Neuters in religion, like warme Gospellers, halting between two opinions, such as are neither fish nor flesh, yet in morall duties, there are no Neuters. nor mediators: for all men are ranged into one of these two ranks either they are sowers to the flesh, or to the spirit.

Here also we see who are true worldlings indeed; to wit, such as minde earthly things, in spending themselves, their strength, and wits, upon the world, having all their care for it, and all their comfort in it; in the meane time, having little or no taste of the joyes of the world to come, because they make their Paradise here upon earth, and never looke for any heaven after this life. As also who are spirituall men, namely, such as walke in the spirit, who though they live in the world, in cleie houses of clay, yet are not of the world, because they set not their affections upon it, but have their conversation in heaven, where Christ sitteth at God right hand.

This serves first of all, to discover unto us our own estate, whether we be still in the carnall, or spirituall: for if we sow to the flesh (that is, be always poring and digging in the earth with the mole, setting our affections upon it, not referring the blessings of God to his glory, and the furtherance of the Gospell, but to serve our owne corrupt desires: we are fleshly minded, (though we pretend this, and that, and protest never so much) and continuing in this estate, we can expect nothing but the harvest of death and condemnation. Where as on the contrary side, if we savour the things of the spirit, by setting our affections upon them, & seeking those things that are above, exercising up our hearts by feeble groanes and ejaculations, for the enjoying of them, we are spirituall men, and shall undoubtedly in due time reape the harvest of eternall life.

Secondly, this bewrayeth the paucity of spirituall men, even where the Gospel is professed: and how the world swarmes with multitudes of carnall, and fleshly minded men. For as in former times they did eate, they did drink, they bought, they sold, they planted, they built, that is, wholly addicted and devoted themselves to these things: so in these latter dayes (which our Saviour Christ prophesied should be a counterpaine of the former) the multitude generally in every place is wholly employed, and spend themselves, in thinking, in affecting, in talking, in seeking, in following of worldly things, seldome (God knowes) or never minding the kingdome of God, or the righteousnesse thereof, nor practising the Apostles rule, So to use the world as though they used it not, 1 Cor 7. 31.

Againe, here we see how the wisedome of God is counted folly, among worldly wise men: and how the wisedome of the world is foolishnesse before God. For if a man sow to the spirit, in not following blinde reason, nor corrupted affection, nor fashioning himselfe to the guise of the world, nor seeking his own good so much as the good of others, but denying himselfe, forsaking all (in his affection) for the Gospell of Christ, and contemning this temporall trash, in regard of the heavenly treasure; he is accounted in the world but a foole: whereas God accounts him truly wise: for he is the wise Merchant man, who having found a pearle of great price, went and sold all that he had, and bought it, Matth. 14. 46. For the lesse he layeth up for himselfe upon earth, the more hee treasureth up for himselfe in heaven: and though hee seeme to sow upon the waters, yet after many dayes he shall find it againe. Whereas they that mind nothing but the world, in sowing to the flesh, are reputed wise and provident men: when as God accounts them starke fooles: Thou foole, this night shall they fetch away thy soule, and then whose shall those things bee which thou hast provided? and then it followeth, So is he that gathereth riches to himselfe, and not rich in God. For the more they treasure up riches, the more they treasure up to themselves wrath against the day of wrath, Rom. 2. 5. and fat themselves against the day of slaughter, Iam 5. 5.

Lastly, wee are here warned to take heed of the devils sophistry. It is a notable policy, one of the cunningest stratagems the Devill hath, in good things commanded, to sever the meanes from the end: and in evill things forbidden, to sever the end from the meanes. Hee laboureth to sever the meanes from the end, by perswading a man that he may come to the end, though he never use the meanes, that hee may reape eternall life, though hee never sow the seeds of the spirit in this life. But we must know, that as he which runneth not at all, can never gaine the Garland: hee which laboureth not in the Vineyard, the labourers wages: he that never sowes, can never reape: so hee that runneth not in the race of Christianity, shall never attaine the Crowne of happinesse and felicity: hee that laboureth not in the Lords Vineyard, the recompence of reward: he that in this life soweth not to the spirit, shall never after this life reape life everlasting. For wee may not dreame of a good harvest, without a good seed time, of sowing nothing to reape something; or sowing tares to reape wheat. Againe, he severeth the end from the meanes, by perswading men that they may use the means and never come to the end, that though they sow to the flesh, yet they shall not reape corruption. Thus he perswaded Eve, that though shee did eate of the forbidden fruit, yet she should not dye the death, nay, shee should not dye at all, but her eyes should be opened, and she should be as God himselfe, knowing good and evill. But we are to bee undoubtedly resolved of this, that God hath linked with an iron chaine, the pleasure of sinne, and the punishment thereof: that as he that follows a river, must needs at length come to the Sea: so hee that followes the course and streame of his sinnes, must needs come at the length to the gulfe of eternall destruction.

9. Let us not therefore bee wearie of well-doing: for in due season wee shall reape, if wee faint not.

In these words, the Apostle expounds the fift generall rule appertaining to all sorts of men: and in it he ascendeth from the hypothesis to the thesis, that is, from the particular, to the generall, shewing that we ought not to faint in any good course, either in doing good to them that labour amongst us, and are over us in the Lord, and admonish us; nor yet in being beneficiall unto others. And this verse dependeth upon the former, (as the word therfore doth imply) by way of necessarie illation, and consequence: for seeing that they which continue in well doing, in sowing to the spirit, shall of the spirit reape life everlasting, vers. 8. therefore no man ought to bee weary of wel doing. It consisteth of two parts: of a rule, or precept, in the former part of the verse, Let us not therefore be weary of well doing: and a reason of the rule, or a motive to incite us to the performance thereof, in the latter part: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not. In the rule, the Apostle speakes that plainely, which in the former verses he had delivered more obscurely: for here hee expounds himselfe, what he meant by sowing to the spirit, namely, doing of good, or (as it is in the next verse) doing of good unto all; which may also appeare by that which followeth, we shall reape, if we faint not; that is, wee shall reape the fruit of that which we have sowne to the spirit, if we faint not: therefore to sow to the spirit, is nothing else, but to doe good. Now by well doing, the Apostle meanes not onely the outward worke, whereby our neighbour is furthered, helped, relieved; but the doing of it also in a good manner, and to a good end; so, as it may be a good worke indeed, not onely profitable to our neighbours, and comfortable to our selves, but acceptable to God. This is a more necessary precept: for most men are soone weary of a good course, like to these Galatians, who beganne in the spirit, but being weary of that walke, turned aside, and made an end in the flesh, Gal. 3. 3. Like Ephraim and Judah, whose goodnesse was as a morning cloud, and as the morning dew which vanisheth away, Hos. 6. 4. This wearifulnesse in well doing hath seized upon the most: even upon all drowsie professours (which are the greatest part,) as may appeare by this, in that some, if they bee held but a quarter of an houre too long, or above their ordinary time, are extreamely weary of hearing the word. And as for duties of mercie and liberality, putting up injuries, & tolerating wrongs; they are readyer ever an end as soone as they beginne. And as for prayer and thanksgiving, and other parts of the worship of God, most men say in their hearts with the old Iewes, What profit is it that wee keepe his commandements, and that we walke humbly before the Lord of hosts? Malac. 3. 14. Hence it is, that the holy Ghost is so frequent in stirring us up to the performance of all good duties, with alacrity and cheerefulnesse, and often in rowsing us from that drowsinesse and deadnesse, wherewith we are overwhelmed, Luke 18. 1. Our Saviour Christ propounds a parable to this end, to teach us, That we ought alwaies to pray, and not to waxe faint, Eph 3. 13. I desire (saith Paul) that ye faint not at my tribulations. 2 Thess. 3. 13. And yee, brethren, bee not weary in well doing. And so in this place, Let us not therefore bee weary of well doing.

Now the reasons which make men so wearie of well doing, are in generall these three. First, the strength of the flesh, which even in the regenerate is like the great giant Goliah, in comparison of poore David. Secondly, the weaknesse of the spirit, and spirituall graces. Thirdly, the outward occurrences, and impediments of this life. In speciall they be these. First, men by nature are wolves one to another, Esay 11. vers. 6. and so they continue till this wolvish nature bee mortified, and renewed by grace: and are so farre from helping, furthering, relieving, tolerating one another, or performing any other duties of love, that contrarily, they are ready to bite, and devoure one another, Gal. 5. verse 15. Secondly, oftentimes it commeth to passe, that other mens coldnesse doth coole our zeale, their backwardnesse slackeneth our forwardnesse. Thirdly, many thinke it a disgrace and disparagement unto them, to stoope so low, as to become serviceable unto their inferiours. Fourthly, there are many things which discourage us from well doing: either the parties is unknown unto us, as David was to Nabal (for which cause hee would not relieve him in his necessity:) or else seemeth unworthie of our helpe, being such as through riot, harlots, lewd company, hath brought himselfe to miserie and beggery: or such as reward us evill for good, hatred for our good will: or such as are querulous, alwayes complaining, though never so well dealt withall: all which make men cold in the duties of love. Fiftly, some there bee which faine dangers, and cast perils, which hinder them from doing the good they should: The slothfull person saith, a lyon is in the way, &c. Lastly, the manifold occasions and affaires of this life, doe so distract the minde, as that a man is soone wearied, yea in the best things. Besides, many see no reason why they should spend themselves, in doing good unto others.

1 Sam. 25. 10.

Luke 9. 62.

Gen. 19. 19.

Now to all these obstacles, and pull-backs, wee are to oppose the Apostles precept, Let us not be weary of well doing. For verily, if the consideration of these small occasions, and rubbes that lye in the way, daunt and dismay us, and so stoppe our course, we shall never be plentifull in good workes: wee may haply put our hand to the plow, but a thousand to one we shall looke backe againe: with Lots wife cast a long looke toward Sodome; and with the Israelites in our hearts turne againe into Egypt. For as hee that observeth the winde shall not sow, and as hee that regardeth the clouds, shall never reape, Eccles. 11. vers. 4. So he that regardeth the ingratitude of some, the evill example of others, the manifold distractions and occurrences of this life; and shall cast perills in carnall wisedome, of this and that trouble, or inconvenience, that may ensue, shall never doe his duty as he ought.

And assuredly, he that faineth in a good course, and giveth it over before he come to the end, is like unto the slothfull husbandman, who having plowed and tilled, and in part sowed his ground, giveth over before he have finished it; and so, either the parching heat doth wither it, or the nipping cold doth kill it, or the fowles of the ayre devoure it.

Now most men are sicke of this disease, which shewes the greatnesse of our corruptions, and that the best Christians have a huge masse or lumpe of sinne in them, and but a sparke of grace; in that they are seldome or never weary in scraping together of riches, in following their pleasures, in pursuing honors, and hunting after preferments: and yet are quickly weary in duties of pietie, justice, and mercy, albeit they have an unspeakeable reward annexed unto them.

Well, whatsoever the corrupt practices of men be, let us learne our duty, to goe forward without wearinesse, nay to doe good with cheerfulnesse, as Paul saith of himselfe, Phil. 3. Forgetting that which is behinde, and indeavouring himselfe to that which is before. Let us consider that it is the property of a liberall mind, To devise of liberall things, and to continue his liberality, Esa. 32. vers. 8. Neither is this all, not to be weary, or to persist and continue, but we must proceed on from strength to strength, and bring forth more fruit in our age. Psal. 92. 14. as the Church of Thyatira, whose workes were more at the last, than at the first, for which she is worthily praised by our Saviour Christ, Revel. 2. verse 19. It was the motto to Charles the fift, Plus ultra, and it ought to be every Christians motto to strive to perfection, and as the Apostle exhorts us, To be stedfast, fast, immoveable, and not to make stay there, but to bee abundant alwayes in the worke of the Lord, 1 Corinthians 15. 58. And then wee may doe this indeed, wee must set downe this certaine conclusion, that wee will not receive nor give backe, come what will come: and withall wee must labour to quicken our dull and drowsie spirits, to gird up the loynes of our minds, to strengthen our weake hands, and our feeble knees, by publike and private exercises of reading, prayer, meditation, conference, &c.

Thus much of the rule: now followeth the reason of the rule, or the motive to encourage us to the performance of this duty, for in due season we shall reape, if we faint not, as if hee should say more fully; Let us be assured of this, that continuing and increasing in well doing, our labour is not lost, nor spent in vaine, 1 Corinth. 15. 58. for though wee imagine that wee labour in vaine, and spend our strength in vaine (as the Prophet speaketh) yet our worke is with the Lord, and our labour with our God, Esay 49. 4. And albeit wee may seeme to our selves and others to cast away our goods in being beneficiall unto some, and (as the Wise man speaketh) to sowe upon the waters: yet after many dayes we shall finde them again, Eccl. 11. 1. In the motive there bee three things contained. First, the reason it selfe, which is a promise of reward, we shall reape. Secondly, the circumstance of time, when this harvest shall be reaped, wee shall reape in due season. Thirdly, the condition that is required on our parts that we may reape, if we faint not. Of these in order, and first of the reason or promise it selfe.

Whereas the Apostle (to the end we may not be weary of a good course) doth encourage us to proceed on, by setting before our eyes the promised reward, I gather, that we may encourage, animate, and excite our selves to the performance of all good duties by the consideration of the heavenly harvest which we are to reape, and the crowne of glory wee are to receive after this life: as the husbandman doth sowe, in hope that hee shall reape: and though seed-time bee painefull and chargeable unto him, yet hee giveth not over for all that, but comforteth himselfe with the expectation of the harvest, which will fully quit his cost, and recompence his labour. That this is a truth, it may appeare by sundry arguments: by precept, by promise, by practice, by reason. For precept. It is the commandement of Christ, we should make us friends of unrighteous mammon, or the riches of iniquity, that when wee shall want, they may receive us into everlasting tabernacles, Luke 16. 9.

For promise, besides this place (which is very pregnant to the purpose) Paul exhorts servants, That whatsoever they doe, they would doe it heartily, as to the Lord, & not to men, knowing, that of the Lord they shall receive the reward of inheritance, Coloss. 3. 23. 24. And generally what good thing soever a man doth, the same shall he receive of the Lord, whether he be bond or free, Eph. 6. 8. He that forsaketh father and mother, &c. for Christs sake, shall receive an hundredfold more in this life, and in the world to come life everlasting, Matth. 19. 29. These and the like promises were to no purpose, if it were not lawfull for us to looke to the reward, and if we might not by considering of it, incite and stirre up our selves to greater alacrity in the course of Christianity, in making us more fervent, and frequent in the duties of pietie.

Thirdly, it may be proved by the practise of the Saints of God: Abraham was contented to forsake his native country at the command of God, and to dwell in a strange land, yea, and that in tents, because he looked for a city having a foundation, whose builder and maker is God, Hebrewes 11. v. 9, 10. Moses esteemed the rebuke of Christ greater riches, than the treasures of Egypt, because hee had respect unto the recompence of reward, verse 26. Christ (whose example is without all exception, being exemplum indefectens, as the Schoolemen speake) did sweeten the bitternesse of the crosse, with the consideration of the glory which a little after he was to enjoy: for so the Apostle saith, that for the joy that was set before him, he endured the crosse, and despised the shame, Hebrewes 12. 2. The Colossians are commended by the Apostle, for that they continued & increased in faith to God, and love to man, for the hopes sake that was laid up for them in heaven, Colossians 1. 5. And Paul shewes this to have beene the practice, and to bee the duty of all the Saints of God, so to runne, that they may obtaine, 1 Corinthians, 9. 24.

Lastly, it may bee proved by reason. For first, that which is the end of our actions, ought to be considered of us, as a meanes to stirre us up to the attaining of this end: therefore seeing the end of our faith and hope is eternall life, Romanes 6. 22. Ye have your fruit in holinesse, and the end everlasting life. 1 Pet. 1. 9. Receiving the reward of your faith, the salvation of your soules: Therefore we may, nay, we ought to cast our eyes vpon it, and to direct all our actions for the attaining of it. Secondly, if the labourer worke, not in regard of the common good onely, but also with respect of his wages: he that runneth a race, to attaine the garland: if the husbandman see and sowe, plant and plow, in hope to reape a harvest, and to receive some fruit of his labours: it is lawfull for Christians also to doe good in regard of eternall reward: for that is the Apostles reason, 1 Corinth. 9. 25. They that strive masteries abstaine from all things: shun they may obtaine a corruptible crowne: but we for an uncorruptible. It is Saint Iames his reason, Iames 5. verse 7, 8. as the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, untill hee receive the former and the latter raine, So must we be patient, and settle our hearts, for the comming of the Lord draweth neere, and he will recompence every man according to his workes. Thirdly, if it bee lawfull for a man to abstaine from sinne, for feare of eternall punishment, and torment in hell, (as we know it is) Mat. 10.28. then it is lawfull to doe good, in hope of eternall reward. It will be said, that it is the property of a mercenary hireling to looke for reward. I answer, It is the property of an hireling to looke onely or principally for his hire, either not minding the glory and honour of God, or lesse respecting it, than his owne private advantage: so that when the hope of his gaine is gone, he leaveth his charge, and flieth away: like the Popish Monkes, who were right hirelings indeed, for they minded nothing but their owne commodity, according to the old saying, No penny, no Pater noster. But to looke to the recompence of reward, in the second place after the glory of GOD, the performance of our duty, and discharge of a good conscience, is no property of a hireling; seeing God hath promised to give to them which by continuance in well doing, seeke glory, and honour, and immortality, eternall life, Rom. 2. verse 7.

By this that hath beene said, wee may see the impudency of the Rhemists, who in their marginall notes upon Luke 14.1. Hebr. 11. 26. and Apoc. 3. 5. doe notably slander us and our doctrine, in averring that wee teach, that no man ought to doe good in respect of reward: the like may be said of Cardinall Bellarmine, Bonifelsius, and others. For this is our constant doctrine, that we may, and ought to stirre up our dulnesse to all chearefulnesse, in the discharge of our duty, by seeing before our eyes the reward which is promised. Yet so, as that we ought not only, nor principally, to respect the reward: for the zeale of Gods glory, the care and conscience wee have to discharge our duty, ought rather to move us to be plentifull in good workes, (in lieu of thankfulnesse unto God for the riches of his mercy) than the greatnesse of the reward; seeing wee ought to doe our duty, though there were no heaven, no hell, no reward, no punishment, no devill to torment, no conscience to accuse; the very love of God ought to constraine us, 2 Cor. 5.14. And here wee must with thankfulnesse acknowledge the endlesse love and mercy of God towards us, seeing that when hee might exact strict obedience without any promise of recompence for our labour: nay, when hee might shiver us in peeces with his iron scepter, yet as Ahasuerus did to Queene Esther, he holdeth out his golden scepter unto us in the preaching of the word, that we might lay hold of it, and by it apprehend eternall life. Yea it pleaseth him to winne us by gifts, to incite us by rewards, to allure us by promises, in giving his word, that if we give, we may look to receive,

De Iustific. lib. 5. cap. 2. De Iustific. & mer. Sec. 4. numb. 5. conclu. 25.

(though not for our merits, yet through his mercy) if we bestow transitory goods, wee shall receive a durable substance: If a cup of cold water, Gods kingdome, Matth. 10.42.

The second generall point, is the circumstance of time, when we shall reape, to wit, in due time. This due time may be understood, in part, of this life: for godlines hath the promise of this life, as well as of the life to come, and the workes of mercy have beene even in this life recompenced to the full. The widow of Zarepta for entertaining the Prophet Eliah, was miraculously sustained in the dearth: The meale in her barrell did not waste, and the oyle in her cruise did not diminish, 1 Kings 17.16. And so the Shunamite for the like kindnesse shewed to the Prophet Elizeus, being barren, obtained a sonne: and when hee was dead, shee obtained him to life againe, 2 Kings 4. as the widow of Zarepta did hers at the prayer of Eliah, 1 Kings 17.23. For as God doth alwayes give to his children in this life the first fruits of his Spirit: so hee doth often give them the first fruits of their labours, as a taste of their future felicity, and an earnest of that happines which after they shall fully enjoy. Our Saviour Christ saith, he will reward them an hundred fold in this life, Matth. 19. But this due time is properly meant of the life to come, which hath two degrees, the first is, at the day of death, when the soule entreth into happinesse: the second, at the day of judgement, when both soule and body (being re-united) shall bee put in full possession of eternall glory and felicity: for then they shall be rewarded according to their workes; not so much as a cup of cold water which they have given to relieve the Saints of God, but shall bee recompenced to the full, Matth. 10.42.

Vse. Seeing God hath set downe a set and certaine time when we are to reape, it is our duty with patience to expect it, as the husbandman doth, who having sowed his field, doth not looke for a croppe the next day, or weeke, or moneth: but patiently expecteth the harvest, that he may receive the precious seed of the earth. For he is too unreasonable, who having sowed in September, looketh for a crop in October: hee must waite for the moneth of August, till the harvest; and in the meane time indure storme and tempest, winde and weather, snow and raine, haile and frost. So we must sow our seed, and sow plentifully, still expecting the fruit of our labour with patience, till the greatest harvest come, the great day of retribution, in which God will separate the wheat from the chaffe, gathering the one into his garners, & burning up the other with unquencheable fire. Mat. 3.12. Let us consider the example of God, who doth patiently expect, and (as I may say) waits our leisure when we will turne unto him, that he might have mercy upon us, Es. 30.8. he waits at the doore of our hearts and standeth knocking to bee let in, Apocal. 3.20. nay, hee calleth unto us standing without, Open unto me my sister, my love, my dove, my undefiled, for my head is full of dew, and my lockes with the droppes of the night, Cant. 5.2. Woe unto thee Jerusalem, wilt thou never be made cleane? when will it once be? Ierem. 13.27. More particularly, Gods waiting and expecting is set downe in Scripture by sundry degrees. First, hee waiteth all the day long. Isay. 65.2. I have stretched out my hand all the day long to a disobedient and gainsaying people. Secondly, forty dayes together, Yet forty dayes, and Ninive shall be destroied, Ionas 3.4. Thirdly, all the yeare long, as the husbandman doth; I looked for grapes, and loe wilde grapes, Esay. 5.4. Fourthly, hee expecteth our amendment many yeares together, Luke 13.7. Behold, these three yeares have I come and sought fruit on this figtree, and finde none. Fifthly, the Lord suffered the manners of the Israelites forty yeares in the wildernesse, Psal. 95.10. Act. 13.18. Sixtly, the long sufferance of God (as Peter saith, 1. Epist. 3.20.) did patiently expect the conversion of the old world, all the while the Arke was in preparing, for the space of 120. yeares. Seventhly he expected the Canaanites, and Amorites for the space of foure hundred yeares, yea, he suffered all Gentiles to wander in their owne waies, and in the vanity of their minde almost for three thousand yeares together, Acts 14.16. Now if God bee so patient in expecting our amendment from day to day, from yeare to yeare; wee ought to be patient in expecting the accomplishment of his promises day after day, and yeare after yeare, as we are commanded, Habbac. 2.3. Though the vision tarry, yet tarry for it, for it shall surely come, and shall not stay: and though it be long before we reape any fruit of our labour, yet let us with patience expect it, for in due season we shall reape, if wee faint not. For, if God wait upon us, not for his owne good, but for ours: what a shame is it that we will not waite upon him, in tarrying his good leisure, for our owne good? The dumbe and senselesse creatures may set us to schoole in this point, for they expect with fervent desire to be delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the sonnes of God, Rom. 8.19.20. and as the word signifieth, they expect with a longing desire, even with thrusting forth their heads, as the poore prisoner that is condemned, doth, who ofttimes putteth forth his head out of the window, in a continuall earnest expectation of the gracious pardon of the Prince. It is our parts therefore to waite as David did, who saith of himselfe, Psalme 69.3. I am weary of my crying, my eyes faile mee whilest I waite for my God. For if we give over our patient expecting, and faint in our minds, seeking to anticipate this DVE TIME, this period which God hath prefixed in his unchangeable will, (more immurable than the lawes of the Medes and Persians) a thousand to one but we runne for helpe, either to the witch of Endor, as Saul did, 2 Sam. 28. or to the wizzard of Pethor, as Balack did, Numb. 22. or to the sorcerer and figure-flinger of Babel, as Nebuchadnezzar did, Ezech. 21.21. or if all these faile, (as commonly they doe) we either breake out into open blasphemy, as the King of Israel did, 2 King. 6.33. Behold, this evill commeth of the Lord, should I attend on the Lord any longer? or in the depth of discontent, wee play the desperate part of Razzz, and lay violent hands upon our selves, 2 Macchab. 40.41.

standeth

The third thing to bee considered, is the condition required on our part, that wee may reape in due time; set downe in these words, If we faint not. The words in the originall are thus: wee shall reape in due time not fainting: which may be (and are of some) taken in a double sense: either as a promise, or as a condition. As a promise, thus, If we bee not weary of well-doing, wee shall reape in due season without all fainting and wearinesse, either to the body or mind; that is, wee shall reape with all joy and comfort, as it is, Psal. 126.5.6. They that sow in teares, shall reape in joy: and they that went weeping, and carried precious seed, shall come againe with joy, and bring their sheaves with them. As a condition, that if we continue constant in well doing to the end, without fainting, we shall reape in the time that God hath appointed: and in this sense it is to be taken in this text, to wit; conditionally, as it is well translated, If we faint not.

Wee are further to consider, that there is a double fainting, one of the body, another of the minde. The bodily fainting which commeth by labour and toyling; is not here meant, seeing it doth nothing impeach the goodnesse of the worke, (it is an argument rather of the soundnesse and sincerity thereof:) but the spirituall fainting is that which is to be feared, because it maketh our labour all in vaine. And this spirituall fainting is twofold: the first is, the slaking & remitting somewhat of our course, and this hath, and doth befall the Saints of God, as we may see in the example of the Church of Ephesus, which left her first love, Apoc. 2.4. Yea, all the Saints of God have their turbida intervalla, troubled and distempered fits, sometime in the full, sometime in the wane, sometime zealous and forward in the service of God, sometime againe heavy and backward, &c.

The second is such a fainting and languishing that we cleane give over our course, of which Paul speakes, 2 Cor. 4.16. Therefore wee faint not, but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed daily. And the author to the Hebrewes, We must consider Christ, who endured such speaking against of sinners, lest we should be wearied, and faint in our soules, Heb. 12.3. And againe, v. 4. Despise not the chastening of the Lord, neither faint when thou are rebuked of him. This fainting is meant in this place.

and the latter raine, So must we be patient, and stable our hearts, for the comming of the Lord draweth neere, and he will recompence every man according to his workes. Thirdly, if it bee lawfull for a man to abstaine from sinne, for feare of eternall punishment, and torment in hell, (as we know it is) Mat. 10.28. then it is lawfull to doe good, in hope of eternall reward. It will be said, that it is the property of a mercenary hireling to looke for reward. I answer, It is the property of an hireling to looke onely or principally for his hire, either not minding the glory and honour of God, or lesse respecting it, than his owne private advantage: so that when the hope of his gaine is gone, he leaveth his charge, and flieth away: like the Popish Monkes, who were right hirelings indeed, for they minded nothing but their owne commodity, according to the old saying, No penny, no Pater noster. But to looke to the recompence of reward, in the second place after the glory of GOD, the performance of our duty, and discharge of a good conscience, is no property of a hireling; seeing God hath promised to give to them which by continuance in well doing, seeke glory, and honour, and immortality, eternall life, Rom. 2. verse 7.

By this that hath beene said, wee may see the impudency of the Rhemists, who in their marginall notes upon Luke 14.1. Hebr. 11. 26. and Apoc. 3. 5. doe notably slander us and our doctrine, in averring that wee teach, that no man ought to doe good in respect of reward: the like may be said of Cardinall Bellarmine, Binsfeldius, and others. For this is our constant doctrine, that we may, and ought to stirre up our dulnesse to all chearefulnesse, in the discharge of our duty, by setting before our eyes the reward which is promised. Yet so, as that we ought not only, nor principally, to respect the reward: for the zeale of Gods glory, the care and conscience wee have to discharge our duty, ought rather to move us to be plentifull in good workes, (in lieu of thankfulnesse unto God for the riches of his mercy) than the greatnesse of the reward; seeing wee ought to doe our duty, though there were no heaven, no hell, no reward, no punishment, no devill to torment, no conscience to accuse, the very love of God ought to constraine us, 2 Cor. 5.14. And here wee must with thankfulnesse acknowledge the endlesse love and mercy of God towards us, seeing that when hee might exact strict obedience without any promise of recompence for our labour: nay, when hee might shiver us in peeces with his iron scepter, yet as Ahasuerosse did to Queene Esther, he holdeth out his golden scepter unto us in the preaching of the word, that we might lay hold of it, and by it apprehend eternall life. Yea it pleaseth him to winne us by gifts, to incite us by rewards, to allure us by promises, in giving his word, that if we give, we may look to receive, (though not for our merits, yet through his mercy:) if we bestow transitory goods, wee shall receive a durable substance: If a cup of cold water, Gods kingdome. Matth. 10.42.

De Iustific. lib. 5. cap. 8. De Iustific. & mer. Sec. 4. memb. 5. conclu. 15.

The second generall point, is the circumstance of time, when we shall reape, to wit, in due time. This due time may be understood, in part, of this life: for godlines hath the promise of this life, as well as of the life to come, and the workes of mercy have beene even in this life recompenced to the full. The widow of Zarepta for entertaining the Prophet Eliah, was miraculously sustained in the dearth: The meale in her barrell did not waste, and the cyle in her cruise did not diminish, 1 Kings 17.16. And so the Shunamite for the like kindnesse shewed to the Prophet Elizeus, being barren, obtained a sonne: and when hee was dead, shee obtained him to life againe, 2 Kings 4. as the widow of Zarepta did hers at the prayer of Eliah, 1 Kings 17. 23. For as God doth always give to his children in this life the first fruits of his Spirit: so hee doth often give them the first fruits of their labours, as a taste of their future felicity, and an earnest of that happines which after they shall fully enjoy. Our Saviour Christ saith, he will reward them an hundred fold in this life, Matth. 19. But this due time is properly meant of the life to come, which hath two degrees, the first is, at the day of death, when the soule entreth into happinesse: the second, at the day of judgement, when both soule and body (being re-united) shall bee put in full possession of eternall glory and felicity: for then they shall be rewarded according to their workes, not so much as a cup of cold water which they have given to relieve the Saints of God, but shall bee recompenced to the full, Matth. 10.42.

Vse. Seeing God hath set downe a set and certaine time when we are to reape, it is our duty with patience to expect it, as the husbandman doth, who having sowed his field, doth not looke for a croppe the next day, or weeke, or moneth: but patiently expecteth the harvest, that he may receive the precious seed of the earth. For he is too unreasonable, who having sowed in September, looketh for a crop in October: hee must waite for the moneth of August, till the harvest; and in the meane time indure storme and tempest, winde and weather, snow and raine, haile and frost. So we must sow our seed, and sow plentifully, still expecting the fruit of our labour with patience, till the greatest harvest come, the great day of retribution, in which God will separate the wheat from the chaffe, gathering the one into his garners, & burning up the other with unquenchable fire, Mat. 3.12. Let us consider the example of God, who doth patiently expect, and (as I may say) waites our leisure when we will turne unto him, that he might have mercy upon us, Es. 30.8. he waits at the doore of our hearts and standeth stil and knocking to bee let in, Apocal. 3.20. nay, hee calleth unto us standing without, Open unto me my sister, my love, my dove, my undefiled, for my head is full of dew, and my locks with the droppes of the night, Cant. 5.2. Woe unto thee Jerusalem, wilt thou never be made cleane? when will it once be? Jerem. 13.27. More particularly, Gods waiting and expecting is set downe in Scripture by sundry degrees. First, hee waiteth all the day long. Isay. 65.2. I have stretched out my hand all the day long to a disobedient and gainsaying people. Secondly, forty dayes together, Yet forty dayes, and Ninive shall be destroied, Ionas 3. 4. Thirdly, all the yeare long, as the husbandman doth; I looked for grapes, and loe wilde grapes, Esay. 5.4. Fourthly, hee expecteth our amendment many yeares together, Luke 13. 7. Behold, these three yeares have I come and sought fruit on this figtree, and finde none. Fiftly, the Lord suffered the manners of the Israelites forty yeares in the wildernesse, Psal. 95.10. Act. 13.18 Sixtly, the long sufferance of God (as Peter saith, 1. Epist. 3.20.) did patiently expect the conversion of the old world, all the while the Arke was in preparing, for the space of 120. yeares. Seventhly he expected the Canaanites, and Amorites for the space of foure hundred yeares, yea, he suffered all Gentiles to wander in their owne waies, and in the vanity of their minde almost for three thousand yeares together, Acts 14.16. Now if God bee so patient in expecting our amendment from day to day, from yeare to yeare, wee ought to be patient in expecting the accomplishment of his promises day after day, and yeare after yeare, as we are commanded, Habbac. 2.3. Though the vision tarry, yet tarry for it, for it shall surely come, and shall not stay: and though it be long before we reape any fruit of our labour, yet let us with patience expect it, for in due season we shall reape, if wee faint not. For, if God wait upon us, not for his owne good, but for ours: what a shame is it that we will not waite upon him, in tarrying his good leisure, for our owne good? The dumbe and senselesse creatures may set us to schoole in this point, for they expect with fervent desire to be delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the sonnes of God, Rom. 8.19.20. and as the word signifieth, they expect with a longing desire, even with thrusting forth their heads, as the poore prisoner that is condemned, doth, who ofttsoones putteth forth his head out of the window, in a continuall earnest expectation of the gracious pardon of the Prince. It is our parts therefore to waite as David did, who saith of himselfe, Psalme 69.3. I am weary of my crying, my eyes faile mee whilest I waite for my God. For if we give over our patient expecting, and faint in our minds, seeking to anticipate this DVE TIME, this period which God hath prefixed in his unchangeable will, (more immutable than the lawes of the Medes and Persians) a thousand to one but we runne for helpe, either to the witch of Endor, as Saul did, 2 Sam. 28. or to the wizzard of Pethor, as Balack did, Numb. 22. or to the sorcerer and figure-flinger of Babel, as Nebuchadnezzar did, Ezech. 21.21. or if all these faile, (as commonly they doe) we either breake out into open blasphemy, as the King of Israel did, 2 King. 6.33. Behold, this evill commeth of the Lord, should I attend on the Lord any longer? or in the depth of discontent, we play the desperate part of Razat, and lay violent hands upon our selves, 2 Macchab. 40.41.

ἐγκακοῦμεν, not ἐκλυόμεθα, as some would have it.

The third thing to bee considered, is the condition required on our part, that wee may reape in due time; set downe in these words, If we faint not. The words in the originall are thus: wee shall reape in due time not fainting: which may be (and are of some) taken in a double sense: either as a promise, or as a condition. As a promise, thus, If we bee not weary of well-doing, wee shall reape in due season without all fainting and wearinesse, either to the body or mind; that is, wee shall reape with all joy and comfort, as it is, Psal. 126.5.9. They that sow in teares, shall reape in joy: and they that went weeping, and carried precious seed, shall come againe with joy, and bring their sheaves with them. As a condition, that if we continue constant in well doing to the end, without fainting, we shall reape in the time that God hath appointed: and in this sense it is to be taken in this text, to wit, conditionally, as it is well translated, If we faint not.

μὴ ἐκλυόμενοι. Oecumen. in hunc locum, & alij.

Wee are further to consider, that there is a double fainting, one of the body, another of the minde. The bodily fainting which commeth by labour and toyling, is not here meant, seeing it doth nothing impeach the goodnesse of the worke. (it is an argument rather of the soundnesse and sincerity thereof:) but the spirituall fainting is that which is to be feared, because it maketh our labour all in vaine. And this spirituall fainting is twofold: the first is, the slaking & remitting some what of our course, and this hath, and doth befall the Saints of God, as we may see in the example of the Church of Ephesus, which left her first love, Apoc. 2.4. Yea, all the Saints of God have their turbida intervalla, troubled and distempered fits, sometime in the full, sometime in the wane, sometime zealous and forward in the service of God, sometime againe heavy and backward, &c.

The second is such a fainting and languishing that we cleane give over our course, of which Paul speakes, 2 Cor. 4.16. Therefore we faint not, but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed daily. And the author to the Hebrewes, We must consider Christ, who endured such speaking against of sinners, lest we should be wearied, and faint in our soules, Heb. 12.3. And againe, v. 4. Despise not the chastening of the Lord, neither faint when thou art rebuked of him. This fainting is meant in this place.

Finis coronat opus. Of all vertues it is onely constancy is crowned. Non cupisse, sed perseverasse virtutis est.

Whereas S. Paul saith we shall reape, if we faint not, he signifieth, that we must persevere and continue to the end, otherwise we cannot looke to reape the harvest of eternall happinesse. It is nothing but constancy and continuing in well doing, that doth crowne all our good workes. Bee constant (saith our Saviour Christ to the Church of Smyrna, Apoc. 2. 10.) and I will give thee the crowne of life. Ierome saith, it is the property of true vertue not to begin well, but to end well. Paul blameth these Galatians for beginning in the spirit and ending in the flesh: and Christ shewes what a shame it is to him that beginneth to build and cannot finish it: it is as good never a whit as never the better: nay, his condition is better that never began, than that of Iudas, whose end was worse than his beginning, Levit. 3. 9. the taile of the sacrifice was commanded to be offered upon the altar, by which was signified, that in every good worke we must not only begin, but continue in it to the end, and sacrifice the end of it to God, as well as the beginning: otherwise wee lose our labour, and misse our reward: therefore S. Iohn bids us looke to our selves, that we lose not the things which we have done, but that we may receive a full reward, 2 Iohn vers. 8. The labourers in the vineyard came at sundry times, some in the morning, others at the third, others at the six, and ninth, others at the twelfth houre of the day, yet none received the labourers wages, but those that continued in the worke to the end, Matth. 20. God is Alpha and Omega, and therefore requireth a good end, as well as a good beginning: and it is our duty not onely to obey the commandement of Christ, venite ad me, come unto me, Matth. 11. 28. but that also, manete in me, abide in me, Iohn 15. 4 for hee onely that continueth to the end, shall be saved, Matth. 24. 13.

Further, whereas the Apostle saith, we shall reape, if we faint not. It may bee demanded, whether the Saints doe so faint at any time, that they finally fall away? To which demand I answer in a word, that they doe not, nay, they cannot totally and finally fall from grace. For first, if any thing should make them fall away, it is sinne; but they cannot sinne, because the seed of regeneration and grace remaineth in them, 1 Iohn 3. 9. And though the Church sleepe, yet her heart waketh, Cantic. 5. verse 2. And if any thing make them faint, it is affliction and persecution, but these and all other crosses worke together for the best unto them that love God, Romanes 8. 28. And therefore these are no hinderances, but furtherances rather to their salvation. Secondly, they are built and founded upon the promise of God, I will put my feare in their hearts, so that they shall not depart from me, Ier. 32. verse 40. Therefore Christ doth so preserve them by his power, prevent them by his grace, guard and guide them by his spirit, that they shall never fall away, and that none shall plucke them out of his hand, Ioh. 10. I adde further, that they are built upon the truth and fidelity of his promise, God is faithfull, & will not suffer you to be tempted above that you be able, but will give the issue with the temptation, that ye may be able to beare it, 1 Cor. 10. 13. Thirdly, upon the prayer of Christ, who prayed that they might be kept from evill, Iohn 17. 15. that they might be one in the Trinity, as he in the Father, & the Father in him, v. 21. that they may be with him, and see his glory, verse. 24. Now Christ was always heard in that which hee prayed for, Iohn 11. 42.

Lastly, upon the life of Christ, which is communicated to all his living members, Gal. 2. v. 20. When Christ which is their life shall appeare, then shall they also appeare with him in glory, Col. 3. 4. Quest. If they cannot altogether faint and fall away, why doth the holy Ghost make a doubt of it, as though they might? Ans. It is the will of God to move us to perseverance, and to stirre up our dulnesse by such speeches: that we should not be wanting to our selves in the use of the meanes.

12. While we have therefore time let us doe good unto all men, but especially to them which are of the houshold of faith.

In these words the Apostle doth iterate the conclusion propounded in the six verse, as also in the ninth verse immediately going before; that we should doe the good we can, while we have time; and withall he doth illustrate it, both by the object to whom wee must doe good, and by the circumstance of time, how long we must continue therein. And herein he answereth a secret demand, which might be made upon the former rule; for whereas it might be thought, that the Gentiles which professe not the same religion with us, were to be neglected, or at least, not so respected, (as we read, Act. 6. verse. 1. the Grecians were neglected of the Ebrewes in their dayly ministery): the Apostle answereth, that wee must not restraine our bounty and goodnesse onely to those that are of the same religion with us, but enlarge it unto all, We must doe good unto all men, but specially to them of the houshold of faith.

In the words we may consider three things, First, the duty it selfe, Let us do good Secondly, the object or persons to whom wee must doe good, which is laid downe comparatively, we must doe good to all, but specially to those that are of the houshold of faith. Thirdly, the circumstance of time, when, and how long we are to doe good, whilst we have time; of these in order, and first of the duty.

This generall duty of doing good is recommended unto us by sundry arguments. The first may bee taken from the maine end and scope of a mans life in this world, which as Paul signifieth in this place, is nothing else but to doe good: and this doing of good standeth in three things: the first concerneth God, in praising, magnifying, and adoring his holy holy name. David had an eye to this end, when he desired to live for no other end, but that he might praise God, O let my soule live, and it shall praise thee. The second concerneth our selves, in seeking the kingdome of God, and the righteousnesse thereof, by making our calling and election sure by good works, 2 Pet. 1. 10. This end of a mans life Salomon inimateth, when hee saith, Let us heare the end of all: feare God and keepe his commandements, for this is the whole duty of man, Eccles. 12. verse 13. The third concerneth our brethren, in doing good unto them so far forth as possibly we can in the compasse of our calling: for it is the end of every mans calling in serving of men to serve Gody and this is that which Paul urgeth in this place, to be beneficiall unto all.

The second may bee taken from the example of God himselfe. We must doe good to them that hate us, that wee may be the children of our heavenly Father, Matthew 5. vers. 44. 45. For wee are more conformable unto GOD in doing good unto others (in being in an essentiall property in God to doe good to every man, seeing that every creature doth drinke, or at least taste of the sweet cup of Gods goodnesse, Psal. 145. vers. 9.) than in receiving good from them: for hee receiveth nothing from us, as David saith, My goodnesse reacheth not to thee, Psal. 16. verse 2. To the example of God we may adde the example of godly Kings. The chiefest praise and commendation of Hezekiah and Iosiah, is noted by their goodnesse. Concerning the rest of the acts of Hezekiah and his GOODNESSE, they are written — 2 Chron. 32. 32. Concerning the rest of the acts of Iosiah, and his Goodnesse, doing as it was written in the Law of the Lord, behold they are written — 2 Chron. 35. verse 26. 27. And this excellent name of Goodnesse or Bountifulnesse, was (as it may seeme) by the Law of nations ascribed to Princes and Potentates, in that it best beseemed them, as in name, so in the vertue it selfe, to expresse the divine nature of God, and therefore they were called εὐεργέται, that is, bountifull Benefactors, or gracious Lords, Luke 22. 25.

The third is drawne from testimony, divine, & humane. Our Saviour Christ saith, It is a blessed thing to give, rather than to receive, Act. 20. 35. that is, to doe good, rather than to receive good. (a) Nazian. saith, that a man resembleth God in no property so much as in doing good. And the heathen Orator Demosthenes could say, that (b) doing of good, and speaking the truth makes us most like to God himselfe.

But to consider this more particularly, Goodnesse is threefold, Preserving, Uniting, Communicating: in all which particulars we are to practice this duty. And first, for the preserving goodnesse we must doe good not only to our selves, but to others also, in labouring to keepe and preserve them from the contagion of sinne, from falling from grace, or backsliding from their holy profession, by all good meanes; as by good example, and by gracious speeches seasoned with salt, &c. as Barnabas did, who coming to Antioch, and seeing the grace of God that was given them, was glad, and confirmed them therein, exhorting them that with purpose of heart they should cleave unto the Lord, Act. 11. 23. and for this cause (as Luke it) it is added, v. 24. that he was a good man, and full of the holy Ghost, and faith.

The uniting goodnesse, is likewise to be practised, in seeking meanes at unity, in reconciling those that are at variance, in making peace and amitie, where there is nothing but enmity and alienation: for, for this cause Christ calleth peace-makers, the children of God, Matth. 5. 10. Because herein they as lively resemble the goodnesse of God their heavenly Father, as any sonne doth resemble any quality or property in his naturall father: for he maketh men to bee of one minde in one house, Psal. 67.

The communicating goodnesse (being specially understood in this place) hath foure degrees. First, for temporall things wee must communicate to the necessities of the Saints, Rom. 12. verse 13. And for spirituall blessings wee must remember the saying of Peter, Let every man as hath received a gift, so minister the same unto others, as good disposers of the manifold grace of God, 1 Pet. 4. 10.

Secondly, wee must bee plentifull in the workes of mercy, not contenting our selves with this, that we are beneficial to some in relieving them in their wants and necessities: but we must be rich in good workes. 1 Tim. 6. 18. Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high minded, that they doe good, and be rich in good workes; ready to distribute and to communicate. We must be like Tabitha (or Dorcas) who (as she had the poore with the garments which shee made at her owne proper cost and charges, Act. 9. 39 and for this cause the holy Ghost giveth this testimony of her, That she was rich or full of good workes and almes which she did, v. 36. like to the vertuous woman, Prov. 31. 20. who openeth the palme of her hands to the poore, and stretcheth out her hands to the needy: like Iob, of whom it is said, that the loynes of the poore blessed him, Iob 31. 20.

Thirdly, we must bee munificent (as the Scripture speaketh of God) that is, abundant in goodnesse, in communicating unto others abundantly these blessings which the Lord hath stored us with all. Not onely in loving our brethren, for which the Thessalonians are commended, that their love in one towards another did abound, but in a liberall supplying of their wants, as Paul exhorts the Corinthians, that as they did abound in faith and love, so they would abound in rich liberality, 2 Cor. 8. 7. as good Obadiah did in feeding his living, and venturing his life, in hiding an hundred of the Lords Prophets from the furious rage of wicked Iesabel, 1. King. 18. 13.

(a) Orat. 27. de pauperum amore. ἐδὲν ἔστιν ὃ τι τοιοῦτον ἀνθρώπῳ ἐγγὺς θεοῦ.

(b) τὸ εὐεργετεῖν καὶ ἀληθεύειν, δύο προβάτια ταῦτα τοῦ Διός· communissimum : competentissimum : communicativum.

Lastly, we must be exceeding, or superabundant in goodnesse in exceeding measure (if it may be) in doing goods like the poore widow who had rather want her selfe, than bee altogether wanting in contribution to the treasure of the Lords Temple, and therefore though it was but two mites which shee cast into the Corban, yet Christ preferred it before all the rich mens offerings being put together, in that they gave of their superfluity, but she of her penury cast in all that shee had, even all her living. Luk. 21. 4. It is well said by S. Ambrose: We must relieve the wants of other according as we are able, and sometimes even above our ability: as Paul witnesseth of the Corinthians to their great commendation, that to their power, and beyond their power they were willing. 2. Cor. 8. 3.

Further, in doing good, we must observe these rules. I. We must doe good of that onely which is our owne: for we may not cut a large and liberall shive of another mans loafe, (to the common saying is) wee may not steale from one, to give to another: or deale unjustly with some, that we may be mercifull to others: or rob Peter, to cloath Paul. The Lord abhorreth even burnt offering, if it be of that which is gotten of rapine and * spoile. Esa. 61. 8. And hence it is that David would not offer burnt offering without cost, of that which was not his owne, 1 Chron. 21. 24.

II. We must doe good with chearfulnesse and alacrity, for God loveth a cheerefull giver, 2 Corinth. 9. Ambrose saith fitly and finely to this purpose, Well-doing ought to proceed from will willing: for such as thine affection is, such is thy action. Therefore if we give, we must doe it freely, otherwise it is no gift; for what more free than the gift? therefore we may not play the huckesters in doing good, for that doth most blemish the excellency of the gift: for as Lactantius saith, Dando beneficia, non feneranda.

III. We must so doe good, as that we doe not disable our selves for ever doing good; but may continue in well doing, and as the Psalmist speaketh, bring forth more fruit in our age. Salomon commands that the streames of our wels should flow to others, yet so, as that the fountaine be still our owne. Psa. 112. 5. A good man is mercifull, and lendeth, and will guide his affaires with judgement, that is, hee will so discreetly dispose & order all his actions, as that he will keepe himselfe within the compasse: so beginning to doe good, as that he may continue therein: as the wise man saith, In the house of the wise there is a precious treasure, and ointment, but a foolish man deuoureth it; Prov. 21. 20. All the disciples that were at Antioch sent succour to the brethren which were in Iudea, in the great famine that was in the time of Claudius Cæsar, yet every man according to his ability, Act. 11. 29. for according to Paul's rule, we must not so give, that others be eased, and we our selves pinched, 2 Cor. 8. 13.

IV. We must doe all the good we can possibly within the compasse of our callings, and hinder all the evill. It will be said, God (whose example we are to follow) doth not all the good he can, neither doth he hinder all the evill. Therefore we are not bound to doe all the good, or prevent all the evill we can: answer. In this particular we are not to imitate the example of God, and That for three causes. First, because we are subject to the law: Thou shalt not doe evill that good may come of it. Rom. 3. 8. Whereas God is not bound nor subject to any law, but is above it, and hath power to dispense with it. Secondly, because he is able to draw good out of evill, light out of darknesse, which we cannot doe. Thirdly, because God is the generall good, we particular. Now there is great difference betwixt these two, for it belongs to the nature of the particular good, to procure all the good that may be simply (to every one) and to hinder all evill; whereas to the nature of the generall or universall good, three things appertaine. First, that all things should have good in some measure of goodnesse. Secondly, that some things should be better than others. Thirdly, that there should be ordained in the common good: as in a well ordered house, all the parts thereof are good in their kinde. Secondly, some better than others, as Paul saith, In a great house there are vessels of gold and silver, of wood and stone, some for honour, and some for dishonour, 2 Tim. 2. verse 20. Thirdly, those that are destitute of goodnesse, as sinkes, draughts, and other like places (serving for base, though necessary uses) are ordained to the common good of the whole house, which it cannot want. And therefore if the master builder (to prevent these particular evils) should leave them out of his building, hee should prejudice the common good of the whole house, which cannot bee without them.

Thus much of the first part, namely, the duty: Now I proceed to prosecute the second, which shewes first to whom we must do good, and secondly the order to be observed therein. We must doe good unto all, but especially to those which are of the household of faith. Touching the first: It may seeme, that some among the Galatians were of the Phariſees mind, who thought they were bound to love their friends, but not their enemies: or of this perswasion, that they were not bound in conscience to doe good unto the heathen amongst whom they lived, as being professed enemies of Christ, & open persecutors of his Church. But Paul teacheth them and us another lesson; when he commands us to do good unto all, suitable to that of our Saviour Christ, love your enemies, bleſſe them that curse you, doe good to them that hate you, pray for them that hurt you and persecute you, Matth. 5. 44. Let us consider the good Samaritans practice: Albeit there was mortall hatred betwixt the Iewes and the Samaritans, Iohn 4. 6. yet hee seeing his deadly enemy wounded and halfe dead, had compassion upon him, powred wine and oyle into his sores, bound up his wounds, set him on his owne beast, brought him to an Inne, and made provision for him: the like ought we to doe, even to our enemies, as occasion shall serve, Luke 10. 30. For if we must doe good to our enemies beasts his Oxe or Asse going astray, in bringing him home againe, Exod. 23. 4. much more ought we to doe good to our enemy himselfe. For the more beneficial and communicative we shew our selves to bee, the greater goodnesse we shew to be in us: as the fountaine which powreth forth his streames unto all, and the candle which standeth upon a candlesticke, shineth unto all, and not to it selfe being covered with a bushell.

The reasons why wee ought to doe good unto all, (even to our enemies) are principally foure. The first may bee taken from the grounds of love and beneficence, which are in all men, even the wicked themselves; now the grounds of love are specially three: the first is the image of God, which being in all men, yea even in prophane persons in part, ought to be the loadstone of love to draw our affection unto it. The second is communion and fellowship in the same nature, and therefore we ought to be beneficiall unto men, because they are men: and though we will not doe good homini, yet we must do it humanitati, as the Philosopher said. The third is participation in the death of Christ, in that all men have part in Christ as well as we (for any thing we know.) Secondly, God (whose example we are to follow, as hath beene said) is good and bountifull unto all, causing his Sun to shine as well upon the bad as the good; and his raine to fall as well upon the ground of the unjust, as of the just, being kind unto the unkind, and to the wicked. Thirdly, we must doe to others as we would they should doe to us. Therefore if wee being in distresse would be glad to receive good at the hand of a wicked man, we ought in the like case to do good unto him. Fourthly, our profession and the reward which we looke for, require this at our hands, for if we do good unto them only that doe good unto us, or if we be friendly to those only that are friendly to us, what singular thing doe we? for even the Publicans doe the like: and so having our reward here in this life, wee can expect none other after this life, Matth. 5. 47.

The second point, (which containes the order to be observed in doing good,) is laid downe in these words: Let us do good to all, but specially to those that are of the household of faith. By them of the household of faith, wee are to understand those which by faith are of the same family with us, namely, of the same Catholike Church upon earth: the house of God being often put to signifie the Church of God, as 1 Timoth. 3. verse 15. The house of God is called the Church of God, the ground and pillar of truth. Heb. 3. verse 1. Moses was faithfull in all Gods house, that is, his Church: and thus this phrase is expounded, Eph. 2. 19. Ye are no more strangers, but citizens with the Saints, and of the household of God. So that by them of the household of faith, wee must understand onely the faithfull: Indeed among men, not onely children, but also men-servants, and maid-servants are counted to be of the family, but God accounts them onely to bee of his house, that are Saints by calling, and sonnes by faith: The rest are bastards and not sonnes, they are (it may be) in the house, but not of the house: for true saving faith doth characterize those that are of the family of faith; even as fanaticall dreames, fantasticall opinions, allegorizing of the literall sense of the Scripture, denying the resurrection of the flesh, doe characterize those that are of the Family of love.

Having the meaning, consider the dutie, which is, to do good principally to the faithfull, the Saints and servants of God, that is, we must doe good unto them before others, and more than to others, which are not of the same family, as David saith, My whole delight is in them to whom I owe, but to the Saints which are in earth, and them that excell in vertue, Psalme 16. 2, 3. For it is all one as if the Apostle should have said, As it is fit and convenient, that they that are of the same family should be helpfull and beneficiall one unto another, rather than to those that are of another family: so it is requisite that those which are members of the same body, stay, sonnes and daughters, brethren and sisters, having the same God for their Father, the same Church for their mother, Christ for their elder brother, begotten of the same immortall seede, nourished with the same milke of the word, and looking for the same blessed inheritance: should rather bee beneficiall one to another, than to those that are strangers and forraigners, no way linked unto them by the bond of faith.

Now the reasons why we ought especially to doe good to them of the household of faith, may bee these. First, because God loveth all his creatures, specially mankinde, most especially the faithfull, upon whom he doth bestow the riches of his love, yea, himselfe also; for though God be good unto all, Psalme 145. 9. yet is a speciall sort he is good to Israel, we know that are of a pure heart, Psal. 73. verse 1. He is a Saviour of all men, specially of those that believe, 1 Tim. 4. 10. Secondly, because what soever is done to one of Gods Saints, is done unto him, Matt. 25. 40. Thirdly, in respect of the excellency of their persons, in that they are

Offic. l. 1. c. 28. Necessitates alienas quantum possumus leuare debemus, & plus interdum quam possimus.

Holocaustum de rapina.

Offic. l. 1. c. 30. Beneficentia ex benevolentia manare debet, officitus tutus nomen imponit operi tuo. Instit. diuin. l. 2. c. 12.

Psal. 92. 14.

Prov. 5. 15.

Cap. 6. the Epistle to the Galathians. 403

Matth. 5. 45.

Matth. 7. 12.

sonnes of God, heires of his kingdome, members of Christ, Temples of the holy Ghost, &c.

Further, in that all the faithfull are called a houshold and a family, this teacheth us, that as we have one bed and one board, one bread to feed upon, and one cuppe whereof all drinke: so we should have one minde and one heart, wee should cleave together, and hold together: for if they of the family of love joyne together, why should not we which are of the family of faith hold together? If those of the kingdome of darknes combine themselves together, as it is Psal. 2. 2. The Kings of the earth band themselves, and the Princes are assembled together, against the Lord, and against his Christ. Act. 4. 27. Doubtlesse against thine holy Sonne Iesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and people of Israel gathered themselves together. Psal. 83. 5, 6, 7, 8. They have consulted together in heart, and have made a league against thee: The tabernacle of Edom, and the Ismaelites, Moab, and the Agarims, Gebal, and Ammon, and Amalec, the Philistims, with the inhabitants of Tyrus: Assur is also joined with them: they have bin an arme to the children of Lot: How much more therefore ought the children of light to company and consort together? But the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light. Nay the bruit beasts may condemne us in this point: for cattell herd together, sheepe flocke together, fishes shole together, and (as the proverbe is) birds of a feather will flye together. What a shame is it therefore for us that are of the same family of faith, to fall out, making a rent in the coat, and a division in the body of Christ, by separating our selves one from another, in affection of heart, and practice of life?

Againe, this may minister comfort to all the faithfull, being under the crosse, to consider that they are of Gods family; and therefore need not doubt of the providence of God, but that he will provide things necessary for them: For hee that provideth not for his owne, and specially for them of his family, hath denied the faith, and is worse then an infidell. 1 Tim. 5. 8.

Lastly, in that the faithfull are called a family, it shewes that they are but few, even a handfull in comparison of the world; for what is a family to a country or a kingdome? Indeed I grant, if those of the family of faith be considered by themselves, they are many, Matth. 8. 11. I say unto you, that many shall come from the East, and from the West, and shall sit downe with Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob in the kingdome of heaven. Nay, they are innumerable, Apoc 7. 9. After these things I beheld, and loe, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, cloathed with long white robes, and palmes in their hands. But being compared with infidels, which shall be condemned, they are but few. Matth. 7. 13, 14. Enter in at the strait gate: for it is the wide gate and broad way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which goe in thereat. Because the gate is strait, and the way narrow, that leadeth unto life, and few there be that finde it. Many are called, but few chosen. Here they are called, a family, and a little flocke, Luke 12. 32. verse 32. and a remnant, Rom. 9. 27. Let the Papists therefore bragge of their universality and multitude, as much as they list, in the meane time let not us feare to joyne our selves to the little flocke of Christ, and with them to goe on in the strait way to eternall life.

The order which we are to observe in doing good to others, is elsewhere more distinctly set downe in Scripture, and it stands in these degrees. First and principally, a man must doe good to those of his family, as to his wife, children, servants. 1 Tim. 5. 8. If there bee any that provideth not for his owne, and especially for them of his houshold, he hath denyed the faith, and is worse than an infidell. Secondly, after those of our family, we must doe good to our parents and progenitors. 1 Tim. 5. 4. If any widow have children or nephewes, let them (that is, those children or nephewes) learne first to shew godlinesse toward their owne house, and to recompence their parents. Marke, they must first doe good to their owne house, and then in the second place to their parents, that is, their fathers and mothers, if they be children; their grandfathers & grandmothers if they be nephewes. Thirdly, after the two former, wee must doe good to our kindred. 1 Tim. 5. 8. If any provide not for his owne — hee hath denyed the faith, &c. Where by owne, we are chiefly to understand, those poore widowes that are neere of blood, or kindred unto us; or generally all those that are of our kindred in the flesh, who are therefore called ours, because they doe more neerely concerne us, as being linked unto us by the bond of nature. They that are of our kindred are to be respected and relieved of us in the third place, if they be of the houshold of faith; otherwise, the Saints of God, which are neither kith nor kinne unto us, are to be preferred before them. Fourthly, of strangers and forrainers, we are to doe good to the faithfull before others. Fifthly, and lastly, we must bee beneficiall to all, whether friends or foes, of our kindred or strangers, of the house of God, or otherwise, as God in his providence shall offer them unto us: for so Paul saith, We must doe good unto all men. It will be said, we are to love all men alike (seeing we must love our neighbors as our selves) and therefore wee must doe good to all men alike, not respecting the faithfull more than others. I answer, our love of our brethren, is lesse or greater, either in respect of the object, in wishing a greater or a lesse good unto them: and thus we must love all men alike, in wishing to them eternall life: or in respect of the intention of our love, in having a greater μάλιστα, not well translated Namely.

1 Tim. 5. 8.

οικειους, not well translated Kindred.

greater desire of the good of some, than of other some: and thus we are not bound to love or to doe good to all alike. For as S. Bernard saith, Meturi major affectus, indigentiæ major effectus tribuendus.

This doctrine invested with the former examples, may shame the base, servile, and beggerly liberality of the common sort of men, which professe the Gospell, whose hands are tyed in their purses, and their hearts locked to their chests, who are so extreamly miserable, that they neither doe good to others, nor yet to themselves. Secondly, it condemneth them which are so unnaturall, that they forget all their duty to their kindred and acquaintance in the flesh. Thirdly, those who will doe good to none, but to those that have done good to them: this is right the Pharisies righteousnesse, to love our friends, and hate our enemies: the goodnesse of the Publican, to lend to those of whom they looke for the like. Lastly, those who are so full of the poyson of malice and revenge, that being once incensed, they can never bee appeased, till they cry quittance with those that offend them.

The third thing to bee considered in the words, is the circumstance of time; Wee must doe good to all, while we have time.

Here sundry points are to be observed.

I. If we must do good while we have time, we must, make a holy and profitable use of our time, (the rarest jewell, and greatest of all earthly treasures) because time will not alway last, and therefore we must take time while it is time, seeing time and tide will tarie for no man. Let us consider what a shame it is, that the children of this world should be wiser in their generation than we, who professe our selves to be children of light. The Mariner or sea-faring man, who observes winde and weather, taketh the opportunity of the time: the traveller or way-faring man takes day before him, and travelleth while it is light. The Smith striketh the iron while it is hot, for when it is cold, it is too late to strike. The Lawyer taketh his time, to wit, the Terme time, for the entertaining of his Clients, and following of his suits: for when the Terme is ended, his time is gone. Now it is alway Terme time with Christians, every present day, even this present time, is their Termetime: therefore if we will not shew our selves more careless and negligent, nay, more absurdly foolish, or desperately madde than all men, wee must take the opportunity that is offered to do good, and use the precious time which God in mercy affordeth us, to his glory, our comfort, and the good of others. Time and opportunity of doing good, is hieroglyphically resembled by the head of a man that hath lockes of haire before, which a man may take hold of, but hath none behinde: whereby is signified, that when opportunitie is past, there is no possibility left to doe good.

Fronte capillata, post est occipitio calvus.

Wee must not therefore let slippe any good occasion, but take hold of it as the first, when it is offered. Hence it is that the Apostle, Heb. 3. 13. biddeth us exhort one another daily, while it is called to day. And the Wiseman, Pro. 3. 28. Say not to thy neighbour goe, and come againe: and to morrow will I give thee, if thou now have it. For he may die, and so cannot come againe, or by thy delaying of him, may be discouraged from comming, or thou mayst bee hardned against him, or maist with the rich man in the Gospell, be suddenly taken away from thy riches, or thy riches taken from thee. Our Saviour biddeth us walke in the light, while we have light, John 12. 35.

II. If wee must doe good while we have time, wee must observe the Apostles golden rule, Eph. 5. 16. Redeeme the time: which is nothing else, but to employ it, and use the benefit of it, as that wee suffer it not to slippe away from us without fruit or profit, either for sloth and idlenesse, or by reason of vaine and transitory pleasures, or other occasions of this life: but to gaine that time we formerly lost by negligence, with double diligence, yea to redeeme it with the losse of our ease, our pleasures, our profits. And we shall the better practice this duty, if we consider that time is short, precious, irrevocable: it is short, and therefore to be guided by diligence: it is precious, and therefore to be redeemed by an high estimate and account of it, in not being too lavish of it: in bestowing it upon our friends, not upon our enemies: in placing it as a jewell in our golden age, and wearing it in our new garments, the robes of Christ his righteousnesse, and not (as a pearle in a swines snowt) in the rotten rags of sinne and wickednesse. Lastly, it is irrevocable, and therefore it is to bee redeemed by taking the opportunity thereof.

III. Paul commanding us to doe good while wee have time, would have us know times and seasons; to observe the shortnesse of time, to number our dayes, that we may apply our hearts to wisdome. The not knowing and observing of time, is a sin much inveighed against by our Saviour Christ: Matth. 16. 3 O hypocrites, you can discerne the face of the skie, and can you not discerne the signes of the times? Luke 12. 56. Why discerne yee not this time? The Lord doth preferre the very bruit beasts before his people, because they know their appointed times and seasons, whereas his people knew not the time of mercy and grace which was offered unto them. Even the storke in the ayre knoweth her appointed times, the turtle and the crane, and the swallow observeth the time of their comming, but my people knoweth not the judgement of the Lord, Ierem. 8. 7. And Christ threatneth Ierusalem, that one stone should not be left upon another, Because thou knewest not the time of thine visitation, Luke 19. 44. And verily of all follies and ignorance, this is the greatest, not to know the day of our visitation, a Πεπαιδευμένην.

b συνιεναι χρόνον.

tion, the accepeable time, the day of salvation, when God offereth mercy, by rising early, and calling us by the ministery of his word, and stretching our his hands all the day long, Rom. 10. v. 21. For if he stand at the doore of our hearts, and knocke by the sound of his word outwardly, by the motion of his Spirit inwardly, by his threatnings, by his promises, by his judgements, by his mercies, by his tolerance and long suffering, and yet for all that we will not open nor listen unto him, we shall stand with the five foolish virgins, and knocke at his mercy gate, and say, Lord, Lord, open unto us, when it will be too late, when heaven shal be shut against us, Mat. 25. 11, 12. For, for this cause among others, they are called foolish virgins, because they considered not the time of the bridegroomes comming.

Here it will be said, observing of time is forbidden, Gal. 4. 10. Ye observe daies and times and moneths and yeares, I am afraid of you, lest I have spent on you labour in vaine. Answ. There is a twofold observing of time, good and evill, lawfull and unlawfull. Unlawfull and superstitious, is either Jewish or Heathenish: the Jewish and superstitious observation of times, is, when Religion is placed in the keeping of them, in an opinion that they binde the conscience to the strict observing of them, as their Iubilies, Feasts of the Passeover, of Weekes, of Tabernacles, Calends, New Moones, &c. Heathenish, when times are observed in respect of good or bad successe: as when men make two[c] unlucky daies in every moneth, in regard of health: when they count leape-yeare ominous: as Valentinian did, who being newly created Emperour, would not come forth and shew himselfe the fifteene of February. Not[d] to marrie in the moneth of May. To observe Planetary houres, and Climactericall yeares, the Horoscope or time of a mans birth, and the position of the heavens at that time. Both these kindes are forbidden Paul was afraid of the Galatians, first, because they observed dayes, and moneths, and yeares, that is, Iewish ceremonies, and beggarly rudiments. Secondly, because they observed times, and seasons, that is, heathenish superstitions mentioned before. And assuredly, besides the unlawfulnesse of this practice, it is also vaine even in the judgement of the heathen themselves. Alexander the Great commanded the Macedonian souldiers (which had not beene accustomed to fight in Iune, because it had beene ominous unto them) that they should call it July, and so got the victory over Darius. Luculius being to fight with Tygranes upon an unlucky day, in which Cepeo was overcome of the Cimbrians: I will (said he) make it fortunate to the Romanes, and got the victory. And who knoweth not that the selfe same day hath bin fortunate or lucky to some (as they use to speake,) unfortunate and unlucky to others? The same day was Crassus slaine by the Parthians, and Pacher King of Parthia taken by Venidius. The same day was unto Pompey the day of his birth, and the day of his death. The same day was to Fredericke the second, his coronation day, and his funerall day.

The lawfull observing of time is two-fold. Humane, Divine. Humane is threefold, Naturall, Civill, Ecclesiasticall. Naturall, is the observing of the motion of the Sunne, the Moone, and the Starres, whose revolutions make times, and seasons, dayes, moneths, yeares: the observing of the foure quarters or seasons of the yeare, Spring, Summer, Autumne, Winter. The Eclipses of Sunne and Moone: the full Moon, the wane, the change. The time of cutting of timber, of planting, sowing, &c. in observing whereof, a great part of Astronomy, Philosophy, and Husbandry in imployed.

Civill is, when times are observed in regard of policy, or of the good of the common wealth, as Fayre times, Market times, Terme times, &c. the Spring, as fit time for Kings to goe forth to warre, 2 Sam. 4. 11. The keeping of Lent, fasting dayes, Ember weekes, are all in a civill respect, for the breed of cattell, the maintenance of navigation, and the plenty of all things.

Ecclesiasticall, when set times are observed in the Church for order sake, without superstition, or opinion of worship: as among the Iewes the feast of Purim, Esth. 9. 26. the feast of the Dedication, John 10. ver. 22. Amongst Christians, festivall dayes: as the feast of the Nativity, of Circumcision, of the Resurrection and Ascension of Christ: these and such like solemnities, appointed for our thanksgiving and humiliation, are not unlawfull, if they bee enjoyned by lawfull authority, and kept in good manner.

Divine is, when upon the consideration of the shortnesse and uncertainty of our lives, we prepare our selves against God shall call us, and so number our dayes that we apply our hearts to wisedome, Psal. 90. Or, observing the day of Gods mercifull visitation, we take the opportunity, and use the meanes that is offered for our conversion and salvation. Or, observing the time of Gods visitation in judgement and indignation, we hide our selves under the covert of his wings. Prov. 22. 3.

IV. Hence we learne, that there is no possibility of doing good, or being beneficiall unto others after this life; for Paul biddeth us doe good while we have time, thereby insinuating, that after death all possibility of doing good is cleane cut off. The time allotted to do good, being included within the limits of this life, The dead that die in the Lord rest from their labours, Rev. 14. 13. Therefore no good workes are performed after this life. Paul being aged and ready to dye, the terme of his life being almost expired, saith, I have finished my course, 2 Tim. 4. 7. which could not bee truly said, if hee were to performe any good workes

c Egyptian dayes.

d Mense malum Maio nubere vulgus ait.

Δαιμόν.

μὴ τὸν ἀποφθεγθεν.

ὅσ τὸν ἐσπ τὴν ὁ καιρὸς τὸς ἐγκαιρες ἀκὶ ἡ ἡμέρα. Oecumen.

workes after his death. 2 Cor. 5. 10. We must give account for all things we have done in the bodie, that is, in this life. Where it is to be observed, that the Apostle speaking of all the works wherof we are to give account, doth confine them within the compasse of this life; therefore no workes can be done after this life is ended. Let us heare the testimony of the ancient. Cyprian to Demetr. Quando istius excessum ist nullus locus pœnitentiæ est, nullus satisfactionis effectus. Ieromi. Dum in præsenti sæculo sumus, sive orationibus, sive consiliis invicem possumus coadjuvare, cum autem ante Christi tribunal venerimus, non Iob, non Daniel, nec Noa rogare posse pro quoquam, sed unumquemque portare onus suum. And againe, In hac vita, licet nobis quod volumus seminare: quum transierit, operandi tempus auferetur, &c. Hence I gather two things, First, that the doctrine of Purgatorie is a meere fable, because there is no time after this life is ended, left to doe good, either to our selves or others, and therefore not to worke righteousnesse, to repent, or to satisfie the justice of God, which the Popish sort say is done in Purgatory. But what should I stand to batter the paper walls of Purgatorie, with the Canon of the Scripture, which were long agoe burnt to ashes by the fire of the word?

Secondly, seeing all opportunity, nay all possibility of doing good is confined in the compasse of this life, every man must follow the counsell of the wise man Salomon: All that thy hand shall finde to doe, do it with all thy power; for there is neither worke, nor invention, nor knowledge, nor wisedome in the grave whither thou goest. Eccl. 9. 10. David saith, in the grave no man will or can praise God. And this is the cause wherfore Paul doth so instantly urge all men to take the present opportunity. Behold, now is the acceptal le time: behold, now is the day of salvation, 2 Cor. 6. 2.

V. Hence we are taught to account every day, even this present day, as the day of death, or the day of judgment: for we must do all the good we can while we have time: now our time is the instant, or present time, for we are uncertaine whether wee shall live to morrow or no, Iames 4. 14. Therefore looke what we would doe at the houre of death, if wee were now at the last gaspe panting for breath, or if we did see Christ comming in the clouds to judgement: the very same thing we ought to do every day, with like zeale and fervency of spirit, to praise and magnifie the mercy and goodnesse of God, with like feare & trembling, to work out our own salvation, and to seeke reconciliation: with like love and sincerity of affection, to bee beneficiall unto our brethren, &c.

VI. This doctrine meeteth with all miserable minded men, who having great meanes and opportunitye of doing good, yet let slippe, or rather cut off all occasions that might induce them thereto, who in a brutish minde like to the swine, never doe good, nor profit any till their dying day. I speake not against the laudable customie of bequeathing goods to godlynesse, by a mans last will and testament, but against those that do little or no good all their life long, till the houre of death: Let these men consider, that as late repentance of malefactors a little before their death, is commonly but a ceremoniall repentance: so the funerall beneficence of those who give little or nothing in all their life, is usually no free, but a formall, and extorted gift: for small, in doing as others doe: extorted, in that it is given to stoppe the mouth of an accusing conscience. The vitall beneficence is that which God accounteth of, and by so much to be preferred before the other, by how much it doth more evidently declare a more lively faith in the providence of God, and a more unfeined love of our brethren. Againe, they give testimony that they trust not in uncertaine riches, but in the living God. Lastly, they have the benefit of poore mens prayers, (to whom they are beneficiall,) which otherwise they should want.

VII. The circumstance of time hath here the force of an argument, for it inforceth the exhortation much, that we should doe all the good wee can, and take the benefit of the opportunity, because time will not alway last: the holy Ghost in sundry places of Scripture, from the consideration of the shortnesse of our time, enforceth the duties of faith, repentance, new obedience, as 1 Cor. 7. v. 29. 30, 31. And this I say brethren, because the time is short, hereafter that both they that have wives, be as though they had none: and they that weepe, as though they wept not: and they that rejoyce, as though they rejoyced not, Heb. 3. 7, 8. To day if ye will heare his voyce, harden not your hearts: and v. 13. Exhort one another daily, while it is called to day. The godly in all ages have practised this duty. Peter knowing that the time was at hand, that he was to lay downe his tabernacle, stirres up himselfe to greater diligence in his calling, and saith, I will not be negligent to put you in remembrance of these things, so long as I am in this tabernacle, seeing I know the time is at hand that I must lay it downe as our Lord Iesus Christ hath shewed mee, 2 Pet. 1. 12, 13, 14. The Church prayeth thus to God, Teach us to number our dayes; that is, so to consider the shortnesse, uncertainty, and vanity of our life, That we may apply our hearts to wisedome, Psa. 90. 12. but wicked mens practice is cleane contrary, for they take occasion upon the shortnesse of their time, to live as they list, to take their pleasures, and to follow the lust of their hearts: therefore they say, Let us eat and drinke, for to morrow we shall die, Esa. 22. 13 Our life is short and tedious, and our time is as a shadow that passeth away —— Come therefore & let us enjoy the pleasures that are present, Wisd. 2. 1, 5, 6. And hence it is that some spend their time in eating and drinking, & going gorgeously, ously, and faring deliciously every day; others in gaming, carding, dicing, rioting, revelling, and (as the terme is) in swaggering, wherein they follow their father the Devill, who is therefore more full of wrath, Knowing that hee hath but a short time, Apoc. 12. 12. To these we may adde all such idle persons, as follow no vocation or trade of life, but day after day, and yeare after yeare, are still devising new pastimes (as they call them) to trifle the time away. These men hasten the judgements of God, and pull it upon them before God inflict it. It is a great judgement of God for a man to be in that case, that in the morning hee shall say, would God it were evening, and in the evening, would God it were morning, Deut. 28. 67. In this case is every idle loyterer, who through idlenesse is weary of himselfe, and grieved, the time passeth away so slowly: and to these qui nihil agunt, wee may joyne them qui male agunt, and those also qui aliud agunt, all which are condemned in this Text: and against them Titus the Heathen Emperour shall rise in judgement, and shall condemne them; because hee remembring on a time as he sate at supper that hee had trifled away the day in doing nothing, said, Amici, hodie diem perdidi: Friends, I have lost this day.

Who be men of good Wils, but bad deeds.

11. Yee see how large a letter I have written unto you with mine owne hand.

Here beginneth the Conclusion, being the third generall part of this Epistle, consisting of two parts: an Insinuation, in the 11. v. and a Recapitulation, in the verses following. Hee insinuareth himselfe into the mindes of the Galatians by a two fold argument. First, from the largenesse of his Epistle: Ye see how large a letter I have written: secondly, from the instrumentall cause, in that he writ it with his owne hand, where he gives authority to it, and a kinde of eminency above his other letters. And in both he commendeth his diligence, love, and care which he had of them.

The word translated ye see, is ambiguous, and may bee taken either as a commandement, See how large a letter I have written: or as an assertion, Ye see——. The like ambiguity is in the word εἰδῆτε. Phil. 2. 15. & may be read either thus, amongst whom ye do shine: or, see that you shine as starres. It is not materiall in whether acceptation it be taken, seeing the sense is all one.

The first argument to move the Galatians to attention, and acceptation of Pauls paines and good affection, is taken from the largenesse of his Epistle. The word in the Originall translated large, is strangely wrested by sundry interpreters, without cause: Hilary referring it to the loftinesse of sentences: Hyperius to the profundity and depth of matter: Jerome to the greatnesse of the character: Chrysostome and Theophylact, to the badnesse of his hand, as not being able to write well: Haimo to the Hebrew character in which hee wrote: whereas the word doth not onely signifie quality, but as properly quantity, as Hebr. 7. 4. Consider how great this man was. And the word that answereth unto it, signifieth as well quantity, as quality, Col. 2. 1. I would ye knew what great fight I have——. Iames 3. 5. Behold, how great a thing a little fire kindleth? The plaine and simple meaning therefore of Paul, is this, that he never wrote so long an Epistle with his owne hand, unto any Church, as unto them. He writ indeed the Epistle to Philemon with his owne hand, but that was short in comparison of this. And hee wrote larger Epistles to other Churches, as to the Romanes, Corinthians, &c. but by his Scribes, not with his owne hand. Therefore seeing this is the longest and largest letter that ever Paul writ with his owne hand, it ought to be more regarded, and better accepted: So that as his paines were greater in writing, our diligence should bee greater in reading and observing the same.

This shewes Pauls great care of the Churches, not onely when hee was present, but when hee was absent. How painfull he was being among them, to winne them to the Gospell, how fearfull when he was absent from them, lest their mindes should be leavened by false teachers: how faithfull both present and absent.

And it may serve as a president to all Pastors having cure of soules, to use the like diligence and conscience, in their Ministerie; that being absent in body from their charge upon necessary occasions (as Paul was,) yet they would bee present in spirit with them: and present by their letters: that so they may testifie to all the world, that they have a greater care of the flocke than of the fleece.

It further teacheth us, that if the Minister being caried with discreet zeale for the good of the Church, goe further either in word, or writing, than hee intended, or is thought fit by some: (as it seemes Paul did in this place, for what needs this large letter (may some say) a shorter would have done as well) that wee are not to censure him, or limit and prescribe him. It had been a great fault in the Galathns, if they had found fault with Paul for this his large letter; and in the Disciples and Iews if they should have blamed his long Sermon, which continued at one time from morning to night, Act. 20. 7. And it is so in many hearers, who are too curious and strict in prescribing and limiting their teachers to the time, longer than which they cannot patiently indure. And in stinting them, in urging of this or that point, in saying, he missed his Rhetoricke, his Epimone was too long, hee was oversceene in dwelling so long upon the point: it had beene better, a word and away, &c.

His second argument is taken from the instrumentall cause, that he wrote it with his owne hand. [a] Haimo saith, it is the opinion of the the Dollours, that Paul wrote not this whole Epistle with his owne hand, but onely from hence to the end: which opinion is confuted by the very text; You see how large a letter I HAVE written with mine owne hand: speaking of the whole Epistle, in the time past: or if of any one part more than of another, of the former part, rather than of the latter. Secondly, his assertion is not true, for (if we except Ierome) none of the Ancients (as I take it) are of that opinion. Not (b) Ambrose, who saith, Where the whole writing is his owne hand, there can bee no falshood. Not (c) Chrysostome, who saith, To the rest of his Epistles he did subscribe, but this whole Epistle hee writ himselfe. Not Primasius, using the word perscripsit, that he writ it through with his owne hand. Not (d) Theodoret, affirming that it seemes Paul writ the whole Epistle. Not (e) Theophilact, who brings in Paul speaking to them in this manner; I am enforced to write this Epistle unto you with mine owne hand. Not Oecumenius, who calleth it ἰδιόχειρον ἐπιστολὴν, an Epistle written with his owne hand. Not (f) Anselme, who paraphrasing the text, saith, it is all one as if he had said; This Epistle I writ with mine owne hand. And a little before, Not with the Scribes hand, but with mine owne hand: (albeit Anselme cannot so prejudice his assertion, who lived long after him.) Not the Author of the Commentary upon the Epistles ascribed to Ierome, Tom. 8. for hee upon the 2 Thessalonians 3. verse 17. saith plainly, (g) With these words he subscribes all his Epistles, excepting that to the Galatians, which hee writ from the beginning to the end with his owne hand. And upon these words which we now intreate of, (h) See how I am not afraid, which of late time have written with mine owne hand. (Where by the way, we may observe, that Ierome is not the author of those Commentaries, being so contrary to himselfe.) This I confesse is a light matter, & not to be stood upon, were it not that some are too hasty to swallow whatsoever comes in their way, under the title of the Doctours. It must therefore be a caveat unto us, not to be too credulous in beleeving every one that shall avouch this or that to bee the opinon of the Fathers, no though it bee affirmed by a Father, especially by such a one as draweth neere the dregs, as Haimo doth.

[a] Haimo autographum meum, falsum dici non potuit. [b] In cæteris subscribebat quidem, hic verò tantùm scripsit. Verum (ut videtur) hanc scripsit Epistolam. [c] Ita dum minimè apprimè scribendi peritus: compulsus fuerim verum vel meâ manu hanc ad eos Epistolam scribere. [d] Epistolam ipsam scripsi ego propria manu: Non notarij manu sed meâ. [e] His verbis innuit Epistolas subscribentes: excepta Galatarũ quam ex integro manu propria scripsit.——[f] Intelligite quam non timeam, qui literas meas nuper scripsi.

It is certain then, that Paul writ this whole Epistle with his owne hand: the reasons are these: first, that it might appeare under his hand, that he was no changeling, but the same man that hee was before, in that hee did not preach circumcision, or the observation of Iewish ceremonies, as the false apostles slandered him, Gal 5. 11. Secondly, that this his letter was not counterfeited by another, and sent in his name, as the false apostles might have objected, and the Galatians suspected. Thirdly, that he might testifie his sincere love towards them, & how he did (as it were) travaile in paine of them, till Christ were formed in them, shunning no labour, that might further their salvation.

Wee may hence further observe a threefold difference of the bookes of Scripture in the new Testament. Some were neither written by an Apostle, nor subscribed: as the Gospell of Marke, and Luke. Some subscribed, but not written: as the Epistle to the Romanes, and others. Some both written, and subscribed: as this Epistle, and that to Philemon, verse 19. I have written it with mine owne hand: I will recompence it——. Now that Paul subscribed every Epistle with his owne hand, he himselfe witnesseth, 2 Thess. 3. 17. The salutation of me Paul with mine own hand, which is a signe in every Epistle (that it is mine, and not forged in my name by another:) so I write, the grace of our Lord Iesus Christ be with you all. In which place the warneth the Thessalonians against of false teachers, and forged letters: for 2 Thess. 2. 2. he had besought them they would not be troubled by spirit nor by word, nor by letter, as though it came from him——. And here he shewes how they may know whether the Epistle be his, or not: if it have this signe, it is mine, else it is counterfeit: for this note or marke is to be found in all and every one of my Epistles. Now these words [which is a signe in every Epistle] cannot be meant (as some are of opinion) of the former words onely, viz. the salutation of me Paul with mine owne hand; First, because he saith it is a signe in every Epistle, whereas it is onely to be found, 1 Cor. 16. 21. Galatians 6. 11. Colos. 4. 18. 2 Thessal. 3. 17. Philemon, vers. 19. and not in any other of his Epistles. Secondly, the words, so I write, should be false; if they be referred only to the former words, because that manner of salutation is not to bee found in every Epistle, (as I have already shewed.) And except they bee referred to the words following, The grace of our Lord Iesus Christ, &c. they have either none, or a very hard construction. Thirdly, if Pauls salutation (which he affirmeth to bee a certaine note of his Epistle) bee understood of these words, The grace of our Lord I. Christ, &c. it agrees unto all, (as Anselme confesseth) whereas being meant of the former words onely, it doth not agree to all, but to a few; & yet Paul makes it a generall, infallible note, and signe of every Epistle. Beside, Ambrose, & Primasius in their Commentaries upon the place, as also the Author of the Commentary, which goeth under Ieromes name; affirme, the signe whereby we may know Pauls Epistles from counterfeit and forged Epistles, to consist in these words: The grace of our Lord, &c. Christ. & Theodoret likewise say, that Paul calls the salutation, a benediction or blessing, which is in the end of the Epistle: and a little after, Hece we learne, that he was accustomed to write these words, The grace of our Lord, &c. in stead of a blessing, or farewell unto them. And Haimo (long after expounds these words, so I write, how? (saith he) even thus as it followes, The grace of our

Mm Lord,

Lord &c. I grant it is probable that Paul writ his owne name in the end of every Epistle, whether in the Greeke tongue, and in the Hebrew characters (as Haimo affirmeth) I leave it as uncertaine, and that by the salutation or signe of his Epistles his name written with his owne hand, is in part to be understood: yet it is not onely nor principally meant. The certaine signe therefore of his Epistles is, beside the subscription of his owne name, the farewel that he gives them in these words, The grace of our Lord Iesus Christ bee with you all, or the like to the same effect: I say to the same effect, because these very formall words are not to be found in every of Pauls Epistles. Therefore Cajetan is far wide, who taketh the intire and formall salutation, as it is litterally set downe, 2 Thessal. 3. 17. to bee a note that the Epistle is his; so that if it want any one word, either the Epistle is not Pauls, or there is some defect in the text: for hereupon hee concludes, that the Epistle to the Colossians onely, hath something wanting in the farewell or salutation, because it is said, Grace be with you: and not the grace of our Lord Iesus Christ be with you, as it is in all his other Epistles. But first, it is an untruth, for they are not only wanting in the Epistle to the Colossians, but also in the 2. to Timothy, and in that to Titus, where it is onely said, Grace be with thee, Grace be with you all. Secondly, it is a flat mistaking of the text, for Pauls meaning was not in every Epistle to tie himselfe precisely to so many words and syllables, but to commend them to the grace of Christ: sometime making expresse mention of Christ, sometime concealing his name, yet so, as that it is alway understood, though not expressed.

Col. 4. 18.

1 Tim. 6. 21. Tit. 3. 15.

12. As many as make a faire shew in the flesh, compell you to bee circumcised, one'y because they would not suffer persecution for the crosse of Christ.

From hence to the end is laid downe the second part of the conclusion, which I call a Recapitulation, wherin the Apostle doth very artificially (as Orators are accustomed) repeat those things which he would have specially to be remembred, the maine points handled in the Epistle. First, that neither circumcision is necessary to justification, nor the ceremoniall law to salvation. Secondly, that the false apostles urging the observation of the law, as a thing necessary to salvation, sought not herein Gods glory, or the edification of their hearers, but their owne ease and freedome from the crosse, and persecution. Thirdly, that Christ crucified is the onely thing that justifies a sinner without the works of the law. Fourthly, that true religion standeth not in outward things, but in the renovation of the inward man.

In this verse and the next following, Paul describes the false apostles by five properties: three whereof are laid downe in this verse. The first is, that they make a faire shew. The second, that they compell men to the observing of their devised religion. The third, the end and scope they aime at, that they may alway bee in the sun-shine, living at ease, and having the world at will; onely because they would not suffer persecution for the crosse of Christ.

First, the Apostle saith, that they make a faire shew in the flesh: which is taken diversly, for it signifies sundry things. First to make an outward glorious shew according to the flesh, as that they were true Israelites, of the seed of Abraham, &c. of which boasting Paul speaks, 2 Cor. 11 18. Seeing that many glory after the flesh, I will glory also. They are Israelites, so am I: they are the seed of Abraham, so am I. Secondly, to please the Israelites which are after the flesh, and to approve themselves unto them, which held the keeping of the ceremoniall law. Thirdly, to vaunt themselves to the Iewes, and them of the circumcision, of the Galatians, whom they had circumcised in the flesh, as being made proselytes, and wonne to their profession by their meanes. Lastly, to pretend great zeale and religion in outward observing of the law, standing in carnall rites, and bodily exercises, as circumcision, meates, purification, and the like: which carnall rites the Apostle opposeth to spirituall worship, Rom. 12. 1. and to the new creature, v. 16. of this chap. and bodily exercise (which profiteth little) to true piety, and the sincere practice thereof, which is profitable for all things, 1 Tim. 4 8. The words may be taken in all these acceptions, though principally in the last.

Here wee have a notable property of false teachers, which is, to set a faire face upon the matter, to carry all before them with a smooth countenance, and in outward appearance to excell. For as Satan, though a black devill, an angell of darkenesse, doth change himselfe into a white devill, as though hee were an Angell of light, so that a man can hardly distinguish his wicked suggestions, from the good motion of Gods Spirit, and therefore may say, as Iosua said to the Angell, Art thou on our side, or on our adversaries, Iosua 5. 13. So his instruments transforme themselves, as though they were the Apostles of Christ, and Ministers of righteousnesse, 2 Corint. 11. 13. 15.

In the old Testament, false prophets were accustomed outwardly to conforme themselves to the habite & attire of the holy men of God, in wearing of a rough garment, as Elias and the rest of the Prophets did, Zach. 13. 4. Vnder the new Testament, in the time of Christ, the Pharisees in hypocrisie, under a shew of long prayer, devoured widowes houses, Mat. 23, 24. In the Apostles time false teachers with their will-worship, as touch not, taste not, handle not, (which had a shew of wisedome in voluntary religiō, and humblenes of mind, and not sparing of the body) did undermine the religion of God, Col. 2. 21, 22, 23.

And

And after that, in the Primitive Church, the heretikes, called Catharists, under a shew of holinesse, fasting, prayer, &c, did sow most damnable heresies in the Church.

And as in former times, the Iewes under the glorious titles of the children of Abraham, the Schollers of Moses, the temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, made many Proselytes by deceiving the soules of the simple: So, at this day, under the glorious titles of the Church of Councils, Fathers, antiquity, consent, universality, the pretended Romane Catholikes, have enslaved many a simple soule: and no marvell, considering that these are the times of which Christ foretold, that false prophets should deceive (if it were possible) the very Elect, Matth. 24. 24. And of which S. Paul prophesied, that Antichrist should come through the efficacy of Sathan, with all power, and signes, and lying wonders, and in all deceivablenesse of unrighteousnesse, among them that perish, 2 Thessalonians 2. 9, 10. And all this is done by outward shewes and semblances, which our Saviour Christ tearmeth sheepe: cloathing. Mat. 7. 15. and it standeth in these foure particulars: First, in great swelling titles, as, the onely true Catholike Church, the Vicar of Christ, the Oecumenicall Bishop: most profound, illuminate, Angelicall, Seraphicall Doctours: Iesuites, the onely true followers of the doctrine and example of Iesus, &c. Secondly, in pretending zeale and devotion, wherby they would perswade, that their religion is the onely true religion: all others, which swarve from it, are nothing but false, and fabulous: and this they doe three wayes. First, διδασκαλία, by having God alwaies in their mouthes, crying in hypocrisie with the false prophets, Lord, Lord, Matthew 7. 22. Or as the Iesuiticall faction doe, Iesu! Maria. Secondly, πειθολογία, with inticing words, consisting in probable reasons, & perswasive arguments, Colossians 2. 4. Thirdly, χρηστολογία, with faire and flattering words, to deceive the hearts of the simple, Romanes 16. 18. By which three meanes, the Iesuites have prevailed much in Princes Courts, in these latter dayes, Apoc. 16. 14. Thirdly, in the glorious outside of holinesse of life and conversation, in not sparing the body, by whipping of themselves, as Baals priests lanced themselves till the blood gushed, 1 Kin. 18. 28. in strict fasts, canonicall houres, hard fare, bad lodging, course apparell, and such like. Lastly, in rare and excellent gifts of prophesie, tongues, eloquence, miracles, &c. And thus they make Pauls shew of godlinesse, 2 Tim. 3. 5. to be Peters cloake of wickednesse, 1 Pet. 2. 16. so that as the devill with fairs words put Eve into a fooles paradise till at length he had driven her out of the terrestriall Paradise, and made her also hazard the celestiall. So, his ministers, false teachers, by faire and flattering speeches, deceive the minder of the simple, & cause them to fall from their owne stability.

By this wee may see how hypocrites and false teachers stand especially upon outward things, as, externall rites and ceremonies, which are but devises and doctrines of men, Mat. 15. 9. The Pharisees made much adoe about washing the outside of the cup, and of the platter, when as the inside was full of rapine and all uncleanesse, Mat. 23. 25. very curious about washing of their hands before meat, Mar. 7. 3. and yet careless to wash their hearts from wickednesse, Ier. 4. 14 precise in small matters, as in tything of mint, anise, & cummine; but prophane in the practice of the waighter things of the law, as judgement, mercy, & fidelity, Mat. 23. 23 whited tombs, faire without, and filthy within, ver. 27. Thus the Popish worship consisteth especially in outward things, which may please the senses of carnall men, as in vocall, and instrumentall Musicke, to please the eare: censings and perfumes, to delight the smell: guilding and painting, with other sights and spectacles to affect the eye. And at this day, in the Masse (which they account the very marrow of their Mattins) there is nothing but dumbe shewes, hystrionicall gestures, and trickes fitter to mocke apes withall, than to edifie the people. For whereas in former time they were wont to say, Let us goe heare a Masse: now the common saying in Italy is this: Let us goe see a Masse: Let us there prepare the spirits before we trust them, and especially in matters of religion, follow Christs precept, not to judge by the outward appearance, Ioh. 7. 24. But to judge of Prophets, by the fruit of their doctrine, Matth. 7. 16. and of their doctrine by the touchstone of the word, Isa. 8. 20. so that though the devill transforme himselfe into an Angell of light, nay, though an Angell from heaven preach any other thing, beside that wee have received from Christ, wee must hold him accursed, and in so doing we shall follow Christs his practice, who was prudent in the feare of the Lord, and did not judge by the sight of his eies, nor reprove by the hearing of his eares, Isa. 11. 3.

The second note and marke of these false teachers, is, that they compell men to be circumcised. The word compell, hath great emphasis, for it signifieth, that they did not convince the judgement, or perswade the will and affection of the Galatians, but enforced them against their wils: for though circumcision be nothing of it selfe (as Paul saith) yet to bee compelled to receive circumcision, and to place Iustification in the use of it, and shunne in the neglect of it, is the ready way to overthrow Christ, the foundation of our salvation, Gal. 5. 4.

Here sundry questions are to bee answered. First, it may bee demanded, whether it bee lawfull to compell men to embrace religion, as the false apostles compelled the Galatians to circumcision? Answer, The Magistrate may, and ought to compell obstinate Recusants to professe true religion: for hee is custos vtriusque tabulæ, and therefore is to have care that true religion bee professed, and the contemners thereof punished. An example hereof wee have in good King Iosiah, who caused all that were found in Ierusalem and Benjamin, (that is, all his subjects) to stand to the covenant which he made with the Lord, nay, which is more, he compelled all that were found in Ierusalem to serve the Lord their God, 2 Chro. 34.32,33. among which multitude many there were (no doubt) which did like better of Idolatry, than of Gods worship, as the word compelled doth import. The King that made that great supper, commanded his servants to compell the guests to come in unto him, Luke 14.23. whence Augustine gathereth that it is the Magistrates duty to compell recusants, schismatikes, heretikes, and such like to the hearing and professing of the word. But here three things are commonly objected against this doctrine.

Objection I. To compell men to embrace true religion, is to make them goe against their conscience, which the Magistrate ought not to doe: as some Papists have affirmed, that they would not for ten thousand worlds compell a Iew to sweare that there were a blessed Trinity, because he should bee damned for swearing against his conscience, although the thing were never so true. Answer I. If it were so hainous a sinne to compell any to embrace true religion, because it is against their conscience, why doe Popish Prelates, and Magistrates, compell Protestants (and that by exquisite torments) to reconcile themselves to the Church of Rome, to sweare obedience to the Pope, to acknowledge Transubstantiation, and to heare Masse, which they know are directly against their conscience? II. If they will not compell men to do any thing, (though never so good or godly,) because it is against their consciences why should they not bee as scrupulous in restraining them from doing that which is unlawfull, because they are perswaded in conscience they ought to doe it? For if they compell men to omit that which they beleeve to be good, because they know it to bee evill, (as their owne practise proveth, in that they will not suffer Protestants to pray publikely in a knowne tongue, nor receive the Sacrament in both kindes, &c.) why doe they not compell them also, to doe that which they know to be good, though they thinke it to be evill? III. The Magistrate is to compell men to embrace true religion, or to punish them for their obstinacy in not hearkening to the word; because he is to use the meanes to reclaime them, and to win them to a love and liking of the truth. Now so long as they are urged to heare the word, there is hope they may be wonne againe, and experience shewes (as Augustine testifieth of the Donatists) that they which did professe religion at the first meerely by compulsion, may afterwards (by the mercy of God) professe it only for devotion. And what though some come not to learne, but to carpe and cavill? yet God may cast the net of his mercy so far over them, that contrary to their purpose, they may bee caught. IV. If the Magistrate, who may compell them, & so reclame them, do suffer them to continue in their errours or heresies, without controlement, he is guilty of their sinne: but by compelling them he hath discharged his dury: for albeit they being compelled, do dissemble and play the hypocrites, do lie, and forsweare themselves, that is not the Magistrates sinne, who intends nothing but their conversion and salvation, it is their own proper and personall sinne.

Objection II. Men ought to be perswaded to embrace religion, and induced to beleeve, but not compelled: for the will cannot bee compelled. Answer. True it is, the will cannot be compelled; and as true it is likewise, that the Magistrate doth not compell any to beleeve: for when a man doth beleeve, & from his heart embrace true religiō, he doth it willingly: notwithstanding meanes are to bee used to make thē willing, that are unwilling, and the meanes is to compell them to come to our assemblies, to heare the word, and to learne the grounds of true religion: for it is Gods commandement, men should prove the spirits, 1 Iohn 4.1. that so they may know the truth, and cleave unto it. Augustine saith fitly, and finely to this purpose, Quod autem vbi videtur inuitos ad veritatem non esse cogendos, erratis nescientes Scripturas, neque virtutem Dei qui eos volentes facit, dum cogi non inuitè. Secondly, when Papists receive the Sacrament, sweare allegiance to their Prince, professe themselves in our congregations, who knowes that they doe these things against their conscience? nay, rather wee ought in charity to think that they are perswaded in conscience they may doe them, when by oath and protestation they confesse so much. But bee it they did all in hypocrisie, shall the execution of godly lawes therefore cease, because hypocrites will not obey, but in dissimulation?

Persuaderi vult fides, non cogi.

Contra Gaudent. Epist. lib. 1. c. 17.

Objection III. The Magistrate by compelling Recusants to the outward profession of religion, maketh them to play the hypocrites, to counterfeit and dissemble. Answ. The Magistrate in executing the lawes, hath no such intent, but onely that they might heare the word, beleeve it, and be saved. Againe, Protestant Recusants in other countries, are not allowed by Papists to alledge their conscience for their refusall, but are compelled, either to conforme themselves, or to undergoe ciuell torments: no more may such pretence of conscience excuse the Papists, or other heretikes, but that they should receive the same measure which they mete to others.

II.

II. Quest. How can it be truly said, that the false apostles compelled men to receive circumcision, seeing Titus was not compelled to be circumcised? Gal. 2.3. Ans. That place maketh nothing against the text in hand: the meaning is, that Paul for his part was ready to have circumcised Titus (as hee did Timothy, Act. 16.3.) rather than offend the weake brethren. But when it came to this point, that they would needes urge circumcision as a thing necessary to salvation, Paul refused to doe it, for all the false brethren that crept in, v. 4. that is, notwithstanding they laboured by al meanes to bring it in use againe. Neither did the Apostles urge it, or require it, as a thing necessary to salvation.

III. It may be demanded, whether that circumcision being so vehemently urged by the false apostles, might not have beene used? Answ. It might not. For albeit it be in it selfe a thing indifferent, and so it skilleth not, whether a man bee circumcised or not, (as Paul saith,) Circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing: yet being urged as a matter of absolute necessity, as without which men could not be saved, Act. 15.1. it ought not to bee used. The like may be said of all indifferent things, if they bee made essentiall parts of Gods worship, or necessary to salvation; as the use of meates and drinkes, observing of times & seasons, wearing this or that habite, or attire, forbidding of mariage to some orders of men. For when things indifferent are made necessary, the nature of them is changed. Vpon this ground Ezekiah brake in peeces the brazen serpent, when the Israelites began to worship it, 2 King. 18.4.

First, let us obserue out of these words, They compell you to bee circumcised, that Paul doth not onely use Christian pollicie, but dealeth very rhetorically, excusing the Galatians, as though they were constrained against their wils, to doe as they did: and laying all the blame upon the false apostles: and so doth closely alienate their affection from these seducers, who would have them circumcised, either by voluntary submission, or by violent compulsion: the like godly policy we ought to use in dealing against heretikes, and false teachers, that the peoples mindes may bee enstranged from them, and take no love of their doctrine, nor liking of their persons.

Here wee have a second note of false teachers, which is, not onely to retaine ceremonies themselves, but to urge them upon others, and constraine men to the observing of them: for they were more earnest and forward in urging circumcision (their owne device) than the keeping of the morall law: and so are all seducers. The Pharisees did urge their owne ceremonies, as washing before meate, washing of pots, cups, and platters, &c. more than the commandement of GOD. And the Papists urge the Lent fast more strictly, than fasting from sinne, which is the onely true fast, Esay. 58. verse 6. And their owne stories doe shew, that men have beene more severely pupished for eating flesh on good-friday, than for committing of simple fornication, or following of strange flesh. They stand more in urging the outward worshipping of an Image, or a peece of bread, than the inward spirituall worship. And as they have made the Saints dayes equall with the Sabbath-dayes, so have they made the prophanation of them an equall sin, and have punished it with equall punishment.

It is further to bee observed, how they abuse circumcision, for whereas by Gods ordinance it was but a seale of the righteousnesse of faith, Rom. 4.11. they perverting the end of it, make it a meritorious cause of salvation; and therefore compell men to bee circumcised: it is Gods worke, they make it their owne worke, yea, such a worke, as by which they hope to be saved. And this their dealing may fitly bee paralleled by the Popish practise at this day, in making baptisme, which is but a signe and seale of grace, to bee the proper, immediate, and physicall cause of conferring grace, by the worke wrought: Almes, prayer, and fasting, (which are but signes & testimonies of justification) to bee causes thereof. Nay, their owne devices, of confession, satisfaction, supererogation, to bee meritorious causes of justification, and salvation.

Apella Iudæus.

Lastly, see here how the perversnesse of the corrupt heart of man, doth thwart the ordinance of God. As long as circumcision was commanded by God, most abhorred it; for the heathen tasthie so much, that the Iewes were odious for it. But now being abolished, they take it up againe, receive it, and urge it as a thing necessary to bee observed upon paine of damnation. Whereas if GOD should enjoyne it againe, they would (no doubt) account it as a heavy yoake, which neither they nor their fathers were able to beare. This improving of that which God commandeth, and approving that which he forbiddeth, argues the great corruption of the heart, and that the wisedome of the flesh is not onely an enemy, but even at enmity against God, Romanes 8. 7. It must therefore teach us to captivate our reason, and to subject our wils to the will of God in all things.

The third property of these false apostles is, the teaching of circumcision, that is, of false doctrine, because they would not suffer persecution for the crosse of Christ; that is, for preaching the true doctrine of the Gospell, concerning Christ crucified. It may bee demanded whether it was necessary that those who taught not circumcision, but spake against it, should be persecuted? To which I answer, that it was necessary, according as Paul affirmed, Gal. 5.11. If I teach circumcision, why doe I yet suffer persecution? The reason was this:

Hieron. in Comment. in hunc locum.

The Romane Emperour had given liberty to the Iewes to live according to their owne lawes, and that without moleſtation or diſturbance, in all places of the Romane Empire; ſo that if a Iew became a Chriſtian, hee had the priviledge of a Iew, ſo long as hee kept the ceremoniall law, and taught no departing from Moſes: whereas they which taught, that ceremonies were abrogated and that men were juſtified onely by faith in Chriſt, wanted this priviledge, and ſo were perſecuted of no men more than of the Iews, either by themſelves, or by incenſing others againſt them, 1 Theſſalonians 2.15,16. The falſe apoſtles therefore to avoide perſecution, coyned a new Goſpell; in matter of ſalvation, joyning Chriſt and Moſes, juſtification by faith, and by workes. So that here wee have another character and marke of falſe teachers, which is, to labour by all means to enjoy the world, and to eſchew the croſſe; and rather than they will ſuffer perſecution, to make a horchpoch of religion, as we may ſee, not onely by this particular, but by the courſe of the hiſtory of the Church, and in latter times by the Interim under Charles the fift, and the ſixe articles under Henry the eight by our Mediatours and reconciliatours, who either (as it is ſaid of old Conciliator) labour to accord fire and water: or elſe like huckſters, mixe wine and water for their own advantage: and by all neuters and mungrils in religion, who hover in the winde, becauſe they would ſtand ſure for all aſſaies, or winne the favour of great men, that they might not ſtand in the way of their preferment. This is the ſinne of the multitude among us, who deſire to have Chriſt, but they will none of his croſſe: they would bee with him upon mount Tabor, but not upon mount Calvary, crowned with glory, but not crowned with thornes.

Further, wee may hence gather an eſſentiall difference of true and falſe teachers: the one ſeeke the good of the Church, the other ſeeke themſelves: the one the glory of God, the other their owne glory. It is obſerved by Popiſh Prieſts, and other, that though the Ieſuites pretend they doe all things in ordine ad Deum, yet they intend themſelves, doing all things in ordine ad ſeipſos, it being the marke they ſhoote at in all their Machiavellian plots and policies, that they may have cum dignitate otium, a Lordly command, and a laſie life.

Againe, here wee ſee that the love of the truth, and of the world, the feare of the face of men, and the feare of God can never ſtand together: As alſo how dangerous a thing it is to bee addicted to the love of the world: for it hath beene always the cauſe of revolt, in that men never embraced religion, ſo as that they could be contented to ſuffer perſecution for the profeſſion of it, nor lay downe their lives in the maintenance thereof, Mat. 13.21. As ſoone as tribulation or perſecution commeth, by and by they are offended: whereas wee ought to have the ſame minde that Paul had, who knowing that bonds and impriſonment aboad him, yet paſſed not for them, neither was his life deare unto him, Acts 20.23. and was not onely ready to bee bound, but to die alſo for the name of the Lord Ieſus, Acts 21.13. The reaſons which ſhould make us willing to take up our croſſe & follow Chriſt, are theſe: Firſt, it is a great mercy and favour of God, that we are accounted worthy to ſuffer any thing for his ſake. Act. 5.41. The Apoſtles departed from the Councell, rejoycing that they were accounted worthy to ſuffer rebuke for his name. Secondly, it is a meanes (by the mercifull promiſe of God,) to procure and obtaine the bleſſings of this life, Marke 10.30. Thirdly, it hath bleſſednes annexed to it, with a promiſe of aſſiſtance and helpe of the Spirit of God. 1 Peter 4.11. If ye be railed on for the name of Chriſt, bleſſed are yee, for the Spirit of glory, and of God reſteth upon you, which on their part is evill ſpoken of, but on your part is glorified. Laſtly, the end of the croſſe, is glory unſpeakeable, If we ſuffer with him, wee ſhall alſo be glorified with him, Rom. 8.17.

Further, whereas Saint Paul linketh together perſecution, and the preaching of the croſſe, wee may ſee, that the profeſſion of the Goſpell and perſecution doe either goe hand in hand, or doe follow one another inſeparably; for, as many as will live godly in Chriſt Ieſus muſt ſuffer perſecution, 2 Timothy 3.12. Moſes is ſaid to have choſen rather to ſuffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleaſures of ſinne for a ſeaſon, Hebrew. 11.25. Where we ſee that affliction is the lot and portion of the godly. The reaſon hereof is twofold. The malice of the devill, who is alway nibling at the heele, Gen. 3.15. And the hatred of the malignant Church (the devils ſeede) ever maligning the Church and people of God. The devill maketh warre with the remnant of the womans ſeede, which keepe the commandements of God, and have the teſtimony of Ieſus, Apoc. 12.17. The malignant Church perſecuteth the Church of God, as we may ſee in their types, namely, in Cain hating and perſecuting Abel: Iſhmael Iſaac, Eſau Iacob: Which they did onely becauſe they ſaw their owne workes to be evill, and theirs to be good, 1 Iohn 3.12. And if it be demanded, why thoſe that preach the word plainly and powerfully to the conſcience of men in evidence of the ſpirit, are ſo extreamly hated and maligned? Anſ. It is for no other thing, but even for the workes ſake, for which they ought to be reverenced, 1 Theſſall. 5.13. and becauſe they prophecy not good unto them, but evill, 1 King. 22.8. that is, preach not pleaſing things, by ſowing pillowes under their elbowes, and lulling them aſleepe in the bed of ſecurity, but denounce the judgements of God againſt them, and ſo diſquiet and trouble trouble their guilty conſciences. And what (I beſeech you) is the reaſon why thoſe that make conſcience of ſinne, are ſo maligned of the wicked world, & branded with the blacke names of Puritanes and Precifians? but this which our Saviour Chriſt giveth, Iohn 15.9. Becauſe they are not of the world, therefore the world hateth them? Now all this commeth to paſſe, by reaſon of that enmity which God hath put betwixt the woman and the ſerpent; his ſeed, and her ſeed, Gen. 3.15.

This teacheth us, firſt, that wee ſhould ſuſpect our ſelves, that our hearts are not ſound, nor our practice ſincere, when all men ſpeake well of us: for true profeſſion is alwayes accompanied with perſecution, Woe be to you when all men ſpeake well of you, Luke 6.26.

Secondly, that we muſt not be diſcouraged in our profeſſion, though there bee never ſo many that make oppoition, or ſo mighty that raiſe perſecution againſt us. Though they tell us as they did Paul, Act. 28.22. Concerning this ſect, wee know that every where it is ſpoken againſt: or take us up with Nicodemus, Iohn 7.52. Art thou alſo of Galile? ſearch and looke, for out of Galile ariſeth no Prophet. In theſe blaſts and ſtormes of temptations, wee ought to make that ſaying of Chriſt our anchor hold, Bleſſed is hee that is not offended in mee, Matth. 11.6.

Laſtly, that we thinke it not ſtrange when we finde affliction, or meet with perſecution, 1 Pet 4.12,13.

13. For they which are circumciſed, keepe not the Law, but deſire to have you circumciſed, that they might glory in your fleſh.

Here the Apoſtle preventeth an objection, which might be made againſt his former concluſion, v. 12. For it might be ſaid, Paul did them wrong in ſlandering them, to urge circumciſion only becauſe they would avoid perſecution, when as they did it, as zealous obſervers of the Law. To this he anſwereth negatively, that whatſoever they did pretend, they intended no ſuch thing. And hee prooveth his former aſſertion, by two arguments, and withall deſcribeth the falſe Apoſtles by two other properties. His firſt reaſon may bee framed thus: If they did urge circumciſion as being zealous of the Law, and having conſcience of the obſerving thereof, they would keepe it themſelves, as well as compell others to the keeping of it: But they keepe it not themſelves: Therefore they urge it not in conſcience to have it obeyed, but for ſome ſiniſter end. The ſecond reaſon is this: They that propound no other end to themſelves in urging circumciſion, but vaunting and boaſting in the fleſh: they ſeeke not the obſervation of the Law: But theſe ſeducers urge circumciſion and other ceremonies, that they might glory in the fleſh. Therefore they ſeeke not the obſervation of the Law. So that here wee have two other properties of falſe teachers. The firſt is, to compell men to the obſerving of that, which they will not obſerve themſelves. For thus theſe ſeducers urged the ceremoniall Law. Reſembling herein the Scribes and Phariſies, who bound heavy burdens and grievous to be borne, & laid them on mens ſhoulders, whereas they themſelves would not move them with one of their fingers, Matth. 23.4. The Popes, and Prelates of the Romiſh Church, are notorious in this kind, in urging men to make conſcience of that, which they themſelves will not keep, to practiſe that, which they will not performe, and to beleeve that, which they count falſe and fabulous. For firſt, they ſtrictly require regular obedience to bee performed of their novices, and others, to their Generals or governours, ſpecially to the Vicar of Chriſt, and See of Rome; whereas they will not bee ſubject to the higher powers as they ought, Rom 13.ver. 1. nor obedient to governours, as it is required, 1 Pet. 2.13,14. Nay, their practice is notorious in theſe foure particulars. Firſt, in ſreeing children from obedience to their parents. Secondly, in exempting their ſhavelings from ſubjection to the civill Magiſtrate. Thirdly, in freeing ſubjects from their oath of allegeance to their Soveraignes. And laſtly, by advancing that man of ſinne above all that is called God, or worſhipped, and giving him power to depoſe Princes, to diſpoſe of Crownes and Kingdomes, and to impoſe lawes which ſhall properly binde the conſcience; yea, to tread Kings and Emperours under his feet, and caule them like vaſſals to hold his ſtirrop. Againe, they compell others to faſt, ſpecially in Lent, when as they in the meane time feaſt; their faſt being to eate faſt, and drinke faſt, in mortifying the fleſh with their Indian Capons and Peacocks, and that upon good Friday; whereas to eate white-meates upon that day, ſhould bee in others a mortall ſinne. Further, they beare the poore people in hand, that Indulgences are meanes to remit ſins; and that thoſe that are excõmunicated by the Pope are in a damnable eſtate: whereas many of them account Popes bulls to be but bulle, meere trifles, and ſuch as buy them, ſtarke fooles; witneſſe the ſpeech of the Duke of Valence, baſtard to Pope Alexander the ſixt, who having loſt certaine thouſand crownes at a throw at the dice, Tuſh (ſaid he) theſe are but the ſinnes of the Germanes. And that of Charles the fift (though a favourer and maintainer of the Romane Religion) who, being menaced by Pope Paulus the third, with excommunication, if he would not yeeld up Playſance into his hands, let him underſtand, by his Embaſſador, that he would thunder at S. Angelo with his cannons and artillery, if he would needes be thundering our hit excommunications. Laſtly, they vrge confeſſion of Purgatory, almoſt as an article of faith, whereas ſome of them are ſo farre from beleeving it, as that they thinke there is neither heaven, nor hell, witnesse the speech of Pope Leo the tenth, to Cardinall Bembus: O Bembus, what riches have we gotten by this fine fable of Iesus Christ? By this wee are contrarily admonished, to practise that we professe: the Ministers of the word, especially, ought verba vertere in opera, (as Ierome speaketh) that is, to turne words into workes, that their lives may be reall Sermons to the people: for otherwise they pull downe with one hand, as fast as they build with another. Let us consider, how Peters bad example, is said to have compelled the Gentiles to live as the Iewes, Gal. 2.14. For actions abide, & are of force, whē words passe as the winde.

O Bembe, quantum nobis præsuit fabula ista de Christo?

Moreover, upon this dependeth another property of seducers, which is, to set a faire glosse upon the matter, & to make the world beleeve, they doe these and these things, for such and such ends, (as these false teachers did, pretending religion and conscience, but intending freedome from the crosse, & their owne vaine glory;) whereas they meane nothing lesse; like Herod, who made shew of worshipping Christ, when his purpose was to have destroyed him, Matth. 2. This property and practice is, and hath beene usuall, especially in the church of Rome. For generally, they would have the world beleeve, that the Popes triple crowne, and Hierarchy of that Sea, is for the maintenance and defence of the Gospel: wheras all the word knowes, it is onely to keepe their kitchins hot, to uphold their Persian pompe, and ambitious tyranny. Particularly, there bee two politike practises of theirs, which prove the point in hand. First, it is well knowne, that Popes have never ceased from time to time to sollicite the Princes of Europe, to maintaine the holy warre (as they call it) pretending the recovery of the holy land, out of the hand of the Turkes and Saracins: when as (at least in the beginning) they intended nothing lesse, but that by this meanes they might set the East and West together by the eares, whilst they played their parts at home in Italy. The second, is their Shrift, or auricular Confession, which they practise for this end, (as they say,) that they may pacifie distressed Consciences, by absolving them of their sinnes: when as the truth is, they first brought it into the Church, and doe still continue it, in a politike respect, as being the onely way in the world, to know all the secret purposes, ploes, policies, and practises that are either in Church, or Common-wealth.

Wee are therefore here admonished to take heed of dissemblings, in making Christianitie a cloake of impiety, or to pretend one thing, and intend another, like the heart pointing upward, and poising downward; for that will be a far fowler solœcisme than that which the heathen committed with his hād, in pointing to heaven, when he spake of the earth. But let us alway labour for sincerity, to be at least that which we pretend to be, or rather like Salomons temple, whose windowes were larger within than without, & not like the glow-worme, making a faire glittering shew of that which we have not.

A

B

C

D

14. But God forbid that I should glorie, save in the crosse of our Lord Iesus Christ, whereby the world is crucified to me, and I unto the world.

In these words Paul comes to the Reddition of the dissimilitude betwixt him and the false apostles, his glorying and theirs. In them wee may consider two generall points. First, wherein he would not glory, in nothing save in, &c. Secondly, the thing wherein he would glory, In the crosse of Christ, whereof he renders a reason in the words following, taken from the effects which the crosse wrought in him; For, by it the world was crucified to him, and he unto the world.

For the first: To glory: implyes three things; First, to rejoyce, exult, and triumph in a mans selfe, in regard of some good thing, or some supposed good. Secondly, to bewray this great exultation by speech, or action, or both. Thirdly, by boasting of it, to looke for praise and applause of men: which glorying (according to the nature of the object, & the end) is either good or evill. For if it have a right object, namely, the crosse of Christ: and a right end, the glory of God, it is good; otherwise it is evil: such as was this glorying of the false apostles, and all other carnal glorying, which is not in the Lord: for it is nothing else but vaine glory: Vaine I say, first in regard of the things wherein men glory, which are either such as are not, as when man boasteth of that which he hath not, but would seeme to have: or such as he hath not of himselfe, 1 Cor. 4.7. or such as have no continuance, but are transitory and fading, as all earthly things are, seeing man himselfe is but as grasse, and all the glory of man, but as the flowre of the field, Isay. 40.6. Secondly, it is vaine in regard of man, from whom we looke for glory, and admiration, seeing his judgement is erroneous. Thirdly, in regard of the end, in not referring it to the maine and proper end, the glory of God, and the good of his Church. The Prophet reduceth all those things, wherein we ought not to glory, to three heads: wisedome, strength, riches: all which we have received, and therefore ought not to boast of them. In particular, wisedome is not to bee gloried in, seeing it is very defective, whether we speake of speculative wisedome, standing in contemplation, or practicall, consisting in action: For in arts and sciences, as also in the secrets of nature, our ignorance is greater than our knowledge. He that knows nothing in these things, let him reade the booke of Iob, chap. 28. and 37. and 38. And as for wisedome in divine things, We know nothing as wee ought to know, 1 Cor. 8.2. for we know but in part, and see but as in a glasse, darkely, 1 Cor. 13.12. And as for practicall wisedome, standing in policy, it is not demonstrative, but meerely conjecturall, and therefore wee cannot build upon it, considering in it there is the concurrence of so many causes that are casuall, and of so many mindes, which are mutable. Salomon the great polititian had experience hereof: for he thought that by soyning affinity with his neighbour Princes round about him, and taking their daughters to bee his wives, hee should establish his owne house, strengthen his kingdome, and draw the heathenish idolatours to the worship of the true God. But all things fell out contrary to this his plot and project: for it was so farre from winning others to imbrace true religion, as that it drew him to idolatry: and so far from stablishing his house, or strengthening his kingdome, as that it was the cause of the rending of the one, and the ruinating of the other. Constantine the great was perswaded that by building the City Constantinople in the confines of Europe and Asia, and there placing one of his sonnes, as his Lieutenant to keepe his Court, he should fortifie his Empire, as with a wal of brasse: But he was deceived, for the building of new Rome, was the decay of the old: and the dividing of the Empire, was the destruction thereof: So that it is truly said, policy is often the overthrow of policie.

Ier. 9. 23.

Now if wisedome may not be gloried in, much lesse may strength, seeing that wisedome is better than strength, Eccles. 9.16. seeing that the greatest strength of man, is not comparable to that of Behemoth, Iob 40. and other bruit beasts: seeing it is but the strength of flesh: seeing no power, nor might, can deliver from wrath in the day of wrath. Of all the puissant Princes, and plotting polititians, the Psalmist saith, They are so vaine, that if they bee layd upon the ballance, even vanitie it selfe will weigh them downe, Psal. 62.9.

Iac. 1. 2. 5.

And as for riches, (besides that they make us never a whit the better, (nay oftentimes much worse) they are also uncertain. Salomon saith, They make themselves wings like an Eagle, and flye away, Prov. 23.5. They may not unfitly bee compared to Ionas his gourd, which flourished in the morning, yeelding him content and delight, but shortly after (to his great griefe) it was stricken by a worme, and withered away. The like may be said of honours, and pleasures. For what more vaine than to glory in honour, which is not in a mans power? seeing as the Philosopher teacheth, Honour is not in him that is honoured, but in him that honoureth; and therefore Courtiers are compared to counters, which stand sometime for pounds, sometimes for pence, being notwithstanding, now disbased, according to the pleasure of the Prince. Haman to day highly honoured in the Court at Shushan, the next day hanged upon a tree. To omit the examples of Iob and Nebuchadnezzar, (in whom we may see the mutability of worldly dignity.) Consider it in the glasse of these examples. Fifth, of Gelimer, a puissant Prince of the Vandalls, who was brought so low, that he was enforced to request his friend to send him a loafe of bread, a sponge, and a harpe: a loafe, to slake his hunger: a sponge, to dry up his teares: a harpe, to solace him in his misery. Of Belisarius, (for prowesse and honour, the only man then living) who came to that miserable estate, that having his eyes put out, he was led in a string to begge by the high way side, crying, Date obolum Belisario. And of the victorious Emperour Henrie the fourth, who had fought 52. pitched fields, and yet was driven to that exigent, as that he became a suter for a poore Prebend in the Church of Spira, to maintaine himselfe in his old age. And as for worldly pleasures, least cause is there that any man should glory in them, seeing they are more vanishing than the former: seeing they are common to us with bruit beasts: seeing they are mingled with much griefe and vexation; for in the midst of laughter, the heart is sorrowfull, Prov. 14.13. And lastly, seeing they leave a sting behinde them, for the end of pleasure is nothing but paine, as Salomon saith, The end of rejoycing is mourning. For feasting and banqueting are often turned into surfeiting and vomiting: drinking into pissies: lusts into gouts, &c. And if pleasures were but onely painfull, the matter were the lesse, but they are also sinfull; Heb. 11.25. and therefore in no wise to be gloried in.

Prov. 14.13

By this we see that Paul had just cause in this earnest manner, to say, God forbid I should glory, save in the crosse of Christ; considering that this boasting in outward things, is not onely a fault of vanity, but also of impiety, as may appeare by these reasons. I. God hath expressely forbidden it, Ier. 9.23. Gal. 5.26. II. He hath alway severely punished it, as in David, for numbring the people in a vaine-glorious minde, 2 Sam. 24. in Ezekias, for shewing his treasures in a bravery to the Embassadours of the King of Babel, Isay 39. In Herod, for ascribing to himselfe the glory proper to God alone, Act. 12. III. The Saints of God have alway abhorred it, as Paul doth in this place, and 2 Cor. 11.30. If I must needs glorie, I will glory in mine infirmities; as if he should say, I will be farre from carnall boasting. IV. The heathen by the light of nature have condemned in the Grecian Orator calls it an odious and burdensome thing. And the Romane Orator proves it to be so, out of this by his owne practice, making many words which flowed from his mouth as it were as honey, to taste as bitter as wormwood, by interlacing his owne praises.

Cognitum ii, & ita de hac Demosth. de Coron.

Obiection. Paul glorieth in some things besides the cross of Christ, where he said, Where-in-soever-any-man-is-bold, I-am-bold-also, (I speak foolishly) I am bold also, 2 Cor. 11.21. Answer. Paul in glorying doth distinguish his calling from his person. For such a one I will boast of, my self I will not boast; and, I was nothing inferiour to the very chiefe chiefe Apostles, although I am nothing, 2 Cor. 12. 5. 11. Of his person or personall gifts he boasteth not: but onely of his Apostolicall calling, and his faithfull discharge thereof, to the end hee may stoppe the mouthes of the false Apostles. Thus to confesse the good things we have to the glory of God, being urged thereunto, is lawfull boasting, nay it is sometime necessary, making much for the maintenance of the Gospell; as Pauls boasting made much for the good of the Church of Corinth. Againe, there is a twofold lawfull boasting, one before God, another before men, Rom. 4 2. Of the former the Apostle speakes in this verse: of the latter in 2 Cor. 12. Hee gloried not in the testimony of a good conscience, before God, but onely before men. Before God hee gloried in nothing, but in the saving knowledge of Christ and him crucified. And whereas it may bee sayd, that this his boasting in regard of the false Apostles, as also his glorying in the testimony of his conscience, and his infirmities, 2 Corin. 11. 30. were not in the crosse of Christ. I answer, they were: for his glorying over the false Apostles, in teaching freely, was in the good and prosperous successe of the Gospell, which is the doctrine of the crosse: and his glorying in the testimony of his conscience, in that it was washed by the blood of the crosse, as Paul speakes, Coloss. 1. 20. in his afflictions, in that they were the afflictions of Christ, and he by them made conformable to him.

Precepium.

Prov. 14.13

2 Cor. 1. 12.

But it will be said, that he gloried in his revelations, in his paines and travell, in preaching the Gospell, and in the multitude of Churches which he had planted. Answ. First, hee did it being urged thereunto: secondly, he did it to defend his calling, and the credit of the Gospell, and therefore this boasting was not unlawfull; nay, it was necessary, and in the Lord. For when we are compelled, we may confesse the good things we have, if we doe it sparingly, and for the edification of others, that they may be bettered by our example: and that they seeing our good works may glorifie God our heavenly Father, Mat. 5. 16.

Here wee see what glorying is unlawfull; namely, when men ascribe unto themselves either that which they have not, or more than they have, or as proceeding from themselves, their wisedome, strength, industry, in sacrificing to their owne nets, and burning incense to their owne yarne, Habak. 1. 16. or in boasting of them without necessary cause, either for their owne vaine glory, as Nebuchadnezzar did, Dan. 4. or for the Gods glory, as Herod did, Act. 12. And if this glorying bee so great a sinne, surely boasting in wickednesse (as Doeg did, Psal. 52. 1.) must needs be most damnable: as when the greatest swearers and swaggerers, count themselves the best companions: the greatest idolaters, and superstitious persons, most religious: the greatest oppressours, forsetters, drunkards, fighters, most valiant and courageous: &c. Now this may be done three wayes, either ignorantly, as when Paul gloried in his cruell persecuting of the Saints before his conversion, Act. 26. 11. or presumptuously, when men glory in wickednesse, notwithstanding they be perswaded in conscience, that it is evill: and then it is the sin of Sodom, Isay 3. 9. or maliciously, to despite God, and then it is the sinne against the holy Ghost.

The second point to be considered in the words, is the thing wherein he will glory, called here the Crosse of Christ: Save in the Crosse of our Lord Iesus Christ. The words in the originall translated save, are exceptive: as if hee should say, I will glory in nothing, except in the crosse of Christ: and exclusive, onely in the crosse of Christ, and in nothing else. Albeit they are sometime adversative, as Gal. 2. 16. and Apoc. 21. 27. There shall enter into it no uncleane thing, εἰ μὴ, but they that are written, &c where the words are not exclusive: (for then it would follow that some which worke abomination should enter into heaven:) but adversative, as Matth. 12. 4. and Luke 4. ver. 20. which may serve (by the way) to cleare the text: John 17. 12. Those thou gavest me have I kept, and none of them is lost, but the child of perdition: that is, but the childe of perdition is lost. For the words εἰ μὴ, (as I take it) are not to well translated by the exceptive conjunction nisi, as by the adversative sed: seeing here is no exception made of Iudas, as though he had bin given to Christ, and afterward had fallen away: which exposition must needs be made, if the words be read, nisi filius perditionis.

εἰ μὴ ἐὰν ἀλλὰ ἀπὸ πλὴν ἵνα μὴ.

Further, by the Crosse of Christ, the Apostle understandeth synecdochically, the all-sufficient, expiatory, and satisfactory sacrifice of Christ upon the crosse, with the whole worke of our redemption: in the saving knowledge whereof hee protesteth hee will glory, and boast. For Christ is made unto us wisedome, righteousnesse, &c. that as it is written, He that glorieth, glorieth in the Lord: even to make boast of him all the day long, as the Psalmist speaketh. And the reason why Paul professeth that hee will glory onely in the Crosse of Christ, is, because Christ crucified is the treasury and storehouse of the Church: seeing that in him are hid, not onely the treasures of wisedome and knowledge, Coloss. 2. 3. but of bounty and grace, Iob 1. 16. and of all spirituall blessings, Eph. 1. 3. For first, by Christ crucified, we have reconciliation with God, remission of sinnes, and acceptation to everlasting life. Secondly, we have the peace of God which passeth all understanding, peace with God, with Angels, with men, with our selves, with the creatures. Thirdly, we recover the right and title which we had in the creation to all the creatures and blessings of God, 1 Cor. 3. 22. Fourthly, all afflictions and judgements, cease to bee curses and punishments, and become either trialls, or corrections. Lastly, death it selfe is no death, but a sleepe: for all that die in the Lord, are said to sleepe, and to rest upon their beds. Isa. 57, 2. Indeed, if we look upon death through the glasse of the Law, it is the very downefall to eternall destruction: but if we consider it as it is changed by the death of Christ, it is but a passage from the transitorie life, to eternall life. Christ by his death hath taken away sinne, the sting of death: so that though it seaze upon us, yet (having lost it sting) it cannot hurt us. So that in a word, in Christ crucified, are all things that a man can glory of. If wee would glory in knowledge, and wisedome; He is the wisedome of the Father, seeing that all treasures of wisedome and knowledge are hid in him: and therfore Paul desired to know nothing among the Corinthians, but Christ and him crucified, 1 Cor. 2. 2. for this knowledge is eternall life. Iob. 17. 3. If in the love and favour of great men: by him wee are highly advanced into the love and favour of God, Eph. 1. 6. If in honours and riches; by him we are made Kings and Princes: Apoc. 1. 6. If in liberties; by him wee are delivered from the hands of our enemies, Sinne, Satan, &c. Luke 1. 74. If in pleasures, comfort, and content: he is our felicitie, in him wee are complete, Coloss. 2. By him we have right to those things which eie hath not seene, eare hath not heard, neither can the heart of man conceive. It may be said, why doth Paul glorie in the ignominious death of Christ, rather then in his glorious resurrection, triumphant ascension, and imperiall jurisdiction now sitting at the right hand of the Father? Answ. These are not excluded, but included in the Crosse: yet hee nameth the crosse rather then them. First of all, to shew that upon the crosse, Christ did fully finish the worke of our redemption: for being now readie to give up the ghost, he said, It is finished. Iohn 19. 30. this made Paul to desire to know nothing but Christ, and him crucified. For in his humiliation stands our exaltation, in his weakenes stands our strength; in his ignominie, our glory; in his death, our life. Secondly, to shew that hee was not ashamed of the crosse of Christ, though never so ignominious in the eyes of the world. It had beene no great thing for Paul to have gloried in the resurrection, ascension, wisedome, power, Majestie of Christ, wherein the world can and doth glorie. But to glorie in the shamefull, contemptible, accursed death of the crosse, was a matter of great difficulty, & the worke of faith, judging that which the world counts ignominious, to be most glorious: that which the learned Philosophers counted foolishnes: to be the wisedome of God. 1 Cor. 1. 24.

1 Cor. 1. 30, 31 2 Cor. 2.

The Popish sort abuse this text two waies. First, in applying it to the transient crosse. Secondly, to the permanent or materiall crosse. To the transient crosse, in that they glorie in its

Aug. de verb. Apost. Serm. 10

First, as having a vertue in it, (when it is made in the ayre,) to drive away divels. Secondly, being made in the forehead, to bee as an amulet against charmes, blastings, and other such like casualties. To the materiall crosse, when they adorne it with gold and jewels, & so cause it to bee caried in great pompe before them. When the Crucigers weare it in their hats in a white, redde, or greene colour. When they put their confidence in it, & pray unto it, Holy crosse, save us. This is Popish and carnall glorying in the crosse; and not spirituall, in the death of Christ upon the crosse, of which only the Apostle speakes in this place.

The reason why hee would glory in nothing but in the crosse of Christ, followeth to be considered, in these words, By which the world is crucified to me, and I unto the world: It is taken from a double effect, which Christ, or the crosse of Christ, wrought in him: (for the words δι' ὧ, by which, may be referred to either indifferently.) The first, to bee crucified to the world: the second, the world to be crucified to him. By the world, wee are not to understand the frame of heaven and earth, nor the creatures, nor mankind: but honour, riches, pleasures, favour, wisedome, glory, and whatsoever is opposed to the kingdome of Christ, and the new creature. To be crucified to the world, is to be dead unto it, to despise and contemne it, to count all the glory of it to bee no better then dung, in respect of Christ and his righteousnesse, as Paul did, Phil. 3. 8. The world is said to be crucified to us, when it hates and persecutes us, and accounts us the filth and offscouring of all things. 1 Cor. 4. 13. Yet here observe that we are crucified to the world, & the world to us, by the vertue of the death of Christ, after a different manner. Wee are crucified to the world, properly by the Spirit of Christ, weaning our affections from the love of this world. The world is crucified to us, by the death of Christ, improperly, and by accident, in that wee are made such as the world cannot but hate and persecute: for seeing wee are made new creatures, and chosen out of the world, therefore the world hateth us. Iohn 15. 19.

Here wee see who those are that can truly glory in the crosse of Christ, namely, those that are dead to the world, and the world to them: such as feele the power of the Spirit of Christ crucifying the flesh in them, with the affections and lusts. Others can no more glory of the crosse of Christ, than he that glories of the victorie, which his Prince hath gotten over his enemies, himselfe in the meane time being a vassall, and slave unto them.

Secondly, that it is not sufficient for a Christian, that the world is crucified to him, except he also be crucified to the world, neither loving the world, nor the things in the world.

Thirdly, that to bee crucified to the world, is not to professe monasticall life, and to bee shut shut up in a Monastery: but to renounce the world, and the corruptions that are therein, both in affection of heart, and practise of life.

Fourthly, wee are taught to cary our selves to the world, as crucified and dead men, not to love nor like it, to seeke or affect to, but to renounce and forsake it, with all the vanities, delights, and pleasures thereof: and to be as dead men to our owne wicked wils, and to our carnall reason, letting them lie dead in us, and suffering our selves to bee ruled, ordered, and guided by the Spirit of God: making his will our will, his word our wisedome.

Fifthly, by this we may examine our hearts; for if wee have our affections glued to the world, and set upon the honours, pleasures, profits, and preferments thereof, wee are worldlings indeed: for they that are Christs are crucified with Christ, *Gal.*2.20. and have crucified the flesh, with the affections and lusts, *Gal.*5.24 and therefore must needs bee crucified to the world. A man that is hanged upon a gybbet, ceaseth from his thefts and murthers: so all they that are indeed crucified with Christ to the world, cease from their old offences. For as the Apostle reasoneth, if wee be risen with Christ, wee ought to seeke the things that are above, and not the things that are upon the earth, Col. 3.1.2. So if wee bee dead with Christ from the vanities of the world, wee ought as dead men to abstaine from all worldly lusts, which fight against the soule, 1 *Pet.*2.11.

15. For in Christ Iesus neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature.

Here the Apostle proves his former assertion, v.14. that hee neither did, nor ought to glory in any thing, save in the crosse of Christ, because nothing is of any account in the kingdome of God, but a new creature. And this hee proves by the removall of all those things, that are either opposite to, or divers from a new creature, signified by circumcision and uncircumcision: and with all hee laies downe two conclusions. The first is, that in Christ Iesus, that is, in the kingdome of grace, neither circumcision, nor uncircumcision are any thing, that is, are neither acceptable to God, nor availeable to salvation: Vnder these two, syneedochically comprehending all outward priviledges, and prerogatives, dignities and regalities, or whatsoever can be named: under circumcision comprising the preheminence of the Iew, and the profit of circumcision, which was much every way, Rom. 3.1. seeing that to them appertained the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises, Rom. 9.4. Vnder uncircumcision containing the Gentiles, with all their wealth, wisedome, strength, lawes, policie, & whatsoever is of high account, and glorious in the eyes of the world. All which he excludes and accounts as nothing in respect of regeneration. For that which is highly accounted of among men, is abomination in the sight of God, Luke, 16.15. Therefore, wisedome, wealth, nobilitie, strength, are nothing, 1 Cor. 1.26. Outward callings, as to bee King, or Cæsar, Prophet, or Apostle: Outward actions of fasting, almes, prayer: Nay, kindred and alliance, as to bee mother, or brother of Christ, is nothing: for if the blessed Virgin had not borne Christ in her heart, as she did in her wombe, she should never have beene saved, Luke, 11.27.28. and if his kinsmen had not beene his brethren by spirituall adoption, as well as by naturall propagation, they should have had no inheritance in the kingdome of God, Marke 3.33, 35. Nay, the outward element of baptisme, without the inward grace, is of no force; for it is not the washing away of the filth of the flesh (that is acceptable to God) but the stipulation of a good conscience, which maketh request unto God, 1 *Pet.*3.21. And if the communicant at the Lords table, doe not eate panem Dominum, as well as panem Domini (as Augustine speaketh) that is, if he doe not receive Christ spiritually by the hand of his faith, as he doth corporally receive the element by his bodily hand, he receiveth unworthily, and so eateth and drinketh his owne judgement, 1 *Cor.*11.29. Now the reason why these outward things are nothing availeable, is, because the things that are accounted of with God, are spirituall and eternall, not temporall and carnall, as these are: which as they shall utterly cease in the kingdome of glory, Math, 22.30. (for then Christ will put downe all rule, authoritie, and power, 1. *Cor.*15.24.) so are they not of any moment or account in the kingdome of grace, as Paul teacheth, 2 *Cor.*5.16. *Gal.*3.28. Colos. 3.11. It may be said, these priviledges and outward things, as Prince and people; master and servant: bond & free, &c. have place in the kingdome of grace, seeing Christian tie doth not abolish nature, nor civill policie. To which I answer, that man must bee considered two wayes; in respect of the outward, or inward man. Consider him as he is a member in civill society, as of the family, church, or commonwealth: there are sundry differences of persons, as bond, free; magistrate, subiect; poore, rich; &c. in which sense the Apostles exhortation taketh place, Wives submit your selves to your husbands. Colos. 3.18. Children, obey your parents, v. 20. Servants be obedient to your masters. verse 22. But if man be considered in respect of his spirituall estate, as hee is a member of the invisible, or Catholike Church, under spirituall government, consisting *in righteousnesse, peace of conscience, and joy in the holy Ghost, Rom.*14.17. there is no distinction of calling, condition, or sexe; *For we are all one in Christ, Galath.*3.28. or, Christ is all and in all things, Colos. 3.11. in that though we be many, yet are we but one body in Christ, ' Rom. 12.5. seeing wee are quickned with one spirit,

Eph.

Ephes. 4.4. The Popish opinion therefore which teacheth that there bee some outward callings and actions which commend us to God, as, to leade a single life, to fast, to vow voluntary poverty, to performe regular obedience, to professe monkery, to be buried in a Friars cowle, or to abstaine from these & these meates, is here condemned, when Paul saith, that outward privileges will not serve the turne, and that meats commendeth us not to God, 1 *Cor.*8.8.

Againe, neither this, nor the like places, *Gal.*3.28. *Col.*3.11. doe any thing favour the Anabaptisticall fancy, of bringing in an anarchy, that is, an itaxy into Christian society; by taking away Christian Magistrates, and distinction betwixt Master and servant: for by the same reason wee may confound the sexe of man and woman, for Paul saith, There is neither male nor female, but wee are all one in Christ; the meaning thereof is this, that although in respect of our inward or spirituall estate before God, there be no such differēce: yet that hindereth not but there may bee in respect of our outward estate.

Further, wee learne from hence, that no man is to thinke highly of himselfe in regard of outward privileges, as birth, honour, wealth, favour, nor to glory in them, *Ierem.*9.23. Rich men must not bee high minded, 1 *Tim.*6.17. Nay, the King may not lift up his minde above his brethren, *Deut.*17.20. Pauls example is notable, who accounted all the privileges which hee had before his conversion, whileft he was a Iew, (as that he was a citizen of Rome, a Pharisee, a great Rabbin, instructed by Gamaliel, of the tribe of Benjamin, circumcised the 8.day, &c.) and after his conversion being a Christian, (as that he was an Apostle, taken up into the third heaven, &c.) to be as nothing, or worse than nothing, even as losse or dung in respect of being a new creature in Christ, that is, in respect of justification and sanctification. And therefore wee may not set our mindes too much upon outward things, as riches, honours, pleasures; seeing they are not availeable to salvation.

Besides, this teacheth all those that are but in meane and base estate, to bee content: for outward privileges availe nothing; outward wants and miseries hinder nothing. If a man be rich, he is nothing the nearer, and if he be poore, he is not a whit the further off: it is the povertie of the spirit, which makes a man rich in grace: for though the poore man be the rich mans slave, yet hee is the sonne of God, and fellow-heire with Christ: and though the rich man be the poore mans master, yet hee is the servant of Christ, as Paul saith, He that is called, being a servant, is Gods free man: and he that is called being free, is Christs servant, 1 *Cor.*7.22.

Lastly, this crosseth the opinion of the multitude, who think that if a man be increased in riches, graced with favour, advanced with honour, that he is a godly, wise, religious man; and that religion which he professeth, is the truth. This is nothing else, but *to have the faith of our Lord Iesus Christ in respect of persons, Iam.*2.1.

The second conclusion is, that the new creature is the onely thing that is acceptable to God. Circumcision, &c. availeth nothing, but a new creature. By the new creature, the Apostle understandeth the Image of God, or renovation of the whole man, both in the spirits of our mindes, and in the affections of our hearts, which is also called the new man. We shall the better conceive it by the contrary, namely, by the old man; which is, want of knowledge in the minde, and delight in ignorance: want of subjection and conformity in the will, and rebellion with all: want of holinesse in the affections, and proneness to evill. The new man then, is the restoring of all these defects. For the understanding hereof, consider that there are three things in the soule: The substance of the soule: the faculties or powers of the soule: and the qualities of these faculties. Now neither the substance nor faculties are lost by the fall, but onely the qualities of the faculties: as when an instrument is out of tune, the fault is not in the substance of the instrument, nor in the sound, but in the disproportion, or jarre in the sound: therefore the qualities onely are renewed by grace. These qualities or habits, are either in the understanding, or will and affections. The quality in the understanding, is knowledge. Colossians 3.10. Ye have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge, after the Image of him that created him. In the will and affections, they are principally two, righteousnesse and holinesse, both which are in truth and sincerity without all hypocrisie. Ephesians 4.24. Put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousnesse, and true holinesse; where holinesse and righteousnesse, are opposed to concupiscences, and lust of the old man; Truth, (which hath relation to both) to spirituall guile, and dissimulation: so that each of these qualities, have two parts, a want of the contrary evill, and a positive qualitie or habite of goodnesse. Holinesse respecteth God, and containeth all duties of piety, contained in the first table: Righteousnesse, respects man, and the creatures, and compriseth all the duties enjoyned in the second Table. Truth respecteth the manner how both the former are to be practised, viz. with an upright and sincere heart, free from all hypocrisie and deceit. These three making a perfect harmony in all the faculties of the soule: Holinesse performing all the duties of piety: righteousnesse the duties of humanity; truth seasoning both the former with sincerity.

But (may some say) how is the new creature opposed to all externall things, or said to be of any force in the kingdome of Christ, seeing it is not availeable to justifie a man before God, being stained with manifold imperfections? For answer whereof, wee are to know, that outward things are sometime opposed to Christ, and his righteousnesse, as Colos. 3.11. There is neither Iew nor Grecian, circumcision nor uncircumcision, &c. but Christ is all, and in all things: sometime to faith, as Gal. 5.6. Neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision, but faith, which worketh by love: sometime to the new creature, or sanctification, as in this place, and 2 Cor. 7.29. Circumcision is nothing, &c. but the keeping of the Commandements of God. But the sense is all one, for they are opposed to Christ, as to the matter of our justification: to faith, as to the instrument apprehending it: to the new creature, as to the signe of them both.

Further, where both here, and 2 Cor. 5.17. the Image of God is called a new creature, or as it is in the originall [καινὴ κτίσις] a new creation; the meaning is not, that either the substance or faculties of the soule are created anew; but that the worke of regeneration is wholly to be ascribed to God alone, (not as though we were stocks or stones, without life or motion,) but because God doth create these new qualities in us, quickening us when we were dead in sinne, and working in us both the will and the deed, Phil. 2.13.

If regeneration then bee a new creation, it must needes follow, that before our conversion, we were not onely dead, but even flat nothing, in godlinesse and grace. By which we see what to judge of the Semipelagian heresie, which teacheth, that a man by an internum principium, may dispose himselfe to will that which is truly good: and that man is not starke dead in sinne, but onely sicke or wounded, and halfe dead, as the man which fell among theeves, Luk. 10. or as a prisoner that is shackled & manacled, who can walke of himselfe if his fetters be taken from him; so we (if Christ loose the chaines of our sinnes) have power of our selves to move our selves. Which doctrine we know is most injurious to the mercy of GOD, and most derogatorie to the merits of Christ, seeing it makes him in the worke of our salvation, to be but causa removens, prohibens, which (as Logicians teach) is but causa sine quâ non, which in truth is no cause at all. So that they make themselves their owne Saviours, and Christ to bee but an instrument whereby they save themselves: for if he doe but remove the impediement, they without any more adoe, are able to move and act themselves. When as the conversion of a sinner is as great a worke, as the creation of heaven and earth: for Paul calleth it here a new creation. Nay, here is a greater power required, (if I may so speake) than that whereby the world was created. For though an infinite power be required as well to the creating of the great world, as the recreating or regenerating of the lesse world, as our Saviour Christ signifies, Marke

A 2.9. Whether it is easier to say to the sick of the palsie, Thy sinnes are forgiven thee, or to say, Arise, take up thy bed and walke? yet the Holy Ghost seemeth, of the two, to make it more difficult, to create a new heart, than a new world; in that speaking of the creation of the world, he saith it was made by the word of God, By the word of the Lord the heavens were made, Psal. 33.6. or by his fingers, When I consider the heavens, the workes of thy fingers, Ps. 8.3. or by his hands, Ps. 102.25 The heaven: are the workes of thy hands. But the redemption of man, and the conversion of a sinner, is said to be wrought by the arme of God. Mary in her Magnificat saith, Hee hath shewed strength with his arme, Luke 1.51. nay, he was faine to set his side to it, and it made him shed many a teare, and sweate as it were drops of blood, trickling downe to the ground, Luke 22.44. Before our conversion wee are like the drie bones, Ezekiel 37. for as when the winde of God came upon them, bone came to bone, and were joyned with sinewes, and covered with flesh, and had their senses restored: so when the Spirit of God, like the Favonian winde, bloweth upon us, it reviveth us againe, giving us a new life, new senses, a new heart, new wils, and affections: for all old things passe away, and all things become new, 2 Cor. 5.17. For it opens the eyes of our understanding, making us discerne of things that differ, Ephes. 1.18. Phil. 1.10. it boareth a new eare of obedience in us, Psa. 40.6. and giveth us a new taste, not to savour the things of the flesh, but of the Spirit, Rom. 8. verse 5.

B Further, this serves to detect the naturall Popery of the multitude, and of our owne hearts, when we perswade our selves (though falsely) that though we goe on in our sinnes, yet that we can repent when we list. When as the Prophet saith, O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himselfe; and Paul saith, that it is as great a worke to create a new heart, as to create a new world: for regeneration is a new Creation, 2 Cor. 5.17. Augustine saith well, He that will grant pardon to him that repents, will not alway give repentance to him that sinneth.

C Againe, in the sense that Paul calleth the Image of God, a new creature, or the new man, and corruption the old man: wee grant, that our religion is new, and Popish religion is old. For as the new man is the restored Image of God, in which Adam was first created, though afterwards defaced by his own inventions, Eccles. 7.31. So our religion is the restored or reformed doctrine first taught by the Apostles, which afterward was corrupted by mens devices. Albeit in Tertullians sense, ours is the old religion, and theirs the new: as the Image of God is the old man, and corruption the new.

D Use. If we be not changed in our lives, but remaine olde Adams still, even the same men we were before, in minding, willing, affecting earthly things, and fashioning our selves to the

Ier. 10.23.

Qui dabit peccatis veniam, nũ dabit pœnitentiam.

Quod antiquissimum, id verissimum.

the guise of the world, wee are no new creatures, though we promise and protest never so much: wee are but hypocrites, deceiving others, and our selves also. For where this new creature is, there is a change in all the faculties and powers of soule and bodie: the minde is not set upon the world, but mindeth heavenly things; the will, affections, and conversation of the whole man is in heaven, Philip. 3.20. For the spirit of regeneration is like the leaven which a woman tooke and hid in three pecks of meale till all was leavened: for after the same manner, by a secret operation it altereth the minde, will, affections. If any be in Christ, (saith the Apostle) hee is a new creature, olde things are passed away; behold, all things are become new, 2 Cor. 5.17. If therefore we be new creatures, why lead we not a new life? if we be changed in affection, why are we not changed in conversation?

B But by this we may perceive, that all which are Christians in profession, are not Christians in conversation: all that are washed with the outward Element of water, are not washed with the inward baptisme, the laver of regeneration: as first, those that are as good fellowes, (that is) as bad as ever they were before, and make no conscience of sinne. Secondly, such as are no more but civill honest men, like those honest men which raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coasts, Act. 13.50. Thirdly, worldly wise men which savour of nothing but the world. Lastly, such as have some love and liking of the word, and are in some sort outwardly conformable thereunto, having some legall sorrow for sinne, arising from legall terrours: but have no thorow change nor renovation.

C Lastly, we may not marvell if the world hate and maligne those that are new creatures, seeing they neither minde nor affect the same things. For there can bee no true love, where there is contrarietie of judgements, wills, affections; which hath beene, is, and will be, betwixt those that are borne of the flesh, and those that are borne of God, Gen. 3.15.

D 16. And as many as walke according to this rule, peace shall be upon them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God.

Here Paul commends this glorying in the crosse of Christ, and study of piety, in becomming a new creature, as the only rule of faith and manners, which all teachers and hearers were to observe and follow. Enforcing the keeping and observing of this double duty, by the fruit and benefit that comes thereby, specified here by peace and mercy. In the words two things are generally to be considered: First, the duty of walking, in these words, As many as walke according to this rule: Secondly, the reason or motive to the practice thereof, in these, Peace shall be upon them, and mercy: which is amplified by the

A generalitie thereof, that is, shall light upon as many as walke according thereto, and upon the Israel of god. The duty is, that we walke according to this canon, or rule; the * word translated walke, signifieth not simply to walke, but to walke warily and circumspectly (as it is expounded, Ephesians 5.15.) or to walke by rule, in order, and measure, without treading aside, but making straight steps to our feet. Hebrewes. 12.13. Pauls rule which we must walke by, is faith in Christ, called here glorying in the crosse of Christ: and repentance towards God: called regeneration or the new creature: which is rightly called a rule of faith, and manners, of things to be beleeved, and practised, because by it all doctrines and actions are to be examined: nay, the Scripture is therefore called Canonicall, because it sets downe an expositiõ of this rule; there being nothing from the first chapter in Gen. to the last words in the Apocal. which aimeth not at one of these two, either repentance towards God, or faith in Christ.

Here all ministers are taught what rule to follow in preaching the word, or building the Church of God, namely faith, and repentance, the doctrine of the crosse, and conversion, or the new creature. And all hearers according to what rule to order their lives and actions. For this metaphor of walking, and that by a rule or line, shewes that we are travellers or Pilgrims, that this world is a strange country, that we are to goe to another, that the world is an endlesse labyrinth, in which we shall for ever lose our selves, except we be guided by this rule.

And here we see that there is a certaine rule for the regulating of all things appertaining to faith and manners, though we cannot apply it, nor use it as we should: The fault is in us, not in the rule.

Whereas Paul saith, as many as walke according to this rule; he shewes that Christians have but one onely rule which they are to follow, and according to which they must frame their lives; for the Apostle exhorts us that we all proceed by one rule, Philip. 3.16. Therefore the Papists doe notoriously offend not onely in wresting, perverting, and breaking this rule, but in making other new Lesbian rules, which they prescribe as necessary to be followed: as the rule of S. Francis, of Saint Dominick, S. Austen, S. Jerome, &c. holding one mans baptisme better than another, one mans profession holier than another, one mans rule perfecter than another: following any rule rather then Christs, and so divide the seamelesse coate. And that these sundry rules of Monkes are vaine & wicked it may appeare: First, because they agree not with this rule of Paul, they being many, it but one: it directing and leading to Christ, they leading to by-paths, obscuring the merit of Christ, and prescribing many things partly frivolous, partly impious, contrary to faith, and good life. Secondly, in that they agree not among themselves; every sect having his owne proper orders, and contending their owne to be better, holier, perfecter than the rest. Thirdly, in that they divide into divers sects those that ought to be all one in Christ, for which cause Paul cals the Corinthians carnall, in holding some of Paul, others of Apollos, 1. Corinth. 3 4. For how can they be spirituall, who in speech, action, habite and attire, profession and conversation, professe nothing but schisme and dissention? Ierome against the Luciferians saith, Scubi audieris eos qui dicuntur Christiani, non à Domino Iesu Christo, sed à quoquam alio nuncupari, puta Marcionitas, Valentinianos, Montenses, Campates, scito non ecclesiam Christi, sed Antichristi esse Synagogam: that is, wheresoever thou shalt heare those that are called Christians, not to have their name from our Lord Iesus Christ, but from some other, as Marcionites, Valentinians, Montenses, Campates, know thou much, that are they not the Church of Christ, but the Synagogue of Antichrist. Nay further, solitary life in leaving the society of men, and sequestring themselves from all company, which is the ground, and generall practice of Monkish Eremites (for Cœnobites to speak properly are no Monkes, as the word teacheth) is against the very light of nature it selfe. First, because it is naturall for men to live together; nay, it is the ground of the family, the Church, and common-wealth. There was never nation so barbarous or savage, but endeavoures to live together, by associating themselves in cities; townes, villages, cave, woods, tents, or some other way, according to the custome of the country: which generall practice of all, argues the impression of nature in all. Secondly, speech is given men for this end, that they might converse together: for it were little or nothing availeable if men should live alone, and converse with none. Thirdly, sundry vertues bestowed upon men, as justice, fortitude, love, and friendship, should be given in vaine, if men should live solitary, sequestred from all company. Fourthly, mans imbecility argues thus much; for whereas all other creatures are armed by nature, as the Bull with hornes, the Boare with tuskes: other with teeth, feathers, swiftnesse, &c. man is borne feeble and naked, not able to provide or defend himselfe, but onely by helpe of others: which is an argument that hee is borne to live in civill society, and to bee holpen by others. Lastly, man is borne to doe good to himselfe and others, in some estate and calling, 1. Corinthians 7. but he that liveth alone can doe no good to others, nor receive good from them: For whereas they pleade for themselves, that they leave their particular callings, and betake themselves to Hermetages, that so they may renounce the world: I answere, that to renounce the world, is not to leave their places and callings, whereunto God hath called them, but to renounce the corruption that is in the world, through lust, 2 Pet. 1.4. These and the like reasons made the Philosopher to say, that he which left the society of men, and betooke himselfe to a solitary life, was either a god, or a beast. Arist. Politi. 1. cap. 1.

* στοιχοῦσιν.

By this we may see what Lesbian rules they follow; and how that which they account the highest degree of perfection, is in truth the depth of abomination: for it hath beene the cause of much wickednesse, as of idlenesse, hypocrisie, whoredome, sodomitry, besides the cruell murdering of many poore innocents. Therefore let neither their hypocrisie, nor the Churches pretended authority, nor the long received custome, any thing move us; but that leaving them, we follow the rule of Paul in this place: for they that walke accorording to it, peace shall be upon the, and mercy. By peace wee are to understand outward peace, as prosperity, and good successe in all things we goe about. For whatsoever they doe, shall prosper, Psal. 1. 3. And peace with the creatures; as first with the good Angels, Colosse. 1.20. who are ministring spirits, sent forth to minister, for their sakes that shall be heires of salvation, Hebr. 1.14. Pitching their tents about them, Psal. 34.7. And bearing them in their hands as a nurse her childe, Psalme 91. 12. Secondly, with the godly. The Prophet saith, that in the kingdome of Christ, The wolfe shall dwel with the Lambe, the Leopard shall lye with the Kid &c. that is, men of fierce, savage, and wolvish natures, shall be so changed by grace, as that they shall live peaceably and lovingly together. Thirdly, with the wicked their enemies, partly because they seeke to live in peace, as David saith of himselfe, I labour for peace, Psalme 120. verse 7. partly because God so inclines their hearts, as that they are peaceable. Lastly, with the beasts of the fields, and all the creatures. The Lord promiseth to make a covenant with the wilde beasts, and fowles of the heaven, in behalfe of his people, that they may sleepe safely, Hosea 2.18. But the peace which is principally meant in this place, is peace of conscience, which passeth all understanding, Philip. 4.7. Which is peace with God, being reconciled and at one with him. Rom. 5.1. Being justified by faith, we have peace with God. And peace with our selves, which is threefold, as it is opposed to a threefold dissention in man. The first is, when the will and affections renewed by grace, are obedient to the minde enlightened by the Spirit, and at peace therewith: opposed to the dissention that is betwixt rebellious affections, and naturall reason. The second is, when grace (though strongly assailed) giveth corruption the foile, whereupon followeth the calming and quieting of the minde, opposed to the combate betweene the flesh & the spirit. The third is, when the conscience perswaded of remission of sinnes, and reconciliation with God, ceaseth to accuse & terrifie: and begins to excuse, and comfort us, opposed to the conflicts of a distressed conscience hath with legall terrours, and the anger of God. By mercy (which is the cause of this peace) are understood, all spirituall blessings, which flow unto us from the love, and favour of God in Christ, as remission of sinnes, justification, sanctification, and eternall life it selfe. The words be upon them, have great emphasis, signifying, that these blessings come downe from heaven, and light upon them that follow this rule, and that Satan cannot be hindered by the malice of men. Isa. 11.6.

Let the Pope then anathematize, curse, & excommunicate us, both Prince and people, because we treade not in the steps of his faith, but of the faith of our father Abraham, and walke not according to his rule, but according to this rule of the Apostle: for we need not feare his thunderbolts nor curses, seeing the causeless curse shall never come, Prov. 26.2. for what though he curse, if God doe blesse? It was the thing that comforted David being cursed of his enemies, in that though they did curse, yet God would blesse, Psal. 109.28. and let us comfort our selves in this, that he will curse them that curse his people, Gen. 12.3.

Againe, if peace and mercy shall bee upon them that walke according to this rule, then wrath and indignation shall light upon those that follow any other rule, or devise any other way, or set downe any other meanes of salvation besides, or contrary to this. False therefore is the opinion of Puckius, that if a man leade an outward civill life, he may bee saved in any religio5, the Iew in his Iudaisme, the Turke in his Mahometisme, the heathen in his Paganisme. For they that walke not in this way, according to this rule, do but weary themselves in endlesse Labyrinths: and so walking without line or rule in their crooked wayes, shall be led with workers of iniquity, when as peace shall be upon Israel, Psalm. 125.5. Other vses are made of mercy and peace, Pag. 11. and 12.10 which places I referre the reader.

The Apostle addeth; that peace and mercy shall bee upon them all that walke according to this rule, and upon the Israel of God. There is a double Israel mentioned by Paul, Israel according to the flesh, 1 Cor. 10. 18. and the Israel of God: as there is a twofold Iew, one outward, in the flesh: another inward, in the spirit, Romanes 2. 28, 29. By the Israel of God, the Apostle meaneth all such as are like to Nathaniel, who was a true Israelite, in whom there was no guile, Ioh. 1.47. whether they bee the faithfull Gentiles, and beleeving Iewes. And he makes mention of the Israel of God, partly by reason of the adversaries, who braggedes much of their father Abraham, and that they were the onely true Israelites; and yet were no Israelites, because they trod not in the steps of the faith of Abraham; partly for the weake converts, who thought it a hard thing to be severed from the society of those, to whom the promises were made, purely for us Gentiles, that we might know, that all are not Israel, which are of Israel, Rom. 9.6. but that all they which are of faith are blessed with faithfull Abraham, Gal. 3. verse 9. seeing that God is no accepter of persons, Acts 10.34.

Cap. 6. the Epistle to the Galatians. 425

Cap. 6. 17. From henceforth let no man put me to businesse, for I beare in my body the markes of the Lord.

Here the Apostle layes downe his last admonition, preventing an objection that might be made by the false apostles, or the Galatians. For whereas it might be said, that Paul sought himselfe and the world, shunned persecution, and therefore joyned circumcision to Christ, to please the Iewes, and followed not his owne rule. v. 16. hee takes away this objection with great authority, when hee saith, From henceforth let no man put me to businesse: And withall he addes a reason of it, For I beare in my body the markes of the Lord Iesus: as if hee should say, The bonds, the imprisonments, the stripes, wounds, and scarres in my body, doe sufficiently testifie my fidelity in my ministery, for if I had preached circumcision, I should not have suffered persecution, the words may be, and are taken in a double sense. First thus, The false apostles, and you Galatians (by their instigation) have beene troublesome unto mee, by false accusations, and slanderous imputations, as that I taught circumcision and the observation of the ceremoniall Law, as a thing necessary to salvation, and so you have made a revolt from my doctrine, and by that meanes have doubled and tripled my labour and paines among you: but from henceforth cease to be troublesome unto me, you may take experiment and proofe from mee: the markes that I beare in my body doe sufficiently witnesse and seale the truth of my doctrine, and my fidelity in mine Apostleship, as also whose Disciple I am, Moses or Christs, and what rule I follow, Iudaisme or Christianisme. Secondly, they carry this sense, I have said, that they which walke according to this rule, in glorying onely in the crosse of Christ, Peace shall be upon them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God: And I say againe and againe, that we ought to strive and contend for it, to observe and keepe it, as a thing most necessary to salvation: ni mor, as for other things not necessary to salvation, as circumcision, &c. Let no man trouble mee in the execution of mine Apostolicall function, or hinder the course of the Gospell, by urging any other doctrine or ceremony contrary or diverse from this, as necessary to salvation; This one thing is necessary, other things are needlesse and fruitlesse in comparison, therefore neither I, nor the Church of God ought to bee troubled with them. This latter sense I take to be more agreeable to the text. Some make the sense to bee this, I have had many troubles and conflicts, and have many markes and scarres in my body, inflicted by persecutors; therefore, let no more troublesome unto me: for it were rob much to adde wormwood to my gall, affliction to affliction. Here wee see the condition of the Apostle, and the estate of all faithfull Ministers; that it is full of troubles and molestations. For as they are accounted men of turbulent spirits, disquiters of the State, as Elias was, 1 King. 21. and Ieremy, chapter 15.18. and Paul, Act. 16.20. and 24.5. So they are most troubled with factious opposers and false teachers, who labour to bring into the Church, things partly needlesse and superfluous, partly hurtfull and pernicious. Thus the false apostles troubled the Pastours and Church of Galatia, Galat. 5. 10. and the Churches of Antiochia, Syria, Cilicia, Act. 15.24.

Secondly, consider how that the most and greatest troubles of the Church, have beene for matters not of substance, but of circumstance, partely not necessary, partly contrary to the rule: which notwithstanding have beene urged with fire and fagot, as things most necessary.

Lastly, he that stands forth for the defence of Gods truth (as Paul did, and all Ministers ought to doe,) must let goe all circumstances, and looke to the substance. Not with Martha to trouble himselfe about many needlesse things, when as one thing onely is necessary. C

Luke 10.14.

The reason followeth in these words: For I beare in my body the markes of the Lord Iesus.

The word in the Originall translated markes, doth properly signifie prints with an hot iron. But it is here used generally to signifie any blemish, skarre, or marke whatsoever, whether such as were wont to be set upon servants bought with money, (which among the Iewes was a hole in the eare pearced with an aule, Exodus 21.6. Deut. 15.17.) or upon slaves taken in the warres, as the Samians set upon an Athenian captive the signe of an Owle: and the Athenians upon a Samian the signe of a ship. Or upon malefactours, as a hole in the eare, an F in the forehead, a brand in the hand. Or such a marke, as some thinke was set upon Cain, Gen. 4. 15. or the marke of God, Ezech 9.4. or of the beast, Apoc. 16.2. D Stigmata. Vid. Lipsium de militia Romana. lib. 1. dialog. 9.

The markes of Christ are of two sorts, either inward and invisible: or outward and visible. The invisible markes are two. The first, is Gods eternall Election, which is called Gods seale or marke, 2 Tim. 2.19. The foundation of God remaineth sure, and hath this seale, The Lord knoweth who are his. All the Elect are marked with this marke, Apoc. 7. and by it Christ knoweth and acknowledgeth them for his sheepe, Iohn 10. The second is regeneration, or the imprinting of the defaced Image of God in the soule. By this marke (which is the true indeleble character, never to bee blotted out) are all beleevers sealed, 2 Cor. 1. 22. Eph. 1.13. these inward invisible markes of Election and Regeneration, are in the soule, and therefore not literall: for the speakes of bodily marks, I beare in my body the markes. The outward visible markes are twofold: Typicall, or Reall. Typicall, as circumcision, which was a marke set in the fore-skin of the flesh, Rom. 4.11. The blood of the Paschall Lambe, wherewith the houses of the Israelites were marked, when the first borne of the Egyptians were slaine by the destroying Angell. And baptisme is of the same kinde: for by Baptisme Christians are distinguished from Iewes, Turkes, Infidels whatsoever. Reall markes of Christ, are either in his naturall or in his mysticall body. In his naturall body, the wounds which were given him in his hands, feet, and sides; which he shewed to his Disciples after his resurrection, Ioh. 20.27. which, whether they be now to be seene in his glorified body (as some affirme) or abolished (as others,) I leave to the Reader, as a thing uncertaine, and meerly conjecturall, seeing there is nothing in Scripture either for it, or against it, that doth necessarily conclude it. But of these markes the Apostle speaketh not in this place. The markes in his mysticall body, are those which are in his members, as wounds, skars, whippings, maimednesse, &c. of which we reade, 2 Cor. 5. 10. Every whit we bodre about in our body the dying of the Lord Iesus: and, 2 Cor. 11.24, 25. Five times received I forty stripes save one: I was thrice beaten with rods, once stoned, &c. And these the Apostle here calleth the markes of Christ, because they are inflicted for the profession of Christ, and the Gospel: as the wounds and skars of a souldier may be called his Princes wounds and skars, because they are had in his cause and quarrel. Now those in his naturall body differ from these in his mysticall: First, in that they are meritorious, for by his stripes wee are healed, 1 Pet. 2.24. These in his mysticall body are glorious in the sight of God (as the death of his Saints is,) yet not meritorious. Secondly, those in his naturall body, were prophesied of before in particular, Psal. 22.16. They pearced my hands and my feet. These in his mysticall body onely in general, that we should be conformable unto him. A

In this place Paul speaketh of the latter onely: which were in his own person, & this hee doth, not to put any merit in them, (as Saint Francis did) but to testifie himselfe to bee a faithfull servant of Christ. And he further meets with the false apostles, who would needs have had the Galatians circumcised, that so they might glory in the flesh, as having set the marke of circumcision in the fore-skin of their flesh. As if he should say, I set not markes in other mens flesh, to glory of them, as the false apostles doe, but I beare about in my body the markes of the Lord Iesus, these are the signes of mine Apostleship, and and arguments of fidelitie in my Ministerie, which is not in other mens flesh, but have in mine owne.

Hence we see what we are to thinke, & what use wee are to make of the wounds, skarres, and blemishes, that are in any of the Saints for the profession of the truth. First, that they are the sufferings, wounds, and markes of Christ himselfe (as Paul teacheth them here, and Colos. 1.24) seeing they are the wounds of the members of that body, whereof he is the head. Secondly, they have this use, to convince the consciences of persecutors, and wicked men, that they are the servants of Christ, which suffer thus for righteousnesse sake, for which cause they are here mentioned by Paul. Thus hee proves himselfe to bee a member of Christ by the affliction which hee suffered for his sake. 2 Cor. 12. Thirdly, if men be constant in their profession, namely in faith and obedience, they are banners of victory. Therefore no man ought to bee ashamed of them, no more then souldiers of their wounds and skarres: but rather in a holy manner to glory of them as Paul did. For as it is a glory to a souldier to have received many wounds, & to have many skarres, in a good cause, in his Princes quarrel, & for the defence of his country: So it is a glory for a Christian souldier to have the markes of the Lord Iesus in his body, as of wounds, scourges, bonds, imprisonment, for the profession of the truth. Therefore Constantine the great, (as the Eccesiasticall Historie records) kissed the holes of the eyes of certaine Bishops, (which had them put out by the Arrians, for the constant profession of the faith of Christ) reverencing the vertue of the holy Ghost which shined in them. B C

This makes nothing for the fratres flagellantes, who glory in the markes which they make in their flesh, by whipping of themselves. For first, it is not the punishment (as Cyprian saith) but the cause that makes a Martyr. Secondly, the markes which men set upon themselves contrarie to the Law, Levit. 19.28. are not the markes of the Lord Iesus: but those onely which are set upon them by others, for the profession of the truth. Thirdly, this whipping and afflicting of themselves, being but will-worship, in not sparing of the bodie, Colos. 2.23. is no better accepted of God, then the superstitious practice of Baals priests, lanching themselves with knives, till the blood gushed out. 1 King. 18.28. D

Againe, if this be the glory of a servant of Christ, and a note of constant profession, what shall we say of them, who have not onely their consciences seared with a hot yron, but by drinking, whoring, rioting, &c. get the markes of Bacchus, and Venus in their bodies? For if these bee the markes of Christ, those must needs be the markes of Satan.

Lastly, hence we are taught a speciall duty, and that is, to suffer bodily affliction in the profession of the truth: and though bonds and imprisonment abide us in all places, not to passe for them, so that wee may fulfill our course with joy, according to Pauls example, both here, and Act. 20.24. as also his commandement to Timothie, Suffer affliction as a good souldier of Iesus Christ. 2 Tim. 2.3. The reasons are these. First, by suffering bodily affliction, wee are made conformable unto Christ, and fulfill the rest of the afflictions of Christ in our flesh Colos. 1.24. Secondly, they teach us to have a sympathy and fellow feeling of the miseries of our brethren, to remember those that are in affliction, as though we also were afflicted in the body. Heb. 13.3. Thirdly, our patient enduring of affliction, doth not onely serve as a president and example to others to suffer patiently, but also is a notable meanes to confirme them in the truth. 2 Cor. 1.6. Phil. 1.14. Lastly, they serve to scoure us that are earthly vessells, from the rust and filth of sinne, that cleaves so fast unto our nature. A B

18. Brethren, the grace of our Lord Iesus Christ, be with your spirit, Amen.

Here, the Apostle concludes his Epistle with his usuall farewell, commending the Galatians to the grace of God, and wishing unto them all things appertaining to spirituall life and godlinesse. 1 Pet. 1.3. which hee signifieth here by grace. There is a twofold grace mentioned in Scripture, Grace which makes a man gracious or acceptable to God, gratia gratum faciens: and grace which is freely given, gratia gratis data. Gratia gratum faciens, is the favour and love of God, whereby he is well pleased with his elect in Christ, and this grace is in God himselfe, and no qualitie infused or inherent in us: and it is truly called the first grace, as being the cause of all other subsequent grace. Gratia gratis data, is the free gift of God bestowed upon men, whether naturall, or supernaturall: Naturall, either in the state of innocencie, before the fall, as originall justice, &c. or in the state of Apostasie, since the fall, as the gift of humiliation, Iohn 1.9 and such like. Supernaturall, either common gifts, as the gift of miracles, Prophecying, tongues, &c or saving graces, as the grace of election, effectuall vocation, justification, adoption, glorification, &c. all which are called the second graces, because they flow from the first, as the streame from the fountaine. Thus Paul distinguisheth them, Rom. 5.15. calling the former the grace of God, the latter the gift by grace. Now grace in this place is not to bee restrained onely to the benefit of our redemption, as it is, 2 Cor. 13. vers. 13. where the grace of Christ is distinguished from the love of God, and communion of the holy Ghost: but to bee understood of the favour and love of God, which is the first grace: and of the saving grace of regeneration, which is the second grace, or the gift by grace. And it is called the grace of our Lord Iesus Christ; first, because he is the fountaine of it, Iohn 1. 16. Of his fulnesse all we have received, and grace for grace. Secondly, because he is the conduit or pipe, by which it is conveied unto us. Iohn 1.17. Grace and truth came by Iesus Christ: for he is our propitiator by whom alone wee receive grace, that is, the favour of God, and reconciliation: for grace, that is, for the favour and love which God the Father bare unto his Sonne; wee being accepted of God, and beloved in his Beloved. Ephe. 1.6. Christ is further called [our Lord] in five respects. First, by right of creation Heb. 1.3. All things were made by him. Secondly, by right of inheritance. Heb. 1.2. He is made heire of all things. Psal. 2.8. I will give thee the Heathen for thine inheritance, and the ends of the world for thy possession. Thirdly, by right of redemption. 1 Cor. 6.20. Ye are bought with a price, which is neither silver nor gold, but the precious blood of Christ. 1 Pet. 1.18.19. And this he performed by a double right, namely, by right and propriety, as a King redeemes his subjects, the master his servants: or by right of affinitie: as the father may redeeme the sonne, one brother another, and one kinsman another. Fourthly, by right of conquest. Luke 11.21. When a strong man armed keepeth his pallace, &c. But when a stronger then he commeth upon him, & overcommeth him, hee taketh from him all his armour wherein he trusted, and divideth the spoile. Lastly, by right, of contract and mariage, Hos. 2.16. Thou shalt call me Ishi, and shalt not call me Baali, & verse. 19. I will marrie thee unto me for ever in righteousnesse, judgement, mercie, and compassion, I will marry thee unto me in faithfulnesse, and thou shalt know the Lord.

The Apostle proceedes and saith, the grace of our Lord Iesus Christ bee with your spirits. For the better understanding of which phrase, we are to know, that Man consisteth of two essentiall parts, of soule, and body, Eccle. 12.7. Dust (that is, the body) returnes to the earth, whence it was taken: and the spirit returnes to God that gave it. Albeit the Apostle elsewhere divideth man into three parts, spirit, soule, and bodie, when he praieth for the Thessalonians, That their whole spirit, and soule, and body, may bee kept blamelesse, unto the comming of Christ. Where he subdivideth the soule into two parts, into reason or understanding, which he calleth the spirit: will or affection, which he tearmeth (by the common name agreeing to both) the soule: God having given reason to see, and will to seek after that which is good: that reason having eyes might guide the will that is blinde, and goe before, that it might follow. So that the spirit and soule are not two severall substances, but one and the same (even as the body and the flesh are one body) and yet are they distinguished, for doctrine sake. Hebr. 4.12, the word of God is said to enter through, even to the dividing asunder of the soule and the spirit: and Eph. 4.17.18. the Apostle distinguisheth the soule into three Faculties, the minde, cogitation, heart: when he saith the Gentiles walked in the vanities of their mindes, and had their cogitations darkned, because of the hardnesse of their hearts: by minde, meaning the ingenuonicall part or understanding: by cogitation, the inward senses, as memory, phantasie, &c. and by heart, the affections.

Now by spirit in this place, is not meant the understanding alone, but by a synecdoche, the whole man is understood, albeit the soule principally be meant, because it is the proper subject of grace: for grace being a spirituall thing is placed immediately and properly in the spirit, or minde of man; and in the body accidentally, where it doth bewray it selfe by outward actions. Secondly, for that, as the feare of grace is in the minde, so the sense and apprehension of it is there likewise, and not in the body. Thirdly, as Theophylact saith Non ait vobiscum, quid ita? abigens eos a rebus hisce, arguesque non a lege hos spiritum, sed a gratia accepisse. So that, it is all one, as if he should have said, The grace of our Lord Iesus Christ be with you all, as it is Phil. 4.23. and 2 Thess 3.18. as it may appeare by the like: for that farewell which Paul gave Timothie in his latter Epistle, The Lord Iesus Christ be with thy spirit. 2 Tim. 4.22. is all one with that in the former, Grace be with thee. 1 Tim. 6.21. And that salutation Philem: 25. The grace of our Lord Iesus Christ be with your spirit, is all one with that Coloss. 4.18. Grace be with you.

Hence that phrase and forme of speech in our English Liturgie, or Common prayer booke (though misliked by some, and cavilled at by others) hath his warrant & ground, when the Minister saith, The Lord be with you, and the people answer, And with thy spirit, wishing the same to him, that hee to them, that God would bee with his spirit, that is, with him.

Againe, marke how the Apostle as he did beginne with grace, chap. 1.3. so he doth end with grace, to teach us first of all, that our salvation is placed in it alone, for the beginning, the progresse, and the accomplishment thereof: for election is of grace, Rom. 11.5. and vocation is of grace, 2 Tim. 1.9. and justification, Rom. 3.24. and glorification, Rom. 6.23. Secondly, that Christ is to have all the glory of this grace, whereby wee are so highly advanced into the favour of God, both for the beginning, continuance and ending, without ascribing any part thereof to our selves, or any other creature. Thirdly, that all our salutations and greetings, our adieus and farewels, ought to be grounded in the grace of Christ, otherwise they are but carnall: and therefore the Apostle biddeth the Christians to salute one another in a holy kisse, or (as Peter speakes) with the kisse of love. 1 Pet. 5.14.

This confutes the Popish Doctors, who doe not onely ascribe the beginning of their salvation to themselves, in co-working with God

God in their first conversion: but also the end and accomplishment of it, by workes of condignitie, which (as they say) are meritorious of eternall life.

Further, observe, with what emphasis the Apostle concludes his Epistle: first, opposing Christ the Lord of the house, to Moses who was but a servant in the house. Secondly, the grace of Christ to inherent justice, and merits of workes. Thirdly, the spirit, in which he would have grace to be feared, to the flesh, in which the false Apostles gloried so much. Lastly, brotherly unity one with another, implied in the word brethren to the proud and lordly cariage of the false Apostles over them.

The Conclusion,

In the end of all, it is added, in the Greeke, and Syriacke copies: that this Epistle was written to the Galatians from Rome. Which postscript seemes to be erronious and false: for first, there is not a little in the whole Epistle, that giveth the least inkling that it should have been written from Rome: whereas in all the rest, which are written from thence, Paul makes mention of his bonds, and imprisonment. Secondly, the variety of copies, argues the uncertainty of it, seeing in some copies it is said to have beene sent from Ephesus, as Caietane and Hyperius affirme in their Commentaries upon this place. Thirdly Baronius (if his authorities bee of any weight in this case) affirmeth that it is not likely or credible that it was written from thence. But, bee it granted that this post-script were true indeede; yet it is no part of Canonicall Scripture, as not being written by the Apostle; but added afterwards by the scribes which copied out the Epistles. Neither is this onely true of post-scripts, but also of Inscriptions or Titles prefixed before Epistles, they are no part of holy writ. This may easily bee proved in particular: for first, touching post-scripts, the Greeke copies agree in this, that the first Epistle to the Corinthians, was written from Philippi and sent by Stephanas, Fortunatus, Achaicus, & Timotheus: when as it is certaine, it was written from Ephesus, For first, chap. 16.v.5. hee saith, He will come to them when he shall goe through Macedonia. Therefore Paul was not then at Philippi, a chiefe citie in Macedonia. Secondly, in the 19.v. of the same chapter, he saith, All the churches of Asia salute you, which shewes plainely, that when Paul writ this Epistle, he was at Ephesus in Asia, nor at Philippi in Europe. Thirdly, v.8. he saith he will abide at Ephesus till Pentecost, therefore hee was not then at Philippi. Fourthly, that it was written before the tumult in Ephesus raised by Demetrius and his complices, and so consequently before his comming to Philippi: as also that it was sent by Timotheus and Erastus, it is manifest, v. 10. of that chapter, being compared with Act. 19. ver. 21.22. Lastly, the Syriacke translator agreeth with me in affirming that it was written from Ephesus; and so doth Baronius Annal. tom. 1. pag. 494. l. 39. Againe, the post-script of the 2. to the Corinthians hath, it was written from Philippi of Macedonia, and sent by Titus and Luke: whereas the Rhemists (if we may give any credit to their testimony, who elsewhere make titles part of the Canonicall Scripture) say, it was written at Troas, as it is thought. And Baron. Annal. Tom. 1. pag. 590 l. 51. Answerp. thinkes it was written at Nicopoli, upon this occasion, that in his former Epistle from Ephesus, promising to come unto them as hee passed through Macedonia, and comming not, 1 Cor. 16. hee doth in this excuse himselfe, 2 Cor. 1.15, 16, 17. compared with the 2 Cor. 7.5. Neither is it a good reason to prove that Titus caried this Epistle (as it is in the post-script) because Paul saith, Hee sent Titus to them, and another with him, 2 Cor. 8.18. 22. & 12.18. for Paul speakes of Titus his comming unto them before that time: neither may it bee thought that Titus was sent the second time unto them, considering that departing from Macedonia, and taking Titus with him, he left him in Crete. See Caesar Baron. Annal. tom. 1. Antwerp. pag. 591. l. 40. Besides, the Rhemists controll the subscription of the first Epistle to the Thessalonians, which hath it thus, the first Epistle to the Thessalonians, written from Athens. For in their preface, they are bold to affirme, that it seemeth rather to have been written at Corinth, then at Athens: and they give this reason of it, because after the sending of Timothie to Thessalonica, Paul and he met not at Athens againe, but at Corinth, and Baronius affirmeth, that it seemeth to have beene written presently after that Sylas and Timotheus came to him to Corinth, out of Macedonia; by comparing Act. 18.5. with 1 Thess. 3.6. Annal. tom. 1. pag. 457. l. 1. And Emmanuel Sa doth censure the Syriacke post-script, which saith it was sent from Athens by Timothie, seeing that Timothie was then absent. The like they affirme in the argument of the second Epistle: for albeit the Greeke post-script hath it, that it was written from Athens, yet they rather thinke it was written from Corinth, where Paul abode a yeare and six moneths, Act. 18.11. because the title is like unto the first Epistle, Paul and Sylvanus, and Timotheus, &c. And Baronius saith, that it should be written from Athens, impossibile est affirmare; because it was written soone after the former, as may appeare by the inscription, Paul, and Sylvanus, and Timotheus, (they continuing together:) but the former was written from Corinth, (as hath beene proved) and therefore the latter: specially considering that Paul went thence from Athens, and abode at Corinth, a yeare and a halfe, and returned nor backe againe to Athens, but went to Ephesus, Annal. tom. 1. pag. 457. l. 28.

Adde hereunto, that whereas the post-scripe of the 1. to Timothie saith, it was written from from Laodicea the chief city of Prigia Pacatiana: the Rhemists notwithstanding in the argumẽt affirme, that it is uncertaine where it was written: and though it be commonly said to have beene written at Laodicea, yet it seemeth to be otherwise, because it is like he was never there, as may be gathered by the Epistle to the Colossians, which was written at Rome in his last trouble, a little before his death: for Coloss. 2. 1. Paul seemes to insinuate that he was never at that Laodicea of Phrigia, neare to Colossos, and Hierapolis, and that they never saw his person. Besides, neither Pliny (who writ after Paul) nor any other ancient classique Author, doth make mention of Phrigia Pacaciana: so that it seemeth to have beene so called long after Pauls decease: the first mention that is made of it (as some have observed) being in the acts of the 5 Synode of Constantinople. Baronius is of opinion that it was written from Macedonia. tom 1. pag. 564. grounding his conjecture upon 1 Tim. 1. 3. As I besought thee to abide at Ephesus, when I went into Macedonia, so doe.— The same doth Athanasius affirme in his Synopsis, and Theodoret in his preface upon that Epistle.

Againe, the subscription of the 2. to Timothie, that it was written from Rome unto Timothie, the first Bishop elected of the Church of Ephesus, cannot well stand as some thinke, with that of S. Paul, 2. Tim. 4. 5. Doe the worke of an Evangelist: seeing that Euangelists were not tyed to personall residencie, to abide in one place (as Bishops and Pastors are) but were to goe from place to place, to confirme the Churches planted by the Apostles. But the discussing of this argument, whether Timothie were an Euangelist, properly so called, and whether the same man could not be an Euangelist, and a Bishop, requireth a longer discourse, then can be afforded to this short treatise. Lastly, the post-script of the Epistle to Titus, saith it was written from Nicopolis of Macedonia: the devisers of which assertion ground their opinion upon Titus 3. 12. where Paul saith, Be diligent to come to me to Nicopolis, for I have determined there to winter: mistaking the text; for he saith not, be diligent to come to mee to Nicopolis, for I have determined here to winter (as being there already) but I have determined there to winter. By which it is plaine, that when Paul wrote to Titus he was not at Nicopolis, (as the post-script affirmeth,) and so wee see the text which they alledge for them, maketh most against them. And this is the judgement and reason of Baronius, Annal. tom. 1. pag. 575. l. 33. Antwerp. howsoever Claudius Espencæus shifts his fingers of it, and passes it over in silence.

Thus much concerning Subscriptions: a word or two touching Inscriptions or titles prefixed before Epistles, that these be no part of Scripture written by the Apostles, but added to the Epistles by some others, it may apprare by these reasons. First generally, if titles were Canonicall as well as the Epistles themselves, the Fathers would never have doubted (as they did) whether Paul were the author of the Epistle to the Hebrewes or not, seeing in all copies save one (as Beza hath observed) it beareth his name: but some of them asscribe it Barnabas, as Tertullian: others to Luke, as Ierome witnesseth; others to Clement: Oecumenius writeth it onely thus, The Epistle to the Hebrewes, without adding the name of Paul or any other penner of it: and so Hentenius a papist doth translate it out of Oecumenius: Secondly, some Epistles (as those seven written by James, Peter, John, Jude,) have unfit titles prefixed before them, in that they are called sometime Canonicall, (specially of the Latine Church) and sometime Catholike (chiefly of the Greeke Church) neither of which were ever given them by any Apostle or Apostolique writer. For first touching the title Canonicall, it may seeme strange that this inscription should ever have beene appropriated unto them, which is common with them to the whole word of God: as though in them were contained a more perfect and absolute rule of doctrine and manners, of things to be beleeved and practised, then in the other bookes of holy writ; considering that sundry Divines (albeit erroniously I confesse) have come so farre from giving unto them this pre-eminence above the rest of the bookes of Scripture, that they have altogether reiected them, as no part of Canonicall Scripture: by name, the Epistle of Iames, the 2. of Peter, the 2. and 3. of Iohn, and that of Iude, of all which it was doubted in ancient time, as wee see in Eusebius; and the Syrian Church receiveth them not to this day, as being not in the Syriacke translation; and Caietan a popish writer, and the Lutherans at this present, reject them, as may appeare by their writings. Secondly, that this inscription was added to these Epistles without sufficient ground, and warrant of reason, may appeare, in that no reason can be given why these seven should be called Canonicall, rather then the Epistles of S. Paul, or that to the Hebrewes (whosoever was the penner thereof.) For whereas the ordinary Glosse saith, they are called Canonicall, because they were received into the Canon, with the other Epistles; by that reason they should be no more Canonicall then the rest, nay, not of that authenticall, at least of that undoubted authority the rest are of, seeing they hardly obtained to be registred in the Canon with the rest as Canonicall. Lastly, this title was never give to to these Epistles by the Greeke Church (which was more ancient) but onely by the Latine Church, as might be proved by manifold testimonies, if it were a thing necessary to be stood upon. Nevertheless, howsoever this inscription cannot be defended, yet it may bee excused, and tolerated, as a title of distinction, to distinguish distinguish them from the other Epistles. As we see the Iewes dividing the old Testament into foure parts: the first they called the law, or five bookes of Moses: the second, the former prophets, viz. Iosua, Judges, two bookes of Samuel, two bookes of the Kings: the third, the latter prophets, as Isay, Ieremie, Ezechiel, and the small prophets: the fourth they called Kethubim, which in English is as much as the Scriptures, not as though these 11. bookes were more properly Scripture then the Pentateuch of Moses, or the bookes of the former and latter prophets: but onely for distinction sake they were so called. And they are tearmed of the 70. and of the Greeke Church ἁγιόγραφα, that is, holy writs, not because they had a peculiar holines proper to them above other parts of Gods word, (seeing al Scripture is equally given by divine inspiration) nor as though the amanuenses of these bookes were more holy then the other pen-men of the holy Ghost (nay, contrarily it is doubted by some, of Salomon, who penned three of these bookes, whether he were elected or rejected, whereas it is not doubted of the rest:) but onely (as I have already said) to put a note of distinction betwixt them and other bookes, in naming of them, as Hugo de S. Vict. hath well observed.

In this sense this title Canonicall, may bee given to these Epistles without danger: but if wee shall understand it in any other sense, wee shall bee so farre from being able to defend it, that wee shall not bee able to excuse it.

The second title which is given them, is, that they be called Catholike, which inscription is as vnfit as the former: for they are so called (as some would have it,) because they were written, and directed to the whole Catholike Church, consisting both of Iewes & Gentiles. But that is not true, seeing Iames chap. 1. 1. directeth his Epistle onely to the twelve tribes that were dispersed, and not to the Gentiles. And Peter, who was an Apostle of Circumcision, 1 Epist. 1. 1. writeth onely to the strangers the Iewes, that dwelt here and there through Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bythinia. Others thinke they are tearmed Catholike, for that they were not sent to one man, or family, or citie, or countrey: but generally to the whole body, companie, and society of the Iewes, wheresoever dispersed over the whole earth. But neither in this sense can they fitly, or truly be tearmed Catholike: forasmuch as two of these seaven, viz. the second and the third of John, were written to particular persons, the one to the elect Ladie, the other to Gaius. And by this reason the Epistle to Timothie, that to Titus and Philemon, may bee called Catholike, as well as these.

Againe, be it granted, that they were all directed to al the Iewes, yet I see not why the Epistle to the Hebrewes, may not as well challenge this title to be called Catholike, as any of these seven, considering it was written to all the Iewes, and onely to the Iewes.

Thirdly, others affirme them to be called Catholike, because they containe Catholike doctrine, such as appertaineth to all men generally, of what estate, place, condition, or calling so ever they bee. But in this sense all Pauls Epistles may bee called Catholike Epistles. For whatsoever is written, is written for our learning, that we through patience and consolation of the Scriptures might have hope, Roman. 15. verse 4.

Secondly, the word Catholike, is not so ancient: for Pacianus an ancient father, saith, it was not used in the Apostles dayes. His words are these: Sed sub Apostolis (inquies) nemo Catholicus vocabatur: esto, sic fuerit, vel illud indulge, cum post Apostolos hæreses extitissent, diversisque nominibus Columbam Dei atque reginam lacerare per partes, & scindere niterentur; nonne cognomen suum plebs Apostolica postulabat, quo incorrupti populi distingueret unitatem, ne intemeratam Dei virginem, error aliquorum per membra lacerares? That is, But thou wilt say, under the Apostles no man was called Catholike: well, bee it so, yet admit this withall, when after the Apostles there were heresies, and men beganne to rend in peeces, and divide Gods Dove, and Queene, by sundry different names, did not the Apostolike people require their surnames, whereby they might distinguish the unity of the uncorrupt people, least the error of some, should rend in sunder Gods undefiled Virgin? Where wee see Pacianus doth freely grant, that this surname Catholike was not in use in the time of the Apostles, Which testimony Baronius doth notably dissemble, in shewing the originall of this name out of Pacianus; affirming, but not proving it to bee as ancient as the Apostles. Now this errour hath not onely befallen the Latine, and Greeke copies, but the Syriacke likewise, as may appeare in the title prefixed before the most ancient Syrian translation, where wee shall finde these words, The three Epistles of the three Apostles, before whose eyes our Lord was transfigured, Iames, Peter, John, In which inscription bee couched two foule errors. First, in that this Translator maketh but three Epistles of Iames, Peter, and John: whereas there are fixe, he omitting the second of Peter, the second and third of John (as also that of Jude) as no part of holy Scripture: and therefore the Syriacke Church (as I have already said) doth not receive these Epistles into their Canon unto this day. The second is, that hee affirmeth Iames, before whom our Saviour CHRIST was transfigured in mount Tabor, to be the Authour of this Epistle. For that Iames before whom Christ was transfigured in the Mount, was Iames the sonne of Zebedeus, and brother of John, Matt. 17. 1. After sixe dayes, Iesus tooke Peter and Iames, and Iohn his brother, and brought them up up to an high mountaine, and was transfigured before them. Which Iames could not possibly bee the penner of this Epistle, for hee was slaine by king Herod long before the destruction of Ierusalem, and the dispersion of the 12. tribes, Act. 12. v. 2. About that time Herod the King stretched forth his hand to vexe certaine of the Church: and he slue Iames the brother of Iohn with the sword. Therefore Iames the author of this Epistle, was Iames the sonne of Alpheus. For to faine another Iames the brother of our Lord, as some have done, is childish, seeing it is plaine by sundry places of the new Testament, that there were but two of that name mentioned in Scripture, Iames the sonne of Zebedeus, called Iames the greater; and Iames the sonne of Alpheus, brother to Iude, called the lesser, and brother of our Lord.

"Tom. 1. pernotandi. c. 12. quis nullam hanc inscriptionem specialem appellationem quæ distinguatur à cæteris, communium quasi pœnam obtinuit.

Bibliath. sacra tom. 2. ad Symmachum. Novatian. de Cathol. nomine Epist. 1.

Annalium tom. 1. pag. 349. Antuerp.

A

Gratias tibi Domine Iesu.

A TREATISE OF CHRISTIAN EQVITY AND MODERATION.

Delivered publikely in lectures by M. W. Perkins, and now published by the consent of his Masters of Cambridge, by a Preacher of the Word.

Ephes. 4. verse 32.

Forgive one another, as God for Christs sake doth forgive you.

LONDON,
Printed by IOHN LEGATT.
1631

TO THE RIGHT HONOVRABLE THE LORD SHEFFEILD, LORD LIEV-TENANT, AND LORD PRESIDENT:

SIR THOMAS HESKITH, SIR IOHN BENET, KNIGHTS. Charles Hales, R. William, Cuthert Pepper, John Ferne, Esquires: and the rest of his Majesties Honourable Councell, established in the North parts, and under the Highnesse, the highest Patrons of Equity; Grace And peace from Iesus Christ.

RIght Honourable and Worshipfull, how famous in all writers the yeare Eighty eight, and how fatall it was made by all the old and later Conjectures is not unknowne to any of you: but how the issue answered the expectation, I lee not, save onely in that notable overthrow of the enemies of God, the Papists: whereupon our reverend (a) Countryman, and Churches Champion of England, said very well

O Augustinus quàm vanus, miserabilis annus,
Cùm Papa totum, gaudia tanta, tenet.

But if ever yeare deserve to be famous in English Chronicles, it is this yeare, I cannot tell whether I should say for evil or good, wherin, either the Gods anger was more in taking from us such a Queene as (for ought I reade) the world never had: or his mercy, in giving us such a King, as England never had, I leave it to better heads to bee determind. How is the name of our God to be magnified, by whose mercy so great a losse is made no losse, but a gaine to us? for who seeth not, that all her Princely vertues doe not onely live in him, but are also in him (being a man) more perfect and accomplisht? Shee is dead, but her Heroicall zeale and love to Religion is alive, that bequeathed it with her kingdome to his Highnesse, who doubtlesse will make both her Religion and her Kingdome to flourish as much more, as a man doth excell a woman. And who knoweth not, that the enemies of our Religion, and our peace, (notwithstanding all their politike dissembled brags to the contrary) doe finde his Majestie so little for their purpose, that now they would sing a thousand Masses to have her alive againe, against whom they thundered out (b) so many Curses and Excommunications, and after whose blood they so thirsted whilst she lived: what straights are they driven into? who wou'd wish her alive againe, at whose hands (though a woman) they never gained, nor got one inch of ground in 44. yeares; though slue or ten Popes, and 1 0000. of their slaves wrastled with her all the while, with all the power, and policy, craft, and trechery, which the Devill could lend them. Nay, her end was as glorious as her beginning, and her last Proclamation against them, was more to their shame, and lesse to their comfort, than ever any in her life before: and so farre was she, from allowing them a Toleration, of their intolerable religion, in her old and therefore weakest age, as that it never entred into her Royall heart: nor ever thought it worthy to bee made aquestion, whether it should bee or no. No, she hated not betwixt two religions: but to her, Baal was Belial: therefore shee banisht him; and God was the Lord, and therefore she served him. She was resolved that Dagon must downe if Gods Arke stand, or else if Dagon stand, the Arke must away. For both together cannot stand upright. Shee held, that as when the enemies themselves brought the Ark into Dagons temple, Dagon fell down: so if the Israelites should have admitted Dagon into Gods Temple, that the Lord himself would have removed his Arke from them. Blessed was she in her life, and twice blessed in her end: she lost not her first love, and her workes were more at the last, than at the first: and blessed are we that enioyed her so long: and more blessed, who under her enioyed such 44. yeares, as all the bookes in the world cannot shew under a woman: but most blessed of all, in that after such a David, God hath sent us such a Salomon; after such a woman, such a man, after such a Queene, such a King, who will make an end of many a foule, and many a Shimei, which she could not well doe, and finish that Temple which she so well began: and who (I doubt not to affirme it) doe the devil, and the crafty Papist all that they can, is the chiefe Champion of Israel upon the face of the earth.

(a) Fulk in Pref. in Teſt. Rhem.

(b) Pius 5. Gregorius 13. Sixtus 5. Urbanus 7. Gregor. 14. Innocens 9. Clemens 8.

1 King. 18. 21. 1 Sam. 5. 3, 4. Apoc. 2. 4. 5. 1 King. 1. 2 Chron.

And how happy a yeare shall this be, if the losses which learning hath sustained bee as well recompenced? Junius of Leiden, Tossanus of Heidelberge, Perkins of Cambridge, have this yeare beene taken from us, besides many other of inferiour note: happy should those three famous Universities be, if the like were fetched in their roomes. Let us leave the first to the lower, the second to the higher Germany, to praise them, to admire them, and to make supply for them. It is the third who specially concerneth us: what losse the Church of God, and in the Church, England: and in the Church of England, the Ministery: and in the Ministery, the Universities: and in the Universities, the younger students have sustained, by the untimely death of that Reverend man, I should is not unknowne to any of you. For how should he be unknowne to any (of any note) in England, whose name and estimation is such in other nations, as that at one (a) Mart we finde, that in one halfe yeare, two of (b) his bookes were translated into Latine, and foure were printed beyond the seas. The best recompence of this losse, is the fruit of his labours, which he hath left behinde, whereof some were written by himselfe, and others taken by other men from his mouth: all which, at least so many of them as may be perfected, there is hope we shall in time enjoy. Had not Iohan. Budæus, and Carolus Ionvillæus done so to Calvin: Vitus Theodorus, Iob. Fredcrus, and Iustus Jonas done so to Luther, many worthy workes of those two great instruments of God had utterly perished: and had not some done so to this worthy man, no doubt many sweet blasts of that silver trumpet of God had vanished away. For my part, though time be precious unto mee otherwayes, yet thinke I that time well spent, which I bestow in preparing to the Presse any thing of his. This discourse of Equity now made ready, as a childe borne after his fathers death, I present to your Honourable view and Patronage. If any aske why I dare tender so small a gift to so great personages, my onely answer is, I make the Iudges of Equity, the Patrons of Equity. God grant you a long and Honourable state under our worthy Salomon. Amen. From my study, Sep. 10, 1603.

(a) Mund. Francfort 601.
(b) Catholicon. Formicar. de Merce, de Vit. Prophetis Calv. in Dan. Luther in Genes. in Hoſ 82.

Your Honours, and Worships in the Lord:

W. CRASHAVVE.

To the Christian Reader whosoever.

THe true person whereof, (Christian Reader) we intitle this discourse of Equity, delivered by that faithfull Labourer in the harvest of God, Master William Perkins, is in few Lines. The substance is this: and briefe, but the matter is pithy, and the use profitable. Equity and Christian moderation whether publike or private, seeme to be a badge of Christianity without publike Equity, what is the center of Iustice, but turned into the state of Iniquity? and without private Equity, what is man: life, humane society, neighbourhood, my friendship, my kindred, my marriage it selfe, but even a potion of poyson in a golden Cup? Art thou therefore a Magistrate? here is taught thee how readily thou ought to ply thy place in the execution of lawes, as still minding the lenity of a Christian, nor the severity of a Magistrate. Art thou a private man? here also taught thee how to carry thy selfe in all dealing and bargaining with another: how to demeane thy selfe towards thy wife, thy servant, thy childe, thy friend, thy neighbour, in such manner, as if thou hadst all the comforts and contentments of this earth, yet the practise hereof shall season them all ten times more comfortably: and the want hereof shall season all their sweetnesse into gall and wormewood. Where therefore thou readest this little booke, and withall, (laying it to thy heart) doest finde the truth of it in thy conscience and conversation, then acknowledge the Spirit of God in this booke (who now speakes in peace) praise God for him, for this booke, and helpe me and others with thy daily prayers, that we may still go forward in this good worke, of publishing these such godly labours: and in the meane time, as the Church of God these Iewells, which the Lord from his mouth hath given us to keepe, not for our owne, but for the common good.

Thy brother in Christ Iesus,

W. C.

OCTAVIUS PHIL

PHIL. 4.

Let your gentlenesse of minde be known vnto all men, the Lord is at hand.

THE Apostle in this chapter, vseth sundry exhortations to many Christian duties. In the first verse, to perseverance in faith and true religion. In the second and third verses, to mutuall concord. In the fourth verse, to a spirituall joy in the Lord.

In this fifth verse, he exhorteth to the vertue of Equity, or moderation of minde. Our English translations commonly reade it thus: Let your patient minde bee knowne to all men; which though it be truly and well said, yet the words translated have a larger and fuller signification. Therefore according to the nature and force of the words, I rather chuse to reade it thus: Let your equity or moderation of minde bee knowne, &c.

The words containe two parts.

1. An exhortation, Let your equity be known to all men. 2. An excellent reason to enforce it: the Lord is at hand.

The drift and scope of the exhortation is to perswade the Philippians, and in them the whole Church, to the practice of Equity.

Now this Equity, whereunto the holy Apostle so earnestly exhorteth, is a worthy Christian vertue, so excellent, as the carefull practice thereof, is the marrow and strength of a common-weale, and where it is there cannot be but peace and contentment in all estates, and so necessary, as without the practice of it, no house, family, society, City, common-wealth, kingdome, or Church can stand or continue. Indeed a kingdome may be obtained by force and armes, by violence and cruelty: but it cannot stand or continue without this equity, and Christian Moderation betwixt man and man. Nay, civill society, and common dealing betwixt man and man, cannot continue, unlesse one man yeeld to another. In a word, there can bee no peace in families, no sound or lasting love betwixt man and wife, nor any comfortable quietnesse, where one doth not yeeld to the other, and one beare with another in many things. And if it bee so in mariage, which is the neerest conjunction, and the most excellent and perfect societie, which is in this world, then is it much more true, in all other societies of men, that there can be no peace, no Christian neighbourhood, no true friendship, unlesse one beare with another, and one towards another doe carry himselfe in an even and moderate course.

Seeing therefore this is so necessary and excellent a vertue, I have purposed to speake of it at large. Let us then examine these two points: 1. The nature of it. 2. The kindes of it.

For the first: Christian equity is a rare and excellent vertue, whereby men use a true meane, [illegible] in all their affaires and dealings with men, to the maintaining of justice, and peace among them. This I take to be the true description of the generall nature of this vertue: and therein, First, that it is a vertue, which is conversant about practising of a moderation in all our courses and dealings with men. For we cannot use no meane nor moderation with God, but if we doe evill, it is all too much, and if we doe good, it is all too little: againe, equity and moderation is to be performed of God towards men, and not of men towards God. For if men deale not equally towards God, the fault is theirs, and not his, God is not the worse for it: but if God deale not moderately with men, the world would not last one houre. And lastly, where there are no faults, there is no forgivenesse: where no infirmities, there needs no moderation: but in God there are no faults, no errours, no imperfection, but his love, his mercy, and his workes of love and mercy towards mankinde, and to his Church especially are most perfect, therefore there needs no moderation, nor forbearance towards God, but towards men, who being flesh and blood, and full of infirmities, from which regeneration in this life doth not fully free us, doe therefore stand in need of this vertue to bee practised amongst them: else their societies and fellowships cannot endure. And further, all men in this case are alike, wherefore one hath good cause to beare with another. The Prince is flesh and blood as well as his subjects: the husband is flesh and blood as well as the wife is; the Pastor is a man, as his people and hearers are. Hence it followeth, that therefore one is subject to infirmities, as well as another, and therefore I conclude, that in all our courses and dealings of man with man in this world, there must be practised a Christian moderation.

Secondly, I say in the description, that the end of this vertue is, to maintaine justice and to preserve peace: which two are the very sinews and strength of a Christian kingdome: for where we doe not to other men, as we would others should do to us, there is no justice. And where we will not passe by small faults, and forbeare infirmities, there can bee no peace: such is the excellency of this vertue, as it serves to maintaine two other such great and principall vertues, as are even the heart and the braine of the common-wealth, namely, Iustice and Peace.

But for the more exact & particular knowledge of the nature of this necessary vertue: let us descend to the particular branches and kindes of it.

Christian Equity therefore, is either publike or private.

Publike

Publike Equity is that, which is practised in publike meetings and assemblies of men, as in Courts of justice, Assises, Sessions, Counsels, Parliaments, and such like.

The matter whereabout this publike Equity is conversant, is the right and convenient, and the moderate and discreet execution of the lawes of men.

Lawes of men, made by lawfull authority according to Gods Law, and for the common good, are, and are to be esteemed, bones and sinewes to hold together, props, and pillars, to uphold the common wealth, and all societies. God therefore hath given to Kings, and to their lawfull deputies, power and authority, not only to command & execute his owne lawes, commanded in his Word: but also to ordaine and enact other good and profitable lawes of their owne, for the more particular government of their people, and to bee helps for the better executing of Gods lawes. And also to annexe a punishment and penalty to the said lawes: which penalty is to be according to the quality of the fault, greater or lesse: insomuch that they may in many cases (if the common good so require) inflict even death it selfe. And further, God hath given these gods upon earth, a power, as to make these lawes, and annexe these punishments: so also upon mens defaults and breaches, hath he given them authority to execute the law so made, and to inflict upon the offender the punishment annexed.

Now because this point is of great moment in a common-wealth, & the true knowledge and due practice thereof, is the glory and beauty of a kingdome: therefore for the better direction herein, both of Prince and people, Magistrate and people governed; let us enter further into the consideration thereof.

In the lawes of Common wealths, two things are to be considered, the sight whereof wil give great light, to know more perfectly what this publike equity is,

These are 1. the extremity of the law: 2. the mitigation of the law.

Both these are put into the hand of the Magistrate by God himselfe, to bee ordered according to his discretion, and as the circumstance requireth: and of them in order. The extremitie of the law, is, when any law of man, is urged and executed straightly & precisely, according to the literall sense, & strict forme of the words, and the exactest meaning that can be made out of the words, without any manner of relaxation, at that time, when there is good and convenient cause of mitigation, in regard of the person offending.

The point cannot wel be expressed in fewer words.

The principall and most materiall clause in this description of extremity, is in those words: At that time, when there is just cause of mitigation, in regard of the person offending. For if there be no good cause of mitigation, then it is not called extremity, but justice of the law: but when there is good cause, why in a Christian consideration of some circumstances, this justice should be mitigated, and yet is not; but contrariwise is extremely urged, and prested to the furthest, then it is extremity: Now this extremity of the law, is in this case so farre from justice, as indeed it is flat injustice. And herein is the proverbe true; summum jus, summa injuria: that is, the extremitie of the law, is extreme injury. And of this doth the holy Ghost meane, Eccles. 7. 7. Bee not over just, that is, presse not justice too far, nor urge it too extremely in all cases, lest sometimes you make the name of justice, a cover for cruelty.

Now besides this, there is a second thing in the hand of the Magistrate, namely, the moderation, relaxation, or mitigation of this extremity: and that is, when the proper forme of the words, and the strictest meaning of the law is not urged, and the punishment prescribed in the law, is moderated, or lessened, or deferred, or (it may be) remitted, upon good and sufficient reason; and in such cases as whereof the law speakes not directly, nor the law-maker did purposely aime at. The ground of this mitigation is, because no law makers being men, can foresee, or set downe all cases that may fall out. Therefore when the case altereth, then must the discretion of the law-maker shew it selfe, & doe that which the law cannot doe.

This mitigation is in the hand of the Magistrate, as well as the extremity: nay, it is a part of his duty as well as the former; and he offends as well, that neglects to mitigate the extremity, when just occasion is, as hee that neglects to execute the extremity, when there is need. As therefore, hee is no way fit to bee a Iudge, who hath no knowledge or care to execute the law: so he is but halfe a Iudge, who can doe nothing but urge the law, & the plain words of the law, and is not able also to mitigate the rigour of the law, when need so requireth. Therefore every Magistrate is to practise this with the other, and not to separate those things which God hath joyned.

But now lest this moderation, and mitigation of mans lawes, (which is the practice of publike equity) should turne to the maintenance of malefactours, the abolishing of lawes, the despising or weakening of authority, (which in these daies little needs) wee must therefore now remember this caution, That there must be no mitigation, but honest, profitable, and convenient. If any man aske, when it is so? I answer in three cases.

First, when the mitigation stands with the law of nature.

Secondly, when it agreeth with the morall law, or any part of the written word.

Thirdly, when an inferiour law is overruled, or countermanded by a higher law.

In these three cases, the moderation of mens lawes, and the mitigation of the punishment due, by the extremitie of these lawes, is honest and good, and may, and ought to bee practised.

But if it be contrary, and not warranted by some of these: then that mitigation is flat injustice, and a manifest wrong unto the law.

That the difference of these two, the extremity, and mitigation, may better bee discerned, let us consider it in some examples.

It is the law of England, and many other countries, that the theefe shall die.

Now though the word of God hath not the same punishment in plaine tearmes: yet is the law good and warrantable, as shall appeare in the sequell, and I thinke is doubted of by none.

The drift of this law is, to represse that common and generall sinne of theevery, a prevailing sinne, as any other, and so far prevailing, as the rigour of good lawes is necessarily required, for the repressing of it: so that this law was made, for the cutting off of such rotten members as doe but corrupt others, and of whose amendment there is no hope.

Now, suppose a young boy pinched with hunger, cold, and poverty, steales meate, apparell, and other things for relieve, being pressed to it by want, and not having knowledge, or grace to use better meanes: to put this person to death for the fact, is the extremity of the law, in respect of the circumstances of the person, who did it, being a childe: and of the end for which he did it, to relieve his wants.

Now the moderation in this case is, when upon these considerations, that first, he is not an olde, nor a practised theefe, but young and corrigible, one that being reformed, may live long, and prove a good member in the common-wealth: and secondly, that his theft was not hainous, but the things he stole were of small value: and thirdly, that he did it not upon a malicious, cruell, and injurious intent, but to releeve his hunger and want. The equity or moderatiō. I say in this case, is not to inflict death, (for that were extremity,) but to determine a punishment, lesse than death: yet such a one as shall be sufficient to reforme the party from this sinne, to punish the fault, to terrifie others, and to satisfie the law.

Thus in this example it appeares manifestly what this moderation is, and what is extremity, which is contrary to it: and the same might we see in many more.

Now having thus considered these two together, hereupon we may see what this publike equity is, namely nothing else, but a moderation and mitigation of the extremity of a law, upon honest and convenient reasons, and in such cases, as were not directly intended in the law. The observation and due practice of this equity, is the glory, credit, and honor of all publike assemblies, as assises, sessions, and all courts of justice; and without the observation of this, when neede is, all that they doe is flat injustice in that case. For they lame and maime the law, they fulfill but the one part of the law: for in every law there are these two things: the extremity in plaine termes, and the mitigation implied, and these two together make the law perfect: and the glory of the law stands as well in practising of the mitigation, as in the execution of extremity; nay, sometime it stands in the mitigation, and not in the extremity, insomuch as the moderation is then the equity of the law, and the extremity is meere injustice. And as this is the glory of the law, so is it the glory of Iudges and Magistrates, thus to execute the Lawes, and to temper them with such discretion, as neither too much mitigation, doe abolish the law, nor too much extremitie leave no place for mitigation. Therefore (to make an end of this point) two sorts of men are here reproveable. First, such men (as by a certaine foolish kinde of pity, are so carried away,) that would have nothing but mercy, mercy, and would have all punishments, forfeitures, penalties, either quite taken away, & remitted, or at least lessened, and moderated, they would also have the extremity of the law executed on no man. This is the highway to abolish lawes, and consequently to pull downe authority, and so in the end to open a doore to all confusion, disorder, and to all licentiousnesse of life. But I need not to say much herein, for there are but few that offend in this kinde, mans nature being generally inclined rather to cruelty than to mercy. This fault proceedes, either from a weaknesse of wit, and an effeminateneste of minde, and then a man is unfit to be a Iudge: or else from vaine glory, and a base and affected popularity, and such a man is unworthy to be a Iudge.

But in the second place, this doctrine and the very scope of this text, condemnes another sort of men, which are more cōbersome, that is to say, some men have nothing in their mouthes but the law, the law; and justice, justice; in the meane time forgetting, that justice alwayes shakes hands with her sister mercy, and that all lawes allow a mitigation. The causes of this evill are two.

1. The generall corruption of mans nature, which is alwayes ready to deale too hardly with other mē: as also too mildly with themselves, and partially in their owne causes.

2. And secondly, for the most part, such men doe gaine more by law, than by equity, more by extremity, than by mitigation: as the souldier lives better by warre, than by peace; and as the flesh flie feedes on the wound, that cannot feede on the sound flesh: so these men gaine by law, that which they can never get by equity: for equity and moderation breed unity, and if all men were at unity, what should become of them? but extremity extremitie breeds variance for (in reason) one extremitie drawes on an other, & so in mens variances, they are set on worke: and the more the better for them. These men therefore, sticke so precisely on their points, and on the very tricks and trifles of the law, as (so the law be kept, and that in the very extremitie of it,) they care not though equitie were troden under foote: and that law may reigne upon the earth, & they by it; they care not, though mercie take her to her wings, and flie to heaven. These men (for all their goodly shewes) are the decayers of our estate, and enemies to all good government. For though they have nothing in their mouthes, but Iustice, Iustice, and have banished mercy, yet let them know, that Iustice will not stay where mercy is not. They are sisters, & goe alwaies hand in hand: they are the two pillars, that uphold the throne of the Prince: as you cannot hold mercy, where justice is banished, so cannot you keepe justice where mercy is exiled: and as mercy without justice, is foolish pittie, so justice without mercy, is cruelty. So that as these men have banished mercy, so within a short time, they will send justice after her, and cruelty and oppression will come in their roomes, which are the very overthrow of all estates.

These men, when they are made practisers of the law, Iudges, or Magistrates, are to learne this lesson, which the holy Ghost here teacheth, Let your equitie be knowne to all men: and let all Magistrates thinke it their honour, to be counted mercifull Iudges: let them rejoyce, as well to shew mercy when there is cause, as to execute extremitie when there is desert: and let them labour for that Christian wisedome and discretion, whereby they may be able to discerne, when mercy and mitigation should take place, and when extremitie should bee executed. If inferiour judges or Magistrates bee negligent herein, then must we have recourse to the Prince, the highest Iudge on earth, and under God the first fountaine of Iustice and mercy: whose care must bee, that as justice and mercy (not one of them, but both together) doe uphold his throne, & fasten the Crowne upon his head: so he likewise see them both maintained, and take order, that in the execution of his owne lawes, there bee alwaies a roome as well for mercy and mitigation, as for justice and extremity. This must he doe, because his lawes cannot be as Gods lawes are, Gods lawes are perfect and absolute, and of such an universall righteousnesse, as that in all times, and in all places, they are of equall strength, and of the same equitie in all cases: and therefore are to be executed without dispensation, relaxation, or any mitigation, which cannot be offered unto them, but with injurie and violation. But mens lawes, comming from their owne wits, are imperfect, and so in all cases, they doe not hold the same equitie, and therefore must needs bee executed with a discret and wise moderation. This moderation is publike equity, and this publike Equity, is the scope of this text, and the due practice of it in the execution of mans lawes, is the glory of all Christian Common-wealths.

Hitherto of the first and principall branch of Publike Equity.

To proceede further. As this publike Equitie principally stands in the moderation of the lawes of men; so it descends more specially even to all the publike actions of a mans life: so that by the rule and direction of this Equity, thus described, men may know how to guide themselves, in suing bonds, and taking forfeitures: and how men may with good conscience, carie themselves in suerty-ships, in taking of fines, in letting of leases, and in all manner of mutuall bargaines, betwixt man and man. By vertue of this, a man may see how to frame all these and such like actions, in such sort, as himselfe shall reape credit, and gaine enough, and his neighbour helpe and succour by him.

For in forfeitures of bonds, forfeitures of lands, or leases, in surety-ships, in rents, in fines, and all other dealings of men together, there are these two things.

First, the extremitie, that is, that which the law will afford a man in that case: and there is secondly, the moderation of the extremity, upon good and convenient reasons: let us consider of them in some few examples.

A man is bound to another, in an hundreth pound, to pay fifty at a day. The same man, not by negligence, but by some necessitie, breakes his day, and afterwards brings the principall debt: now to take the forfeiture, is in this case, extremities: though the law doth yeeld it. And if a man stand upon this extremitie, hee deales not honestly and equally, but hardly and extreamely with his neighbour: and the law cannot free him in this case, from manifest injustice.

What is then the moderation in this case? Even this, to take thine owne, and remit the forfeiture: the reason is, because the cause and ground of appointing a forfeiture, was not for advantage, but only for the better security of the principall: which seeing thou hast, thou hast that the law did intend thee.

Againe, his breach was not wilfull, or with purpose to hurt thee, but against his will. If therefore thou beest directly damnified by his missing thy day, (without all æquivocation) then take thy reasonable dammages out of his forfeiture, if not, then remit the whole forfeiture; and this moderation is publike equity. And without this, there can bee no buying nor selling, borrowing nor lending, betwixt man and man. See another example. One takes a lease of thee, for yeares, to pay thee such a rent; and for not payment of that rent, his lease to be void. The poore man misseth his rent day: now what saith the law? his lease is forfeited: but to take this advantage, is the extremitie of the law: the moderation is, to remit the same forfeiture, in part, or in whole, as thou shalt see the reason in equity and conscience: This moderation is in this case, Publike equitie, and without this, there can be no letting of lands, betwixt man and man.

So for fines and rents, the law saith, Thou maiest make the most of thine owne: If thou stretch this law as farre as the very words will beare, then maiest thou make such fines and rents, as may grinde the faces of the poore, so as no man shall live under thee: but thus to doe, is Extremitie, and beyond the purpose of the law.

The moderation in this case is, not to take all thou maiest get, but so to fine and rent thy lands, as he that takes them, may live of them: The reason of this Mitigation is, because envie and hatred; may often make many men offer more for a farme, then it is worth, to crosse and hurt their neighbour, or to get all into their owne hand. Here therefore, though the law doth yeeld thee all that, which a man doth willingly offer, yet must thine own conscience bee a law unto thee, to make thee a moderatour of that extremitie.

Let these three examples serve for many. Now in these and all other publike dealings betwixt men in the world; a man observes Publike equitie when hee dealeth not with his neighbour, according to that extremitie, which the strickt words of the law will beare: but according to that Moderation, which good conscience requireth; and which the law it selfe in some cases doth admit. By the knowledge of these two, a man that hath any conscience, may see how to carie himselfe, in all these civill affaires, in an even, upright, and equall course, and warrantable not onely by the law of the land, but even by the law and word of God.

And I make this distinction of the law of the land, and the word of God, because wee are to know this for a rule: That every extremitie, which a law in the strictest acception doth afford, is not warrantable to bee urged by the word of God: and yet notwithstanding it is good, convenient, and requisit, that the extremitie bee warranted by the law, because in some cases, it must needs be executed. The lawes of men, may ordaine and appoint extremities: but the law of God must tell us, when to urge them, and when to moderate them: So then when a man takes the extremitie, hee doth that, that is alwaies warrantable by the law, but in some cases not warrantable by Gods word, which commandeth a Mitigation, when there is good reason for it. But he that taketh the extremitie, when there is no just cause of mitigating it and againe doth mitigate it, when there is cause, his course is not onely warrantable by the lawes of men, but even by the lawes of God also. For it is the duty of every Christian man, so remember in all his bargaines & dealings, that his manner of dealing must not onely be warranted by the lawes of the land, but even by Gods word also: & this is to be knowne and taken for a generall rule in all this treatise. And he that will duly consider the true difference of extremitie and moderation, as they are here described, may see how to carie himselfe in all his dealings, so as they may bee warrantable: both by our owne lawes, and by the word of God.

To returne then to the matter, and to end this point of publike equitie: If any man shall object, that this moderation is a wrong to the law: I answer, it is not; for it is neither against the law, nor altogether besides the law, but onely besides the strictest meaning of the law. Nay it is included in the law, as wel as the extremity is, though not in the same maner: for the extremity is warranted by the law, mitigation is but tolerated: the law alloweth extremitie, but it onely admitteth a mitigation. So then, both extremitie and mitigation are within the law, but it is in the hand principally of the Magistrate, and in some cases of other men also, to discerne the severall circumstances, when the one is to bee executed, and when the other: for sometime one is the justice of the law, and sometime the other; and according as these two are justly and wisely executed or neglected, so is the justice of the law executed or neglected.

The want of this equitie in mens publike actions, is the cause of much crueltie, oppression, and inequalitie in dealings betwixt man and man: because extremitie is for the most part onely regarded, and mitigation is banished out of all bargaines. And it is impossible, to keepe good conscience in forfeitures of bonds, and in forfeiture of lands, surety-ships, fines, rents, and such kinde of actions, unlesse there be due regard had to the practice of this publike equity. Men therefore must consider that they are Christians, and live in a Christian Commonwealth; And they must not stand onely vpon the law, and the advantage that the law gives. As they are men, they have a law of the country, which may allow extremities; but as they are Christians, they live under a law of God, the eternall law which must judge them at the last day; the righteous law, which no creature shall ever bee able to blame of injustice, or of extremities; and men must know, that God himselfe commands this equitie of one man to another.

But if men, for the feare of God, will not deale equally and moderately, with them that are in their power; but stand strictly upon forfeitures and other extremities; then must the godly Magistrate exercise his power, and by the force of his authoritie, cause them to mitigate their extremitie, and to put in practice that equitie which becommeth Christians. And let every Iudge and Magistrate know, that by the law of the everlasting God, hee not onely may, but is bound thus to doe to them them who will wrong or vex themselves. It maketh therefore good counsell for all men rather to practise this Christian Equitie of themselves, then to be compelled to it by authoritie: for every wrong and bad worke, the more free and voluntarie it is, the more acceptable it is to God, and more commendable before men: and let all men remember, that where as the strict words of mens lawes, come to give them leave to vrge the extremitie, yet cannot that excuse them, nor free them from the danger of Gods law, which commands them to practise Christian equitie and moderation.

Now before we make an end of this Publike Equity, one point is necessary to be handled, in few words. Some may obiect, If moderation be intended, and included in our law, as well as extremity, why then is extremity only mentioned in the law, and not this mitigation, which they doe so much urge vnto us? The answer is ready. The law expresseth and vrgeth the extremitie, to fray men thereby, from running within the danger of the extremitie, and concealeth the mitigation, lest it should bee an encouragement to offend: yet intending it as well as the extremitie, and leaving it in the hand of the Magistrate, to put in practise, when iust occasion is offered, as well as the extremitie. Herein appeareth the great wisedome of the law-makers; our ancient forefathers, who well and wisely foresaw, that though mitigation be as necessarie as extremitie, and oftentimes more; yet because of the ill consciences of the most men, and the readinesse of all men to offend, thought it fitter to expresse the extremitie in plaine tearmes; thereby to keep ill men within the compasse of obedience, and closely to leave the mitigation to the discretion of the Magistrate. So then our law-givers concealed the mitigation, and expressed it not in their lawes, in good policie, and to good purpose. If we therefore doe onely take the extremitie, we take onely one part of their intent, and shew our selves unwise and shallow witted; who cannot see the wisedome, which they closely concealed, in wise and Christian policie.

He is not worthy the name of a lawyer, at least of a Christian lawyer, much lesse worthy the place and feare of a Iudge, who knoweth not this. For if the law contained not both these, it were unrighteous; and if not the law, for mitigation is for the good man, and extremitie for the evill, the careleste and unconscionable man: if there were no extremitie, how could the evill man be kept within compasse? and how should the poore honest man live, if there were no mitigation? So then, it is warrantable by the word of God, and good conscience, that extremitie should be in force, and should stand by the law, but so as it alwaies admit of mitigation, when it calls.

Let therefore our conclusion be, to exhort every man, into whose hands is put the execution of lawes, to shew himselfe as wise, in executing them, as were our forefathers in the making of them: that is, as well to regard the Mitigation which is concealed, as the Extremitie which is expressed: so shall the law-makers wise intent be performed, publike equitie preserved, and much injustice, and hard dealing prevented.

Now in regard of this, that hath already been delivered touching publike Equitie, lawyers must not thinke, that I have gone beyond the compasse of my calling, and encroched upon their liberties. For they are to know, that the lawes of men, are policie, but Equity is Christianitie. Now Christianitie was, before there were any lawes of men: & therfore they must bee ordered accordling to the rules of Christianitie. Againe, Divines must take lawyers advice, concerning Extremitie and the letter of the law; good reason then that lawyers take the Divines advice, touching Equity which is the intent of the law. Moreover, their law is but the ministery of Equity; but our law the word of God is the fountaine of Equity: therefore the principall rules of Equitie, must they fetch from our law: considering that law without equitie, is plaine tyrannie. Lastly, in the first Christian Commonwealth that ever was, namely, the Iewes, the Divines, that is, the Priests of those dayes, were the only lawyers: for their positive lawes were the judiciall lawes, given by God himselfe, whose interpreters were the Priests and Levites. If therefore, once the Divines had so much to doe with positive lawes, it may not now bee thought amisse, if they give advice out of the word of God, touching the equall execution of the lawes of men.

And so much touching the doctrine of publike Equitie, grounded upon the word of God.

Now followeth the second kinde of Equitie, called private, namely, that which is to be exercised betwixt man and man, in their private actions.

But ere wee goe further, some may demand the difference betwixt publike and private actions. Private actions of men are such, as are practised amongst men, without any help of the law: as contrariwise, publike actions are such, as cannot be performed but by the helpe of the law, and the hand of the Magistrate. Whereupon it followeth, that publike actions may bee betwixt private men, and private actions betwixt publike persons: there is a publikenesse and a privatenesse (as I may terme it) both of men and actions. A man is private, untill hee bee exalted unto some authoritie, in Church or Commonwealth: which hee, a publike person. An action is private, so long as it is begun and handled betwixt two men, and needeth not the publike voice, nor censure of the law to determine it, and then it is publike. For example; a Magistrate may have dealing with an other man, man, or two Magistrates together, if they determine it together betwixt themselves, it is a private action, because they doe it, not as they are Magistrates, but as they are men: and so there is a private action betwixt publike persons. So a private man no magistrate, may have a trespasse, a debt, a forfeiture, or any other action or demand against another man: wherein (because he cannot come to a reasonable and equall end, by private meanes) hee craves the helpe of the law, and the voice of the Magistrate: and so here is a publike action betwixt private men. Now this vertue of Equity respecteth not the publikenes or privatenesse of the persons, but of the actions: therefore as that is Publike Equitie, which is exercised in the determining of publike actions, which come to the judgment of the law: so that is private Equity, which is practised in the managing of private Actions, which are begun and concluded privately betwixt man and man, and never come to publike hearing, nor triall of the law.

Now let us come to search more neerely into the nature of this vertue. Private equity is a moderate, even, and equall carriage of a mans selfe, in all his private words and deeds, towards all other men, and all their words and deeds. First, I say it is [a moderate cariage] of a mans selfe, that it, betwixt both extreames, neither bearing all things, nor revenging every thing. Secondly, I say towards all other men: wherein I comprehend all men, and all sorts of men: husbands, wives: Magistrates, subjects: teachers, hearers: masters, servants: parents, children: men, women, neighbours in townes, fellowes in societies, in service, in labour. In a word, none are excepted, who any way doe live or converse together, but of them all it is true, that if there be not a moderation, and a forbearance one of another, there can bee no peace amongst them, but their lives shall bee all (as it were) a hell upon the earth.

Seeing therefore, the necessity and excellencie of this vertue is such, that the due practice of it is the ornament of families, and societies, and the comfort of a mans life in this world; let us enter into a more particular consideration thereof. Private Equity hath foure degrees, or principall duties.

First, to beare with naturall infirmities,

Secondly, to interpret doubtfull things in the better parr.

Thirdly, to depart from our owne right sometimes.

Fourthly, to forgive private and personall wrongs.

Of all these briefly, and in order.

The first dutie of private Equitie, is to beare with the defects and infirmities of mens natures, with whom wee live, as long as they breake not out into any great inconvenience, or enormitie. These infirmities are manifold: as for example: frowardnesse or morosity of nature: hastinesse, slownesse of conceit: dulnesse of wit, suspiciousnesse, desire of praise, and such like. These and many other naturall infirmities, must a Christian man beare and, tolerate patiently in them, with whom hee converseth, as with his wife, his childe, his servant, his friend, his neighbour, &c. And so long must he beare with them, as they are kept within a meane, and breake not out into extremitie. Of this the holy Ghost speaketh, Prov. 19.31. It is the glory of a man to passe by an infirmitie: that is, the lesse in his brother weaknesses of nature, which doe not arise from settled malice, or cankred corruption, It is a mans glorie and praise, alwaies farre to moderate himselfe, as not to see them, nor to take notice of them, or least not to bee moved, nor disquieted at them, and oftentimes, so little to regard them, as though they were not done. To this end saith the Apostle, 1 Cor. 13.7. Love suffereth all things: that is, all things that may bee borne with good conscience, and are done by them whom we love. Now any thing may bee borne with good conscience, which is either no privatte or so small, that the wrong is onely ours, and no dishonour thereby ensueth to Gods glorie, nor ill example to the Church: all such things love suffereth. And indeed it is the propertie of true love, to passe by many wants: and the more that a Christian is rooted in true love, the more infirmities will he passe by, in them whom he loves: he useth no limits to himselfe, how many, or how long to beare, but even all that are infirmities of nature: many hard words, many angrie fits, many needlesse surmises, many unkindnesses, will he put up: and (as it were) not see them, whose heart is possessed with true love, wisedome and the feare of God: and thus must every one doe that will practice Christian Equitie. For this is mans glory, and commendation. Let us lay this doctrine neerer to our consciences, by considering the nature of this vertue in some few examples.

A man hath a wife, or a woman a husband, in whom there is the feare of God, and honest faithfull love, but hee or she is subject to anger, or to hastinesse, or to an austerity in their behaviours, or it may bee it is not in their nature to practice those outward compliments of kindnesse, which others can doe with great facility. These and such like, are but weaknesses of nature, in them that feare God: therefore must love cover them, and beare with them, and oftentimes not take notice of them; and the rather, because he or she that hath not such, hath either the like, or greater weaknesses, all which if one forbeare not in another, it is not possible to live in peace and comfort. But if this part of Equitie were practiced, it is scarce credible how much it would augment the happinesse, and adde to the comfort of them that are married.

Againe, a man hath a servant carefull and willing enough to obey and please his master, also trusty and faithfull: but hee is slow in his businesse, and doth dispatch things not so fast as a man may doe, or the matter may require: perhaps not so readily under with that facility that his master requireth. What is or hee done in this case? To see it, and thereby to be occasioned for it, and to quit and grieve him with it, or to be apt and quick in his reach, or threatning him for it, is also a vexation which here the Apostle Iames dehorteth. The Ephesians then in this case to be perfumed, do in contradiction that love not a Faith of mutuality but of nature; not of diligence nor carefulnesse, but of a naturall weakenesse: then Master must gently tell him of it, and privately & faithfully admonish him, what are the best helpes for nature in this case. And though hee see and hear speedy amendment, which his admonition yet is hee to beare with him, and long as he is trustie, diligent, dutifull, and willing, and for these so many good properties, hee must beare with his wants, and not bee too sharpe, either in reproving, or in correcting him for them.

In the third place: A man hath occasion, to converse often with another man, by reason that they are neighbours, or speciall friends, or of the same calling, and course of life: but one of them is hastie, & soone angry; and it may be in his talke, either for the matter or the manner of it, he cannot but shew his anger. Extremity in this case, is, for a man to deale roughly with him, to contradict and crosse him, to deny what he saith, to stand stiffly to our owne opinion, and to be angry against with him.

But on the other side, Christian Equity teacheth a man not to see it, nor take notice of it, nor to be angrie against, nor to threate him for it; but to put it off by gentle words, soft demands, and other talke: & to yeeld to him, as farre as a man may doe, in good conscience, without betraying of the truth. And by the way, in conference hold it alwaies for a rule of Christian wisedome, and private Equity, never to sticke stiffly to any opinion; unlesse it it be in a plaine truth, & of great moment. Now thus doing to our brother, and sparing his weakenesse, and continuing on our speech, as though we saw not that he was angry: thereby the conference holds on, and love is continued as afore. But if contrariwise, wee take the advantage of his infirmitie, and display it, and rub him for it, if we be as short as he, and stand stiffly upon points, then the conference is broken off without edification, and heart-burning riseth betwixt them, in stead of true love. Thus we see in these examples, how in a Christian moderation, we are to beare, and to forbeare the naturall weaknesses of our brethren, if wee purpose to live in any comfort with them in this world.

Yet this forbearance must bee with two conditions. First, that these wants be wants of nature, not of malice, nor of old, rooted, settled, and cankred corruption. Secondly, if they whom we forbeare, containe themselves within convenient bounds: & doe not exceed, nor breake out into any outrage, or extremities for then they are not to be forborne, but to bee told, and reproved for them, and a meanes duly is not to wink at them, but to take notice of them, and to shew open dislike of them. But in as much as these are wants of nature, as is infirmitie in the one to shew them, so is it the glory and praise of the other, to pardon them: yea it is a token of wisedome & good government, and a signe that a man is a lover of peace, and consequently of religion, and of God himselfe, to passe by them. This practise of this duty, maintaines peace in kingdomes, countries, states, cities, colledges, families, and all societies of men. Thus much for the first duty.

The second dutie of private equitie is, to confesse and interpret words sayings that are doubtfull, in the better part, if possibly it may be: this is to be understood of all men, though they be our enemies: and this must a man doe, if he will live in peace in this world.

Our nature is given to take matter the worst, to deprave mens deeds and words, and to pervert them to the worst sense that may be: and evill is commonly the cause of debate and dissention in the world.

But the dutie of Christian Equitie is contrarie hereunto; namely to thinke the best they can of all men, to construe all doubtfull actions in the better part, and to make the best sense of all doubtfull speeches, if we have any probable reason to induce us to it. The Apostle makes this the propertie of love, 1 Cor. 13.5. Love thinkes not evill, that is, not only then, when there is manifest & good cause to thinke well, but when it is doubtfull, if it may by any meanes have a good meaning, if by any means it may be well thought of, love will make a man thinke well of it: & the more specially a man loves another, the more equally, indifferently, and Christianly, will he interpret all his sayings and doings. The want of this dury, and the practise of the contrary, is the cause of more troubles, tumults, garboiles, fallings out, & heart-burnings, in kingdomes, countries, societies, and families, betwixt man and man, then any one thing in the world besides. Dealing thus with the words of Christ cost him his life: for when Christ said, Destroy this temple, and I will build it in three daies, they interpreted it of the Temple of Ierusalem, when as hee meant of the temple of his bodie. And the wrong and sinister interpretation of Davids embassage, by his neighbour king Hanun, was the cause of that great warre betwixt two mighty kingdomes, the Israelites, and the Ammonites, which cost so many thousand their lives. For when David sent Ambassadours to comfort him after his fathers death, he and his wicked counsellors interpreted it, that hee sent spies, and and intelligencers, to finde out the weaknesse of the land. It cannot be spoken, what broiles, hurliburlies and confusions in kingdomes, what contentions in Common-wealths, what factions and divisions in colleges and societies, what disquietnesse in families, what unkindnes and falling out among old friends, and what seperation even among them that should bee neerest, are daily in the world, by reason of this sinister interpretation of mens words and deeds. We therefore that doe professe our selves the children of peace, must learne to make conscience of this, the due practice whereof, is the conservation of peace.

And further in this dutie, one thing more is to bee remembered, namely, that wee must not give too sharpe a censure, even of the open and manifest evill sayings, or doings of our brother: we must not judge them to bee done ordelibly, when it may bee they are done ignorantly: nor deliberately, when it may be they are done rashly: nor presumptuously, when it may bee they are done upon infirmitie: nor to be done upon hatred or malice to us, when it may be they are done for another cause: nor may we judge an evill thing, to be done for want of conscience, when it may be, it is done for want of heedfulnes: but always we must remember, to make the best wee can, even of another mans infirmities. And as, if our brother doe well, we are to acknowledge it, and commend him for it: So if he do amisse, we must not make it worse then it is.

But the world is farre too blame herein: for they can extoll their owne well doing, and twentie wayes excuse their evill doing: but as for other men, they can debase their well doing, and advance their evill doings; nay it is a common thing, to make a badde man worse then hee is, and to speake of an evill action, and of mens faults worse then they are, yea to speake worse, even of ill men then they deserve. But it is flat Injustice, not onely to speak evill of that that is good, but even to make an evill thing worse then it is. Many cases there are, wherein a man is bound, to make the best he can, of a bad action: but to make it worse then it is, there is no case, wherin a man may doe it, without plaine injurie to his brother. If any man reply, and say, I am not to spare my selfe, nor excuse my owne faults, but to judge as hardly of my owne sayings and doings, as they deserve, why then should I not also doe so to another? The answer is ready: Because a man knoweth not another man, so well as himselfe. Words and deedes are knowne to other men, but a mans heart is knowne to himselfe alone: therefore for thy owne sayings and doings, thou art also able to judge of thine owne heart, and of thy purpose and intent in so speaking and doing: but of another man, thou canst say hee spake or did thus or thus: but his heart, his purpose, and intent in so doing, thou canst not judge: and therefore thou maiest not judge so sharply of another mans sayings and doings, as of thine owne. To make an end of this point: for the performance of this duty, two cautions must be remembred: first, that wee do speak nay of our friend or foe, in doing or speaking evill, but of just cause, in proceeding to actions of waight, or in any thing: secondly, that wee speake not of him falsely and publike enormities, as of notorious offences against the Prince or State, then onely may he be complained to the Prince and Iustifull authorities, as a wise thing coloured, dissembled, or excused. In such cases we must lay aside our duty to our brethren, and remember our duty to the head & whole bodies: and better it is, that one member bee sore pitifully, then that the whole body perish: but the speaking of private evill words or deedes of his evill and base life of redoundeth to private mischief in them we speak unto of manifest, grosse, and palpable crimes, wherein not onely the fact is actually evill, but also their intent also for to conceale or colour, or to extenuate such, is corruption of our selves accessarie to their evill of them: But we speak of doubtful words, or deeds, wherein either the action it selfe, or at the least the intent of it, may receive a likely excuse, and a probable interpretation of good.

And unto these two cautions, adde this much further, that the practice of this dutie, for the most part ceaseth, when the Minister is to worke upon the conscience of an impenitent or a presumptuous sinner: for then hee is not to moderate or mitigate, to colour or excuse, to lessen or extenuate his sinnes, but to speake of sinne as it deserves, and to lay out his sinnes in their owne colours, that so hee may humble him, and cast him downe.

But out of these three cases, this duty lyeth upon all men, in all times to interpret every thing in the better part. So then the conclusion of this second duty is this: Actions apparently good, are to be commended, doubtfull, are to bee construed in the best sense, apparently evill, are to be made no worse the they are, but rather to be excused, and let a man alwaies rather speake too well, then too evill of another man; and rather speake better, then worse then he deserves, and rather judge too mildly and mercifully, then too sharply: for if a man be deceived either way, that is the fitter way wherein to be deceived. Thus to doe, is to performe that Christian equitie which is here commanded, and to maintaine peace which is the comfort of a Christian life. And thus much of the second duty.

The third duty and degree of Private Equitie is, In sundry cases to depart from a mans owne right: that is, to yeeld oftentimes in such things, wherein by law he might stand, and oftentimes to forgoe such things, which by law he might require. Without this Equity, Iustice and peace, cannot stand. Christ our Saviour gave a notable example hereof in paying tolle, Mat. 17.27. Christ needed not to have done it, nor could any law have compelled him to it, yet because hee would not trouble the publike peace, nor give them occasion of contention, he yeelds from his right, and paies them tolle: al Christian men must learne by his example, not to stand alwayes upon their right, if they wil continue peace in Gods Church. It is not sufficient Christianity, nay it is a very wicked speech, which wee often heare men speake, It is my right, and therefore I will not lose it: so might Christ have said, and if you looke the place, you shall finde, that he first of all argueth the case, and concludes that he is free, and not bound to pay; and yet saith Christ, Rather then I will offend them, or give them cause to thinke worse of me, or my doctrine, I will pay it. Even so must a Christian man in many cases goe from his right, and that for the maintenance of publike peace in the common wealth, and of private peace one man with another.

For the maintenance of publike peace, thus must men doe in Publike Conferences, as in Parliaments and Councils, and such like generall assemblies, wherein the severall opinions of men are to bee delivered; and thus must men doe in bonds, forfeitures, borrowing, lending, losing, finding, buying, selling, in leases, fines, rents, & all manner of bargaines.

And for the maintenance of private peace, men must in their most private actions, one yeeld to another, in such things, wherin they might stand, and oftentimes be contented to lose that that is their owne; and in conferences must a man oftentimes suffer himselfe to be crossed and overthwarted in that, of which he is most certaine, and to grant that to be, which is not, and that not to bee, which hee knowes to bee, if the matter be of small moment, and concerne not religiō, nor the State: many such things must a Christian man put up daily at the hands of his brother for the maintenance of peace and love amongst them. This is a doctrine little knowne, and lesse regarded in the world; for it is a generall opinion, that a man may take his owne, and may lawfully stand upon his owne right, (which if it be meant generally in all cases, is most false) nay, this is a common speech of all men, I demaund but my right, I will not lose my right: and this is thought a reasonable speech, and he is esteemed a good man, who taketh no more than his right: for oftentimes men stand so strictly upon their right, as that they goe further than their right reacheth. But this is a very carnall practice, and controlled by the Scripture, and by the example of Christ, as wee heard before. But if any man object, that the example of Christ is not to be tied to, because he is the Mediatour, and therefore was to performe extraordinary obedience, I then answer, that not onely Christ, but other holy men have practised this durie, for he paid tolle not onely for himselfe, but for Peter also. And there is a notable example of this duty in Abraham, who when his brother Lot and his shepheards could not agree, was content to depart from his right: for whereas he being the elder might have chosen first, he not withstanding stands not upon that, but bids his brother Lot chose whether he will, and he will take what he leveth. A most equall, Christian, brotherly part of that holy Abraham, whose faith is so much commended in the Scriptures. If we therefore will be called the children of Abraham, then must wee be followers of him in his workes, and namely in this, wee must oftentimes depart from our owne right.

In the practice of this duty, one caution onely must be remembred, namely, that wee must distinguish of anothers right and our owne. In thy owne right thou maist yeeld, but when thou art to deale for another man, thou must not yeeld too much, nor bee too lavish of another mans right: but this caution holdeth, especially when the cause is not ours, but Gods, or his Churches; for when it is such a truth, which directly concerneth the honour of God, or the good of his Church, then must a man take heed he yeeld not, without warrant from Gods word. For as it is Equity often to yeeld thy right, so to yeeld in Gods cause is to betray the truth. If therefore thou maist not give anothers mans right from him, without his consent; much lesse mayest thou without warrant from God, yeeld any thing at all of his right from him. This duty therefore is to be performed in actions that concerne our selves, and wherein the losse is not Gods, or his Churches, but our owne. But it is lamentable to see many men, how lavish they are in giving from God, and care not how much they lose of his glory: but stand most strictly upon their owne points, and will not yeeld one inch, nor lose one foote of their owne right, and from hence comes so many suites in law, and other brabling contentions in the world, all which, or many of them might be stayed, if men had but conscience to practice this Christian Equity, to yeeld one to another in matters of their owne, and of small moment: and it is certaine, that if men in the world were not perswaded, some by religion and conscience, some by naturall reason and policie, to practise this duty, it were not possible for the societie of men long to continue upon the earth. So much for the third degree.

The fourth and last degree of Private Equity, is to forbeare and to forgive wrongs and injuries done unto us in word and deed. The Scripture is plaine for this, and so is naturall reason, which teacheth, that every one that beares the name of a man, should forgive another, because he being a man, may deserve and stand in neede of the same himselfe, and therefore is to doe as he would be done unto: But especially a Christian man, who lookes for forgivenesse at Gods hand for his owne sinnes, must needes forgive his brother. So that to a Christian man, there is a double bond or reason, to tie him to this duty. One is as he is a man, therefore must hee forgive him that offends him, that so another man may also forgive him when he offendeth. For there is none, but being a man, and living amongst men, he must needs offend. Another more forcible reason is, as he is a Christian, therefore must he forgive, because else, how can he in reason demand or pray for forgivenesse at Gods hand for many thousand offences of his owne, and those exceeding great, when another man cannot obtaine forgivenesse at his hands for a few small offences? This duty is of greater necessity than all the former: for upon practice of this, depends the preservation of peace: but where this is not practised, there is no religion, nor conscience, nor salvation: for where there is no forgiving of another man, that man is not forgiven at Gods hands. And hee whose sinnes are not in Christ forgiven, and taken away, that man is in the state of damnation, and till he be forgiven, he can never be saved: but he can never be forgiven, till he forgive his brother: and so it is plaine, that even salvation it selfe, in some sort, depends upon the practice of this dutie, yet not as a cause, but as a signe, or an effect of salvation. For this is no true, that every one who forgives, is forgiven of God, but this is true, that whosoever is forgiven of God, will forgive his brother. So then, neither in reason, nor in religion, can a man looke for forgivenesse himselfe, unlesse he make conscience to forgive another. Yea, God hath made every man a Iudge of this case, to condemne himselfe, if he doe it not when he prayes every day, that God would forgive him even so, as he doth forgive others.

Yet in this dutie of forgiving outward injuries, two cautions are to bee remembred. 1. That there is a time when a man is not to forbeare, & suffer, but may stand upon his guard, and defend himselfe from the iniurie: and that is, when his life is endangered, as when a man is assaulted by a theefe, or by his deadly enemy, who seekes his life, and can have no helpe, he is in that case to helpe himself, when hee must either kill or bee killed, then reason and religion bids him defend himselfe: and being in that case, that a man cannot have the Magistrates helpe, that beares the sword for his defence, God puts for that time, the sword into a mans own hand, and makes him a Magistrate for the time, and occasion. For in cases of such extremitie, God allowes every man to be a Magistrate, not onely to defend himselfe, but even to kill his enemie, if it bee impossible any way else to save his owne life: and this defence of a mans selfe, hinders not the duty of forgiving; for so farre must a man forbeare and forgive, that he bee sure to defend his owne life.

In the second place, though a man forgive the injury and wrong done unto him, yet may he safely in some cases goe to law for recompence of that wrong. It is a devillish opinion in the world, that a man cannot go to law, & be in charity: we must know, that a man may go to law, and yet be in charity: for to forgive the malice, and to sue for recompence, are things indifferent; It is not so much charitie to forbeare the recompence, as it is to forgive the malice. If therefore a man forgive not the malice, he is out of charitie, but hee may sue for satisfaction, and bee in charitie. The Scripture forbiddeth not mens going to law, but tels them how they should doe it; law is not evill, though contentious men, and unconscionable lawyers, have vilely abused it: but is Gods ordinance, and may lawfully bee used, so it be on this manner:

First, it must not bee for every trifle, every trespasse, every ill word; but in these cases a man is both to forgive the malice, and to remit the recompence, because he is little or nothing at all hurt by it. For example, A poore man steales a little meat from thee in his hunger, let the law take hold of him, but pursue thou him no more for it, than by the law thou needs must. Againe, thy neighbours cattell doth trespasse thee, thou must not goe to law for it, the malice bee it more or lesse, thou must forgive in Christianity, & for conscience sake, and the damage is so smal, as that therefore thou maist not goe to law for it. For the law is abused in being executed upon trifles, and those lawyers shame themselves, and dishonour their profession, who are willing that every trespasse of sixpence damages, bee an action in the law: this is one of the causes of the base and vile names that are given to the Law, and lawyers now adayes, because the law is employed upon such trifles. And it is to be wished, that the supreme Magistrate would take order to restraine this generall evil, that contentious men, and unconscionable lawers might not conspire together, to pester the law with these trifles; and though men be so unconscionable, as to runne to the law for every trespasse, yet should lawyers be so conscionable, and so wise, as they should drive them from the law againe. Thirdly, thy neighbour gives thee ill words, raiseth or carrieth evill tales of thee: Equitie is, not to goe to law for every evill word, but to consider, that for the malice thou art to forgive it; and for the damage it cannot bee great, because many mens tongues are no slander, neither art thou any thing worse for it, especially when he dare not stand to that hee hath said, as for the most part they doe not.

The second caution in going to law, is, that it must not bee the first, but the last meanes of peace. Law is a kinde of warre; as therefore warre is to bee the last meanes of publike peace; so should the law be the last meanes to bee used, for the attaining of private peace. All meanes must be tried ere thou goe to law, and if none will serve, then is the law ordained for thee, whereby to recover thy right, and to maintaine Equitie; for as to goe to law for a trifle, or at the first, is extremitie, and so injury; so to goe to the law for a cause sufficient, and after other meanes used in vaine, is Iustice and Equity, and no extremitie.

Here therefore let all Christians learne how to goe to law; and the rather I doe urge this point, because the law is notoriously abused, and it is almost incredible what infinite summes and masses of money, are daily spent in it most unnecessarily; insomuch as the lawyers doe exceed in wealth, any other sort or calling of men in this whole Realme.

For reformation whereof, let men but learne and practise the two former rules: 1. Law is not ordained to be a Iudge of every trifle: It is a shame to our law, that men be suffered in the common wealth to arrest each other for debts of small value, so as ten times, & otherwhiles twenty times as much is spent for the recovery of them, as the principall is. Are not wee a Christian common wealth? why then have wee not the wisedome to appoint another, an easier and a directer way for the recovery of such debts? and if there be no other way, why doth not a Christian man stay for it, or lose it, rather than go to law for it? It is a shame for our nation, that there should be at one Assises over England, so many hundred actions of trespasses, wherein the damage is little or nothing. To reforme these, is a worke worthy of a Prince, and every man should put his helping hand to it.

Secondly, let law be thy last remedy. This rule controlls another foule misorder in our land. Men are sued when they would gladly compound; when they would willingly satisfie by private order, they are compelled to answere by law. And there is a worse thing than this: the law which should be the last, is not onely made the first meanes, but whereas it should be open and publike, it is used as a close and secret meanes; it steales upon men (as the phrase is.) For men are sued afore they know, and great charges come upon them, ere they are told of it by them that sue them. Is this Equitie? yea, is it not rather extremitie? and yet (alas) how common is it in most places. Let therefore every Christian man, remember his lesson here taught by the Apostle, Let your Equity be knowne to all men. But it seemes then, will some say, that men may not goe to law. I answer, thou maiest goe to law, though not for trifles, yet for things of waight, as for the pursuit of a notorious theefe, to his due and just triall; for the title of thy lands: for the recovery of thy iust and due debts of value: and of thy childs portion; for the making straight of great accounts: for the triall of thy good name, when thou art so slandered, and by such, as that thy credit is publikely indangered: for these, & such like causes thou mayest go to law, when by other more easie meanes, thou canst not procure a reasonable satisfaction. For then it is unlawfull to sue, for the greatest cause in the world.

The truth of all this doctrine doth Paul teach the Corinths, whom hee reproveth of three faults. 1. that they went to law before heathen judges, 2. for every cause, 3. they used no private meanes of satisfaction, but ran to the law at the first.

The first of these cannot be our sinne, for we have no heathen Iudges, in as much as our state and government by the mercie of God is not heathenish, but we have a Christian common wealth. But the other two are the generall sores of this Land; let us therefore labour to heale them, and to cover our shame: let us remember, that not extremitie, but Equitie becomes a Christian; and let every man take heed of this, as he would be knowne to be a Christian: for the knowne badge of Christianitie, is mercifulnesse: the more mercifull, the better Christian. For he hath talked deeper of Gods mercies to himselfe, & therefore he is mercifull to his brother; and the worse Christian, the lesse mercifull, for he never felt Gods mercies to himselfe, therefore he cannot be mercifull to his brother. Now to goe to law for every trifle, or to steale law upon thy brother, or to sue him before thou offer him peace, it argues a hard heart, and unmercifull, and far from this duty of forgiving: but to be loath to goe to law, and to put it off as long as may be, and first to give warning, and to offer peace, and not to doe it, but in matters of waight, it argueth a merciful heart, and such a one as is ready to forgive, and such a one in whom the Spirit of GOD doth dwell.

And thus I hope I have opened this duty of forgiving, and forbearing, in such sort as a Christian may see how to practise it, with comfort to his conscience, and also without any great losse in this world, or hurt to his estate.

And thus much for the foure severall duties and degrees of private Equitie.

Now having opened the nature and kindes of Christian Equitie, let us procede further in the text. Let your Equitie (saith the Apostle) be knowne to all men. The words import, that it is our duty, not onely to know this vertue, and the nature of it, and to bee able to talke of it, but in all our affaires publike and private, and in all our dealings with men: so to put it in practice; that men may see it, and that it may be knowne to other men, and that they may be able to avouch for us, that our dealing is upright, equall, and indifferent, joyned with equitie and moderation, and free from extremitie and oppression: this is the meaning of that which we are here commanded by the Apostle. And the reason why the Apostle urgeth us to make it knowne, is, because there is a privy hypocrisie in our natures, whereby we are given to make shew of more than is in us. Against which vice we do truly labour, when wee labour to make our vertues manifest and knowne to the world, that so the tree may be knowne by his fruits: he is a holy & religious man, not who knoweth, and can talke well, but he whose religion and holinesse is knowne in the world, and seene of men: he is a mercifull man, of whose mercy men doe taste: So he is an equall and upright man, whose Equity is felt, and found by them who deale with him. Let therefore our actions with men testifie the vertues of our heart, that men who live with us, & deale with us, may be able to say for us, that we are possessed with those vertues, for this is to bee truly good, not when a man can speake well, or tell of his owne goodnesse, but when other men see it, feele it, and speake of it.

Hitherto of the meaning of the words.

Now that which was Pauls exhortation to the Philippians, shall bee mine to all true Christians, Let your Equity be knowne to all men. You have learned what it is, and how it is to be practised: it now remaines, that we content not our selves with the bare knowledge, but take notice of it, as of a doctrine belonging to us, and put it in practice in all our dealings, publike and private, yea, and make it manifest to the consciences of all men, good and bad: to that every man, with whom wee deale, may taste and feele of our Equity, and be able to testifie of us, that Equitie beares rule in all our actions: thus if we doe, we are Christians, not in name, and profession onely, but in deed, and truth.

And to perswade us all to this holy duty, let us use some few reasons to enforce it: and amongst all the reasons that might be brought, there is none better than this here used in the text [The Lord is at hand.]

But before we come to speake of it, let us consider of one other, which doth most naturally inforce this exhortation, and it is this:

God sheweth most admirable Equitie and moderation towards us, therefore ought wee to shew it one towards another: It is the reason of the holy Ghost, Be ye mercifull, as your heavenly father is mercifull. Wonderfull is the moderation that God sheweth to man, and it appeares especially in foure things, whereof two belong to al men, and the other two concerne his Church.

The first Action of God, wherein he sheweth great moderation towards all men, is this: A law was given to our first parents, Eate not of this tree, if you doe, you dye for it: and that a double death, both of body and soule. But they ate, & so brake the law, and thereby did undergoe the penaltie annexed: by force and vertue whereof they should have died presently, the death both of body and soule, and this had beene no Extremitie, but Iustice, for this was due unto them by the Iustice of that law, which was given them. But now, behold Gods Equitie, and moderation of the Iustice of that law, he strikes them not presently, as the tenour of the law, and their desert required, neither with the first, nor second death, but deferres the full execution, laying upon them (for the present) a lesse punishment, namely a subjection to the first death, and a guiltinesse of the second, that is, of damnation. Behold a marvelous mitigation, by the tenour of that law, their bodies and soules should both have presently dyed, and beene cast into hell, but God in mercy suspends and deferrs the execution of it, and onely strikes Adams body with mortality, whereby he was subject to the first death, and his soule with guiltinesse, whereby he was subject to the second death; by which mitigation it came to passe, that as Adam by his repentance, afterward quite escaped the second death, so hee tasted not of the first death till nine hundred yeares after. If a prisoner counts it a mercifull favour of the Prince, or the Iudge, when after his judgement to dye, he is reprived but one yeare, then what a mercifull mitigation was this in God, to reprive our first parents for so many hundred yeares? This was the first action of Gods mercy to men, and this concernes all mankinde generally, but especially Adam and Eve.

But the second, doth more nearely concerne all men. So soone as man commits any sinne, even then is hee guilty of eternall damnation, because he hath broken the Law: for the curse of the law is not onely a guiltinesse, but a subjection to the wrath of God, presently to be inflicted upon the sinne committed, without any intermission: so that so oft as a man sinneth, so oft doth he deserve to be plunged soule and bodie into hell, without being spared one houre. If therefore the Lord did cast ten thousand into hell in one houre, he did but Iustice, for so the law requireth: but see the mercifull moderation of the Lord: though we deserve every houre to bee cast into hell, yet is every houre and minute of our lives, full of the mercy and moderation of the Lord: so as though our sinnes crie for damnation presently, yet GOD stayeth his hand, and doth not execute the sentence of damnation upon the sinner instantly after his sinne, no not in one of ten thousand, but spareth everie man many yeares, some more, some lesse, but all more than their sinnes deserve, or the law requireth. We often reade, and alwayes finde, that God heares the crie of sinners: but wee seldome reade, that God heares the crie of sin, for if he alwaies heard it, when sinne cries for vengeance to him, hee should turne us all into hell in one houre: this is a wonderfull patience and moderation in God, and yet behold a greater.

For whereas wee by our sinnes doe every houre plunge our selves into hell, as a man that violently casts himselfe into a gaping gulfe, see Gods wonderfull mercy, we thrust our selves in, and he pues us backe; he stayeth us with his own hand, & so keepes us out. See what a sea of mercies the Lord doth powre upon man; for how can that but be an infinite sea of mercies, which is shewed to so many thousands of men: so many thousand times in one houre. If his mercy did not moderate the extremitie of his law, there should not be one man left upon earth, but all in one houre cast into hell: but God stayeth his Iustice, and stayeth his law, yea, stayeth us, who our selves would execute the law upon our selves, & so cast our selves into hell, he keepes us out, and gives unto us a longer time to repent. And this is true in all men: to some he gives longer, to some shorter, but to every one some, whereas the law gives not one houre to any man; nay, the law is so farre from giving time to repent, that it admits no repentance at all, no though a man would sinne but once, and instantly after that one sinne, humble himselfe in repentance, & crave forgivenesse, the law will not accept him to favour, nor yeeld forgivenesse, nor allow his repentance: for the law can doe nothing but this, either justifie, and reward him that fulfils it, or condemne and punish him that breakes it; further than this the law by it selfe goeth not.

It is the Gospell which commandeth us, & teacheth us to Beleeve and repent; and to the Gospell are we beholding for accepting our repentance, which the law would never doe, which is indeed so farre from accepting repentance, as it never intendeth nor aimeth at repentance directly in it selfe: and therefore in it selfe, it is worthily called The mistery of condemnation. So then behold a most straight law, and a most mercifull God: so straight a law, as (if that mercie were not) it would never give us one houre to repent in, nor receive us to favour, though we repented presently, but presently upon our sinne cast us into hell. O therefore tast and see how good and gracious the Lord is: the law cannot have his extremitie, nor the devill his will upon us, who is the Layler of the law, & is malicious, though the law be stiffe and so by the extremity of the Iustice of the one, and the extremity of the malice of the other, no man should live one houre in the world, were it not for the wonderfull mercy and mitigation of God, who contrary to the course of the law, both accepteth men when they repent, and gives all this time to repent, and thus hath God dealt as in the beginning with Adam, so in all ages: for the old world, after many preachers sent, and many blistered yeares patience; and many thousands Games upon it vengeanced, yet God gives it 120 yeares more to. How many millions of sinnes did they commit against him in that time? and yet did they repent at the last, they had beene saved: But all was in vaine, and therefore in the end God sent a flood, and swept them all away. Even so, and more patiently hath God suffered us in these latter dayes. But how comes it to passe then, will some say, that we have not a flood as well as they? Surely because his mercy was greater to them, but wonderfull to us; wee are as evill as they, yea, if wee judge aright, and consider duly all circumstances, our sinnes are far more, yea, farre more hainous than theirs were; so that we deserve a flood ten times more than they did, and if God deale but justly with us, where he brought one upon them, he should bring an hundred on us: and if Iustice bare the sway, she should sweep us away, one generation after another, with a continuall flood. But marke the moderation of God; more to us than to them, who deserve worse than they. He gave us not an hundred and twenty, but many hundred yeares, and brings us no floods of judgements; but spares us from yeare to yeare, and from age to age, that so we may either repent and escape hell, or when our time is come, drowne our selves in damnation; and so be the principall cause of our owne destruction.

It may not unfitly be noted in this place, that sometime God may be said to cast a man into hell, and sometime man himselfe: God throweth a man into hell, when for some monstrous and contagious sinne, hee takes away a wicked man in the midst of his wickednesse, by some sudden judgement, and so sends him to hell. But a man plungeth himselfe into hell, when God gives him leave to live, and libertie, and time to repent, but hee continueth carelesly in his sinnes till he die, and so casteth himselfe wilfully into damnation. Now such is the mercifull moderation of God, that for one man who undeservedly casts into hell (as he did Adam for eating of one apple, or upon his sin) an hundred wicked men cast themselves into hell, abusing that time and libertie, which he gave them to repentance, and so bringing upon themselves swift damnation. Let every man therefore every day of his life, when hee considereth the thousands of sinnes that are committed that day, and seeth no flood of water, fire nor brimstone to come upon us, let him wonder at Gods mercy, and say with the Prophet, It is the Lords mercy that we are not consumed. Furthermore, this moderation of God to all men, hath another branch. Every mans ill conscience is to him like the fire of hell, and double to the torment of conscience, it is part of the very feare of hell: now if every man had but Iustice, hee should feele presently after every sinne, the very darkenesse of hell, namely, the flaming and tormenting guilty accusing conscience: but see the mercy and moderation of God, he inflicts it not presently, but only gives the sinner a taste of, or a little pang (as he were) when he hath sinned, that the raging fury of the conscience (which is the greatest hell that is upon earth) he deferres till the houre of death, or the day of judgement. When therefore thou hast done evill, and feelest a pricke in thy conscience, and a checke, but no more, remember that even then, if GOD did not moderate his Iustice, thou shouldest feele the extreme horror of thy conscience, which would overwhelme thee, as a burden, which is too heavy for thee to beare.

Thus then wee see the marveilous mercy of God; wicked men are his sworne enemies, for sinne is that which offends him above all things in the world, yet so great is his mercy, and so large is his moderation, that even his enemies taste of it every day and houre.

Thus much of Gods Equity and moderation to all men.

Now secondly, this moderate and milde dealing of the Lord, is more speciall to his Church and children: and that also shewes it selfe in two actions. First of all, Iustice requireth that every man should pay his debt: and common reason tells us, that words and promises cannot passe for payment, but due debt must be satisfied. Now every Christian man is in a great debt to GOD: that debt is obedience to his law, for Christ came to save us from the rigour of the law, not to free us from obedience to it: but how doe we pay this debt? even as he doth, who oweth ten thousand pounds and craveth to pay it by a penny a yeare, for so wee owing perfect obedience in thought, word, and deed, and also puritie of nature, the roote of all: we (I meane the best and holiest men of all) have nothing to tender to God, but a few good desires & groanes of the heart, and a silly poore endeavour: all which is unto that which the law requireth, like unto one penny unto ten thousand pound. Yet behold the mercy of God and his compassion to his Children: these our desires, and that our indeavour comming from the truth of our hearts, doth he accept for perfect paiments; and that man who hath a heart fearing God, and a care and desire to please God in all things, and in his place and calling endeavoureth it accordingly, is the man whom God loveth, and embraceth in the armes of his mercy, though he be far from that which in debt and duty hee oweth to God. Thus doth God testifie of himselfe in Malachie: I will spare you, even as a father spareth his owne sonne that serveth him. Now wee know there is no sparing nor forbearance like unto that. A father bids his little sonne doe this or that which is farre above his strength, the childe not considering the difficultie, but looking onely at his dutie, and desiring only to please his father, goeth about it, and doth his best, and yet when all is done, he can doe nothing to it at all: now the father rejoyceth in this willing obedience of his sonne, and approveth in his childe the will and endeavour, though hee cannot doe the thing hee bids him. Even so doth the Lord spare his children; hee commandeth us to keepe his law, and it is no more than our dutie, which notwithstanding of our selves wee can doe no more; than a little childe is able to carry a milstone, yet if we willingly goe when God commandeth us, and doe our indeavour, and all we can, and groane under the burden, and desire to doe more; this our desire and indeavour proceeding from faith, and from a sonne-like willingnesse, doth the Lord accept for the perfect deed. This is no small moderation, but great and wonderfull. For whereas wee owe perfect obedience, and he might justly challenge it, and for want of it, make us pay it with soule and all, he is content to take a will, a desire and indeavour, which is all wee can, and is in effect nothing at all. In this world, that man would bee extolled for his mercy, who will take of his debtor a penny a weeke, who oweth him 100. pound: or that takes all he can pay, and accepts his good minde for the rest: Oh then how mercifull is our God, who for so great offences, and so huge a debt, as ours is to his Majestie, is content to accept of our indeavour, and hearty desire? the heart and tongue of man cannot sufficiently magnifie so great mercie. Thus much for the first.

Againe, the mercie and moderation of GOD towards his children appeares thus: There is not the best man but he sinneth, and there is not a sinne so little, but in justice it deserveth a whole world of punishments, yea, all those curses denounced in the law, even all those plagues threatned, Deut. 28. all which in justice should overwhelme him, & presse him downe, and oruish him to nothing. But behold the mercifull moderation of God, hee is content to lay no more crosses on his children, than by his owne grace (which hee also gives them, they shall bee able to undergoe, and in the end to overcome also. When his children sinne, (as when doe they not?) doth hee punish them according to the proportion of their sinne? no: for then all the curses of his law should bee heaped upon them for one sinne; and if hee did so, hee did but justice: nay, he deales so with them, as it is not becalled a punishment at all, but rather a chastisement: for a punishment must bee in some sort proportionable to the offence, but that which hee layeth on his children, is nothing at all to their sinne: and therefore it is no punishment properly, but (as it were) the chastisement or correction of a father, to teach his sonne his duty, and to command him, and bring him home from his evill wayes: and therefore not in the rigour of a Iudge, but in the love and wisedome of a father, hee first considereth what wee are able to beare: and then layeth no more on us, than we may well beare, and which is most wonderfull of all, he gives us strength to beare them. To this end speakes the Apostle to the Corinthians, 1. Cor. 10. There hath no temptation taken you, but that which befalls the nature of man. Whereby he he imports thus much, that there are temptations, and crosses, in Gods justice due for sin, and which he hath in store, ready at his pleasure, which are so great, so heavy, and so fearfull, as the nature of man could not possibly beare them, but should sink under them and perish, as did Cain and Iudas, and such like. Amongst these, an evil conscience is one, which is so intolerable, as the Wiseman saith, Prov. 18.14. A wounded spirit, who can beare it? But the crosses he layeth on his children, are alwayes such, as they beare with comfort for a time, and at last with joy do overcome them. A notable example hereof we have in Salomon, of whom God saith to David, If he sinne, I will chastise him with the rod of men: as if he should have said, I could in my justice, for Salomons great sinnes, beat him with Scorpions, and bring him to nothing, by my heavie hand; but I will consider he is my childe, and but a man; therefore will I lay upon him no more than the nature of man is able to beare. As God deale with his sonne Salomon, so this is Gods voice to all his sonnes: unto all my Church and Children, will I use such lenity and moderation, and in my chastising of them I will so abate the rigour of my justice, that by my hand and rodde, they shall not bee pressed downe, but rather raised up in new obedience, and learne thereby to feare and love me more than before.

This should every Christian man seriously consider of, and thinke with himselfe, how much this bindes a man to deale moderately with his brother, when the Lord deales so moderately with him. Thou sinnest, and God chastiseth thee most mildly, and layeth not on thee the thousand part of those crosses, which in justice he might doe. Shall the Lord deale thus moderately with thee, for thy many, and so great sinnes, and wilt thou deale so hardly with thy brother, in his few and small offences against thee? remember therefore in thy dealing with thy brother, this dealing of God with thee, and certainly thou canst not forget the one, if thou hast tasted of the other. Shew thy selfe therefore that thou hast beene partaker of Gods favour, and that thou hast felt in thy soule, the sweetnesse of his mercies, by being milde and mercifull to thy brethren; out of that great sea of mercies, which God lets flow over thee all thy life long, let fall some droppes of mercy on thy brother, and remembring how God deales with thee, deal not thou with thy brother alwaies so hardly, nor so straitly as thou mayst, or he deserves. Let these foure mercifull actions of God towards thee, bee foure strong bonds, to tye thee to the obedience of this duty, to be mild and mercifull to thy brethren, remembring every day, how moderately God deales with thee; and how farre from that extremity which thou deservest. And to move us hereunto, let every man bee well assured, that the more he hath tasted of Gods mercy, the more shall men taste of his mercy: and the more sinnes that a man hath forgiven him at Gods hands, the more will hee remit and forgive in his brother; and the more he feeles in his owne soule Gods love and mercy to him, and the more neare he is to God by his faith and repentance, the more carefull will he be to deale gently with his brethren; and the reasons thereof are these:

First, God forgiveth not a man his faults, but upon condition that he shall forgive his brother; God is not mercifull to a man, but upon condition he shall be so to all men with whom hee deales. Secondly, the mercy of God to us, in forgiving our sins, is not made knowne to the world by any meanes more, than this, when a man is not hard and extreame, but equall and mercifull in his dealing with men. Whereupon therefore it followeth, that the further a man is from God, and the lesse that he hath felt of Gods love to him, the lesse moderation will hee performe to his brother. Let every man then bee ashamed, by these extreame courses with his brethren, to make it knowne to the word, that hee is an impenitent sinner, himselfe unreconciled to God, and his sinnes unpardoned: and let no man thinke hee shall escape that censure, if he be an unmercifull man: for certainly it is imprinted in mens dealings, whether they be in Gods favour, and their sinnes pardoned, or no. Let therefore every man, when his owne crooked nature, or the devill makes him boyle against his brother in anger, and urgeth him to use him hardly and extreamly, consider with himselfe, and say, I live under God, I am more in Gods hand, than this man in mine; I have offended God, more than he me: and if I had my desert, I had now beene in hell for my sinnes: but yet I live, and by his mercy am I spared, and am here still. But hath God spared mee, that I should pinch others? hath he beene mercifull to me, that I should be cruell to others? surely therefore I will bee mercifull and moderate to my brethren more than they deserve, lest God take his mercy from mee: and then what shall become of me, but to be throwne suddenly into hell, which I deserved long agoe: nay, I will by my equity and moderation towards my brethren, move the Lord to be still more mercifull to me, without which his mercy, I cannot live one day in the world.

Hitherto of the exhortation of the Apostle, and of the great moderation of God to man.

Now followeth the Apostles reason, The Lord is at hand. These words beare two senses or meanings. The first, of the last judgement: the second, of Gods presence. The first is thus framed, as if the holy Ghost meant of the last judgement: Be you equall and moderate one towards another, for God is ready in his great and generall judgement, to judge all men, and then happy is he that finds nor justice, but tasts of mercy: and who shall tast of mercy then, but hee that shewed mercy in this world? But if secondly, the holy Ghost meant of Gods presence, then is the argument framed thus; God is present with every man, and at every action, to testifie and judge of it, and either to approve it and reward it, if it be upright, equall and mercifull; or to correct and punish it, if it be extreme, and void of equity: therefore let your equity bee knowne to all men. Both senses are good, but we will cleave unto the latter. It is then all one, as if the holy Ghost had said; Vse equity and moderation in your dealings, and remember who is at your elbow, stands by and lookes on, ready to judge you for it.

Surely there can be no better reason than this, if it be setled in a mans heart: for a theefe or a cut-purse, if he saw the Iudge stand at his elbow, and looke upon him, he would not do evill, he would stay his hand, even because he seeth that the Iudge seeth him, who can presently hang him. A strong reason with men, & it keeps even bad men from lewd practises. Consider therfore when the Iudge of Iudges, the Lord of heaven and earth, stands by and seeth, and markes all thy actions, whether they be towards thy brother, as his is toward thee. This ought to make the greatest man on earth feare how he deales cruelly or hardly with his brother. But worldly men wil not be perswaded of this, but when they are laying their plots to deceive their brother, and when by injustice and extremity, they pinch and wring him, they thinke in their hearts God seeth them not, nor do they ever thinke of God, but labour that God may bee out of all their thoughts. This is the cause of all sin in the world: for thence it is that mens hearts are hardned, and that they care not how extreamly they deale with men, because they think God seeth them not, nor will call them to account for it, and doe with them as they have done with their brother. Hence comes all injustice, cruelty, extremity, suits in Law for trifles, taking forfeitures of leases, and of bonds, and taking all advantages. Hence comes it, that one man will not spare another one day, nor forgive one fault, nor passe by any infirmity, nor put up the least injury, nor yeeld one inch from his right: but if his brother offend never so little, upon never so apparant weaknes, hee shall heare of it on both sides, as they say: and if he deserve ill, he shall have his deserts to the full. Thus hearts are hardned, affections are immoderate, bowells of compassion are shut up, love and pity are banished, and in their roomes reigne cruelty, and injustice. Moderation dwells in corners, but extremity is that which beareth sway over all the world: what is the cause of all this? Surely, first, because men are unsanctified, and have not repented of their sinnes, and so they feele not that God is moderate and mercifull to them. Secondly, they perswade not themselves that God seeth them; therefore against this blasphemous thought, the root of all evill, and cause of all sinne, arme thy selfe with this reason of the Apostle, and resolve of it, that this is the eternall truth of God, and shall stand for ever, The Lord is at hand; and seeth and observeth thee and all thy doings. Therefore as thou wilt escape his mighty and fearfull hand, season thy doings and dealings with moderation: and if thou hadst no conscience nor mercy in thee, yet be merciful, remembring who seeth thee, and deale moderately and equally in the sight and presence of so moderate, so milde, and so mercifull a God, so mercifull a rewarder of him that deales moderately, and so powerfull a revenger of him that deales hardly and extreamly with his brother. Let us then end with the Apostle as we began; Let your equity and moderation be knowne to all men, for God is at hand.

And thus much out of Gods word, of Publike and Private Equity; wherein I have not spoken all I might, but given occasion to others, to enter into further consideration thereof.

Trin-uni Deo gloria.

A TREATISE OF Mans Imaginations.

SHEWING,

His naturall evill thoughts:
His want of good thoughts:
The way to reforme them.

Matth. 12. verse 33.

Either make the tree good, and his fruit good, or else make the tree evill, and his fruit evill.

LONDON,
Printed by IOHN LEGATT.
1631

TO THE RIGHT WOR-SHIPFVLL SIR THOMAS HOLCROFT KNIGHT, WITH THE VERTVOVS LADIE ELIZABETH HIS WIFE: Grace and Peace.

THat waighty charge of Salomon (Right Worshipfull) to every sonne of wisedome, for the [a] keeping of his heart with all watch and ward, may well perswade us, that some matters of great importance depend thereon: Among many (because my gates may not be great before so small a citie) I will touch one. There is a strange desire, not of earthly, but of spirituall powers, after the possession of mans heart. God saith, [b] My sonne give me thy heart; and to him indeed the right belongs: Yet through mans transgression Satan hath got such hold thereof, that unlesse it be by divine power, he will not be kept out; and though we heare not Satans voice, yet his [c] dealing bewrayes his meaning, that above all things in man he desires the heart. Once he strove about a dead [d] mans body, but doubtlesse his purpose therein was to have set up an idoll for himselfe in the hearts of the living. But what is mans heart that it should be so desired? Surely in substance little, but for imployment almost infinite: It is a Treasure [e] wherein man bringeth all his actions, good or evill: it is a Temple, wherein is placed either the Arke of God, or Dagon for the devill. Yea it is a [f] Pallace wherein dwelleth, and a Throne whereon sitteth either Christ, or Satan, the [g] King of glory, or the [h] prince of darknesse: and [i] he that keeps possession will there exercise dominion. Neither may wee thinke that one heart will suffice both these; [k] No man can serve two masters: God will have all or none; [l] If any part be shared from him, in high displeasure hee leaves the rest, and so the whole falls to the devill. Now sith the case standeth thus with mans heart, doth it not nearely concerne every one to know his owne estate in this behalfe; to wit, what kinde of treasury, whose Temple, whose Pallace and Throne his Heart is? that if all be well, he may rejoyce, and so keepe it for the Lord; if otherwise, then seeke redresse betime.

To this purpose serves this present Treatise: wherein as in a glasse may first be seene, the fearfull state of mans naturall heart, full fraught with evill thoughts, void of good consideration, and so most fit for Satan: then after doe these blessed meanes appeare, whereby mans naturall heart may bee reformed, to become the Temple of God, the seat of grace, and a [m] bed of spices for the welbeloved to feed upon. And these are points of that importance, that whosoever neglecteth them, may say farewell grace, and bid adieu to God himselfe: for in the heart, if at all in man, must these be seated.

Now the publishing hereof being committed unto mee, I present the same unto your Worships, and under your protection desire to commend it to the Church of God. It would too much enlarge my gates to annexe the manifold reasons which move me to this choice on your behalfe; onely this I pray, (that seeing it is the first fruits of my labour in this kind wherein I had full power of free choice in my dedication) it may intimate to you both, mine unfained hearts desire of that everlasting good I wish unto your soules: and also testifie in part my thankfull minde for your manifold favours to me, and mine who depend upon you.

Now God Almighty blesse your Worships, with your children and familie, according to your severall necessities of his mercy and goodnesse, for soule and body, in this life and for ever. Cambridge, August 20. 1606.

Your Worships in the Lord,

Thomas Pierson.

a Prov 4.23.

b Prov 23.26.

c See Act.5.3. Luke 22.3.

d Moses body, Iude 9.

e Matth.12.35. Bonus homo bonum, & pessimus malum. Hieron. ad Demetriad.

f Aug. in Psal. 24.8.

g Psal.24.7.

h Ephes.6.12.

i Qui possidet, ipse imperabit. ib. Aug.

k Matth.6.24.

l Quia si ibi pars aliqua Diabolo, dissecta Deus totus; & possidet totum Diabolus. August. in Iob. The summe of this Treatise.

m Cant. 6.1.

To the Reader.

KNow (good Reader) that for my furtherance in the publishing of this Tractate, I had the Authors owne draught of the platforme of it; besides two perfect Copies of all his Sermons. I have for plainnesse sake divided it into Chapters and Sections: for the better effecting whereof, I was constrained to transpose two of the Vses, otherwise I doubt not, but every one that heard it preached, will judge mee to have dealt faithfully with the godly Author. The Lord prosper it to thy good.

The Contents of this Treatise.

CHAP. I.
The unfolding of the Text whereon the Treatise is grounded. page 456.
CHAP. II.
The ilnesse of mans naturall thoughts: and how they may be knowne. page 458.
CHAP. III.
Mans naturall thoughts concerning God. page 459.
CHAP. IV.
Mans naturall thoughts concerning his neighbour. page 467.
CHAP. V.
Mans naturall thoughts concerning himselfe. page 469.
CHAP. VI.
Mans naturall want of good thoughts or consideration; with the fruit thereof. page 473.
CHAP. VII.
The use of the doctrine of mans naturall imaginations page 474.
CHAP. VIII.
Rules for the reformation of evill thoughts. page 477.
CHAP. IX.
Of spirituall considerations concerning God. page 479.
CHAP. X.
Of spirituall considerations concerning our selves. page 481.

Gen. 8. verse 21.

And the Lord said in his heart, I will henceforth curse the earth no more for mans cause: for the Imagination of mans heart is evil even from his youth.

CHAP. I.

The unfolding of the Text, by way of preparation to the Treatise.

IN the former part of this Chapter, Moses hath faithfully related the drying of the waters after the flood; and Noahs sacrificing unto God, with Gods acceptance thereof. Now in this verse and the next, he recordeth such lawes and decrees as God made with Noah touching the restauration of nature restored by the flood; as well for the sparing of the creatures from such like destruction, as for the continuance of his providence in needfull times and seasons, meet for their future preservation. These words containe the first of these lawes: wherein we may observe three points; Moses his preface to this law; the law it selfe; and the reason thereof.

I. The preface; And the Lord said in his heart. These words must not be taken properly, for God hath not an heart as a man hath, neither speaketh he as a man doth; but hereby is meant, that God determined and set downe with himselfe this law and decree.

In this phrase of speech, note this one thing: If it had pleased him, God could have spoken to man by a voice, the hearing wherof would have confounded him: but as here we see, he doth abase himselfe, and as it were layaside his honour and might, and speaketh unto us after the manner of men, even to the capacity of the most simple. Which teacheth us, that it is the good will and pleasure of God, that not onely the learned, but even the unlettered and most ignorant should know and understand the holy Scriptures: for else he would never have penned them in a phrase and style that doth so well accord to the capacity of the simple.

II. Point. The decree it selfe: I will henceforth curse the ground no more for mans cause. This is the peremptory law of God touching the restauration of nature: wherein are contained two things: first, what God hath done: secondly, what God will not doe hereafter. The thing that God hath done, is, the cursing of the earth: for he saith, I will curse no more: implying that he once cursed it.

In this observe, that God may truly bee said to be a cause of curses, & to curse his creatures: not onely for that he doth ordaine and decree all curses, but also because he inflicteth them upon the creatures: yet so as the same is alwaies most justly deserved by sin, before it bee inflicted of the Lord. And so must Gods cursing of the earth bee understood in this place, as a fruit of his wrath for the sin of man: accordingly God is said directly to create evill, Isa. 45. 7. because whatsoever afflictions, curses, and punishments are in the world, they are ordained and inflicted by God upon the creatures for the sin of man.

This plainly confuteth the common opinion of ignorant people, who hold that all good things, as peace, wealth, joy, and felicity come from God; but all evill, as affliction, calamity, curses, and judgements, come from the devill, and God only suffereth them. This is a most erroneous and blind conceit, which filleth many a soule with much anguish and impatience: for what comfort can he have in the time of trouble, that is perswaded it commeth wholly from the devill, and the hand of God is not therein? Wee therefore must learne to reforme this opinion, and know that crosses and troubles come from God. This David knew well, and therefore when Shimei cursed him, and railed on him, he forbad Abishai to touch him, because (saith he) 2 Sam. 16. 10. What if (or, it may be) God hath bid him curse David? So Joseph telleth his brethren who most trecherously sold him into Egypt, that the Lord sent him before them, Gen. 45. 5.

Secondly, here consider the impulsive cause that moved God to curse the earth by a flood, it was not in the earth, but in men: I will henceforth curse the earth no more for men, that is, for mans sinnes. In the new Testament there are two especiall sinnes recorded, for which God sent this curse: first, carnall security. They were choked with worldly cares, and drowned in earthly pleasures: In the dayes of Noah, they did eate, and drinke, marrie, and give in marriage, Matth. 24. 38. Secondly, the contempt of the Gospell in the ministery of Noah, who preached an hundred and twenty yeares unto them, while the Ark was in building, but they were disobedient, 2 S. Peter 1 Pet 3.20. saith, following their owne pleasures and delights. Whereby it appeares that these two sinnes, Security, and contempt of the Gospell, are are most grievous sinnes; for these brought destruction, not only upon al mankinde, (Noah and his family excepted) but even upon all creatures that lived by breath.

Now looke as these sinnes were in the old world, even so are they rife in this last age: according to the Prophecie of our Saviour Christ, Luk. 17. 26. As it was in the dayes of Noah, so shall it be in the dayes of the Sonne of man: & as this is the state of the whole world, so it is the state of this our Church; most men are drowned in the pleasures of this world, and choaked with the cares thereof: for howsoever they will heare the Gospell preached, yet few apply their hearts to beleeve the same, shewing forth the power thereof by repentance from dead workes, and amendment of life in new obedience. But we must know, that if these two sinnes brought a curse, even destruction upon the old world, then no doubt they will bring a fearfull curse upon this age, though not by water, yet some other way that shall countervaile the flood: and therfore we must lay these things to our hearts, that unlesse we abandon securitie, and worldly lusts, and withall doe repent and beleeve at the preaching of the Gospell, wee shall see Gods heavy curse will fall upon us, for if wee match the old world in sinne, wee must not looke to come behinde them in judgements.

The second thing in this decree is, what God will not doe hereafter: Namely, curse the earth any more: this must bee understood of that particular curse, which the Lord laid on the earth by waters, when he drowned the world: for the generall curses that were laid upon the ground, and on mankinde for Adams sinne, remaine still, and shall not bee taken quite away till the end of the world: so that the meaning of this law is, that the Lord will no more drowne the whole earth for the sinne of man by a flood.

Here then we see the cause why the sea being as raging and stirring as ever it was, doth notwithstanding keep it self within it bounds, and not overflow the world: and why the cloudes being as full of water, as ever they were, do not powre downe more floods upon the earth to destroy it. Surely it is by vertue of this particular law, and decree of God, whereunto the sea and clouds become obedient, I will henceforth curse the earth no more. And here we have just occasion to take knowledge and view of our own wretched & damnable estate, how wee are sold under sinne: for howsoever wee are created blessed, and happy, yet by our fall in Adam we are become far worse than any earthly creature: for each creature in his kind, as the Sunne, the Moone, & Starres, the Sea, and Clouds, and all other obey Gods commandement: but man of all creatures having lawes given him of God to keepe, rebelleth in breaking the same, and to him it is meate and drink, by nature to live in the transgression of Gods commandements.

Thus by comparing our selves with the brute creatures, wee may learne to humble our selves: and to be abashed when wee see them which were made to serve us, to goe before us in obedience to the lawes of our Creator.

III. Point. The reason of Gods decree, in these words for the imagination of mans heart is evill, even from his youth. At the first, this reason may seeme very strange, that God should no more curse the earth for man, because the Imagination of his heart is evill: In all likelihood God should have said the contrary, I will still curse the earth, because the imaginations of mans heart are evill for so he saith, Gen. 6. verse 5. 6. that seeing all the imaginations of the thoughts of mans heart were only evill continually: therefore he would destroy the man from the earth, and from man to beast, and every creeping thing: How can both these stand together? I answer. Thus: In the six chapter the Lord saith, hee will once destroy the world by water, because of the wickednesse of the Imaginations of mans heart: and here he saith, he will not proceed to curse the earth againe and againe by the same punishment, because the imaginations of mans heart are evill, even from his youth: as if he should say, I have once drowned the world for the wickednes of mans invasions: but if I should thus proceed to deale with man according to the wicked Imagination of his heart, I must bring every yeare a new flood upon the earth, because I see the frame of mans heart is evill continually.

Here then observe, that God in the preservation of mankinde, doth temper and moderate his justice by mercy: for if hee should deale according to mans deserts, he should every day bring curses upon him: yea, so soone as a man is borne hee should bee destroyed: but God dealeth not so rigorously, hee mingleth mercy with Justice, whereby the whole frame of heaven and earth, the state of man and all societies doe stand: that which Habakkuk prayed for (a) In justice, or wrath, remember mercy, the Lord hath performed ever since the flood, yea, since the fall of Adam. (a) Hab. 3. 2.

There be three great and weightie causes, which moved GOD so temper justice with mercy for the preservation of mankinde, and other creatures: first, that hereby hee might shew his patience and long suffering towards the vessels of wrath, (as the Apostle (b) speaketh,) that is, towards such as will not repent, that at the last day they may bee most justly condemned: Secondly, that there may be a company of men upon earth which may worship God: for God hath speciall care of his owne glory among men, and therefore tempers justice with mercy in their preservation, that they might glorifie him. Psalme 130. 4. There is mercy or pardon, with thee, that thou mayst bee feared; that is, wherein (O Lord) thou mightest in justice throw all men to hell suddenly, yet in mercy thou pardonest the sinnes of some, for this end, that they might worship (b) Rom. 9. 22.

thee: feare being put for worship and obedience. Thirdly, and principally that the elect and chosen of God might be gathered: for God in his eternall counsell and decree hath appointed and set downe a certaine number of men, unto whom he will give eternall life, and for their cause doth hee spare the whole world from daily destruction: but when that number shall be accomplished, then shall heaven and earth go together, and the world shal be no more.

And here by the way, this third cause of the continuance of nature, must teach us our duty; to wit, that seeing it pleaseth God in mercy to give us liberty to live a space of time in this world, some twentie, some thirty, some fourty or fifty yeares, and that for this end, that herein we might bee fitted for his kingdome, when as in the rigour of his justice he might have cast us to hell in our mothers wombe, or so soone as wee were borne: we therefore must bee carefull not to despise this long suffering and patience of God, but rather labour in the feare of God, that it may become (c) salvation to us, by our conscionable endeavour in all such meanes unto the end, as he hath sanctified for the working of the graces of life in the hearts of his children. And thus much for the reason in generall.

c 2 Pet. 3. 15.

CHAP. II.

Sect. 1.

The idlenesse of mans naturall cogitations.

THat wee may the better perceive in this reason the estate of man in respect of his naturall Imaginations, the words are more particularly to be unfolded. For the Imaginations of mans heart, &c. The heart in Scripture is taken sundry wayes: sometimes for that fleshly part of man in the middle of the body, which is the fountaine of vitall blood: sometime for the soule of man, sometime for the faculties of the soule: and sometime for the middle of any thing, as (d) the heart of the sea, (e) the heart of the earth, that is, the middle thereof. Here it is taken for the understanding faculty of the soule, whereby man useth reason: which S. Paul calls (f) the spirit of the minde.

d Psal. 46. 2.
e Mat. 12. 40.
f Eph. 4. 23.

By Imaginations he meaneth the frame, or framing of the heart. And this is taken two wayes: of some, for the naturall disposition of the understanding after the fall of man: of others, for that which the minde & understanding by thinking frameth, plotteth, and deviseth; that is, for the effect thereof. We may take it both wayes, yet I rather approve the latter: for Chap. 6. 5. the Lord saith, Hee will once destroy all flesh, and gives this reason, For the frame and thoughts of mans heart is evill continually. Where by thoughts or Imaginations can nothing else be meant, but that which is devised and plotted in the thoughts of mans heart: so Salomon speaking of an heart which God hateth, saith, It is framing or thinking thoughts of wicked use, Prov. 6. 18.

A

By mans heart, wee must not understand the heart of some particular persons, as of those that lived in the old world alone, but of men generally, man being put for whole mankinde.

Is evill, that is, it imagineth, & thinketh that which is against the law of God: From his childehood, that is, so soone as he beginneth to thinke, to reason or conceive of any thing, so soone doth hee imagine and conceive that which is evill: so that the whole meaning is this, The minde and understanding part of man is naturally so corrupt, that so soone as hee can use reason, he doth nothing but imagine that which is wicked, and against the Law of God. The words thus explained, containe in them two maine points touching the frame of mans heart by nature. The first is,

B

The Imaginations and conceit of every man is naturally evill.

This appeareth not onely in this place, but elsewhere, Rom. 8. 7. The wisedome of the flesh is not an enemy, but enmity against God. Againe, such as the fountaine is, such are the streames that flow thence; But our mind & understanding, the fountaine of our thoughts, is by nature sinfull; (g) To the impure, their mindes and consciences are defiled: And againe, (b) Of our selves we are not able to thinke a good thought, and therefore the thoughts that come from thence, must needs also be corrupt: Mans Imagination stands in thoughts; the understanding deviseth by thinking: And these thoughts of the Imagination are all naturally wicked: (i) From the heart (saith Christ) proceed evill thoughts: and Salomon saith, The thoughts of the wicked (as al men are by nature) are an abomination to the Lord.

C

g Tit. 1. 14.
b 2 Cor. 3. 5.
i Mat. 15. 19.

Sect. 2.

How the naturall thoughts of man may be knowne.

Seeing that naturall Imagination is practised by evill thoughts, we must something consider of the naturall thoughts of man: And herein handle these two points: First, whether the thoughts of man may bee known, Secondly, what the naturall thoughts of man be.

D

For the first, there are two wayes to know mans thoughts: either directly without meanes, or indirectly by meanes. The first way is proper to God alone: for no creature in heaven or earth can immediately and directly know the thoughts of man, this Salomon confesseth in his notable prayer to God, 1 King. 8. 39. Thou only knowest the thoughts of all the children of men. Jerem. 17. 9. The heart is deceitfull and wicked above all things, who can know it? vers. 10. I the Lord search the heart, and try the reines.

The second way to know mens thoughts is indirectly, and by meanes, which be three; by instinct from God, by revelation from the Scripture, and by signes. First, by an extraordinary instinct, so did (k) Elisha discover the king of k 2 King. 6. 9. 12.

2 King. 5. 20.
m Act. 5. 3.

of Syrias counsell to the king of Israel: and by the same meanes, he told his servant (l) Gehezi what he did behind his backe, when he took gifts of Naaman the Assirian. And so did (m) Peter tell Ananias and Saphira of their false conveyances with the money that they took for their possession. And yet here wee must understand, that when God revealed these secret thoughts to men, it was onely in some things, at some times, and for some especial causes, whereupon Nathan was faine to revoke his counsell, which hee gave to David for the building of the house of God, (n) when hee knew the will of God more perfectly. And so was Elias deceived, when he said, hee was left alone, of all Israel that served God; for (o) God told him, he had reserved seven thousand, that never bowed the knee to Baal, which Elias knew not. Secondly, mens thoughts may be knowne by Revelation from Scriptures: for therein that spirit speakes evidently, which knows the frame of the heart: and hence it is, that in the ministery of this word, the thoughts of naturall men are made manifest. Thirdly, mans thoughts are knowne by signes; as speeches, & actions: thus Peter knew the (p) heart of Simon Magus; and Paul the heart * of Elimas. And thus may any man know the thoughts of another, even as he may know the tree by his fruit, and the fountaine by his streame.

1 Chron. 17. 1, 6.
n 1 King. 19. 18.
o Rom. 11. 4.
1 Cor. 14. 25.
p Act. 8. 21.
* Act. 13. 10.

Besides these, there are two other meanes added, whereby to know mens thoughts: one by the Papists, and another by the Astrologians. The Papists say, the Saints in heaven know mens thoughts; not directly of themselves, but by reflection in the glasse of the Trinity. But this is a meere forgery of their own, which Isaiah never knew, saying thus of the Saints departed (q) Abraham is ignorant of us, and Israel knoweth us not, but thou Lord art our redeemer. And the Saints under the Altar crie, * How long Lord, how long, wilt thou not judge & avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? giving us to understand, that they are not so sharpe sighted, as by the glasse of the Trinity to see into the day of the last judgement, and therefore not into the thoughts of mens hearts. So that there are onely three wayes to know the thoughts of men; and so they may be knowne.

q Isa. 63. 16.
* Rev. 6. 10.

A

B

C

D

CHAP. III.

Of mans naturall thoughts concerning God.

HAving found that the thoughts of man may be knowne, wee come now to see what be the naturall cogitations of every sinfull man. Although they be almost infinite in themselves, yet they may be reduced to three heads: They either concerne God, or a mans neighbour, or else a mans owne selfe.

Of this thought: There is no God.

Touching God, there be in man 4. capitall evil thoughts. First, That there is no God: which as it is first in order, so it is the most notorious and vile damnable thought that can bee in a naturall man. And that this is one of the thoughts of man naturally, appeareth by the expresse testimony of God himselfe, who knoweth the thoughts of man better than man doth; (r) The wicked thinketh always there is no God. And againe, (s) The foole hath said in his heart, there is no God.

A

r Psal. 10. 4.
s Psal. 14. 1.

Touching this thought, observe these foure points: First, in whom it is: Secondly, how a man by thinking should deny God. Thirdly, what is the fruit of this thought: and fourthly, the examination of our hearts touching this thought.

For the first: we must not thinke that this wicked thought is onely in some notorious and heinous sinners: but it is in the corrupt mind & imagination of every man that commeth of Adam naturally, not one excepted, save Christ alone: so the foote of whom David (t) speaketh must be taken, not for some speciall sinner, but for every man that lives unealled, and without repentance, how civill soever his life be otherwaies: though some shame restraine his tongue from uttering it, yet by nature his corrupt heart is prone to thinke there is no God. This is made evident by Saint Paul, (u) who going about to prove that all men are sinners by nature, alleageth for his proofe divers testimonies of Scripture, and particularly out of these two Psalmes before cited: whereby he gives us to understand, that the foole there mentioned, must be understood of every naturall man. But it will be said, that it is ingrafted in mans nature to hold & think there is a God, and therefore every man doth not deny God in heart. Answ. We must know that these two thoughts, There is a God, and there is no God, may be, & are both in one & the same heart: the same man, that by the light of nature thinketh there is a God, may by that corruption and darkenesse of minde that came by Adams fall, thinke there is no God: for two contraries being not in the highest degree, may be in one and the same subject: as light & darkenesse in the same house: heate and cold in the same body.

1 In whom this thought is.
t Psal. 14. Psal. 10.
u Rom. 3.

B

C

II. Point. How doth a man by thinking deny God in his heart? Ans. Two waies, first, by turning the true God into an Idol of mans braine: secondly, by placing somewhat that is not God in the roome of the true God. For the first, the imagination of every man naturally, without further light from the word of God, doth turne the true God into an Idol: and therefore Paul saith of the Galatians, that before their vocation (x) they did service to them which were no gods: and of the Ephesians, that (y) they were without God in the world: even because they did not in their mindes conceive of God aright, and accordingly worship him, though the wiser sort amongst them did acknowledge one God the Creator of heaven and earth. And therefore David saith plainly, that (z) all the gods of the Gentiles are idols, & vanities: nay, as the Apostle saith, devils. 1 Corinth. 10. 20. That which

How a man by thinking denies God.
x Gal. 4. 8.
y Eph. 2. 12.
z Psal. 96. 5.

the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice unto Devils, and not unto God.

Now mans minde turneth the true God into an Idoll, by three notorious thoughts, which are the roote of many damnable sinnes in this life, first, by thinking that God is not present in all places; whereby God is robbed of his attribute of Omni-presence: for the true God being infinite, must bee in all places; which when the heart of man denyeth, it imagineth God to be such a one as he is not, and so turneth him into an Idoll. And that man naturally thinketh thus of God, the Scripture is plaine, Iob 22.12,13. wicked men are brought in speaking of God, as though hee were shut up in heaven, and had nothing to do in the world: Is not God on high in the heaven? and behold the height of the starres how high they are. How should God know? can hee judge it? &c. So the Psalmist expresseth the thoughts of the wicked in their practice of sinne, God hideth away his face, and will never see: and the Lord shall not see. Psalm 94. 7. yea, they who seeke the deepe to hide their counsell from the Lord, whose workes are in darknesse, say, Who seeth us? who knoweth us? Isa. 29. 15. Secondly, by thinking there is no providence of God, whereby he ordereth and disposeth all things in the world particularly: That this is another naturall thought, the Psalmist shewes plainely, bringing in the wicked man saying thus of God, God hath forgotten, hee hideth his face, and he shall not see. And the Prophet Zephany brings in the sinner speaking thus of God, that he doeth neither good nor evill. Thirdly, by thinking there is no justice in God; this is done when men imagine with themselves, that albeit they proceed in the practice of sinne, yet God will not punish them according to the threatnings of his word. If we doubt whether such an imagination be in mans heart, reade, Deut. 29.19,20. where Moses directly forbiddeth the people to say in their hearts, I shall have peace though I walke in the stubbornesse of my heart, this is that (g) blessing of a mans selfe in sinne, which David chargeth upon the covetous, and wicked. Thus they sinne that (h) put farre away the evill day, and say, the evill shall not come. Hereby God is robbed of his justice, and made a God of all mercy, such a one as will not punish sinne, and so indeed is made an idol of mans braine.

The second way whereby a man denieth God in thought, is, by placing in the roome of the true God, an idol of his owne braine: This men doe, by thinking some other thing beside the true God, to bee their chiefest good: thus voluptuous men make (i) their belly their god, and covetous men make (k) riches their god, by placing their felicity in pleasure, and in riches: for look what a man thinks to be the best thing in the world for him, that is his god, though it bee the Devill himselfe or any other creature. And for this cause is the Devill called the god of the world, because the men of this world judge their own courses, wherein they serve the Devill, the best thing in the world for them, yea, farre better than the service of God, and therefore give their hearts thereto: for affection followeth opinion, and that which a man affects most, hee must needs thinke best of: and therefore what a man affecteth most, that maketh heto become his god, so that judging other things beside the true God, to be best for him, hee must needs place them in the roome of the true God, and so in his imagination deny God.

III. Point. What is the fruit of this thought? for thereby we shal best judge, what a curfed thing this is, to thinke there is no God: This thought bringeth forth the most notorious sins that can bee, even Atheisme it selfe, which is a sinne whereby men sundry wayes deny God: and it is twofold, either in practice, or in judgement. The fruit of this thought.

Atheisme in practice is that sinne, whereby men deny God in their deeds, lives, and conversations: and so declare this thought. This is a most horrible sinne, and a huge burthen to the whole earth, and yet many that live in the bosome of the Church are foully tainted herewith. This Atheisme in practice hath 3. speciall branches: Hypocrisie, Epicurisme, & Witchcraft. Hypocrisie is a sin whereby men worship the true God, but yet in a false manner, giving unto God the outward action, and hold backe from him the true worship of the heart. Epicurisme is a sinne wherby men contemne God, and give themselves wholly to their pleasures, spending their time in eating, drinking, and other delights, & not seeking or fearing God: and this is the sin of the richer sort in this age. Witchcraft or magick, is that sinne whereby men renounce the true God, and betake themselves to the aide, counsell, and helpe of the Devill, either by himselfe, or in his instruments: this is a large sinne, and a great part of Atheisme, and many are tainted with this sinne, either because they are practitioners of witchcraft, or else do seeke helpe of such.

Atheisme in judgement is that sin, whereby in opinion and perswasion of heart men deny God. And this likewise hath three degrees: first, when men hold, and accordingly worship the true God, Creator of heaven and earth, but yet so, as they conceive of, and worship him otherwise that he hath revealed himselfe in his word. To this first degree we must referre the three great religions of the Turke, of the Iew, and of the Papists: for as they stand at this day, they are three great parts of Atheisme.

The Turke worshippeth God the maker of heaven & earth, and likewise reverenceth Christ as man, acknowledging him to bee a Prophet, yea, a more worthy Prophet than his Mahomet: And yet his religion is Atheisme, for he conceiveth of God out of the Trinity § Psal. 10.

Amos 9 10.
b Amos 6.3.

i Phil. 3.19.
k Col. 3.5.

2 Cor. 4.4.

Trinity, and so worshippeth nothing but an Idoll.

Against the Religion of the Iewes, at this day is a part of Atheisme: for howsoever they hold one God, and acknowledge the bookes of the old Testament for the Scriptures of God, yet they worship not that God in Christ, and so in stead of the true God, frame an idol in their owne braine: for as Christ (e) saith, Whosoever denies the Son, the same hath not the Father: so that they wanting Christ, and by consequent the Father also, indeed and truly have no God: but as Christ told the Samaritans (d) They worship they know not what.

e 1 John 2.23.

d John 4.22.

Thirdly, the religion of the Papists at this day is a part of Atheisme: we must indeed distinguish it from the two former: for in word they acknowledge the Trinity in unity, and unitie in Trinitie, and their doctrine of the union of Christs two natures in one person, is according to the Scripture: But yet if wee marke the drift and sequell of their doctrine in other points, we shall finde it to bee close Atheisme: as may be proved by two reasons: First, because the true God, who is the Creator of heaven and earth, is infinite in Iustice, and mercy,: but according to the doctrine of the Papists, God is not infinite in Iustice, and mercy: and therefore to them is not the true God: for first, Gods Iustice according to them, is not infinite: for they (e) teach, that a man by his own proper works of penance (which bee finite and imperfect) may truely satisfie God for the guilt of temporall punishment. Secondly, they make the mercy of God imperfect by (f) peecing up the same with mans merits in the worke of Redemption: for Gods mercy is either every way mercy, or no mercy, as Paul saith, (g) If it be of grace, it is no more of workes, or else were grace no more grace, and if it be of workes, it is no more grace, or else were worke no more worke. Secondly, the Christ of the Papists is a false Christ: this will appeare by plaine reason, out of their doctrine: for first, they spoile Christ of his true manhood by their doctrine of reall presence, wherein they hold that Christs body is not on'y in heaven, but really and substantially in all places where the sacrifice of the Masse is offered, thus they make it omnipotent, and so quite take away the nature of a body. Secondly, they disgrade Christ from the three offices of his Mediatorus hip: first, from his kingly office, by (h) placing the Pope in his roome and stead, as his deputy in Christs presence: for they give power to the Pope to rule the Catholike Church, and to make lawes to binde mens consciences, which be things proper to Christ alone: wherein they doe as much as if they should take the crowne from Christs head, and set it on the Popes: for to claime regency in the presence of the lawfull Prince, is to proclaime rebellion against the Prince: for commission of vicegerency ceaseth, in the presence of him that appointeth it; now Christ is alwayes present with his Church, Mat. 28.20. And therefore the Pope by his claime, must needs thrust Christ out of his office. Secondly, from his priestly office, which consisteth in satisfaction, and intercession: Christs satisfaction they nullifie by (i) joyning therwith the satisfactiō of mens works, for thereby they make it imperfect: And they rob him of his intercession, by (k) communicating the same to Saints; yea, they exalt the Virgin Mary farre above Christ in this work, for they pray her to aske the Father, to command Christ her sonne, by the authority of a mother, to doe thus, and thus for them; and so make Christ her underling. Thirdly, from his prophericall office, by making the Pope the infallible judge of all controversies: avowing, that they rather desire to know the ancient institution of Christ in religion from the Popes mouth, then from holy writ. Now thus robbing Christ of his offices, they make him a false Christ: and so wanting the Sonne, they cannot have the Father, for (l) he that hath not the Son, hath not the Father: and therefore popish religion wanting the Father and the Sonne, cannot be a true religion, but meere coloured Atheisme in judgement.

e Bellar. Lib. 7. de penit. c. 7.

f Rhem. on Rom. 8.17. sect. 4.

g Rom 11.6.

The second degree of Atheisme in judgement, is when men place some Idoll in the roome of the true God, holding the same for their God; thus did the Gentiles sinne in worshipping the Sunne, the Moone, and the Stars, or other creatures.

The third degree is, when a man doth avouch, hold, and maintaine, that there is no God at all, this is the highest degree of Atheisme, and the most notorious sinne that can be, and all such persons as maintaine this cursed thought, are unworthy the common breath of men; for if that man shall die the death, and that worthily, who shall avouch his lawfull Prince to be no Prince, how much more ought he to dye the death, though he had a thousand lives, that shall affirme the true God, to be no god? Thus wee see the fruits of this evill thought, whereby the haynousnesse of it doth plainly appeare.

h Rhem. on Ephes. 2.2. sect. 5.

i Rhem. on Rom. 8.17. sect. 4.
k Rhem. on 2 Cor. 1.12. sect. 2. In officio beatæ Mariæ.

In annot. sup. dist. 40. c. si papa Edit. Greg.

l 1 John 2.23.

IV. Point. The examination of our owne hearts, touching this thought, whether it may be found among us or not: doubtlesse every one will labour to cleare himselfe hereof: And the reason wherewith many doe sooth up themselves, is this, because they never felt in themselves any such conceits as this, that there is no God, but we may easily deceive our selves herein, for a man cannot alwayes discerne what be the thoughts of his own heart. There be in man two kindes of cogitation, or as one may say, reasons: the first is a single cogitation, whereby a man simply thinketh, or knoweth, or judgeth this or that, and this is properly called the minde. The other is a reflexe cogitation or reason, whereby a man judgeth that he knoweth or thinketh this or Examination of this thought.

that, and it is commonly called Conscience. Now since Adams fall, the conscience is corrupt by originall sinne, as bee all other powers of mans soule: whence it comes to passe, that conscience cannot doe his duty in giving true testimony concerning mans imaginations: but a man may thinke evill, and yet his conscience not tell him: and therefore wee may not say, because we feele not these evill thoughts in us, therefore we have them not, or we are free from them:

3. Signes of this thought.

But that wee may the better examine our hearts, wee must come to the signes whereby this evill thought is best discerned. David in the 14. Psal. setteth downe three signes hereof: first, (m) A disordered life: secondly, (n) not calling on the name of God by prayer: thirdly, (o) coremming of them that put their trust in God. Looke where these are to bee found, there is this evill thought, That there is no God. Now if we examine our selves by these signes we shall finde this wicked thought to bee amongst us: for first, many indeed are content to heare Gods word, but where is that man that reformeth his life according to that hee heareth? Certain it is, as their conscience can wirnotle, few turne unto God unfeinedly, few do break off their course in sinning. Now this unreformed life is an infallible token of this damnable thought.

(m) v. 2, 3.
(n) v. 4.
(o) v. 6.

Secondly, the exercise of prayer and invocation on the name of God, is rare among men: no doubt many a touched heart doth every day unfainedly call on God for grace: but yet generally this is true; men go on from day to day, and from yeare to yeare, and never pray unto God for supply of grace. Indeed men pleade for themselves, that they use to pray: for they say the Lords Prayer, the Creed, and the ten Commandements: but wee must know; that with many, this practice is nothing but a vaine repetition of words: for prayer is an action of the heart, and not the labour of the tongue and lips onely: so to say the Lords Prayer, is not to pray, for the words thereof may be repeated with the heart of an Atheist.

And thirdly, the contempt of them that put their trust in God, is rife among us: for who is so much scorned and reproached, as he that maketh profession of religion? Now may that complaint be justly taken up by the servants of God, Isa. 8. 18. Beholde, I and the children whom the Lord hath given mee, are as signes and wonders. And, He that refraines from evill, makes himselfe a prey to the evill tongue, Isa. 59. 15. Yet let these scoffers know, what ever they be, that seeds of Atheisme dos possesse their soules.

To come yet more particularly to the triall of this thought in our selves: Whosoever denyeth the presence of God, denieth God. Now let the conscience answer, whether we be not afraid to sinne in the presence of many mortall men, and yet in the presence of God doe make no bones thereof, so the eyes of men be turned from us. Now what is this, but either flatly to deny the presence of God, or at least to yeeld more feare and reverence to men, than we doe unto God? Againe, what is the cause why men use oppression, and injustice, deceit, & lying in their worldly affaires? Is it not because this thought of Atheisme doth possesse their hearts, that God regards not these outward things? Durst men directly sin against God, in seeking these outward blessings for naturall life, if they did rightly relie upon Gods providence, knowing every good gift to come from his bountifull hand? Lastly, let thy conscience speake; doth not thy heart while thou goest on in sinne, say thus unto thee, God is mercifull, I will hereafter repent, and so shall I escape punishment? If a man doe wel observe his owne heart, he shall finde therein this vile thought, which directly overturnes the infinite justice of God, making him a God all of mercy, when as indeed he is as well a God of justice as of mercy. By all which it is more than evident, that naturally this vile thought runs in mans heart, There is no God.

Vse. Hereby then we must learne to see what vile, miserable, and wretched sinners wee are in our selves; though wee had no actuall outward sinnes, yet this damnable thought maketh us accursed: If a man (p) curse the King in his heart, the sin is so great and hainous, that the fowles of heaven shall disclose it: How horrible then is this sinne, for a man in his thought to curse God, the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords? This therefore must humble us in our selves before the Lord.

(p) Eccl. 10. 20.

Againe, hereby wee must bee admonished to use all good meanes wherby we may come to see, and know not onely the grosse actuall sins of our lives, but especially this damnable thought of our hearts: few there bee that doe see it, and therefore we must be earnest with our selves in searching our owne hearts, to finde out this and such like abominations that be in us. And thus much for the first evill thought.

Sect. 2.

Of this thought: the word of God is foolishnes.

The second damnable thought of mans naturall heart concerning God, is this: The word of God is foolishnesse. This thought must principally be understood of the Gospell, as S. Paul declareth, saying, (q) It hath pleased God by the foolishnesse of preaching to save them that beleeve: where he calleth the Gospell of Christ foolishnes, not that it was so indeed, but because the unconverted (r) Corinthians, and other Grecians, judged the preaching of Christ crucified, the most foolish thing in all the world. And in the next chapter hee saith, (s) The naturall man, that is, he that is not effectually called, perceiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: to wit, that a man must repent of his sinnes, and beleeve in Christ for the pardon pardon of them, if hee would be saved; they are foolishnes unto him. Nicodemus answer to Christ maketh this plaine, Iohn. 3. 4. esteeming regeneration (without which Christ said no man could enter in the kingdome of heaven) to be a mans returne into his mothers wombe, and a birth from thence againe.

(q) 1 Cor. 1. 21.
(r) ver. 23.
(s) 1 Cor. 2. 14.

This wicked thought must be understood of the law of God also; the heart of man by nature judgeth the threatnings of the law to be untruths, and so foolishnesse: hence the Lord by Moses forbad the people when they heard the threatnings and curses of the law denounced against them, (t) To blesse themselves in their hearts, saying, We shall have peace: hereupon he denounceth a woe to them that deride his judgements threatned, and say, (t) Let him make speede, let him hasten his worke that wee may see it. &c. As if they should say, we doe not beleeve that any such things shall come to passe: like to the mockers of whom Peter prophecieth, (u) Who walke after their lusts and say: Where is the promise of his comming?

(t) Deut. 29. 19.
(t) Isa. 5. 19.
(u) 2 Pet. 3. 3, 4.

Fruits of this thought.

1 Machiavellisme.

Now that this is a most damnable thought, may appeare by the cursed fruits thereof; for first, hence ariseth that divellish and carnall opinion of sundrie men, that thinke and hold religion to bee but humane policie to keepe men in awe, and so use it as a politicke device to exercise mens braines to keepe them from sedition, treccherie, and rebellion: Secondly, hence springs all Apostacy, and departing from the faith. The Galatians were a worthy Church planted by the Apostle Paul, yet even in his time they began to fall away to another Gospell, which made him to marvell; and the reason was this, (b) They were not contented with that simplicitie, which is in Christ, but would joyne with him, the observation of legall ceremonies. The like wee may say of those famous Easterne Churches, as those seaven Churches of Asia, planted by the Apostles, wherein the truth flourished for a while, but not long after the Apostles times they fell into many damnable heresies, as Arrianisme, and such like. Yea about sixe hundred yeares after Christ, they embraced the damnable religion of Mahomet. In the West parts also, were worthie, and famous Churches planted by the Apostles, and their successors, as in Italie, France, Germanie, Spaine, and England, who about the same time of sixe hundred yeares after Christ, fell to Papisme: which spread it selfe over all Europe and further (some few Churches of Greece excepted,) In which religion men abandon the Gospell of Christ, and betake themselves to another Gospell, by adjoyning to the truth of Christ, their owne devices: And this Papisme, hath raigned ever since, till now of late, and so hath Apostacie taken place in those Churches which the Apostles planted; The cause whereof was in the wicked and sinfull heart of man, judging the Gospell foolishnes,

2 Apostacie.

(b) Gal. 1. 6.

whereupon men were contented to yeeld themselves to any other religion, rather then to that simplicitie of truth, which is in Christ Iesus. Wee now in England by Gods speciall mercy, hold, and teach the word of God: but if God should alter our religion with the times, the greatest part of men among us would forsake the truth, & cleave to any other religion, and that onely upon this ground, because they judge the Gospell foolishnes: Let any man among us broach an error, or heresie, and it shall have patrons at the first, bee it never so vile and absurd, and protectors afterward. When that brittish heresie of the family of love, tooke shipping in Germany, & arived in England (though it be an opinion void of common sense) yet it had applause amongst us, and was received of many, and would have spread it selfe further, if the preaching of the word, with the care of the Magistrate had not suppressed it. And the reason hereof is this; mans minde by nature is full of darknesse; he cannot without Gods speciall grace perceive the things of God, and so he judgeth the Gospell foolishnes, and embraceth errour, rather then the truth, yea, loveth darknes rather then the light, because his deeds are evill. Iohn 3. 19.

For the examination of our hearts touching this bad thought; After due triall wee shall find, that the minds of most among us are possessed herewith: for wee are indeed content to come into the assemblies where God is worshipped, and wee doe submit our selves to the ministery of the word to be taught and instructed: Therein we have our owne personall sinnes displaid, and reproved, and with all very fearfull and terrible curses of the law denounced against us for the same, both judgements in this life, judgements in death, & also judgements eternall after this life: Now let the conscience answer, what is the cause when we heare these things, that we be not moved, why are not our hearts touched with griefe and sadnesse, when we heare Gods judgments due unto us for our sinnes daily denounced against us? Some indeed there bee whose hearts tremble at the word, but small is that number. If a man runne through the streets, and cry fire, fire, our hearts are suddenly stricken with great feare: but the Minister of God may stand and cry, fire, fire, the fire of hell which is kindled by the breath of the Lord like a river of Brimstone, as the Prophet speaketh, and yet mens hearts are nothing moved: what is the cause that we should be so affected with the burning of an old house by temporall fire, and be not afraid at the voyce of God, which proclaimeth unto us eternall burning with the fire of Gods wrath? Surely the cause is this, our harts are foretalled with this false imagination, that the curses of the law are soolishnes, & that there be no such torments as the word denounceth, It will not sinke into the heart of a naturall man that his sins are so hainous, and Gods judgements so terrible against them, as the word maketh them: And till such time as this damnable thought bee taken away, mens hearts will never bee touched with the threatnings of the law; this is a barre to stoppe the way to all such passions as the law would worke.

Examination for this thought

(i) Isa. 30. 33.

Againe, when the Minister of God speaketh of the pardon of sinne, and of eternall life by Christ, who hath his heart melting for joy in regard of this salvation? Though men be called upon to come into the kingdome of heaven, yet few strive to enter in: though we be daily exhorted to repent, yet few turne to the Lord: all which bee branches of the Gospell; but men beleeve them not, because their hearts bee filled with this damnable thought, The Gospell of Christ is foolishnesse: When the Israelites were restored from captivity in Babylon, it was as (b) a dreame unto them: now if that temporall deliverance seemed a dreame, what a dreame will this spirituall deliverance from the captivity of hell and death, to the liberty of the sonnes of GOD in grace and glory, seeme to be? And indeed to a naturall man it seemes foolishnesse that God should become man, and that Christ by death should free men from death, and by suffering the curse of the law, should take away the same from us, and by his righteousnes should justifie us unto life: all which notwithstanding be points of the Gospell. This also is the cause why after long teaching there is little turning, or faithfull obedience yeelded unto the Gospell; neither will it bee better with men, while this evill thought abideth in them.

(b) Psal. 126. 1.

Use. 1. If this be a truth, that every naturall man thinketh the word of God to bee foolishnesse, then wee must learne this lesson of the Apostle, * Hee that seemes to bee wise in this world, must become a foole, that he may bee wise, that is, he must reject his owne naturall reason, and stoppe up the eyes of his naturall minde, like a blinde man, and suffer himselfe wholly to bee guided by Gods Spirit in the things of God, that thereby he may be made wise unto salvation.

* 1 Cor. 3. 18.

Secondly, we must hereby learne to make earnest prayer unto God * for the opening of our eies, that we may be able to understand the Gospell of Christ, and know the right meaning of that word of salvation: for of our selves we can never understand it, unlesse the Lord instruct us by his Spirit: (d) No man commeth unto mee, saith Christ, that is, beleeveth, except it be given him of my Father: But (e) every one that hath heard, and learned of the Father, commeth unto mee. Thus much of this second evill thought.

* Psal. 119. 18.

(d) Iohn. 6. 36.

(e) verse. 45.

Sect. 3.

Of this thought; I will not obey Gods word.

From the former ariseth an other most vile thought, in the heart of every natural man, as a branch of the same; namely, because the word of God is foolishnesse, Therefore I will not performe obedience thereunto. That this is the naturall thought of man, Iob teacheth plainely; for hee bringeth in the wicked (that is, every sinner) saying thus to God, (f) Depart from us, wee will not the knowledge of thy wayes. This the wicked man saith, not with his mouth, for none is so farre past all shame, that dares thus blasphemously speake against God; but thus he saith in his heart, his affections speake it; when hee purposeth with himselfe, to cast off the yoake of God, and to live after his owne lusts: and therefore they say further, (g) Who is the Almighty that we should serve him? as if one should say, It is a disgrace to mee to abase my selfe to serve God; I will not doe it. The Prophet Ieremy bringeth in, the Lord saying thus to his people, (h) Stand in the waies, and behold, and aske for the old way which is the good way, and walke therein, and yee shall finde rest for your soules: but in the same place the Iewes answer, We will not walke in thy waies. Shall wee thinke that they durst thus impudently answer the Lord with open mouthes? No surely; But the Prophet in these words setteth downe the purpose of their hearts, who hardned the same obstinately against the word, when they were exhorted to repentance and obedience before the Lord. Our Saviour Christ compareth himselfe to a Noble man that goeth into a farre country; now when he is gone, the citizens of his country send messengers after him to tell him, (i) That they will not have him to raigne over them. Which though it be properly to be understood of the nation of the Iewes, who did indeed say so to our Saviour Christ, yet it may also bee extended to all impenitent sinners, who say in their hearts; Christ shall not raigne over us: for so long as a man is uncalled, hee carieth a purpose to live in sin, some in this sinne, and some in that, and so doing, saith in his heart, God shall not be my God, I will not submit my selfe unto his lawes. Christ shall not raigne over me. This is plaine and manifest by mens behaviour, when they are reproved for their sinnes. Tell the covetous man of his avarice, the swearer of his blasphemie, and the drunkard of his drunkennesse, &c. will hee humble himselfe in conscience of his sinne? Nothing lesse: but his heat will swell againe thee, as his fury and impatience will soone bewray; and the reason is, because hee never thinketh of his owne estate; how by creation hee oweth homage unto God, as to his Creator: for his purpose is to goe on in sinne, and when hee is reproved for the same, his desire is crossed; which he cannot abide, and therefore rageth; shewing thereby manifestly, that in his heart he saith, He will not obey Gods commandements.

(f) Iob. 21. 14.

(g) verse. 15.

(h) Ier. 6. 18.

(i) Luke. 19. 14.

For the examination of our hearts touching this thought: whether did wee ever thinke thus without selves; I will not obey Gods commandements? Doubtlesse every man will answer for himselfe, that hee abhorres this thought.

Examination for this thought.

thought. And yet after just triall it will appeare, that generally this thought is rife among us for though we heare the word, and receive the Sacraments the pledges of our salvation, and will bee counted the members of Christ, yet what is the cause that there is so little knowledge of God, and obedience to his word? And why doe men in their callings shew forth so smal love, to little mercy, justice, & good conscience? The truth is, that though some have these things in them in some measure, yet the body of our people is generally void of these good vertues, and fruits of the spirit: hee that hath but halfe an eye may see it: for where is that religious keeping of the Sabbath that should bee? where is that serious performing of worshippe unto God which ought to bee? All which argue, that the heart is corrupt and deceivable, and saith indeed to God, I will not obey thy word, Lord depart from me. What man almost is there that saith with himselfe, Oh miserable man, what have I done?

The Use. By this wicked imagination wee may see how hard a thing it is truly & soundly to convert a sinner unto God, and how easily a man may deceive his owne soule, & beguile the world by hypocrisie: for a man by long exercise in the word may have a great measure of knowledge, and withall good wit, and memorie, and with them utterance, and by a common gift of the spirit, bee able to teach the word truly, and to conceive prayer to good purpose, and withall have a cankred heart towards God, poysoned with this damnable thought, I will not obey the word of God: for every man that hath inwardly in him a purpose to live, though but in one sinne, his heart is not upright with God, neither bee Gods graces, as faith, and repentance found in his heart: for true repentance is a purpose, and resolution to leave all sinne, and to please God in all things.

Sect. 4.

Of this thought; It is a vaine thing to worship God.

The third wicked imagination, of mans heart concerning God is this: It is a vaine thing to worship God. This Iob sheweth to bee true: bringing in the wicked man saying, (a) What profit shall I have if I pray unto God? we must not thinke that hee said thus with his mouth, but in his heart: And the Prophet Malachie bringeth in the Iewes saying, (b) It is a vaine thing to serve God, and what profit is it that wee have kept his commandement, and that we walked humbly before the Lord of hosts? Yea righteous David, a man after Gods owne heart, was overtaken with this evill thought, when hee said, (c) Certainely I have cleansed my heart in vaine, and washed my hands in Innocencie: whereby it is plaine, that this is a naturall evill thought in every man.

(a) Iob. 21. 15.

(b) Mal. 3. 14.

(c) Psal. 73. 13.

Yet here we must remember, that this evill thought comes not into the minde of man at all times, but only at such time, when occasion is offered, as namely when a man is called on to the service of God, which upon some occasion he is desirous to omit: Then will his minde range about for libertie from Gods service, and so will hee bethinke himselfe of the wicked mans estate who never served God, and yet is in better case outwardly then the godly man is: And hereupon hee begins to say in his heart, doubtlesse It is a vaine thing to serve God.

Examination for this thought

For the examination of our hearts touching this thought, after just triall it will bee found among us, as the state of all sorts of families will declare. Among the poorer sort you shall see men labour from morning to evening, and take great paines to provide for the world, but in the meane time where is the worship and service of God? where is prayer and thanksgiving, morning and evening? Surely it is neglected, and the reason is, because they thinke thus in their heart, So that I may have provision for the world, it is no matter whether I serve God or not. Come to the rich mans house, & there you shall see them spend their time in eating, drinking, gaming, and such delights, but the worship of God is not regarded, for thus they thinke with themselves, If they may have their pleasure, all is well. Come and reason with ordinary men, and exhort them to use the meanes of salvation, and shew forth love unto religion sincerely: their answer is, They will doe as they have done, and as their forefathers did before them, they trust their soules are as good to God-ward as the best: And for ought they see, none are worser then those that have so much preaching, and therefore they hope to bee saved, though they doe not follow it so much. And this also commeth from this evill thought, It is in vaine to serve God. Marke also in those places where the Gospell is preached, If any man seeme to make more conscience of sinne, and of serving God then other, they are made a by-word and a mocking stocke, and their profession is turned to their reproach: which argues plainely that mans thought is this, It is a vaine thing to serve God. Nay, take a view of the whole world, and you shall see every where men give themselves to will-worship. No nation is so barbarous as to denie unto God all worship, but doe they give unto him that which he commandeth in his word? Nothing lesse: It is either the meere invention of men, or altogether stained therewith: This is most evident with the Turke, the Iew, and the Papist: yea our common sort of Protestants have their wil-worship: for generally they content themselves with the mumbling over the words of the Creede, the Lords Prayer, the ten Commandements, perswading themselves that by the bare rehersall of the words, they have sufficiently served God. Now would we know the cause herof, as also why men are so slacke and cold in prayer, so care-

against them, as the word maketh them: And till such time as this damnable thought bee taken away, mens hearts will never bee touched with the threatnings of the law, this is a barre to stoppe the way to all such passions as the law would worke.

Againe, when the Minister of God speaketh of the pardon of sinne, and of eternall life by Christ, who hath his heart melting for joy in regard of this salvation? Though men be called upon to come into the kingdome of heaven, yet few strive to enter in: though we be daily exhorted to repent, yet few turne to the Lord: all which bee branches of the Gospell: but men beleeve them not, because their hearts bee filled with this damnable thought, The Gospell of Christ is foolishnesse: When the Israelites were restored from captivity in Babylon, it was as (b) a dreame unto them: now if that temporall deliverance seemed a dreame, what a dreame will this spirituall deliverance from the captivity of hell and death, to the libertie of the sonnes of GOD in grace and glory, seeme to be? And indeed to a naturall man it seemes foolishnesse that God should become man, and that Christ by death should free men from death, and by suffering the curse of the law, should take away the same from us, and by his righteousnes should justifie us unto life: all which notwithstanding be points of the Gospell. This also is the cause why after long teaching there is little turning, or faithfull obedience yeelded unto the Gospell; neither will it bee better with men, while this evill thought abideth in them.

(b) Psal. 126. 1.

Use. 1. If this be a truth, that every naturall man thinketh the word of God to bee foolishnesse, then wee must learne this lesson of the Apostle, * Hee that seemes to bee wise in this world, must become a foole, that he may bee wise, that is, he must reject his owne naturall reason, and stoppe up the eyes of his naturall minde, like a blinde man, and suffer himselfe wholly to bee guided by Gods Spirit in the things of God, that thereby he may be made wise unto salvation.

* 1 Cor. 3. 18.

Secondly, we must hereby learne to make earnest prayer unto God * for the opening of our eies, that we may be able to understand the Gospell of Christ, and know the right meaning of that word of salvation: for of our selves we can never understand it, unlesse the Lord instruct us by his Spirit; (d) No man commeth unto mee, saith Christ, that is, beleeveth, except it be given him of my Father: But (e) every one that hath heard, and learned of the Father, commeth unto mee. Thus much of this second evill thought.

* Psal. 119. 18.

(d) Iohn. 6. 36.

(e) verse. 45.

Sect. 3.

Of this thought; I will not obey Gods word.

From the former ariseth an other most vile thought, in the heart of every natural man, as a branch of the same; namely, because the word of God is foolishnesse, Therefore I will not performe obedience thereunto. That this is the naturall thought of man, Iob teacheth plainely; for hee bringeth in the wicked (that is, every sinner) saying thus to God, (f) Depart from us; wee will not the knowledge of thy wayes. This the wicked man saith, not with his mouth, for none is so farre past all shame, that dares thus blasphemously speake against God; but thus he saith in his heart, his affections speake it, when hee purposeth with himselfe, to cast off the yoake of God, and to live after his owne lusts: and therefore they say further, (g) Who is the Almighty that wee should serve him? as if one should say, It is a disgrace to mee to abase my selfe to serve God; I will not doe it. The Prophet Ieremy bringeth in, the Lord saying thus to his people, (h) Stand in the waies, and behold, and aske for the old way, which is the good way, and walke therein, and yee shall finde rest for your soules: but in the same place the Iewes answer, We will not walke in thy waies. Shall wee thinke that they durst thus impudently answer the Lord with open mouthes? No surely; But the Prophet in these words setteth downe the purpose of their hearts, who hardned the same obstinately against the word, when they were exhorted to repentance and obedience before the Lord. Our Saviour Christ compareth himselfe to a Noble man that goeth into a farre country; now when he is gone, the citizens of his country send messengers after him to tell him, (i) That they will not have him to raigne over them. Which though it be properly to be understood of the nation of the Iewes, who did indeed say so to our Saviour Christ, yet it may also bee extended to all impenitent sinners, who say in their hearts; Christ shall not raigne over us: for so long as a man is uncalled, hee carieth a purpose to live in sin, some in this sinne, and some in that, and so doing, saith in his heart, God shall not be my God, I will not submit my selfe unto his lawes. Christ shall not raigne over me. This is plaine and manifest by mens behaviour, when they are reproved for their sinnes. Tell the covetous man of his avarice, the swearer of his blasphemie, and the drunkard of his drunkennesse, &c. will hee humble himselfe in conscience of his sinne? Nothing lesse: but his heat will swell against thee, as his fury and impatience will soone bewray; and the reason is, because hee never thinketh of his owne estate; how by creation hee oweth homage unto God, as to his Creator: for his purpose is to goe on in sinne, and when hee is reproved for the same, his desire is crossed; which he cannot abide, and therefore rageth; shewing thereby manifestly, that in his heart he saith, He will not obey Gods commandements.

(f) Iob. 21. 14.

(g) verse. 15.

(h) Ier. 6. 18.

(i) Luke. 19. 14.

For the examination of our hearts touching this thought: whether did wee ever thinke thus without selves; I will not obey Gods commandements? Doubtlesse every man will answer for himselfe, that hee abhorres this thought.

Examination for this thought.

thought. And yet after just triall it will appeare, that generally this thought is rife among us for though we heare the word, and receive the Sacraments the pledges of our salvation, and will bee counted the members of Christ, yet what is the cause that there is so little knowledge of God, and obedience to his word? And why doe men in their callings shew forth so smal love, so little mercy, justice, & good conscience? The truth is, that though some have these things in them in some measure, yet the body of our people is generally void of these good vertues, and fruits of the spirit: hee that hath but halfe an eye may see it: for where is that religious keeping of the Sabbath that should bee? where is that serious performing of worshippe unto God which ought to be? All which argue, that the heart is corrupt and deceivable, and saith indeed to God, I will not obey thy word, Lord depart from me. What man almost is there that saith with himselfe, Oh miserable man, what have I done?

The Vse. By this wicked imagination wee may see how hard a thing it is truly & soundly to convert a sinner unto God, and how easily a man may deceive his owne soule, & beguile the world by hypocrisie: for a man by long exercise in the word may have a great measure of knowledge, and withall good wit, and memorie, and with them utterance, and by a common gift of the spirit, bee able to teach the word truly, and to conceive prayer to good purpose, and withall have a cankred heart towards God, poysoned with this damnable thought, I will not obey the word of God: for every man that hath inwardly in him a purpose to live, though but in one sinne, his heart is not upright with God, neither bee Gods graces, as faith, and repentance found in his heart: for true repentance is a purpose, and resolution to leave all sinne, and to please God in all things.

Sect. 4.

Of this thought; It is a vaine thing to worship God.

The third wicked imagination, of mans heart concerning God is this: It is a vaine thing to worship God. This Iob sheweth to bee true: bringing in the wicked man saying, (a) What profit shall I have if I pray unto God? we must not thinke that hee said thus with his mouth, but in his heart: And the Prophet Malachie bringeth in the Iewes saying, (b) It is a vaine thing to serve God, and what profit is it that wee have kept his commandements, and that we walked humbly before the Lord of hosts? Yea righteous David, a man after Gods owne heart, was overtaken with this evill thought, when hee said, (c) Certainely I have cleansed my heart in vaine, and washed my hands in Innocencie: whereby it is plaine, that this is a naturall evill thought in every man.

(a) Iob. 21. 15.

(b) Mal. 3. 14.

(c) Psal. 73. 13.

Yet here we must remember, that this evill thought comes not into the minde of man at all times, but only at such time, when occasion is offered, as namely when a man is called on to the service of God, which upon some occasion he is desirous to omit: Then will his minde range about for libertie from Gods service, and so will hee bethinke himselfe of the wicked mans estate who never served God, and yet is in better case outwardly then the godly man is: And hereupon hee begins to say in his heart, doubtlesse It is a vaine thing to serve God.

Examination for this thought

For the examination of our hearts touching this thought, after just triall it will bee found among us, as the state of all sorts of families will declare. Among the poorer sort you shall see men labour from morning to evening, and take great paines to provide for the world, but in the meane time where is the worship and service of God? where is prayer and thanksgiving, morning and evening? Surely it is neglected, and the reason is, because they thinke thus in their heart, So that I may have provision for the world, it is no matter whether I serve God or not. Come to the rich mans house, & there you shall see them spend their time in eating, drinking, gaming, and such delights, but the worship of God is not regarded, for thus they thinke with themselves, If they may have their pleasure, all is well. Come and reason with ordinary men, and exhort them to use the meanes of salvation, and shew forth love unto religion sincerely: their answer is, They will doe as they have done, and as their forefathers did before them, they trust their soules are as good to God-ward as the best: And for ought they see, none are worse then those that have so much preaching, and therefore they hope to bee saved, though they doe not follow it so much. And this also commeth from this evill thought, It is in vaine to serve God. Marke also in those places where the Gospell is preached, If any man seeme to make more conscience of sinne, and of serving God then other, they are made a by-word and a mocking flocke, and their profession is turned to their reproach: which argues plainely that mans thought is this, It is a vaine thing to serve God. Nay, take a view of the whole world, and you shall see every where men give themselves to will-worship. No nation is so barbarous as to denie unto God all worship, but doe they give unto him that which he commandeth in his word? Nothing lesse. It is either the meere invention of men, or altogether stained therewith: This is most evident with the Turke, the Iew, and the Papist: yea our common sort of Protestants have their will-worship: for generally they content themselves with the mumbling over the words of the Creede, the Lords Prayer, the ten Commandements, perswading themselves that by the bare rehersall of the words, they have sufficiently served God. Now would we know the cause herof, as also why men are so slacke and cold in prayer, so careleſſe, and unreverent in hearing Gods word? Surely it is nothing but this vile Imagination bewitching our ſoules, that it is a vaine thing to ſerve God; This quencheth the ſpirit, and hindreth all good motions that be in our hearts. A

care-

Sect 5.

Of mans thoughts of diſtruſt.

The fourth evill thought concerning God, is, a thought of diſtruſt, thus framed in the minde; God doth not regard me; God wil not helpe me; God will not bee merciſull unto mee: This thought made entrance unto the fall of our firſt parents: for firſt Eve looked upon the fruit, and ſaw that it was beautifull, and then entred into her heart a thought of diſtruſt, after this manner; It may be it is not true which God hath ſaid to us concerning this fruit, and it may be God regardeth us not as we thinke he doth, in that he denieth us this fruit; hereupon her will and her affections were caried to the breaking of Gods commandement, and ſo ſhe ſinned by diſobedience, and Adam alſo ſinned. When the people of Iſrael murmured in the wildernеſſe (a) Moſes ſinned a ſinne, for hee was debarred entrance into the land of Canaan: Now what was Moſes ſinne? for both hee and Aaron (b) prayed to the Lord, and checked the people, ſaying, Heare ob yerebells, &c. And at Gods commandement hee brought water out of the rocke. Surely his ſinne was ſecret, even inward unbeliefe and diſtruſt in Gods promiſe, for when hee ſmote the rocke, hee might chinke thus with himſelfe, It may be that God will not now give water out of the rocke; and this ſeemes the more probable, becauſe he went beyond his commiſſion in ſmiting thrice upon the rocke, when God bad him onely to ſpeake (c) unto it. This evill thought takes hold of religious David alſo: (d) I ſaid in mine haſt, I am caſt out of thy ſight, as though hee ſhou'd ſay, Herefore I have found favour with God, but now in mine adverſitie I am utterly rejected: Againe (e) I ſaid in my feare, all men are lyers: that is, when feare of death tooke hold of mee, then I thought that Samuel lied unto mee, when hee ſaid I ſhould come to the kingdome over Iſrael. The children of Iſrael did often bewray this thought of diſtruſt, when they were pinched with hunger, and famine in the wilderneſſe, thay ſay, (f) Can God provide a table for us in the wilderneſſe? Can hee give bread and fleſh for his people? As if they ſhould ſay, we thinke hee cannot, nor will not: Yea the Apoſtle Peter was not free from this thought, for when Chriſt walking on the waters, commanded Peter to come unto him, hee came out boldly, & walked towards Ieſus, but when (g) He ſaw a mighties winde, he began to ſinke: whence came this? Surely from a thought of diſtruſt which he had in his heart, to this effect: It may be God will not ſupport me in this my walking: and that this or ſome ſuch thought was in his heart, appeareth by Chriſts anſwer to him, ſaying, (h) Oh thou of little faith, why diddeſt thou doubt? By all which it is evident that this is a naturall thought in the minde of man, which at ſometime troubleth the moſt righteous man that is. B C D

(a) Num. 20. 12.
(b) verſe. 6.
(c) verſe. 8.
(d) Pſal. 31. 22.
(e) Pſal. 116. 11.
(f) Pſal. 78. 19. 20.
(g) Mat. 14. 30.
(h) verſe. 31.

Now touching this thought of diſtruſt, two things are to bee ſcanned: firſt, the time when it taketh place in mans minde; and ſecondly, the danger of it. For the time; This thought doth not alwaies take place in the minde of man, but onely in the time of ſome danger, affliction, and temptation, and eſpecially in the time of ſicknes, and in the pangs of death. Thus in his grievous affliction was righteous Iob troubled with this thought of diſtruſt: for then he complained, that God did hate him and gnaſh upon him with his teeth, and as his enemie, ſharpned his eyes againſt him; yea, that (k) hee made him as his butte, and marke to ſhoot at. And David in a grievous trouble of minde, thus complained: (l) Will the Lord abſent himſelfe for ever? And will he ſhew no more favour? Is his mercy cleane gone for ever? Doth his promiſe faile for evermore? Hath God forgotten to be merciſull? &c. Wherby appeareth, that in his affliction he was greatly troubled with this diſtruſtfull thought; and there is no man living, but when trouble & affliction comes, hee ſhall feele in himſelfe theſe thoughts of diſtruſt. Indeed while peace & eaſe continue, preſumptuous thoughts poſſeſſe the minde; but when the daies of peace be gone, & troubleſome times approach, then preſumptuous thought give place, and thoughts of diſtruſt come in their roome and ſtead. The time of this thought.

(k) verſe. 12.
(l) Pſal. 77. 7.

II. Point, The danger of theſe thoughts of diſtruſt is very great, as the fruits thereof declare, for hence ariſe, firſt, all horrours, and terrors of conſcience, all feares, and aſtoniſhments of the heart: For when the minde ſaith (though falſly) God doth not regard me, God will not ſave mee, then the trembling heart is full of horror and dread. Secondly, hence commeth deſperation it ſelfe, whereby men confidently avouch that God hath forſaken them, and caſt them off, and that there is no hope of life, but preſent death, remaining for them: this thought troubleth the minde of the wicked, and of the repentant perſon alſo: for deſperation is nothing but the ſtrength of this thought of diſtruſt. Thirdly, this weakneth the foundation of our ſalvation, which ſtandeth in the certainrie of Gods promiſes; for this thought of diſtruſt denieth credit to Gods promiſes, and maketh them uncertaine: Among al other evil thoughts this doth moſt directly hinder ſalvation, for it is flat againſt faith, as water is to fire: for true faith makes a man ſay with good conſcience, (m) Chriſt died & ſhed his blood for me, God the Father will be merciſull unto me, and ſave mee: But this diſtruſtfull thought cauſeth a man to ſay the cleane contrarie, Chriſt died not for me: God will not ſave me: ſo that where this thought prevaileth, true faith is not, neither can take place. Fruits of this thought.

(m) Gal. 2. 20.

Vſe.

Vſe. Conſidering the danger of this diſtruſtfull thought is ſo great, wee muſt be admoniſhed in the ſeaſe of God to uſe all good meanes, while the daies of peace doe laſt, that it take no place with us in the day of trouble and temptation: The meanes to repreſſe it, are the preaching of the word, and the Sacraments of Baptiſme and the Lords Supper. Meanes againſt diſtruſt.

For the firſt: the word of God preached is a ſpecial meanes ordained of God, for the true applying of Gods promiſes of mercy to our owne ſoules; and therefore a moſt ſoveraigne remedie againſt this thought of diſtruſt: for when the promiſes of mercy in Chriſt, are offred unto Gods people in the preaching of the word by a lawfull Miniſter, it is as much as if Chriſt himſelfe in his owne perſon ſhould ſpeake unto them, by vertue of Gods ordinance. If God from heaven ſhould ſay to any man, mercy belongeth to thee, he would beleeve: if God ſay to Cornelius, beleeve thou, and my mercy belongs to thee, Cornelius will beleeve; if hee ſay to Peter, beleeve thou, and my mercy belongs to thee, Peter will beleeve: and if he ſay ſo to Mary Magdalen, ſhe wil beleeve. Loe here, when the Miniſter of God, out of Gods word, faith to any man, beleeve thou, and repent thou, and Gods mercy belongs unto thee; it is as much as if the Lord ſhould call him by name particularly, and ſay unto him, beleeve thou, and repent, and my mercy belongs unto thee: yea it is all one as if God himſelfe ſhould ſay, I am thy Father and thou art my child, if thou wilt repent, and beleeve.

The ſecond meanes, which is alſo very effectuall to cut off this thought of diſtruſt, is Baptiſme. If any earthly prince give a pardon to any man, and put the mans name in the pardon, and his owne broad ſeale unto it, the man will never doubt of his pardon, but beleeve it. Behold, in Baptiſme God entreth covenant with miſerable wretched man, and herein makes promiſe of life unto him: yea he puts the mans name in the covenant, ſealing the ſame with his owne ſeale: and therefore the partie baptized, muſt beleeve againſt this thought.

The third means, is the Lord Supper rightly adminiſtred and received: for therein the bread and wine given to the hand of every communicant by the Miniſter, are particular pledges & tokens unto them of ſpeciall mercy in Chriſt. Theſe are the meanes which we muſt uſe with all good conſcience in the daies of peace, that when troubles come, this thought of diſtruſt may not prevaile againſt us. And thus much of mans naturall evill thoughts againſt God. Many other might be added hereunto, but theſe being the principall, I omit the reſt.

CHAP. IV.

Of mans naturall thoughts againſt his neighbour.

NOw wee come to the evill thoughts of mans naturall heart againſt his neighbour. And to finde them out wee muſt have recourſe to the ſecond Table of the morall law, which containeth (a) the duties of mercie, forbidding the corrupt eſtate of man, forbidding that which mans corrupt heart thinketh naturally againſt his neighbour, for every commandement thereof is ſpirituall, forbidding not onely the wicked actions, evill words, & geſtures, but all corrupt affections, yea all evill Imaginations of man againſt man. A B a Gal 3. 19.

This thoughts of man againſt his neighbour be of two ſorts, either without conſent, or with conſent. Thoughts without conſent, are the very firſt evill motions of the minde which a man conceiveth againſt his neighbour, to which the will never giveth conſent, and theſe are forbidden in the tenth commandement, Thou ſhalt not luſt.

Thoughts with conſent of will are ſuch as a man conceiving in his minde, doth withall deſire, or purpoſe in his heart to praſtiſe: and theſe are forbidden in the fift, ſixt, ſeaventh, eight, and ninth commandements; by reaſon whereof they may fitly bee reduced to five heads. They are either thoughts of diſhonour, againſt the fift commandement; or thoughts of murther, againſt the ſixt, or thoughts of adultery againſt the ſeaventh; or thoughts of theft againſt the eight; or thoughts of diſgrace, againſt the ninth commandement.

Sect. 1.

Of thoughts of diſhonour.

Firſt, a thought of diſhonour is any thought that tendeth to the contempt and abaſing of the perſon of our neighbour, in reſpect of our ſelves. And it is then conceived in our minds, when we thinke thus of all other men beſides our ſelves: Such and ſuch a man, is farre inferiour unto me, a baſe & contemptible fellow in regard of me. Example hereof wee have in the Phariſie, a man ſtrict in profeſſion, and zealous in his religion, who commeth to the Temple to pray with the Publican: now marke what he ſaith, (b) Oh God, I thanke thee, that I am not as other men are, or as this Publican. Which words proceed from ſuch a proud thought as this, Lord I thanke thee, all other men are farre inferiour unto mee: I doe farre ſurpaſſe the common ſort: this Publican is a baſe fellow, and no bodie to me. If any ſhall imagine that this thought is not in every man, but in ſome few proud perſons, I anſwer, it is by nature in every perſon living without grace: and therefore Saint Paul giveth this commandement, That (c) every man in meekeneſſe ſhould eſteeme others better than himſelfe, giving us to underſtand, that by nature all men thinke beſt of themſelves, and eſteeme others farre worſe than themſelves. C D b Luk. 18. 11.

c Phil. 2. 3.

Thenſe. If this thought of diſhonour be in all mens hearts, then behold what a pallace of all Saraniceſt and damnable pride the heart of man is naturally: it is like unto the table of Adoni-bezek, at which hee ſate in a chaire of eſtate, and made others, even kings, to to vse against the dogs vnder his feet, with their chaines, cut off from all one in every man by nature, he sheweth himselfe, saying, I am the vilest, and vexeth his brother vnder his feet, as no body vnto him. And this is the cause of much strife & hurt in all humane societies & thirst causeth many iarres, much scorning, and great contempt among men in word and deed.

Iudg. 1. 7.

Now that we may reforme this thought in vs, wee must learne to say as Iob did after he had bin afflicted, and came to see his sinnes: (c) Behold I am vile: and with Abraham, (d) I am but dust and ashes: and with David, I am a worme, and no man, Psalm 22.6. yea with Paul, (e) wee must labour to see our miserie by reason of sinne, and that will helpe to pull downe the pride of our hearts.

(c) Iob.39.37.
(d) Gen.18.27.
(e) Rom.7.24.

Sect. 2.

Of murthering thoughts.

The second evill thought of man against his neighbour with consent, is a thought of Murther, or of any thing that tendeth thereto. Of this wee have particular examples in Scripture. Deut. 15.9. The Lord forbiddeth the Iewes to have this murthering thought in their hearts: I will not relieve the poore, I will not doe good unto them; giving us to understand, that this was the common thought of the Iewes: or else he wold not have forbidden it: yea the Lord doth there set out this thought by two signes, first, an evill eye, when a man turnes his countenance from the poore, or looketh on them without compassion: secondly, unmercifull dealing, when a man will not helpe the poore by gift, according to his abilitie. And because all actions proceede from thoughts, the heart being the fountaine of our deedes, hence it appeareth, that this murthering thought against the poore, is rife in this age: for where is the man that doth pitie the poore, and doth good to them according to his abilitie? nay, the Lords complaint against the Iewes may be fitly applied to our times, in regard of cruelty and oppression: *The spoile of the poore is in your houses: what have yee to doe, that ye beate my People to peeces, and grinde the faces of the poore? Isa.*3.14-15.

The second example of a murthering thought, is concerning Gods Church, and it is this, I will doe some spite or hurt to them that worship God. For proofe hereof, read *Psal.*74.8. David bringeth in the Babylonians, Edomites, &c. saying thus one to another against Gods people the Iewes: *Let us destroy them altogether, and Psal.*83.4. Let us cut them off from being a people. And let the name of Israel bee no more in remembrance. Now as this was their thought, so is it the thought of all men naturally. For that which was the disposition of Babel, Edom, Moab, and Amalek, against Gods Church, is the disposition of all men naturally; for looke how generall the hatred of man is, so generall is the purpose of mischiefe against those that profesle religion: for all men by nature are haters of Gods Church, and people, so Christ saith to his disciples, (f) Ye shall be hated of all nations for my names sake: Yea whosoever killeth you shall thinke that hee doth God good service, and therefore this thought of doing mischiefe is so generall, even in the minde of every man by nature. This further appeareth by the continuall persecution, that hath ever beene raised against Gods poore Church, since the beginning of the world: it began at Abel, soone after the giving of the covenat of grace to our first parents, and hath continued to this day, and shall abide unto the end: so that if carnall men could looke into their owne hearts, they should there behold this murthering thought against Gods people. This murthering thought commeth from another wicked imagination, set downe by S. Peter, who bringeth in the wicked of this world, (g) Thinking it a strange thing, that God: children doe not, as they doe, and runne not with them unto all excesse of riot: living in drunkennes, fornication, and such other abominations; for this cause doe they conceive hatred, and so will continue, till God give them grace to repent. If any shall say this thought is not generall, for Nabuchadnezzar (h) an heathen man shewed favour to Daniel, and highly advanced him: I answer, it is true he did so, but that was a worke of Gods speciall providence, who procured him favour, and disposed the Kings heart to affect him, as hee did also the heart of the chiefe (i) Eunuch. Otherwise Nabuchadnezzar naturally did nothing but intend mischiefe against Gods Church, as his rage against the three children did evidently bewray, *Dan.*3.19.

(f) Mat.24.9. Iohn.16.3.
(g) 1 Pet.4.4.
(h) Dan.2.48.
(i) Dan.1.19.

A third exaple of this murthering thought I adde, which every Minister of Gods word may observe by daily experience, and that is this, when mens faults are particularly rebuked in the ministerie of the word, and the quicke, as it were touched, by applying the word to the conscience, then will the heart of a naturall man, thus conceive of the Minister that reproveth sinne: This man measureth me, hee hath some spite, and malice against me, that he thus reproveth my particular faults, when as the Minister knew them not to be his personall sinnes: but it is the power of the word that ransaketh the sinfull heart: this is the fault of all carnall hearers, who will heare quietly till their faults he rebuked, but then they thinke malitiously of the preacher, thus Herod dealt with Iohn Baptist, he heard him gladly for a while, *Marke.*6.20. but when he was rebuked for his brother Philips wife, then hee cast Iohn in prison. Luk. 3.19.20. And if conscience might bee judge, many an hearer would be found to have an Herods heart towards Gods Minister.

Sect. 3.

Of thoughts of Adultery, theft, and disgrace.

The third thought of man touching his neighneighbour, is the thought of Adultery; which is the thought with consent to any unchastitie. Such a thought had Iudah concerning Tamar his daughter in law, when he judged her an whore, and desired to lie with her, Gen. 38. 15, 16. And with such thoughts was Ammons heart so vexed, that hee fell sicke for his sister Tamar, 2. Sam. 13.2. This makes a man an Adulterer in heart before God, though actually he commit not the fact, *Mat.*5.28.

The fourth is the thought of Theft, which is the thought with consent of beguiling or wronging another in his goods or substance. This is that Imagining of iniquity, and working of wickednesse upon their beds, in coveting of fields, against which Micah pronounceth a woe, Mic. 2.1. And this thought also possesseth their hearts, that with the wicked Israelites wish the time were come, wherein they might make the Epha small, and the Shekell great, Amos 8.5. that is, lessen the measure, and inhance the price, and falsifie the weights by deceit.

The fift evill thought, is a thought of disgrace, which some way tendeth to the reproach, and debasing of our neighbours good name, as, when a thing is well done, to think and judge it to be ill done, or when a thing is amisse, to judge it worse than it is: Thus Eli thought disgracefully of Hannah, deeming her to be drunk, saying, 1 Sam. 1.13, 14. Put away thy drunkennesse, when shee prayed devoutly from a troubled soule to the Lord, v.15. Thus Eliab, Davids eldest brother, thought disgracefully of David, when he shewed himselfe willing to encounter with Goliah that reviled the Hoast of the living God, saying, 1 *Sam.*17.28. I know the pride and malice of thine heart, that thou art come to see the battell: when as indeed the Spirit of God put that motion into his heart, to take away the shame from Israel, as the happy event declared plainly. So when our Saviour Christ spake most comfortably to the sicke of the palsie, saying, *Mat.*9.2. Be of good comfort, thy sinnes are forgiven thee; then the cursed hearts of the wicked Pharisees thought thus in themselves, This man blasphemeth, v.4. And when the gift of the holy Ghost was sent upon the Apostles, causing them to speake strange tongues, to the great admiration of men of divers nations, then some of the malicious Iewes thought they were drunk, saying, scoffingly, *Act.*2.13. They were full of new wine. And this thought of disgrace is in every man naturally, bringing forth continually the fruits of disgrace, as Envie, Strife, Emulations, Dissentions, and Debates: for love thinketh not evill, but naturally true love is wanting in all men: and therefore they cannot but thinke evill of others.

Wee see the five evill thoughts of mans naturall heart against his neighbour, touching which, two things are yet further to bee scanned, to wit, when these evill thoughts do arise in the minde, and in whom they are. For the first: it is true, that they do not at all times arise in mens minder, but then only when occasion is given: for mans heart is like tinder or dry wood, which burnes not of it selfe, but so soone as fire is put to it, then presently it kindleth. when you come to talke with a naturall man, it may be for the present, he thinketh not to lie, but give him occasion to lie, and then he soone bethinkes himselfe thereof, and will not spare to utter it, if it may make for his advantage. And the like we may say of Malice, Adultery, Theft, Disgrace, or any other sinne against our neighbour: Doe but minister occasion thereabout to the naturall heart of man, and he thinketh of them, and without Gods grace restraining, or renewing him, will bring forth the same in action.

The second point. In whom are all these evill thoughts? Answer. In all men naturally without exception, till they bee renewed by Gods speciall grace: Yea, the truth is, these thoughts doe every where abound, for looke what men doe practice, that first of all they thinke, for the thought is the beginning of every action: But in the world all sinnes against the second Table doe abound, as the practice of Dishonour, of Murther, Adultery, Thefts, and Disgraces: and therefore these evill thoughts from whence these actions come, must needs be common.

Vse. By this we may see what a huge masse of corruption the naturall heart of man is, without Gods speciall grace: for thoughts of dishonour make a mans heart a pallace of pride, like the table of Adonibezek: Also thoughts of cruelty make mans heart a slaughter-house: Thoughts of Adultery make it a most filthy stewes: Thoughts of Theft make it to become a den of theeves, wherein all manner of fraud, and bad dealing is plotted & devised: and lastly, thoughts of Disgrace make it a fountaine of backbiting, debate, slander, and reviling: And therefore howsoever the outward life may be ordered civilly, yet without Gods grace mans heart is most vile: and those that pleade their good nature, and good meaning are here confuted, for naturally the heart thinkes all evill against his neighbour.

CHAP. V.

Of mans naturall thoughts concerning himselfe.

Sect. 1.

Mans proud thoughts of his owne excellency.

THe third kinde of mans naturall evill thoughts, are such as concerne himselfe, and they are principally foure.

The first may be fitly tearmed a thought of pride, whereby every man naturally thinkes himselfe most excellent, and farre to exceede all other men whatsoever: thus the Prophet Esay brings in Babylon speaking in her heart, that is, thinking, I will ascend into heaven, and exalt my throne above or beside the starres of God, as if she should thinke with her selfe, I am far more excellēt thā any other whatsoever, & therefore I am to be exalted from the earth to heaven, and to be matched with God himselfe. And the Prophet Zephany brings in Ninive speaking thus in her heart, (a) I am, and there is none beside me. And so the proud Pharisee in his private & secret prayer to God, saith, (b) I thanke thee Lord that I am not as other men, meaning that he is more excellent. And the whore of Babylon (c) is brought in saying of her selfe, (d) I sit as a Queen, and am no widow, and shall see no mourning. All which places shew this to be the nature of man, to exalt himselfe in his owne heart, above all others. If any shall say, hereby no more can bee proved, but that this thought is in some proud and insolent persons: I adde therefore, that as our first Parents in the beginning did learne that proud lesson of the devill, Ye shall be as gods: so wee being in their loynes when they sinned, and descending from them by ordinary generation, doe together with our nature receive that corruption from them; whereby wee thinke thus proudly of our selves, that wee farre excell others, and are as little gods on earth, in respect of others. Indeed the most will say for themselves, we doe abhorre this proud thought, neither did we ever finde it to bee in us: But we must know, that the lesser wee discerne it in our selves, the more it reigneth in our hearts; and the more we discerne, and bewaile it, the lesser place it taketh in us.

Re all

The danger of this thought.

Now touching this thought of pride, two things must be observed: the danger, and the highest degree of it. For the danger of this thought; The outward affecting of strange fashions in apparell is a wonderfull pride; But the most vile and wretched pride of all, is that spirituall pride of the heart, whereby a man despiseth all other, in regard of himselfe, and thinketh himselfe farre better than any. This I manifest by sundry reasons: as first, from the fruits of this inward pride, for hence doe flow many damnable sinnes in mens lives and conversations: as first, Ambition, whereby men are not content with that estate, wherewith God hath blessed them: but doe seeke by all meanes to be advanced to higher dignitie and estate. Secondly, Presumption, whereby men dare enterprise things beyond their calling, and above their power, taking upon them more than they are able to doe. Thirdly, boasting, whereby a man speaketh of himselfe more than is seemely, and extolleth himselfe above his desert. Fourthly, Hypocrisie when a man pretendeth hee hath that grace and religion, which indeed hee hath not, or else maketh shew of more grace than is truely in him. Fifthly, Obstinacy, when a man persisteth in an errour, and will not yeeld to the truth, though it bee manifested unto him. Sixtly, Contention, whereby men strive one against another in word or deed, without relenting. And lastly, Affectation of Novelties, especially in outward attire, for when a man conceives so highly of himselfe, then withall he thinkes no manner of attire good enough to beautifie, and adorne his body; and so begins to devise, and effect strange and foraigne attire.

Fruits of inward pride.

Secondly, the danger hereof appeareth hence, that where this thought of pride raigneth, (as it doth in all men naturally) there the spirit of grace dwelleth not: Mary in her song saith well, Luke 1.52. God scattereth the Imaginatiōs of the proud: that is, of those which have this conceit of their owne excellency above others: and Saint James, Iam.4. 6. God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble: yea, thus saith he that is high and excellent, Isa.57.15 I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble: But he that lifteth up himselfe, his minde is not right in him, Hab.2.4.

Thirdly, such is the danger of this sinne, that when all other sinnes die in a man, this thought of pride dyeth not: nay, when other sinnes are mortified, and Gods graces come in stead thereof, yet this will then revive, and make the graces of God matter whereof to worke; as whē an ignorant person attaines to some knowledge, this pride will take occasion from that gift of God, to puffe up the heart: yea, when a man in true humility of heart, shall renounce the actions of pride, yet then will pride bee working, for this is a fruit of pride, to thinke well of our selves, because we are not proud.

The height of this thought.

II. Point. The highest degree of this pride is, when a man thinketh himselfe to be equall with God. This is a most notorious, nay, an abominable height of pride, and yet the truth is, some men have come hereunto. Thus the king of Babel thought of himselfe, when he said in his heart, Esa.14.14. I will ascend above the height of the clouds, and will be like the most high. It may seeme strange that men should thinke thus of themselves; but wee must know, that men may doe it two wayes: first, when they think they have power of themselves, whereby they are able to match or countervaile the power of God: so thought Nebuchadnezzar, when hee said, Dan.2.15. Who is that God, that can deliver you out of my hand? Such a thought had proud Pharao in his heart, when he said to Moses, & Aaron, Exod.5.2. Who is the Lord, that I should heare his voyce, and let Israel go? Secondly, whē they take to themselves Gods honour, and thinke it to be due to them: Thus did Herod, (e) when by silence hee approved the blasphemous voyce of the people, who cried unto to him, the voyce of God, and not of man. And thus Antichrist sitting in the Temple of God, 2 Thess.2.4. Exalts himselfe above all that is called God, or worshipped. Now that man of sin, is the Pope of Rome; for howsoever in word he humble himselfe, and call himselfe the servant of servants; yet indeed through the pride of his heart, he sitteth as God, taking unto himselfe that honor which is proper to God: for he claimeth power to prescribe new rules of Gods worship, to forgive sinnes, to make lawes to binde the conscience properly, yea, to open and shut heaven, and to dispose at his pleasure of earthly kingdomes; he taketh upon him, to dispense with the morall law, and with Apostolicall constitutions: all which belong to God alone, and none dare claime them to belong unto him, but hee that matcheth himselfe with God; and this is the highest degree of pride.

(e) Act.12.22.

Bellar. de Rom. Pontif. lib. 4.

Examination for this thought.

The use. By this every man may see what hee is of himselfe, what a cursed and proud nature he carrieth about with him: for every man naturally when occasiō is offered, thinks highly of himselfe, and basely of others in regard of himselfe. Let us therefore take notice of this Satanicall pride that is in our nature, and strive against it, for who would not bee ashamed to say with the proud Pharisee, I thank thee Lord, I am not as other men, &c. or with the arrogant Iewes, Stand apart, touch me not, I am holier than thou. Isa.65.5.

Sect. 2.

Mans thought of his owne righteousnesse.

The second evill thought concerning a mans selfe, is this, I am sufficiently righteous, and I need no repentance. That this is the thought of every man naturally, appeareth by the Lords commaindement to the people of Israel, forbidding them to say in their hearts, when they were placed in the promised land, that for their owne righteousnes, the Lord brought them in to possesse it; Deut.9.4. Whereby hee gives us to understand two things: First, that as the Iewes did there, so every man thinkes himselfe to be righteous: And secondly, hee thinkes, that God doth give his blessings unto him for his owne righteousnesse: for the Lord useth not to forbid such a thought as men naturally have not in them: so in like manner when Jeremy rebuked the people for their sinnes, they said, Jer.2.35. They were innocent and guiltlesse, they had not sinned. And the Church of Laodicea saith thus of her selfe, Rev.3.17. I am rich and need nothing: that is, I aboūd in spirituall graces. This is the thought of the proud Pharisee, who trusts in himself, that he is just. Luk.18.9. to 14. and therefore braggeth unto God, that he is not such and such, but he doth this and that, he fasteth, he gives almes, pales tithes, &c. and in plaine termes his heart saith thus: I am righteous, I need no repentance: for of such Christ spake, when he said, Mat.9.13. He came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. And again, Luk.15.7. I say unto you, that joy shall be in heaven for one sinner that converteth, more than for ninety & nine just men which need no amendment of life: where wee must observe, that Christ meaneth not, that there are indeed some so righteous, that they need no amendment; but he speakes according to the opinion which some have of themselves; to wit, that they are righteous, and need no repentance; by all which it is more than manifest, that this is a naturall thought of a man concerning himselfe.

This evill thought reigneth in our age and time, as all the former doe: for come to an ignorant man, that hath not beene instructed in religion, reason with him touching his estate, and aske him, whether he can keepe the law of God, or not? he will answer, he can; he loveth the Lord his God with all his heart, and his neighbor as himselfe: Aske him how he looks to be saved; his answer is, by his own righteousnesse, and for his owne goodnesse. If due examination were made, this would be found to be the thought of many that live in the Church among us: and there is none by nature free from this thought.

Hereby then we may see, that the thoughts of every man, be he what he will, are plaine Papistry, for Popery is naturall: One chiefe pillar and ground thereof is justification, and salvation by workes; which opinion every man brings with him from his mothers wombe. And so it is in the point of merit, men naturally thinke they receive the good things which they have from God, for their owne righteousnesse.

Secondly, hence it appeareth, that it is a matter of great difficulty, to bring a man throughly to renounce his owne righteousnesse, and soundly and heartily to imbrace true religion, and the righteousnesse of Christ by faith. This is no lesse than the change of nature, and yet this must every man doe, that will be saved, hee must become nothing in himselfe, that he may be all in Christ Iesus: which is as impossible to nature, as to change water into fire, and therefore men had need to beware how they put off the time, and neglect the meanes in which GOD sheweth his power in working this change in the hearts of his Elect.

Thirdly, hence was the evident cause of that preposterous course of the world, which most men take in spending their wit, and strength, some for riches, others for honours and pleasures, and in the meane while they can spare no time for religion, to seeke Gods favour in Christ, and the graces of the Spirit: it may be they will afford a good word unto religion, but yet they regard it not in respect of other things: and things be behaviour one of some few, but of all sorts and degrees of men in them. Now the cause hereof is this cursed evill thought, whereby men perswade themselves, They be righteous, and need no repentance, and till this thought be rooted out of mans heart, hee will never value the word and religion of God. according to the worth thereof, so as with the good Merchant, he will part with all that he hath, rather than he will be frustrate of this pearle, Mat. 13.45,46. Indeed men use to pleade thus for themselves: We confesse our selves to be sinners, and therefore we cannot thinke such a wicked thought, that we need no repentance: But we must know, that both these may well stand together, in the wicked heart of man: he may confesse himselfe to be a sinner, and yet thinke that he is righteous: for is not this the common practice, to make great sinnes little sinnes, and little sinnes no sinnes? Doe not men cloathe vice in vertues robe, and turne out vertue in the rotten ragges of vice? Is not drunkennesse counted good fellowship, and kinde neighbourhood? Is not wearing made the token of a brave minde, and pride counted decency, and fornication but a tricke of youth, and covetousnes esteemed good thrift, and carefulnesse? On the other side, is not the more sincere profession of religion termed precisenes, Puritanisme, Hypocrisie, and such like? doth not hee that restraineth the common sinnes of the time, make himselfe a prey to the mouthes of the ungodly? Now where these things are, though the mouth say, I am a sinner: yet the heart thinketh I am righteous, and so it is apparent this thought is common among us.

A

B

Sect. 3.

C

Mans thought of security in the day of peace.

The third evill thought concerning a mans self, is, a thought of security: in the time of peace and prosperity, men say, thus in their hearts, I am free from all Gods judgements, I am in no danger of hell, death, or condemnation, but sure enough of salvation. It may be thought, that none is so bewiched of the devill, as to have this conceit of himselfe, but the Scripture is most plaine in the proofe hereof, Esai. 10. 6. The wicked man (such as is every man by nature, as we shewed before) saith in his heart, I shall never be moved, nor be in danger. And the Prophet Isaiah brings in wicked men, saying, Isa. 28.15 We have made a covenant with death, and with hell we are at agreement: which must not be understood as done indeed (for death and hell will make league with none,) but only in mens wicked imagination, perswading themselves, that they be in no danger of hell, or of the grave: for in such phrases words import, that, though a scourge, runne over and passe through, yet it shall not come at us: yea, righteous David was overtaken herewith, that in his prosperity he said in his heart, Psal. 30. 6. I shall never be moved: much more then is it the thought of every naturall man, to say with the rich foole, upon the increase of outward blessings, Luk. 12. 19. Soule, soule, take thine ease, thou hast enough, nothing can hurt thee.

D

The Use. By this we may come to the knowledge of a thing which falleth out in all ages, worth our diligent observation. It hath pleased God from time to time, to send his Prophets and Ministers to call his people to repentance: thus did Esay, Jeremy, Ezek, Amos, & the rest; yea, the Lord himself (as Zephany saith, Zeph. 3.5.) brings forth every morning, and bringeth his judgements to light, which should turne men from their sinnes, he faileth not, and yet the wicked will not learne to be ashamed.

To come to our own times: it hath pleased God to stirre up many worthy Ministers unto us, who spend their time, and strength, in labouring to bring men to repentance, & salvation, but yet who is he almost that turneth from his sinnes? yea, the Lord himselfe, as in former times, so now doth preach from heaven by his judgements, as famine, plague, &c, and yet by lamentable experience, we see that the body of our people remaines secure, they are setled on their lees, Jer. 48.11. frozen in their dregs, Zeph. 1.12, no man stirs up himselfe to say, What have I done? Jer. 8.6. Now the cause hereof is nothing else, but this cursed thought of security, whereby a man saith thus in his heart, I am free from Gods judgements. Reade Mat. 24.37. As it was in the dayes of Noah (saith our Saviour Christ) so shall it be in the dayes of the comming of the Sonne of man: they did eate, drinke, mary wives, and give in marriage, and knew nothing till Noah entred into the Arke, and the flood came and tooke them all away. Question. How could it be that they should know nothing, seeing Noah had preached unto them of the flood, an hundred and twenty yeares before? Answer. Surely it was as if they had knowne nothing, for they would not beleeve him, it would not sink into their heads, much lesse settle in their hearts, that God would destroy all the world by water: and so may it be said of these times; we know nothing, though we be called to repentance by the ministerie of the word, yet we will not repent, & though we heare of Gods judgements, we thinke our selves free from them, and will not beleeve til the beesome of his wrath sweepe us all away, as the flood did the old world.

Remedie.

Wherefore to redresse among us this damnable thought of security, let us consider our grievous sins in particular, and set before our eyes the curse of God, both temporall judgements, and eternall death due unto us for the same. It is the applying of Gods heavy wrath that must make us shake off this secure thought, which the rather we must do, though it be grievous to the flesh, and a pang unto death in a naturall man, because till this thought be removed, the saving graces of Gods spirit will not take rooting in our hearts

Sect. 4.

Mans faint thoughts in time of distresse.

The 4. and last evill thought of mans heart touching himselfe, is this; In time of misery he saith, His trouble were greater, and worse than indeed they are. Iob complaines in his affliction, that (b) his griefe and misery was heavier

b Iob 6.2,3.

than the sand of the sea shoare. And the Church in great affliction cals thus to passengers (c) Behold, and see if there bee any sorrow like unto my sorrow which is done unto me: and that it is the thought of every mans heart naturally, appeareth by experience: for let a man be in distresse outwardly, or else touched in conscience for his sinnes, when you shall labour to minister comfort unto him according to Gods word: he will answer, there never any was in like case to him, so grievously tormented and afflicted as he is. And indeede it is the property of mans naturall heart, to esteeme his crosses to be exceeding great, yea oftentimes to deeme that to bee a crosse, which is none at all; the reason is, the want of judgement rightly to discerne the state of their afflictions: and the want of strength to support us in it is: (k) For if thou be faint in the day of adversitie, thy strength is small.

c Lam. 1.12.

k Prov. 24. 10.

For the remedy of this evill thought, first we must seeke to rectifie the Imagination, by bringing the minde to a right conceit of the affliction: this is a speciall course to be observed in dealing with them that bee oppressed with any distresse: for a strong conceit of a mans owne misery doth many times more hurt, than the misery it selfe: therfore be sure the judgment be well informed, and then the cure is halfe wrought. This done, the partie afflicted may well consider the desert of sinne, in the endles torments of the damned, which the Lord preventeth in his children by temporall chastisements in this life: (l) For when we are judged, we are chastened of the Lord, that we might not be condemned with the world: And so labouring to be humbled for sinne, and to lay hold on Gods mercy in Christ, through whom all things, even afflictions worke together for the best, no doubt he will bee able to say, (m) I will bear the wrath of the Lord, because I have sinned against him: And (n) why are thou cast downe, oh my soule, why art thou disquieted within me? wait on God, for I will yet give him thanks, he is my present helpe, and my God. Thus much of mans evill thoughts concerning himselfe.

l 1 Cor. 11. 3.

m Mich. 7. 9.

n Psal. 43. 5.

CHAP. V.

Of the want of good thoughts in every man naturally.

Sect. 1.

Good thoughts about temporall things be ill and of much want.

HAving spoken of mans naturall evill thoughts concerning God, his neighbour, and himselfe, we come in the second place to be discovered what they be concerning the things of this life, for the Lord hates Edom for the evill of their thoughts, & Ephraim is said to worke wickednesse for the Lord here saith, his thoughts are evill from his youth, and Christ saith, they are onely evill every day: none looked upon with more severitie, and condemned, than evill thoughts: Gods [illegible] concerning things temporall & eter-

A This want must be considered either in respect of temporall, or of Spirituall things. By temporall things I intend such worldly affaires and actions, as concerne mans naturall life; wherein though good consideration be not quite away, yet we must know, that the same is corrupt, and very weake and imperfect, even as reason is, and there is much want in every man in this behalfe. There is one alone (saith (a) Salomon) and there is not a second: which hath neither sonne nor brother, yet there is no end of his travell: neither can his eye be satisfied with riches; neither doth he thinke, for whom doe I travell? here behold a notable example of this want of good consideration about earthly things: that a man should spend both his wit and strength in heaping up riches, and knows not to whom he shall leave them. But wee need not be inquisitive for examples: for we may daily observe in our selves and others, apparent want of good consideration in these worldly affaires: which must not seeme strange unto us, seeing that reason it selfe, the ground of consideration is greatly blemished through the corruption of nature, about these earthly things.

a Eccl. 4.8.

B

Sect. 2.

Good thoughts in matters spirituall, be altogether wanting.

The first good thought wanting.

In things spirituall, which concerne the kingdome of God, there is in our nature an absolute want of good consideration; herein of our selves we have no good thoughts: We are not of our selves (saith (b) Paul) sufficient to thinke any thing, that is, any good thing, as of our selves. The whole body of the Gospell is therefore called a mystery, because the things therein contained and revealed are such, as (c) never came into mans heart to thinke. This we may observe specially in 4. things: 1. of Gods presence & providence, 2. of Gods judgements, 3. of our sinnes, 4. of obedience to God.

b 2 Cor 3.5.

2 Hos. 7.2.

c 1 Cor. 2.9.

First, man by nature doth not thinke of, or consider Gods presence and providence, to be [illegible] in all his wayes, in thought, word, and deed: hence the Lord complaines against Ephraim and Samaria, that they consider not in their hearts that remember all their wickednesse: And the same is true of every naturall man, being left to himselfe; for all by nature are equally corrupt with originall sinne, and so are destitute of this good thought, which yet we may suppose christians ought to have, that naturally is common to them with heathens. God sees me, God heares me, God knowes my wayes, God is about my paths, God is about my bed, and spies out all my wayes. And indeed it is a worke of grace to have the heart thus set upon the Lord, and to consider that God beholds us always, marks us, considers our thoughts, words, and actions, and is every where present with us by his power, knowledge, and bloud: and this is the ground of all true feare and obedience unto God.

Pag. 460.

Secondly, a man by nature doth not consider of the [illegible] of the [illegible] of God, & [illegible] & eter-

The second good thought wanting.

ceernall due unto sin. This thought was wanting in the men of the old world, though Noah preached unto them an 120. yeares of the general deluge, yet the cõsideration of it took no place in their hearts; & therefore it is said. Mat.24.38,39. They knew nothing till the flood came and tooke them all away: from the want of this thought it came to passe, that Lots sonnes in law thought their father had but mocked, when he told them that God would destroy Sodom, Gen. 19.14. Hence it was that the Rich foole blessed himselfe in his heart, saying, Luk.12.19. Soule, soule, take thine ease, & never bethought himselfe of any danger, till it was said unto him, O foole, this night wil they fetch away thy soule, v.20 And shall we thinke this thought is wanting at this day, seeing Christ hath said, Matth. 24.37. As it was in the dayes of Noah, so shall it be at the comming of the sonne of man.

The third good thought wanting.

Thirdly, a man naturally doth never bethink himselfe of his owne sinnes; he hath no purpose of heart seriously to examine his life past, or to repent of such sinnes as he findeth in him: This appeares by the Lords owne complaint against the Iewes, who were so farre from turning from their sinnes, that not one would say in his heart, Ier.8.6. What have I done? nay whe they had committed most sottish Idolatry, Isa. 44.16,17,19,20. In making an idol god of one part of a tree, with the other part whereof they had rosted their meate, & warmed themselves: yet they considered not this in their hearts, neither had they knowledge or understanding to say, I have burnt halfe of it in the fire, I have baked bread upon the coales thereof, I have roasted flesh, and eaten it: & shall I make the residue thereof an abomination?

The fourth good thought wanting.

Fourthly, a naturall man doth not consider what duty and service he owes to God: his minde is wholly bẽt to his own waies, but the Lords talent lyes hid in the ground wrapt up in a napkin, Mat.25.18. Hereof the Lord complaines against the Iewes, Ier.5 24. That they say not in their hearts, Let us feare the Lord our God: hence it was that the foolish virgins, Mat.25. 38. did content themselves with the blasing lampe of an outward profession, and never bethought themselves of that oyle of grace, which God required in all these, that would enter with Christ into his bridechamber, till it was too late: and the slight-seeing of God at this day, declares the generall want of this consideration.

Sect.3.

The fruit of this want of good thoughts.

Hereafter we must know, that this want of good consideration is a grievous evill, and a mother sinne, from whence, as from a fountaine, streames of corruptions and transgressions, both of heart and life, do issue forth: first, hereby we are disabled from yeelding unto God that obedience of heart, which his law requires: for how can we love the Lord with all our thought and minde, and our neighbour as our selves, Luk.10.27. as God commands, when as naturally our hearts are voide of all good thoughts towards God, & towards our neighbours? Againe, whence comes sinning with an high hand, when men sinne, and wil sinne? whence comes it, that men blesse themselves in their sins, & flatter themselves in their owne cies, while they go on in sinne, but from want of consideration of Gods presence, & of Gods judgements? This Abrahams knew well, and therefore said of the people of Gerar, Gen.20. 11. Because they wanted the feare of God, that is, al consideration of Gods presence, & of Gods Iudgements, therefore they would kill him for his wives sake. Whence also comes that sensuality, whereby men addict themselves wholly to the profits, pleasures & honors of this world, never minding heaven or hell, but from want of consideration of their duty to God? If men did use to call themselves to account for their sinnes, or did set before their eyes the judgements of God due unto them, it could not be that there should bee such want of contrition towards God, or of compassion towards their brethren, as every where abounds. And the like might be said of many other capitall sins, all which proceed from the want of good cõsideration. Where by the way wee may observe, that our common people doe farre deceive themselves in this perswasion of themselves, That by nature they have good hearts, and good meaning. If you charge them with the sins of their lives, they will straight way pleade their good intention, and say, though they sometime faile in action, yet they meane well alwayes. But the truth is, naturally well meaning, and good consideration, in spirituall things is altogether wanting. And therefore while men doe sooth up themselves in their good meaning, they deceive their owne hearts through ignorance of their naturall estate: and they must know, that they can never come unto Christ, that they might have life, till they bee quite gone out of themselves, in regard of such conceits.

CHAP. VII.

The use of the former doctrine.

Sect.1.

That the Scripture is the word of God.

HAving seene what evill thoughts be in every man naturally, and what good thoughts be wanting in him: it followes now to make some use of this doctrine concerning mans naturall imaginations.

The first use shall be against all those, who thinke the Scripture to be meere policie, devised by man, to keep men in awe. But we are to know, that the holy Scripture is no device of man, but every word of the everliving God, wch I shall more fully use of the former doctrine: The Scripture is in generall, rall, that all the imaginations of every naturall man are evill, & that continually. Now it doth not onely affirme this in generall, but declares it also in particulars, for elsewhere it sheweth what those particular evill thoughts be, which the naturall minde of man frameth concerning God, his neighbour, and himselfe. Againe, the same Scripture saith in generall, The good thoughts and considerations, are naturally wanting in every man; & elsewhere it declareth in particular what those good thoughts be which enter not into the minde of a naturall man: both these have bin plainely shewed out of the word of God. Now hereupõ it doth necessarily follow, that the Scripture is the word of God: for let the cunning Atheist shew whence it is that the Scripture doth declare mans thoughts, hee cannot say, of man; for no man knoweth the thoughts of another; nay hee cannot finde out his owne thoughts: neither can he ascribe it to any Angell good or bad; for the minde of man is hid from them; they know not mans thoughts. It remaineth therefore, that as God alone is the searcher, of the hearts, so, that scripture which declareth unto man what be his thoughts, is the only word of the same God: Indeed God used man for his instrument, in the penning and delivery of the Scripture, but hee himselfe by his Spirit is the sole author thereof.

Sect.2.

That man hath no freewill to good by nature.

The second use shall bee against the Papists, who ascribe to mans will a naturall power to that which is truly good, as by it selfe to co-worke with Gods grace in the first act of mans conversion. But the charge of evill here laid upon the frame of mans naturall heart by God himselfe, doth teach us otherwise: for looke how farre the frame of the minde, which is the principall part of the soule, is corrupt for thoughts & imaginations, so farre is the will, the inferiour part of the soule, corrupt in willing. But the minde is naturally so corrupt that it cannot thinke a good thought, and therefore answerably the will by nature is so corrupt, that it cannot will that which is truly good: if it be said, that man hath liberty of will in humane actions and in civill duties: Answere He hath, but yet such actions proceeding from a corrupt fountaine, are sinnes in owne naturall man, howsoever for the matter of the workes they may bee called good, being such as God himselfe ordained.

Bellarm. de grat. & lib. arbit. libr. 1. cap. 15. sect. 10.

Of the threefold reproving and suppressing

The third use shall bee for admonition unto them, to whom is committed the education of youth, as Parents, Masters, Tutors, &c. that seeing the imaginations of mans heart are evill from the youth, therefore they must all joyne hand in hand betime to stop up, or at least to lessen this corrupt fountaine. Parents must sow the seedes of grace into the minds of their young children, that if it were possible, even at their mothers brest they might be nourished in the faith. Thus dealt Lois and Eunice with their young Timothy: for Paule saith, (a) *He learned the holy Scriptures * of an infant.* Then as their children grow in deferation and use of reason, they must bee (b) nurtered in religion, and have the grounds thereof by often repetition driven into their hearts: for this is the best meanes to free their minds, though not altogether from naturall imaginations, yet from the force and poyson thereof: for (c) folly is bound to the heart of a child, but the rodde of teaching, that is, instruction with correction, will drive it away from him: yea, when as the (d) child sets at liberty makes his mother ashamed; yet will (e) the sonne that is well instructed, give his father rest, and yeeld delight unto his soule. Further, where Parents leave, there Masters and Tutors must take hold, building up that good foundation which is laid to their hand, that by them also the streame of mans naturall imaginations may bee stopped: yea, though parents should neglect this duty towards their owne children, as too many doe at this day, yet each godly Master, if he desire to have Gods Church in his house, must instruct his family, as (f) Abraham did, and labour for circumcision of heart both to his children and servants, even as (g) Abraham did circumcise not onely those that were borne in his family, but also those that were bought for money. Both Parents and Masters are carefull to prevent diseases, and to breake off sicknesses at the beginning in their children and servants, which by the continuance might bring bodily death: oh then how carefull ought they to be, to stoppe betime the course of naturall imaginations in them, which without the speciall grace of God, will bring eternall condemnation both to soule and bodie? And the rather must this ought be taken in youths, and that betimes, because custome, whether in good or evill, is (h) a second nature. (i) Teach a child in the way of his way, and when hee is old he will not depart from it. But, (k) can the blacke Moore change his skinne, or the leopard his spots? then may you also doe good, that is accustomed to doe evill: wherein the vices of the mind, as the diseases of the bodie, by longer continuance they grow more incurable. Yea, all the studie and paine of Schooles, either for their owne private, or for the publike good, must seeke to bring it to God for the sanctification of their middles from their owne corruption, least being left unto themselves, they become vaine in their imaginations. David a man according

(a) 2. Tim. 3. 15. * ἀπὸ βρέφους.

(b) Eph. 6. 4.

(c) Prov. 22. 15.

(d) Prov. 29. 15.

(e) Ibid. 29.

(f) Gen. 18. 9.

(g) Gen. 17. 23

(h) Plato. 7. de leg.

(i) Ier. 13. 23.

to Gods owne heart, prayed at least ten times in one (a) Psalme for the teaching of God in the understanding of his law: Oh then what great cause have we to doe? whose (b) minds are naturally set in evill workes; being blind in the things of God (c) not able to perceive them: but on the contrary, wholly prone to invent and to embrace that which is evill, a Psal. 119.

b Col. 1. 21.
c 2 Cor. 2. 14.

Sect. 4.

Of repentance for evill thoughts.

The fourth and last use shall be for practice to every child of God: for if the Imaginations of mans heart bee evill from his youth, then there must bee repentance for secret thoughts which never come into action, yea though we never give cōsent of will thereto. When Ioel proclaimed a fast, and called the people to humiliation, he bids them (d) Rent their hearts, and not their garments: and Peter said to Simon Magus, (e) Repent of this thy wickednesse, and pray God, that if it bee possible, the thought of thy heart may bee forgiven thee: both which places doe plainely shew, that true repentance is not outward in change of speech or attire, but inward in change of the thoughts of the minde, and affections of the heart. And hence it is that Paul prayeth for the Thessalonians, (f) That they may be sanctified throughout in soule, & body, & spirit, that is, in the mind, where is the framing of the thoghts. Now if sanctification bee required in the minde, then must there bee repentance of the sinnes that are therein. This dutie the Lord himselfe vouchsafeth to teach, and therefore we must make conscience to learne and practice it, if wee would bee truly turned to the Lord. And to move us hereunto, consider the reasons following.

d Ioel. 2. 13.
e Act. 8. 22.
f 1 Thess. 5. 23.

1. Reason. First, the curse of God, even the pangs and torments of the damned, both in this life and after death, are due to the person of man for his wicked thoughts: for cursed is every one (saith (g) Moses) that continueth not in all things that are written in the Law to doe them: so that he which breaketh the law but once, and that in thought onely, is accursed, because hee hath not done all things that are written therein. Now wicked thoughts are a breach of the law: for Salomon saith, (h) Doe they not erre that imagine evill? and again, The thoughts of the wicked are an abomination to the Lord: yea, the want of good thoghts is a breach of the Law: for Christ (i) saith, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy thoughts, and therefore wicked thoughts must needs deserve this curse. The fall of the divels was most fearefull and irrecoverable, and (though it be not certaine) yet most Diuines agree in this, that their sinne was first in thoughts, and therefore wicked thoughts are deadly evills. Also to shew the wickednesse of evill thoughts, God hath set his brand upon them since the fall of Adam, that by them not onely mans bodie, but also his minde and memorie, are farre sooner confounded then by outward accidents; this was not so by creation, and therefore it is the heavie curse of God upon them.

g Deut. 27. 26.
h Prov. 14. 22. & Prov. 15. 26.
i Mark. 12. 30.

2. Reason. Order of producing actions. Secondly, these wicked thoughts bee the roote and beginning of all evill in gesture, word and deed; there cannot bee an action before there be a thought: for this is the order wherby our actions are produced: first, the minde thinketh: then that thought delighteth the affection, and from that commeth consent of will: after consent of will, commeth execution of the action, after execution commeth trade and custome by often practice: and upon custome (if the worke be evil) commeth the curse, which is eternall death. How great a cause therefore have we to repent us of the wicked imaginations of our hearts? The old world indeed was drowned for their actuall abhominations, but no doubt, the Lord had great respect in that judgement to their wicked thoughts, which were the roote of all: and therefore he mentioneth them as a cause of the flood. Gen. 6. 5.

1. Examination of evil thoghts. In this repentance three things are required; first, a due examination of our hearts concerning these imaginations, which we may take by the knowledge of those points before handled, of mans naturall thoughts concerning God, his neighbour, and himselfe: And to further us herein wee must remember that all the evill thoughts before mentioned be in us naturally: so as if we be left to our selves, when occasion is offered, wee will conceive them in our minds, as that there is no God, that the word of God is foolishnesse, &c. Againe, we must heare Gods word preached attentively, and apply not onely our outward senses, but our minds also thereto, that so it may enter into our hearts, for the word of God, working in the heart, will discouer unto a man what be his thoughts: This word (saith the holy Ghost) is mightie in operation, and sharper then any two edged sword, it entereth through even to the dividing asunder of the soule and the spirit, the joints and the marrow, and is discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. At the preaching of this word the fearers of the heart of an infidell are discovered: If all prophesie (saith (k) Paul) and there come in an infidell, or one unlearned, hee is rebuked of all men, and judged of all, and so are the secrets of his heart made manifest, whereupon he falleth downe, and worshipeth God saying plainely, God is in the godly men indeed. Secondly, after examination, we must pray for the pardon of our evill thoghts. A plaine commandement of this duty Peter gives to Simon Magus, (l) Pray to God saith he that the thought of thy heart may bee forgiven thee: And undoubtedly hee that hath not grace to pray for the pardon of his evill thoughts, hath not true repentance in his heart. Thirdly, we must seeke to reforme our mind of evil thoghts, this is a further matter then i Heb. 4. 12.

k 1 Cor. 14. 25.
2. Prayer for pardon of the.
l Act. 8. 22.
3. Reformation of evill thoughts.

then reformation of life; And it is expressely commanded by the holy Ghost, Ephe. 4. 23. Be yee renewed in the spirit of your minde, that is, in the most inward and secret part of your soules, even where the thoughts and imaginations are framed and conceived. This duty must bee remembred: for Christian religion consisteth not in outward shewes & behaviour, (though thereby we may give comfortable testimonie of Gods inward graces) but it stands principally in the minde, and in the heart, which must therefore bee reformed with the powers and faculties thereof.

CHAP. VIII.

Rules for the reformation of our evill thoughts.

Sect. 1.

Our thoughts must be brought into obedience to God.

1. Rule. FOr the reformation of our thoughts, sundry rules must be observed: first, That we bring all our thoughts unto the obedience of God. Every man will grant that words and actions must be in subjection, but I say further, every thought in the mind must be conceived in obedience to God, and no other waies: Salomon saith, Prov. 20. 18. Establish thy thoughts by counsell, which may admit this meaning, that a man must not conceive a thought in his minde, unlesse he have counsell and warrant from the word of God so to thinke: And S. Paul saith, 2 Cor. 10. 5. The weapons of our warfare (speaking of the preaching of the Gospell) are not carnall, but mightie through God to throw down holds, casting downe the imaginations, and every thing that is exalted against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivitie every thought to the obedience of Christ: giving us to understand, that those who submit themselves to the ministerie of the word, must bee of this minde, not onely to be conformable therunto in word and action, but in every thought of their minde, even there shall bow the knee to Christ, how soever with men we say thought is free, yet with God it is not so. And indeed hee which hath effectually received the grace of Christ, will endeavour to yeeld obedience to it well in thought, as in word and action: Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any vertue, and if there be any praise, thinke on these things, saith he: where we see the conclusion is plaine, that mans thoughts must be holy, pure, just, and such things as are praiseworthy and of good report, that so they may be conceived in obedience to God.

A
B
C
D

(a) Psal. 119. 10. Sect. 2. Of the guarding of our hearts.

The second rule for the reformation of our thoughts, is given by Salomon (b) Keepe or constor-guard thy heart above all watch, and ward: that is, guard and keepe thy heare more then any thing that is watched or guarded, whether citie, bouse, treasure, or such like: and the reason adioyned thereto, the necessitie of the rule, for out of it come the issues of life.

2. Rule. b Pro. 4. 23.

In the right guarding of the heart, three duties must be performed: first, we must covenant with our outward senses, resolvingfully with our selves by Gods grace that none of them shall be the instruments, the beginning or occasion of any sinne in heart, or life. Thus covenants (c) Iob made with his eyes, not to looke upon a maide, to lust after her: And David prayed the Lord to direct and keepe his eyes from beholding vanities: Psalm. 119. 37. Now looke how these holy men dealt with their eyes, so must we proportionably deale for all the outward senses of our body, binding them all after their example, from being the meanes of provocation to any sinne. This dutie is most necessarie, for the outward senses bee the doores & windowes of the soule, and unlesse good care be had thereto, the divell will enter in by them, and fill the soule with all corruption.

3. Things in the guarding of the heart. c Iob. 31. 1.

Secondly, we must observe our evill thoghts, and at their first arising, stoppe and restraine them, not suffering them to take any place in our hearts: this is especiall meanes to preserve and guard the heart, for from the thoughts proceed all bad desires, corrupt affections, evill words & actions: the minde must first conceive before the will can desire, or the affections be delighted, or the members of the body practice any thing, for that whatsoever is of a loose life, and bad behaviour, it commeth from the prophanenes of his heart in evill thoghts: neither can it be hoped that any man should reforme his life, that will not guard his heart, and keepe his mind from wicked imaginations: the divell cannot worke his will upon man: affections cannot prevaile over man's will, but by thoughts, and therefore it is necessary, when the first motion of evill in the minde be restrained at the beginning.

Thirdly, wee must with all care diligence and maineraine every good motion of Gods Spirit, that is caused in us by the ministerie of the word, or by the advice of Gods children, for these are the sparkes and flames of grace, which Paul meaneth, when he saith, 1 Thess. 5. 19. Quench not the Spirit.

Sect. 3. Of the meditation of the heart to God.

Thirdly, for the reformatiō of our thoughts we

3. Rule.

to we must often use elevation of minde & heart to heaven, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of his Father. Thus did David, Psal. 25.1. Unto thee, O Lord, will I lift up my soule: And Paul, saying of himselfe, and other Christians, Phil. 3.20. That they had their conversation in heaven, signifieth thus much, that not only their studies and meditations, but also their dealings in the world were heavenly. Christ Luke bids us, draw neere to God, Iam. 4.8. Now which way should a poore wretch here below draw neere to God, but by lifting up his heart to the throne of grace in heaven, that so God in mercy may draw neere unto him by grace? the Lord hath instituted in his Church the use of his last Supper, wherein the giving and receiving of bread & wine doth represent and seale up unto us our communion and participation of the body and blood of Christ given for our redemption: Now the principall action on our behalfe therein required, is this Elevation of the heart unto God, as well for the contemplation of Gods infinite mercy in Christ, and of Christs endlesse love to us, as for the application of his merits to our owne soules by the hand of faith, as also for the spirituall resignation of our selves in soules and bodies, by way of thankfulnesse to him that hath redeemed us. Further, touching this Elevation wee must remember, that it ought to bee our continuall and ordinarie action unto God: for as it is with him that keepes a clocke, unlesse he doe every day winde up the waights, which are alwaies going downward, the clock will stand: so it fareth with us, our hearts are ever drawing eowards the earth, and the things here below, by reason of that body of sinne, which hangeth on so fast, and presseth downe, Hebrew. 12.1. and therefore wee must endeavour by Gods grace continually to lift them up to heaven: The Apostle bids us, Pray continually, 1 Thess. 5.17. unto that we should doe nothing else but pray, but his meaning is, that we should everie day to us occasion is offered, lift up our hearts unto God. But of all other, there bee three speciall times wherein wee must use this heavenly Elevation: first, in the morning by prayer, thanksgiving, or both, before the cogitations of our earthly affaires come into our minds, that so wee may come unto God the first fruits of our thoughts every day. Secondly, in the evening before we day downe our bodies to rest, for who knoweth when he layeth downe himselfe to sleepe, whether ever he shall rise againe or live? Thirdly, at any other time of the day, wherein we receive any blessing from God, temporall, our spirituall, or deliver our selves from danger, or make use of any of his gifts, or graces: for seeing every good gift comes from him, is it not reason wee should give this glory to his name: to lift up our hearts to his throne of grace, whensoever we receive or expect the same from his bountiful hand?

A

B

C

D

Sect. 4.

Of the assurance of our particular reconciliation with God.

Fourthly, for the reformation of our thoughts, we must labour to bee assured in our hearts by Gods Spirit, of our particular reconciliation with God in Christ. This is that knowledge of the love of God which passeth knowledge, for which Paul, Eph. 3.14,19. Bowed his knees unto the Father of our Lord Iesus Christ, in the behalfe of the Ephesians: in regard hereof Paul esteemed all things losse, yea, to be dresse and dung, Philip. 3.8 Now when this assurance is settled in our hearts, it will purifie not onely the affections, but also the first motions and thoughts of our mindes: Hee that hath in himselfe this hope (saith Saint (a) John) purgeth himselfe, as God is pure. For when a man shall be truly perswaded in his heart, that of a vile sinner, even the child of wrath, he is made the childe of God, and a vessell of honour acceptable to God, enjoying his love and favour in Christ, then will he reason thus with himselfe: hath God of his endlesse mercy vouchsafed to receive me into his grace and favour, that otherwayes I should have beene a firebrand of hell for evermore? oh then, how should I suffer my minde, my will, and affections, to bee any longer the instruments of sinne, whereby I shall displease so gracious a God, and cast my selfe out of his love and favour? nay, but I will imploy my soule, which he hath redeemed with all the powers and faculties thereof, as weapons of righteousnesse for the advancement of his glory.

4. Rule.

a 1 John 3.3.

Sect. 5.

Of spirituall consideration.

Lastly, if we would reforme our thoughts, we must give our selves to spirituall consideration or meditation. By Spirituall consideration I meane any action of the minde renewed and sanctified, whereby it doth seriously thinke on those things which may further salvation. This consideration I call spirituall, to distinguish it from earthly plotting care, whereby naturall men shew themselves wise and provident for the things of this life, though in the matters of God, which concerne salvation, they bee blinde and ignorant. Also I adde, it must bee an action of a minde renewed and sanctified, because the naturall man perceiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, 1 Cor. 2.14. they seeme foolishnesse unto him, and therefore hee cannot give his minde to enter the consideration of them.

5. Rule.

Now the excellency and use of this rule will plainly appeare by the fruitfull practice of it in the Prophet David: who when as more usual with him, than spirituall and heavenly meditation? sometimes upon (b) God himselfe: sometimes (c) in the workes of God: sometime (d) on his owne wayes: and (e) continually on Gods word: Now sanctifying this duty by prayer, as it is plaine he did continually, Psal. 19.14. Let the meditation of my heart, O Lord, be acceptable in thy sight: hence it came to passe that he professed, Psal. 119.113. An hatred unto vaine inventions, which are the proper effects of an unreformed mind; and on the contrarie, by this godly practice, Psal. 119.99. He got more understanding than his teachers: yea, he attained to this excellent state of a renewed minde, that his reines, whereby hee meanes the most secret part of his soule, taught him in the night season, Psal. 16.7. And in reason wee may perceive the truth hereof; for seeing contraries do mutually expell one another, what can bee more effectuall to purge the mind of evil thoughts, than to exercise the same with spirituall considerations? for when through the blessing of God, these shall take place, the other must needs be gone: in regard whereof it shall not be amisse somewhat to insist in the handling of them.

b Psal. 119.55.
c Psal. 119.97.
d Psal. 119.59.
e Psal. 119.98.

CHAP. IX.

Of spirituall considerations concerning God.

Sect. 1.

Of the consideration of Gods presence.

Spirituall considerations serving for the reformation of our thoughts, doe either concerne God, or our selves. That which concerneth God containeth many branches, but I will insist in foure especially. First, touching Gods presence, whereby a man doth think and so resolve himselfe, that wheresoever he is, he stands before God, and that all his thoughts, words, and deeds, are naked in Gods sight, Davids heart was filled with this consideration, when hee penned the 139. Psalme, for that whole Psalme from the beginning to the end, serveth to expresse this holy cogitation of Gods presence: the like impression must wee labour to have in our hearts touching Gods presence: for it is the most notable meanes, to cleanse the heart from evill thoughts, to restraine the will and affections from wicked delights, and to keepe in order the whole man, causing him to stand in awe of Gods commandements. David saith, Psal. 19.9. The feare of the Lord is cleane; meaning thereby, that that man which hath the feare of God in his heart, arising from this consideration of Gods presence, hath a cleane and pure heart. This consideration also is a notable meanes of comfort in the time of trouble and danger: hence David saith, Psal. 23.4. Though I walke through the valley of the shadow of death, I will feare none evill: for the Lord is with me: and hence it was, that, Psal. 3.6. He would not be afraid for tenne thousand of the people that should rise up against him.

A

B

C

D

Sect. 2.

The consideration of Gods judgements.

The second consideration touching God, is, of his judgements, not onely those which were done of olde, and are recorded in the Scripture, or other histories, but even his least judgements which we behold or heare to fall upon Kingdomes, Townes, particular houses and persons, must we carefully lay unto our hearts. Of the want hereof the Lord complaineth among his people, saying, Ier. 12. 11. The whole land lyeth waste, because no man setteth his mind on it: giving us to understand, that the neglect of due consideration of Gods judgement, brought desolation to the whole land, and therefore the want thereof is a maine and grievous sinne, bringing further judgements with it.

GOD hath sundry times sent his judgements among us, generally by plague, and famine; and particularly on sundry families, & persons; but who regardeth them? Wherefore unlesse we will double Gods judgements upon us, let us remember our duty, and seriously thinke upon them. And that this consideration may be profitable unto us, we must doe three things, first, we must carefully observe, marke, and remember them: Psal. 119. 52. I remember thy judgement of old, O Lord. The Lords people were much wanting herein, as Psal. 78.11,42. Secondly, we must apply them to our owne persons in particular, so as the thought thereof may make us afraid, though they befall others. When Habakkuk 3.16. in a vision saw the judgements of God which were to come upon the Chaldeans, the consideration thereof was so powerfull with him, that it made him tremble and quake: In a family, when the father beateth his servant, the child feareth; and when one childe is beaten, then all the rest crie: even so when God our Father powreth downe his judgements, though upon the heathen, yet we must feare; but when any of his children are afflicted, it must sit like sore to our hearts. Thirdly, wee must make use of Gods judgements, that light upon others, by applying them to our selves. When certaine men brought newes to our Saviour Christ of an heavy judgement upon some Galileans, whose blood Pilate had mingled with their owne sacrifices, Luke 13.1, 2,3. immediatly our Saviour labours to bring them that told him, to make use thereof for their owne good, saying, that thereby they ought to bee moved to repentance; for they that were slaine, were no greater sinners than the rest: and therefore except they who told that newes did amend their lives, they should also perish. So that whensoever wee see or heare of any judgement of GOD upon others, we must thereby bee moved to repent: and thus doing, wee shall come to a right;

A

B

C

D

right consideration of Gods Iudgements.

Sect 3.

The consideration of Gods word.

The third consideration concerning God, is of his word. David maketh it the property of a blessed man *Psal.*1.2.to meditate in the law of God day and night: and he professeth of himselfe, that it was his meditation continually: Psal. 119.97. yea, oftentimes hee promiseth to (a) meditate in Gods precepts, to (b) delight in Gods statutes. This is(c) Maries praise that she kept in her heart sundry things which Iesus spake. And so ought every childe of God, high or low, daily and continually to meditate in the word of God. But, alas, this duty is little knowne, and lesse practised: men are so farre from meditating in Gods word, that they are ignorant of it. Among many families you shall scarce finde the booke of God: and such as have it, for the most part, do little use it. The statutes of the land are by very many searched out diligently, but in the meane time the statutes of the Lord are little regarded: oh that men knew the sweet comfort of the Scriptures, *Rom.*15.4. then certainly they would account their meditation therein, Ier. 15.16. The joy and rejoycing of their heart.

Now the right consideration of Gods word consists in three things: first, we must observe the true sense and meaning of that which we heare, or reade. Secondly, we must marke what experience wee have had of the truth of the word in our owne persons; as in the exercises of Repentance, and Invocation of Gods name, and in all our Temptations: this is a speciall point in this meditation, without which the former is nothing. Thirdly, we must consider how farre forth we have beene answerable to Gods word in obedience, and wherein wee have beene defective by transgressions. Againe, in the word of God, there bee both commandements, and promises: The consideration of Gods commandement, is a notable meanes to direct, and moderate, not onely our words, and deeds, but also our secret thoughts and desires: for if before we think, before we will, or speak any thing, we would first consider that God commands us to thinke, to will, and speake thus and thus, this would mightily stay, and suppresse in us all corrupt thoughts and desires, all evill words and actions. The promises of God likewise duely considered would greatly further us in good thoughts: for to them that thinke on good things, shall bee mercy and truth, Prov. 14.22. The cause then why many that know the will of God, so much faile in particular obedience, is because that with their knowledge they doe not joyne this serious cõsideration of Gods commandements, and promises, and apply the same to their occasions.

a Verse 15.
b Verse 16.
c Luk. 2. 51.

Sect. 4.

The consideration of Gods workes.

The fourth consideration concerning God, is, of his workes: for as David saith, *Psal.*111.2. The workes of the Lord are great, and ought to be sought out of all that love him. This consideratiõ bindeth us to enquire, and search what be the workes of God toward us, his worke of creation, his povidence, preservation, with all other his workes of mercy and justice in us; and upon us; whether ordinary, or extraordinary: The Prophet Esay denounceth a woe against those that had the Harpe, and Violl, Timbrell and Pipe, and wine in their feasts, and regarded not the worke of God, nor considered the worke of his hands; Isai. 5.11,12. whereby we may see, that the neglect hereof, is a grievous sinne, and yet it is the common sinne of this age.

Now for the better performance of this duty we must thus proceed: first, wee must consider our creation, how the Lord gave us being, when we were nothing, and how hee made us reasonable creatures, and not brute beasts; yea, he created us in his owne Image, when as he might, if it had so pleased him, have made us Toades and Serpents. Secondly, wee must consider his good providence over us, how he hath preserved our life from time to time, and saved us from many dangers. And his great patience must not be forgotten, how he hath spared us from the righteous judgements of our sins: he might have cast us into hell in our mothers wombe, or so soone as wee were borne for our originall sinne, but he hath given us a large time of repentance. Here also we must consider his exceeding favour in the time and place of our birth, and life: hee might have suffered us to have beene borne among Infidels: but behold we were borne in the bosome of Gods Church: he might have deprived us of the meanes of our salvation, his holy word and Sacraments, but in his tender mercy hee hath vouchsafed them unto us, to bring our soules to life. He might have hardened our hearts against his feare, Isa 63.17. And blinded our eyes against his light, Rom 11.8. but yet hee hath enlightened our minds to know his truth, and softened our hearts, causing us to cry unto him for the pardon of our sinnes: he might have given us up to a reprobate sense, Romanes 1. 28. when we swarved from his testimonies, and regarded not the knowledge of his will: but loe, as a loving Father he hath often chastened us for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holinesse, *Heb.*12.10. Hee might have left us comfortlesse under the reproach of the wicked, but he hath vouchsafed us his Spirit, for our everlasting Comforter. Thus must we duly consider of all these wonderfull workes of God towards us, and not like the men of this this world, thinke on nothing but pastimes, honours, and commodities; This will bee a notable meanes to keepe our hearts from evill thoughts: for whose heart will not relent towards his God, that so many wayes hath tasted of his bounty towards him? yea, this consideration will be an exceeding stay and comfort to our soules in the day of trouble, and distresse: So Salomon saith, *Eccles.*7. 15, 16. Behold the worke of God, and in the day of affliction consider: A naturall man cannot away with trouble, if sorrowes increase upon him, he is ready to make away himselfe, which comes of this, that hee cannot consider the workes of God, for he that can rightly meditate on Gods goodnesse towards him in all his workes, shall be able with patience to support his soule under the greatest crosse. A practice hereof we may see in David, who being in a most grievous temptation, so as hee cryed out, *Psal.*77.8. Is the Lords mercy cleane gone? hath he forgotten to be mercifull? &c. did yet recover himselfe by the consideration of Gods former workes of mercy, and of his wonders of old, whereof hee had experience in his owne person, verse 11,12.

CHAP. X.

Of spirituall considerations which concerne our selves.

Sect. 1.

The consideration of our owne personall sinnes.

THE considerations which respect our selves, are sixe: First, we must consider our owne personall sinnes; as well the corruptions of our hearts, as the actuall transgressions of our lives. This was Davids practice, *Psal.*119. 59. I considered my wayes (saith he) and turned my feet into thy testimonies. The Iewes likewise in their great affliction, stirred up themselves to this duty, saying one to another, Lam 3 40 Come let us search, and try our wayes, and turne againe unto the Lord.

In this consideration of our sinnes, wee must do three things: First, seriously to call to minde in what manner we have sinned; whether of ignorance, or of knowledge, of weaknesse through infirmity, or of wilfulnesse through presumption. Secondly, wee must duly waigh the greatnesse of our particular sinnes, even of the least of them, remembring this, that by every sinne wee commit, Gods infinite majesty is displeased, and his justice violated. Thirdly, we must consider the number of our sinnes; which wee shall neerest attaine unto by searching out our thoughts, our wills, and affections, our words, and actions, all which being diligently observed, will make us cry out, that they be in number as the haires of our head, and the sands by the sea shoare. Quest. But what if a man have truly repented him of his sinnes, must he still use this consideration of them? Answ. Yes verily, although hee be assured of the pardon of them: so did David after Nathan told him thy sinnes are forgiven; hee penned the 51. Psalme, and when hee was high in Gods favour, he prayed still for the pardon of the sins of his youth, *Psal.*25.7. For howsoever God in mercy put our sins out of his remembrance, upon our true repentance, yet we must never put them out of our remembrance, so long as we live in this world, because the consideration of them, though they be pardoned, is a notable meanes both to move us to renew our repentance, and also to make us watchfull against sinne in time to come.

Sect. 2.

Of mans misery through his sinnes.

Secondly, we must consider the misery into which every one is plunged by nature through Adams fall, and his owne sins. This was Iobs meditation, saying Iob 14.1. Man that is borne of a woman, hath but a short time to live, hee is full of misery: and so goeth on most notably, describing the misery of man: yea, this was Salomons consideration in the whole booke of Ecclesiastes, from the beginning to the end.

Now that this consideration may take place in our hearts, we must enter into a particular view of this our naturall misery: the principall branches whereof bee these: first, a separation from all fellowship with God: for as Isay saith, *Isa.*59.2. Our sinnes have separated betweene God and us: and this is the speciall part of mans misery. Secondly, societie and fellowship with the damned spirits, the devill and his angels; standing in this, that man by nature beareth the image of the devill, and withall performeth service unto him in the practice of lying, injustice, cruelnie, and all manner of sinne. Thirdly, all manner of calamities in this life, as ignominie in good name, paines and diseases in the bodie, losses, and dammages in friends, and in all temporall blessings whatsoever. Fourthly, The horrour of a guilty conscience, which is in it selfe the beginning of hell torments: for it is our accuser unto God, our Iudge to give sentence against us, and the very hang-man of our soules to condemne us eternally. Fifthly, The second death, which is the full apprehension of the eternall fury of the wrath of God, both in body and soule eternally. This consideration must be often used of every man, to move him to repentance, and it is very effectuall thereunto: for if we doe but consider how a man for the paine of one tooth, will be so grieved, that he could wish with all his heart to be out of the world, that his paine were ended: oh then, how great shall we thinke the

1 Mans naturall misery branched out.
2
3
4
5

apprehenſion of the full wrath of God to bee
A feazing not upon one little member onely, but upon the whole man, both body & ſoule,
and that for ever? No tongue can expreſſe, nay, no heart can conceive the greatneſſe of this terrour, and therefore it muſt be an occaſion both to begin, and increaſe true repentance in us daily.

Sect. 3.

Of our owne particular temptations.

THirdly, we muſt conſider our owne particular temptations wherewith we are moſt aſſaulted through the malice of Satan, & our owne corruption. Be ſober and watch (ſaith Pe-B ter, 1 Pet. 5. 8.) for your adverſary the devill goeth about like a roaring Lyon, ſeeking whom hee may devoure. This was Pauls practice towards the inceſtuous man, whom hee had enjoy-ned to be excommunicate; for after hee gave direction that hee ſhould bee received into the Church againe, leſt hee were ſwallowed up of over much heavineſſe, and ſo Sathan ſhould circumvent them: for (ſaith hee, 2 Cor. 2. 7, & 11.)
wee are not ignorant of his enterprſes. If forraigne enemies ſhould ſeeke the invaſion of our land, not onely our Magiſtrates, but every ordinary man, well affected to his Countrey, would bethinke himſelfe what coaſt were the weakeſt, that thither preſent def-
C fence might be ſent, to keepe out the enemies; even ſo, ſeeing the devill doth aſſault us daily, we muſt enter into ſerious conſideration of our thoughts, wils, and affections, and ſee in what part we be moſt weake, and in what inclination Sathan may moſt eaſily prevaile againſt us, which we ſhall beſt eſpie by obſerving the ſinnes of our lives; and thus will make us arme our ſelves againſt him by Gods grace, even in the weakeſt parts, that he breake not into our hearts, to the ruine of our ſoules.

This conſideration concerneth all men, not onely the diſſolute and ſinfull, but even thoſe that have received moſt grace. It were infinite to goe through all the temptations of Satan: conſider this one for all, whereby D he kils many a ſoule; Through the whole courſe of mens lives, he laboureth to fill their hearts with carnall ſecurity, and to bring them to neglect the ordinary meanes of ſalvation; This done, hee ſeekes to keepe them in this eſtate all their life long: but in the end he takes another courſe; for when death ap-proacheth, then hee ſeekes to ſtrike their minds with oblivion of Gods mercies, and to fill their ſoules with terrours in regard of their ſinnes, and of Gods judgements due unto them; that ſo bereaving them of all hope of mercy, hee may bring them to finall deſpaire. Wee therefore being fore-warned of his deadly fraud, muſt ſeriouſly bethinke our ſelves of this temptation, and caſt with our
A ſelves every day how to avoid it. This wee ſhall doe if wee ſhake off carnall ſecurity, and negligence in the meanes of our ſalvation:
and provide betimes for the aſſurance of Gods love and favour, that when death ſhall come, we may be free from the terrour of an evill conſcience, and have ſtrong hope and conſolation in Chriſt Ieſus.

An ordinary, and yet moſt dangerous temptation.

Sect. 4.

Of our particular end.

FOurthly, wee muſt conſider our particular end. The Lord complaines of the want hereof in his owne people: Oh that they were wiſe, then would they conſider this, they would con-ſider their latter end, Deut. 32. 29. In this conſi-deration three points muſt be obſerved: firſt, that the time of death is uncertaine, no man knoweth when he muſt die: ſecondly, that the place is uncertaine, no man knows where he muſt die: thirdly, that the manner of his death is uncertaine, none knoweth by what death he ſhall glorifie God; and therefore that we may not deceive our ſelves, we muſt think that moſt fearefull and grievous ends may befall us, in regard of the bodily paine and torment, even then when wee little feare or ſuſpect any ſuch thing. This conſideration will bee a notable meanes to ſtirre up our hearts, either to begin, or renew our repentance: when wicked Ahab heard of his fearefull end, he was humbled, 1 King. 21. 27. and the Ninevites being told of their ſudden de-ſtruction, repented in ſackcloath and aſhes, and turned to the Lord, Ion. 3. 5, 6.

Sect. 5.

Of our ſtrait account at the laſt day.

FIftly, wee muſt often conſider with our ſelves, & that moſt ſeriouſly, of that ſtraight account and reckoning of all our thoughts, words, and actions, which we muſt make unto God at the laſt day of judgement. This is the principall conſideration of all, and the want hereof a fearefull ſinne, arguing great negligence, ignorance, blindneſſe of minde, and hardneſſe of heart: if a traveller come into an Inne, having but one penny in his purſe, and call for all manner of dainty fare and proviſion, ſpending ſumptuouſly, will not all men judge him void of all conſideration, ſith hee hath nothing to pay, when his account is to bee made? Loe, this, or worſer is moſt mens caſe, who in this life purſue their profits and pleaſures, with all eagernеſſe, they care not how, never regarding the reckoning which they muſt make unto God, at his terrible day of accounts with all the world: and therefore though the former conſiderations will not, yet let this take place in our hearts, to move

move us to a daily fore-hand reckoning with God in the practice of true repentance, and to imploy the good gifts and bleſſing we receive from God, like good ſervants, unto the beſt advantage of his glory, that when this account is to be made, wee may give it with joy, and not with feare. And that this conſi-deration is effectuall to this purpoſe, Salomon teacheth in uſing it as his farewell with diſſolute youth, with whom otherwayes he hath little hope to prevaile, ſaying, Eccl. 11. 9. *Re-joyce thou yong man, take thy pleaſure in thy youth;
yet know, that for all this thou muſt come to judgement.* But how powerfull it is with Gods child, we may ſee in Paul, Act. 24. 16. who profeſſeth of himſelfe, that in regard of this account, he indeavoured to have alway a cleare conſcience towards God, and towards men.

Sect. 6.

Of our preſent eſtate towards God.

Laſtly, wee muſt ſeriouſly conſider of our preſent eſtate towards God; whether we be in the ſtate of ſinne, or in the ſtate of grace; whether we belong to the kingdome of darkneſſe, or be true members of the kingdome of Chriſt:
it is not enough to be in the Church, but wee muſt be ſure we be of the Church; for many Wolves & Goates be in Gods fold; They went out from us. (ſaith S. John, 1 Ioh. 2. 19.) but they were not of us: and therefore Paul adviſeth to this conſideration, ſaying, 2 Cor. 13. 5. Prove your ſelves, whether you be in the faith or not. The want hereof was the fearfull ſinne of the foliſh virgins, Matth. 25. 3. who contented them-
A ſelves with a ſhew of religion, having the blazing lamps of outward profeſſion; and laboured not for that oyle of true grace, which might enlighten their ſoules to the fruition of Gods glory: yea, this is the common ſinne of this age, men bleſſe themſelves in their good meaning, ſaying they hope well, and doe not thoroughly ſearch, whether they bee true members of Gods Church or not: Now if after tri-all it appeare, that true faith and repentance bee wanting in us, which are the ſeales of adoption in Gods children, then with all good conſcience, we muſt uſe the meanes appointed of God, to obtaine theſe graces for our aſſurance, the comfort hereof will bee ſo precious unto our ſoules, that we ſhall ab-B horre to admit ſuch wicked imaginations into our minds, as any way tend to deprive vs of it.

Theſe are the conſiderations which reſpect our ſelves; whereunto if we give our mindes in a conſtant courſe, as alſo to the former which concerne the Lord, obſerving withall the rules before preſcribed, through Gods bleſſing upon our indeavor, we ſhall undoubtedly finde by good experience, That evill thoughts ſhall not prevaile againſt us: but being reformed in our cogitations, we ſhall ſend out of our mindes, as from a cleanſed fountaine, ſuch ſtreames of good words and workes, through the whole courſe of our lives, as ſhall redound to the glory of our God, the D good of our brethren, and the conſolation of our owne ſoules, through Ieſus Chriſt our Lord, to whom with the father, and the holy Ghoſt, bee praiſe in his Church for evermore. Amen.

FINIS.

WILLIAM PERKINS HIS PROBLEME

OF

The forged Catholicisme, or Vniversalitie of the Romish Religion.

And it is a counter-poyson against IODOCVS COCCIVS his Thesaurus Catholicus.

AND

An Introduction to young Students in the reading of the Fathers.

LONDON,
Printed by IOHN LEGATT:
1631

The Probleme, or Position.

It is unpossible for any Popish Divine in the world to shew out of the true Monuments of the Councils and Fathers, and out of their naturall sense and meaning, that the faith of the present Church of Rome, is truly Catholike in those points, wherein it dissenteth from the Reformed Churches of the Gospell.

The explanation of the Probleme.

BY the faith of the Romane Church, I meane the doctrine concerning the way and meanes of salvation, propounded in the Councill of Trent, in the Romane Catechisme to the parish priests, and in the Missall and Breviary, which are reformed and printed by the command and authoritie of Pope Pius the fift.

Catholike, I take in that sense which Vincentius Lirinensis doth in his booke against heresies, cap. 3. There must be an especiall care (saith he) in the Catholike Church, that that onely bee beleeved and taught, which hath beene held in all places, at all times, and of all professours: for that is truly and properly called Catholike, as the very force and derivation of the word it selfe doth declare, comprehending all things truly, universall. And againe, chapt. 25. He is rightly and truly a Catholike, who —— hath resolved with himselfe to beleeve and professe that onely, which he knowes the Catholike Church in ancient times did universally hold: And what novelty or unknowne doctrine he shall perceive any one afterward to bring in, either varying from, or contrary to all the Saints and Fathers, let him know that doctrine hath no reference to religion any way, but rather doth wholly belong to temptation. So Saint Augustine writing of Baptisme against the Donatists, in his 4 booke, chap. 24. Whatsoever the Church hath universally, and continually professed, (having not the institution thereof from some of the Councils) that wee must assuredly beleeve to have had his originall from another meanes but the ordination of the Apostles.

Now let us consider what S. Augustine and what Vincentius held to be ancient. It is twelve hundred yeares since either of them lived, wherefore what could seeme ancient unto them, but such things as were received in the Apostles times, and the age next succeeding? They doubtlesse, thought not those things ancient, which had their first ingresse into the Church in their time, or about a hundred or 2. hundred yeares before, much lesse did they hold that of antiquity, which was neither found out, nor received into the Church, till after their dayes. Therefore not all antiquity of doctrine is to bee approved, but that onely which Lirinensis, Augustine, Ambrose, Ierome, Cyprian, &c. held to be of and from antiquitie, and which they commended unto their posteritie; as also that universalitie is to be accounted true, and only that, which tooke place in all Churches in the Apostles times, and in the ages next going before Vincentius and Augustine.

Preparatives to the demonstration of the Probleme.

BEfore I come to the confirmation of my position, I must of necessitie give advertisement of three things, the better to cleare the way for the defence ensuing. The first shall concerne the authority of the Fathers, and their divers manners of writing. The second shall discover their counterfeit works, and such as are doubted of. The third shall explane the reasons why the Apostles religion is now so depraved.

1. The authoritie of the Fathers, and their manner of writing.

The ancient writers doe teach and defend, that the Canonicall Scripture is of it selfe the perfect rule and square in all controversies of faith. Tertullian against Hermogenes: I doe adore the fulnesse and perfection of the Scripture. Athanasius also in his Synopsis affirmes, that those doctrines which are contained in the Scriptures, are sufficient unto faith. Basil in his treatise of faith, It is a manifest offence of arrogancy and infidelity, either to reject any part of that which is written, or to adde any other thing which is not written. Augustine against Petilians Letters, lib. 3. cap. 6. whether it concerne Christ, or his Church, or any other thing belonging to our faith, or life, I will not say if we doe preach — : but even as the Apostle himselfe saith afterwards, if an Angell come from heaven with any other doctrine than that you have heard out of the Legall and Euangelicall scriptures, let him be accursed: The same August. in his 49. tract upon John: Whereas our Saviour Christ did many things, and yet all of them are not written: those things were chosen out to be written, which were thought to be sufficient for the salvation of beleevers. Vincentius Lyrin. chap. 41. The Canon of holy Scripture, sufficeth unto all things even abundantly. Salvian in his third booke of providence, saith, that the bookes of the Gospell containe doctrine replete with all manner of perfection. Scotus likewise, in his prologue before the 1. booke of sentences, q. 2. saith, It is evident that the Scripture doth sufficiently containe all things necessary for the pilgrimage to heaven. Cameracensis upon the sentences: We must have recourse onely unto the Scriptures, that we may obtaine salvation. Bellarm. of the unwritten word of God, lib. 4. cap. 11. I say that all those things were written by the Apostles, which are necessary for all men, and which they publikely preached unto all men.

2. The ancient Writers will have their sayings and testimonies well examined, and so farre forth onely to be received as they doe agree with the rule of our faith, and the writings of the Prophets and Apostles. So speaketh Dionysius Alexandri. of Nepos: In many other things I doe embrace and love Nepos: but surely the truth is to bee preferred and respected before all. If any man doe speake well, we ought to give him his due praise and approbation without all envie, but if he speake any thing that is not sound, we must both examine it, & try it thoroughly. So Saint Augustine also, I will not binde you unto mine authority, that you should therefore thinke any thing necessary to be beleeved, because I affirme it. And againe, I have learned to give this honour and reverence unto those bookes alone which are now called Canonicall, that I doe infallibly beleeve that no author of them all, or any of them did ever erre in any of his writings. For others, I doe so reade them, that (how holy or learned soever they be) I doe not thinke this or that to be true, because they so held it, but so farre as they are able to perswade me, either by those Canonicall authors, or by probable reason, that it is not oppugning the truth. Besides, I am not tyed unto the authority of this Epistle, because I hold not Cyprians letters for Canonicall, but I doe examine them by Canonicall Scriptures: and whatsoever I finde therein consenting unto them, I approve with his praise: and whatsoever is therunto opposite, by his leave I must rejell. And in another place: Unto those parts of Scripture which are most plaine, we fastned all those things that concerne the rules of our faith and manners; namely, Hope and Charity. Chrysostome also saith, that if a man affirme any thing without authority of Scripture, his auditors doe thus flandarly reprehend it. Basil also teacheth, that it is not sufficient for us to beleeve the Fathers and writers of the Church in matters of faith, unlesse they doe confirme their sayings by Scripture.

3. The Fathers in many points of Divinity have spoken very unfitly. At first, when they were moved thereunto in their heat of disputation. So Basil speaking of Gregory of Nyssa: They could not understand (quoth he) that this (namely, that the Father and the Sonne, are one in person) was spoken in contention and controversie of disputation with Aetius, not positively, nor dogmatically. Secondly, because in their exhortation they oftentimes were too rhetoricall, either in the favour of others, or to affect their auditory the more. This Saint Hierome confesseth of himselfe, excusing something that hee had spoken unfitly, We did play the Rhetorician (quoth he) and gave somewhat to our declamations. So Theodoret, I do not accounte those things a rule of doctrines & decrees, which are flamingly and rhetorically spoken in the Church. Which thing may farre more truly be affirmed of the rabble of the Canonists and Schoolemen. Let one of them describe all the rest. One cryeth that all actions of inferiours shall bee judged by the Pope, but the Popes onely by God. Another saith, that none can judge the chiefe Chayre: A third saith, that God onely can depose Popes: A fourth is not ashamed to aver, that though the Pope should carie heapes of soules to hell with him, yet no man ought to reprehend him. Thus these wretches never consider that these allegations that they clap so fast together are either of the Popes owne coyning, enlarging the borders of their garments: or of some of those that made it their trade to flatter them. Thirdly, 3. because they speake more carelesse, while Controversies were not moved. As Augustine doth acknowledge: that while the Pelagians stirred not, the ancient Fathers spake the more negligently about originall sinne, and free-will. His words are these: He (meaning Chrysostome) disputing in the Catholike Church, did thinke his words would be no otherwise conceived: there was then no such question made concerning this thing, you had not as yet raised your contention, and therefore he spake more carelesly. Bellarmine himselfe confesseth that the writers speake sometime properly and warily, and sometime unfitly and heedlesly. Fourthly, because 4 they oftentimes borrowed their forme of speech from the vulgar, and therefore have

Aul. Gellius Noct. l. 2. c. 3.

De doctr. Christ. l. 2. c. 9.

In Psal. 95.

In Psal. 5.

Epist. 6.

Epist.

2.

Dialog. 3.

Thomas de Corsellis at the Acts of Sylvester and Gelasius Epist. 1.

Euseb. eccl. hist. l. 7. c. 23.

Ad Paulinum epist. 112.

Epist. 19.

3.

Contra Iulian. Pelagian. l. 1. c. 2.

4

written in many places thereafter. Melchior Canus shall be a witnesse. We cannot deny (saith he) that even the graveste Authors, especially in describing the miracles of the Saints, have both harkned upon flying reports, and also delivered them in writing unto posterity. Wherein truly (if I might judge) they either nousled themselves, or the rude and vulgar sort of the faithfull in too great measure; because they knew that the common sorte did not onely easily believe all those miracles, but also desired most earnestly to heare of them. And they thought it the more tolerable, because they knew that the moste famous Authors do hold that it is the true law of a history to write such things as the common report conformed to be true. — Which things I may perhaps both rightly and truly affirme of Gregory and Bede. After this manner in the bookes of antiquity, that is often tearmed by the names of Catholike and Apostolike, which was so esteemed by the vulgar sort of the faithfull. Fiftly, because the Fathers being overcome by the multitude, were now and then caried into superstitions, as the force of the tide violently carieth away the boats: and hereupon it ensued, that they concealed some things for feare. There are many such faults as this (saith one) which I dare not so freely reprove, because of avoiding the offence of some other holy, or perhaps turbulent persons. Sixtly, because sometimes they speake of things historically and in forme of rehearsall, not positively, and by way of assertion. Witnesse Saint Hierome: The ancient Fathers are sometimes enforced to speake against their owne thoughts, onely because that they must bee faine to affirme so against the positions of the heathen.

Againe, it is one thing to speake scholastically or disputatively, and another thing to speake dogmatically or doctrinally. So also a later writer: Wee must marke how Authors doe speake, whether out of opinion, or out of assertion, or out of the vehemency of sorrow, comforting themselves. And so he proceedeth expounding the saying of Saint Ambrose, spoken of Valentinian dying without Baptisme: The grace which he intreated for, he did not lose. So Abbot Ioachim: A man may speake what he thinketh out of conjectures, but not as though hee understood certainly any thing thereby. And those testimonies of antiquity which say that Enoch and Elias are the two witnesses, he calleth them opinions fallible, no knowledge or understanding. So Bartoll the Civilian is said to defend Pope Clement the fift his institution, concerning the Popes power over Kings, rather triflingly and for fashion sake, than truly and out of his owne conscience, because he is wholly uncertaine, and never affirms one flat position one way or other, as also because his place of abode was under the jurisdiction of the Church of Rome. Heare another. We must not hold all the Popes opinative allegations (being not decretally spoken) to be of the same value with their expresse determinations, as they themselves do testifie. For Innocentius himself upon the Chapter Literas, &c. (when there was a question made, concerning which the finall sentence of Pope Clement was alledged) held not Clements judgement for a determination, neither would he himself so determine thereof. — For it were too hard a matter, and not to be borne, that the judgement of the learned should be tied to every answer & opinative allegation of the Popes: for they have not always the assistance of the Spirit. Bellarm. speaking of Celestine and Innocentius teaching expresse contraries, saith, That neither of them decreed any certainty in that controversie, but both spake out of their judgement to the greatest probability. And that there are many things in the decretall Epistles, which imply not any matter of faith, but onely discover the Popes opinions concerning these things. Why therefore may not we avouch the same of the Fathers?

Therefore the Fathers of later ages oftentimes expounded the sayings of their predecessors out of the holy Scriptures, or else did flatly reject them. Witnesse hereof Saint Augustine in the controversies with the Pelagians: Iulian did cite Basil: Sin is not a substance, but an accident, therefore easily removed out of the will, so that no skarre or token thereof remain. Saint Augustine expoundeth this place according to the analogy of faith: It is easie not to mans will, but unto Gods mercy. And this sufficed against the Manichees, who held that it was impossible. And whereas some Fathers, viz. Irenæus, Iustine, Clement, & Tertullian held, the law of nature had power to save the Gentiles without Christ: Saint Augustine expresly confuteth them all. Nay which is more, the Fathers themselves would either plainly retract and call in againe such things as they had unfitly committed to others eares, or else they would correct them by writing the contrary in another place.

The Fathers have errours, yea and that sometimes very grosse ones, they themselves acknowledge it very plainly. In the Doctors bookes (saith one) which the Church authentically useth, there are sometimes found errours, sometimes heresies, yet this is no sufficient cause to condemne either booke or author: Let a reader of judgement peruse them, and he shall prove me no lyar. Another: The Fathers whilest they labour with all their industry to subvert one errour, have oft times either fallen, or at least seemed in some sort to fall into another: not unlike to husbandmen who striving to make straight the crooked trunk of a yonger tree, often doe exceed the meane so farre, that they make is bend as much the other way. Heare also a third of approved judgement: The writings of great authors are not altogether perfect: for sometimes they slip and shrinke, as one saith, under their load: and otherwhiles they dally with the affluence of their owne invention, and affect popularity.

---

2. A Catalogue of the counterfeit, doubtfull, or

or corrupted workes of the Fathers, together with some errors which the grosser of them have sprinkled in their workes.

The booke of the Apostles constitutions —

Held for apocryphall in the decretalls, dist. 15. cap. Sancta Romana, and in the distinct. 16. cap. Canones. Isidor. also doth affirme the same. It is further condemned by the sixth Councill of Constantinople, cap. 2. Epiphanius haref. 30. is the first that ever made mention of them.

Saint Iames his Masse —

It containeth prayers for such as live in Monasteries, and such was there none in S. Iames his time. Besides many words never heard of in the Apostles time, as Ἀντίφωνος, ὁμόσιος, &c. and the word λειτουργία for the manner of massing; and herein is laid downe a forme of the Communion, not received in the Apostles times, as out of the Acts and Iustine may easily be convinced. And if this were the true Liturgy of Saint Iames, it should bee a portion of holy Scripture, it would also have beene more famous in the Primitive age of the Church, but no mention was of it, untill almost 600. yeares after Christ.

Saint Peters Masse —

Falsè altogether and forged.

The Æthiopians Masse —

Ascribed to Saint Matthew, but falsely, whereas it speaketh of the Epact and Golden number, both which were long after invented. And the saying of Gregory the great is commonly knowne, that the Apostles did consecrate by the sole pronouncing of the Lords prayer.

Saint Markes Masse —

Containing prayers for the Pope, Readers, Singers, Subdeacons, &c. which orders were after instituted.

The booke of Saint Andrewes passion —

Never spoken of in the most approved Authors, Eusebius, Hierome, Gennadius, &c. to omit the blasphemies therein contained, as All haile holy crosse, &c.

Saint Andrewes Masse —

Of the same kinde and respect with the other.

Clement of Rome his workes —

Vnder this mans name many fictions are patronized: there is one Epistle of his extant unforged, namely, to the Corin. as the same author testifieth in the fore-alledged booke, cap. 24. Russinus in his preface before Clements Recognitions, and the first Councill of Vasa, cap. 6. doe make mention of one Epistle of Clement unto Iames the brother of the Lord: but now there goe three under that title. But that these are all counterfeit, it hereby appeareth, because Iames was dead seven yeares before Peter: and Clement was not Bishop of Rome untill after Peter, as it is evident almost out of all histories. Besides his fifth Epistle teacheth communitie of wives and goods, and the 2. doth most foolishly advise Saints to take heed that there bee found no Mice dung among the pieces of the Lords body, and that they be not putrified by the negligence of the priest.

Besides, his eight bookes of Apostolike constitutions, are of no greater esteeme than these other. Eusebius, Hierome, nor Gennadius mention any such worke. Againe, the author himselfe discovereth himselfe in one place, where he affirmes the vernall Æquinoctiall to fall on the 22. day of the 12. moneth, which is called March: but in the time of Christ and his Apostles it was reckned alwayes to fall on the 25. day of the same moneth, and not on the 22. untill the second Councill of Nice. This Charles Bovius was well able to discerne, but never to excuse. The Fathers indeed doe sometimes quote the Apostles constitutions, but (as Basil de Spiritu sancto, cap. 27. confesseth) they were unwritten, at least by Clement, for his name was not annexed untill after times.

Dionysius Areopagita, Saint Pauls scholler.

His bookes de cælest. hierarchia, de ecclesiastica hierarchia, de divinis nominibus, and some of his Epistles are forged.

Many learned authors, as Erasmus, L. Valla, Cajetane, and others, writing upon the 17. chapter of the Acts, do absolutely deny these workes to be his: the reasons are these. First: Though he were Pauls scholler, by him converted, yet in these workes he is so unmindful of the benefit of his conversion, and friendship held with his master, that hee never vouchsafeth to name him, but graceth Hierotheus, an obscure fellow for his master.

2. Secondly, he writes of many orders, as Popes, Bishops, Priests, Monkes, &c. of all which it is well knowne, that Dionysius his age acknowledged not one, but onely Bishops.

3. Thirdly, Eusebius and Hierome in his Catalogue never make any mention of these workes; nor any before Gregory the great, who though he cite these Epistles, yet doth not hold them to be this Dionysius his workes.

Illyricus hath other good reasons for this purpose, whereof,

1. The first, because that swelling, obscure, improper, and intricate style which this Dionysius useth, was not in use at Athens in the Apostles time; but at least 300. yeares after began to take place in Greece, and also at Rome.

2. Secondly, the latter translation saith, that he writ this Hierarchie unto Timothy, whom hee calleth his soune, which in the use of the Scriptures and the Church, is as much as to say his Scholler: Whereas Timothy had for a long time a most excellent teacher, that elect vessell of God, Paul himselfe, and in Pauls time was himselfe a famous Doctor and Bishop: so that hee was more like to bee Dionysius his master, than his scholler.

3. Thirdly,

Canus loc. comm. l. 11. cap. 6.

3.

Augustl. ad Iann. ep. 119.

Apolog pro l. contra Iovin. c. 4.

Otho Frising. l. 4. c. 18.

In Revelat.

Pag. 148.

Duaren. de sac. eccl. minist. l. 1. c. 4.

Catharinus de certitud. gratiæ, assertion. 13.

4.

5.

Anselm. in Corinth. in 2 ep. ad Cor.

Ann. 8.

Euseb. hist. Eccles. lib. 3. cap. 35.

Sixt. Senens. in præfat. l. 5. Biblioth.

Can. loc. com. l. 11. c. 6.

Ann. 69.

written in many places thereafter. Melchior Canus shall be a witnesse. We cannot deny (saith he) that even the gravest Authors, especially in describing the miracles of the Saints, have both harkned upon flying reports, and also delivered them in writing unto posterity. Wherein truly (if I might judge) they either nousled themselves, or the rude and vulgar sort of the faithfull in too great measure; because they knew that the common sort did not onely easily beleeve all those miracles, but also desired most earnestly to heare of them. And they thought it the more tolerable, because they knew that the most famous Authors do hold that it is the true law of a history to write such things as the common report confirmed to be true. — Which things I may perhaps both rightly and truly affirme of Gregory and Bede. After this manner in the bookes of antiquity, that is often reared by the names of Catholike and Apostolike, which was so esteemed by the vulgar sort of the faithfull. Fifthly, because the Fathers being overcome by the multitude, were now and then caried into superstitions, as the force of the tide violently carieth away the boats: and hereupon it ensued, that they concealed some things for feare. There are many such faults as this (saith one) which I dare not so freely reprove, because of avoiding the offence of some other holy, or perhaps turbulent persons. Sixtly, because sometimes they speake of things historically and in forme of rehearsall, not positively, and by way of assertion. Witnesse Saint Hierome: The ancient Fathers are sometimes enforced to speake against their owne thoughts, onely because that they must bee faine to affirme so against the positions of the heathen.

Canus loc. comm. l.11. cap. 6.

5.

Augustin. ad Ianu. ep. 119.

Apolog. pro l. contra Iovin. c. 4.

Againe, it is one thing to speake scholastically or disputatively, and another thing to speake dogmatically or doctrinally. So also a later writer: We must marke how Authors doe speake, whether out of opinion, or out of assertion, or out of the vehemency of sorrow, comforting themselves. And so he proceedeth expounding the saying of Saint Ambrose, spoken of Valentinian dying without Baptisme: The grace which he intreated for, he did not lose. So Abbot Ioachim: A man may speake what he thinketh out of conjectures, but not as though hee understood certainly any thing thereby. And those testimonies of antiquity which say that Enoch and Elias are the two witnesses, he calleth them opinions fallible, no knowledge or understanding. So Bartoll the Civilian is said to defend Pope Clement the fife his institution, concerning the Popes power over Kings, rather triflingly and for fashion sake, than truly and out of his owne conscience, because he is wholly uncertaine, and never affirms one flat position one way or other; as also because his place of abode was under the jurisdition of the Church of Rome. Heare another. We must not hold all the Popes opinative allegations (being not decretally spoken) to be of the same value with their expresse determinations, as they themselves do testifie. For Innocentius himself upon the Chapter Literas, &c. (when there was a question made, concerning which the finall sentence of Pope Clement was alledged) held not Clements judgement for a determination, neither would he himselfe determine thereof. — For it were too hard a matter, and not to be borne, that the judgement of the learned should be tied to every answer & opinative allegation of the Popes: for they have not alwaies the assistance of the Spirit. Bellarm. speaking of Celestine and Innocentius teaching expresse contraries, saith, That neither of them decreed any certainty in that controversie, but both spake out of their judgement to the greatest probability. And that there are many things in the decretall Epistles, which imply not any matter of faith, but onely discover the Popes opinions concerning these things. Why therefore may not we avouch the same of the Fathers?

Otho Frising. l.4. c.18.

In Revelat.

Pag. 148.

Duaren. de sac. eccl. ministr. l. 1. c. 4.

Catharinus de certitud. gratiæ, assertion. 13.

Therefore the Fathers of later ages oftentimes expounded the sayings of their predecessors out of the holy Scriptures, or else did flatly reject them. Witnesse hereof Saint Augustine in the controversies with the Pelagians: Iulian did cite Basil: Sin is not a substance, but an accident, therefore easily removed out of the will, so that no skarre or token thereof remain. Saint Augustine expoundeth this place according to the analogy of faith: It is easie not to mans will, but unto Gods mercy. And this sufficed against the Manichees, who held that it was impossible. And whereas some Fathers, viz. Irenæus, Iustine, Clement, & Tertullian held, the law of nature had power to save the Gentiles without Christ: Saint Augustine expresly confuteth them all. Nay which is more, the Fathers themselves would either plainly retract and call in againe such things as they had unfitly committed to others eares, or else they would correct them by writing the contrary in another place.

The Fathers have errours, yea and that sometimes very grosse ones, they themselves acknowledge it very plainly. In the Doctors bookes (saith one) which the Church authentically useth, there are sometimes found errours, sometimes heresies, yet this is no sufficient cause to condemne either booke or author: Let a reader of judgement peruse them, and he shall prove me no lyar. Another: The Fathers whilest they labour with all their industry to subvert one errour, have oft times either fallen, or at least seemed in some sort to fall into another: not unlike to husbandmen who striving to make straight the crooked trunk of a yonger tree, often doe exceed the meane so farre, that they make it bend as much the other way. Heare also a third of approved judgement: The writings of great authors are not altogether perfect: for sometimes they slip and stirnke, as one saith, under their load: and otherwhiles they dally with the affluence of their owne invention, and affect popularity.

4.

5.

Anselm. in Corment. in 2. ep. ad Cor.

Euseb. l. 3. Eccles. hist. cap. 25.

Sixt. Senens. in præfat. l. 5. Bibliothe.

Can. loc. Com. l. 11. c. 6.

2. A Catalogue of the counterfeit, doubtfull, or

or corrupted workes of the Fathers, together with some errors which the grosser of them have sprinkled in their workes.

The booke of the Apostles constitutions.

Held for apocryphall in the decretalls, dist. 15. cap. Sancta Romana, and in the distinct. 16. cap. Canones. Isidor. also doth affirme the same. It is further condemned by the sixth Councill of Constantinople, cap. 2. Epiphanius hæres. 30. is the first that ever made mention of them.

Saint Iames his Masse.

It containeth prayers for such as live in Monasteries, and such was there none in S. Iames his time. Besides many words never heard of in the Apostles time, as Στιχηρὸς, ὁμώνυμος, &c. and the word λειτουργία for the manner of massing; and herein is laid downe a forme of the Communion, not received in the Apostles times, as out of the Acts and Iustine may easily be convinced. And if this were the true Liturgy of Saint Iames, it should bee a portion of holy Scripture, it would also have beene more famous in the Primitive age of the Church, but no mention was of it, untill almost 600. yeares after Christ.

Saint Peters Masse.

False altogether and forged.

The Æthiopians Masse.

Ascribed to Saint Matthew; but falsely, whereas it speaketh of the Epact and Golden number, both which were long after invented. And the saying of Gregory the great is commonly knowne, that the Apostles did consecrate by the sole pronouncing of the Lords prayer.

Saint Markes Masse.

Containing prayers for the Pope, Readers, Singers, Subdeacons, &c. which orders were after instituted.

The booke of Saint Andrewes passion.

Never spoken of in the most approved Authors, Eusebius, Hierome, Gennadius, &c. to omit the blasphemies therein contained, as All haile holy crosse, &c.

Saint Andrewes Masse.

Of the same kinde and respect with the other.

Clement of Rome his workes.

Vnder this mans name many fictions are patronized: there is one Epistle of his extant unforged, namely, to the Corin. as the same author testifieth in the fore-alledged booke, cap. 34. Russinus in his preface before Clements Recognitions, and the first Councill of Vasa, cap. 6. doe make mention of one Epistle of Clement unto Iames the brother of the Lord: but now there goe three under that title. But that these are all counterfeit, it hereby appeareth, because Iames was dead seven yeares before Peter: and Clement was not Bishop of Rome untill after Peter, as it is evident almost out of all histories. Besides his fifth Epistle teacheth communitie of wives and goods, and the alloth most foolishly advise Iames to take heed that there bee found no Mice eating among the pieces of the Lords body, and that they be not putrified by the negligence of the priests.

Ann. 8. o

Besides, his eight bookes of Apostolike constitutions, are of no greater esteeme than these other. Eusebius, Hierome, nor Gennadius mention any such worke. Againe, the author himselfe discovereth himselfe in one place, where he affirmes the vernall Æquinoctiall to fall on the 22. day of the 12. moneth, which is called March; but in the time of Christ and his Apostles it was reckned alwayes to fall on the 25. day of the same moneth, and not on the 22. untill the second Councill of Nice. This Charles Bovius was well able to discerne, but never to excuse. The Fathers indeed doe sometimes quote the Apostles constitutions, but (as Basil de Spiritu sancto, cap. 27. confesseth) they were unwritten, at least by Clement, for his name was not annexed untill after times.

Dionysius Areopagita, Saint Pauls scholler.

His bookes de cælest. hierarchia, de ecclesiastica hierarchia, de divinis nominibus, and some of his Epistles are forged. Ann. 69.

Many learned authors, as Erasmus, L. Valla, Cajetane, and others, writing upon the 17. chapter of the Acts, do absolutely deny these workes to be his: the reasons are these. First: Though he were Pauls scholler, by him converted, yet in these workes he is so unmindful of the benefit of his conversion, and friendship held with his master, that hee never vouchsafeth to name him, but graceth Hierotheus, an obscure fellow for his master.

2. Secondly, he writes of many orders, as Popes, Bishops, Priests, Monkes, &c. of all which it is well knowne, that Dionysius his age acknowledged not one, but onely Bishops.

3. Thirdly, Eusebius and Hierome in his Catalogue never make any mention of these workes; nor any before Gregory the great, who though he cite these Epistles, yet doth not hold them to be this Dionysius his workes.

Illyricus hath other good reasons for this purpose, whereof,

1. The first, because that swelling, obscure, improper, and intricate style which this Dionysius useth, was not in use at Athens in the Apostles time; but at least 300. yeares after began to take place in Greece, and also at Rome.

2. Secondly, the latter translation saith, that he writ this Hierarchie unto Timothy, whom hee calleth his sonne, which in the use of the Scriptures and the Church, is as much as to say his Scholler: Whereas Timothy had for a long time a most excellent teacher, that elect vessell of God, Paul himselfe, and in Pauls time was himselfe a famous Doctor and Bishop: so that hee was more like to bee Dionysius his master, than his scholler.

3. Thirdly,

Vbi de baptismo infantum ait ea se dicere, quæ sanctis præceptoribus ex traditione antiqua ad Ecclesiam deriuârunt.

3. Thirdly, presently after Dionysius his conversion, Paul taught long at Corinth, and longer at Ephesus, both which places are neighbours unto Athens, so that if this Dionysius had bin desirous to be instructed, hee might have had Paul himselfe as it were in his owne house for the space of two whole yeares, and never have bestowed his time with Hierotheus, a man unknowne in the Church.

4. Fourthly, in the end of his Hierarchy, speaking of the baptisme of infants, he saith, that he teacheth that doctrine which his masters received from the Apostles themselves. Hereby he sheweth himselfe to have been no scholler of the Apostles: and he calleth them, his masters in the plurall number, to imply that that doctrine came from the Apostles unto him by succession from many intercedent teachers.

5. Fiftly, how is it possible but Dionysius should have often written unto Timothy to know if he had heard Paul teach any otherwise of these things, seeing Timothy lived so long and friendly with him, and was so well learned?

6. Sixtly, this Author talketh oftentimes of the distinction of the quire & the Church, and of other places of the Church, whereas in the Apostles time, and an hundred yeares after, the Christians had no churches of such buildings, but had their Prayers, Sermons, and meetings in their houses.

7. Seventhly, Saint John the Apostle lived after Dionysius, and abode for the most part at Ephesus and in Asia the lesser, where Timothy also lived, who is said to have beene very familiar with him: how then durst Dionysius presume to instruct Timothy, having so worthie a master? and not rather begge of him with a thousand intreaties, to set him downe the opinions of John and Paul concerning this or that matter?

8. Eightly, this Author in his booke De divinis nominibus, alledgeth Clemens a Philosopher disputing concerning Logicke, and affirming that the principall models or examples of things, or the Ideæ or formall causes are relatives. Now there never was any other Clemens a Philosopher, but he of Alexandria, whose bookes are now extant, who lived 200. yeares after Christ: and this allegation seemeth to be extant in the end of the 8. booke of his Stromata, where hee saith that causes, especially the formall causes are relatives.

9. Ninthly, in his 4. booke De divin nom. hee alledgeth Ignatius his Epistles: which notwithstanding were written after Dionysius his death, as the history of both their lives doe leave testimony. This Author in his Hierarchy citeth Saint Johns Gospell, and the Revelation, as if that they had beene long agone written, and held as parts of holy Scripture. But if wee shall give credit to histories treating hereof, both these workes were not set forth by Saint John untill a little before his owne death, namely, about 14. yeares after the death of Dionysius Areopagita.

10. Tenthly and lastly, amongst his Epistles there is one unto Policarpe, whom hee writes unto as a Doctour and a Bishop. Now writers affirme, that Dionysius suffered in France in the yeare of grace 96. And Policarpe otherwhere in the yeare 166. and of his age 86. so that Policarpe must needs be a very beardlesse youth when Dionysius suffered martyrdome. Thus farre Illiricus: As for his Mystica Theologia, Sixtus Senensis is of opinion, that it was not knowne in Athanasius his times. Bibliothe. cap. 4.

LINVS.

The bookes which beare his name concerning Peter and Pauls passion, are written by some jangling trifler.

Martial of Burdeaux. Ann. 160.

Found of late in France, calleth himselfe impudently Christs Apostle, and is never named of Eusebius, Hierome, or Gennadius.

ABDIAS.

All the Workes extant under this mans name are fictions: he is called a counterfeit and a lyar, by I Molanus, lib. 1. de fide Hæreticis servanda, cap. 6. Looke Iewels Reply against Harding artic. 1 sect. 5.

IGNATIVS.

Seven Epistles of his doth Hierome and Eusebius lib. 3. cap. 35. and 36. reckon for true, but now they are increased unto twelve: whereof there are five counterfeit, and these are 1 ad Mariam 2. ad Tarsenses. 3. ad Hieron. 4. ad Antiochenos 5 ad Philippenses: and out of these the Papists have many allegations. But admit they were of his doing, yet there are many things since thrust in, which are none of his: as that where hee saith ad Philippenses, That they must fast the fourth & fixt daies of the weeke, after the Lords passion week: and forbiddeth the fast of the Lords day, and of the Saturday except one. Whereas, as Augustine Epi. 86. ad Casulanum sheweth, that it is lawfull to fast on the Lords day; and epist. 19. ad Hieronymum, that it was the custome at Rome, and in sundry other Churches to fast on the Saturday. Againe, where he saith, that whosoever eateth of the Iewes passe-over, is partaker of their guilt of killing of Christ; whereas Epiphanius alleadgeth an Apostolike canon directly opposite: and the Ecclesiasticall history doth teach the contrary. Besides, in his epistle ad Smirnenses he takes upon him to correct (or rather contradict) Salomon: Mysonne (saith he) he, Prov. 24. 8.) Honour God and thy King: but I say (quoth this counterfeit Ignatius) Honour God as the author of all things, and the Bishop as the highest of Priests, and after him wee must honour the King. Theodoret in his third Dialogue doth mention a place out of this Epistle concerning the errour of Menander, which notwithstanding at this day is not to be found therein: and Tritemius hath left it out; also Bellarmine saith, that the Greeke copies are corrupt.

His Epistle to the Ephesians is either counterfeit, or at least corrupted: Theodoret Bishop of Cyrus in Eranistæ, Dialog. 1. and Gelasius in his booke against Eutyches, of Christs two natures, doe cite a testimony out of this Epistle, which is not to be found in the copies now extant.

PAPIAS of Ierusalem.

Anno 120. Eusebius hist. Eccles. lib. 3. cap. 36. censur this Author to have written strange and fabulous matters concerning Christ, to mistake and misconstrue the Apostles disputations, and to be the first brocher of the errour of the Chiliasts or Millenaries.

PROCORVS.

The history of John the Divine under this mans name, is done by a later writer, which the word ὁμοούσιος, consubstantiall, doth testifie, being used by him, and yet not of use untill after times.

HEGESIPPVS.

The history extant at this present in Bibliotheca Patrum is falsly fathered upon him: for in his 3. booke and 5. chapter, he saith, that Antioch which was before accounted as the third City in fame of all the Romane Empire, beganne then to bee reckoned in the fourth place, when Constantinople the city of the Bizantines began to increase. Now the true Hegesippus lived before Constantine, namely, in the yeare of Grace 160. Againe, Tritemius saith, that Hegesippus wrote an Ecclesiasticall history from the passion of our Lord unto his owne time: but these bookes containe the histories of the Macchabees, the Iewes warres, and the destruction of Ierusalem. Looke more in the preface of Renatus Laurentius.

IVSTINE.

Anno 150. He is an expresse Chiliast in his dialogue with Triphon. His booke of questions and answers is falsly imposed upon him; for in the 82. and 86. questions he mentions Origen, and in the 127. Irenæus, and the Manichees, who were not untill after his death.

Anno 160. The booke of Maries death, or translation into heaven is doubted of. Tritemius fathers it upon Melito of Sardis, but erroneously: it is held by the Pope for apocryphall, dist. 15. cap. Sancta Romana. Hierome never names it. Beda rejects it as full of errours, and falsly ascribed to Melito, in vetract. Apostolorum, cap. 8. So holdeth F. Suarez upon Thomas.

IRENÆVS.

Was th expresse and professed Chiliast. Witnesse Eusebius lib. 5. cap. 39.

THEOPHILVS of Antioch. Anno 170.

Saint Hierome disallowes the commentaries upon the Proverbes, and the Gospell, that goe under his name, Sixt. Senens. Bibliath. lib. 4.

TERTVLLIAN. Anno 200.

Saint Hierome denyes him to have beene a man of the Catholike religion, for hee fell to be a Montanist, yea even an arch-heretike, he wrote these workes against the Catholikes: 1. liber contra Psychicos: 2. De Monogamia: 3. de Ieiunio: 4. Defensio in persecutione: 5. De pudicitia: 6. De exhortatione ad castitatem. And in these bookes hath hee sowne many seeds of Popery. Gelasius censured all his books for apochryphall, dist. 15. His booke de pœnitentia, Erasmus thinketh not to be his. His booke de corona militis, he wrote when he was a Montanist, and therein declareth a new Prophecie.

ORIGEN. Anno 230.

Full of errors. Hierome calleth his writings poysonfull. Eusebius also and Russinus complaine that his writings were most foully depraved by heretikes: his counterfeit workes are these: 1. his Homilies upon Iosuah, full of solœcismes; not reckoned in Saint Hieromes catalogue: 2. his three tractates upon Iob, where hee accuses them of heresie that say there is one God and three persons: 3. two homilies upon the 38. Psalme: foure homilies of his later explanation of the Canticles: 5. one treatise of the Lamentations: 6. his commentaries upon the Epistle to the Romanes, not faithfully translated by Russinus: 7. his booke de pœnitentia, Gelasius calleth apochryphall, dist. 15. 8. his homilies upon divers passages of Scriptures; of these if any were written by Origen, they were depraved by Russinus: 9. the homily upon the first words of Saint Johns Gospell, in that there is mention of the Manichees and Arrians, which heretikes arose in the Church after Origens time.

CYPRIAN. Anno 240.

In admiring of Tertullian too much, sometime hee approves the Montanists: These works following are certainly none of his:

1. His

1. His treatise of Sina and Sion. 2. Of the finding John Baptists head, there he talkes of Pipin the French King. 3. His exposition of the Creed mentioneth the Arrians: Hierome ascribeth it unto Ruffinus. 4 His booke of Priests singtenes, it is full of barbarous words, unknowne to the Latine tongue, as Iwordinabiliter, contubernaliter, conjugaltas, absentare: all which savour of a Glosiist, or a Casuist. 5. His twelve Sermons of the cardinall workes of Christ, are done by an unknowne Author, as Pamelius and Sixtus Senensis Biblioth. lib. 4. do affirme. 6. His Sermon of Christs Baptisme doth directly contradict Cyprians knowne opinion of the rebaptizing of heretikes. 7. His booke of the praise of Martyrdome, affecteth quirkes and conceits. 8. His booke of the double martyrdome, talketh of the Turkes, who saw not the world till very neare a thousand yeares after Cyprian. 9. His bookes of twelve abuses, Tertullians and Pamelius (both learned Papists) do hold that worke as counterfeit. 10. His treatise of the starre, the Sages, and the Innocents death. 11. His Sermon against the Jewes. 12. His booke of Genesis and Sodome, held to be Tertullians & Sixt. Senensis. Bibloth. l. 4 13. His passion was written by Paul the Deacon in the yeare 807. as Sigebert (an ancient Chronicler) recordeth. 14. His booke of Diceres. 15. his prayer for the Martyrs. 16. his prayer for good Friday. 17. The booke of Cyprians repentance. dist. 15. cap. Sancta Romana. In this booke hee is said to have beene a Magician, which is untrue, for our Cyprian was by profession a Rhetorician, as Hierome in his Catalogue, and in his commentary upon the third chapter of Jonas affirmeth; but he maketh no mention of his Magick, nor Cyprian himselfe, in the description of his conversion, lib. 2. epist. 2. nor Pontius his Deacon in the life of Cyprian. 18. His booke of the unity of the Church is corrupted by the Papacy to prop up Peters primacy, for these words, and gave his sheepe to him to be fed: and these, he ordained one chaire: and these, Peters primacy was given, to shew one Church, and one Chaire: as also, Who so forsaketh Peters Chaire upon which the Church is founded: These words I say are not to be found in most of the old manuscripts. Looke the catalogue of T. James His workes of discipline, and of the good of chastity to Novatus the heretike, that hope of pardon is not to be denyed to them that are fallen, these are all thought not to be Cyprians.

Anno 250. METHODIVS.

His booke of the creation is not named in Hieronie. I. Simlerus in his Bibliotheca doubteth of it.

Anno 260. GREGORY of Neocesaria.

His Homilies of the Annunciation, &c. are suspected, because the lives of the Saints, their lessons and hymnes upon their feasts, were not in use untill Charlemaines time, in the year 807. when they were first instituted. Paulus Æmilius in his first booke of the acts of the Frenchmen, Sigebert also upon the yeare 807.

ARNOBIVS. Anno 290.

His bookes against the Gentiles, are in number but seven, as Hierome recordeth in his epistle unto Magnus, the eighth now published is not of the same authors, as Sixtus Senensis holdeth in his Bibliotheca l. 4. And yet that learned Doctour Fulke of blessed memorie, is of opinion that it was made either by Arnobius himselfe, or by Minutius Felix. The commentaries upon the Psalmes that beare his name, are of a farre more moderne forge: witnesse Bellarmine de amiss. grat. & stat. peccatis, lib. 4 cap. 9 For they mention the Pelagian heresie.

The Councill of Neocæsarin. Anno 320.

The Collector of the Councils doth attribure unto this Councill no more but fourteene canons, not foure and twenty, as Gratian saith.

EVSEBIVS Cæsariensis. Anno 330.

The Papists doe cavill at Eusebius Ecclesiasticall history, but unjustly. For admit hee were an Arrian, and too earnest a defender of Origen; yet his history is of sufficient credit. Eusebius did contrive his Ecclesiasticall historie with great praise, saith Hierome: and Basil calleth him ἀξιόπιστον, worthy to be credited.

LACTANTIVS.

His verses of Christs passion are counterfeit; for they contradict all Lactantius his true writings in these words.

Kneele, and adore the crosses sacred wood,

Besides, in Saint Hieromes catalogue they are never named in the number of his works, though others be named which now are not extant.

His worke of the resurrection is ascribed unto Venantius in the Vaticã copie, as Thomasius affirmeth: His Phœnix seemeth to have beene made by a Christian Author, as the said witnesse also averreth.

The Donatian of Constantine.

These matters concerning Constantine are in my judgement apocryphall, as also many other great and tedious charters ascribed unto Clement and Anacletc Popes, saith Cusanus in his booke de Concordia Catholica, lib. 3. cap. 2. Constantine bequeathed Italie unto his sonnes by wil and testament saith Nauclerus, lib. 2. generat. 11. This donation is recorded by by no approved author of any antiquitie. Nay, the ancient bookes of Gratian have no such distinction, as Antonine confesseth, 1. part Histor. Titul. 8. cap. 2. sect. 8. that chapter (saith he) is not in the ancient decrees, and therefore we can neither be certaine what Constantine did give, nor how much. So testifieth also Melchior. Can. loc. comm. l. 10. c. 5. Moreover, the Popes owne decrees concerning this donation, differ greatly one with another, for in the 96. distinction, chapter Constantinus: it is said, that the city of Rome, and all Italy, together with the Empire of the West, was given unto Sylvester. But in Sextus his decretals, l. 1. tit. 6. de Electione, ca. fundamentum, there mention is onely made of the gift of the citie. Nauclerus in his second volume, and 11. generat. writeth thus: Of what quantity or value were Constantines gifts to the Church of Rome, it is not yet agreed upon by them that treate of it. The text in the chapter Constantinus, doth affirme, that he gave to S. Sylvester, and the Church of Rome, the citie of Rome it selfe, Italy, and all the Provinces of the Empire of the West, as it is recorded in the 96. distinction, chapter Constantinus. Others contemne that text as chaffe, and as proving nothing which deserveth credit. For after this, Constantine left the inheritance of the foresaid king domes, unto his sonnes, and they remained long after under the sway of the Emperours, and Catholike Kings by right of succession. Which is not slenderly confirmed by the chapter Fundamenta, de Electione, lib. 6. which describing the donation of Constantine, mentioneth the citie of Rome as the onely gift, never speaking of Italy, or the other Provinces. No more doth the Canon futuram 12. q. 1. which text saith, that Constantine having attained unto the truth of religion, sent letters unto all parts of his Empire, commanding them not onely to become Christians, but also to build Churches for publike devotion; and ordained livings to bee given for their maintenance, built the great Church of S. Peter at his owne cost and charges, and erected his chaire, giving most sumptuous gifts thereunto, in so much that he resigned his Imperiall seate, to the benefit of S. Peter and his successors. This part also is confirmed the more by this, that whatsoever now belongs unto the Patrimony of the Church of Rome, is wholly found to have bin bestowed thereunto by succeeding Princes of after times: others thinke otherwise; let the truth prevaile. Againe: Of this gift and grant there is nothing extant in any author, save in the Decretals: no, nor in the most ancient volumes of them neither, as witnesseth Antonine, Bishop of Florence, in his Chronicles, which I doe greatly wonder at, since that Isidore, who lived 800. yeares agoe, (a grave author, and one truely holy) doth plainly say in his historie, that he, (viz. Constantine) left the city of Rome under the Pope. Thus farre Nauclerus.

The Canons of the first Councill of Nice. Ann. 328.

All above twenty are forged. Theodoret in his first book and 8. chapter, doth acknowledge 20 of them concerning Church government, but no more. It is therefore false to hold 70 of them to bee from the Fathers. Besides, in the vulgar tomes these canons are corrupted, the true ones are extant in Ruffinus, as Cyril witnesseth in his Epistle to the Councill of Carthage, which is extant in the first tome of the Councils, in the acts of the Councils of Africa.

The Epistle of this Councill of Nice to Sylvester, is counterfeited: for therein Macarius is said to bee the Bishop of the church of Constantinople, which was not as then in the whole world. Sylvesters rescript, or answer to them, is a bird of the same feather, as also the 80. Arabian canons.

The Councill Sinuessa.

Mentioned by no ancient writer at al, there in it is said, that Diocletian talked with Marcelline, which is false. Sigonius de Regno occidentali, lib. 1. The Preface unto this Councill, extant in the first tome of the Councils, is done by none knowes whom, and therefore of no moment in antiquitie.

The second Councill of Arles ——

Most manifestly depraved, and besides, of uncertaine time. It is said to have beene under Constantine and Sylvester, and yet therein is mention made of the Bonofiaci, cap. 17. and of the first Councill of Vasa, chap. 28. which was held under Pope Leo the first.

EVSEBIVS. Ann. 330.

His Chronicle is corrupted. Peter (saith he) the first Bishop of the Christians, when hee had founded the church at Antioch, went to Rome, where he preached the Gospell 25. years, continuing Bishop of that city so long. But in his 3. booke, and first chapter, he saith, that Peter preached in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, and Asia, and towards the end of his life, being placed at Rome, was there crucified. Looke also the fourth chapter.

The Councill of Sardica.

The third, fifth, and seventh Canons thereof are suspected, for in them the appeale unto the Pope is allowed, and it is decreed that hee may send his Legates a latere, who in his name may make agreement in other Provinces. But Augustine in his Epistle unto Celestinus, saith thus, We finde it not decreed in any Councill of the Fathers, that any should be sent as from the side of your holines. And the same Father against Cresconius, lib. 3. cap. 34. acknowledgeth no Councill of Sardica, which is not hereticall. And to this agreeth Cardinall Cusanus de concordia Cathol. lib. 2. cap. 25. Besides, these canons are directly opposite unto the 5. canon of the Councill of Nice. Now some doe thinke these canons not counterfeit, but to be understood of a priviledge granted above ordinary, unto Pope Iulius, and that they were abrogate by the second canon of the generall synode of Constantinople.

The Councils of Rome under Constantine and Sylvester.

Counterfeit altogether: and not mentioned at all by Historiographers.

ATHANASIVS.

Evagrius in his 3 booke, chap. 31. saith, that the Nestorians, and Eutychians published many of Apollinaris his bookes, cloaking them under the name and the credit of Athanasius: The workes falsly imposed upon him are these:

1 The booke of divers questions of the holy Scripture, unto King Antiochus, for herein great Athanasius is cited: quest. 23. and S. Gregory Nazianzene is named twice: q. est. 117. & 129. Dionysius his Mystica theologia also is there alleged, which was unknowne in Athanasius his time, Sixtus Senens. Biblioth. lib. 4.

2 The 16. question of the worship of the crosse, in the 4 action of the 7 Councill, this ascribed to one Leontius, that lived about Maurices his time.

3 The treatise of Theologicke definitions. There Gregory Nyssenus is cited.

4 The disputation concerning faith held at Laodicea betweene Arius and Athanasius. The author of that worke sheweth, that this Arius was not that Arch-heretike, but another. Cassander thinketh it done by Vigilius the Martyr.

5 The commentaries upon Pauls Epistles under Athanasius his name, they are Theophilact's.

6 The exhortation to the Monkes.

7 The booke of the passion of the Image of Christ crucified in Teriche in Syria, for this happened in the yeare 764. Sigebert.

8 The epistle to Pope Marcus for the copies of the Nicene Councill, (because the copies of Alexandria were burned by the Arians,) together with Marcus his answer: this burning of bookes was under Constantius. Athanas. epist. ad orthodoxos. But at that time was Marcus dead, Bellarm. de Pont. lib. 2. cap. 25.

9 The second epistle unto Serapion, of the holy Ghost. These are all forged.

These workes of Athanasius are suspected, as not his.

1 The treatise of Christs incarnation.

2 Of the healthfull comming.

3 A sermon against heresies.

4 The 16. oration unto Maximus.

5 An epistle to Marcellinus of the interpretation of the Psalmes.

6 The sermon of virginitie.

7 Testimonies of holy Scripture.

8 The sermon of our Lords passion.

Herein are the questions unto Antiochus cited, which are not this authors: hee forbids othes.

9 An epistle to Serapion.

10 An epistle to all the brethren through Egypt, &c.

11 A sermon of Christs mother. Therein is Nestorius heresie cofured, therfore it was written after the Councill of Ephesus.

12 A sermon upon that of the Gospell: Whosoever shall say, &c.

13 The disputation in the Councill of Nice against Arius.

14 An epistle to the solitary livers: it is partly an epistle, partly a fragment of another worke. And some things are there promised, which now are not extant there. The author of Commelinus edition.

15 The worke of the life of Antony. This was lately added unto the others, it is justly suspected; for it is idle and trifling in many things.

16 An homily of the fower.

17 The declaration of Leviticus.

18 The epistle to Pope Felix, therein he saith, the church of Rome is sacer vertex in quo omnia vertuntur. But this allusion neither is, nor can be made in Greeke, therefore it was rather written in Latine. Besides, there are many things herein disagreeing from Athanasius, as whē he saith that the Gospell was first preached at Rome, and that it was decreed in the Councill of Nice, to appeale to the Bishop of Rome in all causes. Intel.

19 The epistle to Pope Liberius in the 1. tome of the Councils, is foolish in the allegations of Scripture, and therefore not to bee attributed unto Athanasius.

DOROTHEVS of Tyrus. Ann. 350.

The synopsis that beares this mans name, is both falsly ascribed unto him, and also of it selfe full of fained tales. Amongst the 72 disciples, hee numbreth the Eunuch of the Queene of Æthiopia, and maketh Iulia, a woman, a Bishop: and he maketh that Cæsar that is mentioned in the Epistle to the Philippians, the 4. chapter, namely Nero, a Bishop also. Bellarmine.

DAMASVS. Ann. 370.

The little epistle of his in the second tome of Hieromes workes, Erasmus doth suppose to bee falsely ascribed unto him: the epistle also to the Bishops of Numidia is forged: for in Damasus his time, the Bishop of Rome had nothing to doe with the churches of Africa: to whom notwithstanding this author propounds his edicts, and threateth those that transgresse them.

EPHREM. Ann. 380.

His workes in Syrian (the tongue wherein hee wrote them) cannot now be gotten, but either in Greeke or Latine.

GREGORIE of Nyssa. Ann. 380.

His instructive oration of the soule, is not rejected by heretikes: Niceph. l. 11. c. 19. His orations also, and those of Amphilochius, Chrysostome, Cyrill of Alexandria, and Andrew of Creete, upon the feast of the Purification, set downe by Lippomanus and Surius, are also a false brooge: for this feast had his institution but in Iustinians time. Looke Durantus his Enchirid. lib. 7.

GREGORY of Nazianzene. Ann. 380.

The Tragedy under his name doth not favour at all of his style, nor observeth strictly the Iambicke verse according to his custome. The Author seemeth to imitate Euripides. Fulk.

CYRIL of Ierusalem. Ann. 380.

His Catechismes are suspected. Iosias Simler in his Index saith, that of the Greeke books which the state of Ausburg bought of Antony the President of Corfo, are named 18 Catechismes of John Bishop of Ierusalem; For those who were newly baptised, and 5. which interprete the Mysteries and Ceremonies, wherefore it would be looked unto, lest perhaps they be Johns (who was long after Cyril) and yet are of set purpose imposed upon the other to procure the greater authoritie. In his Bibliotheca, his epistle unto Augustine of Hieroms miracles, is a fiction. It is wel knowne that he died before Hierome. And this epistle condemneth Sabinian for ascribing two wills unto Christ.

BASIL. Ann. 380.

These workes of his are either doubted of, or surely corrupted.

1 His booke of the Holy Ghost: in the middest whereof are some things inserted, which Erasmus holdeth dissonant form Basils phrase and forme of writing.

2 His ascetica or contemplatives are not in the catalogue of his monuments in Nazianzene his Monodia or funerall poeme. Eustathius first of the Armenian Monkes is thought of some to be the author of them, Sozomen lib. 3. cap 13.

3. The rule under his name is suspected. Nazianzene never mentions it, and there is also another fathered upon him which hath but 35. chapters. Therein are many things dissenting from Basils other writings.

4 The little booke of Basils life under Amphilochius his name, is a false birth, full of fables, and contrarie to approved histories. Looke Iuels Reply to Harding. art 1. sect. 33.

5. The epistle to Cæsaria the noble Woman, is of no sounder credit.

PRVDENTIVS. Ann. 380.

The prayers at the end of his Hamartigeneia, are not his labours; Giselius did see them printed by themselves without name of author, they do plainly contradict the 7. ode of his Cathemerina, in these words:

In that blest region do I crave no rewme, &c.

A very impious saying, and not to be ascribed to Prudentius. Looke Illiricus his catalogue set forth in the yeare 1598. pag. 186.

AMBROSE Ann. 380.

These workes are falsly thrust upon this holy Father.

1. Ninety and two short sermons to the people: some of them are found amongst S. Augustines, as these:

Ambrose his		Augustines
25.		9.
38.		73. de tempore.
69.		31. de sanctis.
70.	is	19. de verbis Domini.
9.		25. de verbis Apostoli.
37.		77. de tempore.
68.		26. de sanctis.
1.		32. de sanctis.
2.		33. de sanctis.

2 His sermon of Agnes: it endeth thus: Thus much I Ambrose.

3. His sermon of Augustines baptisme: he there adornes him with a blacke cowle, and falsly maketh him the author of monkery.

4 His booke of Salomon.

5 The preparative prayers to the Masse, are not of Ambrose, there is adoration of the sacrament.

6 The booke of the Apology of David.

7 Two bookes of the calling of the Gentiles: falsly ascribed unto Ambrose, or to Prosper of Aquitaine, who in his verses against the ingrateful, oppugnes the universall grace and redemption, which the foresaid bookes doe maintaine.

8 The booke to the devout Virgin.

9 The booke to the fallen Virgin; it is a declamation, and almost all extant in Hieromes epistle to the Mother and Daughter. Hospinian.

10 The booke of Davids expostulation or complaint.

11. The booke of widowes, directly opposite to his commentaries upon the Romanes, cap. 1.

12 The Commentaries upon the Hebrewes, are likelier to be made by Remigius or Anselme.

13 That Hegesippus story was translated by Ambrose out of the Greeke, is in Erasmus judgement, a thing not credible.

14 The commentaries upon the Revelation, Sixt. Senens. lib. 4.

15 The booke against the Arians, touching faith, ascribed to Athanasius in the Latine edition of his workes, translated by Ruffinus.

16. His Missall mentions the feast of the Assumption, which was not instituted until long time after him.

17 The worke of the life of Gervasius is none of his, for it hath many things repugnant to his true workes.

18. His 84. epistle is Prosperi, Suarez.

Ann. 400.

HIEROME.

These following workes in the common judgement of all men, are no children of this Father.

The Hebrew traditions upon the three bookes of the Kings and Chronicles, condemned by Senensis lib. 4. & Lyra.

The prefaces unto { Baruch. / The two Bookes of Machabees. / The Psalter in number two. / The Proverbs of Salomon, two also.

Foure homilies upon the Canticles.

Hebrew places upon the Acts, they doe cite Hierom himselfe, cap. 27.

The commentaries upon the Lamentations of Jeremy. Senens. lib 4. they are of Rabanus Maurus his doing, or else of Beda, as Eras. thinketh.

His commentaries upon Mark, with their preface. Senens. lib. 4.

The prefaces unto Luke and Iohn.

The commentaries upon the Psalmes, Censured by Lindan, Canus, Erasmus, and Bruno.

The preface and commentaries upon Iob, Senen. lib. 4.

The third booke of his commentaries upon the Proverbs, in the 31. chapter Gregorie is cited.

The commentaries upon the Epistles of Paul, Senens. lib. 4.

The Epistle to Demetrias, is Pelagius his worke. Gregor. Arimin 2. d. 26. qu. 1. art. 3. It is manifest to be out of Saint Augustines booke de Gratia Christi & originali peccato, chapter 37. and 38. wherein the words which Pelagius affirmed he wrote unto Demetrias, are rehearsed, and are very like to these here alleadged. It is plaine also out of August. epistle to Iuliana, mother to Demetrias, where the words of Pelagius are rehearsed which are contained in this epistle.

The Epistles unto { Gervasius his daughter. / Marcella. / A banished virgin. / Asmons being sicke. / touching a perfect man.

The instruction of a friend in the knowledge of Gods Law.

Of three vertues.

A sermon of Maries assumption, unto Paula and Eustochium.

Of honouring our parents.

Of the seaven degrees of the Church, unto Rusticus Bishop of Narbon.

Of the praise of Virginity, unto Marcellina his daughter.

Of Gods attributes in the Scriptures.

An explanation of the Creede, unto Damasus.

An exposition of our faith, unto Cyrill.

To Presidius the Deacon, concerning the Paschall taper.

Of the keeping of Easter.

An objurgation against Susanna being fallen.

An objurgation unto Enagrius for Levita.

An exhortation to a Souldiour of the world.

Of the ten temptations of the Israelites.

An explanation of the 40. & 117. psalmes.

To Dardanus concerning the kindes of musicke.

4. sermons of { 1 the resurrection of Christ. / 2 the nativity of Christ. / 3 the Epiphany. / 4 the Lent.

Ten sermons upon Easter even, touching the eating of the Lambe.

To Eustachium of Peters chaines.

Of the keeping of vigils.

Exhortations to Pammachius & Oceanus.

To a secular penitent.

Of the diversities of leprosies.

Of the two sonnes, the prodigall, and the thrifty.

The rule of monkes, gathered by Lupus de Olveto.

A dialogue under the names of Hierome and Augustine.

An homily of the body and blood of our Lord.

Another upon Saint Mathewes Gospel.

An Apologie for Origen. Neither his, nor Pamphilus the Martyrs.

A Catalogue of some ecclesiastike writers.

An epistle to Tyrasus, upon the death of his daughter.

To Oceanus, touching sufferance of reproches.

The answer to Damasus his epistle.

To Paula and Eustochium, of the vestus of the Psalmes.

To Damasus, concerning the offering of the altar.

A rule for the monkes, of 41. chapters.

Chromatius and Heliodorus to Hierome, with the rescript thereunto.

Of Maries nativity.

Eusebius his epistle to Damasus, of Hierom's death.

Augustine, of Hieromes worthinesse.

Hieromes life, by an unknowne Author.

Suspected.

Suspected.

Two epistles to Augustine, one beginning Quum in urbe: the other, Anno praterito.

An epistle to Apronius.

Another to Theophilus, Beatitudo tua.

Another to Celantia.

Comitis liber, called by Micrologus, cap. 25. Lectionarius, beareth Hieromes name, Honorius, lib. 1. c. 88. but it is some far later Author's.

Here note, that in the 16. distinction, cap. Sancta Romana. Hieromes judgement is allowed concerning Origen, Ruffinus, and in all things wherein he reprehendeth them.

Ann. 402.

DAMASVS

His Pontificall is of suspected authority, the Venecian edition of the Councils, confesseth that it disagreeth from all approved and received histories: the first tome, page 617. & 684. and the second tome, pag. 463.

Ann. 405.

CHRYSOSTOME

Sixtus Senensis in his Bibliotheca, libr. 4. reckoneth all these workes as falsly imposed upon this Father.

One Homily upon Genesis, the 2. chap. beginning Dignitas humana, &c.

Another upon the same chapter, beginning Deus institutor, gathered out of Augustines fragments: there are two whole chapters taken out of this booke, de Ecclesiasticis Dogmatibus, namely the 31. and 32.

Another upon the same chapter, Iubetur Adam.

Three upon the third chapter of Genesis: 1. beginning Deus sine initio. 2. Quoties maxime temporis. 3. Christiano cum hoste.

One upon the 15. chap. Fides est religionis.

One upon the 25 Portabat Rebecca.

One upon the 37. Filii autem Iacob.

One upon the 17. of Exod. Stabat Moyses.

One upon the 11 of Iudg. Dens qui voluit.

One upon Kings, 1. 13. Dominus Deus cum Dauid.

One upon 2. Kings. 7. Imitatores Christi.

One upon 2. Kings 17 Perdidit Absalon.

One upon 3. Kin. 17. of Eliat. Gloriosus olim.

Another upon the same. Cum gesta peccata.

One upon 4. Kings 2. of Elias his ascension, beginning, Apud quosdam veteres. This Bede in his questions upon the booke of Kings, thinketh to bee Chrysostomes, but the style sauours of that homily which is put amongst Hieromes false children, for Easter daies, beginning Exultet coelum, and it is also amongst Eusebius Emesenus his sermons.

One Homily upon 4. Kings 5. Cum Naaman.

One upon 4. Kings 6. Of Helizaus. Est frequenter.

Two Homilies upon Iob, cap. 1 Vermiculus fratres and Athletam in certamen.

Two prefaces upon the Psalmes: post Mosen and Omnis Scriptura.

One homily in Psalme 1. Beatitudo est omnium.

One upon the 2 Quemadmodum qui in Solem.

Two upon the 9 Creatoris omnium: and Deus generis nostri.

One upon the 13 Quemadmodum cum Dominus.

One upon the 14 Est pulcher Psalmus.

One upon the 22 Circulo consecrato.

One upon the 24 Victoria artis.

One upon the 25 Filii lucis

One upon the 26. Explenitudine verbi.

One upon the 29. Celebritas confessionis.

One upon the 33. Sermo divinus.

One upon the 37. Sepe a nobis.

Vpon the 38 Psalme, one Homily beginning, Et quomodo potest Psalmus.

On the 39. one, Nec hunc quidem Psalmum

Two upon the 40. Nullis quidem: and Et tamen si Prophetes.

Two on the 42. Hic Psalmus est. and Coharet priori.

Vpon the 68 one qui orationibus.

Vpon the 71. one Dominus virtutum.

The 84. one Omnis qui se agnoscit.

The 90. one Psalmus nonagesimus.

The 93. one Aduersus fluctus.

The 95. one Egregium vere quod mirandum.

The 96. one Ictus a vipera.

The 106. one Spiritus Sanctus.

The 115. one Narratur quod apicula.

The 118 one Benignitas dei.

The 118. one Veritatem Predicandam.

The 121. one Dominus noster.

The 142. one Iudicia Domini sicut abyssus.

Vpon the 1. of Esay, one Si volueritis.

Vpon the 9. one Christus unus cum Patre.

Vpon the 42. one Vita innouata.

Vpon the 62. one Quoniam tempus venit.

Vpon the 1, of Ieremy, one, Maximus Ieremie auctorum.

Vpon the 3, of Daniel, of the three Children, one, Trium puerorum sermo.

Vpon the 13. of Sulanna, one, Divine lectiones.

Vpon Zachary 6, one, Nobiles genere.

The imperfect worke upon Matthew, even the Catholikes themselves thinke to be Chrysostomes; but some deny it, because it favours of Arianisme: but yet it is generally commended for the variety of learning therein contained.

Three Homilies upon the 1. of Matthew, beginning { Hoc fuit verum. / Dedicatur nobis. / In eo quod dixit.

One upon the 4. O incomparabilem.

Three upon the 5. beginning, { Non tantum. / Cum nobis pro officio. / Per omnia.

Three upon the 6. { Dominus. / Sicut in superioribus. / Series lectionis.

One upon the 7. Omnibus notum.

Two upon the 9. { Christum in. / Multæ tempestates.
Vpon the 14. one Hodie nobis.
Vpon the 15. one Miratur.
Vpon the 18. three { Videtur. / Exercitia. / Magnum.
Vpon the 19. two { Iustus. / Quoniam.
Vpon the 20. two { Postquam. / Proxime.
Vpon the 21. two { Puto. / Si ad arborem.
Vpon the 22. two { Omnis malitia. / Frequenter.
Vpon the 26. two { Ad hodiernum. / Secundum Salvatoris.
Vpon the 27. two { Euangelica. / Sufficiens.
Vpon the 1. chap. of Marke, five { Animal. / Nunc veniamus. / Videte. / Quoniam. / Instruxerat.
Vpon the 5. one Interrogat.
Vpon the 8. one Inferiores.
Vpon the 9. one Iurat.
The 10. one Quoniam.
The 11. three { Iste qui. / Ingreditur. / In Euangelio.
The 13. one Euangelica.
Vpon the 1. of Luke, one De sol.
Vpon the 2. one Ioseph autem.
The 10. one Tum dixit.
The 15. one Omnium.
The 16. one Quoniam dixerat.
The 19. one Si per Christum.
Vpon the 1. of Iohn, one De Ioanne.
Vpon the 4. one Immunera.
The 11. one Grandis frater.
The 14. one Dominus Christus.
The 20. Two { Maria. / Idoc ergo.
Vpon the 1 Corinth. 13. one Apostolus Paulus.
Vpon the 1 Corinth. 15. one In hesterno fratres.

Thus farre Sixtus.

Chrysostomes Masse is a forged thing. It containeth prayers for Alexius the Emperour, who lived long after Chrysostome; and for one Nicholas either Pope or Patriarch of Constantinople. The copies differ exceedingly. In the commemoration of the Saints, Chrysostome himselfe is named. Therefore it was not done by him, but patched together by divers after his time under his name, and that at divers editions: chiefly, that which is there spoken of the Adoration of Christs Image, is a meere invention. For Chrysostome in his true writings, cals painting a superstitious arte, hom. 50. upon Matthew. And the 2 Councill of Nice, which did scrape together all ancient authorities for Image worship, yet never cites this Liturgy of his.

A His homily of the birth day of Peter and Paul, is of the same sort, Surius. Some of the homilies to the people at Antioch, are patched together out of divers places and Authors, as namely in the 66. these words, who is adorned with purple ——, and standeth ready to pray unto the Saints: these words are read in S. Augustines Sermons, intituled, Of S. Paul: The first Epistle to Theodorus.

AVGVSTINE.

These workes following are forged in the common judgement of all men.

B In his first Tome.

A fragment of the rule of the Clergy.

The second rule: and concerning a Heremites life.

Erasmus holds, that the third rule is also forged, which is called the rule of men: or unto the servants of God. And Polydore judgeth these three Workes to be none of Saint Augustines.

In the second Tome, these Epistles are counterfeit.

An Epistle which was the 111. in the place whereof Erasmus put the Epistle unto Fortunatianus.

C The 192. Epistle unto Demetrius the virgin.

Sixteene of his Epistles to Boniface, & contra: from the 181. unto the 199.

The Epistle to Cyrill of Hierusalem, touching Hieromes praises.

Innocentius his Epistle, the 93. amongst Augustines, Erasmus holdeth fained.

All the Epistles above 242. the Popish Divines of Lovaine have lately added.

In the third Tome.

The booke of Ecclesiasticall opinions, it is held to be of Gennadius: Walfrid de Reb. eccl. chap. 20. Thomas Aquinas, catena in 1 cap. Mat. But those things which are inferred from the 21. chapter, unto the 52. are of some more late author, who seemed to have some smacke of Pelagianisme.

One booke unto Petrus of faith, Bertram in his booke, Of the body & blood of Christ, ascribeth it unto Fulgentius.

The books, Of the wonders of the Scriptures: their author talkes of the account made by the Circle, lib. 2. Chap. 4. therefore they were not written untill 600. yeares after Christ.

The booke, Of the spirit and soule: it cited Boethius, chapter 37. Tritemius fathers it upon Hugo de Sancto Victore.

The Questions of the Trinity.

The work of the Patriarchs benedictions, in the fouth Tome, counterfeit ——

The booke of the 3. quest. of Dulcitius.

The booke of 21. quest. and question 65.

The questions of the old and New Testament.

The worke of the Incarnation of the word.

Of the Trinitie and Vnitie of God.

Of the Essence of the Divinitie.

Of Faith concerning things invisible.

Of true and false Repentance. Herein is Augustine himselfe cited.

Of healthfull Instructions.

Of Friendship.

Doubted of.

The booke of Continence.

Of Patience.

Of the goodnesse of widowhood.

Of 33. questions.

In the fift Tome, forged.

The booke of the contention of the church and the synagogue.

Suspected.

The Oration of the 5. heresies.

Against Felicianus, of the Vnitie of Trinity.

The Treatise of Stoickes and Epicures.

A Treatise upon these words: I am that I am.

In the 7. Tome, forged or suspected ——

The worke against Fulgentius the Donatist.

The booke of Hypognostica.

Of Predestination and Grace.

Of Gods Predestination.

In the 9. Tome, forged. ——

Exposition upon the Revelation.

Of loving of God.

His Soliloquia.

His Manuall.

Of the triple habitacle.

Of the ladder of Paradise.

Of twelve degrees of abuses.

Of contrition of heart.

Of the Glasse.

Of a Christian life.

Of Maries assumption.

Of the contempt of the world.

Of the vanity of the times.

Of obedience and humility.

Of the good of discipline.

Of the visitation of the sicke. Bellarmine de extrema unctione, lib. 1. cap.

Of visiting the sicke.

Of the comfort of the dead, two bookes.

Of the praise of charitie: a Treatise.

Of sobriety and chastity.

A sinners looking-glasse.

Of the conflict of vertues and vices.

Of the uprightnesse of Catholike conversation.

Of the first mans creation.

Of the tree of knowledge of good and evil.

Of Antichrist.

Vpon the hymne Magnificat.

Doubted of ——

A booke of the Lords husbandrie, or of Wednesday.

A booke of meditations.

A sermon of the Deluge.

Of the time of Barbarisme.

Of the foure vertues of Charity.

Of the profit of fasting.

Of the combate of the soule.

Of the destruction of the city Hierusalem.

Of the good of discipline.

Of the medicine of repentance, one booke, and of the profit of repentance.

In the 10. Tome, counterfeit sermons.

A sermon of the revelation of Steven.

Sermons to the heremiticall brothers.

The 3. 14. 18. 19. 20. 22. 28. 34. 38. 47. 52. 54 56, 57, 58. of his sermons de verbis Domini.

B The 21. 25. 26. 34. 35 de verbis Apostoli.

Of his booke of 50. Homilies. the 2, 3, 4. 7. 9. 10. 15. 28, 22. 30. 31. 41. 45, 46.

Of his sermons de tempore, the 9, 10, 11. 18. 24. 28. 33. 37, 38, 39. 43. 47. 48. 51. 59. 62. wherein he saith, that not to fast in Lent is a sinne, but that in his purer works he denieth.

Of the 118. Epistle to Ianuarius, chapter the 4. 63 68. 77 95. 96, 97 99. 113, 114, 115. For the Articles of the Creed in Saint Augustines time were not so disposed, I meane in that order they are here set downe. For he in his booke of the Creed to the Catechumenists, omitteth the descension into hell, and the life everlasting. Chrysostome, Tome 5. (de Symbolo, omitteth the communion of Saints) 117, 118. 120, 121. 125. 128. 130. 132. 136, C 137, 138 152. 156, 157, 158, 159. 161. 167. 169. 174. 176. 181. 183. 188. 196. 199. 207. 211. 223, 224, 226 228. 229. 238. 239. 241, 242. And others also are by the Protestants thought to bee thrust in, as the 91. 215. 251. 255.

Of his sermons de Sanctis, the 2. 57. 10. 11. 15. 19, 20. 22. 26, 27. 30. 31. 32. 34. 35. 37 all above 50. the Paris Divines have added. The Protestants thinke all the rest to bee bastards, neither Augustines, nor Fulgentius his, because amongst other things the author of them, serm. 35. maketh mention of Isadore, that lived 200. yeares after Augustine.

Of his sermons, de diversis 35 —— all above D 43. were added by them of Lovaine, we thinke them all false-coyned. Ann. 120.

Palladius his historia Lausiaca, is nothing but a fardle of old wives tales as may easily appeare to the reader: and therefore of no esteeme at all.

THE DECRETALL EPISTLES. Ab ann. 80. ad 300.

These Epistles decretall which passe under the names, Clement, Enarist, Telesphorus, Higinus, Anicetus, Soter, Calixtus, Urban, Pontian. Anterus, Fabian, &c. and Sylvester, are all forged: and that for sixe reasons. First, all these epistles had one and the same author, for they are all written in the same style and forme of writing, and the same phrases are often repeated in divers epistles. Now it is a thing impossible, for so many Bishops to speake all just after one forme, though they should labour to imitate one another. 2. Many things of these Epistles are written so farre from the true phrase of the Latine, that they are meerely barbarous: as this: Episcopi sunt obediendi, diligendi, & summopere venerandi, & non detrahendi vel lacerandi: and this, Patres omnes sunt venerandi, non respuendi, aut insidiandi, &c. 3. These epistles in their quotations of holy Scripture doe follow Hieromes translation, which none of the Popes that these decrees are fathered upon, ever sawe: for it was not then extant. 4. There is not one epistle almost of them all, but containeth some things expressely against the credit of all Historicall truth, for they speake of the Primacy and rule of the Church of Rome, ordination of Bishops, and of their immunities, of the accusation & degradation of priests, and of appealing to the sea of Rome, whereas in the three first ages, because of the multitude of persecutions, little respect (as Sylvius saith) was had unto the Church of Rome. 5. So saith Cusanus in his booke de concordia Catholic. lib. 3. cap 2. and Bellarmine de Pontifice, lib. 2. c. 14. confesseth, that some errors have crept into these Epistles, and that hee dares not affirme them to be infallibly theirs, whose name they beare: & Isidore in his preface before the Councills, doth not mention them all; Eusebius speaks only of the epistles of Clement & Victor, which yet are not now extant. Damasus writing of his predecessors, never saith word of these epistles. No more doth Hieron.

Besides, the decretall epistles of the Popes (extant in the tomes of the Councills) from Sylvester unto Gregory the first, & so forward, are all either counterfeit, or justly suspected.

This is plainly shewed by the grosse absurdities of their stile, in the most of them, by their unapt alledging the Scriptures, & their desire of rule over the Catholike Church. For at this they doe ayme, namely, to erect and protect the supremacy of the Church of Rome. Chiefly these following.

1 Marke his Epistle unto the Bishops of Egypt. His saith that the Romane Church did never erre, nor ever hereafter shall erre. But that opinion of the immobilitie of the Romane faith, was not admitted into the world untill in these latter times. Catherinus in Gal. 2.

2 Iulius his first Epistle unto the Bishops of the East for Athanasius. This disagreeth quite from the true copie which is in Socrates l. 2. c. 15. and in Sozomen. l. 3. c. 8. His second also is fooliish and frivolous.

3 Liberius his answer to Athanasius: and his Epistle unto all Bishops.

4 Felix his Epistles to the Synod of Alexandria.

5 Stevens unto Damasus, and another of Damasus unto Steven Bishop of Africa, wherein there are these words of new Latine Charitatiue, compossibilitas, ordinabitur, praA fuis fratres inuotuisse, for indiscastit. Such like is that of his. [ad Episcopos Numidiæ] and another [ad Episcopos Illyricos.]

6 Syricius his first Epistle unto Himerius Bishop of Tarracon. The barbarousnesse of the Style maketh it suspected, as in these words. In ergastulis autem suis tales personas retrudendas, ut tantum facinus continuâ lamentatione defentes purificatio poenitudinis igne possint decoquere. Besides, he imperiously commandeth the Bishop of Tarracon to publish his decrees to be observed of all the Bishops: But the Church of Rome as then had no such jurisdiction. Of no greater value is his Epistle to the Millanens; nor the 3. and 4. to the B. of Africa,

B 7 Two Epistles of Anastasius. The date, and the Consuls hereto subscribed, disagree from all true histories. In the first you shall finde these words. Quasi caput charitativè mittere non dubitetis. And hee commandeth with Apostolike authority, standum esse ad electionem Evangelij.

8 The Epistles under Innocentius the first his name, are justly called in question, because there are in them many traditions, which unto the Divines of those times were altogether unknowne. And besides there are whole Paragraphes put into them which are extant as well in the latter Popes writings, as in the former. The third Epistle to Exuperius, maketh mention of five bookes of Salomon: C the 22. speaketh of the Bishops Miter, which the Church then knew not. And the Epistle unto the Councill of Carthage is very fooliish and idle.

The Epistles also of Innocentius which are the 91. and the 93. among the Epistles of S. Augustine, are counterfeit. Erasmus. Ann. 433.

9 Sixtus the third his Epistle unto the Eastern Bishops, hath these words: Valentinianus Augustus nostra authoritate Synodum congregari jussit. Most fooliishly! Valentinian could call a Councill by his owne authoritie, and needed no Popes assistance, the Epistle therefore is forged. In his third Epistle, de vasis dominicis &c. these words, [Semper tamen Purgatorij locum excipio, in quo animæ hominum corporibus solutæ ad tempus expiantur] are thrust in D by some other, for they have no coherence at all, either with the precedent, or consequent clauses: for Sixtus saith, there is but two places, Heaven and Hell, and that out of the kingdome of God there is no salvation.

10 Hilarius his Epistles.

11 Anastasius his Epistle unto Anastasius the Emperour, how warneth him to obey the Apostolike admonition. viz. the Popes decrees; whereas the Popes of those dayes obeyed the Emperours decrees, now contra.

12 Pope John the first his 2. Epistle is opposite unto the historie of that time.

13 Felix the IV. his Epistles, the second where of beginneth thus. Quoniam importabilibus verbis garrulasti.

14 Boniface

14 Boniface the 2. his Epistle, and the deprecations of Aurelius of Carthage thereunto annexed. Hee in mention is made of the Prince Iustine, whereas Boniface Bishop of Rome lived in the time of the Iustinians. Q. is like to be his handy worke of some of the Popes flatterers.

15 Vigilius his first Epistle. A very trifling peece of worke, how reached that ruinated Church as may be readified, and consecrated with the Masse onely, without any sprinkling of holy water. His third is so confusedly patched together, that it is impossible to make true sense of it.

16 Iohn the third his Epistle.

17 Benedict the first his Epistles. Part of it is a fragment of Alexander the first, his first epistle decretall: the other part is almost the whole fourth chapter of the 1. unto Timothy.

Gregory the third, his third Epistle (tom. 3. Concilior. mul.) ad Episcopos Bavaria, disagreeth from the copie which is in Aventinus Annales, lib. 3.

Zacharies fifth Epistle (tom. 3. Concil.) containeth frivolous answers to most fooliish questions. One thing chiefly to be noted is, his command of the time when to eate bacon. His sixth Epistle is corrupt by some filthy interpreter. Catalogus testium.

18 Nicholas his Epistles unto the Emperour Michaël. Therein hee said that godly Emperours never would command the Priests, but intreat them as Fathers. But Eusebius saith otherwise, lib 10. chapter 5. and Nicephorus, lib. 7. cap. 43. These say that Constantine the Emperour commanded Miltiades Bishop of Rome to judge the cause of Cæcilianus Bishop of Carthage. The epistle of the Synod of Alexandria to Pope Felix is counterfeit, and full of lyes.

Hilarius his epistle (the 88. amongst Augustines) is not rightly ascribed unto Hilary of Poictou. Erasmus. The epistle also unto Apra his daughter, containeth nothing worthy of Hilarius, nor the hymne unto her.

The history of Ambrose his life, attributed unto Paulinus, is a fiction. Erasmus in his preface unto Ambrose his workes.

EVODIVS.

Two bookes of the miracles of S. Steven, extant in Augustines tenth tom. are both forged. Tritemius indeed saith, that he wrote a volume of the miracles done in Africke by the reliques of Steven the Martyr, which reliques Orosius the Priest caried thither: But these bookes now extant containe no such matter, neither are they mentioned in any Author at all.

SOPHRONIVS.

That Sermon of the Assumption of Mary in Hierome, is none of his, but some triflers of A very late time, as is bewrayed by the verie style it selfe. Besides, Sophronius and Hierome lived both at one time; as appeareth by the booke of Ecclesiastike writers: but this Sermon saith, the one of Eutychis and Nestorius, both whose heresies were broched after the death of Hierome.

MARTINVS SILVENSIS.

The credit of this many sermons, is uncertaine, for many of them are ascribed unto divers Authors, as Rabel. Ann. 420.

His sermon on the Nativity of Christ, whose beginning is, In diebus Dominicis, is among Saint Augustines sermon, 11. de Tempore.

His sermon upon the Epiphanie, beginning Licet fratres dilectissi. &c. is the 37. de Tempore.

His sermon of Christ accusing before Pilate, beginning Mirum forsan videatur, is the 118. de Tempore.

His sermon upon the solemnity of Easter, is the 128. de Tempore.

His sermon upon Saint Stevens day, beginning, Lectio Actuum Apostolorum, is the 5. of Saint Augustines, de Sanctis, and hath another beginning out of Augustine, as they of Lovain doe confesse.

His sermon upon the nativity of Peter and Paul, the Apostles, beginning, Gloriosissimos Christiana fidei, &c. is Augustines 27. de Sanctis.

His sermon beginning Legimus in libro qui Actibus Apost, &c. is Ambrose his 9. sermon and Augustines 25. de verbis Apostoli.

CYRILLVS ALEXANDRINVS.

Hath a commentarie unpon Iohn in 12. bookes, Ann. 430.

But the foure middle bookes of the twelve were lost; & Iodocus Clitoveus hath added other foure in their places: viz. the 5. 6. 7. and 8.

Sixteene bookes of Commentaries in Leviticum.

D His Epistle unto Colosyrius, suspected. It is not extant amongst his workes, the fragment is cited by others: and whither Cyril of Alexandria wrote it or no, it is uncertaine.

EVCHERIVS.

His three bookes upon Genesis, and Commentarie upon the Kings, is some unknowne moderne Authors. Senens. præfat. in Biblioth. and lib. 4.

His homily of Maries Assumption, forged. For therein are these words, Worthily did our Fathers decree that this Gospell should be read upon this solemne feast of the Virgin Mary: whereas this feast had not his institution untill 160. yeares after Eucherius, Ann. 430.

viz.

vic. under Mauritius anno. 595. Looke Dinaudus his Enchiridion. Our estimation of the credit of this Homily consider the value of the reste

Ann. 435. & 490.

IOHN CASSIANVS, and EVSEBIVS EMISSENVS.

Both these authors bookes Gelasius in a Councell of 70. Bishops did condemne; And with reason. For the first wrote against Prosper, & the second against Fulgentius, concerning the Predestination of the Saints, and the good of perseverance. Besides, Faustus was condemned by Petrus Diaconus, lib. de Imag. Hormisda Pope in his Epistle in 5. Tom. Biblioth. Aldo in Chronicis and Trithemius in Faustus. And therefore Driedo and Ruardus Tapperus in approving Faustus his writings doe shew themselves halfe Pelagians.

B

THEODORETVS.

Ann. 440.

His 12. bookes, De curatione Graecarum affectionum, are suspected, because Nicephorus in his catalogue of Theodorets labours never nameth them. And these bookes make for the Invocation of Saints, which Theodoret upon the second of the Colossians, doth condemne.

His Epistles also unto Leo and Romanus are doubtfull.

His booke De Sanctis hath some things inserted by others.

C

LEO.

Ann. 450.

These workes of his beare a counterfeit name.

A Sermon upon All-Saints day, either wholly forged, or at least in the title. For this Feast had his originall from Bonifacius the 4. about the yeare of our Lord 610. long after Leo. Petrus de Natalibus lib. 10. cap. 1.

His 5. Sermon of Lent, is Augustines 63. De Tempore, and his eight Sermon is Augustines 33. de Tempore.

Some of his Epistles, as the 84 and the 92. are no where extant, but in Gratian, who (like a notorious falsifier) thrust many workes upon the Fathers which they never were authors of. And it is a strange thing that Leo should offer to send his imperious Edicts through Europe, Asia, and Africke, when as hee was constrained of necessity to make a supplication unto the Emperour for the calling a Councill within Italy. And hereby it is plaine, that his 84. and 96. Epistles are either counterfeit or at least corrupted: because hee arrogateth the fulnesse of power in forraine and far distant regions, and enjoyneth Anatolius Bishop of Constantinople to execute his commission in the beginning of the 46. Epistle. But the Fathers of the first generall Councell, expounding and confirming that which formerly had beene defined in the first Councell of Constantinople, and in the Councell of Chalcedon, say thus in the 36. chapter: Renewing the Decrees of the 150. Fathers that met in this royall citie of Constantinople, & of the 600. Bishops which assembled at Chalcedon, we likewise determine, that the Sea of Constantinople hath equall priviledges and honours with the Sea of Elder Rome, and in all Ecclesiasticall matters ought to be magnified as that is, being next after it.

C

D

The counterfeit Epistles of Alexander Pope, and Faustinian, extant in the Codex, lib. 1. tit. 4. de Summa Trinitate, are of doubtfull credite. For first, Iustinian saith there, That hee hath laboured, that all the Priests of the Eastern Church should bee obedient unto the Church of Rome. But all histories say, that this was Phocas his deed. Ado Viennensis, chronic. ad annum 604. Vno Carpisensis in Chron. Platina in Bonifacio tertio. It is also scribed unto Michael Psellogus. Besides, in this Epistle the Pope is called the head of all Churches. But the contrarie is to bee seene in Gregory the fourth his Registrum, epist. 32. 34. 36. 38. Thirdly, this Epistle and the other of Iohn, are not extant in the old Manuscripts: witnesse Alcuine, Paregi lib. 5 cap. 23.

Ann. 450.

Articus his Epistle in the end of the Councill of Chalcedon is a counterfeit. Looke Vasinus his Animadversions in Bellarmine de Pontif. Rom. lib. 1. cap. 24. & lib. 2. cap. 29.

The Epistle of the said Councill unto Leo is such another. Newly found (as is pretended) in the Library of the Friars preachers at Coleine.

GELASIVS.

Ann. 496.

The booke of the two Natures, Bellarmine denieth to be written by Gelasius the Pope, De Pontif. lib. 4 cap. 10. And Melchior Canus loc. comm. lib. 6. cap. 8. yet they hold it the worke either of Gennadius, or Gelasius Bishop of Cæsarea.

VIGILIVS.

His epistle unto Theodosius, Anthemius, Severus, Eutychian heretikes, wherein hee professeth himselfe to be of their opinion, is censured to be a counterfeit, by Baronius, tom. 7. upon the yeare 538. and after a sort by Bellarmine de Pontifice lib. 4. cap. 10. But the epistle is described by Liberatus, and is extant in the 22. chapter of his Breviarie, and is also in the Chronicle of Victor. The same doth testifie that it was written after Vigilius his ordination, and therefore Bellarmine erreth in holding the contrarie.

ANDREAS CRETENSIS.

Ann. 520.

His Encomium de dormitione Sanctæ deiparæ. cap. 6. maketh mention of the feast of the Assumption Assumption of Marie, which was not instituted untill the yeare of our Lord, 595. many yeares after this authors death: therefore these orations seeme forged.

THE COVNCILL OF AGATHA

Ann. 520.

The canons of this Councill which are cited in the Decretals De consecrat. dist. 1. chap. Missæ, are no where extant.

EVSEBIVS EMISSENVS.

The Homilies under this name were not written by Eusebius of Emesa in Greece, but by a certaine frenchman, as appeareth in the homily unto Blandina. Fulke. Bellarmine confesseth this also, De extrema unctione lib. 1. chap. 5. Looke also in the same Bellarmine de sacram. Eucharist. lib. 2. cap. 29.

Ann. 570.

The sermon of the feast of the Nativity, beginning Nativitas Domini, extant amongst Fulgentius his workes, is ascribed unto Augustine, and is his 15. sermon de Tempore. And in some Manuscripts it is fathered unpon Severianus.

GREGORY THE GREAT.

Anno 600.

The booke of his Dialogues is doubted of: it is stuffed full of Italian wonders; and is not consonant unto the rest of Gregories writings, neither in matter nor forme, Chemnitius.

His booke of the Sacraments, and of Anthemes, Pamelius set forth, but it is not mentioned in any authour, but onely in Micrologus in the 24. chapter.

In the 2. Councill of Nice, an Epistle is ascribed unto Gregorie the Great, concerning Image worship, which was indeed the 3. Gregories: for Gregory the great prohibited adoration of Images.

CAESAR OF ARLES.

Ann. 670.

The homily of the words of the Apostle, Si cujus opus manserit, &c. which is ascribed unto this author, is Augustines 42. de sanctis.

THE 6. SYNOD.

The canons of this Councill in Trullo are condemned by the Papists as forged, but in the second Nicene Councill they are commanded to bee observed, and are by Gratian himselfe approved. dist. 16. capite. Sextum. Master Beza citeth an old glosse of Balsamons, taken out of a very old Manuscript. The words in English are these. And this is also a generall Councill: For although the Bishops of the West, namely, the Latines and Italians (to whom this Councill in some canons giues a sore blow) doe urge it very earnestly, that it is no universall Councill, nor that the Popes Delegate was there present: because that there is another 6. Councill held under Constantine surnamed long bearded. (as it is

A

B

C

D

reported) and that this was held long after by the command of Iustinian Rinothmetus. But I, not induring this; and looking nearer into the coherence of this matter, and into the canons orderly following, written in these words: The holy and generall Councill defineth thus and thus: letting passe the moderne canons, which are neither subscribed by the Kings, nor the Fathers, that held the Councill: taking under examination the most ancient copies of these Canons, I found amongst the names subscribed unto this Councill in Trullo, that there were present in that Councill, both the Popes Deputies, one, Basilius, Primate of Cortina in Crete, and another who was Bishop of Ravenna, and not onely them, but also other of the Popes Legates being Bishops of Thessalonica, Sardinia, Heraclea in Thrace, and Corinth. Thus much Balsamon. And Bartholomew Caranza writeth thus. In the volume of the Councils printed at Colaine, there are nine Canons ascribed unto the sixt Synod, where as we know that the 6. Synod which was called under Constantine, set forth no Canons, but afterward under Iustinian, there were 227. Fathers gathered together in the Emperours Pallace at Constantinople, and they set forth the 102. following Canons. This is affirmed by the Fathers of the 7. Councill held at Nicea under Constantine the sonne of Leo, and Irene his mother in 5. Act of the said Councill, and more at large in the 6. Act. tom. 1. In both places citing the 82. of these Canons. Besides Nicholas the 1. maketh mention of these canons, in his Epistle unto Michael the Emperour, as also Anastasius Abbat, and librarie keeper unto the sea Apostolike, in the preface of the 8. Synod, saying: Seeing that the 6. Councill set forth no rule at all, but onely the Creede, it is certaine that the Canons by them alledged, were set forth privately and by themselves long after the 6 Councill. Moreover, the Fathers of both Empires called together at the Councill of Florence, do cite these 102. Canons in the 5. session. Gratian also in the decree cites some of these Canons, and ascribes them unto that 6. Councill. Thus much with him. Dist. 6. cap: Sextum. Adrian the Pope saith: I receive the 6. holy councill with all the Canons. And the same Adrian in his Epistle unto Tarasius hath these words: In the Divine and lawfully published Canons of the 6. Councill, &c.

Surius granteth that the 9. Canons fathered upon the 6. Councill tom. 2. Concilior. are counterfeit.

BEDE.

Ann. 720.

His Martyrologium some thinke to be corrupted by sundry additions.

THE 2. COVNCILL OF NICE.

Ann. 784.

This Councill, being wholly for Image worship, 28 blasphemous and idolatrous, and obstinately rejected by the Bishops of the West, as witnesseth Aventine in his Annals l. 4. The decrees of the Grecians (quoth he) for Image worship, were abolished by the councill

Councill of Frankford. Ado also, in the sixt age, Hoveden, &c. Albert Pighius refuseth to hold the Coleine edition of this Councill for true: there are therein many palpable falshoods.

A

CAROLVS MAGNVS.

There is a booke of his against the Councill of Nice, which the Papists doe say is forged, but without any ground at all. For Hincmar Archbishop of Ianduna maketh mention of this booke, and saith hee read it when hee was a boy in the Emperours Palace, and cited almost word by word the 28. chapter lib. 4. Besides Augustine Steuchus, keeper of the Laterane library at Rome, doth testifie in publike writing, that the copie of this book is there extant written in old Lumbard letters. Thus much out of the most learned Hospinian.

B

DAMASCENE.

His Sermon of our Ladies sleepe, is called in question; for it citeth Euthymius, who lived long after Damascene, under the Emperour Alexius.

The little booke of the body of Christ set forth under his name by Turrianus the Iesuit, out of Cardinall Sfortia's library, is (to speake in a word) worthy of no credit at all; for his writings by reason of their shamefull errours have no great respect amongst us.

C

LVDOVICVS PIVS.

Anno 820. Charlemaines sonne. His donation, wherein he gives Rome, and the Popes election unto the Pope and Citizens of Rome, dist. 63. cap. Ego Ludovicus, &c. is a meere forgery. For Paschalis being forced by the people to take the Popedome upon him without the Emperours authority, cleareth himselfe by his legate unto the Emperour Ludovicus Pius, and layeth all the fault upon the Clergie and people. Th' Emperour was herewith satisfied, but he sent a sharpe and severe command unto the people to beware ever after to offer like injury unto the Imperiall majesty. Sabellicus Ennead 8. lib. 9. Platina in Paschalis his life. Molinæus the Civilian thinkes that some librarist of the Popes tooke paines to force this Donation, and therefore that that just suspition may disanull the credit thereof.

D

Besides, the Canon Dist. 63. cap. Ego Ludovicus, is contrary to the Canon Dist. 63. cap. Cum Hadrianum. For if Lodwick the first, have given away his freedome of the Popes election, why should Lodwick the 2. his nephew think himselfe any way wronged therein?

Otho the Emperours oath.

In the degree, distinction 63. chap. nihi domino, there is an oath set downe taken by this Emperours legates in his name, unto Iohn then Pope. Now all this is as true as that the sea burneth. For Otho, comming unto Rome, as the Soveraigne Lord and commander of the Pope, deposed Iohn from that dignitie for his villanies, all the whole city, clergy and laitie approving and applauding his justice in this doing. Witnesse, Luitprandus, & Paulus Diaconus, hist. lib. 6. as also Theod à Niem.

Ann. 880.

ANASTASIVS.

There is a booke of the lives of the Popes under this mans name, wherein are divers errors set down, not justifiable by any ancient or grave authours testimony in the world: many Chronicle slippes, some contrarieties, and some impossibilities. Baronius thinkes it done by divers, at least by two severall authors: It is in some places altogether depraved by the forged additions and detractions of others, by reason of the extreme ignorance of former ages. The first part is fathered upon Damasus by Platina, Trithemius, & Onuphrius: It swarmeth with absurd barbarismes and solœcismes. Thus much Albinus.

Ann. 880.

PASCHASIVS.

His booke of the body and blood of our Lord, is depraved by malignants. For the tale of Christs body visibly appearing in forme of an Infant (in the 24. chapter, in Bibliotheca Patrum,) is foisted in by some garrulous Monke. For it is opposite unto all the rest of Paschasius his doctrine of the manner of Christs presence in the supper: and besides, differeth as much from his phrase and style, This Hospinian hath noted in his 5. booke de sacramentis.

Ann. 950.

SIMEON METAPHRASTES.

A trivial Pedant in Constantinople, hee writ the lives of the Saints, more truly to bee intituled, The Legends of lies.

Ann. 1080.

ANSELME.

His two bookes de Imagine mundi, &c. by some imputed unto Honorius: Simler, in Bibliotheca. In his commentaries upon Mathew, Bellarmine de Eucharist. lib. quarto cap. 9. saith that the Greekes (or their favorites) have thrust in a place, namely upon the 27. chapter thereof, concerning the time of Christs first institution of the Sacrament.

Bernards counterfeit, or at least suspected works are these following.

Of the solitarie life to the brethren de monte dei.

Meditations

Meditations
Of the inward house.
Of the order of our life.
The ladder of Paradise, rejected by the Iesuits.
The fourefold manner of loving God.
The Mirror of looking glasse.
Diverse sermons, of which marked in the Antwerpe edition. Among these:
A sermon of the Lords Supper.
A booke of Conscience.
A Sermon of Andrew.
The description of Clarevalle.
An epistle of Bernard Sylvester.
8 Sermons of Gilbertus upon the Canticles. Bernard wrote but 86. and died: the rest Gilbertus added after his death.
Of Maries lamentation.
Bernards doctrine.
An homilie of the disciples that went to Emaus.
A booke of the love of God.
Another of the nature and dignity of divine love.
A booke of Christs passion, upon the text, I am the true Vine.
An oration in meeter unto the members of Christs body.
Another of the Passion.
A third unto Christ and Mary.
A fourth of the Nativity of Christ.
A forme of the private confession.
The manner to live well, unto his sister.
A second booke of Conscience.
A deprecation unto Mary.
Of mans miseries.
Sermons of the spirituall conflict.
Of 12. degrees of humility.
A sermon upon the Sunday next after twelfth day.
Fifteene Sermons of the Supper, Peter Martyr saw them under another mans name.
An homily upon the text: The kingdome of heaven is like unto a Merchant.
An epistle unto Matthew Bishop of Alba.
A meditation upon Salve Regina.
A Sermon in Advent of the 12. Barthens.
The life of S. Malachi.

IEFFREY ARTHVR of Monmouth.

His foure bookes of the Brittish affaires, are thus censured by William of Newbery: There is (said hee) a certaine writer of late come forth, telling many ridiculous tales of the Brittaines, extolling them (with impudent fooleric) farre above the Macedons and Romanes: hee is called Ieffery, surnamed Arthur, because the olde Brittish tales of Arthur are by him augmented, and with a little rhethoricall paint, published as histories of authenticall credit. Nay besides and aboue this, he hath published for most impeachable and impregnable verities and prophecies, examine most deceitfull divinations of one Merlin, of which he hath also added much of his own fancifulnesse, in his translation of them into Latine. Againe, how egregiously impudent is he in farcing in fictions into his book which he calleth the Brittish history, no man that readeth it, (unlesse wholly ignorant of antiquity) can choose but perceive. For hee that knoweth not the mark of things, quickly giveth way to the current of illuding fables, and fabulous illusions. I omit to recapitulate his fictions of the Brittaines gests before Cæsars conquest: streames flowing either from his owne invention, or els derived by him (as through a leaden conduit) from other mens braines into his booke, as immoveable verities. Thus much Newbery, somewhat sharply, considering his own workes are subject to the same censure that he so roughly thundereth upon Arthur: for he himself sometimes leaves the true tract of histories, to serch in trifling fables into the body of his history of the affaires of England.

Ann. 1200.

FRANCIS.

That Epistle of his unto all his brethren is a forgery. Bellarmine, Missa. lib. 2. cap. 3.

Ann. 1260.

BONAVENTVRE.

The Psalter of the B. Virgin is falsely fathered upon him, for he in his commentary upon Lumbard, saith, that wee must beware lest in honouring the Mother, wee diminish the honour of the Sonne.

Ann. 1300.

IACOBVS de VORAGINE.

He was Bishop of Genoa: his booke called the golden Legend, hath nothing in it but whole myriades of most shameful and ridiculous lies.

NICEPHORVS CALLISTVS.

An author fraught with fables, he telleth a tale of Christs image sent of him unto Abagarus: But Eusebius found no such thing in the treasuries of Edessa: libro primo hist. in fine.

All ancient authors, uncited of some succeeding writer, and unauthorized by some good author, are either really forged, or by the Church unallowed: and therefore of more doubtfull credit: and such is Ludgarus of S. Swiberts miracles, &c.

Also all bookes 1. that have their originall frō some Romish librarist. 2. that are extant onely in the Vatica or Laterane library. 3. or onely in the Monkes cloysters, all such wee justly suspect.

What soever any olde writer hath unfitly set downe, concerning any things of faith, were it written before clearly: before it was risen up about this matter) is in deede slyly and favourably expounded: but if it stand written after any such heresie, it is hardly and farely to be rejected.

III. The causes of the Corruption of the Apostolike Religion.

1. THE doctrine of religion is by many A wrung, and wrested unto the opinions of the Heathen. So doth Cassander testifie in the appendix of the defence of his booke de officio pii viri. We cannot (quoth he) deny, but that the auncient Christians (with a wonderfull consent) stood affirmed that of the lawes of their religion, which both the Romans, and other nations in elder times had affirmed of their lawes: viz. that they were partly written, and partly unwritten, ἐγγραφα & ἄγραφα. The Greeks themselves doe use these words: even Clem. Alexand. Basil, Epiphan. & Dionysius. And the Fathers (lest the doctrine of the Church shou'd seeme too harsh,) doe twine it towards naturall reason, and physicall arguments: and in the questions of sinne, free will, and faith, they argue more like Philosophers then divines: as for example, Athanasius in his booke against Idols and Clement, in the 2. of his Stromata.

The councils of the supererogation are nothing else, but the Philosophers τὸ πρεπον, or decorum. The doctrine of Purgatory came into the Church out of the Heathen writers: for the Philosophers and the Poets were the first that ever wrote of the paines of Purgatory after deathas Plato in his 10. booke, de Republica. Virgill in his 6. of Æneads, and Ovid in his Metamorphosis, l. 15. The Platonists (saith Augustine de civit. Dei lib. 21. cap. 13.) although they will have no sinne unpunished, yet all those punishments they will have to tend unto reformation, whether they bee inflicted by law divine, or humane, in this life, or after death.

2. The rites and customes of the heathen (with some little change) have bin brought into the forme of Gods worships, and that by Christians. It was a custome with many to banquet upon Martyrs solemnities, and this was fetched from an olde ethnicke custome. August. confession. l. 6. c. 2. Gregory Turonensis B changed the Gentiles solemnities into the Martyrs feasts as Gregory Nazianzene in his life, saith thus: Holy Athanasius the celebrations of the Martyrs memories, lest the unthankfull multitude should (through desire of vaine delight) perish in the adoration of their gorgious idolatry. Theod. de Euang. verit. contra l. 8. saith, from the Paschalia Diasia, & Dyonisia, that is, the feasts of Jupiter and Bacchus; the people drowned make their banquets to solemnize the memories of Peter, Paul, Thomas, Sergius, Marcellus, Leontius, Anthonine, Maurice, and other such holy Martyrs. Painting and Imagerie was an heathenish custome: Euseb. l. 7. hist. eccl. as also to burne incense, and light tapers unto the images. Cicero. offic. lib. 3. yearely vigils were used of the Gentiles before they came into the Church, as appeareth by Suetonius in Vespasiano life, c. 7 as also sprinkling of holy water: Juvenal. Satyr. 6. which Sozomene expressly calls a heathenish custome. l. 1. c. 6. Also lighting of candles by day light: Seneca. l. 4. epist. 15. also shaving of crownes: Apuleius de aureo asino. l. 11. The priests of Isis, (quoth he) had their haire shaven, and their crownes very smooth. Rufinus hist. l. 2. c. 29. saith, that Serapis his chiefe place, C every one painted the crosse upon the posts, entries, windowes, walls, and pillars: and that Constantine used this signe of the crosse in his ensigne, Sozomene testifieth, l. 1. c. 5.

3. The Church hath resumed the abolished customes and ceremonies of the Iewes: as the making of their holy vestiments according unto the Priests of Moses law, Alcuinus de offic. divin. also Amalarius de offic. Eccl. l. 2. c. 22. Gratian de consecr. Dist. 1. saith, that the consecrations, and holy unctions are to be made and performed according unto the prescripte of Moses, and the imitation of the Levites. The licence & too free liberty which the Church used in these three things, hath beene the cause of all these corrupted festers now predominant therein, and ranckling the chiefe and choise parts thereof.

The Demonstration of the Probleme, or Position.

THe Demonstration of the Probleme shall bee shewed in these positions following, which I have composed of the chiefest places of divinity, which are now in controversie. And the scope of all them is this, to shew and proove, that the Religion at Rome now professed, is falsely called Catholike. And the summe of my Demonstration tends to shew, that the chiefe and proper heads thereof, either 1. were not received from the times of Christ, or his Apostles; or 2. if they were received thence, yet not as Articles of faith, but only as Opinions and probable Conjectures; or 3. that in all places the Purest Churches never held them in the same sense that the Papists held them in the Councill of Trent.

The places and heads of the controversies are these:

Holy Scripture	508	B	Mixture of wine and water.	556
Traditions.	511		Keeping of the Sacrament.	ibid
The Mediatour.	513		Use of the latine tongue in the service.	557
The truth of the Humanity.	ibid.		Transubstantiation or reall presence.	558
Descension into hell.	514		Adoration & elevation of the sacrament.	564
Free will.	516		Sacred rites pertaining to the Masse.	ibid
The remainders of Concupiscence	519		Penance sacramentall.	565
Veniall sinne.	520		Satisfaction.	ibid.
Images.	521		Purgatory.	568
Reliques.	ibid.		Sacramentall confession.	570
Signe of the Crosse.	523	C	Confirmation.	572
Churches for prayer.	525		Christne.	ibid
Canonicall houres.	ibid.		Marriage.	574
Intercession, Invocation, and worshippe of Saints,	ibid.		Priests marriage.	575
Prayers for the dead.	530		Single life.	ibid
Justification.	533		Extreame unction.	580
Merit.	535		The primacy of the Bishop of Rome.	ibid
Faith.	536		Buls or Indulgences.	589
Fulfilling of the Law.	540	D	Of the power of Kings.	590
Supererogation.	ibid.		Cardinals.	593
Pilgrimage.	541		Monkes.	594
Fasting, Stations, Procession:	542		Mary the Virgin.	596
Sacraments.	544		Feast daies.	597
Worke wrought	546		The Church.	598
The Ministers intention	ibid.		Succession.	ibid
The Character or seale.	547		Antiquity.	ibid
Baptisme.	ibid		Councils.	599
Sacrifice of the Masse.	550		Benedictions.	600
Communion under one kind.	554		The Clergy and laytie.	601
Private Masse.	555		Additions of some later Papisticall opinions.	602

Holy Scripture.

A

THE auncient and Christian Church hath acknowledged the Iewes Canon of the olde Testament to bee true and perfect, excluding wholly from thence the Bookes of TOBIE, Iudith, Wisedome, Ecclesiasticus, and the Maccabees. Testimonies. Besides these (saith Athanasius, in Synopsi,) There are other bookes of the olde Testament which are not canonicall, but onely read by the Catechumenists, as the booke of Wisedome, Ecclesiasticus, &c. Of these (saith Cyril of Hierusalem, Catech.4.) reade the 22. bookes, but meddle not with the Apocrypha, meditate diligently upon those Scriptures which the Church doth confidently reade, B and use no other. The Apostles and Bishops at the first sowing of the word, who left us these bookes, were farre wiser, far holier then thou art: therefore since thou art the sonne of the Church, do not break the bounds they have set thee in: and as I said before, study the 22. bookes of the old Testament. These are they (saith Cyprian, or Rassinus in exp. Symb. of the Iewes Canon) which the Fathers have put into the Canō, by which we must lay the foundation of our faith: yet note this, that there are other bookes also called by the Fathers, Ecclesiasticall, not Canonicall, and such is the Wisedome of Salomon, and another of Iesus Syrach, as also the bookes of Toby, Iudith, & C the Maccabees. In the new Testament, the booke called Pastor——, all which bookes they would have read in the Church, but not alleadged for confirming any point of Faith. Epiphan. l. de pond. & mens. after he hath reckoned up the Canon, thus censureth the books of the Wisedome of Sulom. and Eccles. They are fit and profitable, but not reckoned amongst those which are approoved by the Church: and therfore they were neither laid up in Aaron, nor in the Arke of the Testament. The same words are in Damasc. And Nazianzene doth certainly determine of the Canon in his verses of the true books of holy Scriptures. In English, thus.

In our old Testament two and twenty bookes are set,
According to the number of the Hebrew Alphabet.

D Looke also in the same Nazian. his Iambicke poesie unto Seleucus, of good education. Hierome saith, in prolog. Galeato in lib. Reg. The Wisedome of Salomon, Iesus Syrach, Iudith, and Toby, are not in the Canon. And in another place, Pref. in l. Salo. As the Church readeth the bookes of Iudith, Toby, and Maccabees, and yet allowes them not for canonical, so also we reade these two (the books of Wisedome and Syrach) for the edifying of the people, but not for confirmation of any Ecclesiasticall opinion. And in a third place. Pref. in Esdram & Nehem. ad Dominionem & Rogatianum: what books soever are not from the Hebrews, & among the 24. old ones, are wholly to be rejected. This opinion of Hierome doth Lyra, Prolog. in Apocryph. Dyonisius Carthusianus, & Hugo Cardinalis, Prol. in Iosu. follow. Let us take a testimony (saith Gregory, in Iob. l. 19. c. 17.) out of the Maccabees, which although they be not Canonicall, yet were set forth to edifie the Church. Toby, Iudith, and the Maccabees, (saith Radulphus in Levit. l. 14 c. 1.) are not of any authority though they be read for the instruction of the Church. After the Authentike bookes (saith Petrus Cluniacensis, epist. 2. l. 1.) there remaines other fixe to be spoken of, viz. Wisedome, Syrach, Toby, Iudith, and the two of the Maccabees, and these though they could not attaine to the credit & authoritie of the former, yet for their commodiousnes, & good worth, they have deserved admittance of the Church. Caietane in the end of Hester, saith, that seaven chapters of Hester, the books of Toby, Iudith, Wisedome Ecclesiasticus, and the Maccabees, are all Apocrypha. Charles Sigon. Com. in Sever. Sulpitium, denies the Macchabees to be canonicall, because of the dissonance of the style from the rest, and seemes to preferre the history of Iustine before it. Hieromе saith, in Prafat. in Iudith: that the Nicene Councill reckoned Iudith amongst the holy Scriptures: therefore that Synod helde all the rest of the Apocrypha as unworthy of allowāce in the Church; yet is not that certaine which Hieromе affirmeth of this book: for his words are, we reade the councill to have reckoned it: but Athanasius, present at that Councill, utterly refuseth it. Also the Councill of Laodicea, in ca. 59. decreed, that no part of the old Testament should be read in the Church, but onely the Hebrewes canonicall Scriptures. Indeed the 3. Councill of Carthage, in the 47. Canon, nūbereth al the aforenamed bookes amongst the holy Scriptures: But I say that the Catalogue of the bookes of that Councill, is either counterfeit, or justly doubted of, for 1. this Canon which is reckoned for the 47. of this Councill, is in some bookes the 24. Canon of another Councill under Boniface. as Surius will testifie. 2. In this Canon are allowed 5. bookes of Salomon: whereas there are not so many. 3. The Canons in Trullo approove both the Laodicean Councill, & this, which should not have beene done if they had determined just contraries, the one making that apocryphall, which the other makes Canonicall. 4. I think the Councill of Carthage held all bookes Canonicall, which the ancient Fathers admitted to be read in the Church.

2. The booke of Baruch hath bin held apocryphal, both by the Fathers & Coūcils even to the yeere 1439. at which time the Florentine Coūcil canonized it: and yet did Driedo deny it to be Canonicall after this D. dogm. Eccl. lib. 1. cap. 4.

3. Hesters last 7. chapters. Daniels hymne of the children, the history of Susanna, Bel and the Dragon, are all rejected as counterfeits by the Fathers. Hierome pref. in Daniel. calls the history historie of Susanna, Bel, and the Dragon fables, and saith they beare not the authoritie of holy Scripture. And so he saith, Euseb. Apollinaris, and Methodius doe all iudge.

The authour of the booke de mirabilibus scripturæ, in S. August l. 2. c. 38. saith, that concerning the other deeme of Iyons, and the transportation of Abacuk, in the tale of Bel & the Dragon, nothing is put in this ranke, because they are not contained in the Hebrew Scriptures. And Sixtus Senensis, Biblioth. lib. 1. cap. 8. reiecteth the 7. chapters of Hester, & the historie of Susanna, as additions.

4 The word Canonical is vsed by the Fathers in two senses, viz. absolutely, and respectively, απλως & προς τι. That which is absolutely Canonicall is the perfect rule both of faith and discipline. Respectively Canonicall is that worke, wherein are contained some sentences taken out of the writings absolutely Canonicall, and some histories concerning the Church of God, and are therefore allowed to bee read in the Church at publike meetings. And in this sense it is opposite onely to prophane and heathenish workes. In this sense are these Apocryphall bookes called Canonicall, and diuine, or, of diuiine authority by August. De civ dei lib. 18. c. 36. cum c. 23. l. 2 contra 2. Epist. Gaudentij: and Hieromе, pref. in Machab. And in this sense doth the Councell of Carthage in the afore cited canon acknowledge all those for Canonicall Scriptures, which (saith it) wee haue receiued from the Fathers, to bee read in the Church. And indeed, when as the Fathers doe cite these Apocrypha, they doe not alleage them as properly Canonicall, but onely as historicall. Ambrose lib. de bono mortis & lib. 2. in Lucam, cite the 4 booke of Ezra, yet who is hee that holdeth this booke for Canonicall? So is the third of Ezra, and Hermes his booke called Pastor, oftentimes alleadged by the ancient writers, and yet are Apocrypha. By the Canons of the Apostles, Can. 84. the 3 booke of the Macchabees is Canonicall, but not by the Councell of Trent. Bellarmine saith, that the decrees of the Popes are by Gratian called holy Scriptures, but χαταχρηστικως, that is, abusiuely, to distinguish them from prophane writings: and Canonicall to distinguish them from the Fathers holy workes, which are neither rules for our faith, nor haue power to bind vs to beleeue them. For although (quoth he) the Canons of Popes, and Councels are distinguished from, & set after the holy scriptures, yet in their kinde, they both are & may be called holy and Canonicall writings, ——as Innocentius cap. Cum Martha, extra. de celebra. Missarum, calleth that sentence of Augustines holy Scripture, (he injureth a martyr, that prayeth for a martyr.) And in this sense doth Damasus call the Canons of the Apostles Canonicall.

5. The auncient Fathers, and the most learned of their successors, doe hold the Hebrew and Greeke text of the holy Scriptures to be uncorrupted and pure. This not one denies. Hier. in c. 6. Isa. derideth them that say that the Hebrew bookes are corrupted. The same Father will have more credit given to the original, then to the translator, Ep. ad Lucin. de opt. gen interp. In c. 3. Mal. ep. ad August. 89. pref. in 4 Euan. Augustine also, De civ. Dei. l. 15. c. 13. saith, That when a diuersity is found in the bookes; trust that language from whence it is knowne, to haue beene first translated. So saith Ludouicus Viues vpon this place of Augustine. And Augustine himselfe in diuers other places, viz. Ep. 108. Tract. 3. in Ioan. de doct. Christ. l. 2. c. 11. Arias Montanus saith plainly that the Iewes neuer corrupted the Hebrew booke which wee now haue; and if there were any change, yet was there not one word, one letter, one tittle which was not kept in the treasury called Mazzoreth, and therefore he calleth that Mazzoreth a faithfull custody.

6. The Fathers before Gregory the first, neuer vsed the vulgar translation, which is now said to be of Hieromes correction, by Damasus his command.

1. Tertullian against Marcion vsed it not.

Onera vestra invicem sustinete, lib. 5. capite 4.
Irritam faciam, l. 5. c. 5.
Non me pudet Euangelii, l. 5. c. 13.

The Vulgar Edition

Alter alterius onera portate. Gal. 6.
Prudentiam prudentium reprobabo. 1 Cor. 1.
Non erubesco euangelium. Rom. 1.

2. Cyprian vsed it not.

Non sum idoneus. Ad Quirinū. l. 1. num. 12
Quia prospexit redemptionem populo suo, lib 2 num. 7.
In principio erat sermo. l. 2. num. 6.
Au nimquid opulentiam bonitatis eius & sustinentiam & patientiam contemnis? l. 3. n. 35.

Vulgar Edit.

Non sum dignus calceamenta portare. Mat. 3.
Quia visitauit & fecit redemptionē plebis suæ. Luk. 1.
In principio erat verbum. John 1.
An diuitias bonitatis eius & patientiæ & longanimitatem contemnis? Rom. 2.

3. The Romane Clergie that liued in Cyprians age, vsed it not.

Donauistibs omne debitū quia rogasti me. ep. 31
——Prædicatur in vniuerso mundo,

Vulgar Edit.

Omne debitum dimisi tibi, quoniam rogasti me. Mat. 18.
Fides vestra annunciatur in vniuerso mundo. Rom. 1.

4. Arnobius vsed it not.

Pueri nouissima hora. Comment. in Psal. 67.
——Vt veniret, Psal. 106.
——Ego autem testificasti.

Vulgar Edit.

Filioli, nouissima hora est. 1 Iohn 2.
Satanas expetiuit vos ut cribaret. Luke 22.
Ego autem rogaui ——

5. Hilario vsed it not.

Iudicabitur de vobis, in Mat.
——Vento moueri, Ibid.

Gladium exerens, servo principis sacerdotum auremabscidit.
Vulgar Edit.
Quo judicio judicaveritis, judicabimini.
Mat.7.
Arundinem vento quassatam.
Mat.11.
Extendens manum exemit gladium suum, & persecutions servum principis sacerdotum amputavit auriculam eius.
Mat.26.
6 Ambrose used it not.
Inter mulieres. Comment. in Luke 8.
—Contingat mihi, — ibid.
—quid vestiamur, ibid.
Vulgar Edit.
—in mulieribus
Luk.1.
—fiat mihi ——
—quid indumur amur.——
Luk.12.
7 Augustine used it not.
B
De saliua sua lutum fecit & inunxit oculos caci. Tract. in Iohan. 44.
Post panem, aut post panem intinctum. tract. in Iohan. 61.
Et testes sumus & annunciamus vobis vitam aternam, quæ erat apud patrem, & manifesta est in nobis. Tract. 10 in 1. epist. Iohan.
Omnis spiritus qui non confitetur Iesum in carne venisse. tract. 6. in 1. Epist. Iohan
Dilectio ex Deo est, ibid tract. 7.
Vulgar Edit.
Fecit lutum ex sputo & linivit lutum super oculos ejus.
Ioh.9.
——Post buccellam.——
Ioh.13..
Et testamur & annunciamus vobis vitam æternam, quæ erat apud patrem, & manifestata est vobis.
1 Ioh.1.
C
Omnis spiritus qui solvit Iesum,—
1 Ioh.4.
Charitas ex Deo est.
ibidem.
8 Optatus used it not.
Porte inferorum non vincent.
—Converse eliduant vos.
Dicebat Iesus hanc similitudinem propter eos qui se sanctos putant, & contemnunt ceteros.
Vulgar Edit.
Porte inferi non prevalebunt.
Math.16.
—Converse disrumpent vos.
Cap.7.
Dixit autem & ad quosdam qui in se confidebant tanquam justi, & asperuabantur ceteros.
Luk.18.
9 Fulgentius used it not.
D
—Qui confitetur, ad Thrasimundum. l. 1. c. 5.
—Conforme.—lib. 2. cap. 18.
Vulgar Edit.
Omnis spiritus qui solvit Iesum.
1 Iohn.4
——Configuratum.——
Philip.3.
10 Primasius used it not.
Oleo latitie pre consortibus.
Quibus ad horam cessimus.
Vulgar Edit.
Oleo exultationis pre participibus.
Hebr.1.
——Neque ad horam.——
Galat.3.
11 Prosper used it not.
Vt habeamus renunciare his, de promiss. part. 3
—in eremo parate viam.
Cum impleretur cursus, Iohannes dixit, quam me suspicamini esse non sum ego, sed ecce venit post me de cujus pedibus non sum dignus
A
solvere corrigeam calceamentorum ejus.
Vulgar Edit.
Vt responsum demus.
John 1.
——in deserto.——
Quum implerat autem Iohannes cursum suum, dicebat, quem me arbitramini esse non sum ego, ecce venit post me, cujus non sum dignus Acts.13.
calceamenta pedum solvere.
12 Leo used it not.
Beati pauperes: beati qui lugent, Festum sanct.
—Hæreditate possidebunt terram.
Vulgar Edit.
Beati pauperes: beati mites quoniam ipsi possidebunt terram.
Math.5.
7 Gregory often followeth that translation, even the errours of them that copied it out; as Luke 15. evertit domum, for evertit hominem. 34. in Euangel. Therefore the Latine translation fathered on Hierome, had not the gift of coyning, neither was it preferred in the Romane Church before other, till about the time of Gregory the great, who in that respect in the 20. bookes of his Morals, cap. 23. tearmes that translation new. Neither doth he in all things follow it, for in his 1. book of Morals, c. 19. he readeth not Ipsa conteret, but, Ipsa observabit. And after Gregories time, that alone was not receiued for Bede, Gildus, and others, followed other translations now and then. And Bernard. Serm. in Cant. 24. readeth in Gen. 4. Sirete offeras, & non recte dividis, according to the Septuagints. It was not therefore only & wholy approoued of, for the space of a 1000. yeres after Christ; neither can it be shewed by any decree of the Church, that the Latine edition should bee held for authenticall, before the late Councill of Trent.
C
8 It is probable that the vulgar translation which is made authentical among the Catholikes, is not that which Hierom at Damasus his appointment did correct, for there are many errours in this, which Hierome did correct, The name of Esay in 1. cap v. 2. of Marks Gospel, in the vulgar edition, Hierome thinkes was added by some copiers negligence, in Comment. in Mat. c. 3. And upon the 6. chapt. of Mat. he corrected the word [exterminant] which the vulgar translation keepeth. And whereas the vulgar edition hath. Mat. 16. 23 vade post me, Hier. saith vade retro me. Againe in the epist. to the Galat. c. 1. they say, Expugnabam illam: but he saith Comment. ibid. Devastabam illam: and in the same chapter they say acquievi, he, contuli. And upon the 3 chapter: It is written (quoth he) in certaine bookes, Quis vos fascinavit non credere veritati? but because this is not in Origens copy, we let it passe. In the 5 chap. the vulgar saith, Evacuati estis a Christo: he saith, a Christo opere cessistis, iustly reprehending the former interpretation: yea Augustine himselfe, though he so greatly commend the translation of Hier. in his 10 epist. yet in more then 500 places he doth not follow this edition.
D
9 What the Fathers have spoken concerning the Churches allowance of the Scriptures

tures, doth not belong to the Church that now is. That place of Augustine, Contra epist. fund. cap. 5 [I would not beleeve the Gospel unlesse the authority of the Catholike Church moved mee] Gerson of Paris, lib. de vita spirituali lectio. 2. Corol. holdeth not to be meant of any Church, but onely of the primitive Church which saw Christs person, or his Apostles, & could beare record of of their doctrine and writing. That which it spoken of the Churches approbation of the Scriptures, saith Durandus, lib. 3. dist. 24. quæst. 1. is meant of that Church only which was in the Apostles time, who were full of the holy Ghost, & besides saw Christs miracles, and heard his doctrine and therefore were conveniunt witnesses of all things that he either did or said.——so that the Gospels which that Church then received, cannot be by us now refused, because of the diversitie of the cause: whosoever thinketh otherwise, is an heretieke, of what state, or condition so ever he bee.

What ground had Cusanus then for his assertion to the Bohemians, Epist. 2. viz. that the authority of the Scriptures doe depend upon the approbation of the present Church, and they have no more power to loose and binde, then the Church will give them. And that speech of Bellarmine is a foundation of Atheisme, If (quoth he Be effectiu sacram. lib. 2. ca. 25.) we should take away the authority and credit of this present Church and Councill of Trent, the Decrees of all other Councills, nay even Christian faith is selfe might bee called in question. Againe, the credit and certainty of all opinions and doctrines dependeth upon the authoritie of the presint church.

10 The Canonicall scripture is a principle of Divinitie deserving credit of it selfe, and therefore not manifestible by any other exteriour principle. The principles of Divinitie (saith Petrus de Alliaco in lib. 1. Sentent. quæst. 1. art. 3.) are the very truths of the Sacred Canon. Moreover, the finall resolution of Theologicall discourse appeareth unto them, and from them the conclusions of all Divinitie are drawne. Gods will (saith Ioachim Abbas in Apocalyps.) is, that wee acknowledging the letter of both the Testaments, presume not upon any other relation or opinion, further then the written word.
A
11 The holy Scriptures in all such things as are necessarie for our salvation doe manifestly, truly and infallibly explane and open themselves, serving for both gloss and text. The regular and diligent interpretation according to Scripture, (saith Irenæus lib. 4. cap. 69. is without danger of errour, or blasphemie. Our meanings and allegations (saith Origen in Ieremy hom 1.) without these witnesses, the scriptures, have not any credit. And whereas it is said, In the mouthes of two or three witnesses shall every word stand, this rather belongs to the proofe of the interpretour, then to any certaine number of men whosoever: That I may confirme the word of my understanding, taking the two witnesses, to be meant of the Old and new Testament, and the three to be spoken of the Gospell, the Prophet, and the Apostle; for so shall every word bee confirmed. The Scriptures expounde it selfe (saith Chrysostome Hom. 13 in Genesin) and suffers not the hearer thereof to erre. So saith Augustine De doctr. Christ. lib. 2. cap. 6. and 26, 27, 28. and so Clemens also, for you ought not (saith he, Epist. 5. and he is cited dist. 27. c. Relatum) to seeke out any strange and impertinent sense, nor confirme it by confused allegations of the Scriptures, but seech the truest sense indeed out of the scriptures themselves.
B
12 The infallible and determining judgment of all controversies of faith is in Christs owne person, or in the holy Ghost, (so farre as hee speaketh unto us in the Scriptures canonicall. He, saith Tertullian De præscript. sitteth at Gods right hand, but hee hath sent his deputie namely, the power of the holy Spirit to worke upon the hearts of the faithfull.

We must have judges sought out, saith Optatus contra Parmenian, but since earth affordeth no Judgment of this matter, wee must seeke a judge in heaven. But what need we knocke at heaven, since we have here a testament in the Gospell? An earthly father, feeling himselfe neere death, and fearing the contention of his sonnes after his death, calling some witnesses, hee transposes his will out of his dying breast into lasting parchment. If so be now Contention doe arise amongst the brethren, doe they runne to their fathers grave? no, but seeke out his will and testament, and he who sleepeth in his tombe speaketh lively out of the silent parchment. Hee whose this testament is, is in heaven; therefore his will is to be searched out in the Gospell as his testament. This Controversie, saith S. Augustine De nupt & concupi. lib 2. cap. 33. requires a Iudge: then les Christ bee the Judge, let himselfe speake who it was that his death did profit:——And with him let the Apostle also judge, because in the Apostle Christ speaketh. And De grat. & lib. arbitr. cap. 18. let the Apostle Iohn sit as a Iudge between us.
C

Tradition.

D

1 THe Fathers by the name of Tradition doe sometimes understand the doctrine received in the primitive Church, taught by the Apostles, and recorded in their writings. If it be taught in the Gospell, saith Cyprian Epist. 74. ad Pompeium, or contained in the Epistles or Acts of the Apostles, that Converts from heresies should not bee baptized, but onely have imposition of hands, in signe of repentance; let this holy and Divine tradition bee observed.

2 They doe sometimes call that an unwritten tradition which is contained onely in the sense of the Scriptures, and not in the words, and to this manner of speaking are referred all things gathered by analogy or proportion. Augustine saith De Genesi ad liter. l.10 cap.23. that Baptisme of children is an Apostolike tradition, yet De bapt. contra Donatist. cap.24. hee proves it out of the Scriptures. So holdeth he that deniall of rebaptization unto heretikes is a tradition unwritten according to the words, but written in sense and foundation. Wherefore one and the same tradition may bee both written and unwritten: written in sense, unwritten in words.

Tradition is by Vincentius Lyrinensis used for the whole summe of Catholike doctrine, founded and grounded upon and in the scriptures: not containing any doctrine of faith without, or besides the scriptures, because he holds the scriptures the perfect and all sufficient rule for us that can bee; yea moreover he addeth, that the tradition of the Church is to bee followed onely in the chiefe questions, that are the foundations of the whole Christian faith and doctrine.

3 By the name of tradition are very often meant customes in things of liberty, or ecclesiastike rites; that is, rules concerning things and actions of comelinesse and government only, not pertinent any way to divine worship, or the articles of faith. And these for the more esteeme of order in the Church are called Apostolike, as the Grecian Idols for their more reverence were said to come down from Jupiter. Act.19. And Epicurus his booke de organo judicandi, was called Διαναὸς, that is à Jove lapsus, fallen from Jupiter: and the porch in Jerusalem called Salomons after the common opinion. John 10.23. whereas indeed, Herod built it. Every province, saith Hierome epist. ad Lucinium, thinketh their fathers precepts to be the Apostles doctrines. And in Aggæ. c. 1. But the sword of God doth strike them for other things also, which they have invented and faigned of themselves, as Apostolike traditions, being without all allowance and testimonie of scriptures. And in Tertullian, tradition is taken for any custome of what originall soever. Dost thou not think, saith he, De corona milit. ca. 34. that it is lawfull for any Christian to invent and institute what doth agree with God, assist discipline, and helpe unto salvation?

The Fast of wednesday and friday is called an Apostolike tradition, Canon. Apost 68. and Epiphan. hæref. 75. and yet we finde it seldome or never observed in the Catholike Church, which sheweth that it was Apostolike onely in name, and not indeed.

4 Some of the fathers inclining unto some heresies did make much of unwritten traditions. So doth Iustine Dial. cum Tryphone, defend the heresie of the Chiliasts by Apostolike tradition: so was Irenæus deluded with traditions, for he held that Christ did live 50. yeares, which he saith he received by traditiõ from the Apostles. So Clement of Alexand. Stromat. lib.1. saith, that Gods workemen have a double husbandrie, written and unwritten: and no marvell: for this man will have the Gentiles saved by Philosophie. Irenæus lib.3. cap.2. and Tertullian De præscriptione, doe both testifie that the old heretikes held the same opinion of Traditions, which neuertheleſſe they both doe confute. So dreamed Eusebius, de præpar. Evang. lib.1. cap.8. that the Apostles taught some thing in words, and other some in writings: and some things more excellent they reserved for the perfect only. Tertullian himselfe being fallen into Montanisme, gave himselfe over unto new prophecies and traditions.

5 The ancient Fathers speaking of these Traditions, doe oftentimes contradict themselves. So doth Basil. We preach (saith he,) lib. de Spir. san. cap.27.) and observe some things out of the written word, and other some, which wee have received by mysticall tradition from the Apostles. And saith, that both these have like force and efficacie unto godlinesse. But Regul. morall. 8. and 26. epist 80. he doth not sticke to say, that the Scriptures contained all things needfull to salvation.

So Chrysostome in 2. Thes. homil. 1. It is a tradition, inquire no further. But, in Psal. 95. hom. 1. If we preach any thing without Scripture, our auditorie will be most uncertaine what to thinke, now assenting, now doubting, and sometimes plainely rejecting as frivolous the words they heare. Thus contrarieth he himselfe. And againe, Serm. de sancto & adorando Spir. If you heare any say, I have the holy Spirit, and yet he speake not out of the Gospell, but of his owne fantasie, he speaketh of himselfe, and the holy Ghost is not in him. And a little after, If any of those that are said to have the holy Ghost, doe speake ought besides the Gospell of themselves, believe them not, but follow my doctrine.

6 The Church now Romane doth not acknowledge the traditions which the ancient Fathers called Apostolike; and if it doe acknowledge them, yet it is not certaine that they are the Apostles. Thrice dipping in Baptisme is now out of use, talked of in Tertullian. de cõron. mil. cap.3. and Basill; which also the Councill of Toledo did disallow. Standing at prayers upon the Sundaies betweene Easter and Whitsontide now is quite forgotten, yet it was an old tradition. In Ephiphan. by tradition no man may marrie after vow of singlenesse; and yet he alloweth those which burne, to mary, thinking it lesse evill to have one vice then many, though Papists now doe controule him, making a nullitie of such marriages. Neither use they now a daies to cause the newly-baptized to fast milke & hony, nor to cause the baptized of diseretion to fast the weeke after their baptisme, nor to fast wednesday and friday, yet were all these Traditions. But let us heare Cassanders minde herein; There are three kindes of rites (saith he) whereof the first is of such as were not of such moment as to binde unto the strict keeping of them: as those were were in Tertullian and Hierome, of fasting milk and hony after baptisme, — as also not kneeling on the Lords day, nor upon all the 50. daies betweene Easter and Whitsontide, but praying standing: which old custome both held Apostolike, and instituted in the Councill of Nicæa, c.20. as also confirmed by the divine custome of the Churches: for all this hath no signe or token of the use thereof remaining among us. For wee make no difference now betweene sunday and weekeday, onely upon some solemne fasts the Deacon exhorts us to kneele. Also the fast of wednesday & friday was once most religiously observed, which dayes Epiphan. saith, were by the Apostles appointed for holy assemblies. But this wednesday fast is now almost forgotten amongst the Romans, unlesse it be that some Provinces, and some private men doe upon this day abstaine from flesh. And the friday fast is changed into onely abstinence from flesh, as also almost the whole Lent: which abstinence doth but yeeld a vaine shew of the true and ancient fasting, since it brings unto many rather change of dainties, & greater excesse of luxury, then any restraint of bodily wantonnesse. Thus much Cassander.

* Defensa belli de offic. viri.

Therefore the present Church of Rome can shew no consent of the catholike Doctors for those unwritten Traditions, which it hath set downe as necessary to salvation.

The Mediatour.

1 THe ancient Fathers do teach Christ to be the Mediatour (as he is God & man) by a different act & operation, but in one and the same perfection proceeding frõ both the natures of Christ. For in his humane nature he wrought our salvation by suffering, dying, satisfying: and in his divine nature, by giving strength unto his humanitie to endure the death of the crosse, and perfect his satisfaction. The divine humanity (saith Augustin. hom. de omnibus c.12) & the humane divinity is our Mediatour. And in another place. de consensu Evang. l.1. c.35. Therefore is Christ called the Mediatour of God & man, betweene immortall God, and mortall man; God and man reconciling man unto God; remaining that which he was, & made that which he was not.

Christs death (saith Cyril. l.12. de fide, ad Reginas) is cõfessed to be profitable unto us, but if he were not God, how could he, & he alone suffice for the price of al our redemption? but he onely in his death satisfied for all, because he is above all. Neither could wee bee freed (saith Augustine againe, Enchirid. cap.108.) by that one Mediatour of God and man, the man Christ, unlesse he were God.

2 Whereas the ancient Fathers sometimes affirme, that Christ is Mediatour onely as he is man; & Mediatour, by that, by which he is man; and Mediatour in his humane nature, and Mediatour according to his manhood: they doe not speake of the manhood onely and exclusively, but of the whole person, so considered as hee hath assumed mans nature and flesh upon him.

3 Whereas they deny Christ to be Mediatour as God, they speake of the godhead or of the Sonne of God absolutely considered, not of God as incarnate: that is, they speake of the bare Deitie, or of Christ as he is verbum Patris, the word of the Father. And there is not one of all the Fathers that saith, that Christ according to both his natures, is the Mediatour so, as his holy humanitie is the formall cause of his Mediatourship and the actions thereof: for the whole person compounded of God & man, according to both natures, is the beginning of all the operations of God-man.

Therefore it is a fiction of the Schoolemen to say, that Christ is the Mediatour onely according to his humanitie.

The truth of the Humanity.

1 THe ancient Fathers when they call Christs humanitie Deified, and Partaker of the Deitie, and supreme glory, in these and like phrases they expresse the personall Vnion; and they are to be understood with this caution, as farre as these things agree with the nature of the humanity, and do not infringe the properties thereof. Or, they speake thus in respect that the flesh is as the instrument of the Divinitie, by which and in which it doth exercise the power and actions thereof. The Lords flesh (saith Damascene, lib. 3. cap.17.) is enriched with divine efficacy because of the personall Vnion, neither yet doth it fall or depart from his owne proper nature, nor from the naturall properties thereof. And Nazianzene saith, Orat 42. that the humanity is endowed with divinity, and is God together with it: but this is in respect of the personall union, not essentially nor formally.

2 When the Fathers sometime say, that Gods omnipotencie is communicated unto the manhood of Christ, or to Christ as man, they must be expounded two waies: first, in respect that the man Christ is called omnipotent, because of the communication of the properties. Secondly, in respect that the proper workes of God are ascribed unto the flesh, as the Organ or instrument of the Divinitie; So doth Damascene, lib.3. cap.18. and Nicetas, Thesaur. lib.3. cap.38. use these sayings.

3 Some of the Fathers say, that Christs Nativity was without miracle, as other mens ordinarily are. So affirmes Ambrose upon the text Omne masculũ aperiens vulvam, in Comm. in Luc. lib. and also Origen. Homil. 14. in Luc. Tertullian in sine lib. De carne Christi: Cyprian or Ruffinus, in Symbol. Apost. and Leo Epist. 84. & 97. is not farre from this opinion also. It is possible (saith Durandus, lib. 4. dist. 44. q. 6.) that by the operation of the Deitie, there was made a dilatation or enlarging of the naturall parts and passages in the Virgin Mary, without any breach or interruption: And to confirme this, hee citeth Gregory upon the second of Luke. Againe Iesus came in when the doores were shut, but it is not said, that hee came through the doores being shut:—— they might bee opened and shut againe in a moment, so as the Disciples might not perceive it.

4 The Fathers affirming the fulnesse of grace in Christ, doe meane of Christ as God, or of the whole person, not of his soule. So meaneth Athanasius in his 4. sermon against the Arrians, and Nazianzene in his Oration upon Basill.

5 The Fathers doe not with one consent affirme, that Christ had the fulnesse of knowledge from his conception, so as he could never have more. He received a soule (saith Origen, περὶ ἀρχῶν. lib. 4.) in nature and essence like unto one of ours. Therefore did Luke notifie his age (saith Ambrose, de Incarnat. Dom. cap. 7.) because thou shouldest know that he spoke of his manhood: for it is the body, not the Deitie, that is the object of age. Wherefore, if he increased in the yeares of man, he also increased in the wisdome of man. Augustine is variable in this point, and yet that place of Luke. Puerulus crescebat— hee held to bee meant of Christs humanitie, De Genes. ad liter. lib. 10. c. 18. Growing up in age and wisedome (saith Bruno Herbipolensis, in Symb. Apost.) after his holy nativitie, hee came to the age of thirtie yeares.

6 That which the Fathers doe attribute unto the name of Iesu, or of Christ, is not properly ascribed to the bare name, but as it is invocated by men, or to the invocation of the name; often times I have scarce pronounced that name (saith Nazianzene, ad Nemesium.) when the divell presently hasted away. The divels gave place (saith Origen, contra Celsum. lib. 1.) at the very calling upon the name of Iesus. And lib. 3. the sicke were cured by calling upon the Almightie God, and the name of Iesus over them.

Hilarion (saith Hierome, in vita Hilari.) cast out divels by invocating the name of Iesu.

The descension into hell, (to deliver the Fathers.)

1 THe Fathers doe sometimes defend a vertuall descension of Christ into hell and a vertuall deliverance from hell, that is, by the merit and vertue of his passion and death, not a local. This Augustine (in Psal. 85.) doth acknowledge. And Durandus, l. 3. Sent. dist. 22. qu. 3. denieth any other descension of Christ into the place of the damned, then one vertuall, or in the effect. Thomas also (par. 3. quæst. 52. artic. 2.) denies that Christ was really in any other place save Limbo, but in the place of the damned onely vertually, or in effect. In this sense many testimonies of the Fathers must be taken figuratively. In like manner they say that Adam and others were in hell, not locally, but according to their desert, yea and that before they died.

2 Those of the Fathers that defend a local descension and deliverance, doe not defend it as an article of the Creede, but as a probable opinion. This may bee proved, because they seldome or never put this Article into their creeds and confessions of the faith. You must know (saith Ruffinus, in exposit. Symbol.) that in the Church of Rome, this article, hee descended into hell, is not put in the creed, nor in the creed of the Easterne Church, though it seeme to bee included in these words, dead and buried. Nay this Article is not in any creed or confession almost of all the Fathers. It is not in Marcellus his confession in Epiphanius, nor in Ignatius his confession, in ep. ad Magnetianos, vel ad Ephesios: nor in that of Polycarp, (Epist. ad Philippenses.) nor in Iustines, (in Apolog. 2.) nor in Irenæus his, (lib. 1. cap. 2.) not in Tertullians, lib. de Præscript. vel contra Praxeam, though hee explane the Apostles Creed: not in Origens, in Proœmio περὶ ἀρχῶν where he intreates of faith: not in Gregories of Neocæsaria: nor in the Councills of Nicæa, Socrat. lib. 1. cap. 5. not in Eusebius his creed of Cæsaria, (Theodoret. lib. 1. cap. 12.) nor in the third creed rehearsed in the Nicene Councill, Socrat. lib. 1. cap. 5. not in Athanasius his creed. Epist. ad Epictetum. not in that creed which is in Athanasius his epistle touching the Councils of Arimin and Selencia; nor in the Synod of Syrmias creed, Socrat. lib. 2 cap. 25. Hilar. lib. de Synod. contr. Arian. nor in the Councill of Sardica's creed, Theodoret. lib. 2. cap. 8. nor in Hilaries exposition thereof: nor in the creed of the Synod of Antioch, set downe by Hilary, lib. de Synod. contra Arian. nor in the creed of Seleucia a citie of Isauria, in Socrates, lib. 2. cap. 32. Epiphan. hæres. 73. nor in the Synod of Illyria, Theodoret. lib. 4. 8. nor in Damasus his creed, set downe by Hierom, Tom. 2, operum. Theodoret, lib. 5. chapter 10. nor in Eusebius Pamphilus his creed, Socrat. lib. 1. cap. 5. nor in Hilaries de Synodis cont. Arianos: nor in Basils creed, in his Ascetica. nor in Nazianzenes: nor in that of Victorine. l. 1. contr. Arian. nor in Epiphanius his Ancoratum: where the Catholike faith is rehearsed, not in Theodoret, in Dialog. Impatibilis, where the Nicene creed is expounded: nor in Maximus Taurinensis, where he expounds the creed: nor in that which Chrysologus repeateth foure times. Homil. 56, 57, 58. nor in that of the first Councill of Toledo, nor in the Ephesine creed, Ann. 435. nor in that of the first Councill of Constant. nor in that of the 6. councel of Constant. Act. 10. Nor in that of the Synod of Chalcedon, in Zonaras: nor in the Creed of the Fathers in Cyrils ad Reginas, l. 2. nor in that of the third Councill of Toledo: nor in that of Gregory the first: not in Spiridions. Niceph. lib. 8. cap. 15. nor in that which the Bishops of the East offered Constans. Niceph. lib. 9. cap. 11. nor in that which the Legats of the West offered the same Emperour, Niceph. lib. 18. cap. 10. nor in the booke of faith upon Petrus Diaconus, nor in Augustine, wherein soever he expounds the Creed; although in his workes; lib. de fide & Symb. & libris 4. de fide ad Catechumen. Serm. de tempore: 123. 125. hee doth explane it five severall times: nor in the first exposition of the Creed, in Chrysostomes. 5. tome.

3 The Fathers by Christs descension into hell, do sometime understand his descending into the seaven lower parts of the world. Christ not onely in his death, but also in his birth, saith Beda Psal. 85. did descend into hell. And in the 6. generall Councill. Act. 10. is left out, He descended into hell, and there is put in; He descended out of heaven. And so it is also in the Nicene Councill. Ibid. Act. 17. And in the Ephesine Creed, He descended from the heavens, In the 6. and 11. of Toledo, it is, Being sent from his Father hee came into the world.

4 The descension into hell sometimes is put for buriall: As in Athanasius his creede, and the latter exposition of the creed in Chrysostome. And in the creed of Toledo 4. there are these words, Hee descended into hell to free the Saints there captive, and having overcome the dominion of death, hee rose againe. And in Hiervme, in Praem. comment. in Esay. Being buried, and rising againe— he is preached: He descended not onely into hell (saith Radulphus Ardens) In vigil. ascen. hom. 2. but also into the lower parts of the earth, that is, into the place of torment, breaking it up, and leading away captivitie captive.

5 The Fathers either knew not at all, or (if they knew) yet speake doubtfully of the severall places of hell: and therefore sometimes oppugne Limbus Patrum which is called a part of hell: and some times (but uncertainly) make for it. Abrahams bosome (saith Augustine epist. 99.) that is, the habitation of secret rest, is not to be held any part of hell. And De remiss. peccat. lib. 1. cap. 28. There is no middle place for any man to be (saith he) but with the devill, that is not with Christ. Although (saith he De Genes. ad liter. lib. 12. cc. 33.) I confesse I have not yet found that the place where the righteous rested, (as Abraham and Lazarus) is called hell,— neither where they are said to bee in hell,— have I yet found, but I still doe seeke, and know not. Nor doe I finde in all the scriptures, (which are Canonicall) that hell is taken in good part or sense,——and therefore I cannot see how Abraham can bee said or believed to bee in hell. Againe, Perhaps (saith hee In Psal. 85.) there is a lower part of hell where the sinners are fast: which were very wicked, for whither Abrahams riches in any of these places, wee cannot easily determine. And againe, Perhaps there were these two hells,— &c. Perrulius, will have Abrahams bosome (wherein he thinkes the just soules and shall be untill the last judgement) distinct from hell: Hell is one place, (as he thinkes) (saith he Contra Marcion. lib. 4. cap. 51.) and Abrahams bosome another. And I call that region Abrahams bosome, which if it bee not heavenly, yet is higher then hell, giving rest unto the soules of the righteous untill the consummation of all things doe terminate their resurrection, with fulnesse of reward. Here also hee ascribeth this opinion of Limbus unto Marcion: Marcion (saith he) thinketh otherwise, namely, he determineth both the rewards of the creatour, whither it be of torment, or rest, in hell, unto those that keepe or breake the law and the prophets, but hee ascribeth heaven unto Christ, and to his God. And in l. De anima. cap. 7. What is that which is transported unto hell after the separation from the bodie, and unto what did Christ descend in his death? I thinke, unto the soules of the Patriarkes. Concerning the first man (saith Augustine epist. 99.) and our first parent, the whole church almost doth agree in this, that Christ freed him from thence; which we must thinke, was not beleeved upon no ground, whence soever it first came up, although wee have no authority of Canonicall Scripture to authorize it at all. These, perhaps, saith Iulian of Toledo, Prognost. lib. 2. cap. 4. were the two hels, in one whereof the soules of the just were at rest, and in the other the wicked punished. Beda in Psal. 85. saith, that the earth is the upper-hell, and that the place of punishment after this life, is the lower hell.

6 Of the intent of Christ in his descension, the Fathers speake variably: some hold that he went to free the soules of the Saints out of the bonds and captivitie of death. I think it no absurditie (saith Augusti De civit. Dei. lib. 20. cap. 19.) to believe, that the Saints of old that expected Christ in faith, were in habitacles farre distant from the torments of the wicked, but yet that they were in hell, untill that Christs blood and descending thither set them free. But in epist. 99. more plainly, I do not finde (saith he) what good Christ did unto those just ones that were in Abrahams bosome, by his descending into hell, from whom according to the blessed presence of his Divinity, hee was never absent. Christ descended into hell (saith Clemens Alexan.) most plainely Strom. lib. 6. for no other cause but to preach the Gospell to the Gentiles, that they might learne the true faith and be saved; or justly bee condemned for ever. And thus also Damascene in Oratione de fidelibus defunctis holdeth. But this opinion is condemned by Philaster. cap. 74. There are heretikes (quoth hee) that say that Christ descended descended into hell, and there after his death told them all, that who so there confessed him should be saved. Looke Augustine De verb. sec. cap. 99. concerning this, and Gregory lib. 6. Indict. 15. epist. 15. Christ descended into hell for us sinners, saith Fulgentius ad Thrasimund. lib. 3. cap. 31. Christ descended saith Epiph. Heref. 46 contra Tatianos, to give pardon unto those that erred not from acknowledging his deity, but were kept in hell for other errors: yea Bellarmine himselfe De anima Christi, lib. 4. cap. 15. confesseth, that this in the beliefe of Christs descension is not of necessity, but of decency or conformity. Although (quoth hee) it bee not necessarie that Christs soule should be present at the illumination of the fathers with divine vision: yet it seemes fit that it should bee present while that was doing. But the articles of our faith (good M. Bellarmine) bee founded upon somewhat besides congruitie, they stand upon necessity.

7 Those that will have the Fathers in hell untill Christs ascension, doe contradict themselves, or one another. 1. Some, as Ruffinus for one, will have them in paines. The King (saith he In expos. Symbol.) was said to be in prison also, but not as the rest were: they were there to suffer paines, but hee to release them. Athanasius: De salutar. Christ. advent. saith, Adams soule and the rest that served God in the law of nature, were in sorrow, and cried out. By Christ, saith Anastasius Sinaites, in Hexamer. was Adam freed from his sorrowes. And De recta fidei dogmat. lib. 5. The soules were freed out of the cloisters of hell where they were holden in most miserable tyranny; perhaps not tyranny, yet guilty of the debt of a multitude of sinnes. Presently upon Christ descension (saith Caesarius Homil. 3. de Pasche.) that eternall night of hell had morning: the noise of the mourners was silent, the huge weights of the chaines were laid off, and the bands of the damned fell away all broken.

2 Other some will have them in a quiet repose without all molestation. So will Hieron have them, Ad Paulam epist. 25. cap. 3. and Augustine De genes. ad lit. lib. 12. cap. 33. So that Abraham, although hee was in that place of repose, yet is said to have beene in hell with Lazarus.

Free-will.

1 SOme of the Fathers speaking of Free-will, in some places doe meane of the freedome which was in our nature before our fall: or of the freedome of glorie. So meaneth August. Hypognost. 3. (or whosoever was the author of that booke) when hee saith, unto Adam was that spoken, Eccles. 15. If thou wilt keepe my commandements they shall keepe thee.

2 Other some things are spoken of the naturall freedome of our will from necessity, from which it cannot but be free. And in this sense they say, that we have a will absolutely free in all things, that is, an understanding minde, and will whereby wee assent unto or dissent from our judgement, by which that which we doe, we do it wittingly & willingly, not compelled. Gregory Arim. lib. 2. dist. 29. in fine, saith, It is sufficient to make a thing voluntary, if it bee done by him that knoweth it and is willing. The soule hath free will, saith Cyrill Catechesi 4. the devill may stirre it up unto sinne, but constraine it against the will he cannot. God made us of a free consent, saith Hieronme in Jovinian. lib. 4. neither are we forced by necessity either to vertue or vice. And these speake of the libertie wee have in reasonable and sensible things. So doth Augustine de perfect. justit. contra Coelestium, and Coelestius, objecting that of Saint Paul, sociat quod vult, As though (saith he) it were a great matter to desire to wedde, where the disputation is earnest concerning the assistance of Gods mercy. Neither let a man thinke, saith the Author in Ambroses words, De vocat. Gent. lib. 1. cap. 3. because hee is drawne on by the Spirit of God, that he hath not free-will, for he lost not that when he yeelded himselfe in will unto the devill, by whom indeed the judgement of his will was depraved, but not utterly taken away. So saith Enthymius, in Luc. 15. cap. of the prodigall sonne: He asked that part of the goods which fell unto him, that is, free-will; as if hee should say, urge me not necessarily to serve, for I have free-will. So Bernard, De grat. et lib. arbit. saith, Seeing then that consummation or perfection in glorie must be wrought upon us or even in us, but not of our selves; and that our creation was wrought, and that without us; there is onely reformation, which after a sort is wrought with us by reason of our voluntary consent, that shall be reckoned to our desert.

3 Some things also are spoken of free-will as of a good belonging to naturall life, or an externall morall good, or of outward discipline. And this manner of speaking the author of the booke in Augustine called Hypognosticon useth lib. 3. He is rightly said to be but halfe alive, saith he, for he had his vitall motion, that is, his free will wounded. And so Gregorie of Arimin. 2. dist. 26. and after him Cassalius de quadriparti ta Justitia, lib. 1. doe speake of goodnesse considered in the kind, object, and offices, not of good frō all circumstances.

4 Some of their sayings hereof are legall, in that they shew, not what wee can doe, but what we cannot doe through sinne, and what we ought to doe in duty. The Pelagians (saith Augustine, De grat. & lib. arbit. cap. 16.) thinke themselves great scholars, when they object that God would not command what hee knoweth impossible to bee kept; who knoweth not that? but therefore hee commands us some things which we cannot doe, because we

we should know what we ought to beg of him.

5 Other some are meant of the will being freed, and therefore shew what our will may doe in a worke truly good not of it selfe, and it owne naturall power, but what it can doe by grace.

6 Most of the Fathers correct their owne rude speeches of free will, (but chiefly Augustine.) For indeed almost all of them speake contraries, that none can tell their positive doctrines: sometime they extoll humane power too much, and that first because if they should directly haue affirmed the weaknesse of the will, the Philosophers might haue scorned them. 2. Because they would not giue the reines vnto negligence. And sometimes they beate downe the liberty of will on the other side. Chrysostome doth often giue too much to the power of the will after the fall: and yet sometimes correct himselfe. A man before hee sinneth, (saith hee, Serm. 1. de Adventu.) hath Free-will, to choose whether hee will yeeld to the diuell, or no: but when hee hath once taken that subiection vpon him by sinne, then hee is no more at his owne command. Thou hast nothing (saith Basil, Serm. de humilit.) left, thee oh man, to bee proud of, whose glory and hope should be to mortifie all thine owne affections, & seeke the life to come in Christ: whose first fruites we having reaped, do owe our life, and all we are, vnto the gift and grace of God. For it is hee that giueth vs both to will and to doe according to his good pleasure.

7 The Fathers before Pelagius, while the controuersies of Free-wil were not stirred vp, spake thereof very securely, like as Pelagius did, chiefly, they that opposed the Marcionits, Valentinians, or the Manichees: with whom whilest they contend about the heresie of the necessity of all things, and of all euents, they misse the way all the, in giuing too much to Free-will, and too little vnto grace, at least in shew. There were nought of any worth in man, (saith Iustine, Apolog. 1.) vnlesse hee had an equall power to turne vnto what part hee list. God doth not force any (saith Irenaeus, lib. 4. capite 72.) but is alwaies well meaning, and therefore hee counselleth all men vnto good. But hee hath giuen man a free election, euen as well as the angels. We are all of one nature (saith the same Father, capite 72.) able to keepe good, and so to worke, and able to loose good, and not to worke in it. Therefore should no lawe haue beene giuen, (saith Tertullian Contra Marcion. libro 2.) vnto him that hath not the due keeping of the law in his owne power: and the same freedome of will (which wee in Adam) make vs vnfortunate the same doth make vs [illegible] the diuision parts we beginne: (saith Hieronm Contra Pelagianos, libro 1. capite 2.) & God can perfect what we can, hee will fulfill what we cannot. Vnlesse the Lord (saith Chrysostome in Genes. homil. 42.) had first done his part, hee had not obtained so great things of God: and therefore marke not onely this, but in all things else, how first hee sheweth the greatnesse of his vertue, and so thereby deserues Gods assistance. And againe, (homil. 17. in Ioan.) let vs here obserue, that God in his blessings vnto vs doth not preuent our wils, but it must beginne in our selues: and when hee seeth our mindes prompt and ready to receiue grace, then hee giueth vs many occasions of saluation. I said, (saith Austen, de praedest. Sanct. libro primo, capite tertio) that it lieth in vs to beleeue and so will, and in God to giue the power of working well, vnto the beleeuing and willing. To propound or begin a good worke (saith Hesychius in Leuit. libro 2. capite 7.) is in our power: but to perfect and finish it according to the precept, is onely in Gods grace. After Pelagius was risen vp, Cassianus held with him concerning Free-will: (as Prosper saith of him, contra Collatorem) for in one of his Collations, Collatio 13. cap. 11. hee affirmeth, that the grace of God sometime preuenteth vs, and sometimes is preuented by vs. So held Faustus Rhegiensis.

8 Augustine after Pelagius was risen, in all his last writings, neuer acknowledgeth either the exercise, or the actiue power of Free-will in working true good, or in the first conuersion of a sinner. Why doe wee presume so much, saith hee, (De natura & grat. capite 38.) of the power of nature? it is wounded, maimed, vexed, and lost: let vs confesse it freely, and not defend it falsely: Wherefore let vs seeke the grace of God, not to informe, but to reforme it thereby. And in the Hypognost. 3. cap. primo, it is said, that by sinne man did lose both the abilitie of goodnesse, and the goodnesse of possibilitie. The will (saith Augustine in another place, De perfect. justit.) being ouercome by sinne, nature hath lost her libertie. And againe, de spirit. & lit. capite tertio. Free-will hath not any power but vnto sinne; & the way of truth hee vnknowne, and when that which is to bee done beginneth to appeare, vnlesse also it doth delight, and bee beloued, there is no doing, no vndertaking, no well liuing. Vnles we therefore willing, but God is hee that worketh this willingnesse in vs: and wee worke, but God giueth vs this abilitie, to worke according vnto his good pleasure, Augustine, De bono perseverantia, capite 14. It is certaine, that we are willing when we are led so, but it is best that make others so, of whom it is said, Deus Deus God that worketh that will in vs. It is certaine that in a worke, when wee doe so, that it is hee that giueth vs this working power, by giuing Gus will most efficient powers & effectuall, (saith Augustine) I will cause you to walke. Augustine. De grat. & lib. arbit capite 2. Vnlesse God first worke in vs the willing, & the performing with vs being willing, we shall neither begin or passe any good worke at Wee must confesse, that wee haue Free-will borne to good and euill: but in doing euill euery man iust and vniust is free (in choice:) but in doing good, none can bee free (in will and act) vnlesse hee bee freed by him that said: If the Sonne free you, you are truly freed, Augustinus de corrept. & grat. capite primo. Holy thoughts, good purpoles, godly counsels, and all meritori of a good will are from God: because by him wee are able to do some good, without whom wee can do nothing at all, Author de dog. Eccles. cap. 27. Wee lost our free election to loue God, by the greatnesse of the first sin, Epist. 107. Libertie without grace is no liberty, but corruptiey, Idem, Epist. 89 ad Hilar. Man in his creation had great power of free-will giuen him, but in his fall he lost it. Idem de verb. Apost. Serm. 2. And you shall very often finde theie words in Augustin. Our bound will, captiued, destroyed, lost, &c. Of this opinion of Augustine, was Prosper also. Infidelitie (saith he, contra Collatorem, capite 21.) tooke away our faith, bondage tooke away our liberties: neither can any part of vertue remaine (here, where such a crue of vices haue broke in. Adam (saith Prosper in the Epitome of the 3 cap. 2.) being created without necessity of sinning, when he lost his soules health in offending God, lost verely euen the power of thinking of all diuine things. Againe, in another place, cap. 21. The power of thinking good thoughts, being lost in the first man, was recouered in the second. Wee beleeue (saith Maximine, de Fide, capite 32.) that our free wil auailes with hath power in nothing, but in decreasing & defiling worldly and carnall things onely, which is cleane not glorious before God: though it before men perhaps shew doe: But to find things belonging to saluation, it can neither thinke of them, choose, do fine, nor finish them without the infusion and operation of the Spirit of God: And hee addeth: To will and to performe is Gods gift. Bernard teacheth, that it is one thing to choose, and another to choose good. To will (quoth he, de gratia & libero arbit.) is in vs by Free-will, but not to perform it: but will I say not, to will euill: for I do euill voluntarily: to will good, is increase, (of grace he meaneth) and to will euill, is defect ——— Free-will maketh vs willing, but grace maketh vs well-willing: from free-will we haue power to will euill: but to will well comes from grace.

Augustine in diuers places plainely affirmeth all the workes of the vnfaithfull to bee sinne, vide supra. & alicubi, libro primo copiose, Ench. libro 4. capite 3. De nat. & grat. libro 5. capite 19. & libro 26. capite 34. in Psal. 31. in principio. Of free-will (saith he) contr. 2. Epist. Pelag. I. libri. capite 8. hauing now expiated it can do nothing but sinne. Scripture (saith he, de nat. & grat. capite 3.) doth euidently and very plainely, Non est libero arbitrio capite 39. The Iewes (saith he) left their brothers house, when all other vertues are entertained in faith, which if it bee not the first begotten in our heart, all the rest can neuer bee good, though they seeme better so well. It is through the gift of God, whensoeuer we decline from sinne, saith the Councell of Arausic: But Stapleton, De Iustific. libro 2. capite vltimo, scourgeth this doctrine, and thinketh not to iustifie, that Augustine went a little beyond his bounds in this Controuersie with Pelagius. But other moderne writers holding with Augustine, doe flatly deny, that a man by the power of nature can discerne or distinguish of a morall good. So holdeth Gregory of Arimin, lib. 2. distinct. 26. quæst. 1. art. 2. & 2. distinct. 29. quæst. 1. artic. 2. Capreolus, in 2. distinct. 28. quæst. 1. art. 3. Cassalius de quadrip. institt. libro 1. capite 15. & 32. &c. Also these deny, that a man without faith, and the especiall help thereof, by natures power can doe a good morall worke, so as there be no sinne in the action or worke. Both Gregory of Arimin, and Capreolus in 2. dist. 28. hold this: But Cassalius de quadrip. institt. lib. 1. cap. 36. both teacheth and defendeth, that the Fathers were of this minde. This also is Marsilius his opinion, in 1. quæst. 20. Bellarmine indeed confesseth, that Scotus, Durandus, and Biel (upon the 28. Distinction of Lombards second booke) haue perhaps written more freely then is behooefull. Sixtus Senensis saith, Præsertim libro 5. Bibliath. that Augustine sometimes giues but too little vnto mans Free-will: and Chrysostome on the contrary seemes to extoll it as much beyond the meane. Bradwardine in his booke De causa Dei, against Pelagius, libro 3. capite 4. teacheth that Free will being tempted, cannot ouercome by temptation by it selfe, without the assistance and grace of God. And this also in another place, Capite vltimo. With what grace of the creation soeuer it be vpheld, yet without some speciall grace of God, it cannot ouercome any temptation at all. And againe, cap. 6. ibid. That that speciall helpe of God, is Gods inuincible will.

The Fathers say, that our will is assisted by God: I confesse it: as we sometimes say: Such a thing helped me to do this, when I of mine did nothing.

The Fathers hold a possibility to conuerting whereby mans mind & will may by God's ordinary dispensation, be turned to receiue grace: with they are prevented and helped by the holy Spirit. To be able to will, we finde and know it with Augustine, de prædest. Sanct. 5. is in vs by nature: And againe, contra Iulian. Lib. Mans nature hath ability of iustification by the grace of the holy Spirit. Gregorie (saith) min. vnto that of Augustine (Those things) which belong to a right power vs to will, which (saith he, libr. 2. distinct. 26.) Wee may say, that will in our power now easily to will or choose bad things, but also good things; but with this difference, we may put our election to euill without without Gods especial helpe: but vnto good, if he doe not chiefly assist vs, we cannot. It is in mans power, saith Augustine, Retract. lib. 1. cap. 22. to change his bad will into better, but this power is none at all vntill God giue it. And ibid. cap. 23. We may will to beleeue, it is true; but with the same condition: they are both from him (viz. to will and to beleeue) because hee prepareth our will: and both from vs, because they bee not done against our wils. And in this sense are many sayings of S. Augustine to be vnderstood. For he speaketh of the passiue possibilitie, which belongs to the matter, not of the active, belonging to the forme, which is absent before the conversion, both according to the first and second act.

* He was Archbishop of Canterbury, anno 1340.

* Extat in Bennet Colledge in Cambridge.

12. The Fathers acknowledge a co operation with the Grace of God, euen naturall, in respect of the faculties of the vnderstanding and will: and also from the grace of God, in respect of willing that which is good. Hee that made thee without thy selfe, saith Augustine, De verb. Apost. Serm. 15. doth not iustifie thee without thy selfe. And hee that made thee not witting, doth iustifie thee being willing, and without thy will there shall no righteousnesse be in thee. Therefore the Papists doctrine of Free-will, that it is but halfe dead, that is, bound from vse or exercise, but not dead in respect of the active power of willing well, is not Catholike.

Of the Remainders of Concupiscence.

1 WHereas sometime in the Fathers wee finde it written, that Concupisence is no sinne after regeneration, it must be thus vnderstood, because that God of his mercy doth not imputo it. So that the Fathers doe onely deny that concupiscence is sinne vnto the person in whom it is; but, that it is sinne in it selfe and of it selfe, and so remaineth after baptisme, they neuer denie, but doe averre it so to bee. Augustine himselfe, Contr. Iul. Pelag. lib. 5. cap. 3. very plainely calleth that concupiscence sinne, against which the good spirit doth strive, because, saith hee, there is in it a disobedience against the rule of the minde. And againe, De nupt. & concup. lib. 2. cap. 26. This is to bee free from sinne (saith he) not to be guilty of sinne. Besides, Tractat. In Ioan. 41. Let not sinne rule: he saith not, let it not be in thee, for as long as thou liu est, thou art sure to haue sinne in thy members, but yet let it not rule in them. So Ambrose, apud Aug. contra Iul. lib. 2. c. 5. calleth the remains of concupiscence in the regenerate, iniquity, and Hilary calleth it matrimonium inesse, apud eundem, lib. 2. cap. 9. Caietane, in Rom capite 7. verse 8. sticks not to say that concupiscence (whereof Saint Paul speaketh) is euen formally sinne; in respect that it is a part of originall sinne.

2 The first motions of concupiscence, before consent, the Fathers hold to bee sinne. So holdeth Bede: Carnall concupiscences saith he, in Psal. 9. are the first death, & deaths entry. And in Psal. 118. Whosoeuer fals but in thought, offendeth God: and againe, In Psal. 1. The soule is killed three waies; with delectation alone, with delight ioyned with consent, and with action. Sinne, saith Radulphus, In Leuitic. libr. 8. cap 4. doth breede in a mans soule before consent, and now beginneth to be brought forth, but is not consummate or perfected. And Cassiodorus, In Psalm. 119. calleth those desires vnlawfull, to which wee doe not consent: and Augustine also before him, in Psalm. 118. Conc. 3. doth the like.

3 When the Fathers say, that the first motions in concupiscence are not sinnes, vnlesse we consent, we must not so understand them, as though they were not sinnes in the truth of appellation, but because the guilt of these first motions, together with the guilt of concupiscence it selfe, is taken away in our regeneration: So saith Augustine, De peccat. origin. lib. 2. cap. 40. The vicious desires also (vnto which if we doe not consent, there is not guilt contracted) are all purged away in the same fountaine of regeneration. And againe, Contra Iul. lib. 2. cap. 10. As for vs (we should be alwaies without sinne, if this euill were once cured, and if we should never consent with it vnto euill. But hee had said before, cap. 9 in fine. How then doe we say that this sinne is dead in baptisme, ——— and yet confesse that it dwelleth still in our members; and causes many desires in vs against our wils; vnto which we resist by not consenting. — vnlesse because it is dead touching that guilt wherewith it held vs; and yet vntill it bee cured in the consummation of burial, will rebell though it bee dead? Although now it is not called sinne after the same manner, whereby it maketh a man guilty, but in that it was caused by the guilt of the first man Adam, and by rebellious nesse endeauours to bring vs into guilt; vnlesse we be helped by Gods grace, through Iesus Christ. Looke his third sermon in Psalm. 118. Hence it is that Augustine saith often, that wee need not say, forgiue vs our trespasses, for the true voluntary motions of the concupiscence, because hee held them all for to be giuen in baptisme, epist. 200. ad Sixtum Romæ presbyt. Institut. Psal. 118. Conc. 3.

4. Sometimes they speake of the externall suggestions of Sathan; and these indeede are no sinne of ours; vnlesse wee giue our assent vnto them, for saith Gregory, Moral. libro 21. cap. 3.

Veniall sinne.

A

1 A Veniall sinne which is besides Gods Law, and not against it, and in his nature bindeth onely unto the guilt of temporall punishment, was not knowne among the Fathers for seaven hundred yeares after Christ: Afterwards it got entrance and patronage. The reward, saith Haimo, In epist. dominica 8. post pentecosten, of sinne is death: not of all sinnes, but onely of those that are criminall, and whereof Iohn saith, It is a sinne unto death.

2 The Fathers acknowledge, that all sinne properly, and of it owne nature, deserveth eternall death by the just judgement of God. There is a daily repentance of good & humble beleevers, saith August. epist. 108. when knocking our breasts wee say, forgive us our trespasses,—for we do not begge forgivenes for those which we know are forgive in baptisme: but for them which (though but sinne all,) yet are often incident unto humane frailtie; and beeing drawne to a summe against us, would oppresse us as much as another heavy sinne: for what difference is it in shipwracke to be sunke with one furious billow, or to haue the water enter by little and little, and never respect it untill it sinke the shippe? And againe, Trall. 12. in Ioan. many little, or small sinnes unregarded, kill the soule. Besides: Expos. 1. in epist. Ioan. many light sinnes make one heavie one. All sinne (saith Nazianzene, Or. 31.) is the death of the soule. And who is he, saith the author Asterictorum, that dare say this sinne is little, what euer it be? I know not, saith Hieronm epistol. 14. how we can call any sinne light, which is done in contempt of God. The reproouing sentence of the severe Iudge, saith Bede, In Samuel, libro prim. cap. 10. doth not onely condemne those fires of capitall sinnes, wherein the devell his workes are manifest; but even all little ones, and these also which men may hold slender or light. Every sinne saith Gregorie, In Exec. lib 1. hom. 2. is heavy, because it withholdes the soule from ascending. To use idle speeches, saith Sixtus 3. De malis doctr. & oper. fidei, or to call a man a foole, seeme small and slender faults: but hee addeth: If hee be guilty of hell that doth but call his brother foole; what sin can then be not deserving hel, I leave the reader to judge. All sin, saith Gerson, De vita spirit. lect. 2. in that it is an offence to God, against his eternall Law, is in his own nature and indignitie, deadly, according to the rigour of justice, and severing a man from the life of glorie. Again. No offence is veniall in it selfe, but onely through Gods mercy, who will not impute all offences expressly unto death; when as in justice hee might so that it is enacted, that sinne mortall, and veniall in being so, are not intrinsecally and essentially distinguished, but only in respect of the divine mercie, which imputeth the one unto death, and not the other; and thus holdeth Rofferfis, In resp. articul. 32 Lutheri. That opinion, saith Bajus, professour of Lovaine, is not to be reprooved, which saith, that evel light sinnes, exclud ing Christs blood, in their own nature, barre us from heaven; this he proves by many texts of Scripture.

B

3 The Fathers call sinne veniall, not because it is so in it selfe, but because it is in the person of the righteous, unto whom is given remission of sin in Christ, through the grace of God. In this sense Bede, comment. in 1. Iohan. 5. saith: There are some small sinnes, which cannot take from the just, the merit of their justice, nor diminish it. Sin, saith Cyril, Catec. 2. is heavy to the retainer, and light to the rejecter: and Cassianus, Collat. 22. saith, that such sins are pardonable unto the righteous.

C

4 Also that was called a veniall sin, which had pardon in the censure of the Church: for greater sinnes were thought worthy excommunication, and for those was publike penance performed; but in these lighter, that is, veniall sinnes, it was not so; and hereupon is veniall, so often opposed unto criminall. There are some sinnes great and pernicious saith Tertullian, de pudicit. and other some that we daily runne into, and to which wee are so incident, that if they were not pardonable, no man could bee saved, but for these there is pardon in Christ the Mediatour. So August. epistol. 89. saith, There are some vicescalled crimes, and some, without which no man liveth. And Cæsarius, Homil. 1. sinne is either capitall, or small: Capitall, as murder, sacrilege, &c. And Bede in Psal. 3. opposeth veniall sinne unto criminall, taking criminall for that which the magistrate punisheth. Now this that the Fathers speake of sinnes after the manner and respect of men, the Schoole-men have transferred unto God, and so have set downe a kinde of sinne which needeth not Christs blood to purge it.

D

5 Thirdly, that is called a veniall sinne, which obtaineth pardon in the event & consequent, though it be mortall in it selfe. So Ambrose, lib. de parad. cap. 4. That fault is pardonable, which a confession of sinnes doth follow. There are some sinnes (saith the author; de vera & falsa pœnit. apud Aug. cap. 18.) that are in themselves mortall, but by repentance are made veniall. Now (saith August. de Civit. Dei. l. 21. c. 27.) since wee know not the measure of our veniall iniquitie (though it be time in us) surely we ought greater paines to profit in good, and bee more fervent in prayer. And the mortall sinne hereunto opposed, is the sinne that leadeth unto death; so saith Paulus, epist. 3. ad Sempronium: and Ffabiola In Ierom. capite 2. calleth those heavie sinnes, which draw man to destruction, and oppose such lighter sins thereto: so the author of the prayers in Prudentius at the end of his Hamartigenia, saith,

O Christ, repress from me all evil sinnes, &c.
Although (say) words and deeds be none should Not also the practice of Christ.

6 Lastly, sinne is called veniall, because it is excusable before men, through humane good will: so an officious lie is veniall. And August. Enchir. cap. 2. saith: Therefore it is veniall sinne, but veniall, which forgiveness is sought. And they are called veniall respectively in reverence to greater crimes. So Cassianus Collat. 22. saith of veniall sinnes, they become light and small unto men: and Sixtus: quædam malis dolor. & oper. fidei, they set some little and slender, and are esteemed as light: and this is in respect of the greater.

Images and Reliques.

1 THere was no use of images received at all in the primitive Church, but onely Symbolicall, and for ornament sake, and that in private places, for 380. yeares after Christ. Irenæus objected against the Gnosticks, lib. 1. c. 24. that first they had the image of Christ painted, then that they crowned it, and worshipped it. Looke also Augustine de hæres. 82. and Epiphanius, in hæres. 27. We worshippe no images, (saith Origen, Contra Celsum, libro 7.) for wee doe not binde our invisible and incorporall God unto any figure. So Arnobius, or rather Minutius Felix contra Gentes libro 8. What image shall wee make for God? whose true image, if wee judge according to truth, is man: and there hee bringeth in the heathen saying of us, Why, have they no altars, no temples, no knowne images? So Eusebius, Histor. Eccles. libro 7. capite 17. It was out of an heathenish custome, that the ancients did after this sort, honour those that they held to bee their saviours, (that is, with painted images.) Wee haue decreed, saith the Eliber. Councill, chapt. 36. that there should bee no pictures in the Church, lest that which wee worship and reuerence, should bee painted upon the walls. Epiphanius Epist. ad Ioann. Hierosolym. tore a hanging in peeces in the Church, because there was the image of a man painted thereupon, against testimonie of Scriptures. This iumble of his Interprete approveth, who translated the Epistle into Latine. Hereupon some of the Papists doe reprehend Epiphanius 1. Castro contra hæres. lib. 8. sicut imago, accuseth him of errour, though he cleare him of heresie: he had zeale, but not according to knowledge, saith Wendelin de sacramentis, tom. 3. capite 157. Others do reject the latter part of this Epistle as counterfeit, namely Damascene orat. de imagin. Alan. Cope, and Sanders, but without all proofe

A

B

C

D

of argument. But howsoever this Epistle is not cited in the Councell of Francford, Carolus libro quarto, 3. cap. They say Epiphanius did not reckon simply & worshippe unsought the Saints: it is false, he directly affirmeth, Hæres. 79. That is the devils invention to make pictures of men, and set them up to bee worshipped. And againe, Hæres. 20. speaking of the Collyridians, The fault is, they make them the images of Angels, and worshipped it: which they never (saith he) did. And amongst the Heresies of the Carpocratians, Prædo 25. he reckoneth up that also, to worshippe the Images of Christ, Paul, and Peter. 3. They object that of Gregorie the 3. Indict. 4. epist. 9. unto Leo Isaurus, that hee took down the images of the Saints: To whom brother what priest durst lift up any vile hand, or to cut one doe the least thou hast done. But I would have them shew that Saxonus did not alledge Epiphanius and other Fathers testimonies against images.

2 About 400. yeares after Christ, images beganne to get entrance, not onely into private places, but even also the Churches of the Christians: but the use of them was but historicall, as Augustine, De consensu Evangel. lib. 1. capite 10. Basil, Oratione in Sanct. Barlaam. Nissenus, Oratione in Theodorum, Prudentius, Hymno de Sanct. Cassiano, and Paulinus epistol. duodecim, doe testifie. For the bare and solitarie images of the Saints, or their single statues, were not erected uncill five hundred yeares after Christ, which Cassiodorus in Confess. de verse. contra. doth plainly and free ly confesse.

3 Superstition growing head, image-worship got foundation, yet never amongst the learned and godly, neither were images set forth for publike worship, until five hundred yeares after Christ. Gregorie libro nono Indict. quarto epistol. 9. denies that images are to bee worshipped. And Sigonius, De regno Italiæ lib. primo, affirmes, that they would entice the Virgin Adaries Image in solemne pompe, but hee makes no mention of any adoration of it, even until the yeare five hundred ninetie and one; about which time, some Councils approved the images that were then set up in Churches, but did not teach that they were to be worshipped, and if that this worship got roote any where before this time, it was not amongst the teachers, but amongst the superstitious people. Pope Sergius, saith Regino in Anno 622. in Saint Peters vestrie, found a great peece of the wood of Christs Crosse, which from that time forth, all the people upon the Exaltation day, doe kisse and adore, in the Cathedrall Church of Constantine.

4 This same image-worshippe was first established publikely in the yeare seaven hundred eighty eight, by the 2. Nicene Councell. (But on the contrary side, bare a little before, a Councell of Constantinople (wherein there were three hundred and thirteene Bishops held, vnder Constantine) condemned both the worship of images and Reliques. Ægidius Aniensis. Franciscus, The same did Leo Constantinus father, & Philippicus. Paulus Diaconus, & Sigebertus. And that Councell of Frankford, (whereas most present Charlemaine and the Germane legates) did condemne the second Nicene Councell at Antioch. The Catholikes falsely ſpeake, that Frankford abolished onely image worship, as heretofore by this Pope Adrian was condemned by all the Princes & Bishops of Britaine. Gabriel the French King (saith Edmundus continuator. Bedæ ad an. 792.) sent a booke of the Synode vnto Britaine, directed vnto him from Charlemaine: wherein (alas) were many things set downe quite contrary vnto your true faith, but chiefly in that was decreed by the vniforme consent of very neere all the Doctors of the Latin, 300 Bishops more in number, that images are to be worshipped: which the Church of God doth wholly detest, & execrate. Against which Adrian wrote an epistle wonderously confirmed by the holy Scriptures, and in the person of our Princes and Bishops, carried it with the same booke vnto the French King. Bellarmine Romano Pontif. 2. c. 29. confesseth, that the Council of Frankford disallowed the Councill of Nicea 4. but that (saith he) happened by reason of two errours in it. Because it thought that the Nicene Councell was called without the Popes authority: 2. Because in thought this Councill had decreed image worship to be Latria, that is, worship due to God. Now heare how hee is answered by Suarez. in 3. Thomæ quæst. 25. disputat. 54. I can hardly beleeve (saith he) that the Councill of Frankford could proceede against the Nicene Councell by errour of fact, for it was gathered a little before vnder the same Pope Adrian that confirmed it, whose legates were present at the Councill of Frankford (as the same authors doe confesse) how then can it be that all the Fathers of this whole Councill should bee ignorant of the doctrine and authority of this Nicene Councill, having the Popes owne Legate to instruct them in both? Now Cope in dialogis, Surius tom. 3. concil. and also Suarez loco prædicto, doe answer, that the Council of Frankford defends the honour of images: and that it reproueth the Councill of Constantinople, sometime by the Greekes called the Seauenth, which was assembled for abolishing of Images. So the Synod of Seuenth. cap. 14. saith, that Charlemaine the Synode of Frankford did ouerthrow the erronious madnesse of the Iconomachi. I answer, The Councill of Frankford keepeth a midway, reserving some honour for Images, (and so must Æneas Vico de gestis Francorum, libro 2. meane the end, be vnderstood, when he saith, that Images have their reverence reserved:) and therefore condemned the Councill of Constantinople) in the truely abolished them; and the Councill of Nicea, that on the contrarie did establish the adoration of them. In the Councill of Frankford, saith Plarinus in Adriano, not in the Synode which the Greekes call the seauenth (speaking of the Nicea) and also the heresie of Felix, concerning abolishing of Images, was there condemned. And Sigonius saith, Agobardus translated in Babylonia or Syria. And wee reade that Theodorus Studita and Nicon, Images called Deiformes. In Vita Ludo. Pio, the Idols (meaning Images which are in the Churches, glasses) painted & printed, are such like. So that I meane word Eikonas in the Greeke, is put for the Greeke word Eidolon: for where is in the Latine translation of the Psalme wee read Idola, Hebræa genimus, the Images of the Gentiles, the Greek saith Eikonas. And Hosee addeth, The name of an Image wee marke, the principle of the word, signifieth any impiously and diuelishly figure.

Ado also in Chron. ad an. 792. & Genebr

7. The Primitiue Church bore a certaine honour and reuerence vnto the Reliques of the dead Saints, keeping and carrying them from place to place, and flocking vnto them Hieron. contra Vigil. This honour began about 300. yeares after Christ, but they neither adored them nor bowed knee vnto them for 600. yeares. For the Fathers vsed to sweare vnder the altar, Augustinus lib. 10. epist. 85. Iubet si memoriæ, but the Papists now put them in glasses and gauderies, aboue the altar, and that to haue them adored. In elder times the reliques were buried in the earth, and in secret place. So Cyril contra Iulian. libro 10. Cyril the Hermite. In vita Euthymij, hee removed the body of this holy man vnto a Church hee had newly built, and laid it into a holy coffin, that should never after bee opened, and so saith Prudentius Peristephanon hymn. 3. of Eulalia.

The sacred bones and dust of her that sleepes;
Our mother earth in hallowed bosom keepes.

And a little after.

I loue to reuerence these bones of best:
And that same altar vnder which they rest.

And the multitude there present, saith Victor. De persecut. Vandal. lib. 3. being full of joy, caried the bodies of the holy Martyrs vnto carefull burial. So Constantine made him a bridle, and armed his helmet with the nailes that Christ was fastned to the crosse withall, Rossinus lib. 1. cap. 8.

8. As the places of these reliques (whilest the gift lasted) were sometimes miracles done, not by them, but by God to increase in vs an honour to the godlinesse of their owners, rather that wee should adore them, for in antiquitie, adoration was taken for humbling and prostrating the bodie.

The signe of the Crosse.

THe Fathers vsed to arme themselues against the diuell with the signe of the Crosse, and when they rebuked any such thing, or set vp the same figure, or bare it, they would shake all the diuels of hell out of the bones of the dead, that is, the deuils of Christ, which in solemne ceremonies vsed in stead of him the word to make vp their faith, ouercomes all euils: now the signe wherby Constantine was victor, is not the signe of the crosse, but the characters of the name of Christ, which was seene in many ancient coines of Constantine and other Christian Emperors, hitherto vnto Valentinian here expressed, together with the Greeke letters, Chi and Rho, Eusebius lib. 1. cap. 31. Nomisma lib. 3. capite 19. and Donatus in Constantino haue it, In hoc signo, that is, In hoc Deus signa, in this God, not this characteristicke is but required, saith Chrysostome, Hom. 45. in Matth. to make a bare crosse with thy finger in thy forehead, but with a strong faith in thy heart. So that the crosse doth not signifie the figure of the crosse, but the passion of Christ crucified, by a Metonymie. So saith Origenes Rom. lib. 5. And the power given vnto the signe of the crosse, are but rhetoricall formes, or when they call it an skar, it is a figurative speech borrowed from the ceremoniall law, and when they call it a ladder, it is a transcendent metaphore. And vnto all the sayings of the Fathers where they call the crosse their redemption, hope, and salvation, I answer in a word, the speeches are relatiues, all referred to Christs passion, or vnto himselfe in this figure represented. For it is ordinary amongst them, to put the continent for the thing contained.

2. The Crosse was never adored by the ancients, much lesse decored with diuine honours: they allowed it a certaine veneration, namely a reverent vse, vsing it in a civill manner of there faith, and with all expressing vnto the signe of their vnmoueable beliefe vpon Christ crucified, before the Gentiles, yea euen when they were threatned with torments. This manner of vse is not now amongst vs, because we are not now amongst the Gentiles. We neither worship crosses, (saith Augustine Contra Gentes. lib. 8.) nor yet detest them, Hebrus (saith Ambrose, De obitu Theodos.) finding the title, adored as the king. (Christ he meaneth) but now the wood, because that is an error of the heathen, & an vngodly vanity. But about the 400. yeare after Christ, the Crosse began by little and little to be adored, of some private men. So saith Prudentius in Apotheosi

But now the first adored
Of the Emperour in Christ his vowes is spread

Distinctio adorationis & veneration. Augustini. est de doctrina christ. lib. 3. c. 9. & Caroli M. lib contr. Concil. Nic. 1.

And by this mightie Prince the crosse is worshipped.

So saith Paulinus epist. 12. He (the Bishop of Hierusalem) every yeare at Easter set forth the crosse for the people to worship, being himselfe the chiefe of the worshippers. So Hieronie in his epitaph of Paula, saith, that she did prostrate her selfe in adoration before the crosse, as if she saw the Lord there hanging. And epist. 17. ad Marcellam he saith, Paula and Eustochium do wish that they might but have leave to licke the wood of the crosse. So the Aquileiense anno. 340. bringing forth the crosse, doe adore, and embrace it. Euagr. hist. eccle. lib. 4. cap. 25. But afterwards the 2. Councell of Nice. 2. Actio 3. defended that Christs Image was to be adored with divine worship.

3 The Transient or passing crosse, (that is, the crosse which they signed, or the signe of the crosse) was commonly used in the purer Churches, not the fixed crosse, that is, the crosse made of stone, wood, or metall, or yet, painted upon walles in churches or oratories for the first 400. yeares. The first altar, and the first crosse were set up in England by Oswald, in the field where he vanquished Cadwall, Ann. 635. Polychronic. lib. 5. cap. 12. Also in the consecration of the Sacraments the crosse was never called to use untill about the 400. yeare: for the first 300. yeares after Christ it was but held a signe of a mans outward profession, used in his ordinarie actions; but afterwards it was brought into the Lords supper, at first to signifie unto us the good we reape by Christ, Augest in Ioan. tract. 118. but afterward that by it the Sacrament might bee blessed and consecrated. But that Christ did consecrate the Eucharist on this manner, Avalarius utterly denyeth, De eccleasiast. offic. lib. 3. cap. 24. ascribing it unto Augustine. Besides the signe of the crosse for many ages at first, was but a simple and bare ceremonie in the sacrament, but afterward that rite being changed Anno 1000. it since hath bin alwaies used in an odde number. Microlog. cap. 14.

4 The ancient writers held the soule to be defended by the signe of the crosse either following Montanus, as Tertullian. De resurrect. carn. The bodie is signed, that the soule may be defended: or else doubtfully: I doe thinke (saith Augustine De peccat. merit. et remiss. libro 2. cap 26. that the Catechumenists are sanctified by the signe of Christ, and prayer, with imposition of hands, after some certaine manner. Where note the words, I thinke, and, after some certaine manner, for these shew that Augustine doubted of that ceremonie, and besides you see hee held not the sanctification to bee made by the crosse onely, but with prayer also.

5 As the signe of the crosse there have miracles bin done, because the name of Christ crucified was alwayes adjoyned, either in secret or expresse invocation, and then the Saints had a power to worke miracles; (Our faith (saith Tertullia. in Scorpiac. contra Gnostic.) is our defence, and if it be not stricken with distrust when we signe on this fashion, that is, by making this signe, we neither do good unto the hearbs, God giving us that power which the Apostle shewed when hee scorned the biting of the viper. And therefore we see these miracles, and casting out of devills, are not so bee ascribed unto the Crosse, but unto the faith of miracles and invocation of Christ. Howmuch this signe doth terrifie the devill, (saith Lactantius. De vera religione, libro quarto, capite 27.) hee may know, that seeth how when they are adjured by Christ, they were forced to flie from the bodies they had possessed. And a little after: Christ followers can cast out the same filthie spirits out of men, both by their masters name, and by the signe of his passion. This also (saith the same (saith Saint Augustine, De Sanctis sermon. 29.)

——this doth it together with the faithfull calling upon Christs name, namely, the famous memorie of the victorious crosse. Stand stoutly upon this signe (saith Cyrill. Catache. 13.) for where the devils see the Crosse, they remember the crucified. To speake in a word, the Fathers give not these wonderfull effects so much unto the signe of the crosse, as unto prayer and invocation of God. Looke in the writings of all these that are of antiquitie, and see whether this be true. Looke in Nazianzene unto Olympius, Origen against Celsus, libro tertio & octavo, Theodoret in his Peter and Thalassius: Eusebius in hist. Ecclesiastic. libro octavo, capite septimo: Sulpitius unto Eusebius the priest, Epistol. prima, the Author of the Dialogues, in Gregorie Dialog. libro primo, capite prim. Victor of the persecution by the Vandals, libro secundo: and Paulinus of the life of Saint Martin, libro secundo: all these will testifie my assertion. Nay the signe of the crosse, as the Fathers used it, was a certaine secret invocation of Christ crucified, so that it is a foolish and an idle forgerie, to say, that it had that efficacie ex opera operata, by the bare making of it, seeing it had all the power from invocation.

6 Those crosses that were used in the Church for the first 400. yeares, had no Image at all of Christ crucified upon them. This assertion cannot bee confuted by any approved testimonie of Antiquitie. And it seemeth that this image of the crucifixe did first grow in use publikely in or about the yeare of Grace 720. as it appeareth in the Councell held in Trullo. To the end that that which is perfected (saith this Synod, Canon. 82.) may bee represented unto publike view even in lively colours, wee command, that in stead of the old Lambe, the figure of that Lambe that taketh away the sinnes of the world, Christ our God in the likenesse, of a man be set up and erected in Images, from this time forward.

Churches

Churches for prayer.

1 THe Fathers acknowledge Churches as houses of prayer, but binde us nowise come to the Church alwaies when we pray.

2 And they name their churches after their Martyrs names, for distinction sake, onely appointing the worship unto God, and not unto them. Wee honour them (saith Augustine; de vera religione, capite 55.) out of charitie, not out of dutie or bond: neither build we any churches unto them. And Concil. Maximianum Arrian. libro primo, titulo undecimo: Should wee not be cursed and cast out from Christs truth and his Church, if wee should build any temple of timber and stones unto any Angell, although most excellent, because we should give that honour to a creature, which is due onely unto the Creator? If therefore wee should commit sacriledge in building a Temple unto any creature, how is not he the true God, unto whom wee build no temple, but are our selves the temple unto him? And here, as also often elsewhere, Augustine proveth the holy Ghost to bee God, because hee hath a temple. Which argument both Basill, Epistola 141. and Ambrose De Spiritu Sancto, libro tertio, capite 13. doe use.

3 The ancient consecration of the churches was with meere words and prayers, not with crossing, or such like rites. And dedication of churches began about the 300. yeare after Christ.

4 The Fathers of the first 300. yeares, never talke of adorning churches, but about Constantines time this errour got roote, and so custome bearing sway, the Fathers began to looke for ornaments for the church. Then first of all, saith Otho Frising. libro quarto, capite tertio, (in Constantines time) were publike Edicts given out for building of churches, that is, more stately roomes, or temples, for before they used holy houses to pray in.

Canonicall houres.

THE Fathers observed houres both diverslie and strictly: but that all should be bound unto this same & to so many houres, is a tyrannicall superstition. And Walfridus ecclesiastes reporteth, that it was a long time after the Apostles that these houres were instituted and ordained. Wee must know (saith he, De reb. eccl. cap. 25.) that there passed many ages after the revelation of the Gospell, before these houres were ordained to bee the solemnities of certaine houres in the day and night as they are now. And the first primitive Church had not seven canonicall houres: Neither Athanasius, Basill, nor Hierome do at any time mention the first houre: Cassianus indeed doth, saying it was ordained about his time. Driuill. Canon. lib. 3. capite 4. and so doth Soto hold also, de jure & justit. lib. 10. quæst. 5. articul. 1. Wherefore Baronius saith falsely, when he affirmeth that Chrysostome and Basill doe often mention the foure houres of the day. Besides, the Fathers doe prescribe houres for the night as well as for the day: And besides the canonicall houres, they set downe a night-service, and night-watches, as divers authors, viz. Amalarius, ecclesiast. offic. lib. 3. & 4. 2. ad cap. 11. Rupertus, De divin. offic. lib. 1. Beda 1. ad cap. 8. Radulphus, In Observ. can. prop. 14. Cassianus, lib. 2. cap. 4. the Councell of Nemba as it is cited Distin. 91. cap. Presbyter. Gregory in the decretals lib. tertio, tit. 41. cap. 1. De celebratione missarum. and Bede also lib. tertio in Esdram, capite 28. do testifie. You must rise twice or thrice a night, saith Hierome to Eustachium. But they will have the middest of the night especially observed, and namely, Athanasius De Virginit. Basil quæst. festiua explic. quæst 37. Hieronie, Ad Eustoch. de obit. Paulæ, and Hugo de Sancto Victor. in speculi eccles. cap. tertio, et de eccles. offic. lib. 2. cap. primo & 9. These the Church of Rome doth not now follow, for three daies before Easter the Priests doe sing the night service and laudes at even song, and all the three nocturnes are sung together by the whole quire.

Interception, invocation, and worship of Saints.

1 VNtill 200. yeares after Christ, the intercession of the dead, and there upon their invocation, was never heard of in the Church of God. Let any man give an instance to the contrarie.

2 Afterward, Origen for one, and others, with him, fell to dispute of the intercession of the Saints for us: but very doubtfull and inconstant was their doctrine hereof, untill foure hundred yeares were expired. Whether the Saints (saith Origen lib. 2. in Epist. ad Rom.) that are with God do any thing for us, and labour, —— let this also bee reckned amongst the secret and hidden mysteries of God, which may not bee committed to writing. And againe, Homily 3. in Cantic. speaking of these prayers, hee saith, though not peremptorily, As for those holy men which are departed out of this world, retaining as yet their love to those remaining here behind, it shall not be amisse to thinke of them, that they have a care of their welfare, and that they help them with their prayers. If also have any care (or understanding, νοῦν) of our labours, (saith Nazianzene unto Gorgonia soule soule, in Oratio. de laudibus Gorgoniæ. if it bee granted unto the divine soules to know and perceive things done here below, then receive thou my prayer: And in his first oration against Julian, he saith, Heare also O thou soule of Great Constantine, if thou have any sense, perceivance, or understanding [si vis audire] And in his oration upon Basill, he likewise saith, that Basills soule is in heaven and there offereth sacrifice as I suppose: [ut opinor] And in his Epitaph upon his father, he saith; He doth now more good with his intercession, then he did in all his life with his doctrine, as I doe perswade my selfe. And by and by he addeth: If it be not too bold a part to speake thus. So Hieronæ in Nepotianus his Epitaph. Whatsoever I say (quoth he) seemeth mute, because he heareth not: and yet a little after he saith, that he is amongst the quires of Angells. So Augustine in his booke of the care for the dead, cap. 16. leaves it undetermined whether the dead martyrs do helpe us or no, and addeth, that these things passe our understanding. And cap. 13. he proveth by Scripture, and namely out of Esay the 63. 16. that the Saints know not what is done here below. And in his comment upon the 108. Psalme, hee dares not grant that the dead doe know the paines and pleasures which happen unto their friends. The soules of the dead, saith the author of the booke de Spiritu & Anima, which is among Augustines workes, capite 29. are in a place where they neither heare nor see the things which doe here happen unto men in this life. Yet they have a care of those that live on earth, though they know not at all what they doe; even as we have a care over the dead, though not knowing what they doe. Although the Saints doe pray for us (as the Apostles did for her, meaning the woman of Canaan) yet shall wee be sooner heard when we pray for our selves, saith Theophilact, In Matthew, cap. 15.

3 Besides, the ancient writers doe commonly affirme that the soules of the faithfull are reserved in secret habitacles, (out of heaven) not enjoying the sight of God, untill the last judgement. So holdeth Irenæus libro quinto, in fine, Iustine Martyr quæst. 60. & quæst. 76. Origen homil. septim. in Levit. & lib. 2. peri archon. Chrysostome homil. 39. in 1 Cor. and 28. in Hebr. Theodoret in Hebr. 11. Theophylact, In Hebr. 11. Euthymius, In Luc. capite 16. and 23. Areas, In Apocal. capite 6. Victor, In Apocal. ibidem. Lactantius, libro 7. capite 21. Hilary, In Psal. 138. Prudentius, Hymno de exequiis defunctor. Ambrose de Cain libro secundo, cap. 2. & de bono mortis. Augustine, Retract. libro primo, capite 14. epistæ. 3. ad Fortunatian. Enchirid. capite 108. de Genesi ad literam, libro 12. capite 25. de civitate Dei libro duodecimo, cap. nono. & in Psal. 36. And Bernard also, Ser. de omnibus Sanct. versic. & Servus quare. Hereof must needs follow that the Fathers either doubted of the intercession of Saints, or else contradicted themselves.

And in the same manner it may bee concluded that so they held Limbus Patrum, Invocation of Saints, and the glasse of the Trinitie.

4 Intercession of Saints, whereof the Fathers for many ages doe commonly speake, is a generall intercession for the Church, not for this or that particular man: and this intercession our Church doth very willingly acknowledge. As for that particular intercession of particular Saints, for particular men, it was not so soone beleeved, but was first of all drawne out of dreames, and risted out of revelations. Eusebius in his historie, libro sexto, cap. 4. telleth, that Potamiena (as it was reported) three dayes after her martyrdome, appeared to Basilides in the night, setting a crowne upon his head, and telling him that shee prained unto the Lord for him. And one Apollo in a revelation saw one of his dead brethren making intercession for him: this is recorded by Palladius, in Histor. Patrum cap. 52.

5 The Fathers teach that the Saints doe make intercession for us not onely openly, by prayer, but also mystically, namely by meriting. The merits of the mother, saith Anselme libro De excellentia Mariæ, doe make intercession to obtaine her audience. That which we cannot bring to passe by our owne power, saith Ivo, epist. 119. wee heare may bee obtained by the merits of the blessed and perpetuall Virgin. Beleeve (saith Bernc. Augiensis. Serm. secundo de S. Marco) that whatsoever you pray for by Saint Markes merits, you shall obtaine it. So the author of the epistle unto Paula and Eustochium in Hieronmes workes of the assumption of Mary, saith thus of Mary: Let her commend us, with her merits, and ayd, and assist us with her prayers, that wee also may bee found worthy in her commendations. The Saints (saith the Master of the sentences, libro quarto, distinctio: 45. liter. G.) doe make intercession for us, both in their merits and in their affections. Yea the Fathers sometimes give but too much unto the Intercession of the Saints. So saith Severus Sulpitius of Saint Martin, epistola secunda, that that was his onely and his last hope, that what he could not possibly obtaine by himselfe, he should merit and deserve it by Martins intercession. We trust and beleeve (saith Leo, Serm. 1. in natal. Petr. & Paul) —that to obtaine God's mercy, wee must have continuall aide and assistance by the prayers of our especiall patrons, that how much our owne sinnes doe weigh us downe, so much the Apostles merits may lift and raise us up againe. I trust (saith Prosper, lib. De promiss. & prædictionis Dei) to bee purely cleansed from all my sinnes by the prayers of the Saints. So Gregory of Tertwin. Lib. quarto vitæ Sancti Martini in Prolog. saith, that the Saints by their intercession doe procure the everlasting punishments to be extinguished, and the languor of our offences to be cured. And in the Fathers we shall finde the Saints our immediate intercessours tercessours with God. For so Adrian the first, Epist. ad Constant. & Irenen. saith that the Images of the Saints are to bee worshipped. Because it is certaine, that they are the servants of God, and doe continually offer up their prayers and intercession unto the Deitie for us, that doe honour them here below.

6 There can bee no Invocation of the dead proved, to have beene in the Church from Christ unto 350. yeares after. For in all the Workes of the Fathers, that wrote within this time, no man is able to shew any one plaine and plaine commandement or precept, nor any linceere example for Invocation of Saints.

7 This Invocation beganne first to bee brought into use in the Catholike Church, about the yeare of Grace 380. arising out of a custome of the vulgar sort, and some mens private devotions. For the Fathers of these times do well know the Saints were invocated, but doe not teach that they are to be invocated. Nay in their more serious disputations and Sermons they doe reprehend the Invocation of the Saints. All your vowes, all prayers, all interpellations, and all our thanke-givings (saith Origen against Celsus, libro octavo) are to be dedicated unto God the Lord of all things, by and through that high Priest, greater then all Angels, the Living Word, and God. And againe: This will restraine all men from offering or daring to offer any prayer unto any person, but onely unto the Lord God, who onely is all-sufficient unto all, through the Saviour the Sonne of God. So Athanasius against the Arians, Sermone tertio, proveth Christ Iesus to bee God, because he is called upon, for a creature ought not to be worshipped. And Epiphanius, Hæres. 79. giveth a tolerable reason unto Marie, but denieth her Invocation and adoration. And Ambrose in Commentar. in Romans, plainly affirmeth, that hee thinketh them fooles, that doe adore and worship their fellow-servants. And Basil in Psalm. septimum: As it is meete and fit we should worship no thing but God, so ought we not to fasten our hopes upon any but upon God. As for Hieromes, hee doth not so much as in one place helpe to build up this Invocation of Saints, but rather the contrarie. For writing against Vigilantius, in Epistola ad Riparium, he plainly averreth: Wee doe not worship nor adore, I doe not say the Reliques of the Martyrs, but neither the Sunne nor the Moone, no nor the Angels, least we should be thought to serve the creature rather then the Creator. We neither sweare (saith Cyrill, Contra Julian. libro 6.) that the Martyrs are Gods, neither have we accustomed our selves to adore them. And Thesaur. libro secundo, capite primo. There is no man that knoweth not that the Scriptures detest adoration unto every creature saving God, and therefore we doe not adore Saints, and much lesse Angels, for they in their true Writings doe not their use nor defend this Invocation, but rather disalloweth it. As for example, in his Homily, De profectu Evangelij. But thou needest not any patrone before God (saith hee) nor with long discourse to curry favour with others: but though thou dost come alone, without ever a pardon, and offer thy prayers unto God by thy selfe, yet shalt thou obtaine thy petition: for God doth not consent unto our request so easily, when others pray for us, as when we pray for our selves, though we be full fraught with manifold evills. Let not our religion (saith Augustine, De vera Religione capite 55.) be to worship the dead: wee are to honour them for imitation sake, but not to worship them for religion sake. And De civit. Dei libro, 22. capite 10. hee saith; We doe not build temples unto our Martyrs, as unto Gods; But we set up memorialls for them, as for men departed, whilste soules doe live in rest with God. Nor doe wee set up any altars to sacrifice unto them, but we offer our sacrifice unto one only God, both theirs and ours; At which sacrifice they are named in their order, as men of God, who have conquered the world by confessing of him, but they are not invocated of the Priest that sacrificeth. De civitate dei lib. 8. cap. 27. Those that defended the law, saith Theodoret in cap. 2. ad Coloss. drew on the people unto the worship of Angells also, saying that the law was given by them. And this vice remained very long in Phrygia & Pisidia, Wherefore the Synod which met at Laodicea, the Metropolitan citie of Phrygia, did by a decree prohibit all men from praying unto Angels: And unto this day there are Oratories of Saint Michael to be seene amongst them and in their borders. And hereunto they did advise men out of their (exceeding) humilitie, alledging that the God of all things is both invisible and incomprehensible, and that none can come unto him, and therefore that they must use the helpe of the Angells to obtaine the favour of God by them. So Augustine Confessionum lib. 10. cap. 42. speaking unto God, saith; Whom shall I finde that can reconcile me unto my God? shall I make mediation unto the Angells? by what prayers? or what sacraments? Looke also the same Father in his booke De Morib. Eccles. Capite 31. [illegible]

8 The Invocation which was vsed in these times, was properly a Dialogue or conference, as with those that were present: whose they were present, (either by the meditation (as who should say) I will commune with such an one, or by their apparition, (as I suppose) for Medes was continually held near the Master) his fellowes were also present, and the whole Church Militant (which they believed (though not see) every where). For the booke above mentioned, that Basill and Nazianzene (as also other Fathers (having occasion given them in their funerall orations) did use in their conclusions, not invented their friends deadparred, but) as orators use to doe, speake unto them by a figure called Prosopopeia (a faining of a person where none is) as though they were present; and make some wishes, but no prayers unto them: as when wee Englishmen playing at bowles, doe in our play bid one bowle runne, or rubbe, &c. So speaketh Nazianzen unto the Passeover. O great and holy Passeover, expiation or cleanser of the whole world, for I talke with thee as with a living creature, &c. And Invect. 1. in Julianum, Heare O thou soule of Great Constantine, or rather Constantius, for Constantine died when Julian was about three yeares old. Jacobi Bil. annot. 2. in hanc Orat. if thou have any sense: and a little after; What is this, O thou most divine Emperour? For I am forced to expostulate with him, as if hee were here present, and heard me, though indeed he be with God. And in his second Invective hee calleth unto Julian being dead and damned in hell. And after this manner Dionysius Areopagita Hierarch. eccle. cap. 3. part. 5. or the author of that worke under his name, hath a rhetoricall exclamation unto Christ being represented in the bread. And Victor in his booke of the Vandall persecution, speaketh unto the Patriarches, Prophers, and Apostles: And Hierom in his epitaph of Paula saith: Farewell O Paula, and by thy prayers helpe the decrepite age of him that doth honour thee: In which words there is no invocation, but an apostrophe whereby he speaketh unto her being dead, as though shee were present with him. And the same Father in Hilarions life, saith thus of Constantia: Shee was wont to watch whole nights in his sepulcher, and speake to him as if hee were present, to further her prayers. And Nyssenus likewise, Oration in S. Theodorum. Those that beholding——saith he, doe embrace——as though the body were living and flourishing, using the eyes eares, mouth, and instruments of all the senses: And these powring out the teares of love and duty unto the Martyr, as though he were living and present, they offer up their humble prayers unto him, to bee an intercessour for them, intreating him as a souldiour of God, and calling upon him as one that obtaineth when he pleaseth. So Chrysostom: Orat. in Babylam. If any man, saith he, doe but stand by these sepulchers,——the very sight of the coffin invading his soule, doth penetrate it, and stirreth it up, moving therein such an affect, that hee deemeth them that lie there in buried, to be visibly present with him, and offering their prayers together with him. Now that it was commonly believed, that the Martyrs soules were still present at their sepulchers, or where they would, Hieronymus reprehension of Vigilantius (who denied this) doth plainly testifie. Thus saith Hieronymus contra Vigilan. cap. 2. doe we affirme that the soules of the Apostles and Martyrs are placed either in Abrahams bosome, or the places of repose, or under Gods altar, and that they cannot bee present at their tombes, and where themselves please: and he answereth him thus: If the Lambe bee every where, then those that are with the Lambe must be believed to be every where. And seeing the devils and evill spirits do wander all over the world, and through their too great celeritie are every where present, is it like that the Martyrs after the shedding of their blood should bee shut up in their coffins, and not be able to get out thereof? So Maximus Taurinensis In natal. Martyr. Taurinorum, saith: All the Saints are every where, and assist all men——and are alwaies with us, and stay still with us: that is, do both keepe and defend us while we are in our bodies, and also doe receive and entertaine us when we leave our bodies. And the like saying hath Severus Sulpitius of S. Martin epist. 2. Hee is present (saith he) with all that talke of him, and standeth by them all. But that this is very boldly affirmed, and weakely concluded, who seeth not? Though for excuse sake wee may say that these Writers used ubiq; for Passim, or ubilibet.

parted

9 The Fathers in their praiers and communion accustomed to recite the names of the Martyrs and other Saints, desiring God withall to grant them this or that by their intreaties or intercessions. When we offer this sacrifice (saith Cyril. Catechis. 5.) wee make mention of them that are departed before us, that God may receive our prayers by their intercession. Therefore at the Communion, saith Augustine in Ioan. tract. 84. wee mention not them as we doe the others that rest in peace, or that wee should pray for them, but rather that they may pray for us. And such are the commemorations of the Saints in the Liturgies that are named after Iames, Basil, Chrysostome, or that of the Church of Rome. But these publike prayers, (as also many other private ones) were but certaine vowes and desires, that the prayers which they believed the Saints did offer up for the whole Church, might bee beneficiall unto them before God, as George Cassander did verie well observe. Such also is the vowe of Prudentius in lib. peri stephon, in fine hymni. 10. concerning the punishment of Romanus the Martyr.

Would I might chance amongst the Goates to stand,
And bee disceru'd by all on the right hand;
And that at his intreate the King should say,
Romanus kneeles, bring me that Kidde away:
Be he a Lambe, and cloathed with my woell, &c.

10 The Fathers, especially those after the 400 yeares, have erred in the Invocation of Saints, yea are guilty even of sacrilege, for they doe sometimes put their faith, hope, and trust in them. So erred Paulinus speaking unto Felix In natal. 3.

Obteine, that God would pardon us our sinne
By thy soft prayers, and merits.——
And againe, In natali 6.
Lifting his soule to heaven, and comforted
With faith, he hopes he hath already sped,
And to Saint Felix carries with best use
His vowes, &c.
And a little after,
The God hath made for wearied soules a
Ease for the grieved, and place for hearts apt.
Rest.
And in another place In natali 8.
Let us give this patrone hee,
Together with hope unto us left.
—— We pray thee Felix be
Our right hand still, and tower of safety.
And so saith Fortunatus of Martin, in his life, lib. 2.
Reverend them I with heart and voyce adore,
Helpe me poore wretch, it's mercy I implore.
And presently after:
O blessed Mediatour be
Betweene my grieved Lord and me.

And so Leo. Ser. 1. de nat. Petr. & Paul. c. 7. saith, that look how much our own sinnes do cast us downe, so much the Apostles merits doe raise us up. And Gregor. hom. 32. in Evang. Make these the protectours of you in your guilt, saith he, libro. 22. epistol. 21. Wee hope in the vertue of Almighty God, and of Peter the prince of the Apostles. So Ephrem, Fulgentius, and Damianus doe all exceede all meane in the prayses of the blessed Virgin. Hee hath magnified thee (saith Damianus, de nativ. Mariæ. Sermo. 2.) that is mightie, and unto thee is given all power in heaven and earth, and nothing is impossible unto thee to whom it is possible to elevate those that are desperate, unto hope of blessednesse. For how can that power hinder thy power, which tooke flesh of thy flesh? For thou commest unto that Golden altar of mans reconciliation, not onely as king, but even commanding; not as a servant, but as a Lady, and mistresse. And sometime they sticke not to say, that they doe know all things: as Paulinus, natal. 6.

Thou knowest their mansions that in Christ is light.
Seest all, though hidde and absent from thy sight.
And in that knowing God, thou'rt every thing wright.

So likewise he saith Prosper de vita contempl. libro 1. capite 4. No Secrets (saith he) shall be hidde from the perfect, who are to see God himselfe, which is better then all these, with their pure hearts.

11 The use of invocation which in elder times had beene but private mens custome, about the 500 yeare began to become publike: for then beganne Petrus Gnapheus to shuffle the invocation of Saints amongst the prayers of the Church: for it is called his invention to name the virgin Mary, and to increase her divine name in every prayer. Nicephor. Hist. 15. capite 8. And about the 600. yeare, Gregory the great commanded a Lacry to be publikely sung, wherein all the Saints were invocated. So that the commemoration of the Saints waxt thus at once into invocation.

12 This opinion of Invocation of Saints had a large part of the originall from dreames, visions, doubtfull and uncertaine revelations, yea and was most of all confirmed by such meanes. It fell out, saith Sigonius, De reg. Ital. libro. 1. that which way soever the Image (of the Virgin Mary) was carried, the mortall pestilence of the ayre did depart, & good health followed, for which blessing all men giving thankes, an Angell was heard out of heaven, speaking unto the blessed Virgin, in these words: Rejoyce O Queene of heaven, alleluiah; because thee whom thou deservest to beare alleluiah, is risen againe according to his word, alleluiah: which speech, when Gregorie heard, being forth with inspired by the holy Ghost, hee thus concluded it: pray for us unto God, alleluiah, ad ann. 594. So one Conradus a Germane, penitent for his sinnes, comming unto Rome, Hildebrand then Pope, commaunded him to weare a coate of mayle in stead of his shirt, and fastened it with five chaines: giving him sealed letters, containing the catalogue of his sinnes, and commanding him to goe visit all the holy places of the earth, to try if hee could obtaine any pardon or remission for his sinnes. ——When hee had continued in prayer from the first howre of the day, untill the ninth, (at Saint Stevens the kings tombe in Hungary) falling into a dead sleepe before the altar, the holy king appeareth unto him. Arise my friend (quoth hee) thou shalt obtaine no pardon of God by any merits or hope of mine, but goe unto my son Emerikes tombe, which is here hard by, and hee by his virginity hath deserved chiefe favour with God. Hee awaking out of his dreame, invocateth the name of that Saint, & sweet'er then thought, his chains wherewith hee was bound, burst all in peeces his letters opened of themselves (the seale being broken up) wherin there was not one sinne, no not one letter to be read or seene. And from that time forward, that chappell was had in such reverence, that men came unto it from the farthest countries, Bonfinius lib. 1. decad. 2.

13 The power of Canonizing was never heard of with the Hebrews, untill the yeare 880 and then Adrian took up this authority. And Alexander the third after him confirmed it in his decrees, cap. 2. Extra. de reliquijs Sanctorum.

14 The distinction of religious worship into Dulia (saint-worship) and Latria, (God-worship) the Apostles never knew, nor the Greeke Fathers, nor the Latines for at least 400. yeares after Christ. For the Scripture in divers places ascribeth Latria (in the greek translation) unto men: Deut. 28.48. Lenit. 23. 8. and in other places Dulia is attributed unto God, Rvth. 16.18. So Augustine granteth Latria unto men, de civit. Dei, lib. 10. cap. 2. and denieth them religious Dulia. de vera rell. c. 55. We honour the Saints (saith he) with charity, not with service, that is Dulia. And here observe first, that Augustine denies Dulia unto Saints. And quæst. 94. in Exod. hee giveth both Latria & Dulia unto God, Latria as to God, Dulia as to the Lord. Secondly, by Latria and Dulia he distinguisheth religious worship from civill: de civit. Dei, lib. 10. c. 1. & 4. Thirdly, Latria is alwaies used in the Scriptures for service, as he affirmeth, much lesse that it should bee any thing more then Dulia, de civit. Dei. l. 5. c. 15. & l. 6. c. 1. & l. 7. c. 32. & l. 10. c. 1. & 4. Indeed Dulia politica, that is, service used in a civill state, was alwaies received, and so ought to be still by all men, Gal. 5. 13. But that Dulia which is higher then civill worship, was not given to men for 400. yeares after Christ. And no wonder: for Douleia is commonly a greater thing, and used for servitude without any wages, because he that serveth is in another's power. But Suidas (saith Καρπίων Σκολιὸν ἐν τῷ Ξ:) that the word Latria signifieth a service for hyre. Hereupō Perefius de trad part. 1. confid. 7. disproveth the name Dulia being taken for saint worship, because he will have it given unto God, not unto men, as they are Gods servants: unlesse you take the name of service metaphorically and not properly. So Laurence Valla, and Lodwicke Vives, In August. de civ. Dei, libro. 10 capite 1. doe both take Latria and Dulia for one thing, and in one sense. Wherefore this distinction was invented by men of the later ages, which indeede Bellarmine doth acknowledge. How bee it, it is in Bede upon Luke, in cap. 4. and in Lombard, and all his followers, in Sentent lib. 3. dist. 9.

15 That Christs Image is to be worshipped with Latria, is denyed by many. As by Henricus, Quodlibet. 1 q. 6. (who saith it must be worshipped but with hyperdulia:) Albertus Magnus, In Marial cap. 81. Francis Maira, in 3. sent. distinct. 9. Gabriel, lect. 49 in Canonem, and Perefius in his booke de traditionibus part. 3. The second Nicene Councill, Actione 6. 3. giveth worship unto Images, but denieth them Latria: and this Latria was not given unto Christs Image for 1000. yeares after him. This doth Catharinus freely confesse in his booke de Imaginum cultu, where also hee affirmes, that Thomas never read that councill of Nice.

16 The Glasse (or Idea) of the Trinitie wherein the Saints are said to see our prayers, is a meere fiction, unknowne unto the Fathers for the space of many ages after Christ. Augustine in his booke of the care for the dead, cap. 13. affirmeth, that the soules of the departed never know what we doe here upon earth, and doth bring for proofe thereof that of Esay the 63. 16. Abraham hath not known us: and that of the King. 2. King. 22. 20. I will gather thee to thy Fathers, —— that thine eye see not the destruction which I will bring upon this place. And the Fathers of the first foure ages after Christ, did commonly affirme, that the Saints were present with those that called upon them, and therefore heard them: yet was not this opinion approved of all the latter writers, for some of them doe deny, that the soules of the godly doe know our prayer in the word, or divine essence, as Durandus distinct. 39. quæst. 3. Soto ibid. quæst. 3 art. 3. con. 8. & Caietane, In Thomæ 3. part. quæst. 10. art. 2. but onely in their proper kinde by particular revelations.

17 The worshippe given unto the Saints, whereof the Fathers commonly speake, was a worshippe, of love, society, veneration, and honouring of them, in imitation, gratulation, esteeme, praise, and holy remembrance of them, belonging unto the second table: and not any religious worship or adoration: because that at first they were not worshipped with Churches, oblations, nor appointed service, as they were afterwards, and are at this day in the Church of Rome. This doth Augustine testifie in three severall places, viz. In Psal. 88. De civit. Dei. 8. cap. 27. Contra Faust. libro. 20. capite 4. & 21. and Eusebius likewise affirmes it, Hist. libro 4. capite 15. And Alexander Ales. 9. 92. membr. 1. art. 4. disputeth, that God alone is simply to be called upon; and the Saints are rather of the number of those that pray continually, then of him that is prayed unto: and this did Cassander very well observe in him, In consultatione super art. controvers. artic. 21.

18 The vowes which now adaies are made unto the Saints, were altogether unknowne till Lombard his time: for he doth define a vowe, dist. 38. lit. A. to be a certaine testifying of a voluntary promise, which ought properly to bee made concerning God, and the things that belong unto God.

Prayers for the dead.

1 BEfore 170. yeares after Christ there were no memories of Martyrs kept in Churches: nor any prayers, offerings, or sacrifices for the dead, until 200. yeares after the passiō. The first mention of them is in Tertullian, and they had their beginning from tradition, as he affirmeth in his booke de coron. militis cap. 3: Of these and other orders (saith hee) if you require the reasons, you shall finde no Scripture for them, tradition will be pretended, for the increase, custome for the confirmer, and faith for the keeper hereof.

2 The Fathers of the first 400. yeares were of opinion, that we must pray for all the dead, even for the faithlesse & the damned: yet are they uncertaine whether the dead may bee helped any thing by our prayers and almes-deedes, or no: and if in any place they set downe any certaintie hereof, yet not in that sense the Papists now doe hold it.

The Sacrifices (saith August. Enchir. 110) eyther of the Altar, or of almes-deeds, are propitiations for the dead which were not very wicked: and for the very wicked, they are meanes (saith hee doubtfully) to make their damnation the more tolerable.

And so holdeth Prudentius, lib. Cathemerinon, in hymno 5. ad incen: um cerei paschi.

Yearly that night, wherein our Lord arose
From the Acherontike lake, the cage of woes,
The torments of th' afflicted Ghosts doe stay,
And all the damned crue keepe holy-day.

And a little after:

Then hell doth slumber in soft punishment:
And all the soules in that waste prison pent,
Rejoyce in rest: the fire then hurts not sore,
Nor boyle the floods with sulphure, as before.

Of these prayers Chrysostome speaketh very doubtfully, Hom. 3. in Philip. Say, I pray thee, (quoth he) what hope can remaine for them that goe from hence burdened with their sins, unto a place where they cannot bee disburdened of them? for whilest they were in this world, there was still hope and expectation that they would be converted, and become better men. —— Let us help them so farre as wee may; let us procure them some ease, (though it can be but little) yet let us helpe them somewhat: —— this yet affordeth some comfort unto them. And afterward he will have us to pray for all the dead, as we do for all the living, for theeves and robbers, because perhaps there may bee some conversion of them. And in this manner doubteth hee in divers places, viz. Hom. 69. ad pop. Antioch. & 70. Againe, Hom. 21. in Act. If we doe offer (saith he) continuall prayers, and give continuall almes for him, though hee be unworthy of them, yet God will bee more pacified towards us. — And Hom. 32. in Matt. Vnto thy dead sonne give his due, that therewith he may cleanse away his spots of sinne from him. So Epiphanius Hæref. 75. confesseth these prayers to have no foundation in Gods word, but onely are appointed by the Church to be made, and that they doe benefit the dead, although they doe not take away the guilt of the whole fault. Dionysius, Orbi, de Ecclesiastica disciplina, bringeth in certaine examples, to prove that the prayers of the faithfull doe in some part helpe the unfaithfull, and such as are damned unto everlasting torments. And yet in the same place, speaking of the opinion, whether the soules of the Christians may by almes-deedes be released of their paines, as also the freeing of the ungodly due of hell, he saith thus: But we define or determine nothing, onely we reason of it in brotherly love. And a little after; Then is there no time to seeke helpe for every man shall beare his owne burden: but now is the time of aid; now is the time of mercy, now is the time of reconciliation.

Augustine de cura pro mort. c. 5. is uncertaine whether prayers for the dead are of any efficacie or no: and if he beleeved that his soule was helped by the Martyrs merits, this beleefe was a kinde of supplication, and helped him the way, if he had any help any way. And cap. 1. he affirmeth these prayers to be according unto the use of the Church. After the same manner he doubteth also in other places, de Civit. 21. 27. & And truly it is very likely that this kinde of prayer had his first spring from the Montanists, the inventors of Purgatory. Looke Tertullian in his booke de castitate & monogamia. But there were some that disallowed of these prayers, as Gratian can testifie, c. 13. q. 2. cap. In præsent. in one place citing Hierome in Gal. 6. saying thus: In this life we may help one another by prayers, or by good counsell: but when we come before the judgement seat of Christ, then neyther Iob, Daniel, nor Noah can speake for any man, but every man must carry his owne burthen. And Petrus Cluniacensis, l. 1. ad Petrobrus. confesseth plainly, that there have beene some Catholikes that have doubted of this praying for the dead. And so Augustine saith, Ser. 17. de verb. Apost. He injureth a Martyr, that prayeth for him.

3 The prayers for the dead in their first beginning were but thanksgivings and praises, wherein the Martyrs names were yearely rehearsed. So Cyprian speaking of Martyrs, Epist. 5. lib. 4. saith, We offer continuall sacrifice for them. And Epiphanius hæref. 75. contra Aerium, Let us solemnize the memories of all the just, the Prophets, Patriarkes, Apostles, Euangelists, Martyrs, Confessours, and Bishops: whom a little before hee affirmed to live with God. And in like manner saith Chrysostome Homil. 12. in Act. It is offered for the Martyrs, and for all the faithfull departed.

4 The Fathers prayed for the dead, not that they might have remission of their sins, as touching the temporall paines of Purgatory (for they prayed for all the dead in generall without exception, as Cyril testifies, c. 9. Myst.) wherefore their prayers were made for oth[er] ends, and namely, 1. to shew their zeale unto them, & their desire to commend them unto God. So doth Ambrose concerning his brother Satyrus, in oratione funebri: unto thee, (O Almighty God) do I commend his innocent soule, unto thee I doe offer my sacrifice: Graciously and favourably accept of a brothers gift and a priests sacrifice. Now lest we should suppose him to be in Purgatory, he had said before, He is entred into heaven, because hee believed on the word of God. And likewise upon the death of Valentinian, he saith, No day shall be passed by me in silence of you, no speech of mine shall passe without your honourable mention, no night shall bee spent without some prayer of mine bestowed upon you, and in all mine oblations shall I remember you often. But he had said before, Let us beleeve that he is gone up out of the desert, that is, out of this barren and evill tilled earth, unto those sweete and pleasant delights where being adjoyned unto his brothers company, he liveth in eternall felicity. As also of Theodosius hee saith thus, Theodosius liveth in the light, and gloryeth in the armies of the Saints. And yet before he had prayed for him also in these words: Graunt that consummate repose unto thy servant, Theodosius, that rest which thou hast prepared for all thy Saints. And in like manner Augustine beeing about to pray for his mother Monica, Conf. libro 9. capite 13. saith, I beleeve O Lord that thou hast already fulfilled my request: but Lord approove my voluntary petitions. So Matthew of Westminster saith, that Charles about the yeare 797. wrote unto Offa king of Mercia, to commaund his subjects to make intercession for Pope Adrian: yet he addeth, having no doubt that his soule is in rest, but onely to shew our most deare love and affection unto him. 2. The Fathers prayed for the dead, to cherish the hope of the resurrection & the desire of hastening it on. So Ambrose orat. de Valen. saith, Wee pray thee Almighty God to raise up these two yong men (Valentinian and Gratian) with a timely resurrection, and recompence their untimely course of this life, with as timely a resurrection. 3. They pray for them, that their glory doe increase untill the day of judgement, and that then their sinnes bee not imputed unto them, So sayth Chrysostome, hom. 32. in Matt. Dost thou thinke he departed in the corruption of sinne? Give him his own wherewith he may cleanse himselfe from the blots thereof. Dost thou thinke he departed in the purity of righteousnesse? Give him of thine, that his reward and payment may bee the more ample. And the Fathers used to offer their prayers in this manner: Graunt we beseech thee (O Lord) that this offering may benefit the soule of blessed Leo. Witnesse Innocentius the third, in his decretals, cap. Cum Marthæ, extra de celeb. miss. 4. They pray for them that their damnation might be the more tolerable. So saith Aug. in his Enchiridion, c. 110. & 112. They may thinke (if this please them), that the paines of the damned soules at some certaine times are somewhat mitigated: even so, that we must still understand, that the wrath of God, that is, their damnation, remaineth still unto them. In this sense Paulinus, epist. 19. prayes for ease for a soule that was tormented in hell: and no marvell, since Prudentius lib. Cathemerin. hymno 9. de Pasch. (before him) durst affirme that at such and such times

1

A

The torments of th'afflicted Ghosts doe stay,
And all the damned crue keepes holy day.

B

Damascene affirmeth, Orat. de defunct. that Trajan and Falconella were delivered out of hell by the prayers of Gregory and Tecla. Wherefore these prayers were properly the vowes of such as wished them happinesse, or else they were thanksgivings: and in these the Fathers regarded the fulnesse or end of the time, not the middest of it: for they beleeved all the Saints to be kept in one common place of custody untill the last judgement, & therefore they wished the region of light and peace unto all good men. And albeit they thought the dead to be helped by the prayers of the living, yet they held not this benefit to fall unto them being in Purgatory, rather then in heaven or hell. 5. Their prayer for the dead was an admonition unto the living, of the goodnesse of God unto the dead, and of the future reward which they should obtain in following their vertues. So saith the author of the booke called Hierarchia Ecclesiastica, c. 7. And therefore the Fathers prayed for the dead for other ends, then the Papists now adaies doe.

C

5

5 Offrings for the dead at the first were not sacrifices of expiation, but only Eucharisticall, that is, thanksgivings, or banquets, and gifts and legacies of the dead unto the poore, given as almes, and as we here in England cal them Doales: as also they were foundings of Churches and schooles, or yearely annuities bequeathed unto either of them.

D

When we celebrate the memory of the Saints (saith Ephrem, lib. de pœn cap. 2.) if it bee the true Ephrem whole book we have. Let us remember the sicke, the widowes, the Fatherlesse, the poore, and the travellers. And hereupon after the death of any one in the primitive Church, they sung allelujah. The breath was no sooner out of her mouth (saith Hierome in his Epitaph of Fabiola) but the report of it gathered the whole city together unto her funerall; —— the Psalmes sounded and the allelujah resounding aloft, did shake the guilded roofes of the temple.

So Epiphanius, Hæref. 75. and Chrysostome, Ad popul. Antioch. hom. 70. & hom. 4. in Heb. affirme, that they used to carry lamps and tapers, and sing hymnes at the funerals of the dead, dead, to signifie glory and prayse unto God, that had vouchsafed already to crowne the soule departed with felicity. Of this nature also was their offerings at marriages, at birth dayes, &c. being all instituted for memories and gratulations, though afterward about Gregories time, when superstition got head, they were all changed into redemptions of soules out of Purgatory.

Therefore Prayers for the dead, that they might bee freed from their venial sinnes; and from that temporall punishment for their mortall sinnes, which they are to endure in Purgatorie, were never taught nor admitted by the Fathers.

Justification.

1 AGustine, and the rest of the Fathers that dispute against Pelagius, doe take Justice for an inherent qualitie, or new obedience, & Grace for the assistance of the holy Spirit: and to justifie, for to make one from unjust, just. But indeed they hold with us, that this new obedience is not in this life perfected, and that we dos satisfie Gods judgements, and attaine unto everlasting life onely by the sole obedience of the death of Christ. Ex eorum expositionibus upon 2. Corinth. 5. capite quinto vers. 21. For so saith Augustine, De verbis Apostoli rom. Ser. sexto. —— That we may bee Gods righteousnesse in him: marke here two things: Gods righteousnesse, and not ours: and that in him, and not in us. And in his booke, De Spirit. & liter. cap. 26. Justification beholdeth not to the deeds of the law, but goes before them that fulfill it. Or els it is so said, they shall be justified, as if it were, said, they shall be taken for just, or accounted just. And de fide & operibus c. 14. Epist. 120. cap. 30. Good workes do follow him that is justified, and not goe before him that is to be justified. And againe, expositionat. epist. ad Romanos: Men being justified by beleefe, doe thenceforth begine to live righteously. So Hierome like wise, 1. Corinthians 5. saith: So Christ was offered for our sinnes taking upon him the name of sinne; that wee might bee made the righteousnesse of God in him, not our owne, nor in our selves. And so saith Gloss. Interlin. ibid. He made the just a sinner, thereby to make his sinners just. Nay, he did not thus, but far more powerfully: For he assigneth not the quality, but the substance, he did not a sinner, but sinne: that we might be made (he said not) righteous, but righteousnesse, and that righteousnesse of God: for that righteousnesse is of God, leaving we are justified not of workes (whereof it is written, All the workes we have done ourselves, but of God. And againe in his 25. Homily upon Genesis of the holinesse of his saints) like manner: If thou hast beleeved in Christ, thou hast both fulfilled the Law, and farre more then it commaundeth: for thou hast already received a farre greater righteousnesse. And Anselme, in secund. ad Corinthios capite quinto saith plainely: God made Christ sinne for us: that wee might be made the righteousnesse of God in him. Hee therefore was made sinne as we are made righteousnes: neither is that righteousnes ours, but Gods, (that is, it is not of our selves, but of Gods) nor in our selves, but in him: as he was made sinne, not his owne sin, but ours: neither was the sinne in himselfe, but in us. So Bernard, Serm. ad milit. Templ. capite. 12. saith: Furthermore, death is chased away by Christs death, and Christs justice is imputed unto us. And Epistol. 190. Man hath another justice assigned unto him, lacking his owne ——— One mans satisfaction is imputed unto all. And in his 61. Sermon upon the Canticles; Lord I will remember thy justice onely, for it is also mine: For thou art made righteousnesse unto me of God. Shall I be afraid that one cannot suffice for us both? it is no shore raiment unsufficient to couer two: thy justice is an everlasting justice, and will cover both thee and me also, and that largely, being most large, and most lasting. Nay some of the moderne writers doe acknowledge this imputative justice: as the Antidicegma of Colen doth for one, and Albertus Pighius himselfe, controvers. secund. in these words. If we speake formally and properly, we are not justified by our owne faith nor charity, but by the onely justice of God in Christ, that onely justice of Christ being communicated unto us.

A

C

2 The Fathers howsoever they do speake differently, and undefinitively of this place of justification; yet in their serious meditations, and when they were intangled with temptations, they never fledde unto any just or by workes, or unto any merits. Heare what Ambrose saith, Epist. 71. Let no man glory in his workes, because no man is justified by his deed: but he that hath justice, hath living, by because after baptisme, hee is justified. It is therefore saith that, saith him through the blood of Christ, because happy is he that hath his sinnes forgiven & his pardon granted. And Augustine cryeth out, Confess. lib. 9. c. 13. Woe also be unto the man of moth commendable life, if you sift his actions without the fauour of mercy. Onely Christ (saith he ad Rom. lib. 1. c. 4.) did undergoe punishment for us without any evill desert, that we might attaine unto grace by him without any good desert. And Serm. 49. de Tempore 1. What is that? Enter not into judgement with thy servant. Stand not in judgement with me, nor rash of me all that thou shalt condemn mind, and in my mind me: for how will find me guilty, if thou enter but in judgement with me; wherefore I find in as much by mercy, rather them of thy most easie judgement. And, De grat. & lib. arb. cap. sept. It that thy good deserts be Gods gifts, then doth not he crowne thy good deserts as thine owne deservings, but as his owne gifts. And, in Psalm. 67. The ungodly is justified by fayth without anie good deserts of his workes. Besides, & de spirit. & liter. cap. 13. Wee doe gather out of many testimonies, that man is not justified by the precepts of good life, but by the faith of Iesus Christ. And such a speech hath Basil in his Commentaries upon the 114. Psalme: Eternall rest is prepared for those that haue refished the divell strongly in this life; nor as a debt giue to their works, but out of the bounteous grace of the most mighty and mercifull God. And in his Commentary upon the 32. Psal. If by himselfe the judgmēt of God were sufficient, & if he should deale with us severely according unto our merits, what hope were there remaining for any of us? which of us all should be saued? Hilary in like manner, Psal. 51. affirmeth that those workes of justice are not of themselues sufficient to merit perfect blisse, unlesse that Gods mercy even in this will and desire of justice, doe not impute the vicioustnesse of mans motions and changes unto him. Let a man attaine unto perfection never so much (saith Hieron. in Ezech. lib. 14 cap 46.) yet shall he stand in need of mercy for all that: and cannot attaine unto the fulnesse of perfection by his merits in this life, but onely by Grace.

It is Gods purpose (saith Primasius, in Rom. cap. octau.) to justifie man, without any workes of the Law, or any other merits whatsoeuer, by faith alone: this is a wonderfull thing, saith Saint Chrysostome, Sermon, Octau. in Roman. capite quarto. that he who became so famous for his worthy acts, could not bee justified by his good workes, but by his faith: herein is the power of faith mightily manifested. And so fayth Paulinus, epistol. decim. ad Seuer. Although wee are able to keepe his commandements (with his helpe) yet ought wee perforce to acknowledge our unprofitable service, because wee cannot impute unto our selues a just execution of our duty, if wee keepe the commandements onely. And in the same sense saith Marcus the Heremite in his booke de Lege spirituali: Whosoeuer wee be that are thought worthie the washing of the new birth, wee doe not good workes for any rembution sake, but onely for the keeping of that puritie and cleanenesse which is committed unto us. And a little before, The kingdome of heaven is not a reward for any workes, but the mere grace of God prepared for his faithfull seruants. And Gregorie the great also, Moralia. 9. capite 14. & libro. 21. capite 15. doubts not to affirme, that all mans justice would be found to be injustice; if God should exact strict judgement. And libro 9. capite 7. This justice of ours being tried upon the touchstone of the divine justice, will be found injustice, and it is filthy in the discussion of the Iudge, though it shew faire in the estimation of the doer. And libro. 9. capite 14. I grew strong unto life, not by merite, but by pardon. And capite 28. Note that the holy man saith not, my hands shined being most pure: but my hands shined as most pure; because as long as wee are bound under the punishment of corruption, though we take never so much paines in doing good workes, yet shall wee never attaine unto true puritie. And the same Father in his seuenth homily upon Ezechiel sub finem saith, Let us repose no hope in our teares, nor in our deedes, but in the mediation of our advocate: And in his Commentaries upon the first penitentiall Psalme: I doe not intreate thee to saue mee, trusting to mine owne merits, but presuming to obtaine that out of thine onely mercy, which I despaire to doe out of mine owne deservings.

Eusebius Emissenus in like manner confirmeth our assertion thus: Though wee sweate in toyle of soule and body, saith he, and exercise all our powers in obedience, yet shall wee never attaine by any desert to get the kingdome of heaven, as a recompence for them. And Bernard, Sermon. 10. de Annunt. Thou canst never merit the glory eternall, unlesse it be giue thee freely, ——— nor are mans merits of that value to claime heaven as their just due. And Serm. in cant. 23. It is sufficient for me unto all righteousnes, to have him my saueour, to whom only I have given cause of offence: all that he doth not impute unto me, is as though it were not at all. Nor to sinne is Gods justice, & mans justice is Gods pardon.

This also Anselme upon Roman. 12. directly affirmeth: Because all men (saith he) were infolded in sinne, therefore thenceforth saluation consisteth not in mans merits, but in Gods grace. And in his Meditations: My life doth terrifie me, for if it be diligently examined, it appeareth wholly either sinne or barrennesse. And if there bee any fruit therein, it is either so fained, so imperfect, and some way so corrupted, that it cannot but either not please, or displease God. Truely it is either wholly in sinne and chastable, or barren & contemptible. But this of Anselme is most of all to be noted. In this death alone (saith he) place all thy trust, unto this death commit thy self wholly, with this death cover thy self wholly, and therein inwrappe thy selfe wholly: If God will iudge thee, say, O Lord, I put the death of our Lord Iesus Christ betwixt mee and thee and thy judgment; no otherwise doe I stand out with thee: If hee say, thou hast deserued damnation; say thou, I put the death of my Lord Iesus Christ betwixt me, and my euill deservings, I offer the merits of his most worthy passion, for the merits which I should have had, and also have them not. And Bellarmine free confession hereof is not to bee overpassed with silence, de Iustif. lib. 5. cap. 7. Because of the uncertaintie of our owne justice (saith he) and the danger of vaine glory, it is most safe and sure to place all our trust upon the onely mercy and benignitie of God.

3 The Fathers sometimes speake unstily of the article of justification, and that because of three errours: 1. Because they speake of justification rather like Philosophers then Divines, bending their divinitie unto the likenesse that morall Philosophy bore then amongst the Gentiles, thereby the more easily to gaine the more of them unto God. Looke in Clements of Alexandr. Stromat. 2. 2. Because they confound the Law and the Gospell, not distinguishing the justice of the one from the justice of the other, as Origen hom. 6. in Leui saith: It is Gods Law that washeth thee and purgeth thy sinnes. 3. Because they extolled mans naturall strength too much: for Irenæus, Tertullian, Clement, Iustine, and Epiphanius held al, that men were saued by the law of nature and by Philosophy.

4 The distinction of Iustification into the first and second, was not knowne amongst the Fathers for 1500. yeares after Christ, but is an invention of this age.

5 The Fathers doe often speake improperly of justification, according unto common use, putting sometimes the word of justification for sanctification, or the renewing of the whole man, both according unto nature and manners, and this they will have done by inward vertues and workes.

6 The Fathers affirme that workes do justifie onely declaratively, not effectively. So saith Thomas upon the 2. of Iames, The works that follow faith are said to justifie, not as justification is called an infusion of justice, but as it is called an exercise, a shewing, or a consummation. And then a thing is said to bee done, when it is perfected and made knowne.

7 The Fathers sometimes speake hyperbolically of workes, thereby to take away the carelesnesse of the vulgar, and set them on fire with a great desire unto good workes, unto this end doe Chrysostome, words ad populum Antioch. Homil. 33. tend, when he saith, that Almes doe free a man from death, (from hell hee meanes) giue us eternall life, & are aduocates for us: as also that of Hilary, in Matth. Cap. 6. we must of our selues deserue eternall life. And Ambrose, de panit. I. 2. c. 5. saith in the same sense: Our sinnes are covered by our workes. So doth Origen, hom. 1. in Exech. Why doest thou thinke much to labour, contend, and endeavour, and by thy good workes to be the cause of thine owne salvation, & blisse?

Merit.

1 MErit taken in his proper sense, for due and just desert, was never allowed of the sound professors for a thousand yeares after Christ. So when seruerit, in the Latine Fathers doth signifie to doe something which is acceptable and pleasing unto God, and worthy of accountance to obtaine or get any thing of God, even without any desert of ours. A sincere and peaceable prayer, saith Cyprian, deserued (or merited) the Lord, (that is, obtained his favour.) And Suetonius in the life of Othanius saith, Let him imitate Othanius in deserving his fellowes, that is, in getting their good wills by doing them good turnes. And so saith Ambrose, libro 10. in Luc. capite 22. in the beginning: Oh Water, which deseruedst to bee the Sacrament or mysterie of Christ, which washest all, and art not washed thy selfe? &c. So Pope Cornelius, in Eusebius, lib. 6. cap. 4. saith of Novatus, that hee was not confirmed of the Bishop by the signe, and addeth, τὸν δὲ μὴ νιφθέντα, καὶ ὑφ' ἑαυτοῦ τούτου λουτροῦ τυχόντα, which words Rufinus 6. 33. translateth thus: Vnde nec spiritum sanctum potuit promereri: wherefore hee could not deserve (that is, obtaine) the holy Ghost. So Augustine Epist. 12. writeth unto Hierome: I have not yet deserved thy writings and elsewhere Epist 13. would to God I could deserve to be embraced of thee. And Serm. 49. de temp. Let no sinner despaire of himselfe, since Paul deserved pardon: and Tertull. 3. in Tim. to the like effect hee saith, that we doe deserve God by faith, that is, wee are acceptable unto him. And that of Gregory is most note worthie: O happy fault which deserved to have such a redeemer.

2 Merit in the writings of the Fathers is not put for the worthinesse of the good work in the respect of the reward, but it is alwaies put for the good worke it selfe, pleasing unto God, and accepted of him; not of it selfe and in owne worthinesse, but through the divine favour, and free acceptation of all good workes in Iesus Christ. And therefore it is so called; namely, a good worke, thereby to insteire us the more to the good things. This doth Cardinall Bellarmine freely confesse, lib. 2. de grat. & lib. arbit. cap. 12. And that the word Merit is to be taken in this sense, it hereby appeareth, because all the Fathers doe ascribe all things unto grace wholly. As Bernard. Serm. 65. in Cant. saith, my Merit is Gods mercy; and the same word Merit, in his true and proper sense is by them opposed against grace: as the same Bernard saith in Serm. 67. in Cant. There is no place for grace to be, where merit hath taken up all before. And besides, Serm. 68. It is sufficient unto merit to know that our merit is insufficiency; wherefore these workes of grace are called merits by a metaphor, not properly, because they are the gifts of God: an life everlasting is called a wage improperly; how metaphorically. And unto this end doth Bernard direct his doctrine in his first sermon of the Annunciation, saying, that merits in very deede, doe deserve nothing. Neither are mans merits of such worthinesse (quoth he) that life eternall should bee their due; or that God should any waies injure man in not giving it unto him: for so omit that all mans merits are wholly the gifts of God, and that man is rather a debtor unto God for them, thē God any waies unto him; what are all our merits, being compared with that so admirable glory? And the distribution of rewards is of Gods grace, not the wage of merit, because (as Fulgentius saith very well, ad Man. lib. 1. cap. 10.) It is very rightly called grace, because God doth not onely accumulate his gifts upon his gifts, but also, because the bounte & the Divine retribution is shewed in such quantity, that it doth admirably and incomparably exceeding all merit, though proceeding from a will and operation both good and given of God. And even the same saying hath Radulphus Ardens, in Dominica 18. post Trin. Because (saith he) we proceed from and by one grace, unto another, wee can but improperly call them merits; for as Augustine can beare witnesse, God doth crowne nothing in us but his owne grace. And againe, in omnibus Domi. Septuag. to the like effect: Let no man in thinke that God is as it were bound by covenant to performe his promise for as he is free to promise, so is he free to pay chiefly seeing our merits as wel as our rewards are of his grace; For God crowneth nothing but his grace in us, who if he would deale strictly with us, no man living should be justified in his sight. And therefore the Apostle, that took more paines then all, saith, The sufferings of this life are not worthy of that future glory which shall be revealed: wherefore this bargaine is nothing else but a voluntary promise.

Vlenberg. de cause our Euang. pag. 436.

3 Also Merit sometimes signifieth the dignitie and excellency of the thing it selfe: as when Hosmeus, in Epistola Elect. saith: All Bishops are of the same merit, and shee same priesthood: So, the Fathers say, virginitie is of a greater merit then the other vertues: but indeed merit doth seldome signifie that which we in England call desert, that is, the worthinesse of the workes in respect of the wages and recompence.

4 The merit of congruence, before justification, whether it proceed or succeed our faith, is condemned by the Fathers. Why is it called grace? (saith Augustine, in Manuel Psal. 31.) because it is given gratis. Why is it given gratis? because it is no more. And in his Retractations, lib. 2. cap. 32. he inveyeth against his opinion of merits, or both of merits & congruence before justification: I said (quoth he, lib. 6. quæst. contra Orosium) that in religion, salvation never was wanting unto him that prayed worthy. But I said not so, as though any man could pray worthily by his own merits, but, as the Apostle saith: Not of our workes, but of him that calleth us. And in epist. 105. he saith, To make a man just, merit hath not sufficient power. And againe, Righteousnesse in Scripture is never called hire. And in Præfat. in Psal. 31. Thou hast not done any good, and yet the forgivenesse of thy sinnes is given thee. And likewise Prosper, cap. 6. de object. Gal. saith, The justified man (that is of unrighteous being made righteous) doth receive a gift without any good merit going before his justification. And Soto, lib. 2. de natur. et grat. cap. 4. acknowledgeth that we have in us dispositions unto righteousnesse, but denyeth that they can properly bee called merits. And Stapleton, de peccat. orig. lib. 8. cap. 41. saith, that Merit of congruence in respect of the first grace, is long agoe abolished; nor is it allowed of by the most approved schoolemen, as Thomas in his Summe, nor admitted by his followers or latter writers at any time. Indeed Gregory of Arimin. lib. 2. dist. 26. q. 1. doth expresly condemne it, as Lyra also, in 11. Ioan. and Thomas Waldensis, lib. 3. de Sacram.

5 But Merit of condignitie is condemned also by some others: as namely by Augustines censure de verb. Apost. Serm. 2. in these words. Thou wast not worthy —— whom hee might glorifie being justified. —— He crowneth once in his mercy and pitie: if thou have prevented him by any merits, examine then thy merits (saith God) and thou shalt finde that they are my gifts. Anselme likewise, de mensur. cru: saith more plainely then any: If a man should serve God with greatest fervencie, a thousand yeares long, yet should not all his deeds be worth the staying one halfe day in heaven. Looke in Gregorie of Arimin, in 1. dist 17. q. 2. art. 2. Durand, in 2. d. 27. q. 2. & in 3. d. 18. q. 2. Waldensis, tom. 3. de Sacram. Bonaventure, in additio. ad Lyronē, super Psal. 35. Scotus, in 2. Sent. d. 27. q. 2. think eth that our good workes have not proportion with eternall life, and hee therefore accepted of God for reward. You must know (saith Cusanus, nocte, 19.) that Christs death only was of ability to merit (we lasting life) because it being a consummate death, doth attaine an eternall life. None of all the other Martyrs doe merit equall life by their death, because all other death of whom wee know, comes short of the greatest death, as this infinitely different from a consummate death, which only deserveth nothing greater (that is, enabling) life.

Faith.

THe Fathers affirme, faith to justifie: that a man is not by supposing him inwardly, or preparing him; but by apprehending Christ and applying of him: which is, when we doe stay our selves upon the mercy of God and merits of Christ, holding God as favourable unto us in Christ. This is confirmed by God (saith Ambrose, in 1. Cor. 2.) that that whosoever beleeveth in Christ shall bee saved without workes, receiving him by his only faith free remission of all his sinnes. And Lyranus upon Leviticus, lib. 4. cap. 5. Grace is given for our mercy and compassion, and obtained by faith alone. And Marsilius Patavinus hath these words, in Gen. 3.

Believe, and this sole faith he did confesse,
Was held a worthy crowne of righteousnesse:
Now, we by Abrahams great reward are taught,
All faith in Gods true word what good is caught.

As loone as ever a man beleeves (saith Chrysostome in Rom. 3. hom. 7.) he is forthwith justified, and in his commentaries upon the Heb. cap. 11. hom. 23. after hee hath spoken of the promises made unto the Patriarches, hee addeth, These by their onely faith conceived an assured trust of these things, seeing them a farre off, foure generations ere they came to passe. —— So firmely were they perswaded of them, that they did as it were salute them comming —— Thou seest that this receiving of theirs, was but an expectation and trust of them; if therefore to trust bee to receive, then may we also receive. And it is Augustines opinion in Prosper, In Sent. 352. that the faith of Christ, is to beleeve in him that doth justifie the wicked: to beleeve in the Mediatour without whom no man is reconciled unto God: to beleeve in the Saviour who came to seeke and save that which was lost; to beleeve in him that said, You can do nothing without me. Now what it is to beleeve in him, that justifieth the wicked, the same Father Tract. 29. in Ioan. layeth downe, saying: What is it then to beleeve in him? In beleeving him to love him, in beleeving him to depend upon him, in beleeving him to turne unto him, and to be incorporated into his bodie: And in other places, and that very often hee useth to affirme that to beleeve in God, is to cleave unto God, and to bend towards God. Looke in his enarration upon the 77. Psalm, in his 54. tractate upon Iohn, and in his 181. Sermon de tempore. Hee also in his 26. Tractate upon Iohn saith, Who so beleeveth in him, eateth him, and is invisibly fedde, because invisibly regenerate: and in his 30. tractate upon Iohn: How shall I reach my hand unto heaven, and lay hold of him as he sitteth there? why, send but up thy faith, and thou hast hold of him. And Ser. 33. de verb. Dom. Behold, we beleeve in Christ whom wee have received through faith: and in our receiving him we know what to thinke upon: we receive but a little, and yet our hearts are fedde fat therewith.

So Bertram in his booke of the bodie and blood of Christ, saith thus; This bodie is not to bee received, beheld, or eaten with the senses of the flesh, but with attention of a faithfull soule —— And the decretals themselves de consecrat. d. 2. counsell us in this manner, Behold the holy body and blood of thy Lord with faith, honour and admire it, touch it with thy minde, receive it with the hand of thine heart, and take it wholly with the endevour of the inward man. And Lombard Sent. lib. 3. dist. 19. saith, Wee are said also to bee otherwise justified by the blood of Christ, namely, in that wee are cleansed from our sins by the faith of his death: and therefore saith the Apostle, the righteousnesse of God (in us) is through the faith of Iesus Christ: and by and by after hee saith, whom God hath made a propitiatour by faith in his blood, that is, by the faith of his passion ——. If therefore we behold him that died upon the crosse for us, with the eye of faith, we are loosed from the bands of the divell, that is, from our sinnes.

2 That the justification of our soules by faith consisteth not in apprehension but in inward preparation and disposition, it is a fantastike invention of the Schoolemen.

3 The Fathers doe hold faith onely to be requisite unto justification, even without the workes of grace. We must especially beleeve (saith Augustin. Serm. 181. de temp.) the remission of sinnes; for this is the onely remedie which hath set man from the sentence of death eternall.

I am able to shew (saith Chrysostome hom. de fide & lege naturæ) that a faithfull man hath both lived in this life without works, & hath attained unto the kingdome of heaven ——. And the theefe beleved onely, and was justified. —— but I dare affirme that onely faith by it selfe hath saved some. And hom. 7. in cap. 3. Romanos, What is the law of faith? (saith he) to bee saved by grace. Here hee sheweth the power of God, in that he not onely saved us, but also justified and glorified us, and that without use of any workes, exacting onely faith of us.

Wee have not beleeved of our owne accord, (saith Theodoret in Eph. 2.) but came being called, and when we are come, hee doth not exact puritie and innocency of life, but hath pardoned our sinnes accepting of faith onely.

This it is to glorie in the Lord (saith Basil Serm. de humu.) when a man is not puffed up with his owne righteousnesse, but acknowledgeth himselfe destitute of all true righteousnesse, and justified by faith alone in Iesus Christ.

They are justified before God (saith Ambrose in Roman. 4.) without any labour or toyle, by onely faith, ina workes of penitence being hereto required, but onely that they beleeve.

Origen upon the 3. of the Romans, after he hath alledged the example of Paul, saith: Therefore the just cause of mans glorying is in the faith of the crosse of Christ, which excludeth all glorying that proceedeth from the workes of the law.

Augustine against Pelagius his 2. Epistle lib.

lib. 1. cap. 21. saith, that of how great holinesse soever the Saints of either the new or old testament are said to bee, yet nothing saved them but faith in the mediatour, who shed his blood for the remission of their sinnes.

That a man should bee saved by his faith, that hath no good workes, it may bee is not a thing out of custome, saith Chrysostome in Rom 4. hom. 8. but to see a man who is noted for good works, not to be saved by them, but by faith, this is an admirable thing, and doth make a most manifest demonstration of the efficacie and power of faith. And Hom. 14. in cap. 8. Wee offer but one gift unto God, namely in beleeving his promises of things to come, & by this only way wee are brought unto salvation.

4 Whensoever the Fathers doe joyne faith and workes together, in the matter of our salvation, they speake of an historicall and generall faith, which is onely a knowledge and universall assent, or otherwise of the externall profession of faith; or also of faith as it is the * pathway to salvation: for although faith as it is the instrument or meanes to apprehend Christ unto righteousnesse, and salvation, be alone, and unjoyned with any other meane: yet as it is the way unto salvation, it is not alone. Whence we acknowledge that faith alone is not sufficient unto salvation, and to live a good life by, but must have the assistance of good workes and other vertues.

The helpe of repentance, saith Lactantius de divin. institt. epit ca. 9. is great: which whosoever doth cast away, doth barre him selfe of the way to salvation.

Some do purge away their sinnes——by watching, saith Chrysostome in Ioan. hom. 38. thou maist doe this an easier way, namely, by exercising patience unto all men.

By workes of righteousnesse, saith Eucherius in Reg. lib. 3. we come to the kingdome of heaven: and, we cannot come to these everlasting joyes, but by faith, and works of justice. And againe, let them begin at faith and continue to the end of their journy in good manners, untill they come whither they intend. in Gen. lib. 3.

Let us make pittie our patron in this world, saith Cæsarius Hom. 15. that it may deliver us in the world to come, for there is mercy in heaven, which is obtained by exercising mercy here upon earth.

Some hasten unto God by fasting, saith Haimo. sup. Psal. 135. others by almes, and others by other vertues. Let us hasten unto our country in heaven by doing good workes, saith another, viz. Ideot. contemp. lib. 2. capite 15. And Rabanus saith there are many fruits of repentance by which a man may attaine unto the clearing of his crimes.

5 Sometimes the Fathers joyning workes to faith, doe speake of faith as it is a perswasion of the impunitie and freedome of sinnes, without penitence or as it is an unperfect vertue, unto which other vertues are therefore to be joyned.

6 The Fathers doe acknowledge a speciall and unfallible certaintie of faith in God. Trust in God, saith Remigius Altissiodorensis in Psal. 10. that is, All my faith is in Christ: By him onely I beleeve to be justified and saved; he is my rocke, he is my refuge.

He that beleeveth with a strong affection, saith Theophylact doth extend his heart wholly unto God, and what then? hee is united to him. And his heart being enkindled, conceiveth a most certaine assurance to be made partaker of his desire: this doe all men finde true by experience.

If thou beleeve that thy sinnes cannot bee forgiven, saith Bernard in Mar. 11. De Assum. Ser. 1. but by him whom onely thou didst sinne against, and who himselfe cannot sinne, thou dost well: but adde this, that thou beleeve that by him they may be forgiven, this is the testimonie that the holy Ghost doth set downe in thy heart, saying, Thy sinnes are forgiven thee. And againe epist. 107. Who is righteous but hee that recompenseth Gods love with his love againe? And this is never done, but when the holy Ghost by faith revealeth unto man, Gods purpose from everlasting, concerning his future salvation. And ser. 5. Dedica. Here it is most plainely necessarie that faith do succour us——that that which lieth hidden concerning us in the heart of the Father, may by his Spirit bee revealed unto us, and the same spirit testifying unto us, may perswade our spirits, that we are the sonnes of God: and may perswade us by calling us, and justifying us freely by faith. And againe elsewhere. We know that we are translated from death to life by this quickening Spirit, and by a certaine and daily experiment (the same spirit enlightning us) we doe prove, that our prayers and contrition doe come from him, and ascend unto God, before whose eyes they doe finde mercy. And in his eight Sermon upon the Canticles. What soule amongst you all (saith hee) hath at sometimes felt the Spirit of the Sonne in his secret conscience, crying, Abba, Father: Let that, O let that soule presume boldly, that it is beloved with a Fatherly affection, that findeth it selfe affected with the same Spirit that affected the Son: trust to it (thou soule whatsoever thou art): trust unto it, & never doubt at any thing. And in his 69. Sermon hee hath these words. Nothing can forbid this soule to say, God is my beloved, which in that it feeles it selfe to love, and to love vehemently, doubts not but that it is beloved, as ardently, and as vehemently: and of the singular intent, desire, care, labour, diligence, and study, that it sheweth in endeavouring so incessantly and earnestly to please God, doth undoubtedly acknowledge all these in it selfe, remembring that promise——therefore by it owne proper proper affects, it knoweth how God is affected, and doubteth not that it is beloved againe, seeing it selfe doth love.

There is a certaine kind of glorying in a mans conscience (saith Augustine, in Psalme 149.) & this is, when thou knowest thy faith to be sincere, thy hope to bee infallible, thy charitie to be unfained. And in his 75. Tractate upon Joh. he saith this saying: For now is he in us, and we in him, but this as how we doe but beleeve, but then we shall know also: although we know it already by beleeving: but then we shall know it by contemplating. And in another place, in his 13. booke of the Trinitie, chap. 1. and 2. hee saith, Every man that beleeveth, seeth faith to be in his heart, and he that beleeveth not, seeth that faith is not in his heart.

The minde that is repleni shed with the holy Ghost (saith Gregorie, Dial. lib. 1 chapter. 1.) hath most evident signes thereof, namely, vertues and humilitie: which if they doe perfectly concurre in one mind; it is certaine that they doe bring assured testimonie of the presence of the holy Ghost. And in the first booke of his Register, chap. 287. The soule that thirsteth for God, is first touched with feare, and, then with love.——But when the feare is worne out with the continuall languishment of sorrow, then at last entreth some securitie and hope of the presuming of pardon. And in his Morals, lib. 31. cap. 23. he saith, that the securitie of the righteous man, is fitly compared unto a lyon: who when he seeth any come against him, betakes himselfe to his wonted courage: so the other knoweth that hee shall overcome all adversaries, because he loveth him onely, whom against his will he can never fall from.

There is abiding in us (saith Cyprian, ad Demet.) a fortitude of hope, and a firmenesse of faith, and an upright and vigorous heart; (even amongst the greatest ruines of this declining world) and a patience alwaies rejoycing, and a soule alwaies secure of the favour of his God. And de Cœna elsewhere. Our affection knowing it selfe cured and sanctified, washeth it selfe with teares.—— And in his (Gods) presence these wel-shed teares doe beg for pardon.

Let the hearts of the faithfull (saith Leo, Sermon. 10. de quadr.) examine themselves, —— that finding in themselves any fruits of charitie laid up, they may know without all doubt that God is in them. And Serm. 8. de Epiphan. He that will trie whither God doe dwell within him or no,——if he doe diligently examine the inward parts of his heart, and doe finde therein the love of God and his neighbour, assuredly, and without dissimulation, hee needeth nor doubt that God both governeth him and dwelleth in him.

Hee gave him for us (saith Ambrose, de Jacob. & vit. beat. lib. 2. cap. 6.) therefore there is no doubt that we need feare any thing, should be denied us, there is no cause for us to doubt of the continuance of Gods munificence towards us. And againe, Serm. 2. in Psalm. 118. He that hath a good conscience, is not troubled nor in doubt, but constantly affirmeth, Wee bee the heires of God, and joynt-heires with Christ. And in one of the sermons under his name, he saith, whosoever doth sticke fast unto that leaven Christ, shall also be converted into leaven, as well helpefull to himselfe, as convenient unto others, and certaine of his salvation, and secure of the calling and gaining of others.

By this, that the holy Ghost doth infuse charitie into us (saith Anselme, in Rom. 8.) hee declareth unto our hearts by an evident testimony that we are the children of God. And in 1 Cor. 2. Wee know by his spirit, that wee have both his gifts, and also received them of him. And againe, He that hath the feeling of faith in his heart, this man knoweth that Christ is in him. in 2 Cor. 13.

Whensoever any man feeleth himselfe so affected either with his owne sins, or with others as we have said, saith Basil Reg contract. q. 196. then [πληροφορία] let him undoubtedly know, that he is free from sinne.

And Cyrill upon Iohn lib. 10 cap. 3. besides this generall knowledge doth also set downe another, namely, by which the faithfull having received illumination from the spirit, do with the eyes of their minde see God dwelling in them. This is not (saith he) the common and generall knowledge of the Saints, but another, farre more cleare, and more certaine; and farre differing from that other generall knowledge.

Let us bring faith and obedience (saith Chrysostome, in Gen. sup. 29. hom. 54.) and beleeve as confidently upon Gods promises, as though they were alreadie performed: and againe in Rom. 8. hom. 14. Seeing we have the testimonie of that supreme essence, who giveth us what hee promiseth, and also commandeth us to aske, who can from hence-forth doubt of this dignitie?

When these three are sealed in the minde (saith Hales sup. 2, dist. 12, q. 20.) light, gladnesse, and peace, it is a most sure experiment that the soule hath grace.

Yea Thomas Aquinas 1 2. q. 112. art. 5. and the most ancient of the schoolemen, doe rather deny the certainty of knowledge then of faith. I beleeve that I have faith (saith Scotus lib. 3. dist. 23.) and so affirme all the moderne writers. The Enchiridion of Colen teacheth that it is necessary unto justification for every one to beleeve certainly that his sinnes are forgiven him. So Catharinus teacheth and defendeth that the faithfull may have assurance of faith concerning grace in this life. And Caiet. in Rom. 8. saith, that the testimonie of the spirit is a gift by which I neither see, nor know, but I beleeve that I am the sonne of God. So Marinarius the Carmelite Frier in his his oration unto the Councell of Trent, Anno 1546. saith, Let a man abhorre the fruitlesse confidence in his owne worth, and depend wholly upon Gods mercy; let him hold God to be alwaies present with him as a most mercifull Father, from whom he is alwaies to expect all joy, and all felicity, nor ought he ever to let this perswasion goe out of his mind, although he be molested with the most intolerable and infinite difficulties that the world, the flesh, and the divell ——— can any waies inflict, to withdraw us from our trust upon God and his divine worship. And, Wherefore they never wander in the Labyrinth of doubt, that have obtained righteousnesse through Christ: but living in securitie of conscience, in peace of minde in joy of heart, and taught by that Spirit which testifieth unto them that they are the sonnes of God, they dare be bold to say, Abba Father.

* August. Retract. l. 1. c. 14. via fidei.

1. 7 Where the Fathers doe sometimes seeme to deny the speciall assurance of faith, they doe speake of presumption, or the carnall security wherein men doe dreame of liberty and peace without temptation and hazard. Which of all the company of the faithfull (saith S. Augustine de cor. et grat. cap. 13.) dares presume that hee is of the number of the predestinate, as long as he liveth here upon earth?

2. Sometimes they speake of the certainty of continuance unto the end without fall or defect: and in this sense saith Augustine De civit. Dei lib. 11. cap. 12. Who is hee that knoweth that he shall persever in increase and acts of justice untill the end? unlesse he be instructed of this by revelation from him that instructeth all concerning this matter by his just and secret judgement, and deceiveth no man.

3. Sometimes they speake of the assurance of experience, which is alwaies after the event of the thing.

4. Sometimes of the certainty of grace and salvation of others.

5. Sometimes of assurance by speciall revelation, or priviledged assurance, not the ordinary certaintie contained in the word & sacraments.

6. Sometimes of the demonstrative assurance, begetting knowledge in the mind, by peculiar and proper principles, not of the assurance of faith.

7. And sometimes of that certainty which is without any signes or tokens, called the certaintie of Evidence.

8 The speciall and particular assurance of faith was never condemned for heresie, before the Councill of Trent condemned it.

Fulfilling of the Law. Supererogation.

1 THe Fathers doe affirme the law to bee fulfilled, first by imputing the obedience of Christ by faith, and then, by beginning to worke it, and endeavouring either according to ability, not perfectly: or in the perfection of parts, but not of degrees.

Testimonies.

All the commandements of God are accounted to bee fulfilled, when whatsoever is not done, is pardoned, Augustine, Retract. lib. 1. cap. 19.

Then are we just (saith Hier. lib. 1. contr. Pelag.) when wee confesse our selves sinners, and our justice consisteth not in our proper merits, but in the mercies of God. Looke the first booke of Bernard, his. cap. 3.

He that beleeveth in Christ (saith Theodoret. in Rom. 10.) doth fulfill the scope of the law. What will the law doe, (saith Chrysostome, in Rom. 10. Hom. 17.) make a man just? it cannot: for none did ever fulfill it.

Hee hath obtained the perfection of the law, saith Sedulius, in Rom. 10. who beleeveth in Christ; for seeing none is justified by the law, because none hath fulfilled the law, saith was set downe to suffice for all omissions in the whole law.

No man ever fulfilled the law (saith Cassianus, Collat. lib. 20.) which consisteth in love, but hee alone that came not to dissolve the law, but to fulfill it.

2 Now, that there are two wayes of fulfilling the law properly and perfectly without any breach, one in this present life, and another in the life to come, none that I ever heard of, but the schoolemen, did never teach. For, the ancient Doctors doe acknowledge no perfection at all in this life, but onely that which consisteth in acknowledging our imperfection and enormities. So saith S. Augustine. 2. ep Pelag. l. 3. c. 7. That vertue which is in a man which is just, in this life is called perfect, with this proviso, that unto the perfection thereof, there doe also belong both a true knowledge, and an humble confession of the imperfection thereof. And in ep. 29. ad Hieron. Such Charity ——— as cannot bee increased in this life, is in no man: and as long as it may be increased, that which is lesse then it ought to be, is of corruption, by reason of which there is not one just man upon earth that doth good & sinneth not. By which corruption it commeth to passe, that no living man shall be justified in Gods sight. And de perfectia justi. resp. ad Rufficia. 17. he saith: As long as there is any reliques of carnall concupiscence remaining ——— God is not wholly beloved, nor with the whole heart; for the flesh without the soule hath no concupiscence. But in his booke, de Spiritu & litera, the last chapter, hee seemeth to hold a contrary opinion; for there he saith, that here there cannot bee so much love of God as is due unto a full & perfect knowledge, this is not for all that to bee accounted as a fault. But for the reconciliation of these two places; wee must know that there is two sorts of faults: the one when a thing is done directly opposite unto Gods will, will, and by him forbidden; the other when that is done which God commaundeth, but not altogether with the whole heart, as he commaundeth: and this Augustine speaketh not of, but of the other in the latter question, & contrariwise of the former in the first.

We are not justified by works (saith Ambrose, Abbat. de Jacob. cap. 2.) but by faith: because our carnall infirmity doth hinder our workes.

The Saints themselves (quoth Bernard. in Cant. Serm. 73.) had needeto pray for their sinnes, that they may have salvation through mercy, and not in trusting to their own righteousnesse. And againe, in Cant. 50. How should that bee commaunded which could not possibly be fulfilled? & if you will have it to concerne onely the affect (of Charitie) I will not stand in contention with you, so that you graune thus much to me, that it cannot, nor ever shall be fulfilled in this life, by any man.

We can hardly doe one good worke (saith Radulphus, in Levit l. 12. c. 1.) without intermixtion of some sinne or other with it, and it is to be feared, lest when wee looke for a complete reward of devotion, the punishment for the fault therewith conjoyned, bee not exacted of us.

3 Supererogation, wherein a good worke of counsell done over and beyond the fulfilling of the law, is acceptable unto God, was a stranger unto the knowledge of the Fathers. For although they say that virginitie is offered more then due, and above the lawes; and that many doe exceede the commandements with their workes, and performe more in duty then the precepts doe bind them to; yet, that the law is so kept, that the keepers are not transgressours, they doe not say; I affirme againe, they do not say so. But they will have supererogative workes done, not that there can bee any duty done which is beyond the morall law, but these workes they holde may surpasse, first the negative part: for so saith Chrysostome, Hom. 8. in Rom 4. Not to steale or kill, is in every mans power: but to beleeve that God can doe that which is otherwise impossible, this requires a minde elevated, and more vehement affection towards God. For this is a signe of a worthy and noble love. He honours God that keepes his Commaundements: but he much more that can argue and dispute through his faith: the other obeyeth God, but this doth ascribe him ——— his glory with greater measure and vehemency.

Secondly, they held supererogation above externall acts, and in this sense Chrysost. Hom. 3. in 1 Cor. doth speake, when he determineth that the Philosophers had supererogation: Are not his precepts so easie (quoth he) that many have gone beyond them by philosophicall reason?

Thirdly, they held it as it exceedeth some one commaundement. So is Augustines saying understood of the Virgins. Ser. 8. de Verb. Apost. The virgin (quoth he) did listen for the beauty of the heare. What doest thou commaund me to abstaine from adultery, dost thou commaund me this? wee doe performe more in loving: therefore thou commaundest us that which thou commaundest us not.

Virginity as it exceedeth a commaundement which is common unto other men. The Apostle Paul did spend more (saith Augustine de opere Monach. 1.) because as himselfe vouchsafeth he warred at his owne charges.

Virginity is a voluntary thing (saith Ambrose lib. 6. com. Luke.) and not of the necessitie. Si. Paul gives not any precept, but onely counselleth us unto virginity. So doe some of the other Fathers account virginity above the law, that is, above the ordinary observation of the law among other Christians, because they thought it to be in Angelicall state. But yet Athanasius, libro de Virgin. For, doth put virginitie from amongst the counsels, and in the Precepts: What man, saith he either in his life, or after his death, hath beene the author of keeping virginity? ——— yet our Saviour Christ the King of all men, prevailed thus much in this kinde of commandements, that children not being of maturity to receive the discipline of the Lawes, should professe virginity which is above the Lawes. And in his Apology to Constantine; That holy and heavenly commaund of eternall virginity is not kept nor fulfilled happily, but onely amongst us Christians.

4 This kinde of supererogation, which the Papists now teach, is in some sort reproved by some of the Fathers.

None can restore so much as hee oweth, saith Anselme, de concep. Virg. c. 21. onely Christ restored for all that are saved, more then true ought. And Thomas in 2. 2. quæst. 184. art. 3. will have perfection to consist really and essentially in the keeping of the commaundements, and instrumentally in the executing of the counsels: and for this purpose alleageth the words of Abbas Moyses: Fastings, watchings, &c. are not perfection it selfe, but the instruments of perfection, because that the ende of that discipline doth not consist in them, but they are the meanes to bring us unto that end.

Pilgrimage.

1 REligious Pilgrimage got footing after Constantines time, about the yeare of grace 320, and yet was not at then used by al, but only by the vulgar: nor undertaken for any worship of God, or merit sake, but onely for confirmation of faith. It is a part of faith (saith Hieron epist. 13.) to worship the ground whereupon Christs feet did tread. Severus Sulpitius. histor. libro secundo, and Paulinum, epist. ad Severum saith, that mens minds doe draw them to Hierusalem for no other cause, but only to see, and to touch the places wherein Christ was corporally present.

And before Constantines time, it is tolde as a rare thing of Alexander, and a wonderfull, that he hasted unto Hierusalem, to worship and visite the holy places, as Eusebius recordeth, lib. 6. cap. 10. But marke there that al this was doone by a vision.

2. Afterward, succeeding times changed these pilgrimages into part of Gods worship and religion; but yet the most orthodoxall Fathers in that respect, did alwaies condemne it. So doth Nyssenus in an epistle of his, affirming that it addeth not a iote unto piety, and that God is present to those that call upon his name, in every place alike. The Lord saith not, saith Aug. Ser. de Mart. 3. inter Ser. de Sanct. goe into the East, and seeke justice, or say le into the West to receive pardon: forgive thine enemy, and thou shalt be forgiven: Doe not seeke ought of thy selfe, without thy selfe. God doth direct thee unto thy selfe, and thine owne conscience.

Hildebertus Cenomanensis in an epistle to a certaine Count, doth affirme, that Pilgrimage is an inexcusable sin in them that are bound unto any ministery; and likewise that to preferre things not necessary, before things necessary: and things not due, before duties:—and to wander about the world, no Doctour, no Scripture doth at any time, or in any place mention. And Chrysostome. Homil. 1. in Philem. saith truly, that unto forgivenes of sinnes it is altogether needlesse to undertake any Pilgrimage.

3 But as for set Pilgrimages unto certaine Images, there was never Father dreamed of them for 600. yeares after Christ at the least.

Fasting, Stations, Procession.

1 CONcerning the Lent-fast, the Fathers are uncertaine: some say that it is a tradition of the Apostles, of which rank are Hierome, ad Marc. epist. 54 and Leo, Sermone sexto & nono de Quadrages. Others say, that Christ himselfe appointed this fast of Lent. Ambros. Serm. 25. saith, it was consecrated by Christ, and Serm. 34. A law given by God, a fast enjoyned by Christ. And Theophilus of Alexandria, Pasc. epist. 1. ad finem, calleth it an Evangelicall institution. Cassianus, collat. 21. cap. 30. saith, (a) That in the primitive Church their fast was alike throughout the whole yeare: and then devotion beginning to grow colde, and fasting to be neglected, the Priests commanded this fast of Lent. Amalarius, libro secundo, capite quinto, denieth that any man can truely assigne the first inventour of Lent. And Irenaus apud Eusseb. libro quinto, capite 26. saith that it is but meerely ἀσυνηθειαν καὶ ἀσκησιν: a custome risen out of simplicitie, and some private institution.

2 The fast of Lent in the first ages of the Church, was a fast of great religion and holinesse, kept for the maintaining of more commodious and spirituall exercises of invocation and repentance, and used for a remembrance of Christs passion.

What should I stand to relate the often meetings together, (saith Eusebius, Eccl. libro 2. capite 16.) and the exercises of the men being placed together in one roome, and the women in another, apart, and the severe order of discipline, which we as yet doe customably observe, and doe use to celebrate, especially upon the feast of our Lords passion, not onely in fasting and watchings, but in the diligent hearing of the holy Scriptures?

If we have done no good (saith Basil, Hom. 24. in Ebrietat:) by so many admonitions, which I have never omitted to exhort you with, in all the time before, and now especially in these fraven weekes of fasting, wherein continually, night and day I have instructed you in the doctrine of the Gospel without all intermission, —— &c.

This fast is not appointed us (saith Epiphanius, in fine Panar.) whereby to render any favour or good turne unto him that suffered for us, but to confesse and acknowledge his passion which he undertooke for us unto our salvation.

For this ende, (saith Chrysostome, Hom. 19. ad pop. Antioch.) have we our fastings, and our Lent, for this end have we so many holy meetings, and hearing, and hitherto tend all our praiers, & all our doctrine, namely, that being by the diligent meditation of Gods precepts cleansed from all the spots of sinne, whereby we have beene any way stained for the whole yeare, trusting to our spirituall freedome, wee may receive that unbloudy Sacrifice, like as godly and religious men ought to doe. And 73. Homil. ad pop. Antioch. de ieiun. Quad. It is not only required of us (my dearest brethren) to meete here every day, & to heare continually of the same things, and to fast the whole Lent, &c.

3 This fasting of Lent was kept freely, without any bond of conscience, or any necessitie of commaund even unto the yeare of grace, 400. This is true both in respect of the limit of time, as well as of the sorts of meates.

Testimonies.

Ambrose, de Elia & Ieju. c. 22. inviting us unto voluntary fasting, saith, Vndergoe you the yoke of Christ, — hee doth not binde your necke with bands, but coupleth the minde to him with favour and grace: he doth not compell a man by necessity, but directeth the willing of good workes.

Christians

(a) It may be hee tooke this from Hier. who hath the like saying, Epist. 22. ad Eustochium.

Christians (saith Augustine cons. Faust. Man. libr. 30 cap 5.) not Hæretikes, but Catholikes doe abstaine both from some sorts of flesh, and also from some kindes of fruites, and that for the taming of the flesh, and to humble & withdraw their soule from brutish and unreasonable motions, not that they thinke the meates, or fruites any waies unsleane: and this use is observed either continually, which few doe, or at certaine times and daies, as almost all doe throughout the Lent, every one as much or as little as hee is willing, or as he is able. But whereas he saith (at least a Sermon under his name, viz. 62. de temp.) that it is a sin not to fast the Lent, this is not to be vnderstood as if there were a law hereof, but in respect of the neglecting of the publike penance which was commonly renewed in this fast, So Theodoret, in Epit. divin. Decret. speaking of the eating of flesh, and drinking of wine, saith, that the Church doth not forbidde the use of them: and therefore some doe make lawfull use of these goods & pleasures allowed by the law, and othersome againe doe abstaine frō them: but no man of right judgement or wisedome will condemne him that useth them; For to abstaine from them, as well as to eate them, is in his choice and power. And Augustine in lib. 1. cap. 33. De moribus Ecclesiæ, saith, that abstinence and feasting were both allowed by reason and charitie, nor is any man constrained to forbeare the use of this or that meate, but it is left free to every man, as farre as every mans health doth permit him. And Prosper de vita contemplat. libr. 2. cap. ult. saith, that we ought to fast and abstaine, that we do not binde our selves to the necessity of fasting, lest thereby we should be brought to do a voluntary thing, not of devotion, but of compulsion.

Concerning fasting (saith Primasius, in Roman. capite 14.) there is no law set downe, but every man as hee can, or will. Spiridion did eate flesh freely, as Sozomene testifieth, libro primo, capite undecimo, And it was Montanus that first prescribed lawes of fasting, which Eusebius affirmeth of him, libro quin. capite 16. Telesphorus indeed commanded the Cleargie to fast the Lent, about the yeare 130. And Ercombert King of England, did first command the English men to keepe it in the yeare 640. Sigebert, in Chron. This man, saith Florentius a Monke of Worcester, (speaking of Ercombert) was the first of the Kings of England that commanded the Idols to bee destroyed, and the fast of fortie daies to be observed throughout all his kingdome.

4 This fast of Lent in divers Churches was diuersly observed, both in the time, and also in the kindes of meates. Those that are at Rome (saith Socrates, libro quinto, capite 21.) doe fast three weekes before the Easter, excepting Saturday & Sunday. Those that live in Illyria, and all Greece, and Alexandria, doe beginne their fasts sixe weekes before Easter, calling that time their Pascha. Others, (besides these customes) beginning their fast seaven weekes before Easter, and yet fasting but fifteene dayes onely, equally divided by spaces betweene, doe yet call the whole time, Lent: which breeds no small wonder in mee, that all these dissenting in the number of the dayes, should nevertheless call all their fasts by the same name.

The fast before Easter, though it were but of few dayes, yet was called Lent: perhaps because it consisted of forty hours of day and night, as it is in Eusebius, libro quinto, capite 24. and Leo in his fourth Sermon of Lent, saith, Let us fast on Munday, Wednesday, and Friday, and on Saturday let us watch at S. Peters. Gregory saith, homil. 16. That the Lent was a fast of sixe and thirty dayes. And it is a received opinion, that before his time the Lent began upon Wednesday, because that in the Decretals, in capite quadragesim. de consecrat dist. 5 (which were made after him) the foure dayes before the first Sunday in Lent are added to make up the number of fourty. This doth Ambrose testifie in his foure and thirtieth Sermon, and Cassianus, Col. 21. c. 24. 27. 28. & do teach, that the Lent used alwaies to begin upon the Sunday next after Quinquagesima Sunday. So likewise holdeth Alcuine de divin. offic. capite 40. and Ordo Romanus in capit. de Septuages. and Micrologus capite 49. I confesse there is a Sermon extant amongst Saint Augustines De Tempore, in Feria quarta, which is intituled, A Sermon upon the Wednesday in the beginning of the fast: but that Sermon is none of S. Augustines; and if it be, I say the title is added by some of later time, and that for the reasons before aleaged.

The holy Church (saith Epiphanius, in via comp.) did accustome to keepe all the Lent before the seaven dayes of Easter, in fasting. Now after this fast of 40. dayes, the Church was wont to keep fifty dayes of feast unto the Pentecost.

5 This fast of Lent was whilome very severely observed, in bread & water, without wines or fishes. For the Fathers used to eate drie things, that is, bread and salt, with water: so Epiphanius doth testifie, in fine Panar. They fasted from flesh and wine. So witnesseth Gregorie of Nyssa also, in his oration of loving the poore: and the fourth Councill of Carthage, cap. 85. And Hieron ad Lat. saith, they abstained from oyle and apples: and in another place, in Epitaph. Paula, from wine, liquours, fish, hony, and egges. And Chrysostome, Serm. de ieiun. saith, that the Church abstained from flesh, and wines. Micrologus, cap. 49 saith, Weeare not held to fast the Lent according to the Canons, if that we eate any thing before evening. And Ambrose, Serm. 34. opposeth the faster in Lent unto him that hath dined. Wherefore the Popish fast of Lent, that forbiddeth flesh, and alloweth whit-meates & fish, was not heard of amongst the Fathers. Let those that are to fast (saith Molanus in practic. Theolog. tractat. 3. cap. 11. num. 69.) remember that the Fathers abstained from wine and delicates. And againe, de Canonic. lib. 1 cap. 26. If we looke into the ancient severity and discipline, scarce any one now adaies shall proove himselfe a true faster: for they fast'd untill even; we use to take our dinners.

6 The fast of Lent was observed by some, oftentimes in the yeare, and not alwayes before Easter: there was a fast of Lent imposed upon the penitents, to be observed after Pentecost, as Micrologus recordeth, de observ. Eccl. cap. 23. The Montanists fasted three Lents in the yeare, Hierome unto Marcella, Epist. 54. affirmeth it: and adderh, Wee according to Apostolike tradition doe fast one Lent in the whole yeare, at a time fit for us. And Methodius of Constantinople decreeth of the penitents after abjuration: Let them fast two Lents in continued prayer. Saint Francis, and others kept three, five, six Lents.

7 The Stations amongst the Fathers were solemne and publike fasts, observed in the Church on the dey, from morning untill night. But the Stations of the Church of Rome at this present are not solemnized from morning untill night, nor of the same person, but by others, and others successively observing them: and now adaies the fast is ended ere the Masse doe begin, which is still celebrated after meate. Looke Ambrose his 25. Sermon.

8 Concerning the fastings upon the evens of great feasts, Bernard was the first that ever mentioned them, Ser. de vig. S. Andr. and after him Innocentius the third, De observ. jejun. cap. 1. & 22.

9 That the fasting of Ember weekes is a Tradition of the Apostles, Leo doth testifie in two severall places, De jejun. 7. mens. Ser. 8. & 2. de Pent. But how uncertaine this is, hereby appeareth, that Pope Calixtus the first, in his epistle unto Benedict doth affirme, that he did institute the fast of Ember weeke. And Tertullian, de jejun. doth testifie, that the Catholikes of his time did averre, that the Apostles did impose no burthen of fasting upon them, but only the Paschall fast. And Ambrose in his 44. Sermon affirmes all fasts but the Lent fast, to bee voluntary and at free choice. They are of free choice, saith he, this is the law unto them were are stirred up, but unto this we are compelled.

10 To fast upon Saturday, is expressly forbidden by the Canon of the Apostles, can. 65. and by Socrates in his Epistle to the Phrygians, wherein he is called a murtherer of Christ, that fasteth upon Saturday or Sunday: yet the Romane Church doth now observe this fast.

11 Pope Agapetus (de consecrat. 1, distinct. 1. in the yeare 535.) did first ordaine Processions upon Sundaies, as Caranza also testifieth. And the Arians of Constantinople had done the same before, which Chrysostome both imitated, and augmented in number and solemnity. So doth Sozomene affirme, hist. eccl. lib. 8. cap. 8.

Sacraments.

1 THat there are seaven Sacraments of the new Testament properly & truly so called, no Father for a thousand yeares doth either affirme or acknowledge. The Sacraments, saith Isidore, (that lived 600. yeares after Christ, lib. origin. 6. capite 19.) are Baptisme and Chrisme: and the bodie and blood of Christ. Pascu. de cœna, about the yeare 900. saith, The Sacraments of Christ in the Catholike Church are baptisme, and the body and blood of our Lord. Hugo de sancto Victore in his booke of the sacraments, doth set downe seaven of them: but he excludeth penance, and taketh in holy water for one. Nay, some of the Fathers doe expressely affirme, that washing of the feet is a Sacrament, so holdeth Cyprian de ablu. pedum. Ambrose, libro 3. de Sacram. cap. 1. and Bernard. Serm. de cœna Dom. Lumbard, and his succeeding traine of schoole-men, were the first that ever directly affirmed, that there were seaven sacraments.

2 The Fathers though they doe sometimes give the name of sacraments unto other ceremonies, yet doe acknowledge baptisme, and the Lords Supper to bee the true Sacraments, and the chiefe. Indeed they doe call other things Sacraments, but not in that respect and value that they call these two. So Augustine. de Symb. ad Catechu. libro 2. capite 6. saith, that the 2 Sacraments of the Church flowed out of the side of Christ. And Epist. 118. hee saith, that the Sacraments are in number most few. And Rupertus Tuitiensis, De victoria verb. Dei, libro 12 capite 12. sketch this question: What are the chiefest Sacraments of our salvation? & he answereth, Sacred Baptisme, and the holy Eucharist of Christs body and blood, the double gift of the holy Ghost, the one given for remission of sinnes, and the other for the dividing of the divers and multiplied graces. There are some Sacraments, saith Hugo de Sanct. Victor. l. de sacr. part. 9. capite 6. wherein our salvation doth principally consist, and is conceived: Such are the water of Baptisme, and the receiving of Christs bodie and blood. There are other, which though they do not necessarie unto salvation, (because that may be had without them) yet they are helpefull unto sanctification; as, Matthew of Paris in his chronicle writing of William the Conqueror, saith, that it was was the opinion of the Fathers, and they had written that the sacraments which are used in the Church, namely, Baptisme, Chrisme, and the Lords Eucharist, have their effect — by the co-operation of the spirit invisible. Alexander Hales, part. 4 q. 8. art. 2. doth averre plainely that Christ did by himselfe ordaine but onely two sacraments, Baptisme, and the Eucharist: and he prooveth it by the flowing of water and blood out of the side of Christ.

3. The name of sacrament in the Fathers is sometimes taken largely, for any mystery, signe, or figure of some holy and spirituall thing. Augustine in his 5. epistle saith, Every signe of a holy thing is a sacrament. In this sense to Alex. 1 epist. 1. holy water is a sacrament: as also in Aug. l. 2. de peccat. merit. & remiss. c. 26. holy bread, & in Aug. l. 19. cont. Faust. c. 14. the signe of the crosse, &c. To speake all in a word, in this sense there are rather seaventy sacraments then seaven. But sometimes the word [sacrament] is taken properly for the visible signe and seale of the covenant of grace: and in this sense there are not seaven, but two sacraments in the Church. This double understanding of the word [sacrament] Bellarmine himselfe doth acknowledge.

4 Neither doe all the Schoole men and canonists acknowledge seaven sacraments of the new Testament, called properly sacraments. For Durandus in his first edition of his worke upon the sentences, 4. dist. 26. denied Matrimony to bee a sacrament, as Capreolus doth testifie, in 4. dist. 26. But afterwards in the same distinction, quæst. 3. he mitigated his opinion, and put downe, that Matrimony is not a sacrament properly called so, and vniuocally, as the rest of the sacraments are, And so holdeth Lumbard himselfe, 4. dist. 26. As Thomas. 4. dist. 26. quæst. 2. ad 4. doth testifie. And so also holdeth Hostiensis, in Summa. lib. 1. titulo de sacram. non iteran: Bernards Glosse, cap. cum in ecclesia, de Sim. & cap. honora. 32. qu. 2. And Paludane who auerreth this to bee the common opinion of the Canonists, in 4. dist. 26. qu. 1. Some doe also deny that Matrimony lawfully contracted betweene Christians, is a sacrament: so doth Cajetane in a little worke of his concerning Matrimony. qu. 1. and Melchior Canus in his Relection of Penitence part. 5. and at large, loco. com. lib. 8. c. 5. where for his opinion he quoteth many testimonies out of the sacred all Epistles, Councels, Fathers, and Schoole men. Of this opinion is Francis a Victoria in his summe de sacram. summa. 2. 441. and Martinus Ledesma, tom. 2. 4. dist. 44. art. 3. Now many doe holde that Matrimony is not onely a sacrament of the new testament, (as the Councell of Trent, Sess. 8. can. 1. will have it,) but that it is also a sacrament of the old Testament. So will Hales 4. dist. 26. q. 1. a. 2. and Bonaventure also, ibid. 26. qu. 2. and (not that lived before the Schoolemen) H. de S. Victore, l. 2. de Sacr. part. 8. cap. 13. & lib. 2. part. 11. cap. 2. and of this minde are many of the later Writers, as Rossensis, Hosius in confess. Petric. cap. 55. Pighius in Controv. 10. and Alphonsus à Castro, in the word nuptiæ, haræs. who defends this as the common opinion of the Divines; as also Pesantes à Soto, tell. 2. de Matrim. Catharinus in the question of Matrimonie, expounded in the word Sacrament. Ephes. 5. either of the incarnation of Christ, or of the first marriage of Adam and Evah: and addeth, By these opposite questions (to confesse the truth) it is not so apparant by the Scriptures, that Matrimony is a Sacrament in that sense, that the other sixe are called. But hee rejoyneth, Because of the universall consent of the Church, wee confesse Matrimonie to be a sacrament, and not onely because of that law, which commaundeth us to captivate our understanding unto the obeysance of Faith, but also because they doe inferre Reasons for it.

5 Ordination of Bishops is not truly and properly a Sacrament, saith Lumbard, 4. distinct. 24. and so doth Alexander Hales, Thomas, and Bonaventure. To whom of the later sort agree Dominicus Soto in 4. distinct. 24. quæst. 2. artic. 3. & de Iure & Justitia, lib. 10. quæst. 1. artic. 2. And Josephus Anglus, in 4. distinct. 24. artic. 11. There are some also that deny Deaconship, and the other lower Orders to be Sacraments properly: of which sort Durandus is, in 4. distinct. 24. quæst. 2. who alleageth many reasons on this side. And Cajetans in 1. tom. opusc. tra. 11. inveating of the manner of giving and receiving Orders: & in 3 part. Thom quæst. 64. artic. 4. ad 3. with Francis à Victoria in his Summa, num. 226. Thom. upon the fourth of the Sentan. distinct. 24. quæst. 1. artic. 4. saith, that the forme of Baptisme and the Eucharist, are extant in the Scripture, but the formes of the other Sacraments are not so.

6 Our Sacraments are said to be of greater vertue then the Sacraments of the old law, not because these did not signifie & conferre grace, and the other doe confer and bestow it, but because the doctrine wherewith they belong, and the manner of revelation is more apparant, and because they containe Christ already given, & not promised. Looke Augustine against the Manichees Faustus 6. 19. c. 14. & 16. And for the Schoole-men, Hales, part 4. q. 7. Bonaventure, Scotus, Durandus, Ric. de Gandavo, Ric. in 4. dist. 1. (he confesseth that the remission did give grace ex opere operato by the worke wrought.) And amongst the later sort Joseph Anglus in 4. distinct. 1. artic. 3. holdeth the same, as doth Francis à Victoria, de Sacr. num. 2. adding furthermore, that this is the doctrine of all the doctors.

The worke wrought.

1 THat the Sacraments doe giue grace by the worke wrought, that is, that the action of the Minister, or the element of it selfe, by a corporall vertue, doth actiuely, effectually, and immediately giue grace, it hath not beene helde by the Church for whole twelue hundred yeares: but is a scholasticall fiction, approoued by the Councell of Trent.

2 The Fathers say that the Sacraments doe giue grace, but not properly: (as the saw doth cut, not properly) but symbolically, in a mysticall respect, by reason of their signification and promise annexed vnto them; because when wee vse them aright as the tokens of grace, God giueth that grace immediately. The man (saith Hieronie in Isa.) doth but giue the water, but God giueth the holy Ghost, whereby wee are purged from filth, and our bloudy sinnes are purified. In like manner Augustine libro 15. de Trinit. capite 26. saith. How then can it be that he is not God that giueth the holy Ghost? Nay rather how great a God is hee that giueth God? For neuer a disciple that he had, could giue the holy Ghost: they did pray that it might bee infused vpon those: vpon whom they laid their hands, but they infused it not themselues: which custome the Church doth now obserue in his ouerseers. And in his questions vpon Leuiticus, libro 3. quest. 84. Moyses (saith hee) in his ministry did sanctifie by visible sacraments, but the Lord by his invisible grace through the holy Spirit, wherein lies all the fruit and the worth of the visible sacraments; for without that sanctification of invisible grace, what are the visible sacraments good for? A little after: Therefore here we gather, that some haue had invisible sanctification and the benefit thereof without the visible sacraments, ——— but that visible sanctification which is performed by the visible sacraments, cannot be of any value without that other invisible sanctification. Who so thinketh (saith another, viz. Author. qq. de Veteri & Nouo test. quest. 59.) that Baptisme is after a carnall manner, this man is not spirituall: nor can hee obtaine the gift of God, that beleeueth himselfe changed by water, nor by faith; for the water is seene, but that spirit which is not seene, worketh faith in him. Although God doe giue the Sacrament of grace by wicked men (saith Paschasius de corp. & sang. Domini, cap. 15.) yet he giueth not grace it selfe, but by himselfe in whom is remission of sins. And to this assertion the schoolmen themselues doe agree. We may not by any meanes say (saith Bonauenture 4. dist. 1. q. 3.) that there is grace essentially contained in the Sacraments, as water in a vessell, or medicines in a boxe: to vnderstand them so, is erroneous; But they are saide to containe grace, because they do signifie it, and because grace is alwaies giuen in them (vnlesse there be a defect in him that receiues them) it must be so vnderstood, that grace is in the soule, & not in the visible signes. This also hee teacheth, q. 4. and herein hee is followed by Scotus, Durand. Richardus, Occam, Marsilius, and Biel in 4. d. 1. & of the later writers very many.

3 Some Diuines doe deny that grace is giuen by the Sacrament of matrimonie, amongst whom the Master of the Sentences is the cheife, who denieth it in his fourth booke and 26 distinction: And so doth Durandus in his third question vpon the same distinction, with which many Canonists take part. And Godfridus for one, tit. de Sacram. non iterandis, in his summe. The Sacraments (quoth hee) are otherwise diuided, for there are some, wherein grace is giuen; —— and othersome wherein grace is not given, as Matrimonie contracted. Hostiensis in like manner, lib. 2. tit. de sacram. non iterandis, saith; This is the third diuision of Sacraments, because there are some that doe giue grace, —— and othersome wherein grace is not given, as Matrimony, eyther in contraction or consummation. Yea, the Extravagants also hold this opinion, de simonia, cum in ecclesiæ corpore. And Bernard in Apparatu, saith, We are forbidden to take any thing for the benedictions of those that marie, because by them grace is given, but to give or take any thing for matrimonie, is no sinne, —— because though it bea sacrament, yet grace is not given thereby. Looke also in the Decretalls, capite Homonatur, 32. quest. 2. and in other Canonists, part of whom Covarruuias doth alleage in his Epitome of the fourth booke of the Decretalls, Part. 2. §. 2. and part are cited in the Censures of the Glosse of the Canon Law, in Gratian. num. 16 36 55. and in Gregonies decretals, num. 25. 29. in Sextum, num. 11.

The Ministers intention.

1 THat opinion which holdeth Baptisme to be of no force without the mentall and actuall intention of the Baptizer, was not knowne vnto Innocentius, as Angelus testifieth in his Summe, where hee saith, That it is not necessary vnto true Baptisme, for the Baptizer to haue in his minde to doe that which the Church doth. The Priest (saith Chrysostome Hom. in Iohan. 85.) lendeth both tongue and hands. So Nicholas the Pope saith vnto the Bulgars demands: You affirme, that there is a Iew amongst you, you know not whether hee bee a Christian or a Panim, who hath baptized many of you; Truly if hee haue baptized the in the name of the Trinity, they are not to be rebaptized. There is no other intention of the minister required (saith Catharinus tract. de Intent. Minist. Sacram.) but that hee intend to doe that outwardly which the Church doth, though he himselfe neither beleeue that there is Church, nor that there is any spirituall effect of Baptisme. But this was some invention of the schoolemen who could not make new articles of faith, and if this opinion be admitted, I would faine know of the Papists, how they are able to shunne Idolatry in the worshipping of the Sacrament in their masse for they know that no man can be certaine of the intention of him that consecrateth it,

The Character.

AN unremoueable character, which may be imprinted in the soule, and consist there without grace, euen in a man damned, is never spoken of either in the Scriptures or Fathers. The first tradition of this Character (saith Durandus l. 4. dist. 4. q. 1.) we haue from Dionysius Areopagita, who seemeth to agree with what we haue said of the Character: for hee reciteth a certaine custome obserued in the Primitive Church at Baptismes of men growne, namely the Bishop did lay his hands vpon him or her that was to be baptized, signing them with the signe of the crosse, and commanding them to bee written amongst the names of the Christians, thenceforth to be with them admitted vnto the other mysteries: and this exterior rite in Baptisme was the characterizing of them, nor did hee meane any other Character. Scotus in Sent. 4. dist. 6. q. 9. thinketh it vnpossible to proue the Character either out of Scriptures or Fathers, but reacheth that wee must beleeue it, because of the authoritie of the Church. And Biel. in 4. dist. 6. quæst. 2. doubteth whether the Church haue defined that there is such a Character: adding that there is but one authoritie (namely of Innocent the 3. cap. Majores, extra. de Baptismo) which maketh for the Character.

2 The ancient writers by the tearme Character doe sometimes vnderstand the eternall forme, order and ceremonie of Baptisme, or Baptisme it selfe: and in their writings, to impresse or infixe the character, is to baptize or to professe the faith in Baptisme. I attend vnto the faith in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost; saith Augustine. Serm. de symb. cum Emerit. this is the Character of my Lord and Emperour reuolting this Character did hee command souldiers (in former competitions) that they should make an end in all those whom they gathered vnto his tents, saying, Goe baptize all nations in the name of the Father, the Sonne and the Holy Ghost. Paul did feare, because hee knew that this Character was commanded by God to be infixed vpon all men ——— and a little before, What meane I when I say, the Apostata hath not sealed with his owne Character? Donatus hath not baptized in Donatus his name. And in his second booke against Parmenian cap. 13. he saith, the Character is in the bodie: And cap. 208. hee calleth Baptisme it selfe, the Character, lib. 2. contra lit. Petiliani.

3 The Character or seale of baptisme in the Fathers doth oftentimes signifie the gift & grace of the holy spirit. We are signed with the spirit, saith Ambrose de spi. Sanct l. 1. cap. 6. that we may keepe his splendor, & image, and grace; which is still the spirituall seale. And of this opinion is Theodoret, Haymo, Primasius Anselme, and Theophylact. upon the 2 Cor. 1. v. 21. We as his sonne (saith Chrysostome, hom. 2. in Eph.) are signed with the holy Spirit.

Baptisme.

1 THe Fathers held Baptisme to bee absolutely necessarie in those that are of yeares of discretion. Testimonies.

The Catechumenist (saith Ambrose, lib. de his qui initiantur, cap. 4.) beleeueth: —— but vnlesse hee be baptized —— hee cannot obtaine forgiuenesse of sinnes: nor partake of the gift of spirituall grace. To obtaine the kingdome of heaven (saith Augustine, lib. 4. de Bap. 6. 21.) the Catechumenist wanteth baptisme, euen as the wicked that is baptized wanteth the true conversion: & tract. 13. in Ioan. How well soeuer the Catechumenist doth profit, yet beareth he the burthen of his sinnes, nor can he lay it off, untill he attaine unto Baptisme. The same likewise he averreth in his 2. booke, de anim. cap. 9. From that moment (saith the Author, de fide ad Petr. cap. 3.) wherein our Saviour said, unlesse a man bee borne againe, ——— without the Sacrament of Baptisme no man can obtaine heaven, or everlasting life, saving those that being without Baptisme, shedde their bloud for Christ in the Church. We beleeve (saith the Author of the booke, de recta fidem. c. 74. in August.) that the way of saluation is open onely unto the baptized. We beleeve that no Catechumenist, though dying in good works, can be capable of everlasting life, except by martyrdome, wherein all the sacred things of Baptisme are fulfilled. Nazianzen, Orat. 40. de Bap. saith, that the Catechumenists are upon the shore-bord of piety, unto which they are cast by Baptisme. And again, that those are deprived of Baptisme, either by infirmitie, or some other sudden chance, where by they are all debarred from the enioying of good things, & of the fire it, Thus hold these Fathers, (what they deny, this contrition satisfaction, or obtaine the first grace, though there be in it a desire of Baptisme, distinct. 4. q. 2.) hath not yet (as I doe know) any generall helpe for the infants that are as yet in the wombe. But unto whom is the thought of the Lord revealed? —— Hee therefore thought good to institute remedies against this malady of sinne in the Church, by ministring the Sacraments unto such as may be knowne by the Church: but the remedies for those that are not yet come into the world, those hath he reserved in his owne onely power, whom at his owne pleasure hee can both blesse and sanctifie without other exteriour remedie; as we reade in the Scripture: hee hath alreadie dealt with some. Moreover, that which is but a privilege unto few, can hee impare unto whomsoever he will, who hath not bound his owne power unto the Sacraments. Caietane upon the third part of Thomas his summe, quest. 68. art. 2. and 2. averreth, that in the case of necessitie the desire of baptisme by the parents is sufficient for the salvation of the children. And this hee there confirmes by sundry reasons. And upon the same question, art. 11. hee proveth, that the child being in danger in the wombe may bee saved by baptisme, not done indeed, but in the desire of the parents; with some blessing of the child, and offering of it unto the Deitie, with invocation of the Trinitie. And this is very earnestly defended by some of the later Writers, as Tilmannus Segebergensis. lib. de 7. Sacram. cap. 1. Thomas Elisius Neapolitanus, in clipeo adversus hæreses cap. de Bap. art. 3. and George Cassander, lib. de bap. infantium.

2 Concerning infants, Augustine, de orig. anima, lib. 1. & 3. cap. 9. teacheth us this: Believe not, neither teach that infants dying before Baptisme, can bee capable of the remission of their originall sinne. Teach not this if thou wilt be a Christian. And this hee teacheth, vir. epist. 28. ad Hieron. & de natura & grat. cap. 8. So doth Fulgentius, de fide ad Pet. cap. 30. Chrysostome, hom. 40. in 1 Cor. Ambrose, de Abraham. lib. 2. cap. vlt. Isidore, lib. 2. de offic. cap. 24. Gregory, lib. 7. epist. 53. and Innocentius III. in cap. Missa de Bap. We are not ignorant (saith the Author of the calling of the Gentiles, lib. 2. cap. 8. or rather, 24.) how great a cause of slothfulnesse it would be unto the heart of the faithfull, if in the Baptisme of Infants there were nothing to bee feared of others negligence, and of their mortality. This hold they. But some of these, & chiefly Augustine, and Ambrose, being out of their fervent disputations with the Pelagians, who denied originall sinne, and many others, doe sometimes abate much from the strictnesse of that their assertion. For so doth Ambrose in his oration upon the death of Valentinian the yonger, speaking unto the sisters of Valentinian. But, I perceive, you lament (saith he) because Valentinian did not enjoy the Sacrament of Baptisme. Tell me, what is there in you besides a will and a desire? But this desire hee had long since, e'r he —— made a member of our Head Christ, and signified, that he would forth with be baptized of me.—Hath not he therefore that grace which he desired? hath not he what he required? And a little after, Doth this prove you that these mysteries were not celebrated with solemnity? then are not the Martyrs crowned that suffered being Catechumenists: for they should not bee crowned, unlesse they be entred into our mysteries: but if they be washed in their own blood, then did his (Valentinians) piety and good desire purifie him. And above in the same oration: I did lose him whom I hoped to have regenerated in the Gospell: But hee did not lose that grace hee to desired. That suffering doth sometimes fulfill the place of Baptisme, S. Cyprian gathered no small proofe (saith Augustine, de Bap. contra Donatist. lib. 4. cap. 22.) from the unbaptized theefe, to whom our Saviour said, To day shalt thou be with me in Paradise, whichthing I my selfe often times considering, doe find that the defect of Baptisme is supplied not onely by suffering for the name of Christ, but also by faith and conversion of heart, in that peradventure the strictnesse of the Church doe not allow conveniency for the celebration of this mystery of Baptisme — therefore how greatly availeth the zeal of the Apostle is [much the more we believe unto righteousnesse, and with the mouth the confession is made unto salvation] with out the visible Sacrament of baptisme, was declared in that theefe: and it then invisibly fulfilled when the mystery of baptisme is wanting by reason of instant necessity, and not of contempt of religion. And in the 23. chapter, thus: Even as in the theefe that through necessity lacked the corporall baptisme, his salvation was perfected, because through his godly faith hee had that baptisme spiritually: so when we have this piety ready, though we want that which the theefe wanted by reason of necessitie, yet is our salvation established unto us. And in his questions upon Leviticus, lib. 3. cap. 84. he affirmeth, that hereby it is gathered, that some have bin invisibly sanctified without the visible sacraments. Bernard Epist. 77. having alleaged these foresaid testimonies out of Ambrose and Augustine, joyneth this: Beleeve me, from these two pillars (Ambrose and Augustine) I am very hardly withdrawne. I say, that with these I confesse my selfe either to know aright or to erre, believing that a man may bee saved onely by faith, and a desire to receive this sacrament, though death afterwards, or any other invincible power doe prevent and anticipate the fulfilling of this godly desire. And it is worthy observation, whether it was for this, that our Saviour when he said, whosoever believeth and is baptized shall be saved, out of his head and vigilancie did not repeate, Whosoever is not baptized, but onely, Whosoever believeth not shall be condemned. Hereby intimating unto us, that onely faith is sometimes sufficient unto salvation, and that without it nothing is sufficient. Innocentius the third in his Decretalls in the chapter, Apostolicam de presbytero non baptizato, writeth thus unto the Bishop of Cremona: I answer thus unto your demand, that the Priest whom you wrote unto me to have died without the water of baptisme, because he continued in the faith of our holy mother the Church, and in the confession of the name of Christ, is absolved from his originall sinne, and hath attained the joyes of his celestiall countrey. This wee doe undoubtedly affirme. Looke also in the chapt. Debitum de Baptismo, &c. In like manner Gerson in the third part of his Sermon upon the nativitie of the Virgin Mary, saith: It is evidens that God doth not tye the mercy of his salvation unto the common lawes of Christian doctrine, or unto the sacraments themselves in such manner, but that without prejudice of the said lawes, hee can sanctifie the children that are not yet come forth of the wombe, with the baptisme of his grace, and the vertue of the holy Ghost. Wherefore it is the duty of women with child, —— diligently to pourre forth their prayers unto God, that if the child yet unborne doe perchance die before it can bee partaker of the grace of baptisme, that Iesus Christ that most high Priest would vouchsafe to consecrate and bleese it with his mercy, by prevenring [all impurenesse, sinnes] in the baptisme of his holy and blessed spirit. The Church (saith Bles. in 4. distinct.

3 The Fathers after the same manner held the supper of the Lord to bee necessarie for infants unto salvation, by an Apostolike tradition, Dionysius Areopagita, De Eccles. Hierarchi. cap. 2. part. 3. after the receavall of some rites of baptisme, adjoyneth: Lastly, the Priest bringeth him being thus made perfect, unto the most blessed Eucharist, and giveth him the deifying communion of the consummating sacraments. And likewise cap. 7. part. 3. This also (if the bishops doe teach Divinitie unto unfit auditors) seemeth rightly ridiculous, that infants not yet being able to understand any divine thing, should bee made partakers of sacred baptisme, and of the highest signes of the most blessed communion.

Will not those [infants] say at the judgement: Wee have done no evill, nor have we contemned Gods Sacraments to runne into prophane corruption, it is another sinfulnesse that hath destroyed us, our parents to us have proved parricides?

That which your brotherhood saith, that they [Pelagians] doe teach of infants, (saith Innocentius I. unto Augustine, apud Augustin. epist. 93.) that they may be signified with the reward of blessednes without baptisme, is most foolish: for unlesse they eate the flesh of the sonne of man, and drinke his blood, they shall not have life in them. This is also Ambrose his opinion, Libr. de his qui sacris mysteriis initiantur. cap. 7. and 8. and Augustine, lib. 1. de peccat. meris & remiss. cap. 20. as these words of his doe testifie: Dare any man affirme that this sentence belongeth nor unto infants? and that they may have life in them without the participation of this body and blood? because hee doth not say, Whosoever eates not, as hee saith of baptisme, whosoever is not borne againe; but, unlesse you eate, speaking as it were unto them who can heare and understand him, which infants cannot doe? But he that holdeth this, doth not observe that if this saying binde not all, —— it is needlesse for the elder age to observe it. And in the same booke and 24. chapter, From whence but from an ancient and Apostolike tradition (as I thinke) by which they hold it as a doctrine grounded in the Church of Christ, that no man can attaine either to the kingdome of God or to everlasting life, without baptisme or participation of the Lords supper. — If therefore so many and so great testimonies of Divinitie doe all consent, that neither salvation nor life eternall is to be hoped for of any man, without baptisme and the bodie and blood of Christ: in vaine doe we promise salvation unto infants without these. This August. doth almost every where affirme, vid. epist. 23. & 107. & contr. 2. epist. Pelag. l. 1. c. 22. & cont. Iul. l. 1. cap. 2. & 43. cap. 12. and to doth the Councill of Toledo, can. 11. Ordo Romanus; Alcuinus de divi offic. cap. de Sa. Pasc. and Rabanus Maurus in his first booke de Instit. Cleric. cap. 29.

4 The Fathers used some rites and ceremonies in Baptisme, which are now admitted in all places universally: as kissing of the child which was to be baptized: In Cyprian. l. 3. ep. 8 use of milke and honie: in Tertul. lib. 1. cont. Marcion. use of milke and wine: in Hieronie in Isa. cap. 54. washing of the feet; which Cyprian saith, was instituted of Christ, to be observed for ever. lib. de unitate Christian. Augustine reckoneth a great company of rites now quite neglected: as he is Symbol. ad Catechum. lib. 4. cap. 1. & he shewes an use for the Baptizer to blow in the face of the Baptized, and also the party Baptized used to exufflate the Devill whom he renounced. This testifieth Cyprian, or rather the author of the booke De duplici Martyrio. Thou hast renounced perpetuall enmitie [with the devill] thou hast renounced all his pompes and pleasures, thou hast blowne them away, thou hast hissed them out, and sworne unto the doctrine of thy Redeemer.

And Rabanus de Instit. lib. 1. cap. 27. Arnobius, Clarius, saith, that the wicked powers are exufflated and blowne away by the baptized.

Then when he hath placed him [being arrected and reaching his hands towards the West] saith the Author of the Romane rite] he adjureth him under him to exufflate. So he doth thrice, and with his own rehearse the words of his abrenunciation: but the Romish Church hath hath alreadie long agoe abolished this custome and ceremonie.

*His commentarie upon both articles is most sublimely and laudulently taken out of the late edition. Looke for the like in the edition of Paris 1511. or any other antient one.

6 In ancient times the water of baptisme was consecrated and blessed with prayers and ceremonies of oyle and the cresse, before the use and administration of it: and this they [erroniously] held necessary, because the water herby might receive the vertue of regenerating. This is mentioned by Cyprian in his 70 Epistle: by Ambrose in his first booke de sacramentis ca. 5. et de iis qui mysteriis instituntur, and by other authors, Apud Aug. Tom 9.

7 In the beginning of the Church (the purest times) they used to baptize out of the church in wells and rivers. Walfrid. Strabo de rebus eccles. c. 26. testifieth this in these words: Wee must know that at the first the beleevers were baptized simply in floods and fountaines. So was the Eunuch in the Acts of the Apostles. But in processe of time they ordained vessels for baptisme, called Fonts, but these at the first were used without the Church. You first entred the porch of the house of the font, saith Cyril in his first Catech. Thou built that Font that standeth betweene the two Churches, saith Paulinus in his 12. Epistle to Severus. Such a saying hath Nazianzene also in one of his orations. Then at length these vessells were appointed to be placed in the Parish Churches, by the decretalls. dist. 4 cap. 106.

The Sacrifice of the Masse.

1 A Sacrifice of Christ in the Masse, being proper, reall, and propitiatorie for the living and the dead, in the hand of the priest, was not admitted into the Church for the space of twelve hundred yeares after Christ: for is was not knowne in Lumbards time, lib. 4. dist. 12. And it differeth in all respects from the Sacrifice that the Fathers speake of. For first, they held the Sacrifice without transubstantiation, as hereafter shall bee manifested: but this is not so held. Secondly, the Fathers Sacrifice was offered by the whole Church, being the oblation of all the faithfull. Wee all (saith Iustine, In dialogo cum Tryphone) how many soever we be that are called after the name of Iesus Christ,—are made truly the Priests of God, as he himselfe testifieth, saying, that every where hee would have pure and acceptable Sacrifices offered him. And this is also proveable out of Augustine, Contra Faustum, lib. 20. cap. 18. Now the Popish Sacrifice is offered by the priest. Thirdly, the Fathers Sacrifice was sanctified by the faith of those that offered: Every mans Sacrifice (saith Augustine, Contra hæreos Petilian. lib. 2. cap. 52.) is such as—hee himselfe is that commeth to receive it: all things are pure unto the pure: yea in the very Mis-all the priest prayeth unto God to accept

A that Sacrifice as the Sacrifice of Noah: whereas on the contrary side the Papists Sacrifice doth sanctifie those that doe offer it. Fourthly, the Fathers Sacrifice was the whole action of the Supper: this new one is but the offering of the bread: To knit up all in a word; that was a typicall and figurative Sacrifice: this a substantiall one accounted, wherein Christ himselfe is offered unto God.

2 The fathers used to call the Supper of the Lord, or the whole action of the Supper, a Sacrifice: as they did also the whole forme of Gods religious worship: and that for divers respects, and in divers meanings. First, because there was therein an offering and giving of almes, bread, wine, &c. which are a spiritu-
B all Sacrifice, out of which the signes themselves in the communion of the Eucharist were taken, and the almes were bestowed upon the poore. But Christ (saith Irenæus, lib. 4. cap. 32.) giving counsell to his Disciples to offer the first fruits of his creatures unto God, not as to one that stood in neede thereof, but to shew themselves neither unfruitfull, nor ungratefull, tooke the creature of bread, and gave thankes, saying this is my body: And in like manner he confessed the cup, which unto us is of a creature, to bee his blood, and taught us a new oblation of the new Testament, which the Church receiving from the Apostles, doth offer throughout the Vniversall world, unto God that giveth us nourishment, being the first fruits of his gifts in the
C new Testament. Thou art rich and wealthy (saith Cyprian, lib. de oper. & Eleemos.) and dost thou thinke that thou dost celebrate the Lords mysteries, when thou never regardest the almes basket? comming to these mysteries without Sacrifice, and taking part of that Sacrifice which the poore hath offered? Amongst those, one Hilarine (saith August. Retract. lib. 2. cap. 11.) being moved, spoke bitterly against a custome then used at Carthage, of singing hymnes out of the Psalmes at the Altar, either before the oblation, or after the offering was distributed to D the people. It is lawfull to offer nothing at the Altar (saith the fourth canon of the Apostles) but fresh eares of corne,——and incense at the time when the holy oblation is celebrated. And the Romane Missall saith, Lord receive the prayers of thy people, with the oblations of their Sacrifices.——Secondly, they used the name of Sacrifice metonymically, because in these oblations there was a repesentation of that Sacrifice that was offered upon the cresse, or like a spectacle or shew wherein the Sacrifice of Christs body and blood accomplished on the crosse, is shewed and delineate unto the eyes of the faithfull, described as it were in a table: and in this sense it is called unbloody: as a Tragedy which represented some bloody warre, is called an Vnbloody warre. For signes and Images are called by the names of those things whereof whereof they are signes and Images: so that by this it appeares that an unbloudy Sacrifice is no reall Sacrifice. We offer (saith Eusebius, lib. 5. ca. 1. 0. de demonst.) an unbloody, and reasonable Sacrifice. And Clement in his constitutions lib. 6. cap. 23. saith, that all the bloodie Sacrifices of unreasonable creatures, were by Christ changed into a reasonable, unbloody, & mysticall Sacrifice, which is celebrated in remembrance of his death, by the signes of his bodie and blood. Wee celebrate an unbloodie sacrifice by our duty in the Churches, saith the Councill of Ephesus unto Nestorius. In Basils Liturgie, the offering is called the unbloodie sacrifice of mindes and soules. And Lumbard in the 4. of his sentences dist. 12. denieth that that which the priest offereth, is truly and properly a sacrifice, a propitiation, but he will have it so called, because it is a memorial and a representation of the true and sacred immolation and sacrifice which was offered upon the altar of the crosse. And a little after, These annuall commemorations doe but onely represent that which was done long agoe: and so make us to bee moved, as if wee saw the Lord upon the crosse. In like manner Thomas Aquinas 3. part. q. 83. art. 1. saith, that the celebration of the Sacrament it called immolation for two reasons: first of all, because as Augustine saith, Signes are called by the names of the things whereof they are signes, secondly, because by the Sacraments we are made partakers of the death of Christ our Lord. There is not therefore any iteration of that sacrifice which was finished upon the crosse, and is held by the Fathers to bee the onely and singular sacrifice. So it is held by Augustine in three or foure severall places, viz. Enchirid. ad Laurent. cap. 33. & de Trinitate lib. 3. cap. 13. & lib. 3. contra secundam epist. Pelag. cap. 6. Thirdly, the Sacrament is called a sacrifice by a metonymie, because it is a commemoration, and also a representation unto God the Father of the Sacrifice of Christ offered upon the crosse. In this sacrifice (saith the author of the booke de fide ad Petr. cap. 19. there is a thanksgiving, and a commemoration of Christs bodie which hee offereth for us, and of his blood which he the same Christ shed for us. We offer no diversitie of sacraments, as the high Priest, (saith Chrysostome Hom. 17. in Hebræos) but still one and the same, or rather wee make a commemoration of a sacrifice. And Ambrose lib. 4. de sacram. cap. 6. saith, Therefore in memorie of his passion, and resurrection,—wee offer unto thee as a sacrifice——: his bread.—— But this oblation is intentionall, not reall, and it is by the Fathers so called, after S. Pauls phrase, as they call it unbloodie. Looke Eusebius his testimonie, afore-cited, lib. 1. de demon. Euang. and Clemens. And in this sense the faithfull, in their prayers, doe offer Christ as a sacrifice, unto his Father for their sinnes, in being wholly caryed away in

A their mindes and affections unto that onely and true sacrifice, thereby to procure and obtaine Gods grace & favour unto them. Fourthly, it is called a sacrifice, because it is an application of the sacrifice offered upon the crosse, unto our selves by faith, by which we are as it were truely sprinkled with the blood of
B Christ. When the faithfull God offered (saith Chrysostome lib. 3. de Sacerdotio) it the Priest bowed upon the sacrifice, and powring forth his prayers there, pitty and all the communicants cast as it were a bloudy mist, that precious blood, doest thou think that the fire so swift doth the earth, or amongst mortall men doth not the dew, or rain, unlesse (as it were) by a divine the heavens, where being lightned of all earthly cogitations, thou dost with a pure and naked eye and soule, fall into a contemplation of the celestiall powers? Christ is offered upon the Crosse, and there was offered unto him himselfe (saith Lumbard 4. dist. 12. in fin.) & ibi he is daily offered in the Sacrament, because there is the commemoration of that sacrifice which was done but once. Thomas Aquin. 3. p. q. 83. art. 1. saith, that the celebration of the Sacrament is called a sacrifice, because by the Sacraments wee are made partakers of Christs death. In this sense was the celebration and participation of the Lords Supper, called the offering of the sacrifice, untill 800. yeares after Christ. Regino. Chron. lib. 2. It remained now my sonne (saith Adrian the 2. Pope, unto Lotharius) that you come unto S. Peters Confession, where we, by Gods help, will offer the saving sacrifice, not for much for the health of C your body, as your soule, wherein you must partake with us, that by this participation of Christs body, you may deserve to be incorporate againe into the Church, from whom you seemed to be separated. And then the solemnitie of the Masse being ended, the Pope inviteth the King unto the Table of Christ, and taking the body and blood of the Lord in his hand, hee speaketh thus unto him: If thou dost know thy selfe guiltlesse of this forbidden—sinne of adultery,——come unto this table confidently, and receive this Sacrament of eternall salvation to the benefit of thy soule, and the forgivenesse of thy sins.
D Fifthly, it is called a sacrifice, because of the sacrifice of prayers, praises, and thankesgiving: from whence the whole Supper it selfe the Eucharist. Iustin. in Apolog. 2. describing the manner of celebrating the Lords Supper used at that day amongst the Christians, saith thus: We all arise and offer our prayers, which being finished, bread, wine, and water is brought forth, and he that is chiefe, offereth his prayers and thankesgiving, as he can, and the people sing unto him. It be fitteth us (saith Irenæus lib. 5. cap. 34.) to offer our oblation unto God, and so fit we our selves to be stirred unto God the Creator, in pure doctrine, and sincere without hypocrisie, in sure hope, in fervent love, offering the first fruits of all creatures unto him: and this pure oblation the Church onely offereth unto God the Creator: offering it with thanksgiving. Lastly, it is called a sacrifice by a Synecdoche, because in the supper we offer our selves unto God, to be consecrated unto him, and serve him in body and soule. This is the sacrifice of the Christians (saith Augustine, de Civit. Dei, lib. 10. cap. 6.) We christians many, are all one bodie in Christ, which also the Church doth frequent in the Sacrament of the altar, which is known unto all the faithfull, wherein is shewed unto them, that she her selfe is offered in that oblation, which she doth offer. But it is more plain (saith Gregory Dialog. lib. 4. cap. 59.) that when we death of things, we indeed sacrifice our selves unto God in conscience of that we bound unto, we that celebrate the mysteries of the Lords Passion should imitate that which we doe celebrate, that we may be a true sacrifice unto God for us, which we make our selves a sacrifice.)

unto

3 The Fathers when they use the word sacrifice, doe speake after the Jewish manner, alluding unto the worship and sacrifices of the law. So that in difference of the offerings of the law, they call their very signes an unbloodie sacrifice. Christ did first of all offer unto God the Father, bread and wine an unbloody sacrifice (saith Pborius in Oecumenius.) And Damascen giveth these wordes of Athanasius: O mist not to burne oyle and waxe at the sepulcher, calling upon Christ the Lord, for they are acceptable unto God, and doe returne great recompence. For the oyle and the waxe are the burnt offering, and the offering of the unbloodie sacrifice is the propitiation.

4 To sacrifice, and to offer in the Fathers is understood by a metaphor of the celebration, execution, and action of all ecclesiasticall matters tending unto the worshippe of God. Origen upon the epistle to the Romans 12. for, circumcise, (saith) offer the blood of circumcision. And Tertullian lib. 4. against Marcion, calleth thanksgiving, oblation. And writing unto Scapula, for to pray for Cæsar, hee putteth, to sacrifice for the Emperour. And he used this forme of speach the more freely, because it was imputed as a crime against the Christians, that they would not sacrifice, nor offer for the Emperour. So in like manner Eusebius Demonst. l. 1. cap. 10. for to honour God, putteth, to sacrifice prayers and hymnes. And Cyprian. lib. 2 epist. 3. for, to celebrate the Communion, putteth, to offer the sacrifice of the Passion. And Epiphanius Hæref. 79. for, to preach the Gospell, putteth, to sacrifice the Gospell: And Cyprian againe, Ser. 13. [epi. forme, 9. de Lapsis. for, to celebrate the Eucharist, putteth, to offer the bread and the cup.

5 Sometimes, to offer sacrifice, and to offer the bodily and blood of Christ, is figuratively; to represent them in the Sacrament, not to offer any proper sacrifice, nor to offer properly. And in this sense they say that Christ is crucified and dead in the Sacrament. But there is no Masse, no not the canon of the Masse at this day, that saith that Christs bodie is really, properly, and Sacramentally offered. But suppose it be a reall sacrifice, doe now but marke the blasphemies of the canon, which teacheth first, that Christ is put up the hands of his Father; secondly, that the Father accepteth Christs bodie as the lambe out of the hand of Abel; thirdly, that Christ hath a mortall Mediatour: fourthly, that there must be an Angell to beare the bodie of Christ into heaven.

6 Most of the Fathers doe hold that Melchisedech offered not bread and wine unto God, but unto Abraham expressely. So affirmeth Tertullian Contra Judæos, Ambrose de Sacram. lib. 4. cap. 3. & epist. ad Heb. cap. 7. Epiphanius hæref. 55. Chrysostome in Gen. hom. 36. & in Psal. 109. the author of the questions of both the testaments, q. 109. Damascene de fide orthodoxa, libro 4. cap. 14. and Leontius de sectis, 4. disput. 8. Besides, they make a similitude betweene him offering bread and wine unto Abraham, and Christ offering himselfe unto us plainly on the crosse, parcly in the supper. Melchisedeke never dreamed of offering Christ unto the Father in the supper.

7 The supper of the Lord is called a true and full Sacrifice, not in that Christ himselfe is therein substantially offered, but it is true, both in the truth of representation, and truth of the effect of the Sacrifice of the crosse, which wee obtaine in the communion, and likewise it is called true, because therein the Church doth truly offer her selfe unto God, as Augustine testifieth, lib. 10. de civit. Dei, c. 20. and also because it is the figure of the truth, that is, of Christ offered, whom the Sacrifices of the old Testament did shadow. Hierome in his commentaries upon Amos, cap. 5. saith, that to fast, to give almes, and to promise chastitie, are true Holocausts, that is, whole burnt offerings.

8 The Phrase (Missam facere) used in some of the Fathers, viz. Amb. l. 5 ep. 33.) doth not signifie to say the Popish Masse, but to dismisse some out of the assembly. I remaining in my duty, began to dismisse them. Thus saith Suetonius in Caligula, cap. 25. And behold, after the Sermon the Catechumenists are dismissed (saith Augustine, de temp. Serm. 237.) [sic Missa Catechumeni] but the faithfull will remaine. And hereupon the communion was called Missa figuratively, because when it began, there was a dismission of some. And this order held for 600. yeares, as Isidore testifieth, Origen. l. 8. c. 19. Now the Popish Masse observeth no such custome. Therein is no dismission, nor doe all that remaine receive the communion, wherefore Masse indeed is the excommunication of the people. Unto Gregory of Tours, and Pope Gregory it is a new Phrase, and they out of propriety doe use Missas facere, for to celebrate the the Supper. The word Missa, is but seven times (that I can finde) in all the Fathers that lived before those two, and that in a quite contrary sense.

9 Besides, Missa in the Fathers signifieth publike meeting to the communion, and to prayers, or the solemne dismission of that meeting, or even the forme of their religious worship. George Cassander, præf. in preces suas, saith, that the name of Masse and Collect, and to make Collects and Masses, is all one in signification with συναγειν, to meet together, συναξεις ποιειν, to make congregations, and εκκλησιαζειν, to gather together. And he addeth, that as there can be no Masse where there is no Collect, so there can be no Collect wherein there is no Masse. So doth Epiphanius the translator of the Tripartite history say, that a Collect is a prayer which is rehearsed in some collected congregation, and a Masse, because there is dismissions of some from that congregation. Leo, epist. ad Dioscorum, distinguisheth between the Masse & the sacrifice, And the Mileuitane Councell, cap. 12. taketh prayers and Masses both for one thing. So that the name of Masse had in those dayes a farre other signification than it hath now.

10 The table where on the communion is celebrated, is called an altar, not properly, but by a figure and allusion: and hereupon sometime it is called an altar, sometimes a table. The table of my spouse (saith the Author, lib. de cultu. agr. Dom. in Augustine) hath holy bread, and an holy cup. None say so (saith Augustine. con. lit. Petil. lib. 2, cap. 47) but those that receive life from the Lords table, as Peter did. And, ad Bonifac. Epist. 50. They rushed in upon him with horrible violence, and furious cruelty, with clubs, and such like weapons, as he stood at the altar, ——— breaking downe the wood of the said altar most barbarously. And the Fathers deny (some of them) that they have any altar properly taken. Celsus (saith Origen, libro 8. contra Celsum,) saith, that altars, and images, and temples, doe flye from us, lest they should be built. Our altar (saith Clemens Alexandrinus, Strom. 7.) is an earthly gathering together of such as doe apply themselves to prayers. And a little after. A just soule is a truly sanctified altar. Arnobius, l. 6. contra gentes, saith, that the heathen did accuse the Christians, because they did not make them altars. About the 400. yeare the use of altars began, but not for sacrifice, but for the honour and memory of the Martyrs, as the 5. Councell of Carthage doth record, capite 14.

11 Sometimes the Fathers doe use the word sacrifice abusively. So doth Saint Ambrose in his booke Ad virginem lapsam. If thou hadst died as others do (saith he) thy parents would have sorrowed a little, because of naturall affection: but they would have exulted in joy, that they hadsent an unspotted virgin before them, a living sacrifice unto the Lord, and a propitiatrix for their sinnes. And of his brother Satyrus: Unto thee Almighty God do I offer this innocent soule, unto thee I offer this my sacrifice, accept of this brotherly gift, of this priestly duty: I doe send these my sacrifices before me.

12 The oblation for the dead, and the oblation of the dead, do differ greatly. The offering of the dead was money gathered of the living before their death, for the use of the poore. The other was money gathered by others, for to make commemorations for the dead, and to give thankes for them. Origen upon Iob, libro tertio, saith, that the Christians did use to give meate, and other gifts, at the memorials of the dead, for the use of the poore, and the clergy. Augustine, de Confess. lib. 6 cap. 2, saith, that his mother carried with her, potage, bread, and wine, unto the memorials of the Martyrs and Saints. But yet August. doth reprehend this custome in his 8. booke Decinitate Dei, c. 27. Whosoever use to carry their banquets thither (saith he) which truly the better Christians do not observe, and in many places of the world there is no such custome) yet whosoever doe this ——they will have them sanctified there, —— in the name of the God of Martyrs.

13 The Fathers were of opinion, that the oblation in the Supper did benefit the damned, as Augustine saith, Enchirid. cap. 1000, to make their damnation more tolerable, which is also confirmed by Innocentius I I. in capite cum Marthæ. de celebr. as. Miss. in his decretals: And they held also, that it helped the Saints: witnesse Cyrill, contach. 5. Cyprian, epist. 34. & 37. August. in his 22. booke, de civit. Dei, cap. 10. & Chrysostome upon the Acts, hom. 21, also they held that hereby their reward might be increased, Chrysost. hom. 32, in Matth.

14 These phrases, to offer for the dead and to sacrifice for their sleep, used in Tertullian, and Cyprian, do signifie nothing else but to rehearse their names in the Communion, and to give thankes for them, and to shew other signes of joy, by banquets, doales, &c. Looke in Cyprians ninth epistle of his first booke; and in his 14. Epistle of his third booke; as also in Chrysostomes hom. de Martyribus. In this sense the Lords Supper for 400. yeres after Christ, was called an oblation, or a sacrifice for the dead, because ther was therin continued a commemoration for the dead.

15 The Fathers sometimes doe plainely disallow this proper, reall, externall and often offered sacrifice of the body and blood of Christ for the remission of sinnes. Lactantius; in Epitome divin. Instit. capite 2, saith, that those things which are done with the hands, or without a mans selfe, are no true sacrifices. Truly I, saith Iustine Martyr contra Tryphon. do account prayers and thanksgivings, if they be performed by worthy men, for the onely perfect and acceptable sacrifices unto God; for those onely are the things which the Christians have received to execute. We ha ve our sacrifices, saith Cyril of Alexandria, l. 10. contra Iulian: namely, spiritual and mentall; —— for we offer unto God a sweete smell, all the vertues, faith, hope, charity, justice, continence, obiedience, gentlenesse, perpetuall praises, and other vertues. For this sacrifice, being not carnall, but pure & plaine, in the incorporall nature thereof is befeeming unto God. And the offerings of mentall fragrancy are the meanes of a truly honest life. And a little after: Because we haue served God better than they [the Patriarches] sacrificing spirituall things unto God, and using the spirit in stead of sensible fire, let not Iulian accuse us by asking us, why wee bring not sacrifices unto the altar? And againe, We sacrifice mentally & spiritually the sweet savour of vertues, as it were consecrating them unto God. Christs blood (saith Aug. contra Aduers. leg. lib. 1, cap. 18) being the singular and onely true Sacrifice, was shedde for us. And indeede the Fathers ascribe the power of getting Gods favour, and the effect which they hoped of the Sacrament, unto the prayers and almes then offered, not unto the operation of the act. The greatest helpe of soules (saith Cyrill of Ierusalem, Mystag. 5.) is the prayer of that holy and reverend mystery which is upon the altar. Wee entreate for the dead (saith Augustf. De cura pro mortuis, cap. 18) either with the sacrifice of the altar, or of prayers, or of almes. And Chrysostome, Hom. 3, in Philip. saith, that the people lifting up their hands at the time of offering, did appease Gods anger in praying for the dead. Wee call upon God for them (saith Bede in Psalm. 48.) by solemnizing of masses, and by almes deedes. So that the Supper of the Lord is called a propitiatory sacrifice, because it representeth the Sacrifice of the crosse, and is the meanes that we making our solemne prayers, doe obtaine our petitions.

16 The Masse had this originall: first, the Supper of the Lord was celebrated in most simple and plaine manner: secondly, it began to admit some increase of ceremonies, especially the offerings for the dead; which was but a gratulation for them, and a thanksgiving untill 200. yeares after Christ: thirdly, prayers for the dead got entrance into the Supper, about the 400. yeare, and then came in Purgatory, and then redemption of soules from thence, by Masses. About the 780. yeare of grace, Gregories Masse was publikely taken vp in the Churches of Italy, whereas before, Ambrose his Masse was of more generall use: fourthly, the disputations of the transubstantiation began about the yeare of grace 840. and was concluded in the Councell of Laterane by Innocent the third: after which, came in the offering of the body and blood of Christ upon the Altar: and after that, followed the inclosing of them, carrying them about, and adoration of them.

Therefore when we doe reade these tropicall speeches of sacrificing, and offering, in the Fathers, we must not beleeue that they did admit any other propitiatory sacrifice, but onely the passion of Christ, being the onely sacrifice of the whole world, nor that they accustomed to celebrate the Popish Masse.

Communion under one kinde.

1 THe Church of Rome for above 1000. yeares after Christ, used both the kinds in communion. This Cassander teacheth in his Defence of his booke intituled de officio pij viri. The vse (saith he) of the blood of our Lord, together with his body in the ministring of the Sacrament, is both of the institution of Christ, and observed by the custome of the whole Church, for above a thousand yeares, and unto this day of the Easterne Churches. And although the use of one kinde came up about the yeare 1200. yet the most learned of those times never taught that it was necessary so to be observed. But this communion under one kinde (against all institution of Christ) was decreed, defined, and determind as a publike law in the Councell of Constance, about the yeare 1414. Cusanus, epistol. 3. ad Bohemos, seemes to impute this change unto the Councell of Laterane, ann. 1215. But Biel, lect. 84. in Canonem, saith plainely, that it was a question held in controverse untill the decree of the Councell of Constance. Micrologus writeth thus of the custome of the Church of Rome about the yeare 1080. It is not authenticall (saith hee) that some doe dip the Lords body [into the chalice] and minister it unto the people thus moystened, as the perfect communion: for the Romane Order doth contradict this custome, because upon good-Friday it doth command us to consecrate wine that is not consecrated with the Lords prayer, and putting in of the body of the Lord, that the people may have a full communion——. And Pope Iulio writing unto the Bishops of Egypt doth absolutely prohibit this dipping of the Sacrament, and teacheth that the bread and the cup are both severally to be received as Christ ordained. Wherevpon S. Gelasius ——— doth command them to bee excommunicate that having received the body of the Lord, doe abstaine from partaking of the cup also: for hee in the said decree affirmeth, that such separation of these sacraments cannot be done but with mighty sacrilege, De eccles. obser. c. 19, & de consecra. d. 2. c. comperimus. In Peter Lumbards time, ann. 1150. the sacrament was received under both kinds, that it might appeare (quoth he, l. Sent. 4, d. 11) that Christ tooke upon him our whole nature, that hee might redeeme our whole nature: for the bread had reference unto the body, body, and the wine unto the soule: therefore it is celebrare in both the kinds, to signifie unto us Christs receiving of body and soule, and our freedome of body and soule. Leo, Ser. 4, de Quadrag. saith, that it is a sacrilegious hypocrisie of the Manichees: to receive the body and reject the blood. Rhemigius Bishop of Rhemes, that lived about the yeare 470. made these verses to be engraven upon the chalice, as Hincmar testifies in his life. Hauriat hinc, &c. in English thus.

Hence let the people in that sacred blood.
Which Christ did bleed, drinke out their soules best good.

These vowes, Rhemigius, Priest, doth pay his Lord.

And the said Hincmar doth record, that the same chalice was in his time afterward given unto the Normans for the redeeming of the Christian captives. The cup (saith Hasmo, in 1, Cor. 10.) is called communion, as it were a participation, because all doe communicate therof. The Lord (saith Rhanus Maurus, de Instit. Cler. lib. 1 ca. 32.) first consecrated the Sacrament of his body and blood, with benediction and thanksgiwing, and delivered it unto his Apostles, which they in imitation of him so did, and taught their followers to doe the like: which now the whole Church over all the world doth generally observe. Onely the benediction of the Bishop, or Priest (saith Amalarius, lib. 1, de Offic. in præfat.) is sufficient to consecrate the bread and wine wherewith the peoples soules are to be fed unto salvation, as the Apostles did in the Primitive Church. And cap. 24, Christ tooke the bread into his holy and reverend hands: ——. And in like manner the cup, as Cyprian saith to Cæcilius, We finde not our selves keepers of the precept, unlesse wee doe that same that the Lord did, and mingling the cup in like manner, we depart not from the divine commandement. Now though Cyprian doe conclude his saying about the mixing of wine and water; yet we may understand, that this is to be fulfilled of the whole institution of the Lord, wherein there is his commaund, and the Apostles observation; and of like effect unto this is that of Walfrid: in his booke de rerum ecclesiasticarum exordiis & incrementis, the 22. chapter, What soeuer he be (saith Anselm, super 1 Cor. 11.) rich, meane, or poore, clergy, monk, or lay-man, that shall receive this body, and drinke this blood of Christ unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord: hee eateth and drinketh it unworthily, that celebrateth this mystery in any other order than Christ hath delivered it in Scripture. The prescription of the forme (saith the Author de cœna in Bern.) is in bread and wine —— and the kinds of bread and wine are both set forth, to shew, that the full and perfect refreshoning in receiving the body & blood of Christ. But all these proofes (saith Illerius Magdeburgensis Magdeb. 9.) it is gathered, that Christ delivered his body under the one forme of bread, and his blood under the other forme of wine, and taught it to be thus celebrated. And seeing Christs actions are our instructions, he delivered these two most certainely for us to observe, and therefore we give the body under one kinde, and the blood under another. This Sacrament (saith Thom. in 1 Cor. 11 lect. 5) is given under a double kinde for three respects. First, for the perfection thereof: because it being a spirituall refreshing, must haue a spirituall meate, and a spirituall drinke. For the corporall feeding is not made without meate and drinke. —— Secondly, for the signification thereof. For it is a memoriall of that Passion wherein Christs blood was separate and drawne from his body: and therefore herein the blood is offered severally from the body. Thirdly, because of the saving effect of this Sacrament. For it helpeth the salvation of the body, and therefore is the body offered; and it helpes the salvation of the soule, and therefore the blood is offered. For the soule is in the blood, Gen. 9. And in his 6. Lection he saith, that both (bread and wine) belong to the perfection of this Sacrament, as wel to shew the perfection of the refreshing, as for the representation of the passion, and also for the effecting of the salvation of body and soule. And this is also the opinion of Hales, 4. par. summæ qua. 35. memb. 1 and Cassalius de cœna, l. 12, cap. 25.

2 The communicants used to carry home not onely the bread, but the wine also. This testifieth Nazianzene, in Gorgon. ad nepotem: and Hieron, ad Rusticum. And againe, where we finde the Fathers to make mention of the bread alone, it is a signe called Synecdoche partis, whereby part is put for the whole; or else they doe take the name of bread only for the bread dipped in the wine.

Wherefore the ministring of the Lords Supper under one kinde, is contrary to the ordinary custome of the whole and universall primitive Church.

Private Masse.

1 A Kinde of private Masse wherein the Priest onely receiveth the consecrated forme, without communicating to others, was never known in the most ancient and purest antiquity, for the space of 800. yeares. The Supper of the Lord (saith Hieronim, in 1 Cor. 11) ought to be common to all, for he gaue the Sacraments equally unto all the disciples present. And in 3. cap Sophon. he telleth how the people did communicate of the blood of Christ. Idem, 3. in Eph. also condemneth this private Masse in these words: In vaine do we offer this daily oblation, in vaine do we stand at the altar, there is none that doth partake with vs. This I speake not to invite you to receive in any fashion, but to make yourselves worthy of these mysteries. And in 1. Cor. 11. homil. 27, thou dost not communicate of that which is common: for it was broken equally to all, and equally diuided. Some require a communion still in the Masse, and indeed so I confesse did Christ ordaine it (saith Erasmus, epist. ad Iulium Pflugium) and so in ancient times it was obserued. Yea the Papists themselves confesse, that in the Primitive Church it was set downe, that the faithfull should communicate every day, as Durandus, in rational. lib. 4. cap 53. and Hugo Cardinalis in Luc. cap. 24. doe both confesse. Cusanus in his 7. epistle to the Bohemians, saith, that all that were not prepared to receive the Eucharist, were put forth of the Church. And the Councell of Mentz doth prohibite the Priest to receive alone, because they held it as an absurd thing to say, the Lord be with you, when there was none to answer. Looke in Reginald Poole his 1. booke de Eccles. Discipl. c. 191. If any one doe not communicate, let him give place, saith Greg. dialog. lib. 2. capit. 23. And Charlemaine made a law, that all the faithfull should communicate, and attend at the Masse, without any other further intreaty, Leg. Francia, lib. 1. cap. 132. And it seemes, that about Walfrids time these solitary masses began, though he himselfe doth disallow of them. In the whole masse, saith he, de rebus Eccles. c. 22. we doe pray chiefly, and as it were by name for them that doe offer and communicate. And we may —— say, that the rest persisting in the faith and devotion of these that offer and communicate, are partakers of the said oblation and communion. But although when the Priests onely doe communicate in their masse, it may bee understood that those doe partake with him, for whom these offices are celebrated, and whose person the priest doth execute in some Responsories: yet wee must confesse that that is the lawfull Masse, wherin there is present the Priest, the answerer, the offerer, and the communicant, as the forme of the canon, and the plaine course of the prayers do shew. The prayers (saith Microlegus cap. 19) which are said after the communion, are not for them that ate to communicate, but for those that have already communicated: therfore whosoever doe desire to bee helped with the blessings of these prayers, let them not neglect to receive the communion before they be said. And cap. 18. hee saith to the same effect; And indeed in the yeare of grace, 1080. in the Church of Rome all were bound to communicate after the breaking of the bread. Radulphus Ardens in his homily upon Easter day saith, that there are two kinds of receiving, spirituall and sacramentall, and of the later he saith thus: Now it standing my brethren, all Christians must communicate spiritually, yea sacramentally when they have time and place. And therfore in the Primitive Church all the Christians used to communicate every Lords day: thus saith he, that lived about the yeare 1050.

2 Private Masses had their first originall amongst the friers in their cloysters. For Gregory, l. 4. Indict. 14. epist. 43. alias c. 87. doth forbid publike Masses to bee said in one certaine Monastery, lest there should be any occasion of popular meetings in the private houses of the servants of God. And l. 5. epist. 46. alias c. 146. he doth inhibit publike Masse to be said in a certaine place, and yet alloweth Masse to be said therein. Looke also in the 71. epistle of his 7. Booke. Odo of Cambray in his exposition of the canon, saith, that whereas at the first they never had Masse, without convention of the people together for communion, afterward it grew to a custome in the Church, to have private and solitary Masses, especially in cloysters.

Mixture of wine and water.

1 THe mingling of the wine with water, was a general custome in al hot countries, for allaying the strength of the wine, as Lyra testifies in 1. Cor. 11. and hereby it is proved so to be, because the water was put in after the consecration, as appeares in that Masse which is called Chrysostomes. But this was none of Christs institution, as the Fathers doe hold, for Chrysostome saith, that Pope Alexander was the first that mingled water with the wine, Hom. 83. in Mat. Polyd. l. 5. c. 9. And Augustine l. 3. de consensu Euang. capite 1. saith, that these words, [I will drinke no more of the fruit of the vine] are to be understood of the cup of the Eucharist. And the Armenians for above a thousand yeares together, used pure wine without any mixture of water therewithall, as Otho Frisingensis testifieth, lib. 7. c. 32. But out of a custome it grew to be a ceremony signifying a mystery. Afterwards the Aquarij used only water, without any wine, against whom Cyprian proveth the use of wine, but not of water mixed with wine.

2 The schoole-men hold this mixture to be no essentiall part of the Sacrament, and namely, Thomas, part. 3. q. 74. art. 7. and Scotus, in sent. 4. dist. 11. q. 6. the two chiefe. And likewise Hales, Bonaventure, Richardus, and Durand, as Ioseph Angles, in 4. dist. 8. art. 6. testifies in his comment upon the sentences, adding that this is the common opinion of the Doctors. Yea Bellarmine himselfe is not ashamed to confesse this, in his first booke de Sacr. Eucharist. cap. 10.

Keeping of the Sacrament.

1 THe Fathers used to keepe the Sacrament, not for any adoration, or publike bearing it about, but for their private use in the dayes next following.

Shall not the husband know (saith Tertullian, l. 2. ad vxorem:) what thou dost, secretly taste before thy meate? And if he doe know, hee doth beleeve that it is but bread, not that which it is called. And hereto belongeth that of Hieromes relation, concerning the custome of the Romans of receiving every day, and that (as it is probable) in private houses, epist. 50 ad Pammachium, & epist. 28. ad Lucinium. Every one of the people (saith Basil, in epist. ad Cæsaream Patri. in Alexandria and Egipt.) hath the communion in his house, receiving it of the Priest that consecrateth and distributeth it.

2 But this reservation of the Sacrament was alwayes in private houses, not in the Church, as now it is amongst the Papists, who keepe it for curing the sicke, which was not done by the Fathers.

3 And this reservation was sometimes found fault with all by the Fathers. Our Lord (saith Origen, In Levit. Hom. 5.) did not lay up the bread which hee gave to his Apostles. ——nor did hee bid them reserve it untill the morrow. If there be any man (saith Concilium Cæsaraugustanum, capi. 3.) that is proved not to eate the Sacrament in the Church which he receiveth, accursed be he for evermore: and all the Bishops did cry out altogether, accursed be he, Concil. Tolet. 1 cap. 14. If there be ought remaining of the sacrifice (saith Clement in his 2. epistle unto Iames.) let it not bee reserved untill the morrow, but let it be rid away by the care of the Clergy. And Hesychius upon Leviticus, saith, lib. 2. c. 8. that the remainder is to be burned with fire: others, that it was to be given to the children. Looke Nicephorus his 17. booke, and 15. chap.

Use of the Latine tongue in the Service.

1 IN the purest Churches, for the space of 800. yeeres at least, the duties of Christianity, or divine prayers, &c. were never performed in a tongue unknown to the people. Both the Priest and the people (saith Chrysostome, Hom. 18. in 2. Cor.) say the same common prayers, and all doe say one thing. It behoveth, saith Isidore. De eccle. offic. l. 1. c. 10. that when we sing, we sing altogether, & when we pray, that we pray altogether, and when the lesson is read, that silence be made, and that all doe hearken to it with attention. ——And therefore the Deacon with a cleare voyce doth warne silence, that there bee an unity kept amongst all, as well when they sing, as when the lesson is read, that whatsoever is preached unto all, may be equally heard of all. Let every one pray, saith Origen against Celsus, lib. 8. unto the Lord in his native and mother tongue. Here is a dissonance of voyce saith Hierome, Tom. 1. epist. 17. but an unity of religion, & almost as many quiers of singers, as there is diversity of nations. Let the onely Trinitie, saith August. Epist. 178. be praied unto for mercy, of all both Latines, and Barbarians, let no tongue how barbarous soever, bee made an alien from praising one God. And the Rushens, Armenians, Egyptians, and Ethiopians, had all their divine service in their vulgar tongue: and the Moravians, in that Slavon tongue by a grant from the Pope. And the celebration of divine service was in the yeare 1215, granted by Innocentius the third, In Concil. Lateran. c. 9. unto divers places according to the diversity of the tongues: this is also confirmed out of the decretals of Gregory 1. titul. 31. ca. Quoniam plerique, &c. In the Primitive Church (saith Lyra, In 1. Cor. 14.) benedictions, and all other common [devotions] were performed in the vulgar tongue. And in the Councell of Mentz, capite 45 (about the yeare 813) it is permitted unto him that cannot otherwise learne the Catholike faith, and the Lords prayers, to learne them in his mother tongue.

2 If a strange tongue at any time were used in divine service, yet it was understood of the hearers. For so was the latine tongue, and although it were not the mother tongue, in all places and provinces of the Romane Empire, yet it was understood generally in them all for the space of 700. yeares & more. In the Provinces of Affrike they spake Latine: and the French men generally did all understand this tongue. In the 3. Councell of Terwin, about the yeare, 770. cap. 17. the Homilies are commanded to be translated into the more barbarous Romane or Dutch tongue, that they might bee the easier to bee understood. And it is credible, that the Britaines understood this tongue also. For marke what Bede hist. Angl. c. 1. c. 1. saith, Britany (quoth he) at this present doth search out, and professe one and the same knowledge of highest truth, & true highnes, in five severall tongues, the English, Brittish, Scottish, Pictish, and Latine, which now through the meditation of the Scriptures, is growne common to all other. And Valerius Maximus, lib. 2. capite 1. doth testifie, that the Romane magistrates did seriously endeavour to have their language diffused abroad; because it was not lawful for the Greekes to deale with the Romans concerning any thing, but in the Latine tongue, though they did it in Greece or Asia. And Cambden that most excellent Antiquary, in his Britannia saith thus: If there be any man that will not beleeve that our Britans used the provinciall tongue of the Romans, surely he knowes not how earnestly the Romans laboured to have all the Provinces speake Latin, nor doth he marke what a sway the Latin hath already in our vulgar tongue, to let passe the authority of Cornelius Tacitus, who saith, that in Domitians time the Britaines studied for the eloquence of the Latine tongue. Thus he. Now afterward when the Empire began to incline, and the Latine became corrupted by the Gothes in Italy, yet the use thereof remained in matters of religion, as before, by reason of the old customes, which by greater reason should have beene abrogated. But now it is held laudable, yea necessary to worship in Latine, that is, in an unknowne tongue.

3 Any tongue whatsoever, even the Latine it selfe, unto those that understand it not: is barbarous: as Ovid in his Tristia, saith rightly, Barbarus hic ego sum, &c. in English thus:

I am but barbarous in this strange land,
For no man here my speech can understand.

Looke Chrysostome and Haimo upon the 14. of the first to the Corinthians.

Transubstantiation, or reall presence.

1 THe Fathers when they speake of the Supper, haue many and diuers tearmes which may signifie conversion. Ambrose, lib. 4. de Sacram. c. 4. doth use the word conversion: and l. de iis qui mysteriis initiantur, cap. 9. the tearme of mutation. And Cyprian de cœna, said, the bread is [mutatus] changed, not in shape, but in nature. Origen against Celsus, lib. 8. saith, that the bread by prayer is made [fieri] the body: And Gaudentius Tractat. 2. de Exodo, saith, that of the bread is made [effici] the body, and of the wine the blood. Eusebius Emissenus, hom. 5. de Pas. saith, that the priest by a sacred power doth convert [convertere] the visible creatures into the substance of the body and blood of Christ. And againe, that the bread doth passe (transire) into the nature of the Lords body. Anselme, epistol. de corp. & sang. Dom. saith, that the bread doth (migrare) go into the body. And Fulbertus, epist. ad Berengarium, saith, that it is transfused (transfundi.) Algerus, l. de Sacram. saith, that it is transferred and transposed (trajici & transferri) into the body. But the ancient Doctors, when they doe speake of this change and conversion of the bread, doe meane the change of the use and condition of the bread, and not of the substance. And therefore in the reading of them, we must distinguish the sacramentall mutation of these signes in signifying and sealing, from a substantiall mutation. And wee ought to hold directly, that they never knew of transubstantiation (untruly) for at least 800. yeeres after Christ, but rather condemned it. Cyprian (or whosoever was the author of the Sermon, de cœna) saith, Bread retaining the forme of bodily substance. And Ambrose, de Sacr. lib. 4. cap. 4. saith, They are what they were, and yet are changed into other. And Theodoret, dial. 2. The mysticall signes doe not leave their propet nature after consecration. And Gelas. con. Eutyc. The signes doe remaine in the propriety of their nature. And Walfrid. cap. 16. He delivered the Sacrament of his body and blood unto his disciples in the substance of bread and wine. And Paschasius. de corp. & sang. Dom. 10. alias 28. Bread strengtheneth the heart of man, and wine comforteth, —and therefore this mysterie of our salvation is rightly celebrated in the same substance. The like unto this hath Bertram. And Paschasius againe, ca. 17, alias 46. Therefore my sonne when thou commest to communicate of this mystery, open the bosome of thy minde, cleanse thy conscience, and give not thy selfe to receive that onely which the peece of bread containes, but that which faith receiveth, because that in Christ is contained the fullnesse of divinity. Hereby it is evident, that the canon of the Masse for 900. yeares, was never held to bee meant of Transubstantiation, nor was there in all that time any mouthly receving of Christs true body dreamed of. Besides, Druthmar, that lived about the yeare 800. understood the words of the canon to be spoken of the spirituall changing of the bread into Christs body, and the wine into his blood. For these are his words upon this place of Scripture (And taking the cup. Matt. 26.) Thus the Lord commanded us to doe, changing spiritually the bread into his body, and the wine into his blood, that by these two we might remember what he did for us, concerning his body and bloed. And Amalarius about the yeare 810. understandeth the words of the canon without either Transubstaniation, or reall presence, l. 3. de eccl. offic. cap 23. And Walfrid. ca. 16. After the solemnities of the old Passeover, he delivered the Sacrament of his body and bloud, in the substances of bread & wine, and taught us to celebrate them in memory of his passion. Nicetas Choniates, Thesaur. l. 4. writing against the Acodrugi, that would not have mysteries represented in corporall things, saith, That the institution, wherein our Saviour used bread and wine for the salvation and reformation of mankinde corrupted, was not such as wanted bodily things. Wherefore the Fathers when they speake of the changing of the nature of the bread, doe meane the change of the propriety onely, whereby of bodily susteriance, by the power of the deity, it is made a food for the soule.

2 In ancient times it was the whole universall and orthodoxall consent of the Church, that that very bread which Christ broke, (and not any other thing under the figure of bread was his body. And this is the doctrine of Irenæus, Justine Martyr, Tertullian, Cyprian, Theodoret, Chrysostome, Ambrose, and Augustine.

And

And therefore these never so much as dreamed of Transubstantiation. Which may be convinced by these seven reasons following. 1 First, because the Eucharist was reserved in private houses for every one to receive: Being dismissed (saith Cyprian of one, De spectaculis,) and bearing with him as the manner is, the Eucharist, &c. 2 Secondly, because they used to send it by children unto the sick, as Eusebius testifieth in his 6. booke and 43. chapter. 3 Thirdly, because it was used to be carryed about in such meane manner, as namely, the body in a wicker basket, and the blood in a glasse, as Hieromes testifieth of Eusperius Bishop, epist. 4. ad Rusticum. 4 Fourthly, because the Bishops used to send it unto others [as it is probable] for salvations sake. Witnesses Irenæus. ep. ad Victor. apud Eusebium lib. 5. cap. 23. and Nicephorus, lib. 4. c. 39. 5 Fifthly, because they used to give it unto Infants, as Augustine lib. 3. ca. 10. and almost in every worke of his doth testifie. 6 Sixtly, because if there remained any parcells of the Eucharist unreceived, the young children that used the Church, were called to eate them up. This Euagrius, libro 4. capite 35. recordeth, and Nicephorus in like manner, libro 17. capite 25. 7 Seventhly and lastly, because it was a custome in the ancient Church to burne the remainders of the Eucharist, as Isychius, libro 2. capite 8. upon Leviticus doth affirme.

3 Afterwards begun the disputations of Transubstantiation; but not as yet approved as an article of Faith, nor concluded of in Lumbard his age, which was about the yeere 1145. for he, lib. 4. d. 11. saith, that if it be demanded of what sort this conversion is, whether formall, or substantiall, or of some other kinde, I cannot sufficiently define; yea the Church for a whole thousand yeeres taught no other then spirituall receiving of Christ, and all the Fathers of those times understood the words of the supper to bee figuratively spoken. Whereforeit is a most impudent and faithlesse part of Bellarmine to cite 32. writers for the opinion of transubstantiation.

4 But in the yeere 1215 Innocent the third determined the manner of this conversion, in respect of the name, calling it Transubstantiation: and for the thing it selfe, Leo the 9. determined it, in a conventicle held at Rome, ann. 1049. And Nikholas the second also in his decretalls de consecratione. Ego Berengarius, in the yeere 1060. And yet Berengarius abode in his true opinion of the Lords Supper, untill the day of his death, and therefore is said to have seriously detested that absurd recantation. Hildebertus Cenomanensis doth praise him. And Lanfranke condemneth him as a violator of his recantation, and unconstant in his opinion. And indeed there is not a Papist in the world that will defend the recantation in Gratian set downe by Nicholas, because he saith that the body of Christ is sensibly crushed with the teeth. And divers of the schoolemen (as Biel, In 4. Magistr. 47. & Richardus de Mediavilla, in eod. 8. q. 1.) do condemne it as an erroneous assertion.

5 Now the most learned schoolemen after Innocentius doe disagree both in the thing it selfe, and in the manner of explaining what the pronowne [Hoc] this, doth signifie: and demonstrate properly in these words [this is my body] Richardus de Mediavilla, in 4. d. 11. quæst. 1. expoundeth it thus; This) that is, something being under this sensible forme, is my body. Or thus, That which will be forthwith present under this sensible signe which is seene, is my body. Thomas Aquinas 3. part. q. 78, in corp. art. Hoc, (this) that is, that which is contained in the generall under these kinds, is my body. Bonaventure In d. 8. in 2. par. dist. art. 1. q. 1. thus. This) that is, the substance of bread: and he will have (est) is, to signifie (fit) is made, or (transit) is changed or (convertitur) is turned. Scotus In 4. dist. 8. in 2. thus: (this) that is, this singular essence, or ens is my body. Marsilius in 4. quæst. 6. art. 1. thus: (this) that is, that into which this bread is changed, is my body. Occam quodlib. 2. q. 19. thus (this) that is, this body, which will be forth with under these formes, is my body. But Peter of Aliacum in 4. Sent. q. 5. art. 1. saith, that it is not necessary for the Priest that consecrateth rightly to demonstrate any thing by this word (this:) or that he should understand any thing by that word more than by a word that hath no significacion, because this word is only given us as a signe, whereby we may know that whē these words are rightly pronounced, the body of Christ is immediately under these signes, by Gods good pleasure. Holton. In 4. sen. q. 3. saith, that by this pronowne (Hoc, this) is signified that which remaineth under both the termes of transmutation, and be that which is only accidents sensible, and no substance. Biel, lect. 48. in cano. Missæ. saith that (This) that is, this content, into which the bread is to be turned, &c. in some part of time which includeth the pronuntiation, and the terminating or finishing instant, is my body. Caiet. In 3. p. q. 78. art. 1. saith, (this) is, this singular substance, is my body. Now Gulielmus is elder than the all, l. 2. doth thus expound this word (this) that is, which hitherto was bread, henceforth it is my body, not bread: or that, (this) that is, that which I now give you, is my body, for this pronowne (this) in this place hath no relation to any thing before spoken, but is a demonstrative of the thing present.

6 These. Phrases of the Fathers, (that Christs body is eaten: tooth into the mouth: is touched with the hands: his bloud is drunke, &c.) are to be understood tropically, that is, simbolically: signifying the efficacie of sacramentall receiving: and admonish us to embrace the body of Christ thus is in heaven, with an unpolluted heart. For it is the Fathers doctrine, that the bread and wine are

are truly and properly the signes of the body and blood of Christ. Our Lord (saith Cyprian Tract. de unct. Chrismatis) at the table where he tooke part of his last feast with the Apostles, with his owne hands gave them bread and wine: but upon the crosse he gave his body to be wounded by the hands of the souldiers; that the sincere truth and true sincerity which he had more secretely imprinted in the Apostles, might declare unto the world how the bread and wine were his body and blood: and upon what reasons the causes thas agreed with the effects, and diuers names or formes were reduced to one essence; and the things signifying and signified should be called both by the same names. Our Lord (saith Augustine contra Adimant. c. 12) did not sticke to say, This is my body, when he gave the signe of his body. And againe; Contra Maximinum, Wherein [in which signes] we must not respect what they are, but what they represent: because they are signes of things: and being in essence one thing, are in signification another. Origen likewise upon the 15. of Mat. saith, that if all that goeth into the mouth descendeth into the belly, and so is cast forth into the draught: that meate also which is sanctified by the word of God and prayers, as farre as the materiall part thereof, goeth the ordinary course of other meate. So Chrysostome (or whosoever was the author of that Epistle) unto Caesarius saith: Even as we call the bread before it be sanctified, bread, and when Gods grace hath sanctified it by the Priests meanes, it loseth the name of bread, and is held worthy to be called the Lords body; although that the nature of bread doe remaine therein, and is not called two bodies, but one body of the sonne——. Christs flesh (saith Maximus Dialog. 2. cont. Nestor.) is not called the body of God as the Church is: nor as the bread, which the whole Church partaketh in memory of his passion: but it is so called the body of God, as is a mans proper vesture or apparell, wherewith he is arrayed. He, [Christ] (saith Aug. De civit. Dei, li. 21. c. 25) in saying, he that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, liveth in me, and I in him doth shew what it is to receive his body not sacramentally, but truly, and drinke his blood: Here marke an opposition betweene sacramentall eating and true eating.

7 These wordes of Christ, [My flesh is meate indeed, Iohn. 6.] are by Clemens Pedagog. li. 1. c. 6. Tertullian de resurrectione carnis, Origen in Levit. hom. 9. Chrysostome in Ioan. hom. 46. and Augustine in Ioan. 25. and 26. taken in an allegoricall sense.

8 And the words [this is my body] most of the Fathers take figuratively, and namely these: Tertullian l. 4. con. Marc. Origen, in two places, viz. in Levit. hom. 7. and in Mat. capite 15. Cyprian de unct. Chrismatis, Nazianzene de Paschate: Ambrose in three place, viz. de his qui myster. initiantur. c. 9. de Sacr. lib. 4. cap. 5. in 1. Cor. 11. Hierome in two, viz. in Marc. 26 and in Mark. 14. August. in seven or eight, viz. lib. 3. de doct. Christ. lib. 3. cap. 16. de Trinit. lib. 3. ca. 4. and 10. epist. 23. in Levit. q. 57. cont. Adimant. ca. 12. and Psal. 98. Chrysost. in Psal. 22. Theod. dial. 1. Prosper in Sent. August. And he is cited de consecr. d. 2. c. Hoc est. Beda in Luc. 22. & Bertram de corp. & sang. Domini.

9 But the Fathers speake not onely figuratively of the Sacrament, but even sometimes hyperbolically thereof, to beget in the greater reverence, and to pierce mens mindes, and follow the phrase of Scripture; and lest the supper should seeme a tragicke fiction. In this sense saith Chrysostome in 1. Cor. 10. hom. 24. What is in the cup? that which flowed from his side. And againe, that which he suffered not upon the crosse, hee suffereth for thee in the offering, suffering himselfe to bee thrust through. And hom. 21. ad populum Antioch. Thinke what thou takest in hand——. For it is a pernicious thing to use that tongue unto reproches, that hath ministred at such divine mysteries, and beene purpled with the colour of that blood, and made a sword of gold.

10 That which the Fathers speake of the bread and wine in the Lords Supper, the same they speake in like manner of Baptisme and the word of God. We are said (saith Origen, Homil. 16. in Num.) to drinke the blood of Christ, not onely in the sacraments, but when we heare and receive his words. And in another place. Bind not thy selfe unto the blood of the flesh, but rather seeke after the blood of the word: and heare him that saith unto thee, This is my blood which is shed for you for the remission of your sinnes. No man must any way doubt (saith Augustine in one of his Sermons, ad infantes,) cited by Bede, in 1. Cor. 10, that every faithfull Christian is made partaker of the body and blood of Christ, when he is made a member of him in Baptisme: nor that he is alienated from the communion of that bread and the cuppe, although he being in unity with Christ, bee taken out of this world before hee come to communicate of the said Sacrament; for he is not deprived of the participation and benefit thereof, since he hath already attained to that which that Sacrament doth signifie.

11 The Fathers by the forme of bread [Species] doe still understand the substance, not the accidents without the substance. In this sense saith Cyrill of Ierusalem, Mystag. 4. under the forme of bread is given the body, and the blood under the forme of wine. I see not the forme of blood (saith Ambrose, De Sacram. libro 4. capite 4) but the likenesse it hath. And lib. de iis qui mysteriis initiantur, c. 9. If Elias his speech were of so great power, that it was able to fetch downe fire from heaven; shall not Christs words be of the power to change the formes of the Elements? To make the forme of visible bread (saith Augustine, Serm. ad infantes, recorded by Bede in 1. Cor. 10) many graines of corne are compact together:——and in the wine likewise, brethren, consider how it commeth to bee one liquor. Under that visible forme of ointment (saith Theodoret in 1. Cant.) they doe receive the invisible grace of that most holy spirit. And the same meaning sometime they have when they use these phrases, the figure, or outward shape of the bread. And they doe use these words, to turne our eyes from the externall signes, unto the heavenly matter therein signified, upon which wee ought to fixe the eyes of our mindes. And hereupon Chrysostome saith, that there is nothing seene upon the table, but the body and blood of the Lord; and yet intends not to put accidents without a substance. Contrariwise, the word [nature] doth sometimes in the Fathers signifie the quality and condition onely, and not the essence of the thing, And in this sense Cyprian de coena, saith; the bread changed not in forme or shape, but in nature; by the words omnipotency is made flesh.

12 Cyrill, libro 10. cap. 13. in Ioan. and elsewhere. And Hilary, li. 8. de Trin. with some other Fathers will have Christ to be in us naturally, and corporally; and so they will have us to receive him. But they do not speake of the manner of our union with Christ herein, but of the limits of our union. They will have us united with Christ in one mysticall body, according to the truth of nature, and to bee joyned truly and really with his flesh and spirit, and yet after a spirituall and uncorporall manner.

13 Damascenes commutation μεταποίησις, l. 4. c. 14. and Theophylactes transelementation μετασταιχείωσις, is the change of the bread into another state or condition, not into another substance and being, because it is united to Christs body in a sacramentall union, and of a corporall foode made a spirituall. For after the same manner, they affirme that wee, καὶ αὐτὸ τὸ σῶμα εἰς ἑαυτὸν μεταποιεῖσθαι τὴν σύμπασαν, that is, are really converted into that (Christs) flesh, Chrysost. hom. 45. In Ioan. and are transelementated into him, Theophylact. In Ioan. cap. 6 and yet they doe not faine any abolishing of our substance for all this. And this same μεταποίησις, is not alwaies a changing of substance but sometime a correction or changing of a thing into better; but howsoever, this transformation helpeth not the Papists a jotte, for that which is transformed, remaineth not in regard of his exterior forme. Although the ancient Fathers (saith Suarez upon Thomas, tom. 3. quaest. 75, disput. 50. sect. 1) used many words in the explanation of this mystery, yet they are all either generall, as are the words [Conversion, Mutation, Passing into, and changing] or they are properly applyed to the accidentall change, as the word [Transfiguration] and such like. Onely Theophylact his word [transelementation] commeth nearer the explanation of the mysteries true property, and signifieth a change of the things even unto the first elements, unto the first matter: but yet that word is too unappliable, and too unfit for this mystery. For it may signifie the conuersion of one element into another, or the resolution of a mixt body into the elements: but transubstantiation most properly, and most fitly signifieth the conversion or commigration of one whole substance, into another whole substance.

14 The Fathers when they say; that the bread or wine remaineth no more, doe not meane simply, but in respect of his intent that is to receive them, when hee receiveth them rightly: because then we must not thinke of the bread or the wine, but fixe both our mind and senses wholly upon Iesus Christ.

15 Where they deny, that the bread is a figure of the body, they speake of the bare signe, which is without fruite. There is not onely a certaine figuring of Christs flesh, saith Theophylact, In Ioan. 6. Hee said not, these are the signes of my body (saith Euthymius; in Matth. cap. 26) but, this is my body: Wee ought not therefore, to looke into the nature of that is set before us, but into the vertue.

16 To consecrate, is not to transubstantiate, but to dedicate a prophane thing unto an holy use. And that the consecration of the bread is included in these five words [for this is my body] and of the wine in these [this is my blood] of such like, no Father did ever teach. Cyprian, Sermo. de cena saith, that in his time they did consecrate with these words: Doe this in remembrance of me, this is my flesh, this is my blood: Basil and Chrysostome held, that it was done by prayers, as we may reade in their Liturgies. Wilt thou know (saith Ambrose, de Sacram. lib. 4. cap. 5) what are the heavenly words of consecration? These are they: the Priest saith, make this oblation ascribed unto us, reasonable and acceptable for us——who the day before his passion tooke bread in his holy hands,—— and giving thankes, blessed it, brooke it, and gave to his Apostles, saying, Take, eate, &c. and so unto the end of the institution. But Hierome, in 3. c. Soph. saith, that to make the Eucharist, there is not onely a necessity of solemne prayer, but also of merite in the Priest. We call that only [the body and blood of Christ] (saith August. de Trinit. lib. 3. cap. 4) which we taking from the fruits of the earth and consecrating with mysticall Prayer, doe receive in due order, for our soules health; and as a memoriall of our Lords suffering for us. Presently after this prayer (saith Gregory l. 7. Indict. 2. epist. 63) we say the Lords prayer; because it was the Apostles use to consecrate the host of oblation at that prayer onely. Vnlesse Christ doe come himselfe, (saith Hesichius lib. 2, in Leuit. cap. 8) at the Priests prayer, and sanctifie the supper, and lay the fundation of the action, there can by no meanes any sacrifice of the Lord be made. it is not credible (saith Innocentius III. lib. 4, de myst. Missæ, cap. 6, that he distributed his body before he had consecrated. But it may be said that Christ consecrated by the divine power, & after wards shewed the forme that others should follow in their solemnizing, for he of himself se consecrated by his owne power: but we, by that vertue which he hath given to the words. If any Priest (saith Scotus in 4, d. 8, q. 2. art. 2.) should begin to say these words, This is my body, and omit the words that do goe before them: I say that in all such cases we may not worship [the Eucharist] simply, but with this condition, If it be truly consecrated. And of the consecration of the blood he speaketh in like manner; We are not infallibly taught, whether unto the forme of the consecration of the blood do belong any of the words which are after these words [of my blood] or any of them that follow untill these [do this:] therfore it is dangerous to averre any thing without sufficient authority be had for the confirmation. Likewise Biel, in 4, dist. 8, q. 3 concl. 3, saith, that the necessary and precise forme of consecrating the supper, is not sufficiently determined of in the Canonicall Scriptures: which assertion he doth afterwards affirme by reason. The learned man D. Redman observing the tumultuous wrangling of the schoolemen about the words of consecration, was not afraid to affirme, that not one almost of all the whole schoole did rightly understand the word [Consecrate] Histor. Martyr. Anglicana.

17 The body of Christ in the Fathers writings, is threefold; Reall, that is, his body assumed: Mysticall, the Church: Sacramentall, the bread in the supper. The body of Christ taken from the altar (saith the decretalls de consecr. d. 2. ca. 79) is a figure, if we view the outward formes of bread and wine: but the truth, when we beleeve the body and blood of Christ to be truly there within. The flesh is a Sacrament of the flesh (saith Aug. in Sent. Prosp.) and the blood of the blood. The bread is Christs body, not corporally but spiritually, saith Ælfrike Archb. of Canterbury in his sermon in Saxon, wherein he distinguisheth the body crucified, and the sacrameatal body. And to make Christs body, is to consecrate the bread into the signe of his real body. Let the word come to the element (saith Aug. tract. in Ioan. 80) and it becommeth a Sacrament. This is the body which the Fathers say so often to be daily made, blessed, eaten, broken, divided, falleth to the earth, is handled, swallowed, & torne with the teeth: Cyprian, sermone de Lapsis. The nature of the bread and wine (saith Bede in Epiph. D°.) is by the ineffable sanctification of the Spirit, translated into the Sacrament of the body and blood of our Lord. The flesh and blood of our Lord (saith Hier. in Epheſ. 1) is understood two waies, either for his spirituall, and divine flesh, and blood; whereof he said, my flesh is meate indeed, and my blood is drinke indeed, —or for the flesh which was nailed on the crosse, and that blood which was shed by the souldiers speare.

18 And the creation that the Fathers speake of was alwaies without transubstantiation. When the oyle is consecrated for the sicke (saith Amalar. de eccl. offic. l. 1. ca. 12) we conclude thus: By whom thou (O Lord) alwayes createst all these good things.

19 The Fathers say that we receive Christ in the bread, or under the forme of bread, as the bread is a signe of Christs flesh, and instrument of the soules nourishment: not as the receptacle of his body. And likewise they say that we in the water do receive the remission of our sinnes. Lumb. Sent. 4, d. 3. But this is as we say, that we have possession given us in writings, when as the writings do but assigne the same unto us: and so we receive Christ in the bread, as the signified in the signe, not the contained in the continent.

20 The Sacrament is honoured, received, and respected, as it is the expressive seale and signe of our mysticall union with Christ, by whose body wee are after an admirable manner, quickned. Hence it is called a mystery to bee trembled at, because by these creatures through the operation of the divine maiesty, we are made partakes of the body and blood of Christ. And hence it was that God hath shewen some miracles about this supper to make the institution more honourable, not to prove the reall presence. And upon this, the Fathers had a care that none of it should fal to the ground, and reverenced all the ornaments of the Church, and suffered not the Catechumenists to communicate. And Chrysost. in Ephe. hom. 3. saith that it is a kings table, that the king himselfe is present, and Angels doe minister to him. By this he moved all to reverence, and hence he called it an oblation to be trembled at. Vid. loc.

21 The Fathers give but one place at once unto Christs body. Our Lord is above (saith Aug. tract. 30, in Iob.) but here also, and our Lord is truth. For his body wherein he rose againe, may be but in one place: but his truth is spread abroad every where. Basil de Sp. S. cap. 22. proveth the holy Ghost to be God, because he can be in many places at once. He ascended into heaven (saith Aug. epist. 57. ad Dardan.) sitteth at Gods right hand, from whence and from no other place he shall come to Iudgement. And again, in that he is God, he is every where: but as he is man, he is but in heaven. And, doubt not that as God he is every where present——but his circumscriptible body is in some certaine place of heaven. According to his humane substance, (saith Fulgen. l. 2. c. 17. ad Thrasimund.

hee

hee left the earth, when he ascended up to heaven. The flesh, (saith Vigilius contra Eutyc. l. 4. whilest it was here upon earth, was not in heaven, and now that it is in heaven, it is no more upon the earth.

22 Lastly, when transubstantiation was once established, the most learned stucke to the opinion of consubstantiation, as most congruent unto Scripture: receiving the opinion of transubstantiation, either solely or chiefly, because the Church had so decreed: Scotus in 4. dist. 11. q. 3. art. 1. holds expressely, that the doctrine of Transubstantiation is not expressed in the Scriptures, adding this: It seemeth to move us chiefly [to hold transubstantiation] because we must hold of the Sacraments, as the Romane Church hath set downe in the Extravagants de hæret. c. Ad abolendum, where note these words in Paris edition, ann. 1497, in the margent: the faith of this Sacrament is onely because of the determination of the Church. And in the same article, resp. ad. arg. 3, saith thus. We say that the Church hath resolved that this meaning [that the bread is transubstantiate] is the truest faith; in the creede of Laterane under Innocent the 3 d beginning, Firmiter credimus. &c.——where the truth of some things to be beleeved is declared, and that more plainely, than either in the Apostles Creede, Athanasius his, or that of the Conncell of Nice. Briefly, whatsoever is there said for to be beleeved, wee must hold to be of the substance of faith——. If you aske why the Church would make choice of so hard an understanding of this article, when the Scripture may be salved with an explication both more easie, and in apparance more true; to this I say that the Scriptures are expounded by the same spirit that made them. And we must imagine that the Catholike Church explaneth this to us with the same spirit that it taught us our first faith, namely, the spirit of truth. This opinion, both in the same sense, and almost in the same words we may reade in Biel, lect. 41. in Canon. Miss. with this addition moreover, that this ordination [of transubstantiation] was not known perhaps in the Church untill after the institution. And it is thought to have beene first revealed unto the holy Fathers, or found out by them through their labour in explaining of the Scriptures. Though Christs body (saith Petrus de Alliaco, in 4. Sen. q. 5, art. 2. Concl. 2) as a quantity, and the bodily quantity therof be in heaven, and in the Sacrament: yet it is not in the Sacrament as a quantative body, or a bodily quantity. And againe, q. 6, art. 2. That manner [of Consubstantiation] which saith the substance of bread doth there remaine, where the body of Christ begins to be, is possible and neither opposite to reason nor Scriptures: nay it is easier to understand, and more reasonable to conceive than any of those that separate the substance from the accidents, and make Christs body a non-substance. For this putteth no accidents without a substance, which is one of the difficulties in this question——, and therefore it seemes not any way inconvenient to follow the first way, if so be that the Church had so determined. And againe: The fourth, and more common opinion is; that the substance of bread remaineth not, but ceaseth simply to have a being——& though this be not so probable out of Scripture, (saith my judgement) yet of the determination of the Church: yet since it favoureth this opinion, as the common opinion of Doctors and holy men, therfore I also doe hold it. Thus he. It is most plaine (saith Durandus, in 4. dist. 11. q.) that it is a rash part to say that Christs body by divine power cannot be in the Sacrament otherwise than by having the bread converted into his substance. And againe, But if that manner [which teacheth the substance of bread to remaine after consecration] were true, de facto, of the thing done, we should have many doubts taken away which fall about this Sacrament, of his teaching the bread doth not remaine; for first, there was a doubt how any thing can be nourished by this Sacrament; and then how the formes may bee corruptible; or how any thing can have generation by them, all which doubts the other sense would cleare——. But because this way may not bee held expressely, since the Church hath determined on the contrary way, whom wee presume not to erre in such cases; therefore by holding expressely that side, we must answer unto the arguments on the contrary side. And in his third question. Saving the reverence of a better judgment, it may be thought that in the Sacrament there is a conversion of the substance of the bread into Christs body, and that in this manner: The forme of the bread being corrupted, the matter therof is under the forme of Christs body; suddenly, and by the eternall power of God: as the matter of food or nourishment is under the forme of that which it feedeth by the power of nature. And afterwards: The foresaid manner of the conversion——is evidently possible; And the other [transubstantiation] is not intelligible, neither is the one more approved or reproved by the Church, than the other. Whereas the words of the Scriptures (saith Caietane, in 3. part. Thom. q. 75. art. 1) are expounded two wayes; either properly, or metaphorically: the first errour in this point was their's that interpreted these words of our Lord [this is my body] metaphorically, which the Master of the Sentences in his fourth booke, and tenth distinction speaketh of, who in this point is reproved. And the force of his reproofe consisteth herein, that the Church understandeth these words properly, and it behoveth them to be verified properly. I say the Church: for indeed there is not any forcible motive in the Gospel

Gospell to make these words be taken properly. But Iosaph Angles, in florib. Theolog. in 4, dist. 11. q. 4. de Eucharistia, art. 1., admonisheth us of circumspection in reading this place of Caietane. Seeing in it is certaine (saith Porm. in Mat. 26.) that Christs body is there, what neede we dispute whether the bread remaine or no? Thus he. Now before the Schoolemens time, there was one Elfrike, Arch-bishop of Canterbury, who in his forenamed Saxon Sermon which was woont to be read every feast of Easter in the English Churches, speaketh expressely against the same transubstantiation, and Berengarius likewise in his booke of the body and blood of Christ:

Adoration and eleuation of the Sacrament.

1 THe adoration in the Sacrament belongeth unto Christ sitting in heaven, and is an inward worship of the heart, or lifting up of the minde being stirred up with these outward signes. The signes (saith Aug. de catech. rud. cap. 26) are visible Sacraments of diuine things, but invisible things are therin honoured.

2 If the worship be referred to the Sacrament only, it is but a reverence; and no adoration, given as well to baptisme as the supper, as testifieth Aug. de doctr. Christ. l. 3, cap. 9.

3 Honorius the third, ann. 1220. was the first that euer instituted the adoration of the Sacrament. And after him Vrban the 4. ordained a feast in honour of the body of Christ.

4 The elevation of the hoste was used, not that it should be adored, but to signifie the mystery of Christ taken downe from the crosse. Amalar. lib. 3. cap. 26. The Priests and Deacons elevation signifie the taking downe of our Lord from the crosse: the hoste and the cup signifie the Lords body. And the Liturgy of Chrysostome doth not affirme, that the elevation of the bread was used, that Christ therein should be adored: but the priest elevating the sacred bread crieth out, Holy, to the holy.

The appurtenances of the Masse, at this day.

1 THe tapers that are now lighted in the Church on the day at Masse time, before and after the reading of the Gospel, are not approved by the Fathers. Wee light no torches on the day time, saith Hierome against Vigilantius; yet he confesseth that they were lighted in the Churches of the East, by some of ignorance, and by others that had zeale, but not according to knowledge, cap. 3. But Tertullian, de Idolat. saith, that this was the custome of heretikes. And Lactantius wisely reprehendeth it, lib. 6. Instit. capite 2., saying: They do light up lampes unto God, as though he lived in the darke: so doth the Councell of Eliberis, cap. 34.

2 The Primitive Church never used Incence. We buy no frankincense at all, saith Tertullian, apolog. 42. We goe not into Arabia to seeke frankincense. (saith Augustine in Psal. 49. (unde) is the sacrifice of praise that God requireth at our hands. And Psal. 50. Offer willfully: thou hast thine offering within thy selfe: goe not abroad to seeke frankincense, but say, In me O God are thy vowes; the praises which I will give thee. Arnobius in his 7. booke against the Gentiles, inferreth many reasons against the burning of Incense.

3 The vessels wherein our Sacraments are put and consecrated (saith Walfrid, cap. 24. de reb. eccles.) are cups and dishes. Pope Zepherine ordained that the celebration should be performed with dishes of glasse: and Vrban after him caused them and all other Church vessels to be made of silver: thus as in all the rest, so in this hath the Churches gravity and state in cermonies, increased dayly with the times. Thus saith he.

4 The linnen vestures, [be they Albes, or Surplesses] were at the first the rayments of noblemen, and for honours sake given unto Priests: but not unto any Monke, save only in divine service time, as Erasmus testifieth in the life of Hierome. Theodoret. lib. 2, hist. ca. 27 relateth that Constantine gave Macarius Bishop of Ierusalem a robe wrought with gold, for him to use in Baptisme.

5 The Priests ornaments (as Walfrid. reporteth) grew up by little and little unto the height that they now be in. For first they said their Masses in common attyre: as they doe unto this day in some Churches of the East: But Pope Stephen ordained that the Priests should have holy vestures, to weare in no daily use saving in the Church. —— It was decreed in the Councell of Bracarea, that no Priest should celebrate Masse without a typper. Others added other vestures, in the Church, either in imitation of the habite of the ceremonial Priests, or to beare some mysticall signification. Thus saith Walfrid. de reb. eccles. capite 24. And indeede the gaudie shewes that are now used about the apparell of the Masse, were neither seene nor heard of in whole or part, for above 400. yeares after Christ.

6 And for 800. yeares after Christ, there were but eight vestures used in all the whole mysteries of religion; as the said Walfrid. capite 24, and Amalarius, l. 2. c. 22. de offic. eccles. doe both testifie: whereas now there are fifteene, six Priestly vestures, and nine of the Bishops.

7 The clergy of antiquitie, as well in the Westerne as Eastern Church did use to haue the head polled, but not shaven as the Papists have now, and which the Fathers reprove. The haires of the head (saith Clemens Alexandrinus, pedag. lib. 3. capit. 11.) are to be cut, not with a razor, but with barbers sizzers. Shew you (saith Optatus to the Donatists, l. 2. contr. Parm.) where you are commanded to have the Priests head shaven: whereas contrariwise innumerable examples shew that it is unlawfull to bee done. We learne here (saith Hierome upon the 44. of Ezechiel) that wee neither ought to bee shaven to the bare, with a razor, nor to be curio neare, that wee seeme as shaven: but let our haire grow so, that it doe couer our skinne. As for the shaving used now adaies, the church thought not of it for many ages after Christ: for the first mention that was ever made of the shaving of the crowne like a circle is in Germanus of Constantinople his Theoria; The shaving of the Priest (saith he) and the cutting of his haire round upon the crowne, is in signe of the crowne of thorne which Christ bare upon his head. This also is spoken of by Hugo Sanct. de Sacram. lib. 2. par. 3. c. 1. Lumbard, lib. 4. dist. 24. Thomas, and Bonaventure, being indeed all one with the shaving of the lay-penitents, as the Councell of Agatha, cap. 2. and the third Councell of Toledo, cap. 12. doe both record. As for the Priests modeme shaving, it is absolutely condemned by the fourth Councell of Toledo, canon. 40. in these words: Let all clearkes or readers, as the Levites and Priests, polling their haire all their [illegible] over above, leave but a circle like a [illegible]ne below, [about their eares.] Not as the readers doe in some part of Galacia, who wearing their haire long, like laymen, do only clippe a little circle in the top or crowne of the head: for this the heretikes in Spaine do use unto this day. The Greekes used no round polling, as Bede in two places testifieth, viz. hist. Eccl. lib. 4. cap. 1. & lib. 5. cap. 22.

8 The crowne in the Fathers signifies the Episcopall glory, dignity and reverence: or the hoarines of their haire, which to old men is as a crowne: Or it may be the Polling used in those dayes, not the wearing of the haire about the temples, and the crowne shaven as the center of the circle. And so must that Epistle of Hierome to a certaine Priest, be understood; the crowne upon the clearks head signifieth the kingdome they have in God. And that of Aug. epist. 26. I pray thy crowne to salute thy two brethen, My Lords Alipius, and Euodius, in my name.

9 The Priests cut, and the Monkes, in ancient time (for all Baronius his talking, annal. tom. 1. p. 631) was both one: for both used to cut all their haire, leaving but a ring round about their eares, Tolet. Conc. 4. cap. 40.

10 The beginning of this cleargy clipping was thus: the people at the first were delighted with long haire: which afterwards the Cleargy used to cut for soberneſſe and modesty sake. And this in processe of time through a growne generall use, became a significant ceremony. So saith Ibid. de offic. eccles. l. 2. cap. 4 the cutting of the haire, and leaving a circle below, I take to signifie priesthood, & the rule of the Church in them. And Amalar. de off. l. 2. c. 5. saith, We beare our crowne upon the lower part [of our head] when we do equalize with reason those necessaries of the world, which we ought to governe. This of ceremony superstition is growne.

11 Organs were erected about the yeare 660, as Platina saith, in Vitaliano, about 820, as Aventinus saith, de gest. Bran. lib. 4. cap. 114. not untill after Aquinas his time, as Navarre witnesseth, in lib. de or at. & hor. canon. c. 16. As for Church-musicke, in set songs, Gregory in his 4. booke, epi. 44. de gest. Syn. habita in urbe disalloweth it.

12 In the ancient Church, such solemne simplicity was accepted, that they never used any ceremony in their ordination of Bishops, but only imposing of hands upon him. Afterwards crept in the ceremonies of delivery of a booke, and annoyling of the hands of the priest with chrisme. The Hierarchy under Areopagita his name speaketh of imposition of hands, but not of unction at all.

Penance sacramentall, and Satisfaction.

1 THe Sacrament of penance arose from these beginnings; first, in the primitive Church, the publike penance with his rites was in use: not any private penance used, or at least not imposed: afterwards about Gratians time, anno 1130. entred the disputations of the necessity of private confession, and satisfaction, getting footing, but not foundation untill Peter Lumbard; and he was the first that durst averre it to bee a proper Sacrament. And the succeeding Schoolemen could not agree about the matter and forme thereof, for all his determination. But in the Councell of Laterane, anno 1215. they made a judicial proceeding of confessing and absolution.

2 The Fathers satisfaction was an ecclesiasticall and publike mulct imposed upon the offenders, as this, that they should be put in some separate corner of the Church, and there that in abstinence of meate, drinke, and rayment, and also in teares and sorrowes, they should at an appointed time acknowledge their offence, testifie their repentance, and thereby satisfie the Church whom they had offended, and which doubted of their repentance. This Saint Augustine testifieth, Enchir. 65.

5 The satisfactions which are said to bee made unto God, were no redemptions of temporall paine, but actions and rites, whereby the sinner thought to satisfie Gods precept, commanding true and unfained repentance, and the fruits thereof, according to the manner and measure of the sinne: whereby the actions became not onely pleasing to the Church, but even to God also. In this sense Radulph. Ardens. In feria 4. in ca. Teiunij, saith, Satisfaction for sins done, consisteth in three things; in fair satisfaction of worke, compunction of minde, and confession of mouth. And in this sense are almes called satisfaction, not that they are the price of our sinnes before God, but because they are signes of true and unfained repentance. This the Fathers doe approve, and Augustine for one, de Dogmat. eccl. ca. 54. in those words; The satisfaction of repentance, is to cut off all causes of sinne, and not to dally with the entrance of their instigations.

You shall mortifie your in-borne vices, (saith Bede in Psal.) by bringing forth fruits worthy of penitence: every one afflicting himselfe for every sinne, as farre as true and worthy repentance doth exact. And how confession aboliseth our sinnes, the Canon declareth, c. Omnis qui. De penitentia, distinct. 1. in these words, Confession is made to shew repentance, not to obtaine pardon. And in the same distinction, c. 1. Medicine, the glosse expoundeth these words, [Almes do redeeme sinnes] thus, [do shew them to be forgiven.] Plaudanus, in 4. dist. 25. denyeth that workes can satisfie for sinne, being otherwise due of themselves. And this phrase [redeeme your soules] is reproved by Optatus, lib. 3. contra Parm. And Marke the Heremite, in his book de baptismo, denyeth that our sinnes can be abolished by prayer, fasting, gifts, humility, &c. but that such things are meanes to preserve us from relapse: and his reason for the first, is, because sins are taken away onely by the crosse of Christ. Here it is not amisse to recite a saying of Lanspergus a Carthusian, not so tedious as it is true and religious. I would not have thee thinke (saith hee) that thou canst doe pennance for thy sinnes: doe not dreame of it: Why? Because thy sinnes are in number above the sands of the sea: too too many, and all too great. Thou art not able to satisfie for one, what canst thou do for many, for innumerable? thinke not therefore that thou canst doe workes satisfactory for thy sinnes. For what alas canst thou account of these, in respect of the many mountaines of thine enormities? They that doe great good workes, and commit but small offences, they satisfie for their sinnes: but whatsoever thou doest, refer it to Gods glory: and what good soever thou doest, thinke and resolve thou hast done it for his pleasure. Let the honour, the love, and the good will and pleasure of God, be the motives unto all thy good works. Do all things to please him, to win his favour, to purchase his friendship, o honour him, that fulfilling his pleasure, thou be not offensive to him. And yet thinke all thy works of farre smaller moment than able to satisfie for thy sinnes: for, for them thou must offer unto God the workes of Iesus Christ, his sorrowes, wounds, death, in the union of that love wherein hee endured all these for thee. These are the meanes of thy satisfaction; but whatsoever thou doe, or suffer, offer it not unto God for thy sinnes; but for his love and good pleasure, either doe, or suffer, still wishing increase of grace from him, whereby thou maist performe greater, more and more acceptable workes. Wherefore let the love of God be the cause of thy good life, and the scope and levell of all thy good workes. Thus said a Fryar.

4 Amongst the Latines, the word [Satisfacere] is sometimes used for to please another in executing of some office. I (saith Tully, l. 1. epist. 1.) in all duty and zeale, doe rather satisfie, or please all others, but not my selfe at all. Besides, satisfaction among men is the recompence made for an injury, either in retribution of dammage, or in obtaining of pardon by submission. And after this second way, are workes of repentance tearmed satisfactory before God, being reall supplications for pardon, which God in Christ approveth. It behoveth the Deacon whom you write of, ——— to satisfie the Bishop that governeth him, with perfect humility, (saith Cyprian, l. 3. ep. 9. And lib. 1. epist. 3. they pray that Christ would be intreated with prayers and satisfactions. And I embrace with ready and perfect charity, those that turne from their sins with humble and simple satisfaction. And, ad Demetrianum, he exhorteth the faithful to satisfie God, whilest they have time here upon earth. But this can be nothing but to beseech Almighty God for remission of sinnes, and to acknowledge them; and the effect of this satisfaction hee affirmeth to be the attaining of pardon. The acknowledging of sinne, and entreaty of pardon is a satisfaction not unto the strictnesse of the Iudge, but unto his mercy, (as Cyprian saith very well in another place) that is unto Gods mercifull acceptance. And very rightly: for these acts of the penitent, doe include in themselves, a faith laying hold upon Christs satisfaction, by which they have their acceptance. And in this sense Chrysostome, hom. de B. Philogonio, saith, that if thou returne from thine old sinnes wholly, and promise unto God truly, that thou wilt never turne againe unto them, God requires no more for a further satisfaction.

5 So then the workes of Piety are called satisfactions, as they are referred unto our prayers. God taketh away the sinne (saith Marke the Heremite. L'Debaptisme.) which wee intreate for by almes, prayers, and patience. Our sighes and sorrow (saith Climacus, de memor. mortis, grad. 7.) doe cry out unto God, and our teares do goe the embassage of feare. Gods mercy is obtained by the intreacy of almes, saith Radul. Ardens, hom. in idem. 1. Quad. So that satisfactions are such, by the meanes of obtaining in prayer. Wherefore it behooveth us to believe that we must repent (saith Ambrose, de penitentia. libro 1. ca. 8.) and shall obtaine Pardon; and yet to hope for pardon out of faith, not as of debt: It is one thing to desire we, & another thing to presume faith obtaineth as it were from covenant in writing, but presumption is neerer the arrogant than the suppliant.

6 In proceese of time the doctrine of satisfaction began to bee delivered and taught in more and more plaine tearmes, as when the Fathers say, that hereby our sinnes are redeemed, expiated, purged, and purified, &c. The Generall Lord of us all (saith Chrysostome, Homil. 1. in Genes.) ——— desiring to purge away all that ever we have offended, hath found out a cure thereof, which is performed by fasting. Almes deeds do cleanse the whole man, saith Prosper. lib. de promiss. & praed. part. 2. c. 7. If we be contaminated with any spotte (saith Leo, Ser. 2. de Collect.) by conversing in this earthly habitation, it may be wholly washed out by the power of almes-deedes. The man that hath undone himselfe, by his owne satisfaction may redeem himselfe, saith Caesarius, Hom. 1. And Chrysologus, Hom. 42. holdeth, that fasting doth open the gates of Heaven, and letteth us in unto God. Almes extinguisheth sin (saith Maximus Taurinensis, Homil. de diversis,) even as baptisme doth, and putteth out the fire of hell. So that almes is as a second fount of purgation for the soule. But here we must note, that the Fathers speak not in the papisticall sense of remission of any temporall paines: but speake wholly and absolutely of the whole crime, and whole punishment together, so that they speake both in these and in other like causes, after a figurative metonymy, by which that is given to the meanes, way, instrument, and occasion, which in it selfe is due and proper unto another. For it is the onely blood of Christ, which is the satisfaction and purgation of all the sinnes of the world, as the Fathers themselves acknowledge. There is but one expiation for sinne (saith Basil, In capite primo Esay.) namely, that blood which was offered and shedde for the salvation of all the word. And Ambrose in Luc. 23. & Serm. 46. saith, that teares doe wash away and purge our sinnes: and yet hee addeth in expresse tearmes: I reade of Peters teares, but not of his satisfaction. It is a common phrase with us to say, this journey hath made mee rich; and the pardoning of an injury is not the cause of the forgiveneſſe, but the article and condition upon which the pardon is given. So said Adrian unto Frederike, wee have given thee the ensigne of the Imperiall crowne, that is, our hands have consecrated and crowned thee, Sigon. de Regno Italia, libro 8. initio.

7 The Fathers say in like manner, that the works of penitence do take away our sinnes, but not by themselves, but onely in respect that they are annexed unto that faith which apprehendeth and layeth hold upon Christ, for the remission of sinnes: (Looke the place of Ambrose, cited in the 5. section of this article.) I doe not deny, (saith the same Saint. De penit. lib. 2. c. 9.) that sinne may be diminished by extending often our bounty unto the poore, but then must thy faith approve thine almes and expenses. Looke also his 1. booke, and 30. chapter of his offices.

8 Sometimes the Fathers use an hyperbolicall metaphor in their phrases. As oft as we give almes after our sinnes, (saith Gregory in Iob 12 cap. 14.) so often we doe as it were pay a price for our euill deeds. And libro 6. in 1. Regum, cap. 15. The third kinde, that is revenge (for sinne) is as it were necessary medicine, that the imposume of guilt which we lance in our conversion, be purged by confession, and cured by the salve of affliction. Thus will the Fathers have almes to obtaine us justice and salvation, but this is figuratively spoken, not properly: for such things as we bestow upon the poore, they say we lend unto God, after the Scripture phrase; and that hee becomes our debtour, who payeth backe the whole summe with profit, an hundred fold, as Chrysostome saith, Hom. 3. in Gen. And Gregory, l. 7. epist. 20. saith. What soever is given unto the poore, if it be well considered, is not given, but lent: because that which is laid out, is doubtlesse returned with a multiplied gaine.

9 Againe, our sinnes are taken away after a double manner: first in respect of the guilt, and fault, and this is called Remission, being peculiar unto God alone: secondly, in respect of the exercise of sinne, which is tearmed purgation, wherein the exercise of sinne is ceased. To have our sinnes absolved, and to have them remitted (saith Hieronme, In Isai. 40) are two severall things: for he that hath his sinnes remitted, needes not absolution: ——— but hee that hath them absolved, hath them so because they are purged and looſed by punishment. And in this sense saith the same Father, In Ierem. 2. that sinnes are purged by warnings. The expiation (saith Rodolphus, in Levit. lib. 12. ca. 2.) belongeth unto Christ, but the clensing to our selves. So that there is a double satisfaction in the Fathers, expiatory, which belongeth unto Christ alone, and emendatory, or approbatory, which they will have to belong unto our selves. Turne unto your Father with true satisfaction, (saith Pacianus paraenes. de penit.) running no further in errours, heaping no more unto your old sins, and in saying some lamenting and mournefull prayer, as this, We have offended before thine eyes. In this sense faith Hugo, de Sanct. Victore de sacramentis l. 2. part. 14 c. 2. that sinne is punished and corrected by satisfaction: and that satisfaction is the correction of the offence. Eucherius, In lib. Regum, l. 2. saith, that both Dauid guilt and ours (for the fault already pardoned) is purged and absolved by afflictions: because God doth endeauour to wipe away all spots of iniquity from his elect, by temporall afflictions. It is a worthy satisfaction to correct our offences, and having corrected them to beware of them, &c. saith Bernard, De domo interior. cap. 1. And in this sense they doe take redemption.

xat' ἐξοχὴν.

10 The Fathers will have great sinnes taken away by publike penance, and small sins by saying of the Lords prayer, August. Enchir. ca. 71. And Augustine likewise will have this prayer to take away great sinnes also, de civit. Dei, l. 21. c. 27. So that this kind of speech is to be understood comparatively, that it should not bee thought requisite to use publike penance for all sinnes: The difference is in the exterior discipline, which set teth downe a diversity of penance in great and small offences. And if that venial sinnes be taken away by the Lords prayer, to what end serveth the punishment of Purgatory after death?

11 Secret satisfaction for sinnes, was never used but in the corrupted estate of the church. Besides, satisfactiō in the Fathers goes before absolution, by which the sinners by imposition of hands, received liberty to communicate, and remission of sins. But at this day it is otherwise in the church of Rome.

Wherefore satisfaction, taken as the redemption of the temporall paine only after the remission of the guilt of the sin, and following the absolution; was unknowne to the Fathers.

Purgatory.

1 Tertullian a Montanist, and Origen, were the first that ever talked of Purgatory in the Church: and yet Origen will have Purgatory to be in this life, In Levit. l. 8. apud Cyrillum: and also to remaine even after the resurrection, hom. 14. in Luc. In sum, saith Tertullian, de anima, capite 55 & ultimo, since wee understand that prison that the Gospell speaketh of, to be hell: and doe interprete, that to pay the very last penny, every slender sin shall be there punished during the stay of the resurrection, none needeth to doubt that the soule shall pay any thing in hell by the body also, after the fulfilling of the resurrection. This also the Comforter * hath often commended. If any man doe admit his speeches, by the acknowledging of his promised graces —— Roffensis against Luther artic. 18, confesseth, that Purgatory was long unknowne, and lately knowne and received into the Church: and so after men began to be afraid of the fire of Purgatory, in crept Indulgences.

* Tertull. peo aclatus.

2 Afterwards the Fathers fell to speake, both of the manner of the paine, and of Purgatory it selfe, but not as of an article of faith, but onely of a probable thing probably. It is not incredible (saith August. Enchirid. ca. 67. & 69) that some such thing should bee after this life, it may bee demanded whether it be so or no, and it may either be known or unknown, that some of the faithfull, as their love to temporall things hath beene more or lesse, so are saved either sooner, or later, by a certaine purging fire. And, de civit. Dei, lib. 21. cap. 26. But whether it be there alone, or there and here, or here alone, that these parts of the worldly building, pardonable from damnation, shall finde a burning fire of transitory tribulation, I do not dispute against it: it may bee, it is true. And, de fide & op. cap. 16, whether therefore some such iudgements follow us in this life onely, or after this life also, it doth not (as I thinke) disagree from truth, if wee understand this sentence in this manner. Hierom, in Isa. libro 28. capite ultimo, hæsitemo, would have such things left wholly unto the knowledge and iudgement of God: and yet he saith, that hee thinketh that there is a moderate and gentle sentence of the Iudge concerning the burning away of the sinnes of Christians. Doest thou leave no punishment for the soules (saith one in Boetius, in Prof. 4. lib. de Consolat. Philosophiæ) when the bodies are dead? Yes, and that great (saith another) part wherof is exercised in penall bitternesse, and part (I thinke) in purgatory clemency.

3 But contrarywise, the Fathers do expresly raze the foundation of the Popish Purgatory. There is no middle place (saith Augustine, lib. de pec. mor. & rem. cap. 28) that a man may bee any where, but with the diuell, who is not with Christ. And the author of Hypognost. l. 5 saith, we acknowledg no third place at all. When wee once depart from hence (saith Cyprian, tract. ad Demetr.) there is no more place of penance, nor no more effect of satisfaction. The guilt being taken away (saith Tertullian, De Baptismo.) so is the punishment. Sinne is so utterly abolished in the remission (saith Chrysostome, De panit. Serm. 3.) that no print of it is left remaining. And, in Genes. hom. 5. Hee that hath not purged away his sinnes in this life, shall find no comfort in the life to come. —— This is the time of acting, and of wrestling: and striving, that is for coronation and reward. And hom. 69. ad pop. Ant. The just ỳ depart hence, are altogether happy, for they are gone to Christ, they are with the King, and there most neere him, not by faith, but face to face. And again, hom. 16. in ep. ad Ro. Death severeth not us from Christ, but joynes us unto that quiet which is with him, and maketh us partakers of that glory. Heere onely is the place for mercy (saith Bede, in Psal. 6) after this world is place only for justice. After the departure of soule out of the body (saith the author of the question in Iustine, quæst. 75) presently distinction is made of the good and the evill: and both are led by angels to the places provided for them: the soules of the good unto Paradise, where they injoy the blessed company of Angels, and of their Saviour Christ. The Saints are in honour, they rest in glory, and their departure from hence is into perfection, (saith Epiph. Hær. 78. sub finem.) The preachers of the Church (saith Anselme in 2. Cor. 5) departing from their bodies, are not deferred from the enjoying of their heavenly country, by spacious delayes; as the old Fathers were; but instantly upon their leaving of the flesh, they doe rest in heavenly faith. What is it to three (saith Bernard, epist. 266.) and thine earthly vestures, th at being about to goe to heaven, hast the robe of glory to put on instantly? And Otho Frisingensis; in his Chron. lib. 8. ca. 26. saith, that some affirme that there is a purgation place in hell, wherein the soules of those that are to bee saved, are either punished with darknesse only, or with the fire of expiation also. If we looke upon him with a right faith, that for our sins hung upon a tree (saith Lumbard, Sen. 3. dist. 19. lit. A.) wee are loosed from the bands of the divell, that is, from our sinnes; and we are so loosed, that hee shall finde nothing in us punishable after this life: because by that his death as the only true Sacrifice, what fault soever we had in us whereby the divel might binde us to punishment, Christ so extinguished, that the divell cannot prevaile over us by tempting, no nor in this life.

See the Section of Intercession, §. 3.

4 The ancient Greeke and Latine Fathers beleeved that the soules of the dead were kept all in one common receptacle our of heaven, until the resturrection. So holdeth Lactantius, in his worke de divino præmio, l. 7. capite 21. And Irenæus, In fine lib. 5. Tertullian likewise against Marcion, lib. 4. capit. 35. and in his booke de anima, cap. 55. where hee saith that every soule is sequestred in the lower places, untill the Iudgement day. So holdeth Iustine: and even the canon of the Masse, which prayeth for the region of light and peace unto all men. So that they admitted not this Purgatory.

5 The Fathers say that all sinnes, even mortall, are purged and remitted by this Purgatory fire. So saith Origen In Hier. homil. 13. If our sinne be mortall, wee cannot be purged with nitre, or borith, (which is a kind of hearbe) but with the spirit of justice, the spirit of burning and punishment. And homil. 24, in Num. he saith, that all that we carry with us, is to be tried by fire or water. That prayer (saith the booke that is called Dionys. Hierar. Ecclesiast. pag. 3. cap. 7) doth intreate Gods clemency to pardon the dead for all sinnes commited through humane infirmity. The offerings for the dead (saith Theophil in Luc. 12.) are of no small value for those that dyed even in great sins. Some (saith Bede, in Psal. 37. commit greater veniall sins, and some lesser: and therefore it is meete —— to have them put into the fire of Purgatory, now in the space betweene this and the judgement.

6 The Fathers teach also, that all are to be purged by fire, as well the Saints of God, as the infidels. All must come to the fire, all must come to this furnace, saith Origen, in Exod. homil 6. And, In Psal. 36. hom. 3. (as I think) It is necessary for us all to come to that fire. The sonnes of Levi (saith Ambrose, in Psal. 36) shall be purged with fire, and so Ezechiel likewise with fire, and Daniel also. But although that these shall be tried by fire, yet they shall say; wee have passed by fire and water. And in Psal. 118. oct. 20. Whilest we live heere, let us keepe our humility, that when any of us doe come unto the judgement of God, and unto those fires which we are to passe thorough, he may say; —— besides a little before: It behooveth all men to passe thorough these flames; whether it be Iohn the Euangelist, —— or Peter.

7 The place wherein there is no water, which Zachary speaketh of, cap 9. signifieth the paines eternall, after Hieromo; and the depth of humane misery, after Augustine de civit. Dei, lib. 18 cap. 35.

8 The Fathers also speake very often of a purgatory in the last judgement, that is, of the paines which are to be suffered not immediately after death, but after the resturrection: for they affirme, that all men except Christ, are to bee tried, and in some sort to be fried with the fire of burning in the day of judgement. I thinke (saith Origen, In Luc. hom. 14) that after the resurrection from the dead, we shall all need a purging, and purifying Sacrament, for none can arise againe without some staines. And this also he affirmeth in diuers other places of his workes, viz. In Psal. 36. homil. 3. In cant. in epist. ad Rom lib. 8. in fine. In Hier. hom. 13. And Lactantius, de divin. præm. lib. 7. cap. 21. saith, that there is a triall to be made by the fire, when God hath judged all men. Out of this which is already spoken (saith Augustine, de civit. Dei, lib. 20, capite 25) we doe plainely see, that there are some that in that judgement shall be punished with certaine purging fires. After the end of the world (saith Ambrose, in Psal. 118. Serm. 3.) this shall bee the future baptisme, when iniquity shall be burned away by the furnace, that the just may shine as the Sunne in the kingdome of God. Looke also the other places of this Father; viz. in Psal. 118, Serm. 20, in Psalm. 36. ad verba, Framea peccatorum: As also Hierome upon Isaiæ in fine, and also upon Amos, capite 3. who nevertheless upon the same later Prophet, capi.9. ouerthrowes the same point of Purgatory. Looke also Hilar. in Psalm. 118. upon the words Concupiuit anima mea justitiam. And Basil. in Isay. cap.4. upon the words Expurgauit Ierusalem.

9 Although Gregory by his apparitions and visions doe make for Purgatory, yet in his Dialogues, (or rather some others) he speakes not confidently, as the Papists doe, but with a plaine doubtfulnesse. Herein (saith he, Dialogo. lib. quarto, c.58.) we must consider that it is a safer way for a man to doe that good himselfe in his owne life, which he hopes to obtaine at others hands after his death. And indeed Gregory in his unforged workes, doth flatly overthrow Purgatory. Because we are redeemed by the grace of our Creatour (saith he, In Iob lib.13. cap.20) we have this heavenly gift bestowed upon us, that when wee leave our carnall habitacle, incontinently we are carried unto our heavenly rewards, because seeing that our Maker and Redeemer breaking up the gates of hell, tooke thence all the soules of the elect, surely he suffereth not us to goe thither from whence he brought all the rest in his descention.

10 That place of Paul which speaketh of the triall by fire, 1. Corinthians 3. verse 13.15 by the common consent of the ancient Fathers, was never spoken nor intended of Purgatory. For first of all by the builders, August. understandeth all Christians, Enchirid. 68. Others, the Ministers and Preachers of the Gospell, as doe Ambrose, Sedulius, Anselme, Thomas Lyra, & Caietane, all upon this place. Secondly, by the name of straw or stubble, some doe understand mortall sinnes: as Chrysostome and Theophilact. Others, heresies, as Ambrose, upon this place, and Hieromе in Isay. 5. Others, bad hearers, as Theodoret and Oecumenius: others, carnall affections, as Augustine in his booke de fide & operibus, the 16. chapter. Thirdly, by that day, they doe understand the day of the last judgement, no middle day; and so doth Theodoret, Theophilact, and Anselme understand it. Fourthly, by the fire some understand the tribulations of this life present: so doth Augustine, de fide & operibus, cap. 16. and so doth Gregory in his Dialogues, libro 4. capite 39. Others take it for the fire eternall, as Chrysostome and Theophilact: others for the fire that shall consume the world, and others for the fire of Gods judgement, which they affirme shal not purge and afflict, but prove and trye, as the lesuites hold.

11 But the foundation of the Popish Purgatory, (namely, that the guilt being abolished, some penall satisfaction is to bee undergone) was never received by the learned teachers of the Church, for at least 1100. yeres after Christ. Lumbard indeed teacheth, that there is paine of Purgatory to be endured after his life, but not after the full and plenary remission of the fault. For he wil have such a fault as is remitted in part, to be reserved for the temporal paine to abolish, l.4.d.20.

Wherefore a Purgatory supposed to be betwen death and the last judgement, serving onely for the purgation of vonsall sinnes, by temporal paines, was unknowne to the Fathers of the first 600. yeeres.

Sacramentall Confession.

1 AVricular confession, that is, the speciall recitation of all mortall sins, necessary for the remission thereof made in secret unto a Priest, began to be urged and commanded in the Church about 800. yeeres after Christ, Alcuine, De divin. offic. ca. 13. in cap. Jejun. taught it in these words: Being willing to forgive all that have offended against him, let him confesse all his sinnes which he can remember. We find this thing needfull of reformation (saith the 2. Councell of Chalons, ca. 32) that many confessing their sinnes unto the Priests, doe it not fully, nor perfectly. Wherefore, because that a man is made of two substances, soule and body, and sinneth sometimes by the motion of the minde, and other sometimes by the frailty of the flesh; both these kindes of sinne ought to bee very narrowly searched after, that a plenary confession may bee made thereof accordingly. Namely, that both the sinnes that have been committed by the body, be confessed, as also by the sole cogitation. Wherefore he that is to confesse his sinnes, is to bee instructed to make his confession of the eight principall sinnes, without which, wee can hardly live in this world. The Priests must call those parties to confession, that are in danger of death, saith the Councell of Mentz, in Gregory the fourth his time, cap.26. Now wee have in deede some examples of this private confession before these times, but no precept at all. Audoenus in the life of Saint Eligius, libro 1. capite 7. saith, that hee——defiring to make himselfe a sanctified vessell unto God, and fearing lest some of his sinnes might darken his soule, hee confessed all his acts from his very youth, before the Priest. But indeed this use had his first invention in Monasteries. Before all things (saith Climacus, in Scala paradisi grad. 4. circa ann. 580.) let us confesse our faults unto our worthy Iudge alone, and if hee command us, let us be ready to confesse them unto all men. And Studiten in his funerall oration upon the death of S. Plato c. 8. saith, And (which was more laudable) hee did often confesse his secretest thoughts and deeds unto one that was his superiour, which was a great signe of his religion. And truly the most strict manner wherewith he did it, made him that heard his confession to be amazed with admiring of him.

But

But to speake truly, this universall law enjoyning to confession, as to a necessary act of salvation, was not promulgate untill the Councell of Laterane under Innocent the 3. Pope.

2 That this kind of confession had the institution from God, divers learned men have either denied, or doubtfully affirmed. Chrysostome refuseth it flatly, Homil.4. de Lazaro. Take heed (saith he) how thou tellest thy defects unto a man, lest hee cast thee in the teeth withall: thou art not to confesse unto thy fellow-servant, that he may divulge it, but unto him that is thy Lord, to him that careth for thy soule, to him that is most courteous, to him that is thy physitian dost thou shew thy wounds. And indeed this Father tosseth this doctrine of confession in many places, viz. homil.2. in Psal.50. homil.31 in Epist. ad Heb. homil.5. de incomprehensib. nat. Dei. hom.8. de pan. hom. de pœnit. & confessione. And so doth Cassian in his Collations, 20. cap. 8. And Augustine also, Confession. l.10. c.3. And indeed private confession of great crimes was abrogated about the yeere 396, by reason of the discouery of an whoredome committed betweene a Deacon and a noble woman, as history doth testifie, (Hist. tripart. lib.9. c.36.) But if the Fathers had thought it to have been a divine ordinance, doubtlesse it should never have beene disanulled by them. And the glosse, de Pœnit. dist.5. cap.1.5. In Pœnitentia, saith, that it is better to say that it was instituted by a tradition of the Vniversall Church, rather than by the authority of the old or new Testament. And Gratian himselfe doth stagger in this question, De Pœnit. d.1.q.3. c.89. Quamvis. Vpon what authority, or upon what grounds of reason both these opinions of satisfaction or confession doe rely, we have briefly laid down; but which of them to stick unto, I leave unto the readers choice: for there are both wise and religious men on both opinions. Here he allowes every man his judgement free, therefore he thought it not to be of divine institution. And, Dist. eadem c. Convertimini. Here may we understand that wee may obtaine pardon though our mouthes bee silent, and——our Lord doth shew that a sinner is not cleansed by the judgement of the Priests, but by the bounty of the divine grace. And yet farther, Cap. Quis aliquando. Hence it is most evidently apparent, that our sinnes may bee taken away without the confession of the mouth. Panormitane, De pœnit. & remiss. ca. Omnes utriusq; sexus, liketh that opinion very well, that saith that confession arose from a certaine generall tradition of the Church: and that the Greekes doe not sinne in not using of it, because this custome sprung not up among them. And Scotus, In sent. 4. dist. 17. quæst. 1. is very doubtful to say it is of divine institution: Either wee must hold the first member, that is, that it is of divine institution published by the Gospell,——or if that bee not sufficient, wee must say——that it is of the divine positive law published by Christ, unto the Apostles: and unto the Church, by the Apostles, without all Scripture, as the Church holdeth many other things from the Apostles mouthes without any Scripture. Amongst the writers of the Popes law (saith Rhenanus in argumentum in Tertull. de pœnitent.) there are some, (and those famous men) which do draw this confession, which at this day we use unto the Priest, and every little circumstance thereof, from the institution of the Church. For first, Publike confession, that is, the act of penance done before the whole Church, as taken out of the old Testament, of publike seemes to have been made private:——for which it was necessary——to make certaine lawes for penances——for satisfaction, and observation of which lawes, it was fit (for the Layty especially) to make a Priest partaker of their secrets and counsell. And againe, This secret confession (as farre as we can conjecture) sprung out of that publike one, through mens voluntary piety;——for we reade no precept of old for it. And like unto this hath he another place, in admonitione de Tertullian. Dogmatis, where he saith: Concerning secret confession, you shall scarcely find any of the Fathers speake of it as of a thing commanded. Thus said he. Caietane upon the 20. of John affirmes, 1. That Christ instituted but a voluntary confession, and therefore not as necessary to salvation, and 2. That Christ instituted no auricular confession.

3 By confession in the Fathers, is generally meant confession before God (onely) or a publike acknowledgement of some publike crimes incurring the censure of excommunication, and that in an ecclesiasticall convention: of the necessity of this they speake very often. Yea Origen, in Psal.37. hom.2. & Cyprian, De lapsis Serm.5. do exhort the people to make a publike recitation of all their small, and secret sinnes, and of all their evill intentions. Leo also, epi.80. mentioneth this custome, of writing downe the secrets of their consciences that made confession, into a little booke, & in rehearsing of it publikely in the audience of the people; and holds this fulnesse of faith to be laudable, which for the feare of God, sticks not to blush before men: but yet he disallowes the custome, and abolisheth it in these words: Let the guilt of the consciences be shewen onely unto the Priests in secret confession. And by and by after: Let that confession suffice which is first offered unto God, and then unto the Priest, who becommeth an Intercessor unto God for the sinne of the Penitents. But there is no proofe to shew that this secret confession was universall, of all the sinnes; but it rather seemes to concerne such offences only as did trouble the conscience. Let us open the uncleanesse of our soules leprosie unto the Priest, as the law commands us (saith Beda In Iacob.5. And where-

capi.9. ouerthrowes the same point of Purgatory. Looke also Hilary, in Psalm. 118. upon the words Concupiuit anima mea justitiam. And Basil, in Isay, cap. 4. upon the words Expurgauit Ierusalem.

9 Although Gregory by his apparitions and visions doe make for Purgatory, yet in his Dialogues, (or rather some others) he speakes not confidently, as the Papists doe, but with a plaine doubtfulnesse. Herein (saith he, Dialog. lib. quarto, c. 58.) we must consider that it is a safer way for a man to doe that good himselfe in his owne life, which he hopes to obtaine at others hands after his death. And indeed Gregory in his unforged workes, doth flatly overthrow Purgatory. Because we are redeemed by the grace of our Creatour (saith he, In Iob lib. 13. cap. 20) we have this heavenly gift bestowed upon us, that when wee leave our carnall habitacle, incontinently we are carried unto our heavenly rewards, because seeing that our Maker and Redeemer breaking up the gates of hell, tooke thence all the soules of the elect, surely he suffereth not us to goe thither from whence he brought all the rest in his descention.

10 That place of Paul which speaketh of the triall by fire, 1. Corinthians 3. verse 13. 15 by the common consent of the ancient Fathers, was never spoken nor intended of Purgatory. For first of all by the builders, August. understandeth all Christians, Enchirid. 68. Others, the Ministers and Preachers of the Gospell, as doe Ambrose, Sedulius, Anselme, Thomas Lyra, & Caietane, all upon this place. Secondly, by the name of straw or stubble, some doe understand mortall sinnes: as Chrysostome and Theophilact. Others, heresies, as Ambrose, upon this place, and Hierome in Isay. 5. Others, bad hearers, as Theodoret and Oecumenius: others, carnall affections, as Augustine in his booke de fide & operibus, the 16. chapter. Thirdly, by that day, they doe understand the day of the last judgement, no middle day; and so doth Theodoret, Theophilact, and Anselme understand it. Fourthly, by the fire some understand the tribulations of this life present: so doth Augustine, de fide & operibus, cap. 16. and so doth Gregory in his Dialogues, libro 4. capite 39. Others take it for the fire eternall, as Chrysostome and Theophilact: others for the fire that shall consume the world, and others for the fire of Gods judgement, which they affirme shal not purge and afflict, but prove and trye, as the Iesuites hold.

11 But the foundation of the Popish Purgatory, (namely, that the guilt being abolished, some penall satisfaction is to bee undergone) was never received by the learned teachers of the Church, for at least 1100. yeres after Christ. Lumbard indeed teacheth, that there is paine of Purgatory to be endured after his life, but not after the full and plenary remission of the fault. For he wil have such a fault as is remitted in part, to be reserved for the temporal paine to abolish, l. 4. d. 20.

Wherefore a Purgatory supposed to be betwen death and the last judgement, serving onely for the purgation of veniall sinnes, by temporal paines, was unknowne to the Fathers of the first 600. yeeres.

Sacramentall Confession.

1 AVricular confession, that is, the speciall recitation of all mortall sins, necessary for the remission thereof made in secret unto a Priest, began to be urged and commanded in the Church about 800. yeeres after Christ, Alcuine, De divin. offic. ca. 13. in cap. Jejun. taught it in these words: Being willing to forgive all that have offended against him, let him confesse all his sinnes which he can remember. We find this thing needfull of reformation (saith the 2. Councell of Chalons, ca. 32) that many confessing their sinnes unto the Priests, doe it not fully, nor perfectly. Wherefore, because that a man is made of two substances, soule and body, and sinneth sometimes by the motion of the minde, and other sometimes by the frailey of the flesh; both these kindes of sinne ought to bee very narrowly searched after, that a plenary confession may bee made thereof accordingly. Namely, that both the sinnes that have been committed by the body, be confessed, as also by the sole cogitation. Wherefore he that is to confesse his sinnes, is to bee instructed to make his confession of the eight principall sinnes, without which, wee can hardly live in this world. The Priests must call those parties to confession, that are in danger of death, saith the Councell of Mentz, in Gregory the fourth his time, cap. 26. Now wee have in deede some examples of this private confession before these times, but no precept at all. Audoenus in the life of Saint Eligius, libro 1. capite 7. saith, that hee——desiring to make himselfe a sanctified vessell unto God, and fearing lest some of his sinnes might darken his soule, hee confessed all his acts from his very youth, before the Priest. But indeed this use had his first invention in Monasteries. Before all things (saith Climacus, in Scala paradisi grad. 4. circa ann. 580.) let us confesse our faults unto our worthy Iudge alone, and if hee command us, let us be ready to confesse them unto all men. And Studites in his funerall oration upon the death of S. Plato c. 8. saith, And (which was more laudable) hee did often confesse his secretest thoughts and deeds unto one that was his superiour, which was a great signe of his religion. And truly the most strict manner wherewith he did it, made him that heard his confession to be amazed with admiring of him-

But

But to speake truly, this universall law enjoyning to confession, as to a necessary act of salvation, was not promulgate untill the Councell of Laterane under Innocent the 3. Pope.

2 That this kind of confession had the institution from God, divers learned men have either denied, or doubtfully affirmed. Chrysostome refuseth it flatly, Homil. 4. de Lazaro. Take heed (saith he) how thou tellest thy defects unto a man, lest hee cast thee in the teeth with all: thou art not to confesse unto thy fellow-servant, that he may divulge it, but unto him that is thy Lord, to him that careth for thy soule, to him that is most courteous, to him that is thy physitian dost thou shew thy wounds. And indeed this Father to seeth this doctrine of confession in many places, viz. homil. 2. in Psal. 50. homil. 31. in Epist. ad Heb. homil. 5. de incomprehensib. nat. Dei. hom. 8. de pan. hom. de pœnit. & confessione. And so doth Cassian in his Collations, 20. cap. 8. And Augustine also, Confession. l. 10. c. 3. And indeed private confession of great crimes was abrogated about the yeere 396. by reason of the discovery of an whoredome committed betweene a Deacon and a noble woman, as history doth testifie, (Hist. tripart. lib. 9. c. 36.) But if the Fathers had thought it to have been a divine ordinance, doubtlesse it should never have beene disanulled by them. And the glosse, de Pœnit. dist. 5. cap. 1. 5. In Pœnitentia, saith, that it is better to say that it was instituted by a tradition of the Vniversall Church, rather than by the authority of the old or new Testament. And Gratian himselfe doth stagger in this question, De Pœnit. d. 1. q. 3. c. 89. Quamvis. Vpon what authority, or upon what grounds of reason both these opinions of satisfaction or confession doe rely, we have briefly laid down; but which of them to stick unto, I leave unto the readers choice: for there are both wise and religious men on both opinions. Here he allowes every man his judgement free, therefore he thought it not to be of divine institution. And, Dist. eadem c. Conuertimini. Here may we understand that wee may obtaine pardon though our mouthes bee silent, and——our Lord doth shew that a sinner is not cleansed by the judgement of the Priests, but by the bounty of the divine grace. And yet farther, Cap. Quis aliquando. Hence it is most evidently apparent, that our sinnes may bee taken away without the confession of the mouth. Panormitane, De pœnit. & remiss. ca. Omnes utriusq; sexus, liketh that opinion very well, that saith that confession arose from a certaine generall tradition of the Church: and that the Greekes doe not sinne in not vsing of it, because this custome sprung not up among them. And Scotus, In sent. 4. dist. 17. quæst. 1. is very doubtful to say it is of divine institution: Either wee must hold the first member, that is, that it is of divine institution published by the Gospell,——or if that bee not sufficient, wee must say——that it is of the divine positive law published by Christ, unto the Apostles: and unto the Church, by the Apostles, without all Scripture, as the Church holdeth many other things from the Apostles mouthes without any Scripture. Amongst the writers of the Popes law (saith Rhenanus in argumentum in Tertull. de pœnitent.) there are some, (and those famous men) which do draw this confession, which at this day we use unto the Priest, and every little circumstance thereof, from the institution of the Church. For first, Publike confession, that is, the act of penance done before the whole Church, as taken out of the old Testament, of publike seemes to have been made private:——for which it was necessary——to make certaine lawes for penances——for satisfaction, and observation of which lawes, it was fit (for the Layty especially) to make a Priest partaker of their secrets and counsell. And againe, This secret confession (as farre as we can conjecture) sprung out of that publike one, through mens voluntary piety;——for we reade no precept of old for it. And like unto this hath he another place, in admonitione de Tertullian. Dogmatis, where he saith: Concerning secret confession, you shall scarcely find any of the Fathers speake of it as of a thing commanded. Thus said he. Caietane upon the 20. of Iohn affirmes, 1. That Christ instituted but a voluntary confession, and therefore not as necessary to salvation, and 2. That Christ instituted no auricular confession.

3 By confession in the Fathers, is generally meant confession before God (onely) or a publike acknowledgement of some publike crimes incurring the censure of excommunication, and that in an ecclesiasticall convention: of the necessity of this they speake very often. Yea Origen, in Psal. 37. hom. 2. & Cyprian, De lapsis Serm. 5. do exhort the people to make a publike recitation of all their small, and secret sinnes, and o fall the evill intentious. Leo also, epi. 80. mentioneth this custome, of writing downe the secrets of their consciences that made confession, into a little booke, & in rehearsing of it publikely in the audience of the people; and holds this fulnesse of faith to be laudable, which for the feare of God, sticks not to blush before men: but yet he disallowes the custome, and aboliseth it in these words: Let the guilt of the consciences be shewen onely unto the Priests in secret confession. And by and by after: Let that confession suffice which is first offered unto God, and then unto the Priest, who becommeth an Intercessor unto God for the sinne of the Penitents. But there is no proofe to shew that this secret confession was universall, of all the sinnes; but it rather seemes to concerne such offences only as did trouble the consciences. Let us open the uncleanesse of our soules leprosie unto the Priest, as the law commands us (saith Bede In Iacob. 5. And whersoever the Fathers doe urge this same speciall confession, they doe not teach it to be necessary unto salvation, nor as a meane universally necessary unto the remission of sins, but propose it freely, and exact it as a good and commodious course for the obtaining of consolation for the soule: yea they make mention of confession unto Laymen: for such were the Fathers of the Egyptian Monkes, and yet they did absolve. Theon said unto Serapion confessing his sin of theft, Be of good courage sonne, thy confession absolveth thee from thy bondage, though I hold my peace.

where-

Therefore secret confession, wherein is necessarily required a recounting of all a mans mortall sinnes, together with the circumstances that alter the kinde: and wherein the Priests alone that are the Confessors, doe sit as spirituall Iudges, and impose satisfaction upon the penitents according to the qualety of the sinnes, was never received of the Church untill the later times.

Confirmation. Chrisme.

1 THe Chrisme, or annointing of the baptized, (which was used in antiquity) had his institution from Sylvester, as Platina saith in his life. Hee it was that first made a law of the use of Chrisme in Baptisme, which before, was either free, or none. Athanasius Contra Arian. orat. 2. telleth the Arian, that Christ was never annointed with externall oyle, and infuseth the spirit into us without any such ceremony: Eusebius lib. 1, cap. 4. saith, that the Christians are no more annointed by types & figures, but by the vertues themselues alone. And indeed in Iustine the Martyr time there was no use of Chrisme in baptisme. Augustine Adverſ. Iudeos, cap. 4. saith that Christ was he that changed the carnall (or real) unction into spirituall: And Ierome Adverſ. Luciferianos, dialog. 4. saith that confirmation by unction was rather instituted for the honour of Priesthood, than for any bond of necessity.

2 There be some of the Fathers, as Cyprian and Tertullian, which doe either fall flatly into Montanisme, or at least doe fowly erre, in ascribing more unto this Chrisme than unto the water of baptisme: for they wil have it to consummate the worke that Christ hath begun in Baptisme: Cyprian ep. 70, 72, 73. And what they give to this unction, they give in like manner to the signe of the crosse. Cyprian epist. 73. saith, that the baptised are consummate, and perfected, by this signe. And Tertullian de resur. carnis, saith, that the flesh is signed that the soule may be fenced.

3 As for the use of oyle, in antiquity it was common and vulgar in bathes after washing, whence perhaps it crept into Baptisme. Yea they used to powre oyle into their water. Celsus prescribeth to sweate in the hote house, and there to annoint, and by and by to goe downe into the bath.

4 This Chrisme now, that the Fathers mention, is quite different from the Papists confirmatory unction. The Fathers was common oyle, and so often called and mentioned by that name: the Papists must have balsome therein mixt, Fabianus epist. 2. which is a substance now not to be had uncounterfeit. Looke Plinies naturall history, lib. 12. c. 25.

5 The Fathers used their Chrisme not only in the forehead, but in other parts of the body also. This holy oyle (saith Cyrill Catech. 3. mystagog.) —— is the gift of Christ and of the holy Spirit, made powerfull by the presence of his divinity, wherewith the forehead, and the organs of the senses are figuratively annointed, and the body in like manner with this visible unction, but the soule is sanctified with the holy and quickning spirit. That it was used upon the nose, eares, and eies, the Trullan synode doth testifie, cap. 95.

6 This unction (in the Fathers times) belonged unto baptisme as an appendix and a ceremony, sometimes used before baptisme, sometime after, as it was in the East Church for many yeeres after Christ. By Chrisme are represented the gifts bestowed in baptisme, saith Basil De Spir. sancto. cap. 28. Those that are to bee baptised are annointed like Champions, saith Chrysostome In Coloss. 2. homil. 6. Remember this mystery of holy Baptisme, (saith Theodor. In Cant. c. 1.) wherein those that are to receive it —— being annointed with the Chrisme of spirituall unction, under that visible forme of annointing, do receive the invisible grace of the holy Spirit. Nazianzene orat. 40. In sanct. Baptiſ. saith, that in Baptisme, the soule and the body are sealed with the unction and the spirit. And so saith Damascene, De fide lib. 4. cap. 10. We admitte (saith the Synod in Trulle, cap. 95) the Arians Macedonians, and Novatians —— that give up a bill of their faith, and curse and abjure all heresie, and all doctrine which the holy Catholike and Apostolike Church alloweth not of; and first of all, signing their forehead eies, nose, mouth, & eares with holy Chrisme wee say, The seale of the gift of the holy Ghost. Holy baptisme, and unction (saith Theophylact, In Naum. cap. 2.) are great and solide monuments, unto which all are to make haste, that are not yet endued with the blessing of Christianity. Because Baptisme is a type of the buriall and resurrection of our Lord (saith Theodorus Balsamō Ad c. 48. Syn. Trul.) therefore those that are baptised are justly annointed with chrisme, that they may be buried and rise againe together with Christ. It is necessary (saith Symeon of Thessalonica, De Mysteriis, li. 2) that every faithfull Christian be signed herewithall in his baptisme, that that he that is baptized, may have his baptisme most divine and consummate.

7 This unction (we speake of now) pertained unto baptisme in the West, untill above 300. yeares after Christ. For then was there another confirmatory unction devised by Melchiades, or as some say, before him by Urban the first. How soever it was before used, as we have said. After their baptisme he signeth his souldiours in their foreheads, saith Tertullian, De præscript. ca. 36. 40. We are to know (saith Bede in Psal. 26.) that that unction which is done by the Bishops, with imposition of hands, as different from the other two, and called by the name of confirmation, is indeed all one with the second (to wit, wherby we become professors of Christ) but because of arrogancy, it is not granted unto every one of the Priests, no more than many other like things. Ierome, Contra Luciferan. cap. 4. saith, that neither Priest nor Deacon hath power to baptize without Chrisme, and the Bishops commandement.

8 The annointing in Baptisme was used by the Fathers as a significant signe of the preparation unto the fight and contention with the diuel: wherees now the unction that the Papists use, is a signe of a Sacrament distinct from Baptisme; and yet unto the same end and use. Your brests are annointed (saith Cyrill, Cateches. 3. Mystag. that being armed with the breastplate of righteousnesse; you may resist the diuels assaults more strongly. By Baptisme (saith Nazianz. Orat. 40) thou hast fortified thy selfe, and hast provided thee of a most firme and during helpe, signing thy body and soule with the unction and the spirit. They that are to be baptized (saith Chrysostome, In Coloss. homil. 6.) are annointed like champions, or as those that are to runne a course. The annointing of the baptized with oyle —— (saith Germanus, In Theoria, is to this end; that the diuell should not overcome us with his power of sinne and death. Looke also the saying of Theophylact cited §. 6. By the benefit of this unction (saith the Author de unctione Christi. apud Cyprian.) both wife-dome and understanding is given us from above, and counsaile and fortitude commeth downe upon us from heaven.

We come unto the fount (saith Ambrose, de Sacram. l. 1. c. 2.) thou entrest —— ; and art annointed as a champion of Christ, as one that are to undergoe the fight of this world, &c. The name of Christ (saith Prosper. In sentent. Aug. Sent. 342.) is derived from Chrisme, that is from unction: Wherefore because of this, every Christian is sanctified, so that he may understand that he is not onely partaker both of priestly, and of kingly dignity, but also made a warriour against the divell. By the annointing of Chrisme in Baptisme (saith Rabanus Maurus. Inst. Cleric. l. 1. c. 28) the holy Spirit giveth vigor of heavenly grace unto all the faithfull; therfore, saith he, that Chrisme is well used in baptisme. Now the Schoolemen will have Chrisme in confirmation used to the same effect and end. The perfection of confirmation (saith Thomas) is to make a man stand strongly in himself: and a little after: The child is made fit for the conflict, with this Sacrament. In Sent. 4. dist. 7 q. 3. And Soto, In Sent. 4. dist. 7. art. 7. saith, that by confirmation a man is made a Warriour.

9 The Fathers did not hold their Chrisme and imposition of hands to give grace by the worke wrought, or by doing of the Ceremonie; but used it as a signe, signifying the powerfulnesse of the Spirit which is given in baptisme: Calling him out that is (thus) annointed, unto their sacred conflicts, in type or figure, saith the booke of the Hierarchy, cap. 2. part. 3. The gift of the holy Ghost (saith Origen, hom. 6. in Levit.) is signified by the figure of oyle. Thy foreheau and thine other senses are annointed, typically, saith Cyrill, Catech. 3. But this annointing was accounted of small effect, without the invocatiō which they used therewithall, as the Fathers themselues doe testifie. The hands are put upon them by benediction, with invocation, and calling upon the holy Ghost, saith Tertullian lib. De baptismo. Imposition of hands (saith Augustine De bapt. lib. contra Donat. cap. 16.) what is it but prayer over the person? I doe not deny (saith Hieronie Adverſus Luciferi.) but that it is a custome in some Churches for the Bishops to go, and with invocation of the holy Spirit, put his hands upon those that are baptized by the Priests and Deacons, in smaller cities a farre off. But now adaies it is held a true doctrine, that this unction doth give grace; and confirme truly and properly, whereas in ancient times there was no sacramentall confirmation used without baptisme, and the Lords Supper.

10 It was once a custome to give the Infants this confirmatory Chrisme immediately after their Baptisme; as witnesse Innocent the first epist. 1. Augustine De eccle. dogmat. c. 52, Ordo Romanus, & Amalarius De eccl. off. lib. 4. cap. 29. Now it must be differed (at least it is so in the generall practise of propery) for five, sixe, or seven yeeres after. Nay moreover they confirmed (the baptized) by giving the holy communion as Alcuinus himselfe De offic. eccle. cap. de sabb. Sanct. Paschæ. doth testifie.

11 The Schoolemen cannot agree upon the originall of this supposed Sacrament. Alexan. Alei In Sent. 4. quæſt. 24 memb. 1. will needes have it instituted by the Councell of Meld, (Melden.) Bonaventure. In Sent. 4. dist. 7. ar. 1 quæſt. 1, saith, it was not of Christs ordaining: and so saith Marsilius in 4. quæst. 14. Molanus saith, that concerning the forme of this Sacrament, it is no marvell if the Fathers make but small mention thereof, seeing Innocentius the first saith: I dare not set down the words, lest I should seeme to bewray (a secret mystery:)

mystery.) The Masters of the Church of Rome are the first that published the forme hereof in their booke called Ordo Romanus, were we reade these words: I confirme thee in the name of the Father, &c. de Sacra. tract. 4. cap. 6. Bellarmine De sacram. confirmat. li. 2. cap. 10. confesseth that the Fathers have not set downe the forme of confirmation, nor of divers other Sacraments, because they were already knowne unto every one: he had spoken more truly if he had said, unknown unto every one: for they doe set downe both the forme of Baptisme, and of the Supper in divers places: what reason had they then to keepe the formes of the rest from our knowledges? but this is but one of Bellarmines convaiances. Of the forme of confirmation (saith Suarez. In 3. part. Thom.) wee find nothing in Scripture: and if we betake our selves to tradition, we shall finde great ambiguity and variety hereof in the Fathers. Thus saith he. Ergo.

Marriage.

1 IN the purest times the Canonicall account of the degrees of consanguinity as it is called, was never heard of. For Ambrose. l. 8. epi. 66. saith, that brothers children are foure degrees distant in legall supputation, not canonicall. But this legall supputation also crept into the Church by degrees, and was free without bond of law untill 1070. yeares after Christ, and then Alexander the 2. decreed that the degrees were to be reckned after this canonicall supputation, and that under paine of excommunication, ca. 35. q. 5. cap. 2. Adsedem.

2 The forbidding of the fourth degree (and much more of the seventh) according to Canonicall supputation, remained unknowne in the most pure and ancient Churches, unto at least 500. yeares after Christ. About the 300. yeere of Christ there was no degree at all prohibited, but onely such as were expressly named in the written word of God. But afterwards, was marriage of cousingermaines forbidden, as Ambr. l. 8. epi. 66. and August. also De civit. Dei, l. 15. c. 86. with Petrus Diaconus do testifie. But this prohibition was abrogated by the lawes of Honorius & Arcadius, and by Justinians also, though afterwards it was renewed in the Church by the Councell of Epaune, c. 30. about the yeere of our Lord 490, And afterwards ann. 500. began these prohibitions to extend unto the third degree inclusively; for the third Councel of Aurelia, c. 10. and the second of Terwin. cap. 22. do forbid marriage of the brother or sisters children and so doth Altisiodor, cap. 34. circa. ann. 614.

Thus stoode these Prohibitions, in this third degree, for a long time, in the Latine Church, but about the 600. yeere, the Popes Gregory, Nicholas, &c. decreed that all the degrees of consanguinity should be kept unto the seventh generation. Gratian. 35. q. 2. But afterwards, Innocent the 3. in the Councell of Laterne, ann. Dom. 1215. limiteth this prohibition at the 4. degree inclusively, and alloweth all matches without this 4. degree. But by this allowance of his are many unlawfull marriages made: for example, Peter and Paul are brethren, & their stocke descendeth thus:

Here Peter may not be joyned in marriage with Leah, though 6. degrees distant, because that being the brother of Paul, he is a father unto all that descend in Pauls line, and so in that respect unto Leah also.

John — Peter — Paul
Rachel — Susanna — Joanna
Lea

3 The Fathers doe sometime reprehend the second marriage of either person in case of Divorce upon fornication, but yet they do hold such marriages to be true and firme: this did hold for 400. yeeres after the incarnation. So that they held, that in case of adultery the marriage (amongst the faithfull) is dissolved, not onely in respect of bed, but also of bond; wherefore they were not acquainted with the distinction of a double divorce. Origen Homil. 7. in Matth. saith, that these marriages (after separation) are against Scriptures, but yet not without cause hee alloweth them for avoiding of a greater evill, and holdeth them no otherwise permitted. And these doth Ambr. in 1. Corinthian. 7. allow unto a man: and so doth Epiphanius also, contra Cerinth. haref. 59. Hierome, epist. 30. ad Oceanum, disalloweth them in Fabiola, but he goeth not so farre as to disanull the marriage which he himselfe excuseth. It was an use to injoyne a publike penance upon this act, and that was used also upon smaller faults. The Fathers used to note such second marriages as they held lawfull with penance: and they punished the husband that kept his wife after her adultery, with three yeeres penance 33. q. 1. ca. Siquis. The Councell of Arles, cap. 10. counselleth the guiltlesse person of the two, to abstaine, but doth not compell or command him to it. And this the Church afterwards did for one while allow of and follow. For in one place of the Decretals. 31. q. 1. c. Concubinists, it is appointed as lawfull for the innocent person to joyne with another, after that his first yoakefellow hath polluted the marriage bed. And this is also allowed, 31. q. 1. cap. Siqua mulier, if either party have endeavoured to kill the other.

4 Afterwards, Augustine and others held these marriages of no force at all: and yet August. De fide & operibus, cap. 19 writesh that he that findeth his wife in adultery and putteth her away, seemes not to bee equalled with him, that putteth her away for some other cause, and marrieth againe. And it is so doubtfull in the Scriptures themselves, whether he (who doubtlesse may put away his wife for adultery) be an adulterer if he marry againe, that surely I am of opinion, that any man may herein be pardonably mistaken. Thus saith Augustine.

Priests marriage, and single life.

THe marriage of the Cleargy for the space of 300. yeeres after Christ was a thing alwayes freely allowed, without prohibition or vow of perpetual continency. If there were any that lived single, it was out of some private and unbinding purpose, or else for some custome taken up out of a good and honest end. This cannot be disproved out of any lawfull authority, whereas there are these testimonies to confirme it. There are many of the Bishops (saith Athanasius. Ep. ad Drac.) that have not married, and contrary wise many Monkes we see daily become Fathers of children; Againe, you may observe many bishops to bee Fathers of children, and many Monkes that have not sought to see their owne generation: — for this is lawfull, and the other is not forbidden, but every one as he liketh, let him undertake to live. Whereas we reade (saith the Decretals. dist. 26. c. Canonum nemo.) that the sonnes of Priests have come to the honour of the Papacy, we must not understand them to be begotten by fornication, but by lawfull marriage, which was lawfull for the Priests every where, untill the time of prohibition, and in the East Churches is allowed unto them as lawfull until this day. And Cyprian (or the author of the Sermon, de nat. Christ.) saith, that there is neither commaund nor necessity to compell us unto continency or virginity. And Cassiodorus, in Psal. 57. saith it is free to vow virginity, or not to vow it. We impose no necessity hereupon (saith Epih. haref. 4) but out of good will we counsell it: exhorting him that is able to take it upon him, but not compelling him that is not able, nor rejecting him from salvation. Virginity onely (saith Ambr. exhort. ad virgines) is to be perswaded, not to be commanded, being a thing rather of vow, than of precept, In the East (saith Socrates, Hist. Tripart. l. 9. c. 38) all even the Bishops, doe abstaine of voluntary choyce, not of any necessity; and many of them in the time of their being Bishops, have had children by their lawfull wives.

2 But in these aforesaid ages, there were promises of continency used to be made publikely in the Church. For Clement, Stromat. l. 3. (who wrot in the yere 170.) saith, that continency is a despising of the body κατὰ τὸν πρὸς θεὸν ὁμολογίαν, according to the promise, or covenant made unto, or with God. Their maner of covenant, was thus: It was asked of these that were to take Ecclesiasticall Orders, whether they would abstaine from marriage or no? if they said they would, it was not thence lawfull for them to marry; Dist. 27. c 1p. diacon. if they said they would not, it was allowed them after their election to take them wives Concil. Ancyr. c. 10. But the election was deferred, that if it might be possible, they might have a single man to elect, Dist. 28. c. de Cyrenf. Now these promises were exacted, not that marriage in this case was held an uncleane thing, or that the Clergy were bound from it by vow, but especially because of the poverty of the Churches, wanting sufficient means to maintaine so many families of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons, D. 28. c. de Syr. where Pelagius the first saith, that the singlenesse of Priesthood was instituted because that the goods of the Church should not bee dispersed amongst the Priests wives and children. This is to be marked diligently. But Leo saith very well in those words, Novel. 2. I some times have occasion to wonder much that some are not afraid utterly to abrogate many holy and divine lawes, and institute others, as though these were not absolute: for whereas the holy Canons treating of the election of Bishops, do ordaine that he that hath children by lawfull matrimony (if there be no impediment in other of his actions) may bee made an Archbishop: These men dare set downe the contrary, that it is not possible for these encumbrances, that any that have children (though they be the blessing of lawfull marriage) should undertake the dignity Episcopall. It may be these lawgivers supposed, that the naturall affection unto their children (for what other thing can be alledged for them?) would be a great anttoyance to their ecclesiasticall maintenance. But this reason is founded upon false grounds, for if it were so, the like reason might convince, that none that hath either brethren or other kinsmen alive, should be made Bishops, for consanguinity begetteth the same union of love betweene them. Moreover the holy Canons foreseeing this, gave the Bishops authority, that if they had any poore alliance, they might releeve their miseries out of the reuenewes of their Bishopricke. Wherefore our Imperiall Majesty (which is of God, if wee keepe our selves to Gods commandements) perceiving that to bee farre more convenient, maketh a law agreeable to the holy Canons: that as it seemed good unto them, that hee might bee promoted to bee Bishop, who in other respects was worthy of that honour, although he had children, (provided they were legitimate) so it shall be lawfull now: and that with this resolution, that we doe from henceforth abrogate for ever, to punish their holdnesse, any law that gainsaith hereto, This he. Now if the Priests, or Bishops broke these promises (we spoke of before) they were deposed, and put to penance among the twise married, but their marriages still did continue indissolubie. And in this sense are the Councells of Ancyra, and of Neocæsarea to be understood. Wherefore at the beginning, marriage was not forbidden the Priests by reason of any vow annexed unto their order, but by reason of the greater freedome, and conveniency.

3 The Perpetuity, and necessity of this vow of continence was established first in the Westerne Church, and annexed unto Orders, about the three hundreth and eighty yeare after Christ: It was used before, but out of private and particular devotion, not by any publike and decretory judgement of the Church. But then, by a common decree (if that decree bee not a counterfeited forgery) Priests marriage was prohibited in all the Westerne Churches, as a thing impure and unsanctified; and that by Pope Syricius Dist. 82, which decree, Innocentius the first, Dist. 82 c. Propositi, renewed, but yet with grant of Pardon to all such as had not seene the epistle of Syricius. So that the glosse, dist. 82. c. 3, Cum in præterito, ad gloss. verb. quisacramentis, sheweth plainely that Syricius was the first Author of this prohibition in the Church of God, in these words. They say that these chapters were made before Gregories time, who inioyned continency upon the Ministers (31. dist. ca. Ante triennium) that is unto the subdeacons. But Syricius commanded the Priests and Deacons to observe it. Nay, they say that before Syricius his time the Priests might marry, and so did Moses. Wherefore they expound it thus; the Apostles taught this doctrine of continency in worke, example, and counsell, as Hugo saith: not in constitution and ordinance, as others say. Now the censure of Fryar Thomas Mantriq. published by command of Pius 5, Pope in the yeere 1572. commands this glosse to be rased out, together with the marginal note, which saith that Priests might once marry. And indeed August. lib. 6. confess. 3. greatly admireth the single life of Ambrose, so that single life was more rare amongst the Priests of those times than marriage. Gracian also Dist. 28. ca. de Syracus. yeeldeth that before the Ancyran Councel ann. 308. the vow of continency was never proposed unto the Priests; Wherefore the decree was neither of Calixtus, nor Lucius his framing:

4 Now as for this decree, it had no universall admission untill the time of Pope Hildebrand, in the yeere 1007, foe hereof speaketh Aventine in histor. Boior. l. 5. in these words: The Priests at that time as other Christians, had wives in publike, and begot children, as appeareth in the instruments of the Donations which they gave to the Churches, Priests, and Monkes, where these wives and their husbands are named as witnesses: and they are called by the grave and honest

A naume of Presbyteresses. Sigebert also testifieth the same in his Chronicle upon the yeere 1074. Pope Gregory (saith he) —forbad the married Priests to use their function, & prohibited the laity to heare their Masses, a deed without example, & (as many thought) done unadvisedly against the opinion of the holy Fathers, who have written, that whether the Sacraments bee ministred by good or evill persons, yet they are neither amplified by the merits of the good Minister, nor lessened by the sinnes of the evill—. By which act, arose such a scandall, that never in the heate of any heresie was the Church rent in sunder with a greater schisme and division. And truly it is a thing of worthy memory that Florentius a Monke of Worcester hath recorded in his Chronicle, ad ann. 1106. of this Gregory, that being upon his death bed, he confessed unto almighty God, and Saint Peter and unto the "whole Church, that he had offended greatly in his Pastorall charge, and by the perswasion of the diuell, had stirred up anger "and wrath amongst mankind: and that hee "sent his Confessor to the Emperour and to "the whole Church to pray for pardon for "him, that he did loose the bands of all that "were outlawed, and all his excommunications against the Emperour, and all other "Christian people, clergy and laity, quicke & "dead—&c. And indeed marriage of Priests was allowed here in England untill 970. yeares after Christs, as the history of Iornall recordeth in the life of Edgar: After king of Mercia (saith it) and many others, casting forth the Monkes out of the great Monasteries which king Edgar had lately founded, brought into them the Clergy and their wives. And Fabian in Chron. P. 263. relateth, that Bishops and Priests were married for a thousand yeares together, no law enjoyning the contrary. And Florentius aforenamed testifieth, that the English clergy married for 997. yeeres together, which marriages were never forbidden by law or edict, until Anselmes time. In the same yeere [1100] (saith Hewrie Huntington lib. 7) —Archbishop Anselme held a councell at London, wherein hee forbad the English Priests to marry, who were never forbidden before. Which law, seemed most pure unto some, but most dangerous unto others some, lest that endeauouring continency above their power, they should fall into more horrible and more unchristian impurities. Now at the promulgation of this law, these Priests that were already married, were not divorced. Nay they continued marrying for all this, two hundred yeeres after Anselme, as M. Foxe sheweth in his history, publishing the very consaiances of those contracts then used.

5 Now this prohibition of marriage there are many Fathers that doe not approve nor allow of: and namely these that follow. 1, Theodoret. It is affirmed, saith he, In 1. Tim. 3. that that the holy Apostle saith, that hee that liveth chastly with one wife alone, is worthy to be elected a Bishop. & In 1 Tim. 4. Rightly did the Apostle put in [forbidding to marry] for hee doth dislike of continency and singlenesse of life, but hee accuseth those that will command and enjoyne them by a law. 2. Ambrose. Hee saith, Offic. lib. 2. ca. ultimo, that unto the Ministers of the Altar it is allowed once to marry, not the second time. 3. Chrysostome. He saith, In 1 Tim homil. 2. that marriage is so honorable, that under it a man may come to ascend unto the holiest preferment and dignity. 4. Isidore. The Clergy (saith he, Reg. de vita Cleric. dist. 23. c. Hujusmodi) ought to keepe their bodies chaste and unpolluted for ever, or else to joyne themselves in one band of matrimony. 5. Bernard: Take honorable marriage out of the Church (saith he In Cant. Ser. 66.) and the unpolluted bed, and do you not fill the Church with fornicators, incestuous, uncleane, effeminate, & Sodomiticall persons, & finally with all manner of uncleanesse? 6. Theophylact. Husband unto one wife (saith he, in 1 Tim. 3) is taken in this sense, that he that is to undertake the function of a Bishop, should not have many wives, but one. 7. Salvian. Men of religion (saith he, De providen. l. 3.) do abstaine from carnall copulation, but not from rapine and stealth: How are we deluded by foolish perswasion? it is iniquity and not matrimony, which God doth prohibite. 8. Gregory the third: Leo no man maintaine either harlot or concubine (saith he, writing to the Bishops of Boiaria, lib 3. pag. 290) but let him either live chastly, or take him a wife, whom it shall bee lawfull no way to refuse. Besides, the whole Councell of Nice doth cal the Priests accompanying of his proper wife, chaste, lawfull, & honorable. And Gratian saith, that this Councell commended Paphnutius his opinion, and determined of marriage after every mans will, not imposing any necessity thereupon, or on the contrary; and citeth the testimony of Socrates, dist. 31 c. Nicæna. Now whereas it is objected, that the Synode saith, that abstinence from marriage is a tradition of the Church: I answer, that there was indeed such a tradition, but never universall, but particular onely: for the universality got first head in the Councell of Ancyra, ca. 10. which was twenty yeeres before the Nicene Councell. And the Councel of Grabgren following that of Nice, condemneth their opinion, that held that the Priests might not celebrate the divine mysteries, by reason of their marriage. And it is apparent out of the first Councell of Toledo, c. 4. & 7. that the Priests then married. And Patronus commandeth the Institutions of the Nicene Councell, to be kept unviolate for evermore, in his preface to the said Councell. Pope Sylvester decreed, that a Priest should content himself with one order, and with one wife also. This doth Phi- lippus Bergomensis record in his chronicle, and so doth Sabellicus also, Ennead. 7. lib. 8. The first Councell of Terwin, Can. 3. An. 1080. after the prohibition of marriage, addeth this: Now withstanding we being willing so moderate this first Decree, and rightly to interpret it, doe decree that a Priest not abiding chaste fleshly concupiscence, not fearing not to beget children, bee not capable of any higher preferment——. But let it be sufficient for those, not to be separated from the communion. Now the 2. Councell of Terwin, An. 1094. alloweth a Bishop to have a wife as a lover, and called her Synodie, a Bishopesse. And Innocentius the third saith thus of married Priests about the yeere 1206. Decretal. lib. 3. tit. 1. cap. de clericis conjugatis: Those that according to their constitucions (saith he) have not removed from the bond of wedlocke: if they doe fall, let them be severely punished, because they may use their lawfull matrimony: and here are two worthy observations: first, that neither all Priests, nor all places had then admitted this singlenesse: secondly, that marriage of Priests was then held lawfull for such as pleased to undergoe it. Pius the second, Pope, did determine (as Platina saith) that even as matrimony was forbidden the Priests for great reasons, as he thought; so it ought to bee permitted them again for far greater reasons. Wee thinke (saith the said Pius of Æneas Sylvius, Epistol. 308) that you follow no bad counsell, if you take your selfe to marriage, being not able to containe, though that this were to bee considered of before your admission unto holy orders. But wee are not all Gods, that we should have khowledge in things to come. Since it is come to this, that you cannot resist the law of the flesh, it is better to marry them to burne,— Leo, Novell: Con 3. saith, that there is a tradition of the Church, which commandeth that those that are to bee elected Priests, let them either vow singlenesse for their whole life (if they think to be able to keep their promise,) or if they thinke it impossible to be kept; let them first marry lawfully, and then enter into the order of the Ministery. Epiphanius maketh for this vow of perpetuall singlenesse, but he cannot prove it out of Scriptures, but is faine to flye into traditions. And the first Synode of Constantinople, capite 13. condemnes whatsoever the Romane church hath set downe concerning the single life of Priests. And this Synod was held 50. yeeres after Gregory the Great; and is approved by the Decretals of the Canon, the wordes are these, dist. 31 c. Quoniam. Because we know that it is taught in the order of the Romane Canon, that those that are thought worthy to bee ordained Priests or Deacons, should professe, that from thenceforth they would not use any more the fleshly copany of their wives; wee following the ancient Canon of Apostolike diligence, and the Constitutions of holy men; will have these lawfull marriages from henceforth to bee of force, by no meanes dissolving their wedlocke with their wives, or depriving them of familiar resort together, at convenient times. By this Canon we understand, that for above 700. yeeres together, the Churches of the East did not approve, (at least did not establish) this singleness of life in the Ministers of the Church. And hereunto adde the testimony of Theodorus Balsamon, In Can. 5. Apost. Before the sixt Synode in Trullo, it was lawfull for the Bishops to marry, & have wives, yea after they had received that dignity. Besides, this interdiction is reproved by * Volusianus, or (as others will have it) by Huldericus, in his answer unto Nicholas the first; whether he be Priest, Deacon, or Subdeacon, saith Gratian in the decree, dist. 28. cap. de Syricus, it isplaine (by the opinion of Pope Pelagius,) that being invested in the foresaid orders, they may use matrimony lawfully. And dist. 31. cap. 1. about three yeeres before, the subdeacons throughout all the Churches of Sicile were according to the use of the Romane Church, forbidden to have any medding at all with their wives, which seemeth unto mee to be a very hard and uncompetent thing, that he that hath not attained unto the use of continency, nor made any former promise of chastity, should be compelled to forsake his wife, and by this meanes to fall more pernicionsly, (which God forbid.) And Causa 26. q. 2. c. Sors: Before the Gospel came to the lustre and brightnesse, many things were permitted, which in the arising of more perfect discipline were utterly abolished: As the marriage of Priests, & of cousin-germanes, which is not prohibited by any authority either of the Law, Gospel, or Apostles: and yet is absolutely taken away by Ecclesiasticall constitution. Leo, epi. 87. willeth the Priest to choose him a virgin to his wife, not a widow; so that thereby he alloweth Priests to marry. And Panormitane saith, * that continency is but of the positive law, and that the Greekes allow not that institution. Thomas, in 2. 2. quæst. 88. art. 11. affirmeth this, that the vow of continency is not added as an essentiall part of the solemnity of ordination, but onely accidentally, by a statute of the Church. Durand. In 4. Sent. dist. 37. q. 1. saith, that Holy Orders doe hinder the solemnization of marriages and aboliseth those that are already consummate, not absolutely, as they are orders, but as they are holy, and herein by disposing so of them:—but it hindereth these marriages fully, out of the institutiō of the Church. It is neither probable by reason nor authority, saith Cajetane, in apuse. tom. 2. tract. 31. de cœlib. Sacerd. that a Priest in marrying doth commit sinne absolutely; nay, reason doth rather drawe a man to the contrary, because as we reade in Lumbard his sentences, dist. 37. lib. 4. Neither orders as they are orders, nor holy orders as they are holy, doe hinder matrimony: and in the Westerne Churches, dist. 28 c. Diaconi, it was once lawfull for the Deacons to marry, — Besides, it is manifest —that the Priests & Ministers of the Eastern Churches doe marry, dist. 31. ca. Aliter. Neither doth Priesthood take away contract in marriage, whether precedent or subsequent, if we seclude all constitutions Ecclesiasticall, and sticke onely unto that which wee had taught us by Christ and his Apostles. This teacheth Cajetane; and so doth Madina also, de Continentia, libro secundo, cap. primo, and Soto, de Iure, li. 7. quæst. 6. artic. 2. And this prohibition, the whole Clergy of Germany, disallowed of in the yeere 1074. saith Schafnaburgensis. Pope Hildebrand—decreed in many Synods, that according to the ancient Canons, no Priest should have a wife: such as had, should either put them away, or bee put from their dignities: nor should any bee admitted hereunto that would not vow perpetuall continency and singlenesse of life.—Against this decree, the whole Clergy-men bent themselves extreamely, calling him an hereticke absolutely, and a man of a damned opinion, who (having forgotten the Lords word, that saith; All cannot take this upon them; he that can take it, let him: and the Apostles that said, he that containeth not, let him marry, for it is better to marry than to burne) with a violent exaction, would constraine men to live like Angels: and by denying them the accustomed course of nature, openeth the way to fornication and uncleannesse: but if he proceeded in confirming this decree, they had rather leave their Priesthoods, than their wives, and then they should see, where he that despised men, could get Angels to governe the people throughout the Church of God. And afterwards he declareth, that it held a long time as a custome, that the Priests should take them wives.

The same is in Matth. Paris, went for word ad ann. 1074.

6 The history of Papnutius, delivered in writing by Socrates, lib. 1. cap. 8. and Sozomene, libr. 1. capi. 22. and approved by Nicephorus, libr. 7. cap. 19. Suidas in verbo Paphnutius, and Gratian. dist. 31. c. Nicæna, the Papists of these times doe reject and contemne most boldly, as if it were false and forged. Sotus for one, de Iure, lib. 7. quæst. 6. art. 2. Melchior Canus for another, in loc. comm lib. 5. cap. ult. and Bellarmine for a third, de clericis, libro 1. capite 20. Their first reason is, that Sozomene (as Gregory saith, lib. 6. epistol. 31) doth faine many things: And Socrates doth lye flatly in the history of his time. I answer, Gregory accuseth not Sozomene of forgery in this thing by name: and in so famous a thing as this was, they could not erre unwittingly. Their second reason is this: It is the common consent of the Greeke Fathers, that none should be ministers of Gods mysteries, but the chaste and continent: so saith Origen, homil. 17. in Luk. & 4. in Levit. Eusebius, l. 1. de Demonst. Evang. cap. 9. Epiphanius, in compend. doctr. & heres. 59. con. Catharos, Cyrill, catechis. 12. Nyssenus, de Virginitate, ca. ult. Chrysost. me, hom. 2. de patientia Iob. Basilius Isay. c. 3. & Hierom. contra Vigil. What shall the Churches of the East doe? What of Egypt, and of the Apostolike tea, who receive either virgin Priests, or continent; or if they have wives, they leave to bee husbands? I answer two wayes; first, That the Greeke Priests did abstaine from the use of their wives, but only as such times as their course came to celebrate, not continually: and so some of these aforesaid Fathers doe require this temporall continency, not perpetuall. Secondly, in the East their ecclesiasticall customes were divers: in some places the Cleargy contained, and in other some they married: So saith Socrates directly, l. 5. c. 21. thus are the foresaid Fathers reconciled with this history of Papnutius.

7 The testimonies of the ancient writers concerning the single life of Priests, were but private opinions and conjectures. Ma thinketh (saith Origen, hom. 23. in Numer.) that in is his part alone, to offer sacrifice, that hath vowed himselfe unto endlesse and perpetuall chastity. Neither doe they confirme these opinions out of the word of God, besides the great difference amongst them. Againe, what they speake of single life, they speake it but of those that have this gift, and while they have it. And therefore they require it not of those that are not willing, but of those that willingly promise continency: And by those that are willing, they doe meane them that know surely that they have this gift of continency. And in this manner was it that Cyprian kept his virginity free without vow, or monasticall like.

8 The Fathers doe permit those that have made such vowes, to marry notwithstanding if they cannot containe, Cyprian, libro primo, Epistol. 11. Neither doe they acknowledge any vow of continency, wherein marriage is abjured, or by which it is annihilated. Augustine, De bono viduit. cap. 9. 10. 11. saith, that the breach of the vow is worse than adultery, but yet he will have these marriages that are made after the vow to be firme and lawfull: such as doe thus contract, doe herein (as hee saith, capite 10.) offend, not in the marriage, but in the breach of vow. Some answer, that Augustine speaketh not of the vow solemnely made, but of a simple vow: But I say, that this distinction is frivolous, a tricke of the Schoole-men, unknowne to the Fathers: never found but in the Schoole-mens writings: and in the sixt of the Decretals, Boniface the eight, lib. 3. Tit. 15, saith, that the solemnity of vow hath the originall only upon the constitution of the Church. So saith Scotus, Petrus de Palude, In 4. dist. 38. Cajetano in 22. q. 88. art. 7. and Panormitane, in cap. Raiss. all these thinke, that it is onely a decree of the Church, whereby the solemne vow doth dissolve the contract of marriage made after the vow.

9 For 200. yeeres after Christ, there was no received opinion in the Church concerning the excellency and merit of single life above marriage. Hee that hath attained unto true perfection, (saith Clemens Alexandrinus, Stromat. 7.) hath, the Apostles for his patterne, and is truely counted a man, not in that he hath made a choice of Monasticall life; but hee conquereth and excelleth men, that exercised himselfe in matrimony and increase of children, and in care and governance of his family, without either pleasure or sorrow.

10 But afterward, the most of the ancient writers began to defend the excellency of virginity before marriage, and speake somewhat hyperbolically (beyond meane) in praise thereof. So saith Cyprian, De bono pudicit. that virginity is equal unto Angels, nay if we seek it willingly, it doth exceede them, because in striving in the flesh, it obtaineth a victory against nature, which the Angels have not. And Athanasius, de Virginitate, crieth out: O Continency the Prophets joy, the Apostles glory! O Continency the life of Angels, and the crowne of sanctity! But for all this, sometimes they speake more orderatly of virginity. Because we see (saith Origen, l. 8. in Rom.) that divers of the Saints, yea and some Apostles, have had wives, we cannot thinke thus of virginity onely.

Vse thy marriage with Modesty and moderation (saith Chrysostome, Hom. 7. ad Hebr.) and thou shalt be the chiefe in the kingdome, and enjoy the fulnesse of blessings. Now the Fathers did sometimes ascribe this excesse unto virginity, to make choice of the extreme which was most opposite unto the vice then predominant, for the heathen polygamies (having of many wives) were not as yet utterly cashiered from amongst the people: and besides, they did it to eschew the suspitiō of disorderly copulation together: as also because that the single men had the least encombrances, and so endured persecution with lesse griefe.

11 Besides, the Fathers tooke such paines in the praise of virginity, not because of it selfe, but by reason of the offices and duties of godlines: and hence sprung all these commendations of virginity. And this is hereby apparent, because that they will have matrimony (already contracted) to bee dissolved by the entrance into religion. Look Justinians institutions, cap. de Episcopis & Cleric. lib. finali Basil in quæst fusius explicatis, qu 12. Cassinus Collat. 21. cap. 9.

13 The Fathers urging the singlenesse of the Priests doe sometimes detract from the praises of marriage, and sometimes reprove it as an uncleane thing. Syricius, epist. ad Hymer. Epise. Tarra: sticke not to say, that those that are in the flesh, that is, in matrimony, cannot please

* A very ancient copie of this Epistle is extant in Corpus Christi Colledge library in Cambridge under the name of Volusianus to Nicholas the first.

De clericorum Coniug. c. cum olim. & de pœnit. & remiss. §. Omnes vero sos.

pleasse God. And in like manner Tertullian, l. de monogamia, saith, that it is evill to contract matrimony, and by the word evill, hee meaneth sinne. And Hierome, Contra Iovin. lib. 1. goeth thus farre, that he saith, In the fulfilling the duty of an husband, I fulfilled not the duty of a Christian, and it is an evill thing to touch a woman. And Athanasius, libro de virginitate, saith, that the womans body is polluted by her husbands. To the end (saith Leo the first, Epistol. ad Anastasium) that we may bring continency unto his perfect purity, wee doe not permit any carnall marriage so much as to the subdeacons. Gregor. in Pastor. part. 3. admonit. 28. I speake this as permitting: — It is intimated to be a fault, which is forbidden to be favoured. And Ambrose, Offic. lib. primo, cap ultimo, will have the Priests to bee pure from marriage, and to be contaminated by marriage. Let those that meddle with the holy mysteries (saith Isidore, De offic. divin. l. 2. c. 10) be chaste, & continent, and free from all fleshly uncleannesse. Arator, In Acta Apostol. saith, that

The Churches purest faith commands that all the Priests live ever chast, &c.

And, Origen, Homil. 23. in Numb. maketh chastity, and marriage directly opposites; Looke his words in the seventh section before. Now Rhenanus, In Argumento libri Tertullian. de exhortatione ad castitatem, doth acknowledge, that al the Fathers as wel as Hierome were no equall Judges in the value of matrimony.

Sacred virgins.

13 The Originall of the Popish singlenesse was thus: First, the Votaresses that married after their vow, were found fault with for their inconstancy, but yet their marriages were not dissolved. If that out of faith they have dedicated themselves unto God (saith Cyprian, Epist. 11. lib. 1) let them persevere in chastity and pureness, without any let or molestation, and so being strong and constant, let them expect the reward of virginity: but if they will not continue so, or cannot, they had better for to marry, than to fall into the fire by their sinnes. And the Councell of Ancyra, Ca. 19. appointed but a very light penance upon those that brake this vow, namely, in ranking them amongst the twise married. Epiphanius saith, that marrying after a vow is a sinne, and commendeth repentance for it: but yet holdeth it better to marry so, than to burne. And in like manner doth Hierome, and Augustine, de bono viduit. cap. 19. But afterwards these marriages began by some to bee held for more heavy offences, after 380. yeeres Basil calleth them incests, and the sinnes of whoredome and adultery, lib. de virginit. And the Councell of Chalcedon, ca. 15. doth excommunicate the parties thus marrying, yet commandeth the Bishops forthwith to absolve them, neither willing the dissolution nor suspension of these marriages, which were not frustrate and broken off until after-ages.

A

B

C

D

Extreame Unction.

1 THe Fathers never speake of this Extreame Unction, that is, of a ceremony of annointing in manner of a Sacrament without the gift of healing, untill Innocentius the first, in the yeere 402. For Sigebert in ann. 404. ascribeth the Decree of annointing the dead, unto Innocentius the first, who Bowsoever he call it a kind of Sacrament, yet he will have it ministred by all Christians: It is lawfull (saith he, epist. 1. ad Decentium, c. 8) not only for the Priests, but also for all Christians to use the oyle of Chrisme, made by the Bishop, and to annoint therewith in their owne or their friends necessity. And Bede, In Luc. 9. thinkes, that it belongs not onely to those that are weak in body, but also unto the weake in faith: And in Iacob. c. 5 he will have the ministring thereof free unto all Christians, not binding it only to the Priests. And this is the opinion of Alcuine also, de divinis offic. cap. 40. that wrote about the yeere 750.

2 The Fathers used this unction in the beginning of sickeneſſe, and in the parts that were not affected. Vnto the deafe and dumb, they powred oyle into the mouth and crown of the head, Greg. Turon. histor. Franc. l. 6. c. 7. And in the pestilence they annointed the arme with this holy oyle, Fortunat. in vita S. German. But this unction was not instituted as then, whereby to give spirituall grace. The oyle (saith Victor of Antioch, ad Marci. c. 6) which we use in this holy unction, doth signifie both the mercy of God, the cure of the sickneſſe, and the illumination of the heart: but it may be said, that the prayer doth effect all these, and that the oyle is but an outward signe only of all these effects. This oyle (saith Theophylact. In 6. Marc.) being of great use in labour, and a nutriment of light, and an increaser of mirth, doth signifie the mercy of God, and the grace of the spirit, by which we are freed from labour, and obtaine light, joy, and spirituall gladneſſe. But the case is altered now adaies; for now it is not given as a cure to the sicke, but as a necessary purveyance for the dying.

The Primacy of the Bishop of Rome.

1 THe primacy of dominion, or (as Turrecremata calleth it, Summa de Eccles. lib. 3. c. 23) of authority, was not acknowledged to be in the Romish Bishop, but but was vnheard of, and vnknowne untill the yeere of Christ 600, and began to be publike and manifest in Boniface, about the yeere 607. for he obtained of Phocas the Emperour, that the Apostolike Sea of Rome should bee the head of the Church, whereas the Sea of Constantinople would needs write it selfe the first or cheife of all. So saith the Chronicler Sigebert. In the yeare 607. Boniface (saith he) obtained of Phocas the Emperour, that the Romish Church should be the head of all Churches: these bee his words, and the very same in effect are to bee found in Matthaeus Scotus, Martinus Polonus, Otto Frisingensis, and Hermannus Contractus. And Phocas decreed this, not as affirming, declaring, or pronouncing any thing that was before, but as founding and establishing a new thing, which before was not. For this primacy thus by him established, was but seven yeares before reproved, yea even condemned by Gregory the first, then Bishop of Rome. I confidently affirme (saith he, lib. 6. epist. ax Regist ro, c. 194) that whosoever calls himselfe, or is willing to be called Vniversall Priest or Bishop, in this loftinesse and pride of his, he is the forerunner of Antichrist. And the Bishops of Constantinople tooke in very ill part this ordinance of Phocas, as Sabellicus affirmeth, lib. 8. Ennead. 8. And to the same purpose Aeneas Sylvius, epist. l. 1. epist. 288 (who himselfe was afterward Pope) saith thus: Otherwise, (saith he) diversity of opinions would divide the Church, and loose the knot of unity, as we may see was done before the Councell of Nice, whilest every one depended on themselves, and but a little regard was had to the Church of Rome.

But the Papists here object, that Iohn of Constaitinople was therefore reproved by Gregory of Rome, because hee would bee accounted the onely Bishop; so that no other were to be so called or esteemed, but onely as his Suffragans or vicars: and this they would faine prove out of the words of Gregory in the fourth book of his Epistles, ep 38. to Iohn of Constantinop. where thus he saith: Thou that once confessedst thy selfe unworthy the name of a Bishop, art now (in time) come to this passe, that despising the rest of thy brethren, thou desirest to be called the only Bishop, or thou alone seekest after the name of a Bishop: The like words to these are in the same booke the 34. Epist. unto Constantia the Empresse. Hereunto I answer in two points.

1 Gregory in that very same 38. Epistle, and in the 36, and elsewhere, affirmeth, that that very name or title which Iohn of Constantinople did thus arrogate to himselfe, was offered to his owne predecessors in the sea of Rome, by the Councell of Chalcedon: But is it either possible, or likely, that that reverend Generall Councell, especially those 150. Bishops therein assembled, should yeeld that honour to the Romane Bishop, that hee should bee

A

B

C

D

deemed the onely Bishop of the world, and themselves to bee no more but his Vickars or substitutes? hardly can any man perswade this, especially seeing it is certaine that those same Bishops in that Councell did yeeld unto the sea of Constantinople, that it should bee equall in priviledges unto the sea of Rome. 2. I say, it was not the title of only Bishop, but of Oecumenicall Bishop which hee fought after; he desired not to bee Bishop alone, or the only Bishop in y world, but universall Bishop, or the Bishop of all other Bishops. And this to bee true, appeareth out of Gregories owne words, in divers places, viz. Epistol. libr. 4. epistol. 32. & libr. 7. epistol. 69. But then (you will say) how doth that stand with those other words of Gregory, out of which the Papists ground their objection: I answer, Gregory being as hee was, had indeed more cause than any to be moved at this arrogancy of Iohn, and therefore in aggravation and detestation of his so great pride and ambition, fell into these hyperbolicall tearmes, and yet not much improperly; for hee who amongst equals seekes a superiority, & will usurpe power over those that be as good as himselfe, doth after a sort take away all place and power from the rest, in as much as hee will needes bee alone that which they are as well as himselfe. And even so saith Gregory, explaining himselfe, epist. libro 4. capite 36. If one be called universall Patriarke, the name and honour of Patriarke is taken from all the rest: but farre bee this, farre bee it from a Christian minde, that any man should bee willing to arrogate that to himselfe, by which the honour of his brethren should seeme in the least measure to be diminished. And somewhat after he reproveth Iohn, for that he endevoureth to ascribe all things to himselfe, and to subdue all the members of Christ unto his owne yoke, who are knit onely to one head, namely to Christ: ——And in the 38. Epistle of the same booke, hee thus speaketh to Iohn, Patriarke of Constantinople. What wilt thou answer to Christ, the head of the universall Church, thou that goest about to put under thy feete by the title of universality, all the members of his body? And it is very considerable that he saith: Iohn desired to bee deemed and named the only Bishop, by despising, not by deposing his brethren Bishops, by putting them under, not by putting them downe.

2 Secondly, the power of making lawes, and of dispensing with them, the Bishop of Rome had not, nor exercised out of his owne Province, for 600. yeeres after Christ: Gregory indeed Epistol. libr. 12. capite 31. dispented with the English men, touching degrees of marriage forbidden, but hee did this as a Patriarke, also he did it as directing, not as commanding, out of a directive, not a coactive power: for they doubting, and asking of him, being both a Patriarke, and a learned mans, he gaue counsell what were to bee done in that difficult point, namely of two euills put together, what were best to bee chosen: l.7.confess.c.6. he saith: This word of command, thing, or: to command, I pray you take it away, & let me heare no more of it; for I know who I am, and who you are: for by your places you are my brethren, in vertues and good examples, the Fathers: Do here therefore commanded nothing, but I haue laboured to shew what in my opinion I should profitable or conuenient, neither more nor lesse. I vsed no other Canons for lawes, but the Imperiall Ecclesiasticke; namely, such lawes of the Emperours, as concerned Ecclesiastical matters and persons.

3 During the foresaid time of 600. yeeres, such of the Fathers as be of undoubted credit, speake nothing of any Primacy of power, dominion, jurisdiction, or authority. See Chrysostom. in his third Homily on the Acts: And Cyprian, de Symph. Prælat. whose words are these: The rest of the Apostles were euen the very same that Peter was, partakers of the same fellowship with him, both of honour & power. Hierom. against Iouinia, l.1.c.14. saith that the Church was built vpon all the Apostles, & euery one of them receiued the keies of the kingdome of Heauen, and the strength of the Church was founded on the al equally, yet that amongst the twelue one was chosen, that a head or chiefe being appointed, the occasion of schisme might be taken away. Cyrill on Ioha, lib.3. cap.20. saith, God gaue the Apostles and their successours, full and plenary power in the Church. Therefore it is apparent, that the Fathers speake of the primacy of order, dignity, vocation, maiesty, or respect: for they acknowledge a certaine excellency or preheminence, both of Peter, and of the Bishop of Rome: but that was in respect of the glory and authority of the City, which being the chiefe of all, therefore purchased that honour to her Bishops: for this point see the Councell of Chalcedon, cap. 28. act. 15. And thence was it that many fought to him for aide and assistance in some wrongs, but not expecting any commandement or edict from him. Couarruuias a Doctour of both lawes, one of great account amongst them, 1.tom.2.part.Relect.§.9.pag. 421.col.4.edit.Francofurt. saith, By the authorities and testimonies of Catholike Fathers, and the traditions generally received of all, it is concluded, that the Apostles received from the Lord Iesus equal power with Peter, of order or jurisdiction, insomuch as every one of the Apostles had from God equall power with Peter, ouer the whole world, and that to all ends and purposes, and for all acts whatsoeuer that Peter could do: Whereby it is cleare that he afterwards fights with himselfe; while he saith, that this power of theirs was subordinate and subiect to Peters. The same also in effect is to bee found in Gratian in the decrees, in the Popes old Canon law, dist.21. cap. In nouo, ex Anacleto. And if euer the Fathers speak of a Primacy of power or dominion, it is plaine enough; they meant not any universall power ouer the world, but of that absolute power, which hee might exercise in his owne limited Province; and so are they to be vnderstood. Like wise subiection is either in regard of power, or of order; and in this second sense it is, namely, in respect of order, that some Fathers write, that Bishops and all things are subiect to the Romane seate. See Gregory in his Epistles, lib.7.cap.63.

4 Sometime euen Bishops for their painfulnesse, faithfulnesse, and needfull care of the Churches, were preferd before others. Thus Basil was accounted the Doctor of the world, as Theodoret cals him, l.4.c.19. and Polycarpus the Apostolicall, and Prophetical teacher of those times, as Eusebius reporteth, l.4.c.15 and Cyprian is said to haue beene as it were a Bishop, and to haue had authority in euery Church. For so saith Nazian. in his sermon of him. For saith he, hee was not set ouer the Church of Carthage onely, no nor onely ouer the Churches of Africke, all which haue received much honour and renowne by him & from him: But he was as it were a Bishop, euen over all the Westerne Churches, yea almost over all the Easterne also, and over the Southerne and Northerne Churches, euen as far at his name and admiration could spreade it selfe. Basil also saith of Meletius epist.50. that he was set over, or governed the whole body of the Church. And of Ambrose the said Basil, epi. 55. saith, that the Maistership or gouernment of the great Ship, meaning the Church, was committed unto him. Nicephorus, l.14.c.34. saith, that the Bishops of Alexandria, after the Ephesine Councell were wont to be called Popes, and Iudges of the whole world. And in respect of their care it was that Bishops of Rome had their Vickars or Legats in forraine provinces of other Bishops; but no Vickars of power, untill these later ages.

5 The speeches of the Fathers concerning Peter, are to be understood inclusively, of the other Apostles: & their speeches of the Pope of Rome are also to be taken of other Bishops. Cypr. epist.27. ad lapsos, saith, the Church was constituted upon Bishops, & not upon Peter onely. Nicephorus, l.14.c.34. reports that Cyrill was called a Pope and Iudge of the whole world. Augustin on the 36. Psalme calleth all the Apostles & Prophets foundations. Hierom against Iouinian, l.1.c.14. saith, thou wilt say, The Church is founded upon Peter, although the same in another place is done upon all the Apostles: & equally on them al is the strength of the Church established.

6 Peter is called of some of the Fathers, a rocke, and the foundation of the Church, not properly, but by a Metonymy, because by his doctrine he laboured greatly in founding the

* In this sense are the Fathers to be taken when they call Peter the head: or yeeld him the Primacy in the Church.

the Church, and for that he first of all in the name of all the Apostles, confessed the churches faith. Nazianzene in his oration Demodera.in disp. saith, Peter is called a rocke, and hath the foundations of the Church committed to his truste. If I see seeme harsh, see Ambrose Ser.47. expl. him; Peter saith he, is called a rocke, for that he first laid the foundation of faith in the nations. And in the same manner and meaning in the Fathers, is Peters chaire also called a rocke: so saith Augustine in Psal. contra partem Donati: Number the Priests, euen from the very chaire of Peter that is the rocke which the gates of hel cannot ouercome. So likewise the confession of Peter or his faith is often by the same Fathers called a rocke: namely by Augustine on Saint Iohns first Epistle tract.10. by Hilary in his 6. booke of the Trinity: by Chrysostome in his hom.5.on Matth. Ambrose l.6.ca.9. on Luke saith, Thy faith is the rocke. And with Origen, He is a rocke, who so ever is an Imitator of Christ: And that Peter himselfe was the rocke, seemed to Augustine after good deliberation so to haue a speech, that he recanted it in his retractations, lib.1.ca.21. It is also to bee noted that the Fathers doe oft times speake too hyperbolically of the Bishop of Rome, as when they call him the head and spouse of the Church. And so Bernard, de consid. ad Eugenii. lib.2.cap.8 saying, he is Christ by his annointing: and Leo, saying, that Peter was assumed into the fellowship of the undivided Trinity: in his 89. Epistle. See also his third sermon of the assumption to the same purpose.

7 By the rocke in that speech of Christ, Mat.16. [Vpon this rocke I will build my Church] all the ancient Fathers doe not understand Peter, but many of them Christ, as Tertullian against Marci. lib.4. cap.13. Gregory Nyssen in testim. de Vet. Testam. de Trinitate contra Iudæos. Hilary in his second booke of the Trinity. Chrysostome in his hom. of the crosse of Christ. Ambrose Serm.84. Hicrome in Matth. l.1.c.7. Augustine in three places, viz. Ser.13. De verb. Dom. & tract.120. in Ioan. & l.2. de Trinitate cap.17. Theodoret in 2. viz. in Psal.47. & in 1. Cor.3. And to these ancients adde some of the chiefe later. Beda, Anselme, Lyra, the Inter linear Glosse in Matth.16. Further many vnderstand by the rocke the faith and profession of Peter, whereby he said, Thou art the Christ the sonne of the liuing God: so saith S. Tamas his lyturgy, Ambrose in Ephes.2. & de Incarnat. Dom. Sacram. ca.5. Hilar. lib.6. de Trinit. Epiphanius hær.59. Chrysost. hom.55. in Matt. & hom. de Pentecost. tom.3. Cyrill dialog.4. de Trinit. Beda in Iob.21. & Theophylact in Matt.16.

8 The Fathers vrge a communion or fellowship with the Bishop of Rome as farre fourth as he sate in Peters chaire, that is, as far as hee taught the true doctrine of Christ, which now adaies he doth not at all: for Peters chaire is the Church, where not so much the person of Peter, or his perswadable successours as his doctrine is resident, so saith Cyprian lib.1. epist.3. The ancient Emperours ascribed to the Bishop of Rome a power to discerne and iudge of matters ecclesiasticall, because then they followed the written word of God, and iudged out of it.

9 That Peter was euer at Rome at all, is uncertaine: Indeed most of the Fathers say so: and some of them say more too, namely that of an Apostle hee was made Bishop of Rome: but all this is affirmed, but not proued: and it is affirmed onely by such as liued not till the age after Peter.

10 The Bishop of Rome exercised honourable authority and power, but it was not properly belonging to him and his owne by perpetuall right. In this manner hee was oft times in some civill causes made an honourable arbitrater: Thus he visited Churches, thus he confirmed and deposed Bishops, thus he made Canons, and dispensed with them againe within his owne Province. And if at any time hee did any of these out of his Province, he did it not by office or authority, but either at the entreaty and request of others, or in the name and authority of the Emperour: or if otherwise, it was tyrannicall usurpation. And the place and power of Iudging which some of the Fathers sometime give him, was onely directive as of discretion, not coactive as of authority.

11 Appeales were sometime made to the Bishop of Rome, but not as to the Iudge to whom it belonged to give the determining and concluding Iudgement: but as to an able and honourable helper, who by his place and power was able to procure their wrongs redressed. And so oftentimes men upon wrongfull sentences, appealed to other Bishops of the West, that so by procuring their consent, they might make their cause the stronger: Neither did they of old take any more upon them, for Marcion being excommunicated in Pontus, came to Rome to be absolued: but they returned him this answer, We cannot, we may not do this without the permission or sufferance of the reverend Father, meaning his owne Bishop, so reports Epphanius, Hær.42. And Chrysostome epist. ad Innocent.1. tom.5. in his wrongfull persecution, craueth helpe, not onely of Innocentius, the then Bishop of Rome, but of the other Bishops of the West: and therefore (as Socrates in his story, libro 6.cap.14. saith) hee appealed to a Councell: But Chrysostome received this answer from the Pope, that (alas) it lay not in his power to helpe him, neither might he call a Councell for his helpe. Basil writing to Athanasius, thus counselleth him in his troubles, ep.52. It seemes to me the best course (saith he) that Letters bee written to the Bishop of Rome, desiring him to consider how these matters be here carried, and to giue his aduice what were best to be done. To this purpose see also his Epistles to the Bishops of Italy and France, epist.70. Ioan. de Terra-rubea, a Doctor of the law, in a treatise of his touching the government of the kingdome of France, saith, If the Pope have at any time intermedled in the premisses, he did not thrust in himselfe as with authority, but came in as being thereto requested, or called in for assistance; and this conferred not any power of Iurisdiction unto him; even as when a Iudge requireth the advice and assistance of another Iudge in matter of law or Iudgement, he doth not hereby conferre unto him any Iurisdiction which afore he had not, but onely makes use of, or intreateth the use of that hee hath.

pose

12 Furthermore, even those appeales that were made to Rome, were oftentimes disallowed and rejected by the ancient Fathers. Thus writes Cyprian, lib.1.ep.3. to Cornelius then Pope; It altogether behoveth that those who be under our Iurisdiction, keepe themselves at home, and gadde not abroad unto forraine Iurisdiction: but heere to let their cause be tried, where both the accusers and the witnesses are ready at hand, & where the crime being committed may be judged. And in his 4. Epistle he saith, that those who doe communicate with Basilides, doe neglect that discipline and government which God hath established in his Church. The African Councell, cap. 92. thus concludeth, If any thinke they have cause to appeale from their own Bishops, or the Iudgement they receive at home, they shall not appeale but unto the Councells of Affricke; and if any doe appeale to any authority forraine, beyond the seas, or if any hold that men should so appeale, let none of the Churches of Affricke hold him fit for their communion. The Milevitane Councell, Can. 22 almost in the same words, inhibiteth all Bishops and Clerks, from appealing to any authority beyond the seas. Zozomene, lib.3.ca.8. reporteth, that the Bishops of the East wrote to the Bishop of Rome, that it was not lawfull for him by any cunning devise, nor under pretence of any appeale, to frustrate, or annihilate that which they had acted and concluded. Damasus, as wee may see in Ambrose, ep.79. being himselfe Pope, saith that after a Provinciall Councell have concluded any thing, he hath nothing to doe to meddle with the Iudgement. These be his words; Seeing the Councell assembled at Capua hath thus pronounced that Bonosus and his accusers shall have such Iudges appointed them, as be neere unto them, as especially the Macedonians, who together with the Bishop of Thessalonica, should examine his doings, and consider of the whole matter: We aduertise you therefore, that it cannot belong to us to deale with the Iudgement of this matter, neither is any thing to bee attempted against your sentence, who have decreed that which you thought most agreeable to Iustice, and to whom the Synode had given authority for that they did: therefore the first thing to bee done is, that they give Iudgement to whom the power of Iudging (in this case) is committed, for your determination is in the place and roome of the whole Synode: and it is no reason that wee should take upon us to Iudge (as it were) of the authority of the Synod. Thus farre Damasus. To conclude, Iustinian in the Imperiall lawes, *col.9.tit.6.c.*22. appointeth, that the last appeale be made to the Patriarck of the Diocesse.

13 In England appeales were prohibited till Henry the 2. of whom, and whose times, Matthew Paris in his Chronicle or history, in Henrico.2. anno.1164. saith thus; Concerning appeales, if they fall out, they must bee made from the Archdeacon to the Bishop, &c. and lastly, they must come to the King himselfe, from and beyond whom, no man may proceed further, without the assent of their Lord the King. The same was done in France by Lewis the 9. (who was called Lewis the godly) about the yeere 1278. in that edict (called the Pragmaticall sanction) of Saint Lewis: The words are these; We will not by any meanes that those heavy actions, and huge summes of money be levied or collected, which the Court of Rome hath imposed, or which hereafter it may impose upon the Church of our Kingdome, it being a meanes whereby our Kingdome is miserably impoverished. Nor will wee that any such summes be levied at all, but onely upon a most reasonable, godly, and urgent cause, or else upon some inevitable necessity, and that also to be upon our willing assent, and expresse commandement, together also with the voluntary consent of our Church in this Kingdome. The same was also afterward done by Philip the Faire, about the yere 1296. and afterward by Charles the fift surnamed the wise, and after by Charles the sixt, as Aimonius reporteth, de gestis Francorum lib.5.cap.25.

Further, Hildebertus thus writeth to Honorius. It hath not beene heard on this side the Alpes, that all manner of appeales should thus be received and maintained in the Court of Rome, neither doe wee find it delivered as a tradition from the holy and ancient ordinances. But if such novelty as this have sprung up, that you will accept indifferently of every appeale, surely the pontificall authority and censure will come to nought, and all force of Ecclesiasticall discipline will utterly be dasht and broken in pieces. What Priest or Clergy man, if he be wickedly disposed, will not doe any mischiefe, in hope to have releife by these defrauding appeales, and so will they lye as it were buried in the filth of their sinnes? and what Bishop shall have in readinesse any power at all to punish (not all as indeed hee should) but any disobedience at all, if this may be admitted?

14 In

14 In the Councell of Nice the custome and fashion of the Church of Rome was made equall to others, and no way superiour, namely, that as the Bishop of Rome hath a power over all his Bishops, that is, all in his Province; so by the same custome the Bishop of Alexandria shall have over the Bishops of Egypt: for in the authority of Patriarks the ancient custome must be observed. Dist.63. Conquestus; To this purpose are the words of the Councell, as Cusanus himselfe a Papist takes them *1.4 de concor.cath.c.*12. And even so doth Rufinus an ancient writer expound the Councells meaning in his history, lib.10. cap.6. and so doth Theodorus Balsamon, in his explication of these Canons, and also Nilus in his booke of the Primacy.

15 The Popes temporall Iurisdiction and dominion was partly snatcht by violence, partly stolne by fraud, and partly grew by other mens liberalities and donations: and by these meanes it grew up to that intollerable height it was of late. Vrspergensis himselfe a Popish Chronicler, reporteth that in the yere 753. Pope Stephen besought King Pipin of helpe against the King of Lumbardy, and King Pipin came with his army into Italy, and besieged him in Papia; and compelled him by the straitnesse of his siege to performe what afore he had promised, and so having received of him Ravenna & Pentapolis, with the whole Exarchy belonging to Ravenna, he gave them to S. Peter, and having thus dispatched these matters, he returned into France. And againe speaking of the yeere; 1228. he saith; In the same yeere and the yeere following, there was a treaty of peace betwixt the Emperour and the Souldan, & their countries: But the Pope taking the opportunity of the Emperours absence, had sent a strong army into Apuleia, and tooke by plaine force (a most horrible thing to report) the lands of the Emperour being then in the warre and service of Christ, and the Church, and having subdued them to himselfe, and signed them with the Crosse, he prohibited by all meanes, both them in Apuleia and in Lumbardy, that they should passe over the sea: who is it that rightly considering such facts as this, doth not deplore and detest them as being tokens portending and forerunning the ruine of the Church? And a little after. Whilst these things were thus a doing, in the parts beyond the seas, the Pope with his complices, as men reported, made a rumour to be raised and divulged over all Apuleia, that the Emperour was dead, whereupon such strong Cities as had yet reserved themselves for the Emperor (which for their strength the Pope could not so easily subdue) did now prepare to dispose and yeeld themselves to the Popes dominion, and most cruelly and wickedly to kill all the Almaines returning from the holy land, and abiding in Apuleia. Otto Frisingensis libro 7. in prefatione, tells us; that no man doubts but the Church was exalted and inriched by the strength of kingdomes, and beneficence of Kings, and that it is apparent, that the Church could not so farre bring under the state and strength of kingdomes, or the civill state, untill the civill state, for the love and honour it bare to Priesthood, had as it were unbowelled it selfe, and exhausted all it owne strength: and so the Civill state of the kingdome saith hee, ruined and fell, smitten not onely with the spirituall sword of the Church, but especiall by it owne, namely, with the materiall sword. Thus farre Otto. Augustine Steuchus lib.2. writing against Valla touching the donation of Constantine, hath these words; Gregory the third excommunicated Leo the Emperour, & so withdrew Rome and Italy from his Empire, absolving all their subjects from their oath and fealty of obedience. And that confession of Bellarmine is notable, in his 5. booke of the Bishop of Rome; c.4. where he saith, Christ as he was man, whilest he lived on the earth, accepted not, nor would have any temporall Lordship or dominion: now the Bishop of Rome is Christs Vickar, and represents Christ unto vs; as he was when he lived here amongst men on earth; therefore the Bishop of Rome as being Christs Vickar, and consequently as Bishop of Rome, or as highest Bishop, hath no temporall dominion nor authority: But Bellarmine, whether checked for this speech, or upon more consideration, thinking hee had gone too neere the truth, in his last edition seemes to recant this, or at least to mitigate it; for thus he corrects it: Therefore the chiefe Bishop as Christs Vickar, and consequently as chiefe Bishop, hath no authority or dominion meerely temporall over any City or Province.

16 The English Nation for 1000. yeeres after Christ, were not subject to the Popes authority in causes Ecclesiasticall. T hom Becket the Arch-bishop of Canterbury was the first that durst offer to cast off to refuse the Kings authority in causes spirituall, he indeed denied his obedience to the King, further than with this condition, Salvo ordine suo, saving alwaies his own order: & by this meanes hee infringed the liberties of the English Church. Anselme Archbishop of Canterbury, long afore Becket, in his Epistle to Pope Paschal.ep.36 saith; The King would not suffer the Popes Nuntio, or Apostolicall Legate to be received into England, without his leave and expresse commandement, neither would suffer meé to write or send any letters to him, nor to receive any sent from him, nor to obey any of his decrees. And a little after: In all these, and in matters of like nature, If I asked counsel of others what I might do, all the subiects of that Kingdome, yea even my owne Suffragane Bishop, denied to yeeld me any advise or assistance, but according to the will and pleasure of the King. Matthew Paris in his story of Henry the 1. reporteth that William the King of England Protect or Agent at Rome, confidently alleaged amongst other things before the Pope, that the King his Master, Henry of England, would not, (no not for the losse of his Kingdome) lose the right of presenting to his Churches: and this he boldly affirmed, & urged it with great and threatning words. The same Author in his story of Henry the second about the yeere 1164. amongst many other customes and liberties of the former Kings of England, recounteth this for one: Concerning the Advowsons or Patronages of Churches, or presentations to Benefices, if there arise any question either amongst laymen, or betwixt laymen and Clerks, or betwixt Clerk themselves: it shall be heard, debated, and determined, in the Court of our Lord the King. And in the same place in the Kings Letters to his Iustices, he saith; Let no man appeale either to the Pope, or to Thomas the Archbishop, neither let any Plea be holden at their commandement, neither let any mandate or commandement of theirs be received within England: and if any man either receive, or retaine, or have any thing to doe with any such commandement, let him bee apprehended and safely kept. Indeed King Iohn did homage to Pope Innocent, resigning up his Crowne and Kingdome to the Church of Rome, but for his so doing all the Barons of his Kingdome oppose themselves against him, and chuse for their King, Lewis the King of France, as Matthew Paris reporteth in his story of King Iohn. And Ieffery of Monmouth reporteth in his history, l. 11. c. 12. that the English Churches, being wel constituted and excellently ordered, would not be subject to Augustine the Popes Legat, in the yeere, 600. Indeed England made it selfe tributary to the Pope, by taxing every house at a piece of silver to bee paid to the Pope: and this was first begun about the yeere 847. But the investitures of Bishops, and authority to receive appeales, the Pope obtained not, till Henry the second, much against his will was brought to subject himselfe, and his kingdome to the Court of Rome, which was done 300. yeeres after, namely, about the yeere. 1172. Therefore the decretall Epistle of Adrian the 4. to Thomas the Archbishop of Canterbury, (which is to be found in the Popes decretals) lib. 3. tit. 30. cap. Commissum, is but a bastard: for the Pope had no dominion nor power at all in matters spirituall, over the English Church, but after Thomas was dead. And of no better stuffe is that other decretall of Alexander the 3. unto the Arch-bishop of Yorke, (which is also there extant in the decretall,) l. 2. tit. 16. c. a memoria: for there hee saith, that Honorius his Predecessor by his Apostolicall authority granted a certaine priviledge to the Arch-bishop of Yorke, over whom as yet he had no power nor authority.

in

17 The Pope hath not a determining Iudgement infallible, more plainely, he hath no power to Iudge or determine, so as hee cannot erre: so taught all that ever wrote of it for 1400. yeeres: yea even Papists themselves. The ancient Fathers as well Greeke as Latine did hold and censure Honorius the 1, to be a Monothelite heretick, that is, one who held that Christ had one will onely. So doth also the sixt generall Councell, Act. 12. 13. 18. where he is condemned by the name of an heretike, and his Epistels burnt. The second Councell of Nice act. ult. doth curse or layeth Anathema on Honorius. So doth also the eight Synod of Constantinople, Act. 7. And Leo the 2. in his Epistle to the Emperour at the end of the Councell; and Theorasius in his Epistle to the Patriarks, which is to be seene in the 3. Act of the seventh Synod. And Psellus in his Poeme of the seven Synods. And Epiphanius the Deacon in his disputation with Gregory the heretike, which also is extant in the 6. Act of the seventh Synod. And Bede in his booke of the six ages of the world, about the yeere 4639. And the Pontificall it selfe in the life of Leo the 2. And Anastasius the keeper of the Popes Library in the life of the same Leo the 2. And suppose that all these so many Councells and Fathers were deceived in these their reports & testimonies, by taking it from the 6. generall Synod, whose decree in that point suppose also to be corrupted, notwithstanding it followeth, that all the said Fathers and Councells affirming Honorius to be an heretick, did therefore undoubtedly beleeve that the Pope, even as he is Pope, might erre. But to put this matter out of all question, that they thought so of him, looke the Epistle of Leo the 2. to Constantine, at the end of the Councell, wherein he doth execrate and curse Honorius, as not having illustrated the Apostolicall Church with Apostolicall doctrine, but rather had defiledit with his heresie. And the 6. generall Councell Act. 13. doth curse the faith Honorius by the name of Pope of old Rome, for his decretall Epistle which he had set fourth: nay even Gratian himselfe the compiler of the decrees, d. 40. c. Si Papa, takes it as a thing granted, that the Pope may erre from the faith. And Robert Grosted an ancient Bishop of Lincolne saith, that the Pope may be an hereticke and Antichrist, and hee addeth further, that the Decretall saith, that upon such a fault as heresie is, the Pope may and ought to bee accused. Thus reporteth Matthew Paris in his story of Henry the 3. about the yeere 1253. Lyra on the 16. of St Matthew saith, that many principall & chiefe Bishops have beene found to have bin apostates from the faith. Gerson (in his treatise intituled, whether it bee lawfull to appeale from the Pope in matters of faith,) saith, that as wel the Pope as a Bishop, may erre from the faith, and is therefore inferiour to a

Councell

Councell. Antoninus in his summe part. 3. tit. 22. c. 4. §. 3. saith, that it is lawfull and reasonable that the Pope (nisi sit fatuus) be deposed for heresie: Panormitan a great Canonist, in c. 2. lect. 8. significasti: saith, that the Councell may depose the Pope for heresie, and alleadgeth a chapter out of the Canon law for it, wherein it is said that the Pope might be an heretick, and is be judged for heresie: Ita etiam tenet (saith he) Innocentius. In matters concerning faith, the word of a private man is to be preferred before the Popes, if he speake upon better ground & out of the old and new Testament: than the Pope doth. The Councell of Constance, sess. 37. calleth Pope Benedict a schismaticke, and an heretike, and such a one as hath erred from the faith: and noe much otherwise speake they of Iohn the 23. in the 11. session of the same Councell. The Councell of Basill in the 34. of their Synodall Epistles, hath words to this effect. The holy Church is indowed of Christ our Saviour with such priviledges that we believe firmely she cannot erre: and besides the Church, we doe not reade that any other (ordinarily) hath at any time the same or so great gifts given unto the, to no Angels, to no men, to no Popes or chiefe Bishops, where of many are reported, (and so also we reade) that they have fallen into errours and heresies. And Aeneas Sylvius after he was Pope himselfe, refuting the acts of the Councell of Basil, saith, that the opinion of such as hold that Councells may not bee called without the Popes consent, if it may stand, will bring with it the very ruine of the Church: for (saith he) if that may be so, what remedy or helpe will there be, if a scandalous Pope, or one whose life is tainted with foule crimes doe trouble the Church, if he destroyeth soule, &c. if he set forth doctrines contrary to the faith, & instil heretical opinions into their mindes that are under him. Catharinus a great Papist, in his Commentaries on the 2. to the Galatians saith; There is nothing against it, but that the Pope may erre, yea even in faith, and fall from it, howsoever certaine late Writers and young upstarts have presumed to defend the contrary, contrary to the common and ancient opinion of the Doctors. Alphonsus de Castro in his first booke against heresies, capit. 4. saith, The Pope by himselfe without the assembly and assistance of a Councell, may erre even in such things as belong to faith, by the opinion of many Divines of great authority, who have so affirmed and taught. Yea it is found by experience, that divers Popes have erred in the faith. And in the 4. chapter of the same booke, Every wish may erre in faith although he be the Pope himselfe: for Platina reporteth of Liberius the Pope, that he held with the Arrians. And to conclude, this truth is so cleare, that Bellarmine himselfe, de Rom. Pontif. lib. 4. cap. 9. confesseth, that Liberius this Pope did after a fort, namely, in his mind that a cap. sicut. 40. dist.

judge neither, consent to the Arrian heresie, inasmuch as he banished Athanasius to be condemned, whereas he ought to be persecuted for the cause of faith: Likewise, and because he communicated with Felix and Vrsacius that were Arrians, for which cause he was put from the Pope home by the Clergy of Rome: Bin. in vit. Pont. Touching Antichrist the eldest Fathers fielding certainty, because his wicked mistery is veiled, therefore they bring conjectures, yet so much as they did judge of it as I say, that he is to be found in the Romane Church. Chrysostome upon the 2. to the Thessalonians 4. directly affirmeth, that Antichrist is to succeed the Romane Empire: and Augustine before him in his Epistle to Hesychius, saith, that the Romane Empire is out of the way, that Antichrist may come: Theodoret upon the same place, Ierome upon the 2. of Daniel, doe all hold that Antichrist shall not sit in Ierusalem, but in the Church of God. Abbot Ioachim in his third plaine enough, that the Pope of Rome is the very Antichrist. Many (saith he in his Rotul. Pyxidibrij) under the pretence of Gods feare, that is, of the see of y universall church, are become like unto the seaven of the beast; which is the kingdome of Antichrist; who reigneth every where in his members from the beginning of the Church, and namely in the clergy, Monkes and Monasteries. And againe, we have plainly taught and delivered, that Rome is the spirit is Babylon. And a little after: The merchants of the earth (spoken of in the Revelation) are the Priests themselves, who sell prayers and masses for money, making the house of prayer a shop of merchandise. And againe: We see that not onely many Bishops and clergy men are enfnared in the businesse of Babylon, to make themselves rich thereby, but even many Abbots, and Monkes, and religious persons: and yet why doe I call them religious? for they are not so, but seeme to be. Otto Frisingensius in his Chronicle, lib. 7. c. 3. saith: There shineth a certaine resemblance betwixt Babylon and Rome, insomuchas that which here with us in the city of Rome, is given to the Pope our chiefe Bishop by the Christian Emperours, the very same is there by the Pagan kings of Persia (to whom for a long time Babylon hath been subject) granted unto their high Priest: and the kings of Persia themselves leaving the Imperiall city, as our Emperours make their seat at Aquisgrave, &c. So they at Bebutane, and so translating the seate of the kingdome, they held nothing of Babylon for themselves; but the bare name of an Empire. And againe, l. 8. c. 2. Some (saith he) doe interpret this departure spoken of in the Rev. and that where of the Apostle saith, that which withholdeth, will withhold until it be taken out of the way, and doe referre it to the kingdome or Empire, and thereupon they also say, that the Apostle purposely delivered his meaning under this covering and obscurity of words; left

leſt hee might ſeeme to ſlander by this preface, or weaken the ſtate of the Romane Empire, which to the Statesmen and Emperors of thoſe dajes, was thought ſo ſure, that it ſhould never have an end: & to that purpoſe (ſay they) it was, that the Apoſtle ſaid, and what withholdeth you know: as describing it, and yet not naming it. To conclude, Aventinus the Chronicler l.5.cr.7. affirmeth, that the moſt both of the Princes and Biſhops of Germany and of Italy held and proclaimed Gregory the 7. and John the 22. plaine Antichriſts and no better.

19 Themonarchicall or ſoveraigne authority of the Pope of Rome over the Church and generall Councels, was of many men ever reproved and condemned, and was not allowed, nor admitted of the Church till very lately, namely, after the yeere 1500. Krantzius a Germane hiſtoriographer in his Metropolis l.7.c.45. ſpeaking of the yeere about 1240. In thoſe daies (ſaith hee) there needed not any Apoſtolicall confirmation from the Pope, it was ſufficient that the election was approved by the Archbiſhop; but now the Church of Rome hath drawn to her ſelfe all the rights, honours, and priviledges of other Churches. Heare a Frenchman, Durandus in his 3. book of Eccleſiaſtical livings, c.3. who ſaith thus: In the Apoſtles times whenſoever as any were to be ordained either Biſhop or Deacon, or any thing elſe of what nature ſoever, was to be conſidered and determined, which concerned the Church, S. Peter did never arrogate nor take it upon himſelfe, but permitted and put the matter to the whole Church: the moſt that he did was this, that as being a principal Apoſtle he uſed to aſſemble or call together the reſt, and to them ſo aſſembled to make a ſpeech, declaring the cauſe of their aſſembling, and the particular affaires that were to be handled: even as with us at this day (here in France) hee that is the Preſident of the Court of Parlament calles together the whole Senate, and ſpeaking firſt in the aſſembly, &c. Neither for all this is he greater or ſuperiour than the whole Court, neither hath he any juriſdiction or eminency of power over the whole Parlament, neither may he judge or determine any thing againſt their judgement and opinions, &c. Thus in deed ſtood the caſe in times paſt. But I know not how it is now come to paſſe, that ſupreme and ſoveraigne power over all Chriſtians is aſcribed to one and that he thal be (euen like an Emperour) free, exempted & diſcharged from all lawes, edicts, canons & ſynodal conſtitutions. For Pope Paſchall in a decretall Epiſtle hath expreſly taken order or decreed, that no Councels may preſcribe or command the church of Rome, nor make any law to binde the Romane churchmand they brought the matter to that paſſe, that in divers ſynodall decrees or canons of Councels the authority of the Romane Biſhop is accepted and provided for. Glaber Radulph. in his hiſtories l.2.cap.4. reporteth, that one Fulco erected a goodly church in a village about Tours, and having finiſhed the whole worke, he ſent to Hugh the Archbiſhop of Tours, that hee would come and conſecrate the church he had built: but the Archb. prolonged his comming, and made no great haſt to do it, for that Fulco had taken from the church divers lands and Lordſhips. Fulco therefore ſeeing himſelfe ſo anſwered by the Archb. furniſhed himſelfe with a great maſſe of gold and ſilver, went ſtraight to Rome to Pope John that then was, and with great complaint laid open the matter before him; who forthwith ſent one of thoſe whom they cal Cardinali, with the ſaid Fulco to conſecrate the foreſaid church, and gave the ſaid Cardinall in ſtrait charge and commandement that he ſhold there take upon him the authority of the Biſhop of Rome, & by him, and under that authority, without feare or delay performe whatſoever the ſaid Fulco thought expedient to be done touching the premiſes: which when the reſt of the Biſhops & prelates of France did heare of, they knew well enough, that this ſacrilegious preſumption proceeded from blind and filthy couetouſnes, to wit, that while one would ſteale, & another receive, amongſt them they brought it to paſſe, that a made ſchiſme and diviſion was riſen in the Romiſh church. All of them therfore together diſliked and deteſted this dealing of the Romiſh biſhop, judging it a very unworthy & unſeemely thing, that he who tooke upon him to goueme the Apoſtolicall ſeate, ſhould firſt of all himſelfe tranſgreſſe the tenour and rule of Apoſtolical order, and of the ancient Canons: eſpecially it being a thing notorious, and confirmed with manifold authorities of antiquity, that no Biſhop preſume to exerciſe any authority with in anothers man Dioceſſe, unleſſe the Biſhop of that Dioceſſe doe either urge him to it, or give him leave to do it, &c. For although the Biſhop of the Romiſh church, in reſpect of the dignity of the Apoſtolicall ſeate, be eſteemed of more reverently than the Biſhops of the others ſeats, which are conſtituted in the world, yet may not he, for all that, tranſgreſſe the order eſtabliſhed by the Canons, but in every thing, is to bee ruled by them as others are: for as every Biſhop of the true and Orthodoxall Church, being as it were the husband of his proper and peculiar flocke, doth beare the perſo of our Saviour in that charge, as well as any one doth, ſo it cannot poſſibly belong to any one, to intermeddle preſumptuouſly in another Biſhops Dioceſſe: thus farre Radulphus. All which is ſo much the more remarkable, ſeeing theſe things were ſaid and done, not of late, but above 600. yeeres ago, namely, about the yeere after Chriſt 1000. Caſſander in his 2. booke of Catholike concord, c.23. ſaith, That the Dioceſſes are diſtinct, and one Biſhop is ſet over many paſtors for the conſerving of unity; that is, ſaith he, of a poſitive law, and humane conſtitution. And againe; The Pope is not the univerſall Biſhop, but the firſt above or among others. And we doe builld and found (ſaith he) the vigor of holy Councells, not in the Pope, but in the conſent of all. And againe, in the 20. chapter. It is cleare (ſaith he) that Pope Leo, in certaine points did never receive, nor allow the conſtitutions of the Councell of Chalcedon (as for one eſpecially, that the Church or Sea of Conſtantinople ſhould have the precedence before that of Alexandria,) but hee alwaies ſpake againſt them, as alſo did ſome others after him, and yet for all that the decree of the Councell ever tooke place. But if the Pope had it in his power to bee able to abrogate or nullifie the decrees concluded by generall Councells, certainely Pope Leo, or ſome of his ſucceſſors, would have prevailed in this point, which it is apparent they did not, as I ſaid before. And a little after: Though Pope Leo oppoſed himſelfe mightily againſt 3. chapters or conſtitutions of the Chalcedon Councell, &c. yet he made not this reſiſtance out of his owne authority onely, but by & from the authority of the Nicene Councell. And againe, in the 34. chapter, An univerſall Councell of the Catholike Church hath the ſoveraigne, moſt abſolute, & higheſt power in all things, yea even over the Biſhop of Rome. And in the ſame booke and 12. chapter, we ſee (ſaith he) how far the Biſhop of Rome is gone, or how much he hath encroched beyond the holy and ancient obſervations, out of the cuſtome and preſſe of ſubjectionall obedience. In the yeere 1337. all the Prelats and Princes of Almain concluded and agreed on this, that a Councell is above the Pope in matters of faith and ſtate, and therefore that the appeale from the Pope to the Councell was good. Thus reporteth Nauclerus, generat. 45. And as for this abſolute, ſoveraigne, and indeterminted power of the Pope, it was firſt of al approved and granted in the 2. Councell of Lateran, in the time of Leo the 10, within theſe 100. yeeres, namely, about the yeere 1516.

Inpage Romice.

Of Buls, or Indulgences.

1 THeſe Indulgentiall Buls of the Roman Biſhop, wherin is given abſolution from the guilt of temporal puniſhmēt, by application of the merits of Chriſt, and of the Saints, were not known to the Catholike church for 1000. yeeres & more after Chriſt. Alex. the 3. who began to ſit at Rome about the yeere 1159. in an epiſtle to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, thus writeth; 2215 yet extant to be ſeen in the Popes own decretals, l.5.tit.38.c.4. And for the point wherein you demanded my counſell, whether the remiſſions which are wont to be made at dedications of Churches, or to ſuch as contribute to the building of bridges, bee availeable to any other than thoſe who be of the pariſh and dioceſſe of thoſe that grant them, we would have your brotherhood to know thus much, that ſeeing no man can either be bound, or abſolved of him, that is not his proper Iudge, we therefore are of opinion, that the foreſaid remiſſiōs are profitable only to thoſe, to whom & whoſe good their own proper Iudges that granted them, did ſpecially intend them. Theſe be his words. And hence I gather theſe concluſions, 1, That it then pertained to all Biſhops, to give and grant indulgences or remiſſions. 2. That theſe Indulgences were skarce knowne in thoſe dayes of Pope Alex. which appeares thus: in that the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, held it a matter ſo rare and difficult, that he ſent to Rome to know the vertue & valor of them, and to whom they were eſpecially availeable; whereupon it is cleere, that even the great Maſters & Prelats of England, were but little or not acquainted with them: although ſome 60. yeeres before, Pope Vrban the 2, granted to them that undertooke a Pilgrimage to the holy land, about the yeere 1095, releaſement of all penances for their ſins, (as Nauclerus hath it, gen.37.) or as Mat. Paris in Willielmo II. ſaith; hee granted them pardon of all their ſinnes, and in the retribution of the Iuſt at the laſt day, he promiſed the an Increaſe of glory. Out of the Councell of Laterane under Innocent the 3. can.62. it appareth that all Biſhops had authority to give Indulgences. And as for the great Indulgences of the yeere of Iubile, they came in practiſe ſome 300. yeeres agoe, viz. about the yeere 1300. as Platina reports in the life of Boniſ. the 8. And that theſe kinde of Indulgences were not knowne in the Primitive Church, Roſſ. himſelfe, (that is, our owne country man, Fiſher the Biſhop of Rocheſter) confeſſeth in his booke againſt Luther, art. 18 I anſwer (ſaith he) that it is not ſufficiently manifeſt, by whom theſe Indulgences were firſt given out. And concerning Purgatory he ſaith: there is very little or no mention at all among the ancient Fathers of it. But after the ſame Purgatory began to feare the world, and men trembled at the torments thereof, then Indulgences began to be in requeſt. Durandus alſo thus ſaith concerning Indulgences, in his commentaries on the Sentences lib.4. d.20.q.3. Little can be ſaid of them, with any certainty, for as much as the ſcripture ſpeakes nothing at al expreſly of them. As for the holy Fathers, namely, Ambroſe, Hilary, Auguſt. Ierome, there is not a word to be found in the that toucheth Indulgences. Alphonſus de Caſtro upon this matter, lib.8. ſaith: Amongſt all the queſtions or points we diſpute of in this book, there is none at all, which hath ſo little footing in the holy Scriptures; and whereof the ancient Fathers have spoken lesse.

2 For the space of a thousand yeeres after Christ, the Indulgences (that were) were relaxations or releasments of Canonicall satisfactiō, that is, of the discipline or correctiō of the Church: but they were not ordained, nor used as satisfactions before God for temporall punishment: and the Fathers and Councells speaking thereof, are thus to be understood, as namely, the I. Nicece, c. 11. the II at Arles, c. 10, that at Ancyra, c. 2. Sometime also they be declarations of the forgivenesse or remission of sinnes, and in this sense the word Indulgences is often taken: for in the letters of Indulgences, we may reade that absolution is granted, sometime from the fault and punishment both together, & pardon of all sin; sometime the halfe, sometime the third part of their sinnes: such were the Indulgences granted within a 1000. yeres after Christ, by Gregory the 1. Leo the 3. Sergius the 2. And it is worth the observing; that in the writings of Burchardus and Gratianus, there is nothing to be found concerning Indulgences: No nor in Peter Lumbard, who lived about the yeere 1150.

3 In ancient times, the Indulgences remitted 3, or 7, or more yeeres of Penance, because so many or more yeeres were set down, wherein the penitents were to give full satisfaction to the church of the sincerity of their repentance. Now after the same manner Indulgences are granted for certaine yeeres: but in the other point they are fallen farre from the just severity of the ancient Church, for penances are not enjoyned for certaine yeeres.

4 The ancient Fathers doe not teach that Indulgences were profitable to the dead: and no lesse is both avouched and taught by Biel, lect. 57. upon the Canon of the Masse, and by Hostiensis in his summe, l. 5. tit. de remiss. nu. 6. two famous Papists.

5 The power of loosing and binding in the Church, or which the Church hath, is not proper, but is exercised onely by declaring or publishing that it is so: so saith Hieromo, l. 3. Commen. in Mat. on those words. To thee wil I give the keies, &c. Priests have no power of binding or loosing, but to shew and declare that sinners bee bound or loosed. Radulphus Ardent, about the yeere 1050. in Dominio 1. post. Pasc. saith; In what authority must priest absolve? not in their owne, but in Gods: for the power to remit or release sinnes, is onely Gods: but the Ministery of it (which also we sometime improperly call a power) hee hath granted to his Vickars or deputies on earth, who after their manner, or in a sort do bind, and loose, that is, shew & declare them bound or absolved. Hugo the Cardinall on the same place of S. Matthew, saith; As for the bond of sinne or guilt and due penance, the Priest neither can binde a man in it; nor loose a man from it, but only shew and declare that a man is bound and loosed: as the Leviticall Priest, neither made a man a leaper: nor healed him being a leaper, but onely pronounced that hee was pollured or healed. Durandus upon the Sentences saith, that the power of the keyes worketh nothing to the forgivenesse or taking away of the fault or blot of mortall sinne.

6 The treasure of the Church, supposed to consist in the merits of Christ and the Saints, the disposing and dispensing whereof is committed to the Pope, was altogether unknowne in the Church of God for many ages after Christ. For the ancient Fathers never said nor signified, wrote nor imagined that Indulgences were given out of the treasure of satisfaction. Franciscus de Mayrone, in 4. d. 19. q. 2. and Durand. in 4. d. 20. q. 3. doe both of them teach, that the treasure of the Church doth not consist upon the merits of Saints. Angelus their great Lawyer hath these words upon the matter of Indulgences, part. 9, The common opinion that is holden both by diuines and Canonists, is, that Indulgences arise from the abundance of merits which Christ and the Saints have performed beyond the measures of their owne demerits. But I hold for my part with Franciscus de Mayrone, that whereas the merits of Saints are already rewarded of God beyond their desert, and thereby are exhaust, therefore they come from the merits of Christ alone and his passion.

Of the Power of Kings.

1 THe Pope of Rome was subject to the Emperour, or to the Imperial lawes in al matters or causes (as they say) concerning persons and things ecclesiasticall, for at least 850. yeeres after Christ. Tertull. ad Scapulam, saith, We honour the Emperour, &c. as a man next to God, and inferiour onely to God. Optatus contra Parme. lib. tertio. There is none above the Emperour, but onely God, who made the Emperour. Leo in his Epistle to the Emperour, Epistol. 59. Because wee are by all meanes to obey your godly authority, and your religious will, I have therefore willingly yeelded my opinion and consent to the synodall Constitutions concerning the confirmations of the Catholike faith, and damnation of heretickes, which did very much like mee. Gregory in an Epistle to the Emperour, Epistol. libro 2. capite 100. I (saith he) being subject to your command, have caused that your law or edict to bee sent and published in divers parts of the word. And afterwards: I have yeelded obedience to the Emperour; and yet have I not holden my tongue in the cause cause of God, but have spoken what I thoght. And l. 4. c. 76. I for my part do performe obedience to the princely commandement of his Highnesse. Nauclerus, generat. 23. of his Chronography, speaking of the yeere 605, or thereabouts: saith, Constantine the Emperour, conceiving a great opinion of the holines of Benedict, made a decree and sent it to him, granting thereby, that hereafter whomsoever the Roman Clergy, people, and souldiers should chuse for their Pope, al men should forthwith esteeme and take him for Christs true Vickar, without waiting for any further authority or allowance, either from the Emperour of Constant. or the Prince of Italy: for till that time, it was usual and approved, that whē a new Bishop of Rome was to be created, either the Prince himselfe, or else his Lievtenant of Italy, did confirme him. Sigonius in his 4 book of the kingdome of Italy, saith, Charles the great challenged to himselfe the kingdome of Italy, as being his owne by Victory and Conquest. The Exarchy of Raveuna, Pentapolis, the Dukedoms of Perusia, Romania, Tuscia, & Campania, he permitted to the Pope, yet reserving to himselfe the right principality, and dominion, the rest he retained to himselfe in name of the kingdome. And afterward in the 7. booke, about the yeere 973. The Bishop of Rome held Rome, Raveuna, and some other Provinces, rather by authority, than dominion: For the Cities respected the Pope as a Prince of the Country, but the King or Emperour as their soveraigne Lord, and unto, him they did their homage, and paid their tributes, Leo the fourth writing to Lotharius the Emperour, as is ye t to bee seene in the Canon law, apud Grat. distinct. 10. capite 9. saith, concerning those the Royall commandements, and Imperiall decrees of your Highnesse, and your Bishops our predecessors, wee promise and professe, that by the helpe of Christ, as farre as we were, and are able, we have and will inviolably keepe and observe them; and so will doe for ever hereafter. Againe, the same Leo submitteth himselfe to bee censured by the judgement of the Emperour, and his Commissioners, or Delegates sent from him to that purpose, as may appeare in the Canon law, causa 2. quest. 7. cap. Nos si. To conclude, Bellarmine himselfe, de Pontif. libro secundo, capite 29. yeeldeth, that as long as the Princes of the world were heathen, the Pope was not their Iudge, but contrariwise was subject to them in all civill causes, as well as other men: Well said, Then upon this I affirme thus: But they lost nothing either of their power, or honour by becomming Christians, therefore they ought still to have that soveraignty over Bishops in civill causes.

2 The Pope deposed not Princes especially the Romane, till a thousand yeeres and more after Christ. Hildebrand was the first that durst offer to depose the Emperour; so testifieth Otto Frisingensis, libro 6. capite 35. I reade (saith he) over and over againe, the stories of the Romane Kings and Emperours, and I never finde any one of them, to be excommunicated or deprived of his kingdome by the Bishop of Rome, before this Henry the fourth, unlesse peradventure some would judge it an excommunication, that Philip the Emperor was for a little time placed amongst the Penitents by the Romane Bishop, and Theodosius for that cruell massacre and slaughter of Christians, was by Ambrose forbidden for a time to enter the Church. Likewise Sigebertus, about the yere 1088. Let me say thus much with the leave of al good men, this novelty, not to call it an heresie, was not known in ỹ world, as yet, (that is, before Hildebrand, Victor, & Urban as he saith in the yeere 1111) that the Clergy should teach the people, that they owe no subjection unto cuill kings; and though they have made them an oath of fealty, yet that they owe no fealty unto them, and that they are not perjured, who in this case do hold against the King; yea, that he who shall obey the King, or stand with him, is to bee held for excommunicate, and hee that shall take against the King, is to be absolved from all crime of injustice, disobedience, and perjury. And Onuphrius himselfe confesseth in his booke of the dignities of the Romane Church, that in the time of Alexander the third, the Romane Church was lifted up to the height of worldly honour, Frederick the Emperour being troden under foote. Aventinus in his Chronicles, lib. 7. pag. 684. reporteth that one Eberhardus the Archbishop of Iuva, now (called Salizburgh,) spake thus, Hildebrand (saith he) about 170. yeeres agoe, first of all under the pretence of religion, laid the foundation of Antichrists Empire: Hee first of all began that ungodly warre, which by his Successors is hitherto continued. These Popes first of all thrust out the Emperours from their assemblies, and translated them unto the people and the Priests, afterward they skorned, and as it were hissed out them also: and now what intend they but even to restraine us also, and to bring us into slavery, that so they may reigne alone? Thus saith Eberhardus. And againe, He that is the servant of servants, coveteth to bee the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, as though hee were God himselfe,—he speakes huge things, and high matters, as though he were God: He imagineth new devices continually, and is every day hammering new things in his head; and that he may erect to himselfe an Empire, and bring all power into his owne hands, hee changeth lawes at his pleasure, abrogates the old, and establisheth his owne; All this doth that man of perdition, whom men use to call Antichrist, in whose forehead is written the name of blasphemy, and in whose mouth are these words of presumption, I am God, I cannot erre; he sitteth in the Temple of God, and domineereth over all farre and neere. And Aventinus himselfe againe, libro 7. pag. 675. reporteth that the Pope sent his Buls and Breeves to all the Bishops of Germany, but none of them obey him, therefore hee writes to the [a] Abbots, and commands them to curse the Bishops, but neither will they yeeld unto him. What doth he then? he sends to the Priests, and commands them to chuse them new Bishops, & to the Monkes to chuse them new Abbots, such as themselves pleased, unlesse these would yeeld and obey. Every one was amazed at the strangenesse of this course, being without all former examples: nay the like was never heard to have beene attempted; no marvell therefore though this commandement and embassage of his displeased all that heard it, for in no place had it any acceptance. ——— Conrade, the Bishop of Friesingen, appealed to the Emperour, and taught openly, that the great Priest of Rome had no power in Germany without the consent of the Bishops of Germany. Let the Romish Priest (saith he) keepe him at home, and feede his owne Italians; as for us, though hee hold us dogges, yet wee are such dogges, as seeing God hath constituted us over our flockes, we will barke at the Wolves, and wil especially keepe such Wolves from our flockes, as shroud themselves under sheepes clothing. But what will this fellow (saith he) this usurping Vickar doe to others, and ordinary men, judge by this, when he dare so take up, & so evill intreat us that are his brethren, and his companions? And againe, the same author elswhere reiateth, that Gerochius, who was Gregories advocate, said thus: the Roman Bishops usurpe to themselves divine honor, refuse to give account or yeild a reason of their doings, and thinke it unreasonable that any man should say unto them, why doe you so? In a word, they have alwayes both in their words and practise that of the Poet, Sic volo, Sic jubeo, stat pro ratione voluntas. Thus farre Aventinus.

[a] Monachorum Patribus.

3 The Empire was translated from the Grecians to the Germanes, not by the Popes power, but by the counsell, voyce, and decree of the Senate and people of Rome, and the Bishop of Rome was onely a counseller or assistant of this change, or as it were, the Interpreter: For Sigebert in his Chronicle, an. 801. thus writeth, The Romans having long agoe fallen from the Emperour of Constantinople in their thought and resolutions, did now with one consent chuse King Charles for their Emperour, giving him the salutation, applause, and acclamation of an Emperour, and did crowne him by the hand of Leo their Pope, calling him Cæsar and Augustus. Aventine also in his history, lib. 4. fol. 344. saith, that the Bishop of Rome, what alone? No, but the Bishop, the Senate, and the people of Rome, decreede to transferre the Empire from the Greekes unto the Germanes, and that by their owne right, or as being a thing in their power to doe, and by a free and quiet choice, gave it to Charles, with the voyces both of the Senate and the people. Yea Æneas Sylvius himselfe, c. 9. (afterwards a Pope) speaking of the authority of the Roman Empire, saith, that the people of Rome, who with their lives and much blood, had wonne themselves such an Empire, did also with their blood make Charles the great (King of France) the Emperour, together with the consent of the Romane Bishop. Nay this point is so cleere to all that are not too partiall, that Onuphrius a late and learned Papist saith, Charles being crowned and consecrated King of France, in a towne of France, called Carisiaco, by Pope Stephen the second, about the yeere of Christ 752. was also chosen and saluted Emperour of Rome, in the Church of Saint Peter in the Vaticane, by the consent of the Cleargy, Senate, and people of Rome, and was there crowned by Leo the third, in the yeere of our Lord 801. Therefore from these it is apparent, that where the histories or Chronicles say that Charles was crowned, or annointed, made, called, ordained, or desigued Emperour by the Pope of Rome, they are to be understood, not of the power of conferring the authority and jurisdiction Imperiall, but of the ceremony of Coronation or Inauguration, and of the publike renunciation, and solemne signification of the Emperours place, power and dignity. That also which a man shall often meete in histories, namely, that Leo gave or conferred the Empire to Charles, is to bee understood, that he consented to them that gave it. For besides all before alleaged, even Adrian the Pope doth confesse it in his Epistle to Fredericke, to whom hee wrote thus: I doe not beleeve (saith he) that you have forgotten—how great honour I gave you, and how carefully and willingly I bestowed on you the Royall Crowne of the Empire; and I am nothing sorry for that I have done, but would much rejoyce if I had given you farre greater favours: But after perceiving the Emperour to be offended at these phrases, and that he would by no means acknowledge his Empire to be the Popes benefit or gift, he therefore expounds himselfe, and saith, by benefit he meanes bonum factum, a good deede: and by conferred or bestowed, nothing else but I put upon you, or put you into possession: for thus hee writeth, I said I conferred or bestowed on you the Imperiall Crown, because in this word bestowed or conferred, I meant nothing else, but I set it upon your head, or I crowned you with it. Sigonius speaking of the Kingdome of Italy, lib. 12. writes that Charles obtained the Empire by right of warre, by his owne prowesse, and at last by plaine bargaine and covenant with Irene and Nicephorus. Otto Frisingensis, lib. 2. cap. 21. reporting the deedes of Fredericke the first, writeth that Fredericke thus (amongst other things) spake to the Romane Embassadours: Thou boastest (saith he), that I was called by thee, that thou first madest me a Citizen, and then Emperour of Rome; that the honour I have, was first of thee, and that I received it from thee; but the novelty of these unusuall tearmes, how farre from reason, and how void of truth they be, I leave it to the venter of thy credit, and the judgement of the wise. Let us over loose the deedes of the late Emperours, and wee shall soone finde that those heroicall Princes of ours, Charles and Otho, tooke possession of Rome and Italy, and annexed them to the Crowne of France, receiving them of no mans gift, but even recovering them by force and valour out of the usurping hand of the Greekes and Lumbards. If thou doubt of this, thou maiest soone see it by Desiderius and Berengarius (those tyrants of thine) in whom thou diddest boast, and to whom thou diddest trust as unto great Princes: For wee have it from undoubted relation, that they were not onely conquered and captivated by our French nation, but that they even grew old, and at last ended their dayes in that captivity. And their very ashes which are laid up with us, and which wee keepe to this day, doe yeeld unto us a most evident argument of this truth. But thou wilt say unto mee, thou camest hither being called by me? I confesse I was called, but tell thou the reason why, and the manner how I was called: Thou wast assaulted, and even beaten by the enemies; and neither by thine owne power, nor much lesse by the effeminate Grecians couldest thou bee delivered; therefore the French power and prowesse was thy refuge, unto them thou fledst, and earnestly inuited him to thy helpe; thus was I called: but is not this rather an imploring, than a calling? surely I should so esteeme it. For thou didst not call or invite me, as not needing me, or being in good case to doe me honour, but thou being in misery, imploredst helpe of me being in happinesse; thou weake of me being then strong, thou doubtfull, of me being then secure. On this manner being called, if this may be tearmed a calling, I came unto thee. Thus farre Fredericke in that place. As for the deposing of Childericke the king of France, it was done by the Peeres & people of the land, but the Pope onely devised the way, and gave counsell how to doe it: to which end Sabellicus in his Ennead. 8. libro 8. thus writeth; The Peers and people of the Kingdome perceiving and honouring the prowesse of Pipin, ——— asking advice first of all of Zachary the Bishop of Rome, tooke away the name and title of King from Childerike, and bestowing it on Pipin, created him their King. Blondus in his Decads 1. lib. 10. I find (saith he) in Alcuinus, Paulus, and very many other writers—that the nobles and communalty of the French nation, waighing with wisedome the valour and vertue of Pipin, and contrariwise the childishnesse and unworthinesse of Childericke, consulted with Zachary then the Bishop of Rome, whether they had reason any longer to tolerate so foolish a king, and whether he held it reason that Pipin should bee any longer defrauded; and kept from the possession of the royall Crowne, which hee so well deserved: and the Pope answering, that he were to bee accounted the King, who knew better, & was better able to discharge the duty of a King, they forthwith by the generall consent of the whole nation, declared Pipin for their King, and tooke Childericke, & shaving his crown, they put him into a cloyster. Nauclerus also reporteth, almost to the very same purpose, generat. 26.

4 The power of deposing Kings and Princes, was first established by Innocentius the third, in the Councell of Laterane, about 1215 yeeres after Christ: and yet as I have shewed. it was often reproved and spoken against. To this end see Nauclerus in the chronicle of those times, generat. 42. an. 1242. who reporteth these words of Fredericke to the king of France, touching the sentence of deposition, given out against him: Although (saith hee) the Roman Bishop hath plenary power in matters spirituall, in as much as he can binde and loose any sinners at his pleasure, yet it is no where to bee read, that either by Gods or mans law, hee may translate kingdomes as it pleaseth him, or judge and dispose of Kings and Princes temporally, or deprive them of their kingdomes.

5 The Ancients would have temporall princes debarred from medling in matters ecclesiasticall, not simply and every way, but in regard first of absolute judging and determining of holy things: secondly, in regard of ministeriall actions, in respect wherof, even kings themselves are sheepe of the flocke. But not in regard of the ordering or governing of the Church and Ministery ecclesiasticall. In which respects they are above all persons and causes, even ecclesiasticall, within their owne Dominions.

6 The annointing or annoylings of Kings and the Chrisme or oyle with which they were annointed by Priests, were not in use in the Churches of Greece for 1200. yeeres and more, as appeares in the Decretals, lib. 1. decret. 15. tit. De sacra Unctione, cap. 1. In the Westerne Church, the first that used this ceremony, was the Emperor Iustine the second. In France, Pipin father of Charles the great, was the first that was annointed, and it was done by Boniface Archbishop of Mentz.

Cardinals.

1 THe office of Cardinals was common with Priests, Bishops, and Deacons, from the time of the Apostles downewards for many hundred yeeres: and there was not any office properly belonging to them, till long time after the Apostles: the first that makes mention of them, is Gregory the Great: for (as Bellarmine himselfe confesseth, de Cler. lib. 1, cap. 16.) in the first 800. yeeres, the Bishop of Rome for determining the great and waighticst affaires of the Church, used to call his Councell of the Bishops of Italy, and for these 6. or 700. yeeres past, they began (by little and little) to lay downe those Episcopall Councels, & reduced all businesse to the Consistory of Cardinals; and that the rather, because in the times of Pipin and Charles the Great, there was an accesse of much temporall principality unto that Sea. Further, Nicholas Clemangis, in his booke of the not paying of Annats; saith, that the Cardinalls have of old a double duty or charge: the first, to heare confessions, preach and baptize. But the second (saith he) they took upon themselves when the Roman Church got wealth, authority, and worldly prehemminence.

2 The Cardinalls that now are, are soully degenerated from their originall state & first condition. Gregory in his time (600. yeeres after Christ) speaketh of them as though they were parish Priests of Rome, or Curates of Churches. And in old time, all Bishops whatsoever tooke place of any Cardinals, if they were not Bishops. In the sixt Councell of Carthage, the Priests of Rome sate after the Bishops. And in elder ages a Cardinalship was but a steppe to a Bishoppricke. See Onuphrius in his booke of Cardinals, and Ioan. Diaconus, libro primo, capite septimo, in the life of Gregory.

Therefore the office or place of Cardinals, is not most ancient, nor begun in the times of the Apostles, and since then continued.

Monkes.

1 THe Fathers are very uncertaine of the originall of Monasticall life. Sometime they referre it to Elias and Elizeus. Elias is our prince (saith Hierome, Epistol. 13. ad Paulinum) and Elizeus ours, the sonnes of the Prophets that live in the Forrests and Widernesses, are our captaines. Sometime unto Iohn Baptist. Iola Baptist the prince of the Monkes (saith Chrysostome, Homil. prim. in Marc.) Otherwhile unto one Paula Thebane. Amathas and Macarius (saith Hierome, in prolog. ad vitam Pauli Heremitæ) the Disciples of Antony, doe affirme even now, that one Paul a Thebane, was the first authour thereof, which wee also allow of, not so much in name, as in opinion. Otherwhile unto the Apostles. The discipline of the cloysterers (saith Cassianus, Collation 18. capite quinto,) had the beginning from the time of the Apostles preaching. But Chrysostome, Hom. 25. in Hebræos; counteth this for a plaine untruth, saying, that in Pauls time, there was no signe nor steppe of any Monke. And Hierome saith, In vita Hilarionis, that there was no Monke in Syria, before Hilarion, who was the founder of that profession in that Province.

2 Monasticall profession began in the Church about the 260. yeeres after the Redemption, by Paul a Thebane, or rather about the 300. yeere by Anthony. For the first was the first patterne of Heremitical life, and the second was the first matter or teacher thereof. In those dayes (saith Frisingensis, lib. quarto, ca. quinto,) lived the two most famous Princes of the Kingdome of Christ, Paul and Antony, the two first Heremites. Nazianzen in Monodia, saith, that Basil first invented Monasteries, & was the head of the Monkes. And Basil himselfe, Epistol. 63. saith, that the Neo-Cæsarians objected the novelty of Monasticall life against him.

3 But as for Cowles, Copes, and other monkish habites, as also Quire-singing, vowed Fasts, choice of meates, and other superstitions now used, these were in those dayes far to seeke.

4 That which Eusebius, libro secunde, capi. decimo septimo, and after him Epiphanius, Hæres. 29. and Hierome, De vir. illustr. in Marco, doe say, namely, that Philo Iudæus, De vita contemplativa, speaketh of Christian Monkes which Saint Marke ordained in Egypt, is to bee thus taken, that they meant that those Monkes (whom they call Christians) were by birth Hebrewes, that as yet lived like Iewes, & followed the orders of the Essenі. For thus Hierome In Epistola ad Eustochium, speaketh of the Monkes of Egypt. Such doth Philo (Platoes imitator) such doth Ioseph (that Grecian Livy) in his second booke of the Iewes captivity, report the Essenі to have beene. Cassiodorus in Histor. Tripartit. lib. primo, capite undecimo, saith, that the converstion which Philo writeth the Egyptian Monkes to bee of, is not to be found in any professionelsewhere. And that which Eusebius, libro tertio, capite 17. saith in his history of the Monkes, the very same almost hee in another place, viz. De præparatione Evangel. libro octavo, capite quarto, ascribeth to the Essenі. Sozomene, libr. primo, cap. 12. saith, that they were Christians living like Iewes. But it is very likely, that Eusebius herein erred first, and misled others also that followed him. For Philo writeth professedly of the old Sect of the Essenі, not of any other newer one: and I can hardly beleeve, that he being a Iew, would write in the commendations of Christians.

5 Necessity was first parent unto Hermeticall life, for shunning of persecution. Some record (saith Sozomene, libro primo, capite 13.) that the stormes of persecution, by which Christian religion was diversly tossed, did compell men at the first to undertake this kind of life. And so it is said of Paul the Heremite, that he flying from the persecution of Decius, and desiring to keepe himselfe secret in the deserts, turned necessity into willingnesse, Otto Frising. lib. 4. cap. 2. This made Basil so earnest in the praise of this Monasticall life.

which

6 The ancient Monkes differ from our Popish Monkes in the very fundamentall points of their profession: for first, they lived solitary of necessity, to be the safer from persecution. 2, They were not constrained to give all they had unto the poore. Thirdly, they were not bound by any solemne and perpetuall vow to a certaine rule or to Monasticall life, but might alter their maner of living when they thought good. In that writing (which was brought from heaven by an Angell unto Pachomius) there were lawes (saith Nicephorus, lib. 9. cap. 14.) set downe, that every man should be permitted to eate, drinke, and worke as much as he could, or would: & in like manner to fast and not fast according to every mans liking. And that those that fedde the more strongly, should use greater labours, and those that were of but sparing diet, or more ready to exercises of piety, those should have lesse labour enjoyned them. And amongst these (saith Augustine de morib. eccl. cap. 33.) no man is urged with more severe impositions, than he can beare, none burdned with that he refuseth to doe, nor despised of the rest, for confessing his insufficiency in such performances. For they remember how greatly the Scriptures do commend charity, they remember that to the pure all is pure, and nothing that enters in at the mouth defileth the man, but that which commeth forth, So that their indrustry is not employed in rejecting sorts of meate, as uncleane, but in taming concupiscence, and preserving brotherly love. Others of these (saith Sozomene lib. 3. ca. 15.) living in the frequented cities, doe show themselves abjects in mens conceite, and nothing different from the vulgar. And Athanasius epist. ad Dracontium, saith, that hee knew many both Monkes and Bishops that were married, and had children. Fourthly, the Monkes at the first, were laymen, not of the clergy, much lesse Priests or Deacons. Hierom ad Heliodor. maketh the Monkes of the most strict orders, to bee laymen: The Clergy are one sort (saith he) and the Monkes another. The clergy are Pastors, but I am the sheepe. And the Councell of Chalcedon, capite 4. doth decree that no Monkes should put themselves any way in the affaires of the Church. Leo Epist. 62. forbiddeth the Monkes, and the layty (though men be proud of their learning) to bee admitted either to teach or preach. Vide. August. de moribus eccles. cap. 31. Gregory, libro 3. epist. 11. Fiftly, there was no merit set downe for Monasticall life, untill these later times.

7 There were no Nunnes, untill above 200. yeeres after Christ, but some virgins despising the worlds wickednesse, lived solitary, but without vow solemne, or perpetuall: knowne by their veyle, not when they went forth of their Monasteries, but in going out of their Fathers houses, or their owne. Many such there were before Hieromes time, that lived continent, out of Monasteries, privately, and freely: yea and some of them were noble women, living in their owne houses, attended upon by many maide servants. Hieron ad Demetriad. But in Rome, Marcella was one of the first of all the Nunnes: At that time viz. circa an. 400. saith Hier. in Epitaph. Marcellæ; none of all the noble women at Rome were privy unto the intent of the Monkes, nor durst they adventure, because of the strangenesse thereof to take so base and reproch full a name upon them, as the people then held it. About that time (saith Naucler. generat. 41. ad ann. 1215. speaking of Helene and Constantines times) the holy virgins were chosen by Helen. Constantines mother, who were nourished by the common stipend, for the celebration of the praises of God in purity of life, and frequency of prayer.

8 But as for the Monasticall life now professed, it is absolutely condemned by the Fathers. Aug. doth not like their idlenesse, but reprehendeth it in divers places of his workes de opere Monachorum, cap. 17. The solitary life (saith Ino Carnotensis, ep. 258.) is inferiour unto the common and ordinary life, because it is full of importunate cogitations, which rising like flies out of the mudde, doe buzze about the eyes of the heart, and interrupt the Sabbath of the minde —. Neither doe wee speake this out of bare conjecture, but have learned it of those that have tried it to bee true. In Basils Ascetica, Tom. 2. c. 7. It is taught that the solitary life doth contradict the law of charity: & he citeth that of the Preacher: Wo unto the man that is alone, for if hee fall he hath none to raise him againe. What dost thou command us to do (saith Chrysostome, Hom. 8. in Matth. 2.) to goe into the desert mountaines, & become Monkes? Alas, what is it that I greeve at, but only that you thinke that none doe live a pure and honest life, but onely those men?

9 The Monasteries of antiquity, generally were the schooles of learning, and communities, Colledges of teachers and learners. What? shall we call our children (saith Chrysostome Contra vituperat. vitæ Monast l. 3.) from the habitations of the desert? No, but let us suffer them to have the discipline of heaven soundly founded, and deepely rooted in them, and although they stay ten, yea twenty yeeres in the Monasteries, let us not be any whit molested thereat.

10 But concerning the vow of Regular obedience, it was not admitted, nor exacted

in

in the Church untill foure ages after Christ.

11 Voluntary poverty, that is, either without necessity, calling, or limit, made necessary by vow, joyned to the opinion of supererogation, and annexed unto Monasticall profession, was not received into the Church untill many ages after Christ. Let any man give an instance to the contrary. Origen seemes to require the forsaking of earthly possessions of his auditours, Eusseb. hist. eccles. lib. 6. cap. 3. and prescribeth the same unto all Priests. Let us hasten from the Priests of Pharao (saith he, hom. 16. in Gen.) who have earthly possessions, unto the Priests of the Lord who have no portion of livings upon earth. Now Chrysostome homil. 9. in Mat. doth prescribe it unto all men in generall. Shall not wee cast all things away (saith hee) and leave all things that wee may goe unto heaven with a cleare & free countenance? He that possesseth the Lord (saith Hierom, speaking of all the clergy, Ad Nepotian. & habetur c. 12. qu. 1. apud Gratianum, c. Clericus.) can possesse nothing but the Lord: but if he have any thing besides the Lord, he hath no part in the Lord. Eusebius lib. 3. cap. 31. writeth that some Apostolike persons did distribute their goods to the poore, but they did it to the end that they might bee more free to exercise their Euangelicall function throughout the world. Paul the first heremite, did undergoe this poverty, because he lost all his goods for confession of his faith. And Paulinus of Nola sould all his goods to nourish the poore in time of persecution, watre, and hunger.

Mary.

1 IT was the common opinion of the Fathers and writers untill Lumbards time, (which was in the yeere 1150) that the Virgin Mary was conceived in originall sin. Witnesse August. Ser. 2. in Pf. 35. & de Bapt. parv. lib. 2. cap. 24. & de Genes. ad liter. libr. 10. cap. 18. Ambrose Conc. 6. in Psal. 118. Chrysostome In Mat. hom. 45. Eusebius Emissenus de nat. Dō. ser. 2. Maximus Ser. de Assumpt. Bede sup. hom. Missus est. Remigius In Pf. 21. Anselme in Is. cur Deus homo. cap. 16. Rupertus in Cant. lib. 1. ad fin. and Lumbard himselfe, 3. sent. d. 3. Bernard Ad Lugdun. canonicos, epist. 174. saith, that Mary were equall unto Christ if that she were conceived without originall sinne. And that this was the more common opinion, Bonaventur in 3. Sent. dist. 3. q. 1. art. 2. Thom. 3. part. q. 27. art. 2. Antonine, par. 1. tit. 8. c. 2. and Lyra sup. Luc. 1. do confesse. Turrecremata De consecrat. dist. 4 capite Fit missime, quæst. 3. num. 11. avoucheth, that he had gathered an hundred authors for this opinion, in his booke of the truth of the conception of Mary. And very many are alleadged by Melchior Canus in his Common places, l. 7. cap. 1.

2 Againe, some of the Fathers say, that Mary was guilty of actuall sinne. For example, Chrysost. hom. 20. in Ioan. ca. 2. toucheth her with ambition and rashnesse. So doth Theophylact and Euthymius, ibid. Athanasius contra Arianos Serm. 4. and Irenæus contra hæreses li. 3. cap. 18. Origen In Luc. homil. 17. Tertullian l. de carne Christi, cap 7. and the Author of the booke of the questions of the Old and New Testament, quæst. 73. in August. accuse her of infidelity.

3 But afterwards there arose an opinion, that Mary was by a singular and extraordinary priviledge preserved from originall sinne. Scotus was the first Schooleman that ever held thus; yet hee speakes but in doubtfull manner of it, in 3. dist. 4. q. 1. saying, that it is probable, that this same excellency should be ascribed unto Mary, if it bee not against the authority of the Scripture and the Church. And of this opinion afterwards, was Francis Mayro in 3. distinct. 3. q. 1. art. 4. whom notwithstanding Bonaventure in 3 Sent. dist. 3. art. 1. q. 2. Thomas in par. 3. q. 27. artic. 2. Cajetane ibid. & in tract. de concept. virginis. Antony par. 1. tit. 8. c. 2. Ales in 3. part. q. 9. Hugo de S. Victore de Sacra. l. 2. part. 1. c. 5. Richar. in 3. dist. 3. Capreolus ibid. Albertus ibid. Ariminensis in 2. dist. 30. 31. &c. q. 2. art. 1. and Durandus in 3. dist. 3. q. 1. expressely cōtradict: to whom wee may adde very many Dominicans, & B. Medina in 3. part. Thomæ, q. 27. So that it is no such Catholike doctrine to hold, that Mary was conceived & borne without originall sin.

4 Now whereas Irenæus calleth her Eues Advocate, lib. quinto, capite decimo sexto, this is an hyperbolicall speech, and if you take it simply, altogether untrue. For it is in the conception and birth of Christ, that shee is Mediatrix unto Eue (for in bringing forth her redeemer) not in praying for her. And, in that respect there were some called her, their onely helpe, Lady, Queene of heaven, and hope, as Fulgentius, Cyrill, & Damascene doe.

5 In the yeere of our Lord 1096. Vrban the second decreed in a Councell at Claremount, that the houres of the Blessed Virgin should be said every day; and that her office should be solemnely sung upon the Sabbath. Rad. Tungrens. Propos. 20.

6 As for the Romane office of these times, dedicated unto her, it is most impious, for the honour of their Saviour is transferred unto her. But Bonaventure In tertia, dist. 3. quæst. 2. giveth other counsell, when he saith, that we must beware lest wee doe not diminish the Sonnes glory in amplifying of the mothers, and therein provoke the mother to wrath, who had rather have her Sonne honoured than her selfe, as the Creator ought to be before the creature. Vrbane the 2. did first appoint the office of the virgin Mary to bee sung. ann. 1077. Vide Durand. enchir. lib. 5. cap. 1. num. 9. & lib. 6. cap. 2.

Feast

Feast dayes.

1 Abbat Panormitane In ca. 3. de feriis. Angelus In verbo feria, § 43. & Sylvester verbo, Dominica, q. 1. verse 77. doe hold that the Lords day, or Sunday was instituted by the divine law, and doe affirme that this was the common opinion in their dayes, which is most true, for it hath beene observed from the Apostles time, 1. Cor. 16.

2 The first day of the Sabbath (which is our Sunday) is accounted for the Lords day, by Chrysostome, Ambrose, and Remigius, as also by Primasius In 1. Corinth. and so thinketh Augustine also, epistol. 119. cap. 13. The Lords day (quoth he) was declared by the resurrection of the Lord, and hath the festivall institution from him; And ep. 86. ad Casulan. Looke Isidor also, lib. 1. de officijs, c. 2. & Waldensis de sacramental. tit. 16. cap. 140.

3 Whereas Constantine decreed by a law, that the Lords day should be observed & kept (as Eusebius de vita Constant. lib. 4. cap. 18. & Sozomene l. 1. c. 8. affirmeth,) therein he gave but a generall law unto the whole Empire of the Romans, imitating the Apostles: and this was no beginning of the keeping of this day, but a renewing of an Apostolike tradition, for the more diligent and heedy observation thereof. For before him, Origen against Celsus, and Tertullian de coro. mili. & l. 2. ad uxo. make mention of this day, and Hierom. cont. Vigilan. Iustine quæst. 115. saith that it was observed from the Apostles ages. See also his second Apology. Basil de Spiri. Sanct. cap. 27. saith, that it is an Apostolike tradition.

4 Theophilus In edict. cum Theophan. is one of the first that mentioneth the feasts of the birth, and Epiphany of Christ; and Chrysostome another, orat. in Sanct. Philogon. And, Nazianzene orat. in S. Damin. putteth them both for one; and that use the Greeke Church did follow and practise, though the Westerne Church made two divers feasts. The feast of the Circumcision was unknown in the church for at least 1000. yeeres after Christ. The feast of the Trinity was knowne before indeede, but not allowed of publikly, but reproved. Alexander the third, c. Quoniam, de ferijs, Decretal. libr. 2. cap 9. saith, that in his time it was not used at Rome. Micrologus De eccles. observ. c. 60. and Pothon Priest De stat. dom. dei. l 3. doe both reprehend the keepers of this feast. Corpus Christi feast was of Vrbane the fourths creation, after the 1200. yeere of our Lord. And Petho Prumiensis findeth fault with the feast of the transfiguration, ann. 1160. ibid.

5 In the purest times of the Primitive Church there were no vigils in honour of the Saints. Basil In Psal. 114. is the first that mentioneth them: and now they are laid aside.

6 The feast daies of the Sabbat were first instituted for the worshipping of God observed diversly and freely without band, or punishment for breach thereof: for in the most ancient Fathers was never read of any feast but of Easter, nor were they counted holy in thēselves, but because of the mysteries of God minsstred at such times; not a feast can bee proved for 200. yeeres after Christ, Socrat. libr. 5. cap. 21. As for Easter, and other feasts, men did keepe them of custome at their owne pleasures.

7 The Martyrs suffring dayes, were called their Birth dayes and their yeerely Easter. Durand. Rational. libr. 7. capite primo, num. 38. Because then they were truly borne againe, and passed from this miserable life to immortality. We call the Martyrs passions their Birthdayes, saith Emissenus, Ser. de S. Genesio, and so doth Polydore Virgil. lib. 6. cap. 8.

8 Iustinian instituted the feast of Simeons meeting of Christ, upon the second of February, to the honour of Christ for the ceasing of the plague, about the yeere 540. Paulus Diacon. lib. 15. Niceph. lib. 17. c. 28. But afterward the Popes changed it into the feasts of Maries purification. Festum Vt nostrum hic.

9 The feast of the Annunciation, was first ordained for the honour of God, not of Mary: as it appeareth in a sermon said to bee Athanasius his, De Sancta Deipara. This feast (saith hee) is one, and the first of the Lords. And hereupon the ancient writers called it the Annunciation of the Lord, vide Durand. Ratio. lib. 7. cap. 2. num. 2.

10 Vrban the fixt instituted the feast of Maries visitation: Bellarmine. And the feast of her Nativity was not kept in the Church of old, Durand. lib. 7. cap. 28. num. 2. but had the originall by a night revelation. Gregory is the first that nameth it.

11 The feast of the Pentecost was no Christian feast in the Apostles time, for they followed the Iewes manner in keeping of theirs, Francolinus de horis canon. cap. 84.

12 The Fathers tooke not Pentecost for the last day of the Quinquagesima, but for the whole time betweene Easter and the fiftieth day. Take all the heathens solemnities (saith Tertul.) and place them in a ranke, they will not make up one Pentecost. And againe De coro. milit. We hold it a sinne to fast, or to pray kneeling upon the Lords day. And the like priviledge we have from Easter day through the whole Pentecost. Our Fathers taught us (saith Ambrose, In Luc. 17.) that all the 50. dayes of Pentecost are to be celebrated as Easter is, because the beginning of the eighth weeke maketh the Pentecost: the same saying he hath, Serm. 60. But now the fiftieth day is the feast onely.

13 The Feast of the assumption of Mary was never universally received, by place and person; Nay, in Charlemaines time it was doubted whether this feast should be kept.

We

We haue left the feast of the Assumption of S. Mary to bee inquired of, saith hee in his Constitutions, lib. 1. c. 158. And Ludovicus Pius his sonne, added it vnto the other feasts. Ann. 818, witnesse Aventine l. 4.

14 That Mary was assumed body and soule, it is not certaine in the Fathers. How, or at what time, or by was persons, her sacred body was take thence, or whether it was transtated (saith the Author Serm. de Assump. ad Paul. & Eustoch.) or whether it bee risen againe, it is unknown.——But although some seeme to haue erred (saith Epiphanius, Haref. 78.) let them search the Scriptures, and they shall neither find the death of Mary, nor whether she were buried or not buried. I cannot confirme this of her (saith the Author of the booke, de Assumpt. Mariæ, fathered vpon Augustine.) by any speciall testimony. And, If I haue spoken as I should, Christ and his Saints approue it: if otherwise, Christ & his Saints pardon it: Now all that hee affirmes it but this, that it is not ungodlinesse to say that her body saw no corruption, August. Serm. de sanctis 35. dares not define whether she were assumed with her body or without it, no more dare others: as Breviar. Quignonij pag. 231. Ado, In Martyrologio saith, that the Church doth celebrate her sleeping, but not her Assumption: And againe: What is become of her holy body, the Churches sobriety hath chosen rather to bee ignorant with godly zeale, than to teach any frivolous or Apocryphall doctrine thereupon. So saith Vsuard also, Durandus, Rational. libro 7. capi. 24. num. 1. affirmeth that her bodily assumption into heaven is uncertaine, and those that hold it, haue but their opinion from common report. Orat. Apud Damasc. de dorm. deipare.

15 The feast of the Exaltation of the crosse was not ordained before the yeere 630. Otto Frising. libro quinto, capite nono. But Nicephorus, libro octauo, capite 29, saith, that Helene instituted it. Manuel Commenus, Varior. Impp. miscell. confit. capite septimo, de ferijs, makes mention of such a feast, and so doth Balsamon, In Photij Nomocan, titul. septimo.

16 The feast of Maries Conception was not ordained at first, because of her immaculate conception. Petrus de natalibus, saith, it began to be instituted because of her sanctification in the wombe. But Bernard, epist. 174. reproueth this feast: and Pathon Priest saith, that it is an absurd thing to celebrate it, De festu. dom. dei. libro tertio, ad finem. Nor was it generally received untill the decree of Sixtus quartus, in the yeere 1470. as appeareth, ex Extrauag. Cum præexcelsa. De reliquijs.

17 The feast of her Purification was instituted in Iustinians time. Nicephor. lib. 17. c. 28. P. Diacon. lib. 20. rerum Rom.

The Church, Succession, Antiquity.

1 BY the Catholike Church, the Fathers meane the company of the elect, by faith grafted into Iesus Christ. So doth Augustine, In Psal. 92. & 62. de catech. rud. c. 20. & Psal. 36. Cyprian, lib. 1. ep. 3. & de unit. eccles. Hierome, In ep. ad Galat. cap. 4. & In Iob. c. 26. Epiphanius, Haref. 35. Chrysostome, hom. de Turture; & in Psal. 114. Ambrose, In Eph. cap. 1. and Bernard, sup. Cantic. Ser. 76. understand it. Now in acknowledging a visibility thereof, they speake of the outward estate, and parts thereof, or of the particular Church: and in saying that the wicked are of the Church, they speake of the externall state of the particular Church of their times.

2 They vsed also to appeale vnto the Church, but no farther than they thought shee did follow the Canonicall Scriptures: for thereby, & onely thereby, is the Church knowne, as Augustine saith, contra lit. Petil. l. 3. capite 11.

3 They praised the Roman Church (some of them) by a supposition, because it had kept the faith in greatest purity vnto the times wherein they wrote: not because the holy Ghost was bound or tyed to that seat. Note this supposition.

4 They hold that the Church is not alwayes visible upon the earth. The whole congregation of the Saints shall be hidden (saith Abbot Ioachim, in Revelat. pag. 2.) for so shall the elect of God (being wise,) be wise vnto themselves, so that they shall not presume to preach openly, because that the darkenesse shall prevaile: not that they shall leave to animate and exhort the faithfull in secret, but because they dare not adventure to preach publikely.

5 In the Fathers writings some particular Churches are called Catholike, yea universall, because of their Catholike faith. So that Catholike and universall Church is very often taken for the Orthodoxal Church: and hereby distinct from the conventicles of heretiks. Theodosius made a law, saith Sozomen, lib. 7. capite 4. that their Church onely should be called Catholike, that did worship the holy Trinity with equall honour, that all others should be called heretikes, noted with ignominy, and punished for their iniquity. And hence it is that the Orthodoxal Bishops were often called the Bishops of the Catholike or universall Church.

6 The Fathers doe acknowledge a succession, and appeale thereunto, because they lived before any schisme, when it stood without breach in the Romane Church, and because the truth of Apostolike doctrine was withall reserved

reserved. Eleutherius for his order and doctrine hath the twelfth place from the Apostles (saith Nicephorus, l. 4. c. 15.) Tertullian, De præscript. ca. 32. speaketh of some Churches which cannot produce their originall from the Apostles or their schollers, because they were begun long after;——And yet holding the same faith, are called Apostolike also, because of the unity of their doctrine. And this succession they urge against the schismatiks, onely, or those that mangled the Scriptures, and invented others, as Valentinus, &c. They have not Peters inheritance, (saith Ambrose, de pœnit. lib. 1. cap. 6) for they have not his faith. The succession of faith (saith Nazian. Orat. de laud. Athanasij.) is the true succession: for those that professe the same doctrine of faith, are partakers of the same Throne. August. Demnis. eccl. c. 18, 19. will haue the Church proved by the Scriptures, nor by succession of Bishops, nor authorities of Councels. And Bellarmine, De notis Ecclesiæ, granteth, that it is no necessary consequent that the Church should bee where there is succession.

7 The Fathers noted the succession of the sea of Rome, because the Bishops were then famous, and the place renowned, and more knowne to the Doctors by reason of the neereneste of it. Tertul. de præscript. aduers. heretic.

8 This succession of Roman Bishops drawne from Peter, is but uncertaine, and of humane institution. Hieronie De scrip. eccles. putteth Linus the second, and Clemens the fourth: Irenæus, lib. 3. c. 3. puts Linus the first. But Clement succeeded Peter, as in the epistle to Iames under his name he affirmeth. Now the great Councell of Chalceden, Action. 15, held that the Church of Rome had the Primacy with the Fathers, because that city ruled all the world. We decree (saith Iustinian, Novell. 131. cap. 2.) according to the ancient Canons, that the holy Bishop of Rome bee esteemed the Primate of all Priests. This is to bee well noted (saith Canus, Loc. comm. l. 6. ca. 8.) that the Bishops of Rome succeeding of Peter, is not revealed in Scriptures, but hath the authority from most grave histories.——But if this bee not sufficient to the learned, we have another,——that is, that though wee have no Scriptures for this succession of the Romane Bishops from Peter, yet it is a tradition of the Apostles unto the Church, from hand to hand as it were. And thus also saith Couarruvias Tom. 1. 2. par. Rectt. §. 9 p. 242. Col. 1. that it is plaine by Catholike doctrine, that Peters successors had their primacy given them by Christ. D. Stuto 3. dist. 24. 9. 2. saith that the said succession is annexed to this sea of Rome by an Ecclesiasticall law: and like to this hath Cajetane opusc. de Rom. Pontif. institut. cap. 13. And Bellarmine De Pontif. lib. 2. cap. 12. saith, that the Bishop of Rome, in that he is so, is Peters successor, this he hath from Peters deede, not from Christs first ordinance.

9 The Fathers vrge succession of other seas indifferently, as well as of the Romane Church. We can recken them (saith Irenæus lib. 3. cap. 3. & lib. 4. ca. 63.) that were made Bishops in the Churches by the Apostles. Looke Eusebius l. 4. c. 19. & August. Contra lit. Petil. lib. 2. cap. 51.

10 The Fathers urged antiquity against the heretikes, not respecting it for it selfe, as it consisteth of yeeres and ages, but in being joyned with the doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles: And beginning at least at the Apostles time. This good hath the antiquity, which was adorned with divine knowledge and doctrine, done vnto me, (saith Tertullian in his Apolog. in fine.) Custome without truth, is but an antiquity in errour, saith Cyprian epist. 74. ad Pomp.

Councells.

1 THe Fathers praysing of Councels, meane onely those that prove the doctrine of faith by the Scriptures.

2 The appeale from a Councell unto the Bishop of Rome, was not because hee was a Iudge over the Councels, but because of his credite and authority with the Emperour. And oftentimes this was out of Africa by reason of the small distance of place.

3 Emperours and Kings in the Primitive Church called Councells by their owne authority, not by the Popes, for above 800. yeeres together. The Emperour (saith Theodoret, lib. 1. cap. 7.) called that noble Councell of Nicea. The Emperour (saith Sozom. lib. 1. cap. 26.) called a Councell at Nicea in Bythinia, setting down a day for all the rulers of every Church in all places, to be there present. And he reckoneth Pope Iulius for one that was commanded thither. The King (saith Epiphan. Haref. 69) having a care of the Church, called a generall Councell. And againe: We bishops, assembled from divers Provinces, as Selvica in Isauria, at the command of our high and mighty Prince Constantine. The Emperour (saith Socrates lib. 5. cap. 8. speaking, of Theodosius) without delay called a Councell of the Bishops that imbraced his faith. By the Emperours command (saith Zonaras, Annal. tom. 3.) the second Councell was called because of Macedonius. Innocent Bishop of Rome (saith Sozom. l. 8. cap. 28)——sent fiue Bishops and two Priests unto Honorius and Arcadius Emperours, to intreate a Councel of them and the time and place thereof,——who notwithstanding obtained it not. Tell mee (saith Hierome in his Apology against Ruffin. lib. 2. ca. 5.) who were Consulls that yeere? What Emperour commanded this Councell to be called? We were unto his sacred Majesty (saith Chrysostome epist. ad Innocent. 1) and intreated him to call a Councell. I cannot find (saith Eneas Sylvius De actis Conc. Basil. lib. primo) neither in ancient history, nor in the Actes of the Apostles, that it was an use at any time for the Popes alone to call Councells.—And if wee so proceed through all times, wee shall finde nothing in the Primitive Church approving this authority of calling Councells, to belong onely to the Popes of Rome. Nor was the assent of that Bishop ought esteemed in Constantines time, and other Emperours after that. And therefore the Councell of Chalcedon saith thus of it selfe; The holy, great, and Generall Councell, which by the grace of God, and the decree of the most holy and Christian Emperours, Valentinian & Marian, was gathered at Chalcedon the Metropolitane city of Bythynia, &c. but maketh no mention of the Pope, though it had his assent also. Leo the 1. ep. 9. desireth of Theodosius to grant his entreaty and supplication, that there might bee a Councell of the Bishops called in Italy. Although we know (saith Frederick the Emperour in the Councell to the Bishops; Apud Radevicum de Gestis Frederic. 1. Imperatoris, l. 2. c. 64) that by the place and dignity of the Empire, the calling of Councells is in our power, but especially in such great dangers of the Church: for so it is recorded that Constantine, Theodosius, Justinian, and of latters times, Charlemaine, and Otto, all Emperours have done before us: yet do we leave the authority of deciding this great and weighty businesse, unto your power, and prudence. We reade (saith Cardinal Cusanus) that the generall Councels were often called by the Emperours, yea all of them (as wee se by the records) untill the eight, called at Constantinople in Basil the Emperours time: And againe; De concord. catholica, lib. 3. c. 2, & 25, All the eight Generall Councells, —were called by the Emperours, So that hee confesseth this power to be in the Emperours hand, and not in the Popes for above eight hundred yeeres after Christ. Now Turrecremata, Summa de eccles. li. 2. c. 23. maketh a double presidency in Councels, to wit, of honour or sitting, and of Authority; and that of Session and honour the Pope sometimes had vouchsafed him, but this other of authorizing, never untill later times, and namely about the yeere 1516. in the Laterane Councell under Leo the 10. cap. 11. condemned before, in the Councells of Constance, sess. 4. & 5. & Basil, sess 2. & 16 and by Gerson also in his treatise, whether it bee lawfull to appeale from the Pope in matters of faith or no.

unto

Benedictions, Hallowings.

1 THe Benedictions or Hallowings of water, ashes, salt, candles, oyle, and Palmes are never spoken of in the Fathers, but only of the water of Baptisme. Augustine. De tempore, ser. 37. saith that all the waters of Jordan were consecrated by Christ. Ambrose de sacram. lib. 2. ca. 5. And the faithfull were wont to take of the water of Baptisme home with them, & sprinckle it about their houses. Alcuin. de div. officijs, capite de Sabbato Paschi. Bellarmine plainely confesseth, that holy water is but a humane invention. De extrem. unctione lib. 1. ca. 6. Because (quoth he) in Baptisme men were cured of their bodily infirmities, as Augustine witnesseth epist. 23. & de Civit. Dei. l. 22. c. 8. therefore some began to use holy water, besides Baptisme, for curing diseases.

2 Sometimes there were miracles done by this sanctified water, as Theodoret Hist. l. 5. cap. 22. and Beda Hist. Anglor. lib. 1. ca. 17. doe relate. But that proveth not the ordinary use thereof in the Church, nor that it was therefore hallowed, that it might have power to worke supernaturall effects.

3 It is a prophane novelty to say that it is a medicine for veniall sinne, and in it selfe powerfull against divells. This Molanus Practic. Theologiæ, tract. 1. de pœnit. capite 17. prop. 24, 25, 26. perceived, when hee said that the sprinckling of holy water, and such other like actes have there reference unto the publike prayers, (then made,) for I dare not say as some doe, that holy water hath any effect against any thing, by vertue of the worke done.

4 They used to blesse men, with prayer, and the Ceremonies of chrisme and imposition of hands. What els is the laying on of hands (saith Augustine De Baptis. contra Donat. lib. 3. cap. 16. & habetur apud Gratian. Canf. 1. q. 1. cap. Manus.) but a praying over a man?

5 It was called holy bread, because it was given in signe of the divine blessing, which is to bee received by the body and blood of Christ, of them that were not as yet permitted to receive those mysteries, or received them but seldome. There is divers kindes of sanctification (saith Augustine. De Pecc. merit. & remiss lib. 2. cap. 26) for I thinke the Catechumeni have one kinde of sanctification by the signe of Christ and the payers made with putting of hands upon them; and that which they receive, though it be not the body of Christ, yet it is holy, and holyer than our ordinary meate. Hence it appeareth that this hollowed bread was then given to the Catechists to whom the Eucharist was denyed: but now adaies it is given unto all that doe not communicate. In the 3. Councell of Carthage it is recorded that they used to give salt in stead of the Eucharist, unto the Catechumenists.

6 It was called the blessing, or benediction, because it was given, as a token of commendation and unity, from one to another. The bread which we sent you (saith Paulinus, Apud Aug. epist. 31. & ipse Aug. ep. 34.) shal become a more fruitfull blessing, by the love of your goodnesse that receiveth it. And againe, in his epistle to Alipius, epist. 35. note that hee saith: You shall make this bread a benediction, by vouchsafing to receive it. For hence it seemes, that it was not sanctified before by the sender; And againe, also in his Epistle unto Romanianus, apud Augustine. epist. 36. & epist. 81. ad Augustine. hee saith, we pray you to sanctifie this bread by receiving it, which wee send unto your love, to signifie our unity and accord. And in like manner, they used to send money, apparell, and keyes to hang about their neckes, with their letters, for a blessing, Greg. l. 1. epist. 29. & 30. & l. 8. epist. 31.

7 The Benediction of this bread for health of soule and body, against all diseases, and snares of the enemy, began in the Councell of Nantes, cap. 9. and was never mentioned before Augustines times.

8 There were many hundreds of yeeres passed before that ever the Roman Church knew how to consecrate an Agnus Dei. Alcuine, ca. de Sabbato Pasch. and Amalarius de eccl. offic. lib. 1. cap. 17. are the first that mentioned it.

The Clergy, and Layty.

1 THe Fathers distinguish the Clergy from the Layty, because the one bare a publike charge in the Church, which specified them from the other which bare none. Againe, in respect of the punishment inflicted upon either: the Clergy had the greater imposed upon them: the Layty the lesser. So that it is an abuse of this distinction to say that the people are prophane, & that the Clergy should bee exempted from civill governance.

2 The exemption of the Clergy from politike judgement, in civill causes began to bee in common use about the yeere 536. for Justinian ordained that in causes meerely civill, the Bishops alone should heare and determine of the cases of Monkes and Nunnes, Const. Novell. 79. cap. 1. And that the Clergy should first bee examined before their Ordinaries: but if that the nature of the case; or some other difficulty arising, bee such, that the Bishop cannot possibly decide the businesse; then let it be lawfull for them to goe unto the civill Iudges. Const. Novel. 83. in præfat. & 123. cap. 21, I say in causes meerely civill: for in criminall causes, the civill Iudge is by him appointed to inquire and censure thereupon: and if hee finde the Clergy man worthy of punishment, then shall hee be by the Bishop despoyled of his Priestly dignity, and so become punishable by the law. Const. Novel. 83. cap. 1. & 123. cap. 21. Nor is it any wonder that the Clergy had not this exemption before; because that the Clergy besides that their function, are citizens and members of the politike body, and in that respect ought to bee in all things subject to the politike power. I adde: In common use, for before Justinians time in some peculiar Churches the exemption was practised before. Let no man presume (saith the Councell of Agatha, cap. 32. Et habetur apud Gratian. Canf. 11. quæst. 1. ca. 17.) to summon a Clergy man before a secular Iudge, without the licence of the Bishop: If any such bee summoned, let him not appeare or defend; or dare to propound a criminall cause unto a secular judgement. Now before Justinians time, the Bishops ordinary jurisdiction was but a power of inquiry and restraint for violating and corrupting the Ecclesiasticall discipline, Conc. Chalced. cap 9. Carthag. 3. cap. 9. Tolet. 3. c. 13. Matiscon. cap. 8.

3 About the 400. yeere after Christ, the Clergy of some Churches were free from paying tribute unto secular Princes, Euseb. libro 10. capite 7. Hieron. in Matth. 17. and in other some it was not so. The Churches livings doe pay their tribute, saith Ambrose, in orat. de tradend. Basilicis, against Auxentius. The Emperours Valentinian, Valens, & Gratian, doe exhort the Asian Bishops that were suspect of heresie, to returne unto them that were of sound judgement, whom they commend in this amongst other things, that they refused not to pay the taxe that was exacted of them, Theodori, hist. lib. quarto, cap. septimo. Neither is this meant onely of the Patrimoniall tributes for every inheritance, but of the personall also, for every head. If the Sonne of God paide his taxe (saith Ambrose, In 5. Luc. lib. 3. & citatur. ca. Magnum, caus. 11. quæst. 1.) who art thou that thinkest it should not bee paid? But some will say, that this arose out of custome, and not out of law: then let him know that there is no divine law, that exempteth the Clergy from paying dues unto secular Princes, if their necde so require. Chrysostome, Homil. 23. in Roman. will have that subjection exacted even of the Priests and Monkes, which Paul speaketh of, Romans 13. And paying of taxe is no little part thereof, as Covarruvias, in l. practic. quæst. ca. 31. observed very well. Thomas, In Roman. 13. saith, that it was the Princes gift to exempt the Clergy from these taxes, and therefore an humane law: and so saith Covarruvias in the place afore named; and John Medina, tract. de Restitutione, quæst. 15.

4 The right of assent and suffrage (in elections of the churchmen) was taken from the people about the yeere 870. Distinct. 63.

Additions.

1 THe moderne Papists hold these positions: first, lawfulnesse of equivocation in oathe, or to sweare equivocally that hee did not that which he did, though he had done it. 2. That to pray for their enemies in special, is no command, but a counsel. 3. That in a fast, it is lawfull to drinke often, and to take medicines. 4. That many atheisticall thoughts, and filthy imaginations are no sinnes. 5. That to take away any small thing whose losse brings no great dammage to the owner, is no mortall sinne. But these are strangers to the Fathers eares, yea untill of late, unto all Christians.

2 Not a Father of the first 400. yeeres taught nine quires of Angels: but contrariwise some doe overthrow this distinction. I thinke (saith Theodoret, in 1. ad Coloss.) that he calleth the Cherubim the thrones; (for the Prophet Ezechiel saw the throne of the deity placed upon them,) and by dominations, principalities, and powers, hee meanes those that governed the nations. Augustine calleth them all by the generall name of Angels, Enchir. cap. 58. Whether the Archangels bee called vertues (saith he)—or what the difference is betweene these 4. words, [Thrones, Dominations, Principalities, and powers, let them tell that can, if they prove what thay say; I confesse plainely, that I am altogether Ignorant. Hence may the antiquity of the bookes under Dionysius Areopagita his name, bee gathered, that teach nine orders of Angels so undoubtedly.

3 The Fathers hold generally, that the first precept of the tenne commandements, concerneth the having or choosing of God; the second is of idols; the tenth of concupiscence: so teacheth Philo Iudaus, De decalog. Iosephus Antiq. lib. 2. capite 6. & 8. Origen, in Exod. hom. 8. Athan. In Synops. Nazianzene, in vers. de Decal. Ambrose and Hier. in Ephes. cap. 6. Procopius and Rupertus, in Exod. cap. 20. with others, viz. Author operis imperfect. in Matth. homil. 49. Augustine is variable, one while affirming it, and another while denying it, vide Quæst. vet. & nov. Test. 4. 7. Quæst. super Exod. libro 2. capite 71. Epist. 119. capite undecimo.

4 The Fathers generally either deny, or suppresse in silence, that the soules of the dead can returne unto the living. Chrysostome De Lazaro, hom. ultim. Tertullian, l. de anima. Isidore, Etymolog. lib. 8. cap. 9 Theophilact, in Matth. 8. and others, viz. Author quæst. ad Antioch. quæst. 11. & 13. apud Athanas. do all deny this. Augustine seemes to be of another opinion, in his booke of the care for the dead. cap. 15, & 16.

The Consequent.

No Apostle, no holy Father, no sound Catholike, for 1200. yeeres after Christ, did ever hold or professe that doctrine of all the Principles and grounds of Religion, that is now taught by the Church of Rome, and authorized by the Councell of Trent.

SOLI DEO GLORIA.

A CHRISTIAN AND PLAINE TREATISE OF THE MANNER AND ORDER OF PREDESTINATION, AND OF the largenesse of Gods Grace.

FIRST VVRITTEN IN LATINE

BY THAT REVEREND AND FAITHFVLL SERVANT OF GOD, Mr. W. PERKINS, LATE Preacher of the Word in Cambridge.

AND

Carefully Translated into English by FRANCIS CACOT and THOMAS TVKE.

ROM. 8. VERSE 29, 30.

For those which he knew before, he also predestinate to be made like to the Image of his Sonne, that he might be the first borne among many brethren.

Moreover, whom he predestinate, them also he called, and whom he called, them also he justified, and whom he justified, them he also glorified.

LONDON,
Printed by IOHN LEGATT. 1631.

To the Right VVorshipfull

Sir Peter Bvce, Knight; And to the vertuous Lady his wife, Grace and Peace from God our Father, and from our Lord Iesus Christ.

IGHT Worshipfull, amongst the manifold points of Christian Religion, the truth of the Doctrine concerning Predestination, is worthy serious & sober study, for the sound understanding thereof. For first, it it something difficult and obscure. Secondly, because it is by some cagerly impugned, as a frivolous and forged invention of mans braine. Thirdly, divers opinions have passed from divers men diversly, about this one point; whereas notwithstanding there is but one truth, & one definite and constant sentence to be found in holy writ concerning it. Fourthly, this one doctrine doth give very good evidence, and an ample Demonstration of Gods infinite mercy, and exact justice. Fifly, it affordeth some taste of his profound and impenetrable counsell. Sixtly, it doth notably manifest his admirable wisedome and policy, and the incorruptible purity of his nature, who wisely disposeth all things, and useth even evills without injustice; and the least receipt or infusion of corruption; and all the manifestation of the glory of his Name, and of the splendour of his renowned properties. Seventhly, it confounded the common cavill of many desperate and infatuated Atheists, who would make Gods Predestination the pillar of their sensuall security, and secure sensuality. Lastly, it ministreth exceeding comfort unto those, who renouncing the kingdome of Sinne, doe live like Saints in the kingdome of Grace. First, because it is not possible for any such to sinne with full consent of heart. Secondly, because no personall merits are required of them. Thirdly, because the Spirit of God abideth in them, who is busie within the hive of their hearts as a Bee, and worketh them like waxe. Fourthly, because God hath eternally predestinated them to eternall joyes, and those also incomprehensible and ineffable. Fiftly, because God hath in abundance vouchsafed that to them being but an handfull, which he hath denyed to whole heapes besides. Sixtly, for that they being elected, can in no wise perish: For the counsell of the Lord shall stand for ever, Psal. 33.11. And he loveth them with an everlasting love, Ierem. 3.4. Though a Mother should forget her Child, yet he will not forget them, for he hath graven them upon the palme of his hand, Isa. 49.15.16. Therefore he will confirme them unto the end, 1. Cor. 1.8. And by his power keepe them unto salvation, 1. Pet. 1.5. He will love them constantly, though he visit their transgressions with rods, Ps. 89.32.33. He will never turne away from them, though he take them by the necke (as Iob speaketh) and beat them, though he cut their reines and breake them, and though he powreth their gall upon the ground, and runneth upon them like a Gyant. Ioseph did affect his brethren entirely, though hee spake roughly to them. He may also sometimes let them fall, as a loving Nurse may her child, but he will lift them up againe; therefore howsoever they may fall, yet they shall not fall away. Indeed they may leave their first love, as the Church of Ephesus did; but they shall never leave to love at all, if ever they loved truly. For (as Paul saith) Love doth never fall away, it may bee lessened, but it cannot be lost. In like manner, their faith may be covered, as the Sunne with a dusky cloud in a gloomy day; or as the trees are with snow sometimes in winter; but yet it continueth firmely fixed (though now and then eclipsed) in the sphere of the heart, and keepeth sap in the roote. For the righteous man is as a tree planted by the rivers of waters. Psal. 1.3. And is built by that great builder of Heaven and earth upon a rocke, Mat. 16.18. These comforts will this one doctrine afford, being throughly pondred and understood. And no doubt these and the like considerations moved that holy and learned man of blessed memory to publish this present treatise for the benefit of the Church, and the same have also incited us to turne it out of the tongue wherein he wrote it, into the English, for their profit who are ignorant in the other; and the rather, because it is contrived and penned very plainly, soundly, and succinctly, as the subject will permit. The which (Right Worshipfull) assuring our selves of your unfaigned love unto the truth, we doe present and dedicate unto you, in token of deserved gratitude, for undeserved kindnesse, not doubting of your courteous and kinde acceptance. And thus wee humbly take our leaves, recommending you, and all yours to the protection of Iehova. Rochester, this 19. of February 1606.

Ier. 49.20. Iob. 16.31.

Pisteim. Ecpisteim.

Rom. 2.4. 1 Cor. 13.8.

Your Worships in all duty.

Francis Cacott, and

Thomas Tvke.

MASTER PERKINS HIS Epistle to the Reader.

THE Doctrine of Predestination and Gods grace is to be founded upon the written Word of God, and not upon the judgements of men. For as Hilarie De Trinit. 5. saith well, God cannot be understood but by God. And againe, We must learne of God, that we are to understand of God, because he is the onely Author of our knowledge of him. It is also requisite that this doctrine agree with the grounds of common reason, and of that knowledge of God which may be obtained by the light of nature; and such are these which follow.

1 GOD is alwayes just, albeit men doe not understand how he is just.

2 GOD is not governed of, much lesse doth he depend upon second causes, but doth justly order them, even then when they worke unjustly.

3 GOD worketh wisely, to wit, propounding unto himselfe a certaine end: he is ignorant of nothing: he doth not will or decree that which he can not effect: he doth not idlely behold what shall be, or what may be done, but he disposeth all things unto his glory; and therefore he hath decreed to doe so.

4 GOD is not changed: and those things which are changed, are not changed without his unchangeable decree, all circumstances being certaine and sure.

5 The secret and unsearchable judgements of GOD are to be honoured & acknowledged. Augustine, It moveth me (thou saist) that he perisheth: and another is baptized: it moveth me, it moveth me as a man. If thou wilt heare the truth, it also moveth me, because I am a man. But if thou beest a man, I am also a man: let us both heare him that saith, O man! verily, if we be therefore moved, because we are men, the Apostle speakes to humane nature it selfe being weake and feeble, saying: O man, who art thou which pleadest against GOD! Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it: Why hast thou made me thus? If a beast could speake, and did say to God, why hast thou made him a man, and me a beast; might'st thou not justly be angry, and say, O beast who art thou? And thou art a man, but in comparison of God, thou art a beast. De verb. Apost. ser. 11. Rom. 9.20.

6 No good thing can be done, unlesse God doth absolutely will and worke it: and we doe that which is good, so farre forth as God doth worke in us more or lesse.

7 No evill can be avoyded, unlesse God doe hinder it; and we avoyd evill, so farre forth as God doth more or lesse hinder it.

8 The will of God is knowne, not only by the written word, or by revelation, but also by the event. For that which commeth to passe, doth therefore come to passe, because God hath willed that it should come to passe.

9 A man doth not that good thing which by grace he is able to doe, unlesse God make him doe it, in that he hath made him able to doe it if he will.

10 Not a part onely, but the whole government of the world, & the execution of justice, is to be ascribed to God as to the Author.

*I doe now exhibite unto thee a view and picture of this doctrine, composed of these principles, and doe publish the same, that I might to my power, helpe out * those that sticke in the difficulties of this doctrine of Predestination: and that I might cleare the truth, that is (as they call it) the Calvinists doctrine, of those reproches which are cast upon it: and that I might mitigate and appease the displeasure of some of our Brethren, which have bin more offended at it than was fit. For I doe willingly acknowledge and teach universall redemption and grace, so farre as it is revealed by the word. My minde is to pursue after peace, which is departing from us, and I would have all men so entertaine my fact.* * Theologia fluxionis.

If I alleadge the testimonies of the Ancients every where, not but that even one evidents and perspicuous (presence of Scripture concerning any point of Doctrine and Faith, is of more value and force, than all the testimonies of the Doctors and Schoolemen; but because I held it necessary, that there should be had an exact note of consent and concord in that doctrine, which is expounded in this booke, and is propagated to all posterity. And I hope I shall sufficiently perswade as indifferent Iudges, that these things have not so lately hatched as bookes, which we deliver in our congregations and Schooles, but that we have also derived and fetched them from the Fathers themselves.

THE ORDER OF PREDESTINATION IN the minde of God, as neere as the Author could collect it out of the Scriptures.

PRedestination is the counsell of God touching the last end or estate of man out of this temporall or naturall life. For as touching naturall life wee are all alike: and this kind of life is in the counsell of God onely a preparation and step unto the spirituall and heavenly life. The supreme end of Predestination is the manifestation of Gods glory, partly in his mercy, and partly in his justice. And this hath beene the doctrine of the Fathers. Saint Augustine saith, that one of the ese two societies of men, which we mystically call two cities, is that which is predestinated to reigne eternally with God: and the other to suffer eternall punishment with the divell. Fulgentius saith also, That in Gods predestination there is prepared either a mercifull remission of sinnes, or a just punishing. And Gregory saith, That God being a just Creator unto all after an admirable manner, hath foreelected some, and forsaken others in their corruptions. And the more learned Schoole men use to say, that God for the more full manifestation of his perfection, hath predestinated some in manifesting his goodnesse by the rule of mercy; and damned others, in representing his perfection by the rule of justice.

1 Cor. 15. 46.

De civit. Dei, l. 15. c. 1.

Ad Marcellinum. lib. 1.

Comment. in 1. Reg. cap. 4.

The common meanes of accomplishing this counsell is twofold; the creation, and the permission of the fall. Creation, is that by which God made the whole man of nothing according to his owne image; but yet changeable and endued with a naturall life. The permission of the fall is, whereby God did justly suffer Adam and his posterity to fall away, in that he did not hinder them when he was able, as being indeed bound to none to hinder. And God is said not to hinder evill, when he ceaseth after a sort from his operation, not illuminating the minde, and not inclining the will to obey his voyce. This permission of the evil of fault is by Gods foreknowledge and will, but yet onely for the greater good of all: which would be hindred if God did not suffer evill. For if there were not sin, there should bee no place for the patience of Martyrs, and for the sacrifice of Christ offered upon the crosse, which doth infinitely exceede all the sinne of the whole world. Augustine saith well: God hath judged it better to draw good with evils, than to permit no evil to bee. In like manner Gregory saith: In his severe judgement hee suffers evil to be done, but withall hee doth in mercy save, what good things he may bring to passe by those evils, which he doth ordaine by his judgement. For what greater sinne is there than that by which wee doe all dye? and what greater goodnesse then that by which wee are delivered from death? And doubtlesse but that Adam sinned, our Redeemer should not have taken our flesh upon him. —— Whiles God was to be borne man, the Almighty did foresee that hee would make of that evill, for which they were to dye, a good which should bee greater than that evill. The greatnesse of which good what faithfull men is there who doth not see how wonderfully it doth excell? Surely great are the evils which we suffer by the desert of the first fault: but what faithfull man would not rather endure worse than to bee without so great a redeemer? And in this respect elsewhere he calleth the fall of Adam, felicem culpam, a happy fault. That which I have said of the permission of the fall, I doe also say of the fall permitted; saving that the permission is a meanes of the decree by it selfe, but the fal is a meanes (of accomplishing the decree) onely by the ordination of God, who drawes good out of euill.

Expos. 2. Reg. cap. 4.

In Benedict. Carei Past.

This fall permitted commeth not to passe but God willing it, neither doth it come to passe contrarywise or otherwise than God permitteth, neither can it any further bee then hee doth permit. Yet the will of God is not the cause of the fall, but the will of man left unto it selfe by God, and moved by the Suggestion of Sathan; which will appeare by this similitude: I build a house subject to change and falling, which notwithstanding would continue many yeeres, if it might bee free from the annoyance of windes: yea, if I would but underpropp it, when the stormes commeth, it would continue stable. But as soone as the windes begin to rage, I doe not underpropp it, and it is my will not to underpropp it, because it is my pleasure so to doe: thereupon the house being weather-beaten falleth downe. I see the fall, and in part I will it, because now when I could very easily have hindred the fall, yet I would not; And although thus farre I doe will the fall, inasmuch as it is my will not to hinder it: yet the cause of the fall is not to bee imputed unto mee, that did not underpropp it, but to the windes which cast it downe. So God leaving Adam unto himselfe, that he might be proved by tentation, and that it might appeare what the creature is able to doe, the Creator ceasing for a time to helpe and guide, is not to be accounted the cause of this fall. For he did not incline the mind to sinne, he did not infuse any corruption, neither did hee withdraw any gift, which he did bestow in the creation: onely it pleased him to deny or not to conferre confirming grace. The proper cause of the fall was the divell attempting our overthrow, and Adams will, which when it began to be proved by tentations, did not desire Gods assistance, but voluntarily bent it selfe to fall away.

Predestination hath two parts, the decree of election, and the decree of reprobation. So Isidore saith: There is a double predestination, either of the elect unto rest, or of the reprobate unto death: and both are done by God, that he might make the elect alwayes to follow after heavenly and spirituall things, and that he might suffer the reprobate, by forsaking them, to bee delighted alwayes with earthly and outward things. And Angelome saith: Christ by his secret dispensation hath out of an unfaithfull people predestinated some to everlasting liberty, quickening them of his free mercy; and damned other in everlasting death, in leaving them by his hidden judgement in their wickednesse.

De summo bo. l. 2. c. 6.

In l. 2. Reg. c. 8

Ephe. 1. 5.

The decree of election is that whereby God hath ordained certaine men to his glorious grace, in the obtaining of their salvation and heavenly life by Christ.

In the decree of election according to Gods determination, there is (as we conceive) a double act. The former concernes the end, the latter concernes the meanes tending to the end. This the holy Ghost seemeth to me to have taught very evidently, Rom. 9. 11. That the purpose which is according to election might remaine. Where we see that Paul distinguisheth Gods eternall purpose, and election, and placeth in his decree a certaine election in the first place before the purpose of damning or saving. And in Rom. 8. 29. 30. Those which hee knew before, he also predestinated to be made like to the image of his sonne. —— Whom he predestinated, them also hee called. In which words Paul distinguisheth betweene the decree, and the execution thereof, which he maketh to be in these three, Vocation, Justification, and Glorification. Moreover hee distinguisheth the decree into two acts; foreknowledge, whereby he doth acknowledge some men for his owne before the rest, and predestination, whereby he hath determined from eternity to make them like unto Christ. In the manner of our beleefe, Paul pronounceth, saith he, that the faithfull are elected according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, unto the sanctification of the Spirit. If any man shall say, that by foreknowledge in these places we must understand (as many would) the foreknowledge or foreseeing of future faith, he is manifestly deceived. For whom God foreknew, them he did predestinate that they should bee like to Christ, that is, that they should be made just, and the sonnes of God: for Paul addeth, Rom. 8. 29. That he might be the first borne among many brethren. But those which are predestinated to be just, and to be the sonnes of God, are also predestinated to beleeve, because Adoption and Righteousnesse are received by faith. Now wee cannot rightly say, that God doth first foreknowe that men will beleeve, and afterwards predestinate them to beleeve; because that God hath therefore foreknowne that those shall beleeve, whom hee did foreknow would beleeve, because hee did decree that they should beleeve. So Iustin Martyr calleth those elect, who were foreknown that they should beleeve. And Lumbard, whom he hath foreknowne, them he hath predestinated, that is, by grace conferred he hath prepared that they should beleeve the word preached. Moreover, the word (know) when it is given unto God speaking of the creature; doth very often signifie to imbrace or approve, Psal. 1. 6. The Lord knoweth the way of the righteous, but the way of the wicked shall perish. Mat. 7. 23. Depart from me ye workers of iniquity. I never knew you. Furthermore, the prescience and purpose of God are by the holy Ghost put for one and the same thing. 2. Tim 2. 19. The foundation of God remaineth sure, The Lord knoweth who are his. Rom. 11. 2. Those whom God foreknew are said to be elected according to the election of grace, vers. 5. And therefore the foreknowledge mentioned by Paul doth not signifie the foreknowledge of faith, or of any other vertue in those which are to bee elected. It is also the judgement of Augustine, that predestination is sometimes understood by prescience, even in the forsaid place: Hath God cast away his people which he knew before? And he saith that, Those that are sonnes in Gods foreknowledge, whose names are written in their fathers register, so as they shal never bee raised out. Cyrill saith also that Christ knoweth his sheepe, electing and foreseeing them unto everlasting life. As the Apostle saith, Rom. 11. 12. God hath not cast away his people which he knew before. For as the Lord is said not to know those whom he doth reject: so when he answered the foolish virgins saying, Mat. 25. 12. Verily I say unto, I know you not: so hee is rightly said to know those, whom hee doth predestinate and appoint unto salvation. And Thomas expounded that place in the 8. to the Romanes after this sort: Whom he foreknew in his knowledge of approbation, those hee hath also predestinated, that hee will also have an effectuall will of conferring grace to the children in the knowledge of approbation.

Those acts are usually called the decree and the execution of the decree.

Cont. Tryph.

Commentar. in cap. 8. ad Rom.

Cognovisse, scio.

De persev. Sanct. l. 8. c. 18 Rom. 11. 1, 2.

De corrept. & grat. c. 9.

Expos in Iob. 7. 6.

Id est Hugo de sanct. Vict. in annot. in Rom. & Ioachim. in Rom. part. 2.

In the decree of election the first act is a purpose, or rather a part and beginning of the divine purpose, whereby God doth take certaine men which are to be created, unto his everlasting everlasting love and favour, passing by the rest, and by taking maketh them vessels of mercy and honour: and this act is of the sole will of GOD, without any respect either of good or evill in the creature. And GOD doth wrong none, although he chuse not all; because he is tied to none; and because he hath absolute soveraignty and authority over all creatures. We that are but men give leave unto men, especially unto our friends, to doe at their pleasure in many things as they themselves list, and to use their owne discretions. The rich man is kinde to which poore person he pleaseth; and of beggers hee doth adopt one, and will not adopt another; and that without offering any injury. Now that liberty, which wee yeeld unto man, must much more be granted unto GOD.

* 1 Pet. 2. 9. People which God challengeth unto himselfe, hath his mercy.

The second act is the purpose of saving or conferring glory, whereby hee doth ordaine or set apart the very same men, which were to fall in Adam, unto salvation and celestiall glory. This act is in no wise to be severed from the former, but to bee distinguished in the minde (for orders sake, and for the better unfolding of it) for as by the former men were ordained unto grace, so by this latter the meanes are subordained whereby grace may bee conferred and manifest: and therefore this latter maketh way for the execution and accomplishing of the former. Moreover, this act hath no inward impulsive cause over and beside the good pleasure of GOD: and it is with regard to Christ the Mediator, in whom all are elected to grace and salvation; and to dreame of any election out of him, is against all sense: because he is the foundation of election to be executed, in regard of the beginning, the meanes, and the end. Lastly, this act is not of men to be created as was the former, but of men falne away. Therefore, in this act GOD respecteth the corrupted masse of mankind.

Furthermore, in this second act there are five degrees, the ordaining of a Mediator, the promising of him being ordained, the exhibiting of him being promised, the applying of him being exhibited, or to be exhibited, and the accomplishment of the application. It is not unlike which Bernard saith, The kingdome of God is granted, promised, manifested, received. It is granted, in predestination, promised in vocation, manifested in justification, exhibited or received in glorification.

The ordaining of a Mediator is that, whereby the second person being the Sonne of GOD, is appointed from all eternity to bee a Mediator betweene GOD himselfe and men. And hence it is, that Peter saith, that Christ was foreknowen before the foundation of the world. And well saith Augustine, that Christ was predestinated to be our head. For, howsoever as hee is (verbum) the substantiall word of the Father, or the Sonne, he doth predestinate with the Father, and the holy Ghost; yet as hee is the Mediator, hee is predestinated himselfe.

The promising is that, whereby Christ being from eternity ordained for the salvation and spirituall life of men, is revealed and offered unto them, together with grace to be obtained by him: this promise is universall in respect of all and every one that doe beleeve: Iob.3.16. God so loved the world, that he hath given his onely begotten Sonne, that every one that beleeveth in him should not perish. Iob.6.47. He that beleeveth in me hath life everlasting. Mat.11.28. Come unto me all yee that are weary and laden, and I will ease you. Mark.16.16. He that shall beleeve, and be baptized, shall be saved: but he that will not beleeve, shall be damned. Act.10.43. That through his name all that beleeve in him, shall receive remission of sinnes. Act.13.39. By him every one that beleeveth, is justified. Rom.1.16. The Gospell is the power of God to salvation to every one that beleeveth. Rom.10.4. Christ is the end of the law for righteousnes unto every one that beleeveth. Gal.3.22. The Scripture hath concluded all under sinne, that the promise by the faith of Iesus Christ should be given to them that beleeve.

With the promise there is joyned an exhortation, or commandement to beleeve: which is more generall than the promise; because the promise is made onely to beleevers; but the commandement is given to beleevers and unbeleevers also. For the elect are mingled with the wicked in the same assemblies: and therefore the Ministers of the Gospell ought indifferently to exhort all and every one to repent, considering that they are altogether ignorant, who and how many be elected, and bee to be converted: Moreover, GOD by exhortations to repentance, meaneth to leave those without excuse, whom he doth see will never repent. So Abbot Ioachim saith: It behooveth them to preach for the elects sake, and to declare unto men the words of life, that their lights may shine before men, and that they may fasten the hookes of the elect by annointing them with the oyle of spirituall doctrine: but for the reprobate, ligare aquam coelo, to tye the water in the clowdes. And againe, Lest the reprobate should have excuse, and for the elect which are among them, the messenger himselfe shall be sent, who doth not onely preach this in secret as was afore saye; but openly also maketh loud voyce, which may be heard farre off, and of whomsoever Some are wont to say, that Gods commandement by this meanes doth overthwart his decree: because he commaundeth that, which he willeth not to follow. But I answer, first, that GOD in his commandements and promises doth not utter whatsoever he hath determined to bestow upon men, but only doth set forth a prepared heaven, and the meanes it expedient for the salvation of mankinde, and the governing of all. But his commandements, therefore is the will which he likeds & what he willeth that we should do to him not not what he will doe to us or in us. And God who willeth not all things alike in all, doth will conversion in some onely in respect of approbation, exhortation, and meanes; in others he willeth it also as touching the decree of working it. Here is no disagreement in the wils, but sundry degrees of willing in regard of us, according to which God is said both to will and to nill.

Secondly I answer, that the revealed will is never contrary to the will of his good pleasure, or to the decree of God, (with the which it doth alwayes agree, both for the beginning, as also in the end and scope) but that it is notwithstanding often divers, and that in shew it seemeth sometimes contrary, if wee consider the manner wherein it is propounded. God commanded Isaiah to declare unto Ezechiah his death; and hee did also denounce destruction unto the Ninivites within forty dayes: and yet he had decreed to put neither of them both in execution. The humane will of Christ did with an holy dissention in some sort will deliverance from the agony of death, which notwithstanding the divine willed not. Abraham prayed without doubt by divine inspiration, and therfore with faith, that the Sodomites might be spared, and yet hee knew that in Gods decree they were appointed to destruction. Neither must this seeme strange; for one good thing as it is and remaineth good, may bee different from another thing that is good. Thirdly, thou bidst thy debter pay his debt, though in the meane time thou doest not make him able: why may not God therefore for iust causes command that, which himselfe will not doe?

The exhibiting of the Mediator is that whereby the Sonne of God being borne man in the fulnesse of time, doth pay the price of redemption to God for the sinnes of men. The vertue and efficacy of this price being paid, in respect of merit and operation is infinite; but yet it must be distinguished, for it is either potentiall or actuall. The potentiall efficacy is, whereby the price is in it selfe sufficient to redeeme every one without exception from his sins, albeit there were a thousand worlds of men. But if we consider that actuall efficacy, the price is payd in the counsell of God, and as touching the event, onely for those which are elected and predestinated. For the Sonne doth not sacrifice for those, for whom he doth not pray: because to make intercession and to sacrifice are conjoyned: but hee prayeth onely for the elect and for beleevers, Iob.17.9. and by praying he offereth himselfe to his Father, vers.19. For (as Illyricus hath well observed) this whole prayer in the 17. chapter is indeed (as he speaketh) an oblatory and expiatory prayer, or (as the Papists call that blasphemous forme) a Canon or rule of sacrifice, by which Christ hath offered himselfe a sacrifice to the Father for the sinnes of the world. Therefore the price is appointed and limited to the elect alone by the Fathers decree, and the Sonnes intercession and oblation. Secondly, Christ bare their person, and stood in their roome upon the crosse, for whom hee is a Mediator: and consequently, whatsoever Christ did as a Redeemer, the same did all those in him, and with him which are redeemed: Christ dying, rising againe, ascending & sitting at the right hand of the Father, they also dye with him, rise againe, ascend, and sit at the right hand of God. Now that all these things can be truly said of the elect only, and of such as beleeve, I prove it thus. To say that any one of the wicked, which are to perish for ever, is raised up in Christ rising againe, is flat against the truth: because the raising up of Christ is (that I may so speake) his actuall absolution from their sins, for whom he dyed; for even as the Father by delivering Christ to death, did in very deede condemne their sinnes imputed unto Christ, for whom he dyed; so by raising him up from death, even ipso facto hee did absolve Christ from their sins, and did withall absolve them in Christ; but being absolved from their sinnes, they shall not perish, but be saved. Therefore that wicked man which perisheth for his sin, cannot be said to have risen againe with Christ; and therefore Christ did not beare his person upon the crosse. Thirdly, the expiatory sacrifice sanctifieth those, for whom it is a sacrifice, as the holy Ghost plainly and absolutely avoucheth, Hebr.9.13.14. The sacrifice and sanctification appertaine to the same persons: and Christ is their perfect Saviour, whom he saveth, not onely by meriting their salvation, but also by working it effectually. But Christ doth sanctifie onely the elect and such as beleeve, therefore he was a sacrifice onely for them. And this was the judgement of the ancient Church in this point, Augustine saith, He which spared not his owne Sonne, but gave him for us all, how hath he not also with him given us all good things? but for whom? for us which are foreknowne, predestinated, justified, and glorified. Againe, Those whom hee pleased to make his brethren, he hath released and made fellow heires. Cyrill saith, If God who is most worthy, was in the flesh, he was of right sufficient to redeeme the whole world. Againe, The Lord Iesus separating his own from those which were not his, saith, I pray onely for those which keepe my word, and carry my yoke. For he doth make them alone, and that iustly, partakers of the benefit of his mediation, whose Mediator and high Priest he is. Gregory saith, The Author of life gave himselfe to death for the life of the elect. Againe, The Lord will redeeme the soules of his servants, to wit, with his precious blood, because hee which beleeveth rightly in him, is redeemed from the due thraldome of his sinnes. Sedulius: All things are restored which are in the earth, seeing that the men themselves, who are predestinated unto eternall life, are renewed from the corruption of the old man,

De verbis libri Sapientiæ.

1 Pet.1.20. Gr. προεγνωσμένου.

Ioh.3.16.

Isa.38. Ion.3.4.

Mat.26.39.

Gen.18.

Ad Rom.

In Rt Gal.3.1,2.

Part.4.1.7.

In 1 Ioan. tract.2.45.

Tract.2.

De vocat. gent. Regin.

In 1 Ioan.1.1. cap.4.

2 Hom. in Ez. lib.1.

In Psal.33.

In Eph.c.1.

man. Bede: The flesh of the Lord is furnished with spirituall vertues, that it might be a sweet savour sufficient for the salvation of the whole world. Againe, Our Lord and redeemer, to the elect — whom he knew to be placed in his flesh: yea and to us also, whom he foresaw should believe in the last times, he hath procured the remedy of salvation by his death and resurrection. Ioachim the Abbat: The word All, which for the most part is universall, doth not always signifie so much as it seemeth, as in that place, When I shall be lift up I will draw all things to my selfe. And by him he was pleased that all things should be reconciled in him. It seemeth that in these places Elect Things only are understood. Angelomus: What other nation is there in the earth besides the elect people, for which God the Sonne of God vouchsafed to come into this world, as it were into Egypt? that taking upon him the forme of a servant, he might with the merchandize of his blood redeeme unto himselfe an acceptable people zealous of good workes. Rupertus: In that heure he washed those onely from sin, whom his death findeth faithfull, whether dead or living. Againe, The passion of Christ is the judgement of the world, that is, salvation severing the whole number of the elect, which were from the beginning of the world to the houre of the same passion, from the reprobate. And the casting out of the Prince of this world, is the reconciliation of the nations of the elect. Againe, I will draw all things to my selfe: what all things? namely, All Elect Things, as all the members follow their head. Haimo: Christ hath taken away in the Elect not onely originall, but all actuall sinnes also, and hath ever and besides given them eternall life. Radulphus; The blood of the high Priest Christ, was the purgation of all believers. Innocentius: Christs blood was shed effectually for those onely who are predestinated, but for all men in regard of sufficiency: for the shedding of the blood of that just one for the unjust was so rich in price, that if every one had believed in the redeemer, none at al had bin held captive of the divell. Arnoldus Carnotensis: He redeemeth none but those whom he calleth and washeth by grace; neither doth the Spirit sanctifie any but those, who are cleansed and dead to sinne. Redemption, washing away, and sanctification are combined together.

Hom. in fab. post. reminisc.

Hom. in Vigil. Pasc.

In resu. par. 1.

Col. 1. 19.

In 2. Reg. c. 7.

In Exod. l. 2. cap. 6.

In Ioan. cap. 12.

In cap 3. ad Rom.

In Levit. l. 17. cap. 2. & de Mirif. Missæ, cap. 4.

Bona Vall. exall. 7. de Verbo Domini.

The application is, when as Christ is given unto us of God the Father by the Spirit, in the lawfull use of the Word and Sacraments; and is received of us by the instrument of a true faith. And Christ being given, is made unto us of God wisedome, righteousnesse, sanctification and redemption.

1 Cor. 1. 30.

The accomplishment of the application is Glorification, whereby God shall be all in all by Christ in all the elect.

By this which hath beene said, it is apparent, that the decree of election is the cause and foundation of all saving gifts and workes in men. From hence is true faith. Acts 13. 48. As many as were ordained unto eternall life, believed. And calling; Rom. 8. whom he predestinated, them he called. And, Who are called of his purpose: Hence Adoption: Eph. 1. predestinated to Adoption. And sanctification: Eph. 1. He hath chosen us that we should be holy and blamelesse. Hence good workes; Eph. 2. Which hee hath prepared, that wee should walke in them. And perseverance: Ioh. 6. All that the Father giveth me, shall come unto me, and him that commeth to me I cast not away. Againe, And this is the Fathers will, that of all which he hath given me, I should lose nothing. 2. Tim. 2. 19. The foundation of God remaineth sure, and hath this seale, the Lord knoweth who are his. Excellent is that saying of Augustine: He did chuse no man worthy, but by chusing he made him worthy. Againe, It is the grace of God, whereby he doth elect: not because any worthines is in me, but because it doth vouchsafe to make me worthy. Againe, And did not they also afterwards chuse him, and preferre him before all the good things of this life: but they did chuse him because they were chosen; they were not chosen, because they chused him. And thus much of the decree of election.

Ioh. 6. 37. 44.

Cent. Iul. Pelag. lib. 3. lib. 3. cap. 3.

In Psal. 31.

The decree of reprobation is a worke of Gods providence, whereby he hath decreed to passe by certaine men, in regard of supernaturall grace, for the manifestation of his justice and wrath in their due destruction: or, it is his will, whereby he suffereth some men to fall into sin, and inflicteth the punishment of condemnation for sinne.

It hath in like manner two acts. The first is the purpose to forsake some men, and to make knowne his justice in them. This act hath a finall cause, but no impulsiue cause out of God. For it ariseth of Gods meere good pleasure, no respect had of good or evill in the creature. For the will of God is the cause of causes: therefore we must make our stand in it, and out of or beyond it no reason must be sought for: yea indeed there is nothing beyond it. Moreover, every man (as Paul averreth) is unto God, as a lumpe of clay in the potters hand: and therefore God according to his supreme authority doth make vessels of wrath, he doth not find them made. But he should not make them, but find them made, if we say that God willed in his eternal counsell, to passe by men only as they are sinners, and not as they are men for causes most just, though unknowne to us. Thirdly, if God did reject men, because he foresaw that they would reject him, reprobation should not depend upon God, but upon men themselves. And this is all one, as if a man should say, that God foresaw that some would chuse him, and others refuse him. And the contempt of the Gospell doth not befall infants, which dye out of the covenant of the Gospell. Fourthly, Paul, who was a most skillfull defender of Gods justice, doth exclude all workes in the first place, out of this wonderfull election of one from another, made in the counsell of God: Not by workes, saith he, and therefore excludeth all respect of sinne; then afterwards being ravished with admiration, he quieteth himselfe

Rom. 9. 21.

Rom. 9. 11.

himself in the alone will of God, Who hath resisted his will? But, O man, who art thou which pleadest against God? Againe, O the deepenesse of the riches, both of the wisedome and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his iudgements, and his wayes past finding out? To conclude, if it be demanded, why God created this world and no more, we must have recourse to the meere will of God; and why must we not doe so, if it be demanded why God electeth this man, and forsaketh that man or another? Augustine: De vocatione gentium: A part of mankinde is redeemed, a part perisheth. But who can tell, why God doth not pitty them, and pittieth those? the reason of the distinction or separation is selfe is not unknowne.

Rom. 9. 19. 20

Rom. 11. 33.

Mat. 20. 15.

Lib. 1. ad Simpl. q. 2.

The second act is the ordaining of them to punishment or due destruction. This ordination in respect of the diverse consideration thereof, may be distinguished: and so it is either simple or comparative. The simple ordination is that, whereby this man, suppose Peter or John, is ordained to punishment. And this ordination is of the most just will of God, yet not without respect of originall and actuall sinnes. For as men are actually damned for sinne: so God hath decreed to damne them for the same sinne. Yet notwithstanding sinne is not the cause of the decree of reprobation, but in regard of order it goeth before in Gods foreknowledge, not that former, but this latter act. The ordination which stands in comparison is that, whereby one man and not another, and this man rather than that, being in the like condition, is ordained to punishment. This serveth to shew the liberty of Gods will, in the dispensation of supernaturall benefits. For in that God chuseth this man, and not that, it declareth the liberty and very great perfection of God: and therefore under the name of an housholder, hee challengeth the same unto himselfe, when he saith: May I not doe with mine owne what I list? And verily though God destroy and condemne all those whom hee doth forsake, yet should he not be injust. For we our selves in the daily killing and slaughtering of beasts will not bee counted unjust, neither indeed are we: and yet in comparison of God we are not so much woorth, as a flye is in respect of us. If it be lawfull for thee to receive in, or to thrust out any one of thine house, because thou wilt, it were a point of desperate boldnesse to take the same right from God in his house.

The cause of this comparative ordination is the sole will of God, yea even without respect of any sinne at all. So Augustine: God therefore willeth the most part of his mercy, and condemneth no man but most righteously. Now why he deliver eth this man rather than that, let him search, who can drive into the great depth of his judgements. Againe, Why is it thus to this man, and otherwise to this? O man, who art thou that Expos. in Ioan. cap. 37.

Lib. ad Mon.

Desertio gratiæ variorum.

De correp. & grat. c. 11.

Desertio finalis.

A thou darest dispute with God? And Gregory. Let no man desire to search, wherefore one should be elected, when another is rejected, because his judgements are unsearchable, & his wayes past finding out. In this second act of reprobation there be two degrees, a just desertion or forsaking, and damnation for sinne. So Fulgentius: In such (saith he) God begins his indgement by forsaking, and ends it in tormenting. Divine desertion is twofold. The first is, that whereby God doth forsake man, onely in regard of his assistance and strengthening, by omitting the confirmation of the creature, and not conferring the second grace, whereby the first might be made effectuall to resist temptations, and to persevere in goodnesse. This is the desertion of triall, and may happen to them who have not themselves as yet forsaken God. For it was in the first man Adam, who received of God power to doe that which he would, but not will to doe that which he could. So Aug. He received (saith he) power if he willed: but he had not wil answerable to his power, for if he had, he should have persevered. Againe, He was able also to persevere, if he would: and in that he would not, it proceeded of free will, which then was so free, that he was able to will well and ill. The cause of this desertion was, that Adam & his posterity might know that they could fall by themselves, but that they could not stand, much lesse rise againe: & therefore that they should wholly depend on Gods mercy. Here also it must be remembred, that betweene this desertion and Adams sinne, there came also Adams will, whereby he being left to his owne strength, did by and by perceive the very same, his conscience telling: and yet for all that he willed his owne fall by the free motion of his will.

B

C

D

The second desertion is a privation and leesing of the gifts, wherewith the minde is adorned, and a delivering into the power of Sathan, that hee may seduce men, and more and more leade them into sinne. This is a desertion of punishment, and therefore is followeth sin. And of this desertion, and not of the former, is the rule to bee understood, A Deo desertis Deum priores deserunt, quibus which are forsaken of God, doe themselves first forsake God.

And this is our doctrine of Predestination, which favoureth neither of the errors of the Manichees, Stoicks, Pelagians, nor of Epicurisme, but is (as I am perswaded) agreeable to the truth, and orthodoxall: but yet it is oppugned by sundry criminations, or false accusations, which I will strive with all my strength to overthrow, and that briefly.

The first Crimination is:

That we teach, that certaine men, and those but few, are elected.

Answer.

Certaine men we say: For all the elect are knowne unto God, and their number can neither be increased nor diminished. For we doe doe not say, but after a prescript and certaine manner. For (to omit the Angels) if you consider the elect by themselves, they are many, Mat. 8.11, I say unto you, that many shall come from the East, and West, and shall sit downe with Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob in the kingdome of heaven. Revel. 7.9. I beheld, and loe a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, kinreds, peoples & tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lambe, cloathed with long white robes, and palmes in their hands. Yea there is as it were a world of elect. August. The Church which is without spot and wrinkle, & gathered together out of all nations, and which shall raigne with Christ for ever, even shee is the land of the blessed, and the land of the living. Againe, The reconciled world shall bee delivered out of the maligning world. Eusebius: Christ suffered for the salvation of the world, of those which are to be saved. The author of the book De vocat. Gentium, lib. 1. In those which are elected, foreknowne and severed from the multitude of men, there is a certaine speciall universality counted, that the whole world may seeme to be delivered out of the whole world, and that al men may seeme to be taken out of all men. Bede calleth those a world to be enlightened & healed, who were predestinated to eternall life. Thomas: The true light enlighteneth those, who come into the world of vertues, not those which come into the world of vices.

De dect. chr. l. 3. c. 34.

Tract. in Ioan. 11. 1.

Hist. l. 10. c. 4. 15.

In Tobiam.

In Catena in 1. Ioan. ex Orig.

Neverthelesse, if those same elect be compared with them that are justly damned, wee say according to the Scriptures, that they are few. Mat. 7.13.14. The gate is narrow, and the way streight which leadeth unto life, and few there be which finde it. Againe, Many are called, but few are chosen, Mat. 20.16.

The second Crimination is,

That we teach, that God ordained men to hell fire, and created them to the end that he might destroy them.

Answer.

Here the distinction of the double act in reprobation must be repeated and retained. First therefore I answer, that reprobation in regard of the former act is absolute, that is, in regard of the purpose to forsake the creature, and to manifest justice in it: so we teach and beleeve. For we cannot so much as imagine a cause in the creature, why it was Gods will to passe by it, and to suffer some to fall finally from their blessed estate. Yea sinne is it selfe after the desertion and just permission of God: and therefore it can by no meanes be the cause of the permission and desertion. Whence it is that Lombard the Master of all the Schoolemen saith, that God hath rejected whom he would, not for any future merits which he did foresee, but yet most righteously, though we cannot conceive the reason thereof. And Hierome long before him doth thus expound that place of Paul, Rom. 9.11. (Ere the children were borne, and when they had neither done good nor evill) If Esau (saith he) and Iacob were not yet borne, neither had done good or evill, whereby they might winne Gods favour or offend him, and if their election and rejection doth not shew their severall deserts, but the will of the Elector and Rejector, what shall we say? Afterwards; If we grant this, that God doth whatsoever he will, and that he either chuseth or condemneth a man without desert and workes: it is not therefore in him that willeth, nor him that runneth, but in God that sheweth mercy. Againe: Therefore it is in vaine asked,—seeing that it is in his power and wil either to chuse or to refuse a man without good and evil workes. Anselmus: It is not ours to know why God denyeth grace to them which would gladly receive & consent to grace. But this thing only we dare affirme, That God dealeth justly, if he doe reject offenders. But God onely knowes the reason why hee doth elect one that would not consent to grace, and neglect another, that would so well consent unto it. Againe, *No creature is able to search out, why hee is mercifull to this man rather than to another. Thomas: Why he electeth these unto glory, & rejecteth those, he hath no reason but the divine will. Againe, The difference of those which are to bee saved, from them that are to be damned, proceedeth from the principall intention of the first Agent. Againe, We must not enquire why he converteth these, and not those. For this commeth of his owne meere will. And Augustine upon Iohn: Why he draweth this man, and not that, doe not desire to judge, if thou wouldst not erre.

Lib. 1. dist. 41.

Ad Hebid. quaest.

Comment. in Matth. c. 11.

In Rom. c. 11.

* Summ. 1. par. qu. 23. art. 5.

Contra Gent. l. 3. c. 44.

* The same doe other Schoolemen affirme in the middest of Papacy. Gregorius Ariminensis layeth downe sixe conclusions concerning Predestinatiõ. First, that there is nobody predestinated for the well using of Free-will, which God foreknew that hee should have. Secondly that no man is predestinated; because hee was foreknowne to continue to the end without any let, of habituall grace. 3. That whomsoever God predestinated, him he did predestinate freely, purposely and of his pure mercy. Fourthly, that no man is rejected for the evill using of Free-will, which God foresaw hee would be tainted with. Fiftly, that there is not any rejected, because hee was foreknowne to have finally an impediment of divine grace. Sixtly, that whomsoever God rejected, him hee did reject without any cause in him. The very same conclusions hath Petrus de Alliaco, lib. 1. sent. qu. 12. art. 2. and Marsilius of Ingben. l. 1. dist. 42. q. 4. Some of whose words I will set downe: He is predestinate (saith he) to whom God hath purposed to give everlasting life. And he is rejected, on whom God hath determined not to bestow the same, as the Apostle teacheth, Rom. 9. Againe: No man, that is predestinated, is predestinated for any thing, which should be in him in time to come: so also there is no reprobate rejected for any cause, which was to bee in him in time to come. And every one that is predestinate, is predestinated onely by grace, and by Gods mercifull disposition, not for any cause either actuall or privative to be found in him, whilest he lived. Againe, To reject is to will to shew [illegible]

Neverthelesse reprobation in regard of the second act, that is, in respect of the purpose to damne, is not absolute, but for sinne. For no man perisheth but through his owne default; and no man is absolutely ordained to hell or destruction, but for his sinne: having also received before in Adam power, whereby hee was able to live holily and happily, if so bee that he would. And therefore I say that that which they alleadge is a very calumny.

Secondly I answer that God did not simply create man to destroy him, but that he might manifest his judgement by the just destruction of the sinner. Now it is one thing to will the destruction of a man as he is man, and another thing to will the deserved destruction of a man as he is a sinner. Here also the judgement of Cameracensis, a judiciall Schooleman is to be heard and observed. According to the Scripture (saith hee) although GOD should punish or afflict some creature eternally, or utterly abolish it without any sinne in it, yet hee should not deale unjustly or cruelly with it. Whence it is. Wisd. 12.12. Who dare accuse thee, if the nations perish which thou hast made? God is not bound to lawes created, as if any thing were just before God did will it, whereas indeed the contrary is true.

In sent. l. 1. qu. 12. art. 2.

eternity. And this is that for the evil parts of every creature, for how holy soever the workes were, God would shew mercy as he pleased. So Franc. Mar. lib. 1. q. 31. art. 2. 3. saith, that there are foure signes necessary for the understanding of the proceeding of predestination and reprobation: First, in which Peter and Iudas are offered to the divine will, as equall neither of them both. And then the divine will did preordaine Peter unto glory, it hath no positive act about Iudas, according to Augustine. The second signe is, in which hee preordained Peter to grace: and then he hath no positive act as yet about Iudas. The third signe is in which they are left to themselves, and both of them doe fall into sinne. The fourth signe is that, in which Peter riseth againe, for he cannot continue, because he is predestinated by the first signe. But Iudas riseth not againe, because hee hath not God to raise him up, therefore he is rejected. D. Bannes. in 1. Thom. q. 23. The cause and reason of the whole worke of reprobation cannot bee said to bee in the reprobates, for sinne it selfe cannot bee the cause of permission of sinne, for which a man is damned, whether it bee originall or actuall, as it appeareth in infants, who dye onely with originall sinne: which verily, howsoever it may be the cause why infants are forsaken in it, yet neverthelesse it cannot be the cause and reason, why the whole nature of man should bee suffered to fall in Adam. And Ferrariensis (in Thom. cont Gent. pag. 603.) saith, that foure things are found in a reprobate; to wit, a sufferance to fall into sinne, the sinne it selfe, Gods forsaking not raising him from sinne, and the punishment or damnation. Now reprobation is not alike, but diversly affected to all these. For if wee consider sinne in it selfe, reprobation is not caused by it —— Although nothing on our parts, to wit, no worke of ours bee the cause of the whole worke of reprobation (for of all these together, namely, of the permission, forsaking, and punishment, the manifestation of GODS justice is the alone cause, considering, that no worke of ours is the cause of the permission) yet notwithstanding our wicked working or sinne is the cause why wee are damned and punished. Againe, Wee deny that GOD is cruell, for wee say that GOD doth not punish and torment the reprobate for the fulfilling (as it were) of his owne fantasie, but for sinne eternally foreknowne, which hee determined so to dispose of by punishing of it, that his justice might be made manifest.

The third Crimination is,

That the Stoicall predestination and fate is brought in by us, because (as they say) we teach that all things come to passe by the necessary and energeticall decree of God, yea even the fall of Adam, the which (say they) God according to our opinion did decree and will.

Energetic. Powerfull in working.

Answer.

Wee say that Adams fall came to passe, God not onely foreknowing, but also willing and decreeing it: and that without blasphemy, if thou wilt friendly and curteously give leave to shew how far forth & in what manner. The will of God is twofold, generall and speciall. The speciall wil (which the scripture calleth, Ephesis) is that by which God doth both approve and effect a thing: or else it is Gods good pleasure, whereby taking delight in something hee doth will it simply, both as touching the doing of it, as also in respect of approbation. The object of this will dependeth on the will, and followeth it as the effect followeth the cause. And by this will our judgement is, according to the word of God, that God willeth that which is good, and nilleth that which is evill as it is evill. Psal. 5.4. Thou art a God which willeth not iniquity. And of this kinde, or rather manner of will, are these sentences of Augustine, to bee understood. God hath foreknowne, but he did not foreappoint the workes of ungodlinesse. And, He doth onely foreknow, and not preordaine evills. And, It is all one to say, God is the author, and God willeth. The generall will is that whereby God willeth a thing not to bee, (for that, which is not, therefore is not, because he willeth it shal not be) and for certaine causes also he willeth not to hinder some things, and consequently willeth that they shall come to passe; which things notwithstanding hee doth not simply approve. Or, it is the decree of God, whereby hee willeth something, not in respect of approbation and effecting of it by himselfe, but onely in respect of suffering it to bee done by others. And here the thing which is to be done, doth not depend upon Gods will, but onely upon the will of the creature which falleth away: and with this will we say that God willed the fall of Adam, yet not simply, but onely that it should come to passe. Now it is one thing to will a thing by it selfe, and another thing to will it is touching the event. Moreover he willeth the event of sinne, not by effecting it himselfe: but by forsaking or not hindring when hee might if hee would. And if we enquire of the order of willing, it is this; first and properly God doth will not to inhibit, and not to hinder sinne: and by consequent onely hee willeth the event of sinne. For that which God doth not hinder, doth therefore come to passe, because he doth not hinder it; and as no good thing can either be or come to passe, unlesse God maketh it; so no evill thing can be avoided, except God doe hinder. And there is not the least thing which may be done without this will: unlesse we will say that Gods providence is idle, which to say were wicked. The reasons of this our judgement are many. The first reason I will draw out of most evident testimonies of Scripture. Act. 2.25. Him, I say, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of

Hypognost. l. 6. 1. 80. quaest. 92.

of God, after you had take, with wicked hands you have crucified and slain, Act. 4. 27, 28. They gathered themselves together, to do whatsoever thine hand and thy counsell had determined before to be done. Here it is to be observed, that not only Christs passion, but also the workes which in respect of the Iewes were wicked, doe come under the decree and will of God: to wit, so farre forth as God willed that they should come to passe for just endes. This very thing Augustine signifieth, when he saith, When the Father delivered his Sonne, and Christ his body, and Iudas his Master; In this doe they agree, wherefore is God just, and man guilty, but because in one thing which they did, there is not one cause for which they did it? And there is no reason that it should seeme harsh unto any, if speaking of Adams fall wee follow the holy Scripture on this manner, When Adam did eate of the forbidden fruit, hee did eate that, which the hand and counsell of God had determined before to bee done. This is that very thing which wee say: This is the language of the Apostles, and of the Church, which therefore wee may use without the least suspition of Blasphemy. But to the former testimonies I will adde one place out of Peter, 1. Epist. 3. 17. It is better (if the will of God bee so) that yee suffer for well doing, than for evill doing. But to punish men for well doing, in respect of men, it is flatly to transgresse the Law of God. Furthermore, God is said to bid Shimei to curse David, 1. Sam. 16. 10. that is, to have ordained or decreed: for God biddeth and commandeth a thing two wayes, first by his revealed will; and this hee doth by his word delivered unto men. Secondly, by his secret will, which is his providence or hidden decree, by which hee so governes all things, that nothing can bee done without it or against it: as in these places; Ierem. 36. 22, I will command and call backe the Assyrians against this city. Lament. 3. 37. Who is hee then that saith, and it commeth to passe, and the Lord commandeth it not? Iob 37. 6. Hee saith to the snow, bee thou upon the earth: likewise to the small raine, and to the great raine of his power. By which it appeareth, that it may well bee said, that God decreed that Shimei should curse David, and it is the like kinde of speech to say, that God did not decree Adams fall simply, but in some respect. The second reason followeth: it is the common opinion of all men that God doth will to suffer sinne, but to will to suffer it, is to will not to hinder it, and to will not to conferre grace. Now he which foreknoweth some future evill, and willeth not to hinder it when hee might, and not to conferre confirming grace, hee doth indeed will that the same should come to passe. Therefore we doe not place that will, whereby we say that God doth will that sinne should come to passe, and be in nature: either without or beyond the divine permission, but we doe inwrap and infold it in it. And this is that which Calvin saith, and no other: Is often offendeth some mans eares to heare that God willed the fall of man. But I pray you what other thing is his permission beside will, who hath authority to hinder, and in whose power the matter standeth? The same affirmeth Beza. If any man heare that some thing is come to passe, who ordained and done against his will, that is against his liking, not because hee cannot, but because he will not hinder them. I answer, That is it is alone, as if a man should say, that they come to passe hee being willing they should. For those things which hee could surely hinder if hee would, must needes come to passe, because by not hindring of them, he willeth that they should come to passe. And whatsoever God doth not hinder, hee doth therefore not hinder it, either because he willeth, that it should be done, or because hee doth utterly nill that it should bee done, or because he doth not will it should bee done, or else because hee cares not: that is, hee neither willeth nor nilleth that it should come to passe. If you grant the first, I have my desire. The second is absurd: namely, that God doth not hinder evill, because hee doth utterly nill that it should bee done. For this is to make God inconstant. The third, Lumbard and the Schoole-men affirme. For they say, that God in respect of sinne hath no positive act, neither of willing nor of nilling, but onely a negative act of not willing to hinder it. But by this meanes a great part of those things, which are done in the world, should come to passe God being either ignorant or negligent. The very permissiō also is a certain will, and not a pure negation: for not to will to hinder, that is, to suffer, is indeed to will not to hinder. If thou wilt say the fourth, thou doest wickedly make an idle and Epicurish God, therefore we must needs retire unto the first, viz. that God doth decree that evill should come to passe in such sort as I have declared. Yet the fault must not bee for all that translated unto him, because he doth justly and holily decree that which men doe wickedly.

Thirdly, wee know that Adams revolting is now past and done: therefore we must say, that God did will that it should be done; unlesse we shall say that his providence is not in all and every thing. Thou wilt say, that an evil worke is ordained of God, that is, disposed to Gods glory, the salvation of the godly, and the destruction of the wicked. I grant it, but not this only. For the providence of God is over the world, & every thing therein: both in respect of the end, also of the beginning of every action: Sathan and the wicked doe not onely not finish, that which they would, but they doe not so much as begin it, unlesse God willeth and giveth leave. It seemeth impious to think that any thing, though as little as may bee, doth either exist or come to passe besides that, which God being alwayes holy and just, hath willingly from all eternity decreed.

Fourthly, Let us heare the judgement of the Calvin, tract.

Epist. ad Virg. q. 8.

ἐπὶ τοῖς κατὰ τι.

Ad obiect. Iulian. Pomerane. lib. 1. cap. 25.

Enchir. ca. 95, 101.

In Psal. 148.

Cont. Marcel. lib.

In Abacuc. c. 1.

In Ierem. 12. c.

Lib. de fact. Iac. cap. 2. part. 3.

Lib. 1. capite 7. part. 4. de fact.

In ep. Paul. ad Rom.

Tract. 26. in Ioan.

Ad obiect. Iulian. Pomerane. lib. 1. cap. 25.

Enchir. ca. 95, 101.

In Psal. 148.

Cont. Marcel. lib.

In Abacuc. c. 1.

In Ierem. 12. c.

Lib. de fact. Iac. cap. 2. part. 3.

Lib. 1. capite 7. part. 4. de fact.

In ep. Paul. ad Rom.

Tract. 26. in Ioan.

ancient Church. Augustine, We must know that all things are either purposed the Lord helping, or permitted the Lord so disposing, that thou must know that nothing is at all admitted, the Lord being unwilling. Againe: There is nothing done but that which the Almighty willeth to bee done, either by suffering it to bee done, or by doing it himselfe. Againe: Sometimes a man willeth a thing with an holy will, which God willeth not. Againe: It is possible that a man should will that which an evill will, which God willeth with a good will. So much difference is there betwixt what is fitting for man to will, and what is fitting for God to will, and to whom end every one referreth his will, so as that it may bee allowed or disapproved. And againe: Know that whatsoever falleth out here contrary to our will, happeneth not but by the will of God, his providence, ordinance, appointment and decree. Tertullian: God hath foreknowne all things by disposing them, and disposed them by foreknowing them. Ierome: Shall I say that any thing is done without thee, and that the wicked can doe so much against thy will? Surely it were blasphemy so to imagine. And againe: What good or evill things occur are in the world, they happe not by casuall chance, and without the providence of God, but by his pleasure. Hugo saith: Men may well endure the hearing of this, and it may be said without any scruple or trouble of conscience; God willeth that which is good. But if it be said, God willeth that which is evill, it is a thing very grievous to be heard, and a godly mind doth not easily conceive of him which is goodnesse it selfe, that hee willeth evill: for then it seemeth to bee said that the good loveth that which is evill, and approveth that which is bad, and therefore a godly mind rejecteth this, not because that which is said is not well said, but because that which is well said, is not well understood. But after what sort it ought to be understood, hee himselfe in the selfe same place explaineth. This (saith hee) is onely said, and yet another thing is meant and understood, because God willeth that evill be, and yet willeth not the evill. And againe: Hee willeth that evill bee, and yet hee willeth therein nothing but that which is good. And againe: When hee doth good and suffereth evill, his will appeareth in this, because hee willeth that to be, which he doth or permitteth. And againe: The will of God is his good pleasure, and his will is his working, and his will is his Permission. Catharinus saith: We needs not bee afraid to confesse that God willeth sinne, as blessed Augustine saith also, not because he willeth sinne as it is sinne and evill, but as it is good, to wit, as it is the punishment of sinne and vengeance in the reprobate; (for that is Gods purpose, and it is good, and not evill) or as sinne it selfe is an occasion unto good in his beloved and elect.

But they use to object thus: To will that evill bee done is proper and belonging to an evill will which is delighted with evill, or would use them to good, contrary to the rule

That no evill should bee done that good might come thereof. To this I answer, That here are two grounds to be laid. The first is, that the object even of sinne will is good, and therefore much more of Gods will: and the object of the will cannot be evill by it selfe, but by accident: for if the will willeth evill, it willeth it not as it is evill, but as it is good. The second ground is, that there is a certaine summum bonum or soveraigne Good, with which there is no evill conjoyned: because there is a certain thing infinitely good, namely God: but there is not any absolute evill, because there is nothing so evill, but it hath some good joyned therewith, and therefore it is good that that sinne should bee, and come to passe. So saith S. Augustine: Although therefore those things which are evill, so farre forth as they are evill, are not good, nevertheless it is good that there should bee not onely good, things, but also evill. For unlesse this were good that there should be also evills, they should by no meanes bee suffered by the Almighty, who is goodnesse it selfe. Thus therefore I answer: That sinne in the causes and circumstances thereof fully and exactly weighed, is two wayes to be considered. First; we consider sinne not as it is sinne, but so farre forth as it hath some respect unto good with God which decreeth it. And this way taking sinne, although God willeth is not simply and by it selfe, yet hee decreeth it and willeth it as touching the event. Moreover, sinne hath respect unto God two manner of wayes, first, because it is in that which is good: secondly, because it tendeth to that which is good. That it is in that which is good: because every will is in that which is good as in the subject. Now in respect of the subject, that is, as sinne is a motion, an inclination, or an action, God both willeth and effecteth the same. Moreover, sinne tendeth to that which is good, because God ordaineth it to good, and from thence draweth the good causes of triall, chastisement, or punishment. And wee say that God is so far forth willing that sinne should come to passe, as he is able, and will by his wonderfull wisedome from thence to draw forth that which is good.

Secondly wee consider sinne according to the property and naturall being thereof, that is, sinne as it is sinne: And this way also wee consider sinne, either so farre foorth as it is sinne in it selfe in regard of men, or as it is sinne to God. But God himselfe neither willeth, nor approveth, nor effecteth sinne as it is sinne in it selfe in regard of the creatures that offend; and yet hee willeth it as touching the event, not simply, as those things that are good in themselves, but onely by willing to permit that it may bee. For there is a threefold action of Gods will, the first is that whereby God willeth any thing by willing it, that is, when hee willeth it with his whole and absolute will, as Tertullian saith: and this way hee willeth that which is good God did not decree the fall of Adam, nor any sinne as it is sinne unto God.

Enchir. ca. 96.

in it selfe. The second action is that, whereby hee nilleth any thing by nilling it, as that which shall never come to passe, because God doth utterly nill the being thereof. The third and last action is remisse, and in the middest betweene both, whereby he willeth some thing by nilling it slackely or remissely, that is, when hee partly willeth it, and partly nilleth it, or else so farre forth wils it, as that for just causes he nils it. And after this sort wee say, that God willeth the event of evill, as it is evill in it selfe in respect of men; because evill as it is evill after this sort, is not absolutely evill: and God draweth good out of evill, as it is evill in the nature thereof or in it selfe; as he brought forth light out of darkenesse, even as it was darkenesse in it selfe. And if so be that evill were absolutely evill, as God is absolutely good, he would in no wise will the event of evill, neither should there bee any evill existent at all. For that which God utterly nilleth, hath not any being or existence. But sinne as it is sinne to God, (that is to say, God considering sinne, which is in it selfe sin, in his decree wherein all things are ordained, as sinne) hee neither willeth it, nor approoveth it, nor worketh it, no in this respect he doth not so much as permit it. I doe not deny, but that God permitteth and suffereth evill, as it is evill in it selfe, (otherwise there should not be evill properly in nature,) but I deny that hee permitteth it, because it is evill. For God never suffereth evill for it selfe; but for the good that is therewith conjoyned. And this is the meaning of that saying of Beza, The Lord never permitteth sinnes, as they are sinnes, yea rather hee evermore forbiddeth and hindreth them. And againe; Sinnes so farre foorth as they are permitted by God, being thereto willing, are not sinnes, but the punishment of sinnes. And thus using this exposition is the minde and judgement of Master Calvin of blessed memory, to bee understood, whereas hee saith, that all the sinnes of Adam did fall away by Gods will. And againe, that is was decreed by God, that Adam should perish by his owne falling away. And againe, It was the secret counsell of God, in which the fall of man was ordained. And againe: Adam did not fall away but according to Gods knowledge and ordinance. In these and such like manner of speeches his purpose was to overthrow the opinion of the Schoolemen who would have his permission severed from his will: It were good therefore for them better to consider of the matter, who without eicher charity or humanity, doe with the blasphemies of the Manichees, slander and bely this holy man.

Secondly they use to object, that God willeth things contrary, if he will that that should come to passe which he forbiddeth in his law. Anſ. It is true indeed, if hee should will one and the same thing to come to passe, and not to come to passe in one and the same respect and manner: but God forbiddeth evill as it is evill, and willeth it to come to passe in it hath respect unto good. Hereupon Aquinas saith, That evills be, and that evills be not, are contradictorily opposed; but that God willeth evills to be, and that God willeth evills not to be, are not contradictorily opposed, seeing both are affirmatives.

Lib. cont. Caſtel. de predeſt.

Inſtit. lib. 3. cap. 23. §. 4. & 7.

Oper. 68. §. 8. & 16.

Summ. 4. 19. art. 5.

Thirdly they object thus: That thing which being granted, another thing necessarily followeth, is the cause of that selfe same thing that doth follow: but this being granted, that God willed the fall of Adam to come to passe, the same came to passe necessarily and infallibly. Therefore the will of God was in this respect the cause of sinne. Where to I answer, that the first proposition of this argument is not generall, for in admitting the creation of the world, both the place and the time or continuance thereof, are infallibly and without doubt also to bee admitted; and yet the creation of the world is not the cause of the continuance thereof, and of the place, where it now consisteth. And that this proposition may be true, it is thus to bee framed; That thing which being granted, another thing infallibly followeth (no other cause comming betweene) is the cause of the very same thing that followeth. And the second propositon also fitted to this former is untrue. For this being granted that God willeth sinne to come to passe, sinne shall not come to passe immediately, but by the meanes of mans free will; although it come to passe infallibly on Gods part which decreeth it, yet it comes to passe freely on mans part, for it had beene possible for man not to have sinned when he did sinne, if hee had would. As may appeare by this similitude: God forsaketh man by not conferring and bestowing on him necessary and sufficient helpe for the avoiding of sinne: now man being forsaken by him, sinneth necessarily; And yet the fault is not to bee laid on God, because that in this his forsaking him the will of man commeth betweene. For God forsaketh man being willing to bee forsaken, and not against his will and minde.

Secondly, I answer to the aforesaid reproch of our doctrine, that we say not, that sinne is from the decree, or of the decree of God, as from the efficient, material, formall, or finall cause. But we doe teach and averre, that sinne commeth to passe according to the providence or decree of God, as the sole consequent thereof. For wee assuredly thinke and judge, that the decree of God doth so goe before the sinne of man, as that it hath no respect of any cause, unlesse it bee of such a one as is a failing and deficient cause. So saith Augustine; Therefore truely the great workes of the Lord are exquisite in all his wils, so that after a wonderfull and unspeakable manner, that is not done beside his will, which notwithstanding is done contrary to his will.

Enchir. cap. 101.

Against is objected. He that saith that the decree of God is the energeticall operative beginning of all things, necessarily maketh the De gene. cont. Manic. libro 1. cap. 2.

Ens Reale & Rationale.

Entia rationis.

ἐκτὸς ὑποκειμ.

κατ' ἀνυποκείμ.

the decree of God, the beginning also of sinne. Whereunto I answer, that the holy Ghost himselfe saith, that the decree of God is the beginning of all things being and existent; Eph. 1. 11. God worketh all things after the counsell of his owne will. And againe, in the 17. of the Acts, In him we live, and move, and have our being. Augustine saith: The will of God is the very cause of all things which are. Hugo de S. Vict. saith: There is no cause of the will of God, which is the cause of all things. And this very thing common reason will teach us, because there must first some certaine ground be laid, from whence every thing should have or take his being and existence: and this ground is even the very will of God. For a thing is not first, and then afterward God willeth it to come to passe, but because God hath decreed that a thing should come to passe, or be done, therefore it is; And yet shall not God therefore be the cause of sinne; because sinne is not properly a thing, action, or being, but a defect onely: and yet nevertheless it is not therefore nothing. For whatsoever hath a being, is either Really and Positively, or else in reason onely. And under those things which are in reason, are contained not onely notions and relations, but also privations: because they have not a reall matter and forme out of the understanding. But sinne hath not a positive and reall being, and yet it hath a being in reason (as they tearme it.) For so farre foorth it is in the nature of things being, as it may cause a true composition in the minde: and although it doe not exist positively, that is, by matter or forme created; yet it is privatively, because that by the remove or taking away of originall righteousnesse, that doth immediately and truly follow & exist. Neither doth it follow, as some other naturall habit, or as a pure negation, but as a certain thing between both, that is, a want and absence of the contrary good.

Some use to object, that we doe teach, that God doth incline unto sinne, & that he doth positively harden the heart. Whereto I answer, that we allow not a bare permission severed utterly from his will, neither do we attribute a positive or naturall action unto God, as though hee did infuse corruption and sin; and yet wee say that he doth actively harden the heart. The action of Gods providence, (as saith Suidas) in the works of men, is threefold. The first is, according to his good pleasure, whereby God willeth any worke, alloweth it, effecteth it, and is therewith delighted: this action is onely in good workes, which have their beginning in us from the holy Ghost. The second action of Gods providence is of sustaining, whereby God upholdeth and maintaineth, the being and all the faculties, motions, actions, and passions of nature which offendeth. Act. 17. 28. In him we live, and move, and have our being. And although God doe sustaine nature offending, and the action of sinne, yet is hee free from sinne; because he upholdeth the creature onely as it is a creature, not as it is sinfull. For the second cause, as the will of man, moved by it selfe doe evilly and corruptly; yet it can doe nothing by it selfe, unlesse the effect thereof be reduced to the first cause. As may appeare more plainely by this similitude. A man doth hault by reason that his legge is out of joynt: now here are two things to bee considered; the very walking or motion it selfe, and his hault ing; the hauting proceedes onely from his legge out of joynt. The walking doth from his legge, and also from the faculty of moving. In like manner a man sinning in that he doth, it is of God, but in that he doth evilly, it is of himselfe. Wee must therefore here know that God doth uphold order as it is of nature, but he thereth not the will violently breaking out against the order of the morall law. The third action of Gods providence, is according unto concession, whereby God in the evill works of men, worketh some thing holily; and this last action is threefold. The first is permission: whereby God forsaketh especially the wicked, by withdrawing from them his grace, and by leaving them according to their deserts, unto their owne wickednesse, which he had before restrained, that it might not breake forth to so immoderate liberty. And wee use commonly to say, that he which permitteth, doth and effecteth something, as when the rider giveth the reines unto his wanton and sporting horse, wee say that hee doth moove and encourage him; and we say, that the hunter doth put his dogge on the game, when as he letteth him slippe. The second action (as I may so tearme it) is occasionall, whereby God by proffered occasions, in themselves good or indifferent, outwardly drawes forth, stirres up, and brings out sinne in those who of themselves openly runne into wickednes; to the intent that hee may justly either punish their knowne impiety, or else discover it being closely shrouded. The like have we ordinarily even among our selves, for the Physitian by his preservative medicine, stirreth up, inflameth and draweth forth the humours out of the corruption of the body. Admitte a house bee weakely timbred, which being almost now already falne, will ere long fall, and that I doe not with any engines or instruments throw or beate downe the same, but onely take away the outward hinderances, and on every side as it were open a way for the downfall, to the intent, that when it falleth, it may by the greater fall bee broken in peeces. After this sort dealeth God with the wicked: and hereupon is it that the law is said to stirre up and increase sinne in Paul, Rom. 7. 8. This action I s done many manner of wayes, as when the hinderances of sinne are taken away; when as the way is opened to the committing of one especiall sinne, κατὰ ἀνεχόμενον.

and not of another; when as obiects are offered, which the ungodly vse as instigations vnto sinne. These obiects are commandements, threatnings, exhortations, and cogitations either good or euill: for, euen by good things the minds of vngodly men often-times, which, the wicked by reason of his wickednesse, doth greedily take an occasion to doe ill. And this is the manner and way truely, whereby we say that God stirreth vp, vnto euill, without infusing the least drop or iot of euill. For as in the middle region of the aire, the heate groweth stronger by the Antiperistasis or repulsion, on euery part, from whence proceeds the thunder & lightning: and by the heate found incompassed, the clowds are condensated and made thicke; even so the wicked and vngodly when they are stirred vp by wholsome precepts, doe grow more vngodly; and euill doth so much the more begin to delight them, by how much the more they know that it is lesse lawfull for them: according to the saying of the Poet: Nitimur in vetitum semper cupimusque negata. Wee still endeavour things forbid, and covet, that is denyed. The third action is a disposing, whereby God through the euill worke of an euill instrument, finisheth his owne worke iustly and holily. As for example: The sale of Ioseph in his brethren was sinne; the just action of God, in this euill worke, was the foresending of Ioseph into Egypt, for the common good and benefit of Iacobs family. And from this disposing proceedes it, that God useth the sinnes of men holily, that hee provoketh them holily, and ordereth them as the Physitian for a medicine ordereth poyson, contrary to the nature thereof. That hee ordereth them holily, both according to the causes and beginnings, and also according to the endes and issue: as when hee disposeth the worke of the divell infusing corruption, either to the punishment of correction, vengeance, or triall. But concerning these, let us rather giue eare to ancient writers. Clement Alexandrinus saith, It belongeth to Gods wisedome, vertue, and power, not only to doe good, which is the nature of God, but also especially to bring many some good and profitable end, that which euill being invented by those which are evill, and vse profitably those things which doe seeme evill. Augustine saith, God maketh and ordaineth just men; but he maketh no sinners as they are sinners, but ordereth them onely. And againe, As God is the most excellent Creator of good natures, so is he the most just disposer of evill wils. Againe, God verily fulfilleth certaine of his good wils, by the evill wils of evill men. Againe, God by those men which doe those things which he will not, doth himself those things which hee will. And againe, God using well even those that are evill, as being himself absolutely good: so farre forth as in the last iudgment did that which God would not. In this very thing that they did that which was contrary to Gods will, even by them his will is done. And againe: Who would not tremble at these iudgements of God, whereby God doth so the hearts of evil men whatsoeuer he will, giuing vse to them, according to their desarts? And again, It is plaine that God worketh in the hearts of men even into their wills whithersoever hee will, either vnto those things that are good for mercy, or else vnto those things that are evill for their desertes: sometimes openly by his open iudgements, sometimes vnto his secret iudgement, but euermore in his just iudgement. And againe, God worketh not euill vnder, but vnto his end as he list; howsoeuer he cannot worke any thing that is vniust. Fulgentius saith, Although God be not the author of evill thoughts; yet he may be disposer of evill wils, and ast of the evill worke of every one, he doth not cease to worke that is good.

In respect of these diuers actions concerning sinne, it commeth to passe that we finde in stad in the Scripture: That God doth harden, doth make blind, doth deceive, doth commend a worke that is evil, yea and doth the same, and thus he delivereth over to beastly affections, &c.

Thirdly, I answer to the aforesaid reproch of his our doctrine, that wee doe vtterly abhorre and detest the Stoical Fate, because it maketh a necessity inherent in things themselves, which should binde even God himselfe, and all other things, and make them subiect thereunto. For howsoever we doe beleeve that the very decree of God is immutable, and therefore necessary; yet in Gods selfe it was most free (for he could either not have decreed that which hee did decree, or else other whiles have decreed it:) and it addeth to the second causes placed out of God a certaine necessity, but yet so free a one, as that it is rather to be tearmed a liberty, than a necessity. And this shall easily appeare to bee as I say, if I shall first shew what sorts of necessity there be, and how farre forth it is agreeable unto things. First therefore a thing is necessary two wayes, absolutely and conditionally. That is absolutely necessary which cannot be other wise, or else whose contrary is impossible, as that God is omnipotent and just. And that is conditionally necessary, which cannot be other wise, but yet not simply, but by the granting of one or many things: and this kinde of necessity is either by nature, or the commandement, or decree of God. That is necessary by nature, which commeth to passe constantly, and immutably, by reason of the order which God hath set in the nature of things: after this sort it is of necessity, that fire doth burne, that the earth is carried downward, and the heaven moved. That is necessary by commandement, which is necessarily to be done, because God hath commanded it. After this sort it is of necessity that one undergoe the office of a magistrate, Rom. 13. 5. That is necessary by the decree of God, which is so, because God hath foreknown it, and willed either to effect it, or at the least to permit it. After this sort

De grat. & lib. arb. c. 21.

De civit. Dei lib. 5. cap. 8. 9 10. & de Genesi ad lit. lib. 5. c. 15.

Tullie de Fato.

Cont. Iul. l. 5. cap. 3.

Aug. de verb. Apost. ser. 2.

2. Sam. 12. 12. & Exod. 10. 20. & 14. 4.

Stam. lib. 1.

De Gen. ad lit. imperf. cap. 3. De civit. Dei. l. 11. c. 17. Enchir. ad Laur. ca. 101. De cor. & grat. c. 14.

for every thing in respect of God is necessary, and the will of God (as Augustine saith) is the necessity of things. Secondly, necessity is either of compulsion or infallibility. Necessity of compulsion, is that which inforceth violence to things by some cause working without, and forcibly constraineth that they doe either this or that. And this indeed is the Stoicall necessity, that a man should doe any thing against his will being compelled by force and necessity. There is also such a like kinde of necessity of the Manichees, condemned by the Fathers, who taught that there was no violence or necessity offered unto the will by God, nor that it was forced by necessity to sinne. The necessity of infallibility is that whereby a thing according to the event shall certainely and immutably come to passe: yet so, as if we consider the cause of a thing by it selfe, it may either not come to passe, or else come otherwise to passe. Of this manner of necessity we must understand that principle; Every thing that is, when it is, is of necessity. And thus is necessity distinguished: now will I shew how farre forth it is agreeable to severall things. The events of all things have reference either to the second causes, or to God, who is the first cause. Now some things in respect of the second causes are necessary, other some contingent. From causes which are necessary, must needes proceed that which is necessary, from those that are free, that which is free; from those that are naturall that which is naturall; and to bee briefe, such as are the next causes aforegoing, such also is the event of things. But in respect of God, all things whatsoever, are partly changeable, and partly necessary. In respect of Gods liberty, which doth that which it doth freely, all things are contingent and mutable: howsoever according to nature and the order of the next causes, they be necessary and immutable. In respect of Gods decree, the second causes and the effects of them are all necessary, howsoever in themselves they be uncertaine and contingent. And yet they are not absolutely necessary, but by the supposition of Gods decree; neither are they necessary by the necessity of compulsion; but of infallibility onely, because God ordained before, that those things which should come to passe should be. And this kind of necessity taketh not away the contingency and liberty of second causes, but rather establisheth and confirmeth it. For that which is free worketh freely, and that which is contingent, worketh contingently, by the necessary decree of God. Neither doth liberty and necessity mutually overcome each other, but liberty and compulsion. It is manifest therefore that Gods decree causeth an immutability to all things, of which notwithstanding some, in respect of the next causes, are necessary; and other some contingent: but all of them in respect of Gods liberty mutable. And as the mutability which things have from GODS power, taketh not away the necessity which they have from the second causes; so the necessity of immutability by Gods decree consequently comming to passe, taketh not away the contingency which they have from the next causes and from Gods liberty. Moreover we say, that Gods decree, ordaineth the second causes, and the very liberty it selfe also of mans will; not by compulsion, as if a man should violently throw a stone, but by inclining and gently bending them, by obiects outwardly offered to the understanding, even as a sheepe is said to be drawne, when grasse is shewed her being an hungred; that a man may choose by his own free motion, or refuse that which God hath justly decreed from all eternity.

Dial. de prad. & vita in Catalogo illustr.

These things being granted, it is manifest also what wee ought to thinke concerning the fall of Adam. Which truly according to the event is necessary by the necessity of infallibility, by reason of the foreknowledge and decree of God; yet so as that God is not guilty of any fault; because the decree of God howsoever it is necessary in it selfe, yet it planted nothing in Adam, whereby he should fall into sinne, but left him to his owne liberty, not hindering his fall when it might; and the same fall in respect of mans will (which doth that freely that it doth) came to passe contingently and most freely. But you will say, that Adam could not withstand Gods will, that is, his decree; whereto I answer, that even as he could not, so also hee would not But you will say againe, hee could not will otherwise. Which I confesse to be true, as touching the act and event, but not as touching the very power of his will, which was not compelled, but of the owne free motion consented unto the suggestion of the divell. But to the intent that these things may more plainely be understood, wee must make distinction betweene three times, the time going before his fall, the present time of his fall, and the time after his fall. In the first moment of time the fall of Adam was necessary, in a double respect: First, by reason of the foreknowledge of God: for that which hee foreknew would come to passe, must needes of necessity come to passe. Secondly, by reason of the permissive decree of God, that fall was according to the event necessary immutably. Honorius Augustodunensis saith, It cannot otherwise be, but that all things must come to passe which God hath predestinated and foreknowne, seeing that hee onely either doth all things, or permitteth them to bee done. Hugo de S. Victore saith: Sinne followeth of necessity upon the withdrawing of grace. And the reason hereof is very cause, because evill permitted must come to passe, and cannot otherwise come to passe than God permitteth. For to permit evill, is not to stir up the will, and not to bestow on him that is tempted the act of resisting,

Quæst. in Rom. 44.

but but to leave him as it were to himselfe; and he whose will is not stirred up by God, and to whom the act of resisting is not conferred, howsoever he may have power to withstand: yet can he not actually will to withstand, nor persist for ever in that uprightnesse wherein he was created, God denying him strength. I confesse truly that this kinde of necessity as touching the liberty of mans will, was altogether evitable and to be avoided: and yet according to the event of the action it was inevitable. Yet I would not that any man should thinke that this necessity did any way proceede from the decree of God, which did onely follow the decree being granted and admitted; and Adam in his temptation being destitute of the helpe of God, cast himselfe of his owne accord into this same ensuing necessity of sinning. In the second time, his fall being present, there was another necessity thereof: because when it was, it was necessity. In the third time, man drew unto himselfe by his fault, his nature being now corrupted, another necessity of sinning, insomuch that hee made himselfe the servant of sinne. Bernard saith: I know not after what evil & strange manner, the will is selfe-corrupted or changed to worse: maketh a necessity to sinne, and yet the necessity all though it be voluntary, is not able to excuse the will: nor the will, all though it be inforced, exclude necessity.

De fide ad Petr. cap. 35.

If any man shall say, that by this our platforme many are tyed by an inevitable necessity to be damned; I would have him give eare to Augustine, who saith: Hold this most stedfastly, and doubt not in any wise that any can perish whom God before the creation of the world, hath of his free goodnesse made vessels of mercy, — or that any of them whom he hath not predestinated to eternall life, can by any meanes bee saved. And yet I say that the decree of reprobation doth not cause a necessity of damnation in any man. For the first act thereof, which is a purpose not to shew mercy, causeth not this necessity in men, but goeth before it as an antecedent: & man himselfe verily hath brought upon himselfe this necessity with his owne most free, yet rebelling will. Now the second act of Reprobation, which is a purpose of condemning, causeth not any necessity of damnation, but by the sinne of man comming betweene. Moreover, the necessity of damnation followeth after the same manner by the foreknowledge of God; and yet this never seemed a thing strange unto any one. But some will say, that the foreknowledge of God doth never cause in men any necessity of damnation, although it doe infallibly foresee the same. And I say also, that Reprobation doth either not at all cause damnation in man, or that it doth not cause it, but for sinne. But it may be objected; They that are predestinated unto damnation, can not be freed by repentance, although they would. Whereto I answer with Aug. [A] they did fall by their will, so by their will they are constrained to lye: and hee that turneth himselfe away from God, hath both deprived himself of will to do that which is good, and also of power. It doth not therefore follow (as they imagine which object such things) that God hath taken repentance from those to whom hee gave it not, and hath thrown us downe those, whom he hath not taken up.

Ser. 15.

Moreover, the selfe same necessity followeth of their hypothesis, who affirme a bare permission. For that which God permitteth, the selfe same thing will he not hinder; and evill, if God hinder not, cannot be avoyded, and that which cannot be avoyded, shal come to passe infallibly. And therefore evill, permission being once granted, of necessity commeth to passe, although most freely on mans part. Wherenpon it is plaine, that the decree of God is not more inevitable, than is the very permission separated from the decree. I do wish that they would well weigh & consider this, who object unto us either the Stoicall fate, or the dotages of the Manichees. For wee differ from them as much in certaine judgement and opinion, as whosoever do differ most. For first, the Stoickes do tye God unto the second causes, so that hee cannot doe otherwise, than the nature of them will suffer: we on the other side, doe hold that all second causes doe depend upon and are ordered by God. Secondly, the Stoickes say, that neither God nor second causes can doe otherwise by their nature than they doe: we say that some second causes, are by Gods ordinance mutable, other some immutable; and that God himselfe, can either not doe, that which hee doth, or else doe it otherwise. But now to come to the Manichees, who make two coeternall Gods; we but one. They of their two Gods, make one good, and another evill: we say, that there is one absolutely good and just God. Thirdly, they will have one of their Gods to bee the cause and worker of good things, and the other of evill: we make one true God the Creator and ruler of all things, and working nothing but that which is most good and most just. Fourthly, they say that they which are created by their good God cannot sinne: wee say, that God doth most freely convert whom he will, and when they are converted, they can never in this life perfectly be free from sinnes, but doe sometimes runne into such sins, as doe grievously wound the conscience. Fifthly, they say, that they that are created by the evill God simply cannot be converted: we say, that the unclean spirits and men were created both good and holy, but yet they fell by their owne will and fault, and not by any fault but the just permission of the Creator, and brought upon themselves a necessity of sinning. And although it be true, that man cannot withhold himselfe from sinning, unlesse God give him that grace, yet doth he not sinne of necessity, that is, of compulsion, but willingly.

And

and the will have sufficient liberty: if by it selfe or the nature thereof it be inclinable to the contrary of that which it doth: and this doctrine the owne accord of mans will, which obeyeth although it be not altogether voluntarily, yet willingly, and our way limited by God without force: are sufficient to shut out this objection, which although it be of great moment, yet is it not of such importance, that it should be able to overthrow the truth of God, which is so plainly set downe in his word. Finally, you shall alledge for a reason and proofe for all this, that men come to passe by their necessity which goeth before a thing, and unwillingly: but by the same necessity which followeth a thing. For God doth not cause, although he doth permit sinne, by forcing the will, as hyre stirring up and by leaving them in the power thereof. And I say also of Gaudentius his opinion, who saith: The Iewes were unwilling to do that which they did. And surely, if they had bin unwilling to do it, they had not done it. And it is a horrible matter to speake it even to thinke that God, who is not onely good and righteous, but also goodnesse and righteousnesse it selfe, doth either command, or compell any thing to be done, which he condemneth when it is done.

Lib. de vocat. gent. & Lucif.

Ser. 3. ad Neoph.

But that I may in a word fully deliver my opinion, if it be demanded, how the will of God carrieth it selfe to good or evill, I answer: that in a good act God carrieth himselfe positively. For first hee determineth the event of good, by willing effectually to worke it: and secondly, he inwardly inclineth the will of the creature, to doe that good which it doth. Thirdly, hee sometimes layeth a necessity of immutability on him that doeth well, but yet it is joyned with an exceeding freedome. After this sort the elect Angels doe necessarily obey God, yet not by constraine, but greatly covering, and with all the strength of their will desiring it, not being thereunto compelled. In an evill act, I say that God carrieth himselfe privately; not by a logicall; but a naturall privation foregoing the habit. For first he willeth that evill come to passe, not by doing it himselfe, but by willing not to hinder it to bee done by others. Secondly, he doth not inwardly incline the will to doe evill, but hee forsaketh, and outwardly offereth objects which are good in themselves. Thirdly, God layeth not on us any necessity, but a desertion, or want of grace, which once being, there followeth the necessity of sinning, not as the effect doth his cause, but as she defect doth him that forsaketh. And this I am resolved on, that Gods decree doth altogether order every event, partly by inclining and gently bending the will in all things that are good, and partly by forsaking it in things that are evill: and yet the will of the creature left unto it selfe, is carried headlong of the owne accord, not of necessity in it selfe, but contingently that way which the decree of God determined from eternity. Wherefore (thanks bee given unto God) doe with all our hearts renounce the dotting follies of the Stoickes and the Manichees.

That we doe teach, that the greatest part of mankinde is rejected of God, and all those to whom the Gospel is not preached, is not unknowne to any man. Neither is it happily became a rigorous course that some should be deprived of Christ, who never heard of him, never as any time nor any where received the same. But all and every one receive holinesse and happinesse in Adam together with an ability to persevere and remaine in the same holy & happy estate, if they had would. But Adam would not use this of his owne accord cast away that grace which was bestowed on him by his Creator; for which being lost, it is a wonder, that all without exception are not damned. And therefore it will seeme the lesse strange to any one, if grace by Christ be againe bestowed upon one, and not upon another.

Secondly I answer, that we doe very willingly acknowledge that Christ dyed for all (the Scripture averring so much;) but we utterly deny, that he dyed for all and every one alike in respect of God, or as well for the damned as elect, and that effectually on Gods part. For first let us weigh well the words of Christ: I never knew you, depart from me yee workers of iniquity. Now to know with God is to acknowledge: and therefore, whom Christ never knew, hee never acknowledged for his. And those whom he hath not so fine acknowledged, he never bought or redeemed with the price of his blood. And therefore well saith Gregory: Not to know with God is to reject. Against if all and every one be effectually redeemed, all and every one are reconciled unto God: because that the forgiveneese of sinnes, and the satisfaction for the same, are inseparably joyned together. Yea and Paul placeth redemption in the remission of sinnes, where he saith: By whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sinnes. Very well therefore saith Prosper: As it is not sufficient for the reuniting of men, that Christ Iesus was borne man, unlesse they be renewed also in the same spirit, wherein he was borne: so it is not sufficient for mans redemption & Christ Iesus was crucified, unlesse we dye together and be buried with him in Baptisme. Of these premises therefore I frame this assumption; But all are not reconciled unto God, neither doe all receive remission of sinnes; for then all men were blessed; and it were not possible for them to perish; which thing to affirme of all and every one, is very grosse. Thirdly, Christ gave himselfe that hee might sanctifie unto himselfe a people peculiar, that is, as a precious treasure and his owne gotten good elected and chosen from among other. Therefore it was not Christs purpose to give himselfe for a ransome for all and every one alike. Fourthly, for whom redemption is ordained, to them also is given on Gods part the making of them sonnes by Christ; but the making of

Eph. 1. 7. & Col. 1. 14.

Lib. 2. resp. ad Aug. obiect. 3.

Psal. 32. 1.

Tit. 2. 14. λαὸν περιούσιον & sic alibi passim.

sonnes

So nes, or Adoption is not granted to all and ev ery one, even on Gods part. For the power of the Adoption whereby a man is made of the child of wrath the child of God, is onely given to those that beleeve and apprehend Christ. They are (saith Augustine) the children of God, who are not as yet so unto us, and yet they are so unto God; because that by beleeving they should afterward be so through the preaching of the Gospel: and yet before this was so, they were engraven the children of God, by a stedfast and immutable stability, in the register of their Father.
And againe, there are some which in respect even of some present or temporal grace which they have received, are said by us to be the children of God, and yet are they not so unto God. Fifthly: None are truly redeemed on Gods part, but they who are freed from sinne, both according to the power that it hath to cause damnation, and also according to the power that it hath to reigne in them. In this doe the ancient Fathers agree: for Augustine saith, By this Media-tour God sheweth that he doth make them of evill men eternally good, whom he hath redeemed with his blood. And againe: Those whom hee would make his brethren, he freed and made them fellow heires. And againe, Christ will have no part alone in that which hee hath bought, but will possesse it wholly to himselfe, & to that end gave he so great a price, that hee might onely possesse the same. Ifychius saith, Christ who suffered for us, hath freede us from sinne and the bondage thereof: Remigius saith; Thou art the reconciler, thou art the reconcilement, and blessed shall they bee for whom thou shalt make reconciliation. Out of these I thus conclude: all and every one are not redeemed according to both the aforesaid powers of sinne. For let us grant that on Gods part they are freed from damnation; yet they are not in such measure indued with grace, as that sin shall no more reigne in them. Christ therefore is but onely the halfe redeemer of these, and for that cause not a redeemer. Lastly, let us diligently consider the judgement of ancient writers. Ambrose saith; If thou bele-vest not, Christ came not downe for thee, Neither did he suffer for thee. Augustine saith: Every one that is generated is damned, and none is freede unlesse he be regenerated, And againe; It is well said, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy. For if the whole world being in the aldome, & in the power of sin, and most justly ordained to punishment, be nevertheless in part by Gods mercy freed: who can say unto God, why dost thou condemne the world? And againe: Hee that hath bought us as deare a price, will not that we whom he hath bought should bee destroyed. God hath given a great price and bought those whom hee quickneth. And againe: Of whose mercy is it but of his who hath sent Iesus Christ into this world to save sinners, whom he hath both foreknowne and predestinated, and called, and justified, and glorified? Bernard saith; Christ worded none of these: neither did he any of those things in regard of himselfe, but rather in regard of the elect

A

B

C

D

—: they were not dere stly she Iewes to whom he was sent, but the Elect for whom he was sent.
Haymo saith; Even as by one man death and sin came upon all to condemnation: so by one justifying of man, that is, of Christ, to all men elected unto grace, proceedeth eternall life, even grace to wit, predestinate unto eternall life. And againe: He spake not this in respect of the elect only originall, but also actuall sinners: and therefore of grace and the gift through grace did redeeme unto the elect. Aquinas saith; Christ his merit according to the sufficiency thereof is of ovrtueh a sufficiently to all, but not according to the office or which commeth to passe partly by Gods election, through which the effect of Christs merits is mercifully bestowed on some;
and partly by the just judgement of GOD
withdrawne from others ome.

Object. 1. Against this it is thus objected;
The Scripture affirmeth that Christ redemed the world. Whereto I answer: That this word (world) in the writings of the Apostles doth not signifie both all and every man that descended from Adam, but all nations in this last age of the world: God (saith Paul) was reconciling the world unto him in Christ. What mea-neth this word world in this place? Surely not all men of all ages, but the Gentiles which were to bee called after the ascension of Christ, as Paul plainely explaining his owne minde sheweth, Rom. 11.12. Wherefore if the fall of them bee the riches of the world, and the diminishing of them the riches of the Gentiles, how much more shall their abundance bee? And again in the 15. verse. If the casting away of them, (that is, of the Iewes) bee the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving bee but life from the dead? in these very words he plainly sheweth, that the reconciliation of the world is the reconciliation of the Gentiles after the casting away of the Iewes. And hereby it is most manifest, that all the like places of Scripture, which many doe thinke to make for the uni-versall redemption of all and every one, are to bee understood of some men to bee called out of every nation and country after the death of Christ. And hereunto also let us joyne the answer of Augustine; He calleth often times even the Church it selfe by the name of the world: according unto that, God was reconciling
the world unto himselfe in Christ: And againe;
the Sonne of man came not to judge the world, but that the world might bee saved through him. And John saith in his Epistle, We have an advocate with the Father, Iesus Christ the just, and he is the reconciler of our sinnes, and not onely of ours, but also of the whole world. Therefore the whole world is the Church, and the whole world has teth the Church. Therefore the world ha-teth the world; the malignant world the reconciled world, the damned the saved and the defiled that which is cleansed. But this world, which God in Christ reconcileth unto himselfe, and which by Christ is saved, and to which all sinne is through Christ pardoned, is called one of the malignant, damned, and defiled world. Ruperus saith: The world

Comment in Rom. cap. 5.

Ibid.

Summa de vita et Mat. 26. 3. 7.

2. Cor. 5. 19.

Tract. 87. in Ioan.

Comment. in Ioan. lib. 3. c. 3. In 2. Cor. 5.

merkd surely, which God loved, we understand to be mankind, that is, the living and the dead: the dead, which in faith looked for his coming: the living, who should beleeve in him, whether they were of the Iewes or of the Gentiles: For so he saith without any distinct ion either of Iew or Gentile: universally, that every one that beleeveth in him shall not perish, but have life everlasting. And the common glosse expounderh the world, those that be the elect of the world.

1. Tim. 2. 4. Object. 2. Saint Paul saith, that God will that all men be saved, and come to the knowledge of the truth. I answer, first, that the place is not to bee understood, of all the posterity of Adam, but properly of those which live in the last age of the world. This I prove by conferring of the like places, wherein Paul doth plentifully shew his meaning. Act. 17. 30. And the time of this ignorance God regarded not, but
* Now he admonisheth all men every where to repent. Rom. 16. 25. By the revelation of the mystery which was kept secret since the world began.
26. But, Now is opened and published — for the obedience of faith among all nations. Colos. 1. 26.
The mystery which was hid since the world began and from all ages, is now made manifest unto the Saints. 27. To whom God would make knowne Christ — : whom we preach, admonishing every man and teaching every man; that we may present all men perfect in Christ Iesus. And in the 2. epistle to the Corinthians the 6. Chapter and the 2. verse, he expoundeth that place of I-saias, where it is said: In an acceptable time have I heard thee, and in a day of salvation have I helped thee, and I will preserve thee: and will give thee for a covenant of the people that thou maist raise up the earth, — that thou maist say to the prisoners, goe forth, after this fashion: Behold, Now saith hee, the accepted time, (that is, the time of the new Testament) behold, Now the day of salvation. Saint Peter saith: salvation ordained to bee declared in the last times: concerning which the Prophets which did prophecy of the grace which should afterward come to you, have searched and inquired. And Christ himselfe saith most plainely of all; When I shall be lifted up from the earth, I will draw all things unto me,
I therefore grant, that God willeth that all should be saved: but that God both willeth, and that he hath always willed that all men in all ages should be saved, I utterly deny, neither hath Paul said so much: and among the ancient writers they which seeme to affirme so much, doe notwithstanding in these kinde of speeches doubtfully affirme it: I doe imagine that it may with reason and religion bee believed: I do not thinke it irreligion to beleeve it,
It may probably and religiously be believed.

Secondly I answer: That God wills that all men bee saved, that is to say, of those that are saved. So saith Augustine: Even as it is said that all shall be quickned in Christ, although every one may bee punished by eternall death: because all whosoever they are thus doe receive eternall life, doe not receive it but in Christ: so it is said, that God will have all men to bee saved: although he bee will have many not to bee saved, because all who are saved, were not saved but by him willing it.
And Againe: When we reade in the holy Scriptures, that God will have all men to bee saved, although we know assuredly that all men are not saved, yet ought wee not therefore to derogate any thing from the omnipotent will of God, but that to understand, that which is written, God will have all men to be saved; as if it should bee said, that no man was saved, but he whom God would have so to be saved: not that there is any man whom he will not have to be so. Hereunto tendeth God will have all men to bee saved. Eve all those ask what is the reason why all men are not so saved. To which, answer must be made, that that saying in the Psalme is true. He spake & they and they were made. He bid & it stood. So he will saith all men who are saved, shall why by his mercy seeke to bee saved. For the Apostle put the whole for the part, as it is in the Psalme, Salve
the Lord saith, If I bee lifted up from the earth,
I will draw all unto mee. For he hath not drawne neither doth he draw all men unto him, but All that are elect, both of all sorts, and nations.

Thirdly; I answer, that God will not have every one of every kinde, but the kinds of every one to bee saved; that is to say, of every estate and condition some. Augustine saith:
This very saying, Who will have all men to be saved: is so said, not bee cause there is no man whom hee would have damned, who would not doe any powerfull miracles among them, who like saith would have repented if hee had: but that is spoall men, may understand every sort of men, by what differences soever distinguished, whether they be kings or subjects, noble or ignoble, high or low, learned or unlearned, strong or weake, witty, dull spirited or foolish, rich or poore or mean men or women, infants or children, youths or yong men, middle aged me or old men, in al languages, in al trades, in al conditions, in al professions, in the innumerable variety of wills and consciences, and what other differences soever there is among men. These things saith he, very truely and rightly, for this word, All, is sometime taken distributively, and then it signifieth every severall and particular person: and Paul to the intent that he might signifie this, joyneth the word every one with the word all, It is also often taken collectively, and then it signifieth any, and not every one: when Christ is said to have healed every disease, that is, any disease. The double signification of this word Aristotle also observed. This word All (saith hee) is taken two wayes; first for every one — and secondly the word All is used: when it doth not signifie every one: It is plaine therefore that the word All, hath a double signification. And of this in the also is said Bernard: It is like unto that (saith he) which is in the Psalme: —— every wicked is as fire. If every man be a fyer, then is the also a fyer which speaketh keeth it, and bee bee a fyer which speaketh is, then is not that true which bee speaketh, namely that every

Marke well the restraining forme of speech, for it is as much as if he had said, God now willeth that all men should repent.

1. Peter 1. 20. vers. 10.

Isa. 12. 32.

Auth. de vocat. gent. lib. 1. cap. 8. Rerlam. de gratia & lib. arb. lib. 2. c. 5.

Epist. 107. ad Viricium.

Comment. ad Eph. cap. 1.

Exodus. 10. 1. Tim. 2. 1. In 2. cap. Epist. 1. ad Tim.

Matth. 9. 35.

Polychron. lib. 2. cap. 2. ὁ ἐναντος, καὶ ὅλκ ὁ ἐναντος ἀντικ.

every man is a lyer. But, if this saying be true, these words every man doth lye, are (and said before) to be understood after this sort, A great part of men are lyers. And the Apostle writeth elsewhere; Teaching every man: and against admonishing every man: not that he taught all men, for how many are there, yet at this day which have neither heard of the Apostles doctrine, nor yet so much as his name?) but that he should teach and admonish al that are in the Church. Sedulius also saith: Many and al in Paul are one.

Fourthly, Saint Paul speaketh in this place according to the charitable judgement of Christians: and not according to the judgement of secret and infallible certainty. Like unto this, is that also that he calleth the faithfull in severall Churches men elected; amongst whom there were many which afterward fell away from the faith. And yet is not the Apostle deceived; for it is one thing to speake according to his owne affection: and another thing to speake according as the matter is indeed. Augustine saith: We ought so charitably to bee affected, as to wish that all men bee saved: as men that know not who appertaine to the number of those that are predestinated, and who doe not. And againe: We must as much as in us lyeth, being unable to distinguish those that are predestinated from those that are not, desire that all men bee saved, and use sharpe correction unto all with an intent to heale them that they perish not.

Hence it appeareth what wee ought to thinke of Damascene his opinion, who distinguisheth the will of God into his precedent and consequent will. Hee calleth that his precedent will, whereby God, as he that is absolutely good, willeth to bestow al good things, yea blessednesse it selfe upon the creatures: and by this will hee affirmeth, that God willeth that all men should be saved, and attaine unto his kingdome; because he made us not to punish us, but that he might make us partakers of his goodnesse, as being good himselfe. But his consequent will is that, whereby for some certaine circumstances of the creature, he absolutely willeth this or that: and by this will, he saith, that God willeth that man should be damned for sinne, because he is just. And indeed this distinction of will in it selfe is to be allowed, but that is not a very fit example, which he hath propounded concerning his precedent will. For there seemeth not to be in God such a will, or (as they use to terme it) such a willing will, whereby he will indefinitely or upon condition, that all and every man of all ages should be saved. For first, it argueth a finite power and insufficiency in him that willeth. For whatsoever any one desireth and earnestly willeth, that will he bring to passe, unlesse he bee hindred. As for example: The Merchant desireth and earnestly willeth to save his ware; but being forced by a tempest, to the intent that himselfe may escape, hee doth absolutely will to cast them into the sea.

Comment. ad Rom. c. 5.

In Epist. ad Rom. c. 5.

De correp. & grat. cap. 15.

cap. 16.

Optatus 7 vel 8 Lamas.

A Yea indeed this kinde of will seemeth to argue weaknesse, because God should will that which shall not come to passe: But you will say, that this will is conditionall; that is, that God will that they bee saved, if they shall believe. And I say first, that the will of God standeth doubtfull, untill the condition bee fulfilled, and that the first cause is by this meanes held in suspence by the second causes; Moreover there is given unto men a free will either to beleeve or not to beleeve: that is, flexible and inclinable both waves, either by grace, or by nature, both which things are false, as I will afterwards shew. And therefore, this will is rather a humane will than a divine. Heare what Anselmus saith. The will of God is taken B sundry manner of wayes by the principall Doctors, first for the knowledge of God; then for the will of the Saints, who will in charity that even the unjust should bee saved; againe, for humane reason; and lastly for Gods Commandements. Secondly, this conditionall will seemeth idle and unnecessary, especially in him whose power is infinite; because if he earnestly willed, he would verily doe a thing, when hee might without hindrance. Thirdly, Gods will is not such concerning the Angels, whereby he willeth that all of them should be saved: therefore, it may well be demanded, whether his will be such concerning man. Fourthly, if God will that all men, as they are men, be saved: in like manner he will, that all sinners, as they are sinners, bee damned; which is absurd. Fifthly, that will which cannot bee resisted, is absolute: but Gods Antecedent or first will cannot bee resisted: Rom. 9. 19. For there Paul speaketh of the will that goeth before al causes. Therfore, the precedent will is absolute. And this will I make manifest after another manner: the will of God is, that some should beleeve and persevere, and that other some should bee forsaken either not beleeving or not persevering. You will aske me haply how I know this. I answer, by the event. For as touching the event some beleeve, and some do not beleeve. But to beleeve, and to persevere is a certaine kinde of good action; and on the contrary, not to beleeve, or not to persevere is an evill action. And every thing that is good, is, through the effectuall will of God; and so farre forth as there is, or existeth that which is good, so farre forth God willeth it, and maketh it to exist by willing it. And that evill, which commeth to passe, commeth to passe God not hindring it; and because God will not hinder it, therefore consequently it commeth to passe. Hereupon, it is certaine that God willeth that some should beleeve, and persevere unto the end, and that other some doe not so; yea even without any condition; and no reason can be rendred, wherefore hee willeth this. Therefore this will is both absolute and first: and therefore that universall precedent will concerning the salvation of all and every one in Christ, is counterfeit and fained.

fained. Sixtly, the ground of this opinion, is that forcible place of Paul, which I have already handled to be unfounded. And yet, that place hath not do the least thing in any conditionall, but an absolute will. For therein is first affirmed, that God will have all men to be saved: secondly, that he will have all sorts to come to the knowledge of the truth, that is, unto faith, because by professing faith to the word of God, wee acknowledge the truth. What is now then that condition of Gods will, saith Damascene? I oppose Augustine, who for the Pelagians urging this place of Scripture, God willeth that all men bee saved, make this double answer first he denieth that it is not absolutely to be understood of the universality of men, and that by this argument: That which God willeth he effecteth: but he doth not effectually save all men, therefore he willeth not. Secondly, he saith, that the place is to be understood of them which are actually saved: because all men which are saved, are saved by the will of God. Againe, I oppose against him Prosper also, who saith: If the will of God concerning the universall saving of mankinde, and the calling of them to the knowledge of the truth, is to bee affirmed so indifferent throughout all ages, as that it should bee said to overpasse no men in what place soever, Gods impenetrable and deepe judgements receive a great blow. And againe: Who cannot say that there is the calling of grace wherein as yet there is no regeneration of the mother the Church. And againe: He forbad the Apostles to preach the Gospell unto some people; and now as yet bee suffereth some people to live out of his grace. Also I oppose Thomas Aquinas against him, who saith: But saith some man, God loveth all men: wherefore I answer, that it is true so farre foorth as he willeth some good to all: And yet he willeth not every thing that is good to all, that is, eternall life: and therefore he is said to hate and reprobate them. To conclude, I oppose against him Hugo de Sancto Victore, who will (saith he) that all men bee saved according to Ambrose, if they themselves will. But are there not many who would be saved, & yet are not saved?—to this, He offereth grace unto all, by which, if they will, they may bee saved. But how is this solution true, are there not, and have there not beene many, which never heard so much as a word of preaching?

Hyppg. lib. 6. cap. 8

Damascene

Lib. de volunt. Dei.

Reason. pro. Augustin. li. 1. Obiect. 8

Quest. 23. in sum. art.

Annot. in 1. Tim. cap. 2.

Obiection III. That which every one is bound to beleeve, is true: but every one is bound to beleeve that he is effectually redemed by Christ: therefore it is manifest, that every one, even the reprobate is effectually redeemed by the death of Christ. Whereto I answer; that the termini or parts of the proposition are to bee distinguished; that which every one is bound to beleeve, is true according to the intention of God that bindeth; but it is not always true according to the event. Ninus preached, and therefore hee was bound to beleeve, Yet forty dayes, and Ninive shall be destroyed; but this was not true accor-

B ding to the event. The affirmative also must be distinguished. Every one in the Church, by Gods commandement, is bound to beleeve the Gospell, that is, to beleeve that he is redeemed by Christ, yea even the reprobate as well as the elect, yet not withstanding in a divers and different respect. The elect is bound to beleeve, that by beleeving he may be made partaker of election: the reprobate, that by not beleeving, he may be made inexcusable, even by the intention of God. For sometimes giveth a commandement, not that it should bee actually done, but that it might bee done, that they performe outward discipline, and that they may be convicted of their naturall infidelity, and be made inexcusable of their sinnes before God in the last judgement. For thus I distinguish of Gods commandement: there is a certaine commandement of obedience, the performance whereof God willeth in all. Hither are referred the commandements of the morall law. There is also a certaine commandement of trial, as the commandement of sacrificing, Gen. 22. whereby God willeth not the act it selfe, but only the manifestation of obedience. And therefore God must not bee said to mocke men, if by the word, preached he do outwardly call those, whom hee will not have to be saved: for by this meanes he shewes unto them the riches of his grace, and declares that they perish by their owne fault, because they will not receive salvation offered. But you will say they cannot: I confesse as much, but that inability whereby they cannot, is voluntarie, and borne together with us, nor infused into us by God: and therefore it cannot bee excused. Very well therefore saith Bernard. The master knew well, that the weightinesse of the commandement exceeded the strength of men: but he thought it expedient even in this sort to put them in remembrance of their owne insufficiencie. ——Therefore by commanding things impossible, hee makes not men swarve from the truth; but humbleth them, that every mouth may bee stopped. So saith Augustine de grat. & lib. arbit. cap. 43. Secondly, I answer, that which every one is bound to beleeve, is true unlesse any one shall by his owne malice hinder himselfe; this doth the reprobate by his owne inborne infidelitie. Thirdly, I answer, that the argument doth follow two wayes affirmatively in both propositions, For the termini or parts of the proposition are thus to be turned: That is true, that every one is bound to beleeve, but every one is bound to beleeve that he is redeemed by Christ. Therefore that is true.

Coloss. 1. 6.

Serm. 30. in cant.

Obiect. IV. The Fathers which beleeved right, doe affirme that Christ redeemed all and the whole world. Ans. Whereas they write that Christ redeemed all men, and the world, their meaning is, that he did it according unto sufficiency, and the common cause and common nature of all, which Christ did take upon him: and not effectually on Gods part. This very thing doth Prosper make plaine; All men (saith he) are rightly saide to be redeemed, in respect of the one nature of all: and the one cause of all, which our Lord did truely take upon him: and yet all are not delivered from captivitie. The propriety of redemption without doubt belongeth unto them for whome the Prince of the world is saide abroad: —whose death was not so beffowed for mankinde, as that it should also pertaine unto their redemption of them, who were not to be regenerated. And againe he saith: Our Saviour may fully bee saide to be crucified for the redemption of all the world, both in respect that he truely tooke upon him the nature of man, and also in respect of the common, or generall perdition in the first man: and yet he may bee saide to be crucified onely for those, unto whome his death was available. Moreover, the Fathers speake of the universalitie and of the world of beleevers. So saith hee that is the Author of the calling of the Gentiles. The people of God (saith he) have their fulnesse.

And thus much for the efficacie and greatnesse of Christs death; Now as concerning grace, I say, that that is diversly distinguished. For first, it is either restraining, or renewing. The restraining grace is that, whereby the inbred corruption of the heart, is not thereby utterly disminished and taken away, but in some is restrained more, in some lesse, that it breake not violently forth into action: and it is given onely for a testimonie vnto man, and to preserve order amongst men in a politicke society: and this kinde of grace is generall, that is, belonging to all and every man, amongst whome some doe exceede others in the gifts of civill vertues: and there is no man, in whome God doth not more or lesse restraine his naturall corruption. Now renewing or Christian grace (as ancient writers doe usually call it) is that whereby man hath power given him to beleeve and repent, both in respect of will, and power: and it is universall in respect of those that beleeve, but indefinite in respect of all and every man. Thus we teach, thus we beleeve.

Secondly, Grace is either naturall, or supernaturall; as Augustine himself sets it downe. Naturall grace is that, which is bestowed on man together with nature: and this is either of nature perfect or corrupt. Perfect, as the Image of God, or righteousnesse bestowed on Adam in his creation. This grace belonged generally unto all, because wee all were in Adam: and whatsoever hee received that was good, hee received it both for himselfe and his posterity. The grace of nature corrupted, is a naturall inlightning (whereof Iohn speaketh: He enlightneth every man that commeth into the world,) yea and every naturall gift: And these gifts truly by that order which God hath made in nature, are due and belonging unto nature. But that grace which is supernaturall, is not due unto nature, especially unto nature corrupted, but is freely bestowed by speciall grace, and therefore is speciall. This the ancient writers affirme. Whereof such: Nature is common to all, but not grace: and hereby acknowledge the two-fold grace namely that common grace of nature, whereby we are made men; and Christian grace whereby in Christ we are regenerate to the new man. And see is of opinion, that some that doe not believe in Christ doe not sinne, which is a thing not withstanding very ungodly and untrue. If grace bee as generall as nature; Let us well weigh his words: In that he hath (saith he) condemned: Now they are inexcusable for their sinne; it may move men aside, whether those unto whome Christ hath not come were possible may have any excuse for their sin. —To this question, according to my understanding, I make answer: that they cannot bee inexcusable for every sinne which they have committed, but for this sin, that they have not believed in Christ unto whome Christ did not come, and unto whome he did not speake. But they are not in this number unto whome hee hath spoken in his disciples, and by his disciples, which live also now daily. For hee came unto the Gentiles by his Church. —It remaineth for us to demaund, whether they can have this excuse which have beene or are prevented by death before Christ came in his Church to the Gentiles, and before they heard his Gospell. I answer, that without doubt they may, but they cannot therefore escape damnation: for whosoever hath sinned without the Law, shall also perish without the Law. Againe hee saith: Onely grace distinguisheth those that are saved, from those that are damned, who were ever appeain one lump of corruption by one common cause from the beginning. Chrysostome saith: The grace of God commeth unto every one, but it remaineth with them who doe worthily fulfill those things, which are in their power: departing quickely from them, which doe not well behave themselves: neither doth it at all come unto those, who doe not so much as beginne to turne unto the Lord. Gregory saith: The Gentiles did not any way worship God, neither shewed they any signe or token of any good works, for indeede they were forsaken. Amongst whom, because there was no law-giver, nor no one that did according to reason seeke after God, there was not as it were a man, but all lived as it were like beasts. And afterwards hee saith: When our Redeemer came, hee so received the calling of grace, as that there was not before in it the like of prophecie. And againe: Teachers holding their tongues, the divels goe into their place: because none doe perish by the silence of their pastours, but they who are not predestinated unto eternall life. For they are places for the divels, because in Gods fore-knowledge they are not preordained unto Gods Tabernacle. Hereupon it is said, that when the Pastours did preach, as many as were predestinated unto eternall life did believe. And hereupon is saith Paul, whome he hath predestinated, those hath he called. Hereupon it is, that the Apostles desirous to goe into Asia, were forbidden by the holy

De Gen. ad pl. ser 11.

Lib. 1. in Isa. cap. 1.

Lib. 1. contemp. in Hexam l. 10.

Tract. 89. Iohan.

Enchir. cap. 93

Lib. de conjunct. verb.

* Put if grace be universall, there had alwaies bin some Church among the gentiles although secret and hidden: for it is not likely that all had cast away grace or that they had used it evilly.

Exod. in. 5. Reg. cap. 14.

holy Ghost. They therefore which are not predestinated, whether they heare the words of the preachers, or whether they doe not heare them, cannot bee called unto Gods Tabernacle. And againe: Sometimes the preachers are silent at Gods dispensation, that they holding their peace, they which are not the Lords, may be deceived of such spirits. Beda saith: He goeth to visit and enlighten their hearts, whome hee hath predestinated to eternall life, forsaking those whome he knewe to be none of his name. Anastasius saith: The Church in the former state of error, having without eyes, and blinde, did wither fro from the beginning, neither was it seene at all by God. And againe: All other kinds of faith which are in the world, are dead, as also the workes of those prophaned Gentiles which are dead, in whom which had not in them him who saide, I am the life. Neither doe they regenerate & quicken their people and children, by the wombe of water and the spirit; but are fruitlesse, and bereft of the well of life, and not enjoying the water which is lively, and streameth unto eternall life. Therefore that Church which is his, wholy warmed the life and mother of all the living. Hugo de Sanct. Vict. saith: Some of those, who were before the comming of Christ, if they had not had sinne: for sinne, they should not have beene damned, for that they did not believe in Christ, because they have an excuse for that sinne. And againe: What if thou shouldest enter into consideration how many, and how excellent in comparison of thee are cast-aways, who could not attaine unto this grace which is given unto thee? Surely thou hast heard how many generations of men from the beginning even unto this day, have passed away, who are all without the knowledge of God, and the price of this redemption, tumbled downe into the gulfe of everlasting destruction. Thy redeemer and lover hath preferred thee before all those, in as much as he hath given thee this grace which none of them was worthy to receive. And what will thou say? wherefore dost thou thinke that thou art preferred before them all? hast thou beene more valiant? hast thou beene more wise? hast thou beene more noble? hast thou beene more rich than they all? because thou hast obtained this speciall favour above them all? How many valiant men? how many wise men? how many noble men? how many rich men have there beene? and yet they are all forsaken, and have perished like cast-aways. Thou onely art received before them all, and yet thou canst not finde out any cause why thou shouldest thus bee dealt withall, besides the free favour of thy Saviour.

Hitherto I have opened and defended our opinion of predestination. I will now briefly examine another, dissenting with this in many things, having taken it with as much diligence as I could, out of the publick writings of many men: and to this end I doe thus briefly propound it.

First, God created all and every man in Adam to eternall life.

Secondly, he foresaw the fall.

Thirdly, because he is by nature gentle and good, he doth seriously will that all men after the fall should be saved, & come to the knowledge of the truth: and therefore wils to give all the furtherances both of nature and grace, that they may be saved, but yet indefinitely, if they themselves shall beleeve. This will of God (they say) is predestination, & the same with the written Gospel. The rule of this will is; Whosoever shall beleeve, shall be saved; He that will not beleeve, shall be damned.

Lastly, Election is according to the foreknowledge of future faith, which notwithstanding may be lost utterly for a time, as some say; or finally and for ever, as some others wil and reprobation is according to the foreknowledge of infidelity, or finall contempt of the Gospell.

This platforme is in very truth (so farre as I can judge of it by the Scriptures) a meere invention of mans wit: which will appeare by the manifolde errors therein contained.

Reason 1.

First, by this platforme or ground-worke there followes a certaine universall reprobation, and that a very absurd and strange one. For if there bee (as they doe affirme) an universall election, whereby God willeth that all men shall be saved indefinitely, if they do beleeve; hee willeth also by the like reason, that all and each one should bee damned if they doe not beleeve. But this reprobation is no where to bee found in the Scriptures. Yet hence it followeth, that God being alike affected to all, and seriously willing the conversion and salvation of all, doth neither chuse nor refuse any man.

Error. 2.

From hence also it followeth, that God hath in vaine propounded with himselfe the supreme and absolute ende of his counsels, which is, to communicate his goodnes in true felicity even to every man. For if we consider the event, hee doth not communicate his goodnesse and eternall life unto very many, which is otherwise than he purposed, namely, unto those that are damned. But wee are in no case to say, that the supreme end of Gods counsels, either have any uncertaine event, or are in vaine propounded.

Error. 3.

Thirdly, this platforme attributeth unto God a certaine ordered and fitted will, which doth wholly depend on mans will. Thou saist that God willeth that all men whatsoever should bee saved by Christ. Very well: Tell mee therefore why they are not saved: They themselves will not, thou saist? Yea wis. What is this but to set the creature in the throne of Almighty God the Creatour, against the order of nature, and of all causes? For the first cause, which indeed is Gods will, ought to order and dispose the act of the second cause. And therefore we must not give unto God a will that is ordered by the will of the creature; especially considering that all order in heaven and in earth whatsoever proceedeth from him. That which ordereth all things, it ordered of none. Moreover, men after this sort are elected of themselves, by receiving of Gods grace beeing offered, by the assistance of common grace: and are also rejected of themselves, by refusing of grace offered: and men themselves shall bee the makers and framers of their owne election and reprobation: and God that chuseth is not so much to bee praysed, as the men that doe receive and embrace the blessing offered.

Error 4. Fourthly, this platforme laies downe a determinate fore-knowledge about the evill of fault, without any decree going before concerning the event of the fault; which cannot be: A definite foreknowledge is not the cause of that thing which is to bee, but the thing which shall bee is the cause of the foreknowledge thereof. For the thing which shall bee, followes not the foreknowledge of it, but foreknowledge followeth the thing which shall be, as Iustinus taught. For God doth first decree a thing as touching the event: then afterwards hee doth fore-know by his definite foreknowledge, that it shall be. And Anselme: In that (saith he) a thing is said to be foreknowne, it is by that pronounced that it shall be. And Augustine before his time affirmed, That God doth foreknow those which shall be. Hence it followes, that a thing must exist with God, before it can be precisely and definitely known before. And every thing existeth & is, because God did wil and decree to doe it if it be good, or to suffer it to be doue if it be evill; having respect alwaies to the good that is ioyned with it. Vnlesse we shall holde and graunt this, it will follow that something hath beeing of it selfe, that is, that something is a God. Therefore the existencie or beeing of things, doth not goe before, but out of all doubt followes the decree of God. For first of all, there is a foreknowledge, or (as it pleaseth others) a knowledge of beholding, whereby God beholdeth and seeth what is possible to bee, and what not: Then followeth the decree either of Gods operation, or of his voluntary permission, and consequently of the event of the thing. And this decree beeing once laid downe, the definitive fore-knowledge is conceived, whereby it is knowne what shall come to passe infallibly.

Error 5. The fifth defect in this platforme is, that it teacheth that Christ for his part hath redeemed and reconciled all and every man to God, and that very many of them for all that, as touching the event are damned, which is very absurd. For if this were so, sinne, Satan, death, and hell should bee more mighty than Christ the Redeemer, and (as Augustine saith) Vitia humanæ victoriæ Deus: God is overcome by mans sinne. If thou wilt say, that God is not overcome: yet I say, and that according to this platforme, that he is altered: for he hath decreed, and seriously willeth to save all men, and yet notwithstanding, another sentence being give, he willeth to destroy those which will not incline and bend themselves to this counsell.

Error 6. This platforme maketh saving grace (which indeede is supernaturall) to bee altogether universall. But this opinion (to speake no harder of it) is a plausible device of mans braine: For first of all, hereby the speciall covenant made with Abraham, and the greatnesse of Gods mercies toward the Gentiles is abolished. And there is no mystery of the vocation of the Gentiles, if all and every particular man were by certaine meanes called unto Christ from the beginning: For those which shall by the helpe of common grace, which they shall receive, give assent unto God calling them, whether it be by extraordinary instinct, or by the ministery of the word preached; they shall be accounted among the members of the Church, and shall belong to the speciall covenant of the Gospel. Moreover, if the first grace be universall, it is either saith actually, or in power. For without faith it is impossible to please God, and to attaine salvation. But actuall faith is not common to all. The power of faith is double; the first is that whereby thou hast received power to be able to beleeve, if thou wilt. But this is not sufficient unto salvation: because now after Adams fall, free will is spirituall things is wanting, especially in the conversion of a sinner: and therefore further grace is required, whereby a man may be able to will to beleeve. No man can come to Christ, but hee which is drawne of the Father, Iohn 6.44. Now they are not drawn which receive power to beleeve, if they will, but those who of men nilling, are made actually willing. The second power, is that whereby a man hath received power to wil to beleeve: but this is not common to all men. To you (saith Christ to his disciples) it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdome of heaven, but not so to them, because the Father hath hidden the from the wise, Matth. 13.11. Againe Therefore could they not beleeve, because Isaiah fore-told this, Iohn 12.33. Furthermore, if this power were common to all and to each person, faith were common to all. For the will & the deed floweth from one and the selfesame grace. Philip. 2.13. It is God who worketh in you the will and the deede, even of his good pleasure. Iohn 6.45. Whosoever hath heard and learned of the Father, commeth unto Christ. But whosoever hath power to will to beleeve, hath heard and learned, as beeing drawne of God: therefore whosoever hath power to will to beleeve, cõmeth unto Christ. Well saith Augustine: It followeth not, that he which can come, doth come, unlesse he will it, and doe it: but every one that hath learned of the Father, hath not onely power to come, but also doth he come: where now there is (& possibilis as profectus, & volunt as in effectus, & effectus,) a possibilitie, a setting forward, a desire to come, and comming indeede. So it appeareth, that to will to beleeve, and actually to beleeve, are most neerely conioyned; yea yea seriously to will to beleeve, is in very deed to beleeve. The publicans and harlots, and those which are held captive at the divels will, doe repent and are converted: and therefore they doe not onely receive power if they wil, but of nillers and stubborne repugners they are made actually willing.

Greg. de Val. Cont. Iul. Rom. 9.18. Math. 13.11. Iohn 3.8. Mat. 11.27. Ioh. 6.44. Act. 13.48. Proposition. Assumption. De nat. & grat. cont. Pelag. ca. 5

Thirdly, there are and have beene many nations, which have had no knowledge of the faith, or which have not kept it; and without this knowledge, there is not any saving grace. Answer is wont to be made, that man receiving naturall light is not to bee excused for the want of supernaturall knowledge: because if he would do by Gods assistance that which lieth in him, God would inlighten him with supernaturall grace. For thus the schoolmen doe usually speake: Although no man is able by the ministery of man to know the nature of faith, if he never heard any thing of it; yet hee may by Gods helpe, if he line morally according to Gods law so much as in him lieth to doe. For then God will succour him either by himselfe, or by some other, so wit, either man or Angel, by propounding of faith unto him. For as in naturall things, so in supernaturall God doth minister grace when man is not wanting to himselfe. I answer, that this is false. For if grace be given to him which doth that which lieth in him to doe by the strength of nature; it is given either by merit or promise. Not by merit, because there is no merit before faith; and we do nothing acceptable unto God before wee have faith. Augustine: Thou bringest in a kinde of men, which can please God without the faith of Christ, by the law of nature. This is the cause why the Christian Church doth especially detest you. And it is not given by promise, because there is no promise or divine law to be found in the Scriptures, that grace should by and by be given unto him that doth that which lieth in him to doe. It is also false to say, that God doth minister all things that make for the felicity of nature, or this prefent life. For some are borne leprose, blinde, foolish, very poore, unmeete for this temporary felicity; neither doe they ever attaine unto it. This opinion also is against experience; because many dye in their infancy, and many are foolish and madde all their life long, upon whom we cannot say that this universall grace is bestowed. It is also contrary to most plaine places of Scripture. Salvation is not in him that willeth, nor in him that runneth, but in God that sheweth mercie. And he hath mercy on whom he will, and whom he will he hardeneth. It is given to the disciples to know the secrets of the kingdome of heaven, but to them it is not given: The winde bloweth not on all, but where it listeth: The Son doth not reveale the Father unto all, but to whom he will. All doe not beleeve, but those which are drawne and predestinated unto life. All doe not heare, but those to whom eares are given for to heare. Furthermore it is some impayring of effectuall and Christian grace, so to place it in mans power, that hee may, if hee will, receive it: and that he may also, if he will not, refuse and despise it: and to say, that God hath given unto men no other grace, than that against which the flesh or perverse will may prevaile in all men, and against which it doth prevaile indeede in the greatest part of mankinde, because God will not restraine it. To conclude, let us also heare the testimonies of the Fathers. The author of the calling of the Gentiles, saith thus: If so be that the Saviours grace dee offer by some (as we see it doth) it is to be referred to the hidden judgement of divine justice. Augustine: Nothing deliverech us from this death whereby we are all under sinne, saving the grace of God by Iesus Christ. Why this grace commeth to that infant, and not unto this, the cause may be unknowne but not unjust. Again, (twas by divine dispensation, that Pharaoh did not gracionsly consent, but obstinately resist, because that there was not onely a just punishment, but a just punishment evidently prepared for such a heart, whereby those which feare God may be corrected. Againe: The judgements are inscrutable: wherefore of two wicked men being of yeares equall, one should be called so, as that he should follow the caller, and the other should either not be called at all, or not called so as that he should follow him that calls him. And againe; He giveth to whom he will, because he is mercifull, which though he should not give, yet he is just. Again, hee doth not give to them to whom he will not, that he might make knowne the riches of his glorie upon the vessels of mercy; for by giving unto some, who deserve not, hee will have it to be his free, And by this also his true grace and favour. Againe; Whosoever are set apart from originall damnation through the bountie of Gods grace, it is no doubt, but that it should bee procured for them to beare the Gospel, and to beleeve when they heare it. Again; We know that Gods grace is not given unto all men. And againe: why one man is so exhorted that he is perswaded, and why it is not so with another. O the depth of the riches! Thomas, As he doth not open the eyes of all that are blinde, nor cure all that are crazie: that in those his power might appeare, and that in the other the order of nature might bee preserved: even so he doth not by his helpe prevent all that hinder grace, but some in whom hee willeth that his mercie should appeare; so also that the order of justice should be manifest in others. Isidore, Spirituall grace is not distributed to all, but is onely given to the elect. Againe, It is given to him, because hee is evill that would bee good: another neither willeth, neither is it given him that hee might bee good. Cassiodorus: Although God be an universall agent over all, so as that he giveth unto all some gifts of grace, as being life, knowledge, &c. yet he giveth some gifts of speciall grace unto one, which he giveth not to another, as namely faith, & the grace which make us gracious, & such like which are the effects of predestination. Finally, Augustine, and almost all the Schoolmen make two kindes of infidelitie, the one negative in those which never heard the Gospell: the other privative in those that refuse and contemne the message, which they have heard of Christ. And it is to be noted, that by this distinction they doe confesse that God hath not vouchsafed so much as an outward calling to every man.

Greg. de Val. Cont. Iul. Lib. de sec. merit. c. 21 In Exod. quæst. 18. Lib. de bon. pers. cap. 8. Cap. 12. Ibid. cap. 17. Epist. ad Vital. 107. Lib. de spirit. & lit. cap. 34. Cont. gest. l. 3. c. 161. Sent. lib. 2. cap. 5. and 6. In lib. sent. l. 4. 12. art. 2.

Error 4. Qæst. 58. Orthodox. De prad. sanct. cap. 14. Scientiam tantum. Error 5. De cor. & grat. cap. 7.

Obiect. I. The promise of the seede of the woman is made in Adam to all and to every man. Answer. It is made to Adams posteritie, indefinitely, not universally. When salvation is promised to all men, all men are named for a part of men. The heads of the nations Cain, Cham, Esau. &c. knew the Messiah was promised, but those which came after, knew him not, neither had they the meanes how to know him. So saith Isaias: Me have they not knowne, of me have they not heard. The nations also next adjoyning to the Iewes, peradventure heard something of the Messiah, and had proselytes, but the nations a farr off, seated in the uttermost parts of the earth, had no affaires with the Iewes, and no proselytes. And therefore it is false which some affirme; to wit, that the chusing of the people of Israel, was onely a kinde of greater curtesie shewed to this nation, or a more gentle entreating of it, and no peculiar & diverse favour, whereby he shewed himselfe to bee their Father and Redeemer onely. And to make or maintaine a hidden and invisible Church among the Gentiles, before the comming of Christ, is altogether to contend against the word. God is onely knowne in Iudah. The Israelites onely are called my People in Hosea: And they onely were Christs sheepfold: because Christ when hee came, made on sheepfolde of the Iewes and Gentiles.

Obiect. II. There is infolded in Gods providence, that care of God touching all those things which concerne the blessednesse of man. But the Gentiles knew this providence of God, and that his goodnesse was so great, that hee would passe by nothing which might make for the happinesse and salvation of man. Therefore the Gentiles did after a sort, obscurely and by an infolded knowledge, know the doctrine concerning the redemption of mankinde. Answ. This faith of things vnknowne is a meere fiction. For faith of it owne nature is a certen knowledge. Moreover, although the generall doe include in it selfe the species or kindes, and the whole his members, yet he which knoweth the generall and the whole, doth not by and by know all the kinds and parts thereof. The mind may so know the generall; that yet for all that it may in the meane time be ignorant of the speciall kindes thereof. Wee must therefore beware of the Schoole-mens opinion, who say, that salvation was given before Christs comming, for the implicite or infolded faith concerning the Redeemer in generall, namely, when men did beleeve that there is a God, and that hee is a rewarder, and the giver of all gifts which concerne the good either of soule or body, especially the remedy of sinne. But this is nothing else, than to imagine a certaine saving faith and Church, which hath no word of God at all, either written or any other way revealed. Furthermore, this is to accuse Paul of falsehood, who teacheth the contrary in these words: Seeing the world by wisedome knew not God in the wisedome of God, it pleased God by the foolishnesse of preathing to save them that beleeve. It is also most certaine, that wee ought to know Christ the redeemer in speciall. This is life eternall, that they know thee to be the only very God, and whom thou hast sent Iesus Christ. The same affirme the auncient Fathers. Irenaeus: They being ignorant of that Emmanuel, who is borne of the Virgin, are deprived of his gifts, which is life eternall. Hierome: Wee cannot be his sonnes before, vnlesse we receive the faith and understanding of his Sonne Iesus Christ. Augustine saith, that those which were just in old time, whatsoever they were, were delivered onely by that faith, whereby wee are delivered; to wit, by the faith of Christs incarnation. Again: What truth soever thou saiest was in those which were just in olde time, the faith onely of the Mediatour saveth them, who shed his blood for the forgivenesse of sinnes.

Obiect. III. (a) The power of God is known unto the Gentiles, Rom. 1, (b) Christ is the power of God 1. Corinth. 1.24. (c) Therefore Christ is knowne to the Gentiles. Answer. I distinguish of the proposition. The power of God is either the power of creation, or of redemption: The power of God in the creation was knowne unto the Gentiles: but not the power of God in the redemption, which is Christ himselfe, the preaching of whom is foolishnesse unto the world.

Obiect. IV. The Fathers say that saving grace is universall. First, I answer, that the sayings of the Fathers are to bee understood of the grace of the last time, which is common to all men and nations. Irenaeus. The Lord hath reconciled us in the last times by his incarnation, beeing made a Mediatour betweene God and man, reconciling vnto Father vnto all: giving unto us that conversion which is to our Creator. Origene saith: God hath a greater care to save men, than the divell hath to destroy them. The only begotten Sonne of God himselfe (I say) is present with us, he defendeth, keepeth, and draweth us unto himselfe: for he saith in another place, When I shall be lifted up I will draw all things unto me. Chrysostome: Grace is shed abroad over all: it passeth by, and disdaineth neither Iew, nor Grecian, nor Barbarian, nor Scythian, it is alike affected unto all, it sheweth it selfe gentle unto all, it calleth all with equall honour; and let those, who neglect the helpe of grace, ascribe this their blindnesse unto themselves. For considering that a way to enter in lieth open unto all, and is forbidden to none, some desperately wicked doe refuse to enter, through their owne corruption. Cyril saith: He is the true light, and sendeth forth his brightnesse unto De vocat. Gent. Aug. lib. 1. cap. 3.

Isa. 52. 66.

Psal. 76. Hos. 1. Ephes. 2. 14. Act. 10. 16.

Rom. 1.

1 Cor. 1. 21.

Ioh. 17. 3.

Lib. de haref. 3. cap. 21.

In Ephes. 1.

Lib. 2. cont. 2. epist. Pel. cap. 21.

a Proposition
b Assumption.
c Conclusion.

De haref. l. 5. cap. 17.

Hom. 20. in Num.

Hom. 7. in Lib.

Lib. 1. in Ioh. cap. 11.

unto all, but (as Paul saith) the God of this world, hath blinded the mindes of unfaithfull men, that the light of Gods knowledge may not shine in them. Ambrose: The earth is full of the mercie of God, because pardon of sinnes is given unto all. The mysticall fulnesse of righteousnesse is risen unto all: is come unto all, hath sufficed for all, and hath risen againe for al. And if any beleeve not in Christ, he deprives himselfe of his generall benefit. He shutteth out the grace of common light from himselfe. Gregory saith: The worldsome which is from God meeteth us in every place; because hee hath both given unto men commandements not to sin, and hath also given remedies to him that sinneth, lest hee (should) despaire. Theodulus Presbyter. He hath said that both Iewes and Gentiles should be partakers of Grace, yet not al, but those that beleeve: and because grace is common to all, not without cause.

Serm. 8. in Psal. 118.

In Ioh lib. 35. cap. 14.

Comment. in Rom. cap. 3.

Answer 2.

Secondly, they speake of naturall vocation, or of the grace of nature consisting in the relikes of naturall light and understanding, in the common gifts of vertues and outward blessings, which are testimonies of Gods providence and goodnesse. The author of the calling of the Gentiles: For this cause verily the nations may bee excused, which beeing aliens from the common wealth of Israel, voide of hope, and without God in this world, have perished under the darknesse of ignorance, because this abundance of grace, which doth now water the whole world, did not flow so plentifully before: For there is evermore shewed unto all men a certaine measure of doctrine from (a) above, which albeit it proceed from a more sparing and hidden grace, yet it is sufficient (in the Lords iudgement) for a (b) remedie unto some, and a witnesse unto all. Again, Who may not easily perceive that he never denied his divine goodnesse to the posteritie of this brother slayer, if he consider how profitable so long patience of God, such plentifull store of temporall blessings, and such an universall increase of multiplied fruitfulnesse might have beene unto them: which benefits, although they wrought no cure and amendment in those whose hearts were hardned, yet they proove that their apostasie was not caused by God. Again, In the farthest parts of the world there bee some nations, unto which the light of saving grace hath not as yet dawned: —— unto whom that parcell of generall assistance is not denied, which is alwaies from above granted unto all men; Although the nature of man hath received so sharpe a wound that it is not possible for any man to come to the knowledge of God by the helpe of his owne voluntarie contemplation, vnlesse the true light dispell the darknesse of the heart, which the sinfull & good God in his unsearchable judgement hath not so sheedde abroad in times past, as he doth in these last daies.

Lib. 2. cap. 14.

III. The Fathers speake of the universall aptnesse, whereby mans will beeing by Gods ordinary dispensation prevented and helped by the holy Ghost, may beleeve and bee converted; which notwithstanding, a stone, stocke, or beast cannot. Augustt. A possibilitie to have faith is given of nature. Againe he saith, that mans nature is capable of justification by the grace of the holy Spirit. Againe: Men may keepe Gods commandements and beleeve in God if they will; because that light enlightneth every man which commeth into this world. Prosper: To be able to have faith is the nature of man: but to have faith, is the grace of the faithfull. Augustine: This difference there is betwixt wicked men and the divels, that men though they bee exceedingly wicked, may be reconciled, if God will shew mercie; but there is no conversion reserved for the divels.

Now as concerning Christian grace, whereby a will to be converted, and to beleeve actually in Christ, is given unto men; the Fathers have not so much as dreamed, that it is common unto all, and every one: which notwithstanding some are not (c) now affraid to affirme in their writings.

* This plat-forme teacheth that Gods foreknowledge of our faith and infidelitie is the rule of predestination; which is utterly false. For first of all, the very will is a rule unto it selfe, and the divine counsels. Eph. 1.5. 11. We were predestinated according to his purpose, who worketh all things after the counsell of his owne will. Secondly, Gods election is the rule of faith that is to be given or not given. Rom. 11. verse 5. A reservation is made according to the election of grace. Thirdly, the foreknowledge of faith and infidelitie doth not extend it selfe so far as predestination, which belongs unto all men whatsoever, many of whome notwithstanding never so much as heard of Christ; now these cannot have faith nor * priuative infidelitie, but onely a negative. The same I say of those which die in their infancie beeing within the covenant, who wee beleeve are saved by the tenour of the same covenant: who for all that are neither elected for faith, nor according to faith, which they as yet had not. But if the foreseeing of faith were the rule or square of election or reprobation, the thing foreseene should belong to all men without exception, for the rule must not bee straiter than that which is ruled by it. Fourthly, foreseene faith is the effect of election, therefore it is not the rule of it. Eph. 1.5. Who hath predestinated us unto Adoption by Christ: and therefore also to faith, which receiveth the benefit of adoption. Augustine: Let us therefore (faith he) understand that calling whereby they are chosen, who are chosen not because they did beleeve, but that they should beleeve: for if they were for that cause chosen because they did beleeve, they themselves verily had chosen him before by beleeving in him, that they might deserve to be chosen. Againe: Lest any man should say, My faith or some such like thing, doth distinguish me from other men, the teacher of the Gentiles meeting with such conceits asketh, What thou hast that thou hast not received? and of whom,

c For they say that God hath given every man without exception power to beleeve if he will himselfe.
* Error 7.

De grat. cont. Manich. lib. 1. cap. 1. Ad arc. Gli. fal. sum. 6.

Aug. decor. cap. 10. & 12.
* Contempe of the Gospell.

Lib. de prad. c. 17. cap. 5. Gods will is the first rule in contingents. Cling. in loc. com. lib. 3. c. 6. And Francis Maronis faith, that Gods will is the Principall in contingents, and that it is ruled and disrected of none. Lib. 1. dist. 42. q. 1. q. Lib. 1. dist.

but of him, who distinguisheth thee from him, to whome he hath not given that which he hath given to thee. Lumb. God hath elected those whome it pleased him to elect of his owne free mercie, not because they would bee beleevers, but that they might bee beleevers: and to them hee hath given grace, not because they were faithfull, but that they might bee made faithfull: Againe: Grace is the effect of predestination. Fiftly, if God did elect according to foreseene faith, tell me why hee did foresee faith in one man rather than in another, tell me I say? for here whether thou wilt or no, thou must have recourse to the meere will of God. For God doth foresee no thing which is good in any bc fides that which he himselfe of his pleasure wil first make, And what is the cause why hee foreseeth faith in one man rather than in another? but onely because it is his wil to give one man faith, and not another. Lastly, this rule is uncertaine for faith, as appeareth by this platforme, may be utterly lost; and therefore the thing ruled to wit, predestination is made uncertaine. This a certaine Author plainely confesseth in his exposition of the Epistle to the Romanes, where hee teacheth unadvisedly that Gods decree may bee changed, and that election and reprobation have recourse one to another; because (as he saith) they depend upon the condition of faith and infidelitie.

Error 8.

Furthermore, this platforme teacheth that true and saving faith, may perish and bee lost either wholly or for ever; which notwithstanding is not true. Reason. 1. Math. 16. 18. Upon this rocke wil I build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevaile against it. Here three questions must bee asked, what the rocke is? what is meant by building on the rocke? and what is that which is promised to those which are built uponit? The rocke is faith it selfe, or Christ apprehended by faith. Chrysostome. Upon this rocke, that is (faith he) upon the faith of confession. Againe, hee setteth our feete upon the rocke, that is upon faith, for faith in Christ, may well be said to be that which cannot be broken. Againe: Christ being wise hath built his house, that is, his Church upon a rocke, that is upon the fortitude of faith, or a strong faith. Now if faith be a rocke, it remaineth constant and immoveable. To bee built upon the rocke, is to perceive the doctrine of the Gospell, to imbrace Christ our Saviour with a true faith, and to cleave fast to him with the heart. For the Corinthians are said to bee Pauls building, because hee brought them to the faith. And the Ephesians are said to be built upon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, because Paul came and preached unto them the Gospel of peace. The certaintie and firmenesse of the doctrine of the Gospel may also bee called a Rocke. Epiphanius: They shall not prevaile against the rocke, that is to say, against the truth. Hilarie. This is the blessed rocke of faith, which Peter hath confessed with his mouth. Augustine: Upon this rocke which thou hast confessed, I will build my Church. Now no man can bee built upon the confession and upon the truth, but by faith. Hence I doe conclude thus: Those that are built upon the rocke cannot fall away utterly: but those which truely believe are built upon the rocke, therefore those which truly believe doe not utterly and wholly fall away. Thirdly, the promise made to them that are built upon the rocke is, that the gates of hell shall not prevaile against them. From hence it followeth necessarily, that the Divels can but make a scrish, and shew their strength and power against the faith, and that they shall never bee able to overcome and conquer. Let us here also weigh the judgements of the Fathers. Cyprian; Lord to whom shall we goe? — signifying that the Church, which beleeveth in Christ, and which keepeth that which it hath once known, doth at no time altogether depart from him, and that they are the Church who doe abide in Gods house. But that they are not of God the Fathers planting, whom wee not see to be void of the stedfastnesse, and massie soundnesse of corne, and like to chasse vanned or blowne about with the winde of the winnowing enemie; of whom also Iohn speaketh in his 1. Epistle saying. They went out from us, but they were not of us: for if they had beene of us, they had surely remained with us. Augustine: Love which may bee lost was never true. Againe: To beleeve truely, is to beleeve constantly, stedfastly, valiantly, & firmely. So as that thou maiest not now returne unto thine, and forsake Christ. Againe, Those which are truely Saints being predestinated to reigne with God by his grace, have not onely given them now a power to persevere if they will, but perseverance it selfe. Againe: He which makes men good, maketh them to persevere in that which is good. And againe, The Church loseth none on the earth, but those which are wicked, and admitteth none into heaven but those that are good. Again; As the arke was built of square-square timber, so the Church is built of Saints; for that which is foure-square will stand stedie on which side soever you set it. And the Saints continue stedfast in every tentation. Chrysostome, This is the properie of faith, that howsoever things may fall out contrarie to the promises, yet it never falleth away utterly, and is never wholly confounded. Againe, Let us keepe faith which is a firme and sure rocke, for neither the floods, nor the windes can doe us any hurt, though they drive hard against us, because we stand stedfast upon a rocke, so also if in this life we will choose that true foundation, wee shall abide without any detriment or losse. Againe, Thou canst not overcome one faithfull man O Divell, thou knowest not what the Martyrs have done unto thee, — the flesh often fainteth in the torments, and the strength of faith faileth not. Hence it is that in the same place he speaketh after this sort. If thou makest warre with mee, thou shalt, it may bee, overcome, or perhaps, thou shalt bee overcome, but no might can overcome the Church. Furthermore: The Church is farre stronger, than the earth, yea and stronger than heaven. Againe,

In epist. ad Rom. cap. 8.

Hom. 1. in Matth. 55. and Psal. 32.

In comment. perfect. in Matth. 7.

Lib. har. 71.

De Trin. lib. 3.

Κατὰ τοῦτο. Κατὰ τοῦτον.

Epist. 1. 3.

Epist. Capp. in Apoc. com. cap. 32. Catena in 16. Mat. ex. Orig.

1 Ioh. 2. 19.

Decre. de pœnit. d. 8. c. 2. Trast. 116. in Ioh.

Ioh. 22. Theoph.

Decre. de grat. d. 2.

De temp. ferm. 36.

Epist. 16. 3.

In Iohl. 39.

Quæst. 52. ad Orosium.

Hom. 1. in 2 Tim. 1. Pemtut. omnino.

Hom. de expulf. Chrys.

Hom. 25 in Gen.

the earth, yea and stronger than heaven. Againe, Faith in God is a certaine secure anchor, Gregory: Because the light of the elect is not extinguished by temptation, we did not say there is a night made but an evening; namely, because temptation doth oftentimes hide the light of righteousnesse in the hearts of the elect, but it doth not put it quite out: it makes it as it were twinkle and looke waune, but it doth not extinguish it. Angelom. The observation of Gods commandements, being established in the hearts of the elect by faith, hope, and love of that heavenly recompence, can by no let of impiall things be dissolved. Againe: The hearts of the elect are compared to a foure-square figure, which have learned so to remaine in the strength of faith, that they cannot bee removoved from the certainty of their estate by any repugnancie of those things they meete with, no not by death it selfe. Andreas: Those are found to be abortive or untimely borne children, who have departed from the true light, which is Christ. Thomas: If we by the revelation of our heavenly Father (shall thou confesse, namely, when our conversation is in the heavens, that Iesus Christ is the Sonne of the living God, and if it shall be said unto us, Thou art Peter, — for every one that followeth Christ, is a rocke; but he, against whom the gates of hell prevaile, is neither to be termed the rocke whereon Christ doth build his Church, neither the Church, nor a part of the Church which Christ builded upon the rocke. And againe: Although though must bee sifted a little, yet thou hast the seed of faith hidden in thee: though the leaves bee blowne downe with the tempters winde, yet the roote is fresh.

Second reason: Matth. 6. 31. Leade us not into temptation, &c. that is, doe not utterly forsake us and deliver us up to Satan. Augustine. God leadeth a man into temptation, when he suffers him to be tempted, that he may trie him, and not destroy him —: And hee deliveroth from evill, when he suffers us not to be tempted beyond our power. Gregory: The grace of the holy Ghost qualifies the temptations of the adversaries by dispensation, that those which may bee, may but scorch with their heate, and not burne up with their fire. Hence I thus reason: whatsoever we aske according to Gods will, it shall be given us: but we aske according to Gods will, that we may not be utterly forsaken in temptation, for our Advocate taught us so to pray. Therefore that we be not utterly forsaken in temptation, shal be given of God. Now whom God doth not utterly forsake, he doth not utterly fall away. And this Christ taketh for granted in the elect. Matth. 24. 24. So as that, if it were possible, they should deceive the very elect.

Third reason: If there bee a totall or utter falling away from a true faith, then is there also required a second ingrafting into Christ, and consequently a seale of the second ingrafting, baptizing anew, that is to say, anabaptisme: for so often as we are borne againe, we are to be baptized. This is Augustines ground

As the carnall generation is one, neither can a man enter into the wombe again: even so the spirituall regeneration (for we are once borne, and wee are also once borne again. Therefore also it is requisite, that the Sacrament of regeneration bee once received. If it chance to fall out by sinne, that some are weakned who are regenerated, they have meede of cure by repentance, and not by baptisme. But those that doe utterly or wholly fall away from faith and grace, are the second time to be ingrafted into Christ: and consequently, they are not once regenerated but againe: and therefore they are oftner than once to be baptized.

Trast. in Ioh. 11. cap. 12.

Fourth reason: 1. Ioh. 3. 9. Whosoever is borne of God committeth not sinne, because his seede remaineth in him. We must here marke that he saith his seede remaineth in him, that is to say, that it doth not depart nor vanish away: And this seede is the very word of God, which remaineth in us by faith, and doth not remaine, faith being utterly lost. This seede also is immortall, because it will never perish, if it bee truly sowne in our hearts.

A fifth reason is taken out of the sixt to the Romanes, * If Christ having once died cannot die any more, then wee which are his members being dead together with him, shall not die any more in sinne. * But Christ having once died cannot die any more.* Therefore wee which are his members shall not die any more in sinne. The proposition is in the eight vers. and hath a manifest ground. For by the vertue of the mysticall communion, which is had with Christ by faith, his spirituall life, which cannot perish, flowing into his members, maketh them in like manner that they die no more in sinne. The assumption is in the 9. and 10. verse; the conclusion in the eleventh. Moreover, those which are the members of Christs body, shall grow up unon a perfect man: Eph. 4. 12, 13. and 1. Iohn 2. 29. but all those which have a true faith are members of Christs body, therefore those which have a true saving faith shall grow up unto a perfect man: and therefore those which doe truly beleeve shall not perish, but obtaine salvation.

* Proposition.

* Assumption.

* Conclusion.

For the better understanding of this doctrine, two things must bee sought for; first, whence it is that faith perisheth not? Answ. If wee consider faith by it selfe, that is, in the owne nature, it may perish and be lost; but if wee consider the confirming grace, which God hath promised to them that beleeve, saving faith doth not perish. It is by reason of the second grace freely promised, that the first grace doth not perish. To you it is given for Christ, that ye should not onely beleeve in him, but also suffer for his sake. One of these (saith Augustine) belongs unto the beginning, the other to the end: but both are Gods gifts, because both are given. A Christian mans beginning is to beleeve in Christ, and the best end hee can make is to suffer for Christ. Ier. 32. 40. I will

Phil. 1. 29.

will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will never depart from them, to doe them good, (loe the everlasting forgiveneſſe of ſinnes) and I will put my feare in their hearts, that they ſhall not depart from mee. (behold the perſeverance of faith, and regeneration that ſhall never be loſt.) Phil. 1.6. He that hath begun this good worke in you, will finiſh it unto the end.

Secondly: it may be demanded how farre foorth the faithfull loſe grace and the holy ſpirit? Anſwer: Diſtinguiſh the faithfull, and diſtinguiſh grace: There bee foure ſorts of beleevers; the firſt are they which heare the word and underſtand it, The ſecond are they which doe heare, underſtand, and for a time approve it. The third, are thoſe who doe heare, underſtand, approove, and bring forth ſome fruits; The fourth are ſuch as doe heare, underſtand, approove, bring foorth ſome fruits, and lay hold vpon Chriſt the Redeemer by the hand of a lively faith unto ſalvation. Theſe are true beleevers and cannot utterly either fall away from God, or periſh: howſoever all other beſides theſe, both may, and uſe to fall away and periſh. Furthermore, Grace is either the firſt, or ſecond. The firſt, is the free favour of God who embraceth thoſe that are his, beeing in Chriſt, unto everlaſting life. From this grace the faithfull are ſaid to fall after this faſhion. As ſoone as they have committed ſome hainous ſinne againſt the law of God, they doe grievouſly offend him: God beeing offended, changeth the effects of grace, into the effects of a certaine hatred, not againſt the faithfull themſelves, but againſt their ſinnes, and this both within, & without. Within, when he maketh them to feele an accuſing conſcience, and witneſſing that God is diſpleaſed, and that they are made guiltie of death by their ſin. Without, when they taſte of Gods anger againſt them in the outward chaſtiſements of the bodie. And thus farre they fall from his fatherly love, and are become the enemies of God after a ſort: I ſay, After a ſort, becauſe God doth not lay downe his fatherly affection: & doth not alter his purpoſe of adoption and eternall life. Although the faithfull do fall away, ſo much as lieth in them, yet God remaineth a Father in Chriſt; and they as touching right unto eternall life, remaine ſonnes. Iohn 10.28. They ſhall never periſh, neither ſhall any plucke them out of my hand. Here ſome doe ſay, that the ſheepe cannot be pluckt out, but yet they may of their owne accord ſlinke away; but without reaſon: for the ſheepe which revolteth is pluckt away by the divell, when it doth revolt. And as hee which continueth in Chriſts word is verily his diſciple, ſo he that doth not fall away, but abides a ſheepe, is verily a ſheepe. Rom. 8.35. Who ſhall ſeparate us from the love of Chriſt? Rom. 11.29. The gifts and calling of God are ἀμετανόητα without repentance. 2. Tim. 2.19. The foundation of God remaineth ſure, and hath this ſeale, The Lord knoweth who are his.

The ſecond grace is either imputed or inherent; imputed is in juſtification, againſt wherof is remiſſion of ſinnes. And this remaineth and ſhall for ever remaine ſure as touching ſinnes paſſed. That ſaying of the Schoolemen is moſt true: Sinnes once forgiven continue ſo always. But when that any faithfull man ſhall fall grievouſly, the pardon of that fall is granted in Gods decree; notwithſtanding no pardon is actually given of God, nor received of man untill he doe repent: yea if he ſhould never repent (which notwithſtanding is impoſſible) hee ſhould bee damned as beeing guiltie of eternall death by this offence. For there is no pardon of any new ſin, without a new act of faith and repentance.

Inherent grace, is either faith, or the gift which followeth faith; In faving faith wee muſt conſider, the act, and the habit. The act of faith is the very action of apprehending, or an unfained apprehenſion of Chriſt. Now this faith may be loſt according to ſome act: The very habit alſo or power of faith, may in it ſelfe bee loſt; but by reaſon of confirming grace, faith doth not periſh as touching the eſſence thereof, but it is leſſned and abated according to ſome degree. And hence it followeth that our communion with Chriſt may be diminiſhed, but that our union cannot be diſſolved. There remained in David after his fall, the ſeede of true faith and regeneration: as appeareth by his words, Pſal. 51, 11. Take not thy holy ſpirit from me. It is alſo the judgement of the ancient Fathers, that the roote of faith in Peters fall was not taken away and aboliſhed, but onely moowed and that it did as it were waxe drie, that it was but onely ſhaken and troden on, and that it did not utterly vaniſh. Here alſo we are to give eare a while to Gratian, who conſenteth with us, and to his purpoſe hath gathered many teſtimonies together out of the Fathers. Hath love (ſaith he) taken roote? bee ſecure: no evill can proceede. Againe: Love doth utterly eſtrange the minde, wherein it hath once taken poſſeſſion, from the delights of the world. Love is ioyned —— to God and united inſeparably; and is alwaies invincible in all. Againe: Love is an inviſible unction; which ſtands as it were in ſtead of a roote to him, in whomſoever it ſhall bee, which cannot wither though the ſumme doe parch: whatſoever is rooted is nouriſhed with the heate of the ſunne, and doth not wither. Againe: He looſes backe after the plough, who after that hee hath begun to doe good workes, returnes to evill, which he did forſake. Which in no wiſe befalleth to the elect. Againe: At the elect doe ſo goe forward unto good things; that they doe not returne to the committing of evill. And againe: The ſitting and mooving of the ſpirit may bee thus underſtood. For as touching ſome vertues it doth alwaies abide in the hearts of the Saints: but according unto other it comes as that which will returne, and returnes, as purpoſing to come. For as concerning faith, faith, hope, and charitie, and other graces without which it is not poſſible to ſtand in the ſtate of juſtification, as meekneſſe, chaſtitie, ſubjection, and ſuch like) it never faileth, that the ſeede of God remaineth in the hearts of the regenerate. But many haue been the occaſions of the diſeaſe: and the diſeaſe it ſelfe: and working of mir acles, & ſo ſome times very perſons with the diſeaſe, and ſtudies were without cure, or ſolace.

The Schoolemen alledge Auguſtine, to the contrary opinion, where he ſaith, This doubtleſſe is the ſtate which is vouchſafed to the elect ſaid downe all hookes of this enmitie, that no guilt doth remaine ſaid, that no ſin remaineth to be imputed by his owne free will unto wrath, but that the grace of God, which hath given remiſſion. Againe: This Godhath now given the gift of ſin ſome waies unto ſeeming of his children, whome hee hath elected in Chriſt, &c. In whome he hath given, hope, and love.

But hee ſpeaketh not theſe things of thoſe which are indeede in the ſtocke of the promiſe but of thoſe which haue ſo called of us, and which beare the name and profeſſion of ſonnes. Furthermore: he ſpeaketh of ſuch as haue faith and love in opinion, and imagination, and truly and as touching outward practiſe. For Auguſtine in the ſame place hath ſo expounded his meaning: We muſt beleeve that ſome of the ſonnes of perdition, —— doe begiane to love, and for a time faithfully and juſtly in the faith that worketh by love, and afterwards fall. ——. Thirdly, hee ſpeaketh of faith and love as they are imperfect vertues, and as it were lately ſprung up: and not as they are found, perfect, & true, to wit, as touching the truth of their eſſence, ſo Auguſtine: Love is ſprung up within thee; but it is not perfited: doe not deſpaire, but nouriſh it leſt it bee ſtifled. And Gratian: This love which was an herbe in Peter before his denial, and which ſpringeth up in every one, is loſt and repaired, before it be ſtrengthned, and made perfect. And indeede for the manifeſting of the truth of faith and love there is required perſeverance, by which it might bee knowne that theſe and ſuch like vertues have taken deepe roots in the heart, and are grounded upon an earneſt and conſtant affection, that they may never bee overcome of temptations.

Obiect. 1. Sinne and the grace of the holy ſpirit cannot ſtand together. Anſw. This is true of the ſin that reigneth, or which is committed with full conſent of will, but the regenerate doe not ſin with a whole or full will. And I lay this foundation of this judgement. In tentation wee muſt conſider two things, the beginning or ground, and the degrees. The ground is our owne concupiſcence, that is, our inbred corruption. The ſubject thereof is the whole man, but eſpecially the faculties of mans ſoule, the mind, will, and affections. And in theſe it doth immediatly exiſt and reigne alone before a ſinner bee converted. And a man beeing not regenerated, be hee what hee will be, he is fleſh every jot of him. But after that a man is regenerated, the fleſh is no more maſter, or ſoveraigne, in ſelfe, in reſpect of the whole man, but is brought into ſubjection, and the whole man though both the fleſh and ſpirit remaine as touching nature diſtinct, as one ſubſtance, and the twilight: the light doth not appeare alone, but with darkeneſſe: ſo the regenerate is not ſeene alone, but with the light. And the reaſon thereof is grounded upon two principles. Firſt, that the fleſh, or the whole man is not regenerate in any part, and ſo conſequently the whole man is ſtained in every part, & the whole thing which is created is ſtained, becauſe the whole thing which is created is not capable of grace, but in the higheſt degree, therefore all in the whole man is the fleſh, yea the ſame fleſh in the higheſt degree, not the ſpirit in the higheſt degree, nor in any meane degrees, but in the loweſt degrees, partly fleſh and partly ſpirit (as lukewarme water is ſimply and indifferently called a mixture of hote and cold) and ſo not ſhorowghout. Hence it followeth, that concupiſcence may exiſt and bee with the grace of the holy ſpirit, ſo that it bee ſtill in the fleſh. The degrees of tentation are, as Iames teacheth, innumerable.

The firſt, is abſtraction or drawing away when the minde receiveth a motion and way-ward thought for the committing of ſinne, together with a certaine delectation of the affection: when ſinfull deſires doe themſelves with the baite hanging vpon the hooke. This ſo far all Diuines thinke a regenerate man may come, and it is moſt certaine. For himſelfe is that Paul complaineth that he was held captive of ſinne.

The third degree is conception, namely when there is a will, conſent, and purpoſe to commit evill. And when concupiſcence doth come thus farre, there bee ſome that ſay that all repentance and faith is driven out & gone but not finally. There is indeede in the unregenerate in whome ſinne reigneth, a full conſent but in the regenerate, in whome the fleſh and the ſpirit are two contraries fountaines of actions, the conſent is more remiſſe and unperfect for they doe ſo will, and hate they will, and ſo nill as that they will it not as they would, and as they are taught by his owne example.

The fourth degree is birth of ſinne: when after conſent an evill worke is actually committed. And in this act the ſame man beeing regenerate, doth at the ſame inſtant both ſinne and not ſinne. He ſinneth onely according unto the fleſh, and in that part wherein he is not renewed, he doth not ſinne, but before and after the fact doth loath his ſinne. And as when the ſpirit prevaileth, the action is not free from all pollution of the fleſh: ſo when the fleſh prevaileth the action is not ſo horrible in the regenerate, as it is in thoſe in whome ſinne reigneth. Nevertheleſſe I confeſſe that in every grievous fall the fleſh doth get the tri à Lorreslib.

Maſterie

Mor. al. lib 4. cap. 27.

Decre. & grat. cap. 11

* Propositio.
* Assumtion.
* Conclusion.

mission, and that the gift of true faith, effect the stirring of the will, by the which he did it for one for a time, and that it is not true that the elected and quite put out.

And this last degree of perfection; namely, when sinne being perfited and finished by custom inveterate and customs, groweth as it were into a habit. So saith Gregory: Sinne al-ready is finished in us, when by the same sinne our nature is finished in us. For such sinners as commit sinne directly against the truth, as they who sinne against the holy Ghost, whom he calleth blaspheming as also saints whom he saith to sinne unto death, and all the rest either of ignorance, or with the infirmity of weakenesse of nature. And Isidore: A sinner is with-stood with double custome, and first unwillingly, but afterward he is drawne with delight, and so commeth to sinne willingly. And a man having fastened with these linkes, doth first bound as it were with a chaine of vices. This last degree befals not the regenerate, and if it did, faith and the holy Spirit should bee shaken out and banished.

Obiect. II. Adam when he was void of corruption fell wholly away: therefore much more they, who being borne and regenerated after Adam shall beleeve. Answer. The reason is unlike: For we have (saith August.) by this grace of God, in that according to the which is good, and in the confirmation keeping of the same, not only power to doe that which wee will, but also will to doe that which we can, which Adam wanted. For one of these was in him, but the other was not. For to receive (saith he) wanted not grace, because as yet he had not lost it. But to continue in it he wanted the helpe of grace, without which hee was not able as all to doe it: and he received power if he would, but he had not will answerable to his power, for if it had, come in him he should have persevered.

Obiect. III. * The member of an harlot cannot be the member of Christ. * But a true beleever who is actually a member of Christ, may bee the member of an harlot: * Therefore one that truly beleeves, may come to bee no member of Christ. Answ. The member of Christ is diuerſly distinguished; for there is either a true or an apparent member. An apparent member is that, which is not a member according to election, nor in it ſelfe but in shew only; that is, judged by meanes of outward profeſſion to be in the visible church. And it is like a woodden legge fastned to the bodie by art. A true member is either by destination and appointment, or now actually one. Members by appointment are all those who are elected: although they bee not as yet regenerated or borne. An actuall member is either one that is lively, or halfe dead. A lively member is that, which is according to election, and in very deede ingrafted into Christ, and ruled by his spirit. That is an halfe dead member: which doth indeede belong to Gods election, and is grafted into Christ: but yet being hurt by some grievous fall, hath so much as in it is, lost the grace of the holy Spirit. Now I answer to the proposition: First, a member of Christ is the new may bee the member of an harlot, as a woodden ſtoore, which is like vnto the member of a true image, may bee an apparent member of a man: Secondly, a member of Christ by appointment (in Gods decree) may bee the member of an harlot, as Paul who was appointed to be one of the number of the elect: Thirdly, the whole, was for a time a member of Satan per ſecuting the Church: Thirdly, the whole is lively and actuall members of Christ, and ſo continueth: against both the member of an harlot: base members also as is graſſe and halfe dead may be: But how ſoever hee remaineth in Christ in respect of incorporation and the myſticall union, yet hee is out of him as touching the ſorce and efficacy of the Spirit, which for a time through his owne default he doth not poſſeſſe, until hee doth repent. A legge that is troubled with the palſie, and receiveth no nourishment, is a true legge, because in respect of union it is incorporated into the bodie, howſoever it hath almost loſt all communion and fellowship with the reſt of the members. Neither muſt this which I ſay ſeeme ſtrange, that the member of Christ may in ſome ſort bee the member of an harlot: because the coniunction is not of the ſame kinde. The coniunction with Christ is ſpirituall, but that which is with an harlot is corporall.

This platforme giveth unto every man a free will flexible and inclinable to both parts by grace, and teacheth that it is in mans will to apply himſelfe to grace being given, by the helpe of universall grace, or to reject the ſame through the weakeneſſe of corrupt nature. But this is falſe: for the firſt universall grace is not effectuall, unleſſe it be confirmed by the ſecond grace following it. As for example: If a man ſhall receive power to beleeve if he will, yet he ſhall never actually and indeede beleeve except there bee alſo given the helpe of the other grace, which bringeth the former into act. But this ſecond grace is not given to all and every one. Moreover, this opinion is repugnant to very plaine places of Scripture. Ier. 32.40. I will make an everlaſting covenant with them, that I will not turne away from them to doe them good, and I will put my feare in their hearts, that they ſhall not depart from mee. Againe, 1. Cor. 1.8.9. God ſhall confirme you unto the end blameleſſe: God is faithfull by whome ye are called unto the fellowſhip of his Sonne Ieſus Chriſt our Lord. It is alſo contrary to Chriſts ſpeech: John 6.44. Every man that hath heard and hath learned of the Father, commeth unto mee. This grace (ſaith Auguſtine) which is ſecretly inſuſed into mens hearts by Gods liberalitie, is refuſed of the hard heart. And afterward: If it had pleaſed the Father to teach them to come unto Chriſt, who accounted the word of the croſſe fooliſhneſſe, without all doubt they alſo would have come; why doth hee not not teach all? If we ſhall ſay, becauſe they will not learne, whom he doth not teach, it will bee anſwered us; and where is that which is ſaid unto him, Thou O Lord, converteſt and quickeneſt us? Againe: The effect of Gods mercy cannot be in mans power ſo, as that he ſhould ſhew mercy to him in vaine if a man be unwilling, becauſe if he would have mercy on them, he could call them ſo, as they ſhould be fitted to move, underſtand, and follow. And againe; God ſheweth mercy to none in vaine, but unto whom he ſheweth mercy, him he calleth ſo, as he knoweth to be fitting for him, that he may not reject him who calls him. Neither doe I here reſpect the diſtinction of ſufficient and effectuall grace: for I acknowledge no grace ſufficient for the converſion of a ſinne, which is not effectuall, as I have already ſaid before: becauſe free-will is altogether wanting in ſpirituall things. We are ſtarke dead in ſinnes, and our ſufficiency is wholly from GOD, Therefore there is in us beſide the want of originall righteouſneſſe, a threefold impotency. The firſt is that, whereby we are unable to receive or deſire ſupernaturall grace offered by God. The ſecond is that, whereby we are unable to uſe it lawfully. The third is that, whereby we are unable to retaine and keepe it. And therefore there are certaine degrees of grace to be beſtowed in the true converſion of a ſinner, in reſpect of which, Auguſtine makes a five fold grace; preventing, preparing, working, coworking & the gift of perſeverance. Preventing grace is that, whereby God inſpireth into the minde of the ſinner that is to be converted, good thoughts, a good purpoſe, and a deſire of ſupernaturall grace. The meanes whereby preventing grace is given is the voyce and preaching of the Goſpel, by the which being heard and thought upon, the holy Ghoſt doth ſhew forth his efficacy and power. For hence it is that the Goſpell is called the miniſtry of the Spirit, 2. Cor. 3. 6. And that faith is ſaide to be by hearing, Rom. 10.17. Therefore they which are out of the Church doe want the preventing grace, unleſſe it be extraordinarily conferred, which yet is very ſeldome done. Preparing grace is that, whereby it is given us to conſent unto God offering grace, or whereby the minde and will are prepared, that they may yeeld aſſent and obedience to the holy Spirit. For as all ſupernaturall grace in reſpect of Gods donation, is altogether from him: even ſo we obtaine our conſentment and power to receive grace conferred no otherwiſe than by the gift of God. Working grace is that, whereby we are delivered from the dominion of ſinne, and are renewed in minde, will and affection, having received power to obey God. Coworking grace is that, whereby God conferreth and perfiteth the grace of renewing being received. And without this grace following, the firſt is unprofitable. For when grace is given by God, and received, of us by the ſecond, we doe not uſe it lawfully, but by this third grace. Auguſtine ſaith well: If in ſo great weakeneſſe of this life the will renewed ſhould be ſo left unto the regenerate, that they may remaine in Gods help, if they themſelves will, and if God ſhould not make them for to will, among ſo many evill ſo mighty temptations, the will would faint by reaſon of the weakeneſſe thereof. Mans weakeneſſe therefore is relieved, that through the grace of God, there ſhould bee will inſeparably annexed to the power: and therefore the will though it be but weake, yet ſhould not for all that faint and be overcome by adverſity. Againe: Therefore that wee may will bee wrought without us; but when wee will, and ſo will, that wee doe alſo, bee coworketh with us. Yet notwithſtanding without him working that wee may will, or coworking when wee doe will, we have no power to perform the good works of godlineſſe. The gift of perſeverance is that, whereby, after that we have received the grace of renovation, we do alſo receive a will to perſevere and continue conſtantly in that good which we can doe. Hieromes: That ſufficeth me not, which bee hath once beſtowed, I aſke that I may receive, and when I ſhall receive, I aſke againe. Theſe five graces ſpoken of even now, being taken ſeverally and aſunder by themſelves, are not ſufficient unto ſalvation (for the preventing grace is nothing availeable without the preparing grace, & the working grace, without the coworking grace) yet being ioyned together they are ſufficient. And hence it plainely appeareth, that there is not any grace truely ſufficient unto the ſalvation of a ſinner, that is ſtarke dead in ſinnes, the which is not alſo effectuall. If ſo much ſtrength were given to one, that would lift up a mighty burthen, as were ſufficient, that is, ſo much as did exceed the weight of the thing that is to be lifted up, out of all doubt motion would follow, it would come up: ſo if God doe give ſo much grace, as is ſufficient, that is, as would overcome the hardneſſe of the heart, the corruption thereof could not poſſibly hinder it from being converted. Moreover, if theſe five graces doe concurre in the converſion of a ſinner, the regenerate perſon ſhall not have free will flexible alike either to good or evill; neither ſhall it be in our choyce to obey or reſiſt the motion of the Spirit. Yea from hence it followeth, that it multiplieth grace, and that the will is ſo effectually ruled by it: if thoſe that are truely converted, as that they follow ſuch and ſuch luſts with an inflexible and ſtedfaſt affection. The Spirit promiſed us of GOD doth not enable us to walke if we will, but makes us walke indeed. Thoſe which are drawne, have not onely power to runne if ſo be that they themſelves will, but they runne indeede after Chriſt. Hee which is borne of God ſinneth not: yea he cannot ſinne. Furthermore, perſeverance in faith doth wholly depend upon Gods will, as theſe words of Paul doe ſhow, I have reſerved unto my ſelfe ſeven thou-

Ad Simplic. lib. 1. quaeſt. 2.

Gal. 1, 15.

adversus.

Aug. de Corr. & Grat. c. 12.

Prædeſtinat.

Epiſt. ad Cresſph.

Operans.

Cooperans.

Cant. 13.

Deprad. ſanct. cap. 8.

De corr. & grat. c. 12.

De grat. & l. arb. c. 17.

Donum perſeverandi.

Ezek. 36. 37. Cant. 1. 3.

1 Ioh. 3. 9.

Rom. 11. 4.

thousand I mean, which have not bowed the knee unto Baal: And those which doe truly beleeve, have received of God both power to persevere in grace, if they will, and also will to doe that which they have power to do. So Augustine: There is in us by this grace of God (which is by Christ) in receiving of good, and in the constant keeping of the same, not only power to doe that wh. ch we will, but will to doe that which we have power to doe. Therefore those that doe truly beleeve, cannot but persevere.

Object. I. Isa. 5. 3, O Inhabitants of Jerusalem, and ye men of Iudah, judge between me and my vineyard: what could I have done any more unto my vineyard, that I have not done unto it? Why have I looked that it should bring forth grapes, and it bringeth forth wild grapes? These Iewes therefore had the helpe of God which was throughly sufficient unto conversion, and the leading of a life acceptable to God. Answer. God speaketh in this place of the * sufficiency of outward meanes, that is, of the preaching of his word, of his benefits, and chastisments wherby they were sufficiently invited and led unto salvation, but that they were of such peevish and perverse dispositions, God therefore did that to this wicked vineyard, which if he had done in a good vineyard, it would have brought forth the fruite of obedience. And here he speaketh not of the sufficiency of inward grace, whereby an evill vineyard might be changed into a good vineyard. Thou wilt say, that God then hath no just cause to expostulate with the Iewes: that they brought not forth fruite; because hee gave them not grace to repent and bring forth fruite which could by no means be had, if he doe not giue it. I answer, that God could not justly have expostulated with the Iewes, if he had owed them grace, and being bound to give it, had not given it, if they had not cast away the grace which they received in their first parents, by which they might have brought forth fruite best seeming repentance: If he had denyed them being anew desirous to receive the grace which now is lost, But God is bound to no man: and we have cast away that grace which was bestowed in Adam. And we doe not desire nor care for it being cast away: therefore God doth most justly expostulate with us, if we bring not forth fruite.

Object. II. Matth 23. 37. How often would I have gathered thy children together, and thou wouldest not? How did Christ will, and so will that he complaines of those who would not, if he had not through his helpe made them able to will, whom he knew could not will? Answer. Christ is here said to have willed to gather them together, not by the will of his good pleasure, which may never be resisted, but by his signifying or revealed will. For he is said to will to gather all unto himselfe, because by the preaching of the word he calleth all in common unto salvation, and prefixed to himselfe this end of preaching, that they should commit themselves to his protection and fidelity. By this will therefore hee may will to gather the Iewes together, though in the meane time hee doe not helpe them, that they themselves may bee able to will. And hee doth also justly complaine of those that will not, because mens impotency to that which is good, and their bondage under sinne, whereby they are made to nill, and unable to will that which is good, commeth not from the Creator, but from him who of his owne accord fell away from the Creator. Secondly; I say that Christ is here said to have willed, not as he is God effectually mollifying and converting the hearts of men, but as he was a minister of the circumcision, while he sought the conversion of the Iewes by preaching. A place altogether like is in Act. 7. 51. where the Iewes are said to have resisted against, or resisted the holy Ghost. But these words are to be understood, not in regard of the inward and effectuall operation of the spirit, but in respect of the outward ministery of the Prophets. It pleased Lumbard also thus to interpret this place: How often would I have gathered thy children, and thou wouldest not? that is, So many as I have gathered together, I did it by my effectuall will thou being unwilling.

Object. III. Revel. 3. 20. I stand at the doore and knocke: if any shall open it unto me, I will come in unto him. Therefore all, at whose doore Christ knocketh, have sufficient grace whereby they are able to open if they will. Hee is unwise that knocketh at the dore, if he know assuredly that there is no body within that is able to open it. Answer; This place favoureth not universall grace, for these at whose doore Christ knocketh, are those which beleeve and are converted: and hee knocketh at their hearts, partly by his word, partly by afflictions, that he might stirre up their languishing faith, and increase and confirme his fellowship with them. You may reade the like in Cant. 5. 1. 2. Open unto me my sister, my love, my doove.

Tenthly, this platforme disagreeth with it selfe. For it saith that God doth conferre to all men all the helpes of nature and grace, and that he is not wanting to any so, but that he may obtaine salvation. But I say, and that out of this platforme, that God is wanting to some offenders; because hee giveth them onely a power to persevere in faith if they will or (if you had rather) a power to will to persevere, and makes them not to persevere actually and indeed: And unlesse this grace be given, it is not possible that any should obtaine salvation by persevering. For it is a most sure rule: a man doth not that good thing, which he grace he is able for to do, unlesse God make him to doe it, as he hath made him able to doe if he will. Therefore hee, to whom the very act of perseverance is not not given, being smitten with the violence of some grievous temptation, without delay will fall away from faith, and shall be damned.

Lastly, this hypothesis or platforme is but the varnishing and fresh trimming over of certaine opinions, which the Church in former ages did condemne. The Pelagians taught that men were redeemed by Christ, but not made free: because God distributed his gifts according to the capablenes of them which came to receive them. The same did Faustus the Pelagian also affirme. How hath God (saith he) redeemed all the world? do we not see men to live still in their sinnes? How shall we thinke that they are ransomed, whom wee doe see still to continue captives? Let us gather that which is here meant by using a similitude; as for example: If any embassadour or priest purposing to make intercession for a city taken by warre, shall bestow a very great ransome, and set free from his servitude whole the cheife Commander, all the multitude which is in captivity, insomuch that they are altogether delivered from all constraint or necessity of bondage: and then if happily either their usuall delight, or some soothing slave, shall so instantly urge some of the captivity, as that every one returning servant and slave to his own will, shall refuse that freely bestowed benefit: shall we say that the contempt of the unthankefull captive hath lessened the estimation of the ransome? or that hee which redeemed him hereby doth any way diminish the good will of him that ransometh? surely no. For even as he which returnes may be well accepted with him that doth ransome him, so is the guilty of contempt who did not returne: Thus we see that the Pelagians did forge or frame a redemption through Christ, without deliverance. And what else do they who publish in their pamphlets, y all and every one on Gods part are redeemed, but not saved, because they will not beleeve? And now let us heare the confutation of this opinion. Augustine saith: You say they are redeemed but they are not delivered, they are washed, but they are not cleansed: these bee your monstrous opinions: those are the paradoxes of the Pelagian heretickes, &c. But I pray thee tell me how can this redemption bee understood to be true which redeemed from evill, which redeemed from all their sinnes? for whatsoever we make mention for redemption, there also is understood a washing: and what is that but the precious blood of the immaculate lambe Christ Iesus? and concerning this ransome, why should we aske any other, wherefore it was given? let him that paid the price, make the answer. This is (saith he) my blood which is shed for many, for the remission of sins. Proceed I pray proceed and as you say in the Sacraments of our Saviour, some are baptised, but they are not saved: they are redeemed, but they are not delivered: so say you also; Christ his blood is shed for them for the remission of sins, but they are cleansed by the remission of no sin. They are wonderfull strange, and untrue things which you affirme. Concerning the redemption of Christs blood, by reason of the exceeding errors which have growne in respect thereof, insomuch that some, even as their owne writings doe witnesse, doe hold that it was shed even for those ungodly ones, who from the beginning of the world, until the passion of our Lord, were dead in their ungodlinesse, and punished with eternall damnation, contrary to that saying of the Prophet: O death, I will be thy death, and thy sting O Hell; wee doe decree that it ought simply and faithfully to be held and taught, according to the Evangelicall and Apostolicall truth, that we judge that this ransome was given for them, of whom the Lord himselfe saith: Even as Moses lifted up the Serpent in the wildernesse; so must the Sonne of man be lifted up, that every one which beleeves in him may not perish, but have eternall life. So God loved the world, that he gave his onely begotten Son, that every one that beleeved in him might not perish, but have everlasting life. And the Apostle saith, Christ was once offered for the taking away of the sinnes of many.

Prosper ascribes this platforme of universall grace unto the Pelagians. This is (saith hee) their very opinion and profession; That Adam sinning, every man sinned, and that no man is saved by his own works, but by the grace of God in regeneration. And yet that the reconcilement which is in the Sacrament of Christs blood, is without exception offered, and to all men so that whosoever will come unto faith and baptisme, may be saved: and that God did foreknow before the creation of y world, who should beleeve, or who should remaine in that faith, which must after ward bee propped and helped by his grace, and that he predestinated them unto his kingdome, who being freely called, he foresaw that they would be worthy of election, & that they would depart out of this life, making a good end. And that therefore every man is provoked to beleeve and doe good by godly institutes, that no man may despaire of the attainment of eternall life, seeing that there is a reward prepared for a voluntary devotion. The difference I confesse consists in this, that the Pelagians doe either wholly ascribe unto nature the ability to doe well, or else partly to nature, & partly to grace; but this platforme ascribes all things wholly unto grace, which indeed is very right: but whilest they goe about to ordaine universall grace, they doe not free themselves. But are rather more enraged. For most true is that saying of Peter Mart.: Whilst these men make grace so common to all, they turne grace into nature. And I would willingly be certified whether they who have received this grace, be regenerate or no: If they bee regenerate, then all men are regenerate: if they be not regenerate, then have all men power to beleeve, and to attaine salvation if they will, yea even whilest they remaine unregenerate. But this power, if it be in man before his conversion, will not differ much from nature. And if so be that grace extend it selfe as far as nature, we must not pray more for grace than for nature: neither needs wee any more pray for the conversion of unbeleevers, because it is in their owne power, by reason of generall grace, to

* So Hierome on this place. Loquitur de sufficientia externarum mediorum, non interna gratia.

Voluntatis bene placiti vel boni signi.

Rom. 7. 18.

Lib. 1. dist. 46.

Errour 12.

Aug. cont. Iul. Pelag. lib. 3. cap. 3.

Lib. de grat. & lib. arb. 21. cap. 16.

Cont. Iul. lib. 3. cap. 5.

Errour 10. Post Gallo perseverare.

a Concil. Valent. Anno. 855. cap. 4.

Epist. ad Augustin.

1. ad Com. 1. cap. 2.

be converted if they will; Prosper also ascribeth this platforme to the Pelagains in these verses.

Lib. car. do ingratit.

Thus we determine of that grace that makes Us Gods owne people, and to him full deere:
But yee affirme that no man is forsaken,
But that the world from sinne if freath cleere,
And passing none, doth proffer meere salvation,
To all without exception; yea they come
Guided by their owne list to this vocation,
And motions of the minde, directing some
To the embracing of that offered light,
Which unto all that will, doth cleere the sight.

But afterwards he condemneth it in this sort

Lets see how you can prove that Christ his grace
Proffers Gods kingdome and true blessednesse
To all men borne, letting none overpasse,
To whom it graunteth not this happinesse,
When even at this time through the whole worlds frame,
And compasse of the earth, wherein wee live,
Christs Gospell is not knowne, nor yet his name;
I cannot say but that he could it give
Even as the first, to all that breathe on earth,
Or ever in this world receiveth breath,

And againe he saith:

If no man be whom he will not redeeme,
No doubt but that his will shall be effected,
But of a great part he makes no esteeme,
Who in infernall darkenesse selve rejected.
Now if the divers motions of the minde,
And a peculiar perfect liberty,
Doe make a different cause, to all mankinde,
Gods will most free from inability,
Either receiveth strength from humane pleasure,
Or wanteth strength, when will attaines that treasure.

And againe; he answereth the Pelagians, who say that by willing it we are able to attaine Gods grace, or elle to resist it by nilling it, after this manner:

How falls it out that this almighty grace
Which saveth all, rejects the worke it wrought,
When neither cause, condition, time, nor place,
Can for a hinderance thereunto be brought?

And againe.

What would you say when you doe plainly see,
How Christ his grace in twins a difference makes?
And those who at one time conceived be,
And whom the world into her bosome takes,
It doth distinguish, granting one heavens blisse,
The other hell, where griefe and horror is?
To say the will directs, you speake amisse.

And againe,

No man can hold them justly culpable,
Or guilty of this sinne to whom Gods might
Did never shew it selfe so favourable,
As to appeare, no not in glimmering sight.

Lib. 1. de l. arb. c. 19.

Faustus the Semipelagian accuseth the Catholikes, in that they said that our Lord Iesus Christ did not take upon him mans flesh for all men, nor died generally for all. And on the other side the Catholikes accuse the Pelagians, in that they say, that God repelleth none from

A eternall life, but is willing, indifferently that all men should be saved, & come unto the knowledge of the truth. And againe: that they say that our Lord Iesus Christ died for all mankind, and that no man is utterly exempted from the redemption of his blood, although he leade all this his life estranged from him: because that the sacrament of Gods grace appertaineth unto all men; wher by many are not therefore regenerated; becanse they are foreknown, that they have not a will to be regenerated; and that therefore on Gods part, eternall life is prepared for all men: but in respect of the freedome of the will they say that they only attaine everlasting life, who doe of their owne accord believe. And againe they say, that they will not admit of that exposition of that saying which is alleadged out of Augustine: which is, that unlesse he will have all men to be saved. And againe; not onely those which appertaine unto the number of the saints: but all men altogether, without exception of any.

 Prosper. epi. ad Augustin.*

B 1 Tim. 2.

Hier. epist. ad August.

I wish also that thing were marked: namely, that the Catholikes are accused by the Pelagians, that under the name of predestination, they did establish a certaine fatall necessity: and that they made a kind of violent preordination: Which accusation hath also beene laid against us. And the like crime sheweth the like cause.

C Lastly, this platforme doth passing well agree with that doctrine concerning predestination, which is generally maintained in the Schooles, and Synagogues of the Papists: yea verily to speake the truth, it seemes to be borrowed even from thence. For if we will consider of the matter, what else hath Pighius taught? What else hath Catharinus maintained? and what els at this day do the grosse fat Monkes maintaine? who imparke Gods actions in the case of predestination, within these pales. First, say they, God foresaw the natures and sins of all men. Then prepared he Christ the Redeemer. Afterward, he willed for the merit of Christ foreseene, to bestow sufficient helps of grace upon all men, whereby they might bee saved through Christ: and in this willed for his part, by his antecedent wil, that all should be saved. Lastly, he did mercifully predestinate those, whom he did see would end their lives in Gods favour: and hee did justly reject other some, either for original or actuall sinnes, in which he foresaw they would end their lives.

D

A Corolary, or addition.

A most certaine truth, and undoubted truth.

GOD HATH NOT REVEALED Christ unto all and every man.

The proofe.

This is evident by Scriptures and experience. Isa. 52. 14. That which hath not beene told them them, shall they see, and that which they have not heard, they shall understand. Isa. 55. 5. Behold thou shalt call a nation, which thou hast not known: and nations that knew not thee shall run unto thee. Isa. 65. 1. I have been sought of them that asked not, I was found of them that sought me not. Osea 1. 10. And in the place where it was said unto them, ye are not my people, it shall bee said, ye are the sonnes of the living God. Ose. 2. 23. I will have mercy upon her that was not pitied, and I will say to them which were not my people, thou art my people. Act. 14. 18 God in times past suffered all the Gentiles to walke in their own wayes. Act. 17. 30. And the time of this ignorance God regarded not, but now hee admonisheth all men every where to repent. Roman. 16. 25. 26. To him now that is of power to establish you according to my Gospell and preaching of Iesus Christ, by the revelation of the mystery, which was kept secret since the world began, but now is opened. Coloss. 1. 16. 17. Which is the mystery hid since the world began, & from all ages, but now is made manifest to his Saints, to whom God would make knowne what is the riches of this glorious mystery among the Gentiles. Ephe. 2. 12. Ye were at that time without Christ, & had no hope, and were Atheists, or without God in the world. Ephe. 3. 5. The mystery of Christ in other ages was not opened unto the sonnes of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy Apostles. Ps. 147. 19. 20. He sheweth his word unto Iacob, his statutes and his judgements unto Israel: He hath not dealt so with every nation, neither have they known his judgements.

affect.

The most wise Philosophers among the Gentiles have indeed smattered many things of God: but in the meane time what say they of Christ? why should they be so exceeding silent in this point, if Christ were revealed unto all? Socrates being ready to dye, said, I depart out of this life, and they before whom I pleade my cause, doe live. Whether may be better the immortal God doe know: but I think that no man knoweth. And we owe (saith he) O Crito, a Cocke to Æsculapius to performe vowes for the potion. It is reported that Aristotle be-

Laël. lib. 3 cap. 2.

Cicer.

A ing ready to die, cried out, O thou which art the chiefest thing of all things which are, have mercy upon me.

Eius autem miserere me.

The Gentiles knew not God, that great benefactor, and therefore fained unto themselves certaine saviours, Castor, and Pollux, and Hercules, called Ἀλεξίκακοι, that is, a helper in distresses, or repeller of evills, and Æsculapius the Physitian. Solinus saith, that there is not as yet any of the Gentiles found, who hath attained unto the height of felicity, and may justly bee accounted happy. Albinus speaketh thus: When such like questions are propounded, why one is judged thus, & another after another manner, why this man is blinded, God giving him over, and another enlightend through Gods assistance; let not us presume or take upon us to judge of the judgement of so great a Iudge, but with trembling let us cry out with the Apostle, O the depth!

Call. lac. 5. ca. 7.

Consectary I.

The promise concerning the seede of the woman belongs not to all and to every one: For a promise to whom it is not revealed, is not actually a promise.

Consectary II.

Howsoever the redemption, that is by Christ, belongeth unto all, yet it belongs not to all and to every one. For a benefit to bee perceived or received by a supernaturall faith, if it be not revealed, is no benefit.

Consectary III.

B Vocation and universall saving grace, belongs not to all and every particular person; for God calleth us by revealing and offering Christ to us.

Consectary IV.

The foreknowledge of faith in Christ, and of (a) privative infidelity, is not the square and rule according to which God hath ordained and disposed his predestination; because there bee very many that never so much as heard of Christ; in whom therefore there is neither faith in Christ, nor privative infidelity, or contempt of the Gospell.

(a) Contempt of the Gospell.

Trin-mi Deo gloria.

THE ART OF PROPHECYING

OR,

A TREATISE CONCERNING THE SACRED AND ONELY TRVE MANNER AND METHODE OF PREACHING.

First written in Latine by Mr. WILLIAM PERKINS: and now faithfully translated into English (for that it containeth many worthy things, fit for the knowledge of men of all degrees)

By THOMAS TYKE.

NEHEM. 8.4,5,6.

And Ezra the Scribe stood upon a Pulpit of wood which he had made for the preaching. And Ezra opened the booke before all the people: for he was above all the people: and when hee opened it, all the people stood up. Moreover, Ezra praised the Lord the great God, and all the people answered, Amen, Amen. ... vers. 7. In like manner Iesua and Bani, &c. ver. 8 And they read in the booke of the Law of God distinctly, and gave the sense and caused them to understand the reading.

LONDON,
Printed by IOHN LEGATT. 1631.

TO THE RIGHT VVORSHIPFVLL SIR VVILLIAM ARMIN KNIGHT.

SIR, many and excellent benents hath the Lord in mercy vouchsafed to vs these eight and forty by-past yeares together: of which this is not the least, if not the greatest, that he hath dispelled the duskie cloudes of Popish darkenesse as palpable as that of AEgypt; and hath caused the Sun-light of the Gospell to shine cleerely in all our coasts. He sheweth his word vnto vs, as he did vnto Iacob, his statutes and his iudgements, as he did sometimes to Israel. He hath giuen vs his Prophets and Embassadours, which doe serue like that cloude and pillar of fire to direct vs in our pilgrimage through the wildernesse of this wicked world into the celestiall Canaan. He hath thrust forth many faithfull and industrious labourers into his Vineyard to prune and to dresse the vines of our soules, that we may bring forth the grapes of pietie and the clusters of iustice; (vnlesse we will needes be like to the Cypresse, which, as Plinie saith, can endure no husbanding, but maketh that her maladie, which is a medicine to other trees.) Amongst whome the Author of this learned Tractate did shew himselfe with the formost; carrying alwaies with him a Light of learning, and a Lampe of godly liuing. And, qualis vita, finis ita; As he was a Lampe whiles he liued, so like a Lampe, alijs inserviens sepsum consumpsit. His whole life was labour, scribenda dicens, & legenda scribens. One whereof was this present discourse and platforme concerning the true vnderstanding and vsing of the Scriptures, written in his yonger yeares: which I am bold to present and dedicate to your Worship in this plight you see; partly because it is a Thesaurus and store-house of excellent precepts, (ut Domitius Piso saith that bookes should be such) hauing in it χρήσεις ἀμεταθέτους, sufficient furniture to further perfection in that sacred science: and partly to demonstrate my gratitude, and deuoted affection to you, who haue alwaies beene a constant patron (etiam mimitante Fortuna) to my neerest and dearest friends.

Exod. 10. 21. Psal. 147. 19. Exod. 13. 22.

Thus I take my humble leaue, desiring your kind acceptance, and so commend your Worship with your whole progenie to the protection of the Lord. London, Ian. 1. 1606.

Your Worships in all dutie,

THOMAS TVKE.

To

TO THE FAITHFVLL MINISTERS OF THE GOSPELL: AND TO ALL THAT ARE desirous of, and doe labour for the knowledge of Holy learning.

THat common place of diuinitie, which concerneth the framing of Sermons, is both weightie and difficult, if there be any other throughout all that sacred science. For the matter, which it is to explicate and treate on, is Prophecie; an excellent gift indeed, whether we consider it in respect of dignitie or of vse. The dignitie thereof appeareth, in that like a Ladie it is highly mounted and carried aloft in a chariot: whereas all other gifts, both of tongues and arts, attend on this like handmaides aloofe off. Answerable to this dignitie there is also a two-fold vse: one, in that it serueth to collect the Church, and to accomplish the number of the Elect: the other, for that it driueth away the Woolues from the foldes of the Lord, for this is indeede that Elexanima; that allurer of the Scule, whereby mens froward mindes are mitigated and mooued from an vngodly and barbarous life vnto Christian faith and repentance. This also is that Engine, which as it hath shaken the foundation of auncient heresies, so it hath in these few by-past yeares, cut a sunder the sinews of that great Antichrist. Wherefore if it bee demanded which is the most excellent gift of all, doubtlesse the praise must be giuen to Propheсying. Now by how much the more excellent euery thing is, by so much the more diligently it ought to be adorned with varietie and plentie of precepts. Therefore, when I saw this common place so handled of many, as that it would remaine naked and poore, if all other arts should call for those things, which are their owne: I perused the writings of Diuines, and hauing gathered some rules out of them, I haue couched them in that methode, which I haue deemed most commodious: that they might be better for vse, and fitter for the memorie. I doe also publish them, that they might be approoued, if they bring with them that which is good: if any euil, that they may receiue their deserued punishment. And whosoeuer thou art that pleasest to reade them, where thou art perswaded of this order of Preaching, which here I handle, walke on with me: where thou standest at a stay, inquire with me, * where thou perceiuest thine owne errors, returne to me: where thou seest mine, call me backe to thee. For that, which now liketh me, shall dislike me, if it like not godly and moderate minded men. But if any man shall carpe at this my trauaile, though very small, let him know, that my onely meaning is to benefit the Church of God: and that the conscience of my fault is a sufficient monument against all calumnies. I doe now betake you to God, and this (tractate of the) art of Propheсying, both to you and to God. Ann. 1592. Decemb. 12.

* or when

WILLIAM PERKINS.

THE

THE ARTE OF PROPHECYING.

CHAP. I.

THe Arte or faculti̇e of Prophecying is a sacred doctrine of exercising Prophecie rightly.

Prophecie (or Prophecying) is a publike and solemne speech of the Prophet, pertaining to the worship of God, & to the saluatiō of our neighbor. 1. Cor. 14. 3. But he that prophecieth, speaketh vnto men to edification, to exhortation, & to consolation. Vers. 24. But if all prophecie, & there come in one that beleeueth not, or one vnlearned, he is rebuked of all men, and is *iudged of all men, Rom. 1. 9. God is my witnesse, whom I serue (or worship, λατρεύω) in my spirit, in the Gospell of his Sonne.

* examined.

CHAP. II.

Of the Preaching of the Word.

THere are two parts of Prophecie: Preaching of the Word, and Conceiuing of Prayers.

For in speaking there are onely two duties of the Prophet, that is, of the Minister of the word; to wit, Preaching of the word, and Praying vnto God in the name of the people. Rom. 12. 6. Hauing prophecie, let vs prophecie according to the *proportion of faith. Gen. 20. 7. Deliuer the man his wife again, for he is a Prophet: and when he shal pray for thee, thou shalt liue. For this cause the word (Prophecie) is giuen also to prayers. 1. Chron. 25. 1. The sonnes of Asaph, and Heman and Iedithun, who were singers, prophecyed with Harpes, with Viols, and with Cymbals. 1. King. 18. 26. The Prophets of Baal called vpon the name of Baal from morning to noone, & prophecied vntill the offering of the euening sacrifice.

* ενεργουμενον.

And euery Prophet is partly the voyce of God, to wit, in preaching: and partly the voyce of the people, in the act of praying. Ier. 15. 19. If thou take away the precious from the vile, thou shalt be as it were My mouth. Neh. 8. 6. And Ezra blessed the Lord the great God, and all the people answered, Amen.

Preaching of the word is Prophecying in the name and roome of Christ, wherby men are called to the state of Grace, and conserued in it; 2. Cor. 5. 19. And hath committed to vs the word of reconciliation, 20. Therefore we are Embassadours for Christ: as though God did beseech you by vs, we pray you in the name of Christ, that ye be reconciled to God. 2. Thess. 2. 13. 14. God hath from the beginning elected you to saluation, through sanctification of the Spirit, and faith embracing the truth: whereunto he called you by our Gospell. Rom. 1. 16. The Gospell is the power of God to saluation to euery one that beleeueth. Prou. 29. 18. When there is no vision the people are naked. Rom. 10. 14.

CHAP. III.

Of the Word of God.

THe perfect and equal *obiect of Preaching is the word of God. Luk. 16. 29. They haue Moses & the Prophets, let them heare them. Math. 23. 2. The Scribes and Pharises sit in Moses chaire, that is, they teach the doctrine of Moses, which they doe professe. 3. All therefore what soeuer they bid you obserue, that obserue and doe.

* Or, the word of God is the whole and onely matter, about which preaching is exercised: it is the field in which the Preacher must containe himselfe.

The Word of God is the wisedome of God concerning the truth, which is according vnto godlines descending from aboue. Iam. 3. 17. But the wisedome, which is from aboue is first pure, &c.* Tit. 1. 1. Paul a Seruant of God — according to the acknowledging of the truth, which is according vnto godlinesse.

* ανωθεν.

Admirable is the excellencie of the Word, which is euident partly by the nature thereof, partly by the operation.

The excellency of the nature is either the perfection thereof, or the eternitie.

The perfection is either the sufficiencie, or the purity. The sufficiencie is that, whereby the word of God is so compleate, that nothing may bee either put to it, or taken from it, which appertaineth to the proper end thereof. Psal. 19. 7. The Law of the Lord is perfect, conuerting the soule. Deut. 12. 32. Whatsoeuer I command you, take heede yee doe it: thou shalt put nothing thereto, nor take ought therefrom. Reuel. 22. 18, 19.

The puritie thereof is, whereby it remaineth entire in it selfe, voide of deceit and error, Psal. 12. 6. The words of the Lord are pure words, as siluer tried in a furnace of earth, fined seuentimes.

The eternitie of the word is that, whereby it abideth inuiolable, and cannot passe vntill all that, which it commandeth, bee fully accomplished Math. 5. 18.

The

The excellencie of operation is that, wherby it is endowed with vertue; first to discerne the spirit of man, Heb. 4. 12. For the word of God is liuely, and mightie in operation, and sharper then any two edged sword, and entreth through euen to the diuiding asunder of the soule and spirit, and of the ioynts and the marrow, and discerneth the thoughts and intents of the heart. Secondly, to binde the conscience. Iam. 4. 12. There is one Law-giuer, who is able to saue and destroy. Esa. 33. 22. The Lord is our Iudge, the Lord is our Law-giuer, the Lord is our King, he will saue vs. To binde the conscience is to constraine it either to accuse vs or to excuse vs of sinne before God.

The word is in the holy Scripture.

The Scripture is the word of God written in a language fit for the Church by men immediately called to be the Clerkes, or Secretaries of the holy Ghost. 2. Pet. 1. 21. For prophecie came not in old time by the will of man, but the holy men of God spake as they were carried and moued by the holy Ghost.

ορμενοι.

It is called Canonicall, because it is as it were a Canon, that is to say, a Rule, or Line of the Master workman, by the helpe whereof the truth is both first to be found out, and also afterwardes to be examined. Gal. 6. 16. And as many as walke according to this Canon or Rule.* Therefore the supreame and absolute determination & iudgement of the controuersies of the Church ought to bee giuen vnto it.

* κανων.

The Summe of the Scripture is conteined in such a syllogisme (or forme of reasoning) as this is which followeth. (a) The true Messias shall be both God and man of the seede of Dauid; he shall be borne of a Virgin; he shall bring the Gospell forth of his Fathers bosome; he shall satisfie the Law; he shall offer vp himselfe a sacrifice for the sinnes of the faithfull; he shall conquer death by dying and rising againe; he shall ascend into heauen; and in his due time hee shall returne vnto iudgement. But (b) Iesus of Nazareth the Sonne of Mary is such a one: He (c) therefore is the true Messias.

* The Maior or Proposition.

† The Minor, or Assumption.

‡ The conclusion.

In this syllogisme the Maior is the scope or principall drift in all the writings of the Prophets: and the Minor in the writings of the Euangelists and Apostles.

The Scripture is either the New Testament, or the Old.

The old Testament is the first part of the Scripture, written by the Prophets in the Hebrew tongue, or at least in the Chaldie, vnfolding chiefly that old couenant of workes. Luk. 16. 29. and 24. 27. And he began at Moses, and at all the Prophets, and interpreted vnto them in all the Scriptures the things which were written of him.

It is distinguished by bookes, which are either Historicall, or Dogmaticall, or Propheticall.

The Historicall bookes are stories of things done, for the illustration and confirmation of that doctrine which is propounded in other bookes. 1. Cor. 10. 11. Now all these things came vpon them for ensamples: and were written to admonish vs.* Rom. 15. 4. For whatsoeuer things were written aforetime, are written for our learning.

* τυποι.

These bookes are in number fifteene.

1 Genesis, which is an historie of the creation, fall, promise, and of the state of the Church conserued (and shut vp) in priuate families.

2 Exodus, which is an historie of the deliuerance of the Israelites from the Egyptians, of their going out of Egypt, of the promulgation of the Law, & of the Tabernacle.

3 Leuiticus, which containeth a storie of the Ceremoniall worship.

4 Numbers, which is an historie of their martiall marching into the land of Canaan.

5 Deuteronomie, which is a commentarie repeating and explicating the Lawes out of the afore-said bookes.

6 The booke of Iosua, which declareth their entrance into, and possession of the land of Canaan vnder Iosua.

7 The booke of the Iudges, which comprehendeth an historie of the corrupt and miserable condition of the Church and Common-wealth of Israel from Iosua to Eli.

8 The booke of Ruth, which is an historie concerning the marriages and posteritie of Ruth.

9 The first and second booke of Samuel, which is a story of things done vnder Eli, and Samuel Priests, and vnder Saul and Dauid Kings.

10 The first and second booke of Kings, which maketh narration of things atchieued in the daies of the Kings of Israell and Iudah.

11 The first and second booke of Chronicles, which is a methodicall historie of the beginning, increase, and ruine of the people of Israel, seruing to explaine and shew the Line or Linage of Christ.

12 The booke of Ezra, which containeth an historie of their returne from captiuitie in Babylon, and of the beginning of the Restoring of the citie.

13 The booke of Nehemiah, which speaketh of the restoring of the citie which was to be finished.

14 The booke of Hester, which is an historie of the preseruation of the Church of the Iewes in Persia by Hester.

15 The booke of Iob, which is an historie intreating of the causes of his tentations, as also of his manifold conflicts, and lastly of his happie issue.

The Dogmaticall bookes are those, which teach and prescribe the Doctrine of Diuinitie.

These are foure in number.

1 The booke of Psalmes, which containeth sacred sacred songs to bee fitted for euery condition both of the Church and the particular members thereof, and also to be sung with grace in the heart, Col. 3. 16.

2 The booke of Prouerbes, which is a treatise of Christian manners, teaching pietie towardes God, and iustice towardes our Neighbour.

[2] Ecclesiastes.

3 The (a) booke of the Preacher, which discloseth the vanitie of all humane things, so farre forth as they are vsed without the feare of God.

[b] The booke of Canticles.

4 The (b) Song of Songs, which speaketh of themutuall communion of Christ with the Church, vnder an allegorie of a (c) Bridegroome and his Bride.

[c] Or husband and spouse.

The Propheticall bookes are Predictions, either of the iudgements of God for the sinnes of the people, or of the deliuerance of the Church, which is to bee perfitted at the comming of Christ.

[d] That is, the Prophets.

But with these predictions (d) they doe mingle the doctrine of repentance, and doe almost alwaies vse consolation in Christ to them that doe repent.

It is their custome also for the helping of their hearers memorie and vnderstanding, to propound their sermons briefly, which they made at large. Esa. 8. 1. Moreouer the Lord said vnto me, take thee a great volle, and write in it with a mans pen. Hab. 2. 2. Write the vision, and make it plaine vpon tables, that he may runne that readeth it.

Prophecies are either greater or lesser.

Greater are such, as doe more plentifully deliuer all those things that are foretold; as the prophecie of Esay, Ieremie, Ezekiel, Daniel.

Hitherto belong the Lamentations of Ieremie, touching the misery of the people of the Iewes about the time of the death of Iosiah.

Lesser prophecies are those, which intreat more sparingly or briefly of all those things that are foretold, or at least of some of them; as the prophecie of Hosea, Ioel, Amos, Obediah, Ionas, Michah, Nahum, Habakuk, Zephanie, Haggie, Zacharie, Malachie.

Thus much for the old Testament.

The New Testament is the second part of the Scripture written in the Greeke tongue by the Apostles, or at least approued of them, propounding plainly the doctrine of the new couenant. Eph. 2. 20. And are built vpon the foundation of the Prophets and Apostles.

Peter approoued the Gospell of Marke, at whose motion and appointment it was written by Marke, as it pleaseth Nicephorus to auerre, Lib. 2. cap. 45. And Iohn, that wrote the Gospel, approoued the Gospel of Luke. It is of small moment, which is reported by Eusebius; to wit, that it is apparent by two places (2. Tim. 2. 8. and Rom. 2. 16.) that Paul was the author of that Gospell, which is called Lukes. For Paul doth not here speake of any one booke, but of his whole ministerie: for he addeth, In * which I suffer trouble as an euill doer euen vnto bondes, 2. Tim. 2. 9. * 1. 12.

The new Testament containeth partly Histories, and partly Epistles. The Historie are:

1 The foure Gospels of Matthew, Marke, Luke, and Iohn: which are an historie of the life, deedes, and doctrine of Christ exhibited vnto the world, continuing from his conception euen vntill his ascension into heauen.

And there are foure writers: two that were hearers, and two that were eye-witnesses, that they might giue greater assurance of the truth of the historie.

The difference betwixt the Euangelists is on this wise: Matthew layeth open the doctrines which Christ deliuered. Marke sets down the history briefly: yet did he not make an abridgement of the Gospell which Matthew wrote, as Hierome supposed. For hee beginnes his discourse in a diuers manner, and proceedes in another order, partly intreating of things more largely, and partly interlacing of new matters. Luke aimeth at or frameth a perfect historie, and describes in a certaine order. Iohn is almost wholly taken vp in laying open the Godhead & benefite of Christ, which is deriued from his Godhead vnto vs.

Hierome distinguisheth the Euangelists by their beginnings or entrance. He saith Matthew is like a man, because he begins with the Man-hood of Christ. He likenes Marke to a Lyon, because he beginnes with the preaching of Iohn, which was like the roaring of a Lyon. He compares Luke to an Oxe, because he beginneth with Zacharie the Priest offering his sacrifice. He compareth John to an Eagle, because he doth (as it were) soare vp aloft and begin with the Godhead of Christ.

2 The Acts of the Apostles, which is an orderly history, specially relating the deedes of Peter and Paul: that there might be an ensample of gouerning the Church extant. 2. Tim. 3. 10, 11.

3 The Reuelation which is a propheticall history concerning the condition of the Church from the age in which Iohn the Apostle liued vnto the end of the world.

The Epistles follow. 1. thirteene Epistles of Paul.

1 To the Romanes, of iustification, sanctification, and the duties of Christian life.

2 The first to the Corinthes, concerning the reforming of the abuses of the Church of Corinth.

3 The second to the Corinthes, containing chiefly the defence of himselfe and of his Apostleship against his aduersaries.

4 To the Galatians about iustification by faith without the workes of the Law.

5 To the Colossians, 6 To the Philippians, 7 To the Ephesians } Which confirme the Churches in doctrine, and in 8 The 1. to the Thes., 9 The 2. to the Thes. } the duties of Christian life.

10 The 1. to Timothie, 11 The 2. to Timothie, } VVhich prescribe the forme of ordering the Church aright.

12 The Epistle to Titus, of ordering the Church of the Cretians.

13 To Philemon, of receiuing Onesimus.

The Epistle to the Hebrewes, concerning the person and offices of Christ; and of faith bringing forth fruit in good workes.

The Epistle of Iames, concerning workes to be ioyned with faith.

The first and second Epistle of Peter, touching sanctification and the workes of new obedience.

The first Epistle of Iohn, concerning the signes of fellowship with God.

The second Epistle of Iohn to the elect Ladie, about perseuerance in the truth.

The third Epistle of Iohn to Gayus, concerning hospitality and constancie in that which is good.

The Epistle of Iude, of constancie in the faith against false Prophets.

And thus the Canonicall Scripture is distinguished by her bookes.

Now there are very strong proofes, which shew that shee alone is the word of God, and no other besides.

Of these proofes one doth make a man certainely to [a] know the same, the other doth but declare or testifie it.

[a] Probatio, inducunnatur. Confirmat.

Of the former kinde there is onely one, namely, the inward testimony of the holy Ghost speaking in the Scriptures, and not only telling a man within in his heart, but also effectually perswading him, that these bookes of the Scripture are the word of God. Isa. 59. 21. My Spirit, that is vpon thee, and my words which I haue put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth,——from henceforth euen for euer.

The manner of perswading is on this wise: The Elect hauing the Spirit of God, doe first discerne the voice of Christ speaking in the Scriptures. Moreouer, that voice which they doe discerne, they doe approoue: and that which they doe approoue, they doe beleeue. Lastly, beleeuing, they are (as it were) sealed with the seale of the Spirit. Eph. 1. 13. Wherein also after that ye beleued, ye were sealed with the holy Spirit of promise.

The Church also may beare witnesse of the Canon, perswade shee cannot. For by this meanes the voice of the Church should be of greater force then the voice of God: and the whole state of mans saluation should depend vpon men; then which what can be said to be more miserable?

Obiect. The Scripture is the word of God by it selfe, but it is not so to vs, but by the iudgement of the Church. Ans. 1. The distinction is vaine. For, the first part thereof sheweth the manner, whereby the Scripture is the word of God: the latter part shewes not the manner how, but the person to whome: 2. The Scripture it selfe doth also testifie of it selfe with that kinde of testimony, which is surer euen then all the oathes of men. For wee haue the voice of the holy Ghost speaking in the Scripture: who doth also worke in our hearts a certaine (αὐτοπίστιαν,) full perswasion of the Scriptures, when wee are exercised in hearing, reading and meditating of them. Neither do we beleeue a thing, because the Church saith it is to bee beleeued: but therefore we do beleeue a thing, because that which the Church speaketh, the Scripture did first speak. Yea the Church cannot stand, nor yet be imagined without faith: faith is not without the word, which word is the rule or obiect of faith, & not the iudgement, though it be of most holy men. 3. He which doubteth of the Scriptures, will doubt as well of the testimony of the Church.

Obiect. 2. The Church hath a iudgement to determine of matters. Act. 15. 28. It seemeth good to the holy Ghost, and to vs. Ans. 1. The soueraigne or supreame iudgement concerning matters of faith, belongeth to the holy Ghost, speaking in the Scriptures. The ministery of iudgement (or a ministeriall iudgement) is onely giuen vnto the Church, because shee must iudge according to the Scriptures: and because shee doth not this alwaies, shee sometimes faileth. 2. The Apostles were present at that Councell which was held at Ierusalem, who were men that had authority which was * of it selfe to be beleeued, which authority the Ecclesiasticall ministery now hath not. * deriuum.

The proofe of declaration or testification, is that, which doth not demonstrate or perswade, but onely testifie, and by certaine tokens approue the true Canon. This proofe is manifolde.

First, the perpetuall consent of the Church: of the auncient Church of the Iewes. Rom. 3. 2. For chiefly, because vnto them were committed the Oracles of God. And of the new and latter Church. 1. From Christ and the Apostles, who cited testimonies forth of those bookes.

Secondly, from the Fathers.

First, Origen, as Eusebius testifieth, lib. 6. 18. & 23.

2 Meliton, as the same Eusebius witnesseth lib. 4.

3 Athanasius.

4 Cyril, Serm. 4.

5 Cyprian, or rather Ruffine in his exposition of the Creede.

6 Hilarie, in his preface vpon the first Psalme.

7 Hierome, in Prologo Galeato, and in his preface vpon the bookes of Salomon.

8 Epiphanius, in his booke of weights and measures.

9 Damascene, in his fourth booke of faith, chap. 18.

10 Gregorie, Moral on Iob, lib. 9. chap. 27.
3 In Councels, the Nicene, and Laodiceane, Can. 59.

With these agree Hugo de Sancto Victore in his first booke of Sacraments, cap. 7. N. Lyra in his prologue vpon the bookes of Apocrypha. Hugo Cardinalis in prologo in Iosuam.

Secondly, the consent in part made by the Gentiles, & enemies affirming the same things, which are deliuered in holy Scriptures.

1 Of the creation spake Homer, and Plato in Timæo.

2 Of Christ, Iosephus, lib. 20. Antiquit. cap. 6. & 8. and in his fift booke of the warre of the Iewes, chap. 8. and booke the 6. chap. 25. 27. 2 & 47.

3 Of the Redeemer of the world, who was to be exhibited in the last times, prophecied the Sybils, as Lactantius recordeth, lib. 4. cap. 6. and Cicero, lib. 2. de Diuinat. and Virgil, in the fourth Eclogue.

4 Of the miracles of Christ, Suetonius speaketh in Nero: and Tacitus, lib. 5. & 20.

5 Of the Wisemens starre, Plin. lib. 2. & 25.

6 Of the slaughtering of the infants, Macrobius in Satur.

7 Of the death of Herod Agrippa, Iosephus in his 19. booke of Antiquities, chap. 7.

8 Of the flood, Berosus in those fragments which are extant. Iosephus Antiq. booke 1. chap. 3. And the Poets.

9 Of the tower of Babell, Eupolemus speaketh, as Eusebius testifies, De præparat. Euangel.

10 Of the Doue which Noe sent out, Plutarch speaketh, lib. quod Bruta sint rationalia.

11 Of Iaphet, the sonne of Noe, the Poets fable many things.

12 Of Abrahams sacrifice, Alexander Polyhist.

13 Of the miracles of Moses, Plinie speaketh: though he do wickedly call him a Magitian.

Thirdly, the Antiquitie of the word, for it containeth in it a narration of things done frō the beginning of the world. But the most ancient humane History whatsoeuer, was not written by any, before the daies of Ezra & Nehemiah, who were about the yere of the worlds creation, three thousand and fiue hundreth.

Fourthly, the most certaine accomplishment of the prophecies: as are these, of the calling of the Gentiles: of Antichrist: of the apostasie of the Iewes, &c.

Fiftly, the matter thereof: which is of one true God, of the true worship of God, and that God is the Sauiour.

Sixtly, the consent of all the parts of the Scripture.

Seauenthly, the miraculous preseruation of the Scriptures in the perils of the Church, and in the time of generall reuolting.

Eightly, the operation thereof: for it conuerteth men, and though it be flatly contrary to the reason and affections of men, yet it ouercommeth them vnto it selfe.

Ninthly, it is full of maiestie in the simplenes of the words. Lastly, the holy penmen set downe their owne corruptions: and Moses commends himselfe, saying, that hee was the meekest of all men; which argueth that they were led by the holy Ghost. And Christ, who is described in the Gospell, affirmeth very plainly, that he is the Sonne of God, and that he is one with God the Father, and challengeth all Gods glory vnto himselfe. Which if it had not bin right and true, he should haue felt the wrath of God with Adam and with Herod, who would needs be like vnto God. But on the contrary, God hath reuenged his death both vpon Herod, and vpon the Iewes, and vpon Pilate, and vpon those Emperours that persecuted the Church.

And thus wee haue seene the * tokens of the Scripture. Whereby it appeareth, that the booke of Tobit, the prayer of Manasses, the booke of Iudith, the booke of Baruch, the Epistle of Ieremie, the additions to Daniel, the third and fourth bookes of Ezra, the additions to the book of Hester, the two bookes of Macchabees, the booke of Wisedome, and Ecclesiasticus, are not to bee reckoned in the Canon. Reason 1. They are not written by the Prophets. 2. They are not written in Hebrew. 3. Christ and his Apostles alleadged in the new Testament, no testimonies out of those bookes. 4. They containe some feigned things, and contrary to the Scriptures.

* tmplegia.

CHAP. IV.

Of the interpretation of the Scriptures.

HItherto hath beene spoken of the obiect of preaching. The parts thereof are two. Preparation for the sermon, and the Promulgation or vttering of it. Mat. 13. 52. Then said hee vnto them, therefore euery Scribe, which is taught vnto the kingdome of heauen, is like vnto an householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things both new and olde.

In preparation, priuate study is with diligence to be vsed. 1. Tim. 4. 13. Till I come giue attendance to reading, to exhortation, and to doctrine. 1. Pet. 1. 10. Of the which saluation the Prophets haue inquired and searched, which prophecied of the grace that should come vnto you. Dan. 9. 2. In the first yeare of his reigne, I Daniel vnderstood by bookes the number of the yeare.

Concerning the study of Diuinity, take this aduice. First, diligently imprint both in thy minde and memory the substance of Diuinity described, with definitions, diuisions, and explications of the properties. Secondly, proceede to the reading of the Scriptures in this order: Vsing a grammaticall, rhetoricall, and logicall[a] analysis, and the helpe of the rest of the arts: reade first the Epistle of Paul to the Romanes; after that, the Gospel of John,

[a] Opening of the text.

(as

(as beeing indeede the keyes of the new Testament) and then the other bookes of the new Testament will be more easie when they are read. When all this is done, learne first the dogmaticall bookes of the olde Testament, especially the Psalmes: then the Prophetical, especially Esay: Lastly, the historicall, but chiefly Genesis. For it is likely that the Apostles and Euangelists read Esay and the Psalmes very much. For there are no bookes of the olde Testament, out of which wee can reade more testimonies to bee cited then out of these. There are about threescore places alleadged out of Esay: and threescore and foure out of the Psalmes. Thirdly, out of [a] orthodoxall writings, we must get and not onely from the latter, but also from the more ancient Church. Because Sathan hath raised vp from the dead the olde Heretikes, that he might hinder the restauration of the Church, which is begunne to be made in our time. For the Antitrinitaries haue newly varnished that opinion of Arius and Sabellius. The Anabaptists renew the doctrines or sects of the Essees, Catharists, Enthusiasts, and Donatists. The Swenkfeldians reuiue the opinions of the Eutychians, Enthusiasts, &c. Mezon followeth Ebion, and the Papists resemble the Pharisies, Encratites, Tatians, Pelagians. The Libertines renew the opinions of the Gnosticks and Carpocratians. Seruetus hath reuiued the heresies of Samosatenus, Arrius, Eutyches, Marcion, and Apollinaris. Lastly, the Schismatickes, that separate themselues from Euangelicall Churches, reuiue the opinions, facts, and fashions of Pupianus in Cyprian, of the Audians, and Donatists. Therefore in like manner, wee must not so much seeke for new repealing and confutations of these heresies, as wee are for our vse to fetch those auncient ones out of Councels and Fathers, and to accompt them as approoued and firme. Fourthly, those things, which in studying thou meetest with, that are necessary and worthy to be obserued, thou must put in thy tables or common place bookes, that thou maiest alwaies haue in a readinesse both olde and new. Fiftly, before all these things God must earnestly bee sued vnto by prayer, that hee would bleese these meanes, and that he would open the meaning of the Scriptures to vs that are blinde. Psal. 119. 18. Open mine eyes, that I may see the wonderfull things of thy Law. Reuel. 3. 18. I aduise thee to buy golde for thee,—and to annoint thine eyes with eye-salue, that thou maiest see.

[a] Of sound iudgement: or sound, & iudicious, & cōsonant to Gods word.

Hitherto pertaineth the framing of common-place bookes. Concerning which, obserue this slender counsell. 1. Haue in readinesse common-place heads of euery point of diuinity. 2. Distinguish the formost pages of thy paper booke, into columnes, or equall parts lengthwise. In euery one of these pages set in the top, the title of one head or chiefe point, the contrary side remaining in the meane while empty, that fresh paper may bee put to. 3. All things, which thou readest, are not to bee written in thy booke, but those things that are worthy to be remēbred, and are seldome met with. Neither must thou put the words of the Author in thy common places, but briefly note downe the principall points of stories, & of things, that thou maiest see from what author to fetch thē, when thou shalt haue vse: and make a point in the author himselfe, that thou maist know that the thing is there handled, which thou wrotest in thy cōmon-place booke. 4. Because some things do very often offer themselues with a doubtfull signification, so as that thou canst not tell, if thou write them in thy common places, from whence to fetch them, therefore to thy common places, thou must ioyne an alphabeticall table. 5. Alwaies prouided that thou trust not too much to thy places. For it is not sufficient to haue a thing written in thy book, vnlesse it be alwaies diligently laid and locked vp in thy memory.

Preparation hath two parts; Interpretation, and right diuision or * cutting.

* Orthotomie.

Interpretation is the * Opening of the words and sentences of the Scripture, that one entire and naturall sense may appeare.

* Explication.

The Church of Rome maketh foure senses of the Scriptures, the literall, allegoricall, tropologicall, and anagogicall, as in this her example. Melchizedek offered bread and wine. The literall sense is, that the King of Salem with meate which he brought, refreshed the souldiers of Abraham, beeing tyred with trauell. The allegoricall is, that the Priest doth offer vp Christ in the Masse. The tropologicall is, therefore something is to be giuen to the poore. The anagogicall is, that Christ in like manner beeing in heauen, shall bee the bread of life to the faithfull. But this fier deuice of the foure-folde meaning of the Scripture must be exploded and reiected.

There is one onely sense, and the same is the literall. An allegorie is onely a certaine manner of vttering the same sense. The Anagogie and Tropologie are waies, whereby the sense may be applied.

The principall Interpreter of the Scripture, is the holy Ghost. 2. Per. 1. 20. So that ye first know this, that no prophecie in the Scripture is of any priuate * interpretation. Moreouer, hee that makes the law, is the best and the highest interpreter of the law.

* Enidiosis.

The supreame and absolute meane of interpretation, is the Scripture it selfe. Nehem. 8. 8. And they read in the booke of the Law of God distinctly, and gaue the sense, and caused them to vnderstand by the Scripture it selfe, per Scripturam ipsam.

The meanes subordinated to the Scripture, are three; the analogie of faith, the circumstances of the place propounded, and the comparing of places together.

The analogie of faith, is a certaine abridge- ment or summe of the Scriptures, collected out of most manifest & familiar places. The parts thereof are two. The first concerneth faith, which is handled in the Apostles Creede. The second concerneth charity or loue, which is explicated in the tenne Commaundements. 2. Timothie 1. 13. *Keepe the true * patterne of the wholesome words, which thou hast heard of me, with faith and loue which is in Christ Iesus.*

* ὑποτύπωσιν.

The circumstances of the place propounded are these: Who? to whome? upon what occasion? at what time? in what place? for what ende? what goeth before? what followeth?

The collation or comparing of places together, is that, whereby places are set like parallels one beside another, that the meaning of them may more euidently appeare. Act. 9. 22. But Saul increased the more in strength, and confounded the Iewes, which dwelt at Damascus, confirming (συμβιβάζων.) that is, (conferring or conioyning of places of Scriptures, as Artificers, being about to compact or ioyne a thing together, are wont to fit all the parts amongst themselues, that each one of them may perfectly agree with other,) that this was that Christ.

Collation of places is two-folde. The first is the comparing of the place propounded with it selfe, cited and repeated elsewhere in holy writ. Esay 6. 10. Make the heart of this people fat make their eares heauie, and shut their eyes, lest they see with their eyes, and heare with their eares, and vnderstand with their hearts, and conuert; and he heale them. This place is fixe times repeated in the new Testament, Math. 13.14. Mar. 4.12 Luk. 8.10. Ioh. 12.40. Act. 28.27. Rom. 11 8.

Places repeated haue often alterations for sundry causes. These causes are, first exegeticall, that is, for exposition sake: as,

Psal. 78.2. compared with Mat. 13.35.

*I will open my mouth in a parable: I will declare * things hidden from of olde.*	I will open my mouth in parables, and will vtter the things which haue beene kept secret from the foundation of the world.

* occulta.

Psal. 78.24. He gaue them of the wheate of heauen.	Ioh. 6.31. He gaue them bread from heauen to eate.
Isa. 28. 16. Beholde, I will lay in Sion a stone, a tryed stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation. Hee that beleeueth, shall not make haste.	Rom. 9. 33. Beholde, I lay in Sion a stumbling blocke, and a rocke to make men fall, and euery one that beleeueth in him, shall not be ashamed.
Psal. 110. 1. Sit thou at my right hand vntill I make thine enemies thy foot-stoole.	1. Cor. 15. 25. Hee must raigne till hee haue put all his enemies vnder his feete.

Psal. 116. 10. I beleeue, [a] because I did speake.	2. Cor. 4. 13. I beleeued, and therefore haue I spoken.

[a] quia.

Gen. 13. 15. All the land which thou seest, will I giue vnto thee, and to thy seede for euer.	Gal. 3. 16. Now to Abraham & to his seede were the promises made. Hee saith not vnto the seedes, as speaking of many: but, and to thy seed, as of one, which is Christ.

A second cause is diacriticall, or for discerning sake, that places, and times, and persons might be mutually distinguished.

Mich. 5. 2. And thou Bethlehem Ephrathah art little to be among the Princes of Iudah: out of thee shall he come forth to me, that shall bee the ruler in Israel.	Matth. 2. 6. And thou Bethlehem in the land of Iudah, art not the least among the Princes of Iudah: for out of thee shall come the gouernour, that shall feede my people Israel.

Thirdly, these causes are circumscriptiue: or for limitation sake, that the sense and sentence of the place might bee truely restrained, according as the minde and meaning of the holy Ghost was.

Deut. 6. 13. Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and shalt serue him.	Mat. 4. 10. Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him onely shalt thou serue.
Isa. 29. 13. This people draweth neere with their mouth, & honour me with their lips: but their heart they remoone farre from me: and their reuerence towards me is by the commandement of men.	Matth. 15. 8. Wherefore this people draweth neere vnto mee, they honour mee with their mouth, and with their lippes, but they remoone their heart farre from me. 9. In vaine doe they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandements of men.
Gen. 2. 24. Wherefore a man shall leaue his father and his mother, and shall cleaue vnto his wife, and they shall be one flesh.	Matth. 19. 5. Wherefore a man shall leaue father & mother, and shall cleaue vnto his wife, & they which were two, shall be one flesh.
Isa. 59. 20. And the Redeemer shall come vnto Sion, and vnto them that turne from iniquity in Iacob, saith the Lord.	Rom. 11. 26. The deliuerer shall come out of Sion, and shall turne away the vngodlinesse from Iacob.

A fourth cause is for application sake, that the type might be fitted vnto the truth: and the generall to a certaine speciall, and so contrariwise:

Ionas 1. 17. Now the Lord had prepared a great fish to swallow vp Ionas. And Ionas was in the bellie of the fish three daies, and three nights.	Matth. 12. 39. A euill and adulterous generation seeketh a signe, but no signe shall be giuen vnto it, saue the signe of the Prophet Ionas. 40. For as Ionas was three daies and three nights in the whales belly: So shall the Sonne of man be, &c.
Esay 61. 1. The Spirit of the Lord God is vpon me: therfore hath the Lord annointed me: hee hath sent mee to preach good tidings vnto the poore, to binde vp the broke hearted, to preach liberty to the Captiues, and to them that are bound, the opening of the prison:	Luk. 4. 18. The Spirit of the Lord is vpon me, therefore he hath annointed mee that I should preach good tidings to the poore, he hath sent mee to heale the broken in heart, that I should preach deliuerance to the Captiues, &c. 21. This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your eares.
2. To preach the acceptable yeare of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God.
Psal. 69. 27. They gaue mee gall for my meate, and in my thirst they gaue mee vineger to drinke.	Ioh. 19. 28. That the Scripture might bee fulfilled, hee said, I thirst. 29. Therefore there was set a vessell full of vineger: and they filled a sponge with vineger, and put it about an hyssope stalke, and put it to his mouth.
Exod. 12. 46. Neither shall yee breake a bone thereof.	Ioh. 19. 36. These things were done, that the Scripture might be fulfilled, which saith, there shall not a bone of him be broken.
Psal. 69. 25. Let their habitations bee void, and let none dwell in their tents.	Act. 1. 20. It is written in the booke of the Psalmes: Let his habitatiō be void, & let no man dwell therein.

Fiftly, some things are omitted for breuitie sake: or because they doe not agree with the matter in hand.

Zach. 9. 9. Reuoyce greatly O daughter Sion: shout for ioy O daughter Ierusalem, beholde thy King commeth vnto thee: He is iust, & hauing saluation: poore, and riding vpon an Asse, and vpon a colt, the foale of an Asse.	Matth. 21. 5. Tell ye the daughter of Sion, behold thy King comes vnto thee, meeke and sitting vpon an Asse, and a colt the foale of an Asse vsed to the yoke.

The second collation is of the place propounded with other places: and those againe are either like or vnlike.

Places that are alike are such, as by certaine waies, or in some sort agree one with another. And places doe agree either in their phrase and manner of speech, or in sense.

Places that agree as concerning the phrase, are such as these:

Gen. 28. 12. Then hee dreamed, and beheld there stood a ladder vpon the earth, and the top of it reached vp to heauen, and loe, the Angels of God went vp and downe by it.	Ioh. 1. 51. And he said vnto him, Verily, verily, I say vnto you, hereafter shall ye see the heauen open, and the Angels of God ascending and descending vpon the Sonne of man.
Gen. 3. 15. I will also put enmity between thee & the woman, and betweene thy seed & her seed. He shal breake thine head, and thou shalt bruise his heel	Rom. 16. 20. The God of peace shall breake (συντρίψει) Satan vnder your feete.
Gen. 8. 20. Then Noah built an altar to the Lord, and tooke of euery cleane beast, and of euery cleane fowle, and offered burnt offerings vpon the altar. 21. And the Lord smelled a sauour of rest, and said,	Ephes. 5. 2. Christ hath loued vs, and giuen himselfe for vs, an offering and a sacrifice of a sweete smelling sauour to God.

For the finding out of these places, the Greeke and Hebrew concordances serue very fitly.

Places which agree in sense, are those that haue the same meaning. Here excelleth the comparing of a generall place with a speciall example in the same kinde: as,

Prou. 28. 13. Hee that hideth his sinnes, shall not prosper, but he that confesseth & forsaketh them, shall finde mercy.	Psal. 32. 3, 4. When I held my tongue my bones consumed, &c. 5. I acknowledged my sinne vnto thee, neither hidde I mine iniquitie. I said, I will confesse against my selfe my wickednesse vnto the Lord, and thou forgauest the punishment of my sinne.

2.Sam. 15.25.
The King charged Zadok, saying, carry the Arke of God againe into the city: if I shall finde fauour in the sight of the Lord, he will bring me againe, and shew me both it, and the tabernacle thereof.

2.Pet. 5.6.
Humble your selues therefore vnder the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time.

26. But if hee thus say, I haue no delight in thee, Beholde, here am I, let him doe to mee, as seemeth good in his eies.

Thou shalt haue ready very many places of this kinde in the common places of Marlorate gathered together with diligence. And thus much for places that are alike.

Places that are vnlike, are those, which in shew doe not agree, either in respect of the phrase, or in regard of the meaning. As,

Rom. 3.28.
Therefore wee conclude, that a man is iustified by faith without the workes of the Law.

Iam. 2.24.
Ye see therefore how that of workes a man is iustified, and not of faith only.

1.Kin. 9.28.
And they came to Ophir, and they fetched from thence foure hundred and twenty talents of golde, and brought it to King Salomon.

2.Chron. 8.18.
And they went with the seruants of Salomon to Ophir, and brought from thence, foure hundred and fiftie talents of golde, and brought them to King Salomon.

Act. 7.14.
Then sent Ioseph, and caused his father to bee brought, and all his kindred, euen threescore and fifteene soules.

Gen. 46.27.
All the soules of the house of Iacob, which came into Egypt, are threescore and ten.

Act. 7.16.
And were remoued into Sychem, and were put into the Sepulchre, that Abraham had bought for money of the sonnes of Emor, (sonne of Sychem.

Gen. 48.22.
I (that is, Iacob,) haue giuen vnto thee one portion aboue thy brethren, which I gat out of the hand of the Ammorite by my sword, and by my bow.

Zach. 11.13.
And I tooke the thirtie peeces of siluer, and cast them to the potter in the house of the Lord.

Matth. 27.9.
Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Ieremie the Prophet, saying, and they tooke thirtie siluer peeces, &c.

CHAP. V.

Of the waies of expounding.

THe manner or waies of interpreting, are according to the places of Scripture, which are to be handled.

Places are either Analogicall and plaine, or Crypticall and darke.

Analogicall places are such as haue an apparent meaning agreeable to the analogie of faith, and plaine at the first view. Concerning these places, receiue this rule:

If the naturall signification of the words of the place propounded, doe agree with the circumstances of the same place, it is the proper meaning of the place. As for example:

Act. 10.43. To him also giue all the Prophets witnesse, that through his name, all that beleeue in him, shall receiue remission of sinnes. The signification of the words of this place, is very manifest, to wit, that Iesus Christ doth giue righteousnesse and euerlasting life to those that doe beleeue in him. And this sense we doe presently admit without any delay, because wee see that it doth agree with the analogie of faith, and with the holy Scriptures.

We must further know, that euery article and doctrine concerning faith and manners, which is necessarie vnto saluation, is very plainely deliuered in the Scriptures.

Crypticall or hidden places are those, which are difficult and darke for the expounding of them, let this be thy rule and leader.

If the natiue (or naturall) signification of the words doe manifestly disagree with, either the analogie of faith, or very perspicuous places of the Scripture: then the other meaning, which is giuen of the place propounded, is naturall and proper, if it agree with contrary and like places, with the circumstances and words of the place, and with the nature of that thing which is intreated of. As for example 1.Cor. 11.24. This is my body, which is broken for you.

The sense that is giuen by some:

This bread is indeed and properly the body of Christ, namely by conuersion. Or, the body of Christ is in, vnder, or with the bread.

The vnfitnesse of this sense.

The * letter or words vsed in this place, beeing retained (or expounded accordingly without any alteration) doth disagree with an article of the faith, He ascended into heauen, and with the nature of a Sacrament, which ought to be a * Memoriall of the body of Christ absent. Therefore a new exposition is to bee sought for.

* to wit.

* remembrance.

A new or second sense.

In this place the bread is a signe of my body: by a Metonymy of the subiect for the adiunct.

The fitnesse of this exposition.

First, it agrees with the analogie of faith:

1. He

1. He ascended truly into heauen, that is, he was taken vp out of the earth into heauen locally and visibly. Therefore his bodie is not to be receiued with the mouth at the Communion, but by faith apprehending it in the heauen. 2. Borne of the Virgin Marie, &c. Therefore he had a true and naturall bodie, beeing long, broad, thicke, feated and circumscribed in some place. Whereby it appeareth that the bread in the Supper cannot bee properly his very bodie, but onely a signe or pledge thereof.

Secondly, this sense consenteth with the circumstances of the place propounded.

1 He tooke, he brake. Here it is not likely that Christ sitting amongst his disciples did take and breake his owne bodie with his hands. Therefore the bread is no more then a signe and seale.

2 Deliuered (or giuen) for you. The bread can in no wise be said to be giuen for vs, but the body of Christ: therefore the bread is not properly the bodie, but symbolically or by way of signification.

3 The Cup is the new Testament not properly, but by a Metonymie: therefore nothing hindereth, but that a Metonymie may bee as well in these words, This is my bodie.

4 Christ himselfe did eate of the bread, but he did not eate himselfe.

5 Doe yee this in remembrance of mee: therefore Christ is not corporally present to the mouth, but spiritually to the faith of the heart.

6 Vntill he come: therefore Christ is absent in his bodie.

7 Christ said not, Vnder the forme of bread, or in the bread: but he said, This, that is, This bread is my bodie.

Thirdly, this sense accords with the nature of a sacrament: in which we must make a proportion and resemblance betweene the signe and the thing signified: which here can be none, if the bread be properly the bodie.

Fourthly, it agrees with the like places.

Gen. 17.10. *This is my couenant, which ye shall keepe betwixt you and me——*11. Ye shall circumcise the fore-skin of your flesh, and it shall be a signe of the couenant betweene me and you.

1. Cor. 10.4. They dranke of the spirituall Rocke, that followed them: and the Rocke was Christ.

Rom. 4.11. He receiued the signe of Circumcision, which might seale the righteousnes of faith.

Exod. 12.11. The Lambe is the Lords Passeouer. Verse 13. It is a signe of his passing ouer.

Act. 22.16. Be baptised and wash away thy sinnes.

Ioh. 6.35. And Iesus said vnto them, I am the bread of life: hee that commeth vnto me shall not hunger, and hee that beleeueth in me shall neuer thirst.

1. Cor. 10.16. The cup of blessing which wee blesse, is it not the Communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we breake, is it not the communion of the bodie of Christ? That is, a signe of the communion.

Fiftly, it agreeth with the lawes of Logicke. For one disparate is not spoken or predicated of another but by a borrowed speech.

Sixtly, it is agreeable to the common custome of speaking. So wee put the Fasces, or bundle of rods (vsed to be carried before magistrates) for gouernment it selfe: the sceptre for the kingdome: the gowne we put for peace: and the laurell garland for a triumph: as in Tully.

Cedant arma togæ, concedat laurea linguæ.

Therefore this other sense is proper.

Now from this fruitfull Rule doe arise many consectaries or conclusions necessarie for the vnderstanding of the Scriptures.

Consectarie 1. The supply of euery word which is wanting, is fitting for the place propounded, if it agree with the analogie (or quire) of faith, and with the circumstances and words of the same place. As for example.

Eph. 3.1. For which cause, I Paul the prisoner of Iesus Christ for you Gentiles: The sentence is defectiue there a supply must be made. And let this be the supply [I will be an Embassadour] for you Gentiles. This is not fit, because Paul was not an Embassadour for the Gentiles, but for Christ. Let another be giuen [haue bolsted] for you Gentiles. But this seemeth to be something too bold, neither is any such like speech to bee mette with in any part of the Scripture. Therefore the sentence may bee fitly supplied after this manner; For which cause I Paul am the prisoner of Iesus Christ for you Gentiles.

The same may be said of the rest.

Defective Speeches.	Their Supply.
Esay. 1.13. I cannot iniquitie.	I cannot (beare) iniquitie.
Luk. 13.9. And if it beare fruit: if not, then after thou shalt cut it downe.	And if it beare fruit (thou shalt let it stand) if not, then after thou shalt cut it downe.
Exod 4.25. Then Zippora tooke a sharpe, and cut away the fore-skin of her sonne.	Then Zippora tooke a sharpe (knife) and cut, &c.
2.Sam. 21.16. Ishi Benob, which of the sonnes of a certain Giant, the weight of whose sword the weight of three hundred sicles of steele: and he girded with a new.	Ishi Benob, who (was) of the sonnes of a certaine Giant, the weight of whose sword (or speares head, mucronis) [was the weight of three hundred sickles of steele, and he was girded with a new sword.
1.Cor. 9.25. And euery man, that prouoketh masteries, is continent in all things: and they to obtaine a corruptible crowne, but wee for an vncorruptible.	And they (are continent) to obtaine a corruptible crowne, &c.

Exod. 19.4. You haue seene how I haue carried you vpon Eagles wings. | as it were] vpon Eagles wings.

Confect. 2. If that other exposition giuen of the place propounded doe change one nowne (or name) for another, then the words of the place contains in them a trope, or borrowed speech.

Hence arise many cautions concerning sacred tropes.

1 An Anthropo-pathia is a sacred Metaphor, whereby those things, that are properly spoken of man, are by a similitude attributed vnto God. Hence it is, that the soule of God is put for his life or essence, Ier. 5.29. Or shall not my soule be auenged of such a nation as this? Head is vsed for Prince, or aboue. 1. Cor. 11. 3. God is the head of Christ. His face is put for fauour or anger. Psal. 30.7. Thou didst hide thy face, and I was troubled, Psal. 34. 16. The face of the Lord is angrie at those that doe euill. His eyes are vsed for grace and prouidence. Psal. 34. 15. The eyes of the Lord are vpon the iust. The apple of his eye signifieth a thing very deare. Zach. 2.8. He that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of mine eye. His eares are put for his accepting of mens prayers. His nostrils for indignation. His hands for power and protection. His arme for strength & fortitude. His right hand for authoritie and power. His finger for vertue. His foote for gouernment and might. Psal. 119.3. His smelling for his acceptation of something. Gen. 8.21. He smelled the sauour of rest. Repentance is vsed for the alteration of things and actions made by God.

2 A sacramentall Metonymie is that, whereby the name of the adiunct, as also of the helping cause is put for the thing represented in the Sacrament: or, whereby the signe is put for the thing signified, or contrarily. Gen. 2.9. The tree of life, the tree of the knowledge of good and euill, that is, the tree which is a signe of these. Gen. 17. 10. 11. Circumcision is called both the couenant, & the signe of the couenant. Gen. 22. 14. Abraham calleth the name of that place, The Lord will see or prouide, that is, it is a signe that the Lord will doe so. Gen. 28. 22. The stone is called Gods house. Exod. 12. The Paschall Lambe is the passing ouer. Exod. 17.15. The altar is called, The Lord is my standard or banner. Ezek. 48.35. Ierusalem is named, The Lord is there. Leuit. 16. The Priest is termed a satisfier. Ioh. 1. Christ is called a Lamb: Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sinnes of the world. The paschall Lamb is called Christ. 1. Cor. 5.7. Our Passeouer Christ is sacrificed for vs. And in the same place Christians are said to bee vnleauened. Rom. 3.25. Christ is termed the propitiatorie (ἱλαστήριον) for the couer of the Arke of the couenant. 1. Cor. 10. Christians are said to be one bread. And the Rocke is called Christ. Tit. 3.5. Baptisme is named the washing of the new birth. 1 Cor. 11. The Cup is called the new Testament: and the bread is said to be the body of Christ.

3 The *communication of the properties is a Synecdoche, by the which by reason of the personall vnion, that is spoken of the whole person of Christ, which doth properly belong to one of his two natures. Act. 20.28. To feed the Church of God, which he hath purchased with his owne blood. Ioh. 3.13. For no man ascendeth vp to heauen, but hee that hath descended from heauen, the Sonne of man which is in heauen. 1. Cor. 2.8. For had they knowne it, they would not haue crucified the Lord of glory. Ioh. 8. 58. Iesus said vnto them, Verily, verily I say vnto you, before Abraham was, I am. Luk. 2.52. And Iesus increased in wisedome, and in stature, and in fauour with God and man.

*Communicatio idiomatum.

This communication of the properties hath place onely in the concrete, and not in the abstract. Concrete is the name of the whole person, as God, Man, Christ, &c. Abstract is a name of either of the two natures considered apart, as the Godhead, Manhood.

4 Things spoken of God, which carrie with them the shew of euill, must bee vnderstood in regard of his operatiue or working permission. Neh. 9. 37. And it yeeldeth much fruit vnto the Kings, whome thou hast set ouer vs because of our sinnes: and they haue dominion ouer our bodies, and ouer our cattell at their pleasure, and wee are in great affliction. Isa. 19. 14. The Lord hath mingled among them the spirit of errour: and they haue caused Aegypt to erre in euery worke thereof. Exod. 4.9. and 11. 14. God doth harden the heart of Pharaoh. Deut. 2.38. The Lord thy God hath hardened his spirit, and made his heart obstinate, because he would deliuer him into thine hand, as appeareth this day. Iosh. 11.20. It came of the Lord, that their hearts was hardened, that they might come against Israel in battell, to the end that they should destroy them vtterly, and shew them no mercie, but bring them to nought. 1. Sa. 2.25. They hearkned not to the voice of their father, because the Lord meant to destroy them. 2. Chro. 22.7. The destruction of Ahaziah came from God. Psal. 105.25. He turned their heart to hate his people, and to worke craftily against his seruants. Rom. 1. 28. God deliuered them vp to a reprobate minde. 2. Thess. 2. 11. God will send them strong delusions, that they may beleeue lies. Ezek. 14. 9. And when that Prophet shall be inticed to speake a prophecy, I the Lord will intice that prophet, and stretching out mine hand against him, I will destroy him out of the middest of my people.

5 Things spoken (completiue) as if they were alreadie finished, if they be not as yet finished, they are to be vnderstood (inchoatiue) as being begun, and in the way to be fulfilled. Gen. 5.32. And when Noah was fiue hundred yeeres old, he begat Shem, Ham, and Iapheth, that is, he began to beget them. Gen. 11.26. Terah liued seuentie yeares, when hee begat Abram, Nahor, and Haran. 1. King. 6.2.37. Psal. 119.8. I will obserue thy statutes, doe not forsake me. It is to

to be vnderstood of his endeauour to doe so, as in Phil. 3. 12. Not as though I had alreadie attained to it, or were alreadie perfect: but I follow on, if that I may comprehend that for whose sake also I am comprehended of Iesus Christ. Vers. 15. Let vs therefore as many as be perfect, be thus minded. Luk. 1.6. And they were both iust in the sight of God, walking in all his commandements and ordinances without blame.

6 Morall commaundements or lawes vnder one sinne by name expressed, doe signifie and meane all the sinnes of that kinde, their causes, occasions, and allurements to them, and command the contrarie vertues. For so Christ expounded morall lawes, Matth. 5.2. to the end of the chapter. 1. Ioh. 3.15. He that hateth his brother is a manslayer.

7 Threats and promises are to bee vnderstood with their conditions. Those are to bee conceiued with the condition of faith and repentance: and these, specially if they be corporall, with the exception of chastisement and the crosse. Ezech. 33.14. When I shall say vnto the wicked, Thou shalt die the death: if hee turne from his sinne, and doe that which is lawfull and right, — 15. he shall surely liue, and not die. Reuel. 21.18. But the fearefull and vnbeleeuers, &c. shall haue their portion in the lake, which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death. But in the sixt verse he annexeth a promise, saying, I will giue vnto him that is athirst of the well of the water of life freely. Ion. 3.4. Yet 40. daies, and Ninive shall bee subuerted. By those things which follow it appeareth that a condition is to be vnderstood. Ier. 18.9. 10.

Like to these there are particular examples. Esa. 38.1. of Hezechiah: Giue commandements to thy family, for thou shalt shortly die, and shalt not liue: The condition of Gods will is to be vnderstood. Gen. 20.3. The Lord saith to Abimelech, because hee had taken Abrahams wife to himselfe: Behold, thou shalt die for the woman which thou hast taken, except, vnlesse thou restore her. Hence arose the distinction in the schooles of the *Signifying will, and the will of Gods good-pleasure. The will of good-pleasure is that, whereby God doth will something absolutely and simply without any condition, as the creation and regiment of the world, and the sending of his Sonne. The signifying will is that, wherby he willeth some things for some other thing and with condition, and so we say, because that the condition annexed is a signe of the will, that God doth so will.

*Signi. Beneplacii.

8 A superlatiue or exclusiue speech vsed of one person, doth not exclude the other persons of the Deitie, but only creatures and fained gods: to which the true God, whether in one person or in moe, is opposed. Ioh. 17.3. This is life eternall to know thee to bee the only true God, and Iesus Christ whom thou hast sent. He calleth the Father the onely true God, that he might oppose him to all false gods. Rom. 16. 27. To the onely wise God be glorie by Iesus Christ, 1. Tim. 1.17. Ioh. 10.29. The Father is greater then all: not then the rest of the persons, but than the creatures. Mark. 13.32. The Father alon: knoweth the day of iudgement. All the outward workes of the Trinitie, and all attributes are to bee vnderstood inclusiuely, that is, without exception of any of the persons.

9 When God is considered absolutely, or by himselfe, the three persons are comprehended: when the word (God) is conferred or set with a person of the Trinitie, it signifieth the Father. 2. Cor. 13.13. The grace of our Lord Iesus Christ, and the loue of God, and the fellowship of the holy Ghost be with you all.

10 A generall word is taken specially, and so on the contrarie; as All (saith August. l. 6. cont. Iulian. ca. 12.) for Many, and Many for All, are oftētimes vsed in the Scriptures. Gen. 33. 11. God hath had mercie on mee, therefore I haue all things, Ier. 8.6. All are turned to their owne race, that is, the greater part. Matth. 21.26 All men counted Iohn as a Prophet, that is, the most. Phil. 2. 21. All seeke their owne things, and not the things of Christ. Deut. 28.64. And God shall scatter thee among all people, that is, many. 1. King. 22, 18. And all the Israelites stoned him, that is, all that were present. Exod. 9.6 All the liuing creatures of AEgypt died. Ierem. 26.9. Then was gathered together all the people, against Ieremie in the house of the Lord, that is, all wicked people. Math. 4.23. Healing euery disease, to wit, that was offered to him. Ioh. 14.13. Whatsoeuer ye shall aske the Father in my name, that is, whatsoeuer ye shall aske according to his word. 1. Cor. 6.12. All things are lawfull for me, that is, all (adiaphora) things that are indifferent and not simply euill.

Nothing is put for little or small, Ioh. 18.20. I haue spoken nothing in secret, that is little, Act. 27. 33.

None is vsed for few, Ier. 8.6. There is none that repenteth of his wickednesse, that is, but a few. 1. Cor. 2.8. Which wisedome none of the rulers of this world knew, that is, very few.

Alwaies is taken for often or long. Prou. 13. 10. Amongst the proud there is alwaies contention, that is, often Luk. 18.1. He spake vnto them a parable that they ought to pray alway. Luk. 24. 53. And they were alwaies in the Temple lauding and praising of God. Ioh. 18.29. I alway taught in the Synagogue, and in the Temple.

Eternall is vsed for a long time agreeing with the matter in hand. Gen. 17.8. All the land of Canaan is giuen vnto Abraham for an euerlasting possession. Leuit. 25.46. Ye shall vse their labours for euer. Deut. 15.17. If thy seruant be thy brother an Hebrew, and will not goe from thee, then shalt thou take an aule, and pierce his eare through against the doore, and he shall be thy seruant for euer, in aeternum. 1. Chron. 15. 2. God hath chosen the Leuites, that they might minister for euer vnto him. Esa. 34.6. And beasts shall possesse Idumea and Bozra eternally. Dan. 2.4. O King liue for euer. Ier. 25.9. I will make Iudea * irata.

and

* Ioase.

and the regions bordering vpon it an amazement, a hissing, and a perpetuall desolation.

[a] Euery where is vsed for here and there, without respect of place, Mark. 16. 20. And they went out and preached euery where, the Lord co-working. Act. 17. 30. The Lord admonisheth all men euery where to repent.

[a] Vbiq; passiue.

[b] Not is restrained to some speciall matter. Psal. 7. 4. Iniquitie is not in mine hands, that is, in my cause against the complices of Saul. Ioh. 9. 3. Neither haue his parents sinned, that is, that this man should be borne blind for their sinnes: I will haue mercie, not sacrifice. Not is put for seldome, scarsely, or hardly. 1. King. 15. 5. Dauid declined not from any of the things which the Lord had commanded vnto him, sauing in the matter of Vriah, that is, seldome. Luk. 2. 37. She was a widow, and went not out of the Temple.

[b] Non. Math. 9. 13.

Math. 9. 13.

Consect. 3. Grammaticall and Rhetoricall proprieties of words signifie diuersly with those words: As,

[c] Ellipsis signifieth either breuitie, or the swiftnesse of the affections. Gen. 11. 4. Let vs build vs a citie and a tower, whose top [may reach] vnto heauen, that wee may get vs a name. Act. 5. 39. But if it be of God, ye cannot destroy it, [ac nescio, and I know not] whether ye shalbe found fighters also with God. Psal. 6. And thou O Lord how long? Exod. 22. 20. He that sacrificeth to strange gods, let him be destroyed as a thing execrable: sauing him [who sacrificeth] to Iehouah. Gen. 3. 22. Now therfore [we must looke] lest that stretching out his hand, he take of the tree of life. 1. Chro. 4. 10. If thou wilt blesse me effectually [I will doe this or that] If thou vexe the fatherlesse child [I will vexe thee.] Exod. 22. 23.

[c] That is, when one or more words are wanting.

The Enallage of the preterperfect tense, whereby the time past is put for the time to come, signifieth in the oracles of the Prophets the certentie of the thing that is to come. Gen. 20. 3. Thou art dead because of the woman, that is, thou shalt die. Isai. 9. 6. Vnto vs a child is borne, vnto vs a sonne is giuen. Isa. 21. 9. It is fallen, it is fallen, Babylon, &c.

[d] When some words abound

A [d] Pleonasme, which is manifold, when it is of the substantiue repeated in the same case, it doth signifie, 1. A force and [e] emphasis. Psal. 133. 2. As the ointment which descended vnto the beard, The beard of Aaron. Luk. 6. 46. Why call ye me Lord, Lord? 2. A multitude. Gen. 32. 16. Hee gaue into the hands of his seruants droues, droues, that is, many droues. Ioel. 3. 14. Troupes, troupes in the valley of concision, that is, many troupes or multitudes. 3. Distribution, At the gate and gate, 1. Chron. 26. 13. that is, in euery gate. Leuit. 17. 3. A man and a man, that is, euery man. 2. Chron. 19. 5. Thou shalt appoint Iudges in a citie and in a citie, that is, in euery citie. 4. Diuersitie and varietie. Psal. 12. They speake with an heart, and an heart, that is, with diuers or a double heart. Prou. 20. 10. A weight and a weight are abominable vnto the Lord.

[e] It is when words signifie more then they shew for or seeme.

There is a Pleonasme of the Substantiue when one is gouerned of another. 1. In the singular number it is very significant and argues certentie. Exod. 31. 15. On the seuenth day is the Sabbath of Sabbath. Mich. 2. 4. And they shall lament the lamentation of lamentation. 2. In the plurall number it signifieth Excellencie. Psal. 136. 2. The God of Gods, that is, the most high God. Dan. 3. The King of Kings. Eccles. 1. 2. Vanitie of vanities. A Song of Songs. A Seruant of Seruants.

B The Pleonasme of the Adiectiue, & sometimes also of the Substantiue repeated, signifieth exaggeration or increasing. Ier. 24. 3. I see good figges, good. Esa. 6. 3. Holy, holy, holy the Lord God of hosts. Exod. 34. 6. The Lord passing before his face cried, Iehouah, Iehouah, the strong God. Ier. 7. 4. Trust not in lying words, saying, the temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, &c. Ier. 22. 29. O earth, earth, earth, heare the word of the Lord. Ezek. 21. 28. Say thou, the Sword, the sword is drawne, and furbished for the slaughter. Prou. 6. 10.

The Pleonasme of the Verbe doth either make the speech more emphaticall and significant, or els signifieth and sheweth vehemencie, or certenty, or speedinesse. Gen. 2. 17. In dying thou shalt die. Esa. 50. 2. Is mine hand shortened in shortening? Esa. 56. 3. By separating God hath separated me from his people. Psal. 50. 21. Thou thinkest me by beeing to be like thee. Psal. 109. 10. Let his children in wandering bee wanderers (or vagabonds) and let them begge: C Ier. 12. 16. And it shall come to passe if in learning they shal learne the waies of my people, &c. 2 Kin. 8. 10. Prou. 27. 23. Exod. 13. 17. Isa. 6. 9. Isa. 55. 2. 2. King. 5 11. Gen. 46. 4. 2. Sam. 15. 30. Ier. 23. 39.

The Pleonasme of the Coniunction sometimes argueth earnestnesse. Ezc. 13. 10. Therefore, therefore because they haue made my people to erre.

Wherefore a [f] Coniunction doubled (otherwise then it is in Latine) increaseth the deniall. Exod. 14. 11. Hast thou brought vs to die in the wilderneſſe, is it because there were No No graues in AEgypt? that is, None at all: Math. 13. 14. By seeing ye shall see, and shall Not Not (οὐ μὴ) perceiue. D [f] Coniunction.

The Pleonasme of the sentence signifieth first, distribution. Ezec. 46. 21. A court was in the corner of the court: a court was in the corner of the court: a court was in the corner of the court; that is, in euery corner of the court there was one court. Secondly, it makes an emphasis. Exod. 12. 50. The Israelites did as Moses and Aaron commanded, so did they. Psal. 145. 18. The Lord is neere vnto all that call vpon him: to all that call vpon him in truth. Psal. 124. 1. Vnlesse the Lord had beene on our side may Israel now say: vnlesse the Lord had beene on our side. Thirdly, the repetition of the sentence, which is done in other words, is for exposition sake. 2. King 20. 3. I beseech thee, O Lord, remember now how I haue walked before thee in truth and with a perfect heart, heart, and haue done that which is good in thy sight. Psal. 6. 9. 10. The Lord hath heard the voice of my weeping, the Lord hath heard my prayer: the Lord hath receiued my supplication. Esa. 3. 9. They haue declared their sinne, and haue not hidden it: Ioh. 1. 3. All things were made by him, and without him nothing was made.

[g] They inlarge the sense.

All tropes are [g] emphaticall, and besides delight and ornament they doe alsso afford matter for the nourishment of faith: as when Christ is put for a Christian man, or for the Church of God. Math. 25. 35. 1. Cor. 12. As the bodie is one, and hath many members: and all the members of one bodie, though they be many, are yet but one bodie: so also Christ, that is, The Church. Act. 9. 4. This trope doth comfort a faithfull soule, and nourish faith.

[h] It is when the contrarie to that which is spoken is meant, it is vsed in flouting sometimes.

An [h] Ironie signifieth a iust reprehension of sinne. Iudg. 10. 14. And the Lord said to the children of Israel: Goe ye, and crie out to your gods, whom ye haue chosē, let the same you in the time of trouble. Mark. 7. 9. And he said vnto them, surely: Well, ye abrogate the commandement of God, and obserue your owne traditions. 1. King. 22. 15. The King said vnto him, Michaiah, shall we goe against Ramoth Gilead to battell? or shall we not? gainst Ramoth Gilead to battell? or shall we not? and he answered, Goe vp and prosper: doubtlesse the Lord shall deliuer it into the hand of the King. 1. King. 18. 27. And at noone Eliah mocked them, and said, Crie aloud, for he is a God: either he talketh, or purſueth his enemies, or is in his iourney: or it may be he ſlepeth, and muſt be awaked. 1. Cor. 4. 8. Now are ye full, now are ye enriched, without vs ye haue gotten a kingdome.

Figures of a word in the repetition of a word or sound, haue for the most part an emphasis in them. Psal. 66. 7. Let God, euen our God blesse vs. Isa. 48. 11. For mine owne sake for mine owne sake will I do it. Ioh. 1. 51. Verily, verily I say vnto you. Psal. 67. 6. Too people shall praise thee, O God, all the people shall praise thee. In the 136. Psalm, there is a repetition made in euery verse for this cause.

An Interrogation signifieth, 1. an earnest affirmation, or asseueration. Gen. 4. 7. Is there not remission, if thou shalt doe well? Ioh. 10. 13. Is not this written in the booke of the iust? Ioh. 4. 35. Doe ye not say that it is yet foure moneths to harueſt? Ioh. 1. 9. Gen. 37. 13. 1. King. 20. 27. Mark. 12. 24. Ioh. 6. 7. Secondly, it signifieth a denial: Gen. 18. 4. Shall any word be hard vnto God? Rom. 3. 3. Shall their incredulity make the faith of God of none effect? Matth. 12. 26. If Satan shall vanquiſh Satan, how shall his kingdome continue? 3. It signifies a forbidding. Psal. 79. 10. Helpe vs, O God, why shall the Gentiles say, where is their God? 2. Sam. 2. 22. And Abner said to Asahel, depart from mee: wherefore should I smite thee to the ground? 4. It argueth sundry affections, as admiration, compassion, complaining, & finding of fault. Psal. 8. 10. O Lord, how admirable is thy name in all the earth! Isa. 1. 21. How is the faithfull citie become an Harlot! Psal. 22. My God, my God, why haſt thou forsaken me?

A Concession (or yeelding) signifieth a deniall and reprehension. 2. Cor. 12. 16. But be it, that I charged you not, but because I was craftie, I tooke you with guile. 17. Did I pill you by any of them whom I sent?

Consect. 4. If the Opposition of vnlike places shall be taught to be, either not of the same matter, but of name onely, or not according to the same part, or not in the same respect, or not in the same manner, or not at the same time, a reconciliation or agreement is made.

Examples.

Psal. 7. 8.	Esa. 64 6.
B Iudge me, O Lord, according to my righteousnesse.	We haue all beene as an vncleane thing, and all our righteousnesse is as filthie clouts.

The Reconciliation.

It appeareth by the scope and circumstances of both the places, that this contradiction is not in the same respect. Distinguish therefore. There is one righteousnesse of the cause or action; and an other of the person: the first place speaketh of the former: and the second of the latter.

Matth. 10. 10.	Mark. 6. 8. 9.
C Nor a scrip for the iourney, neither two coates, neither shooes, nor a staffe.	And commanded them, to take nothing for their iourney, saue a staffe onely, neither scrip, nor bread, nor money in their girdles, but that they should be shod with sandals.

The Reconciliation.

D Distinguish the respects. Matthew meaneth such a staffe, as may be a burthen to the bearers thereof. Marke vnderstandeth such a one, as may sustaine and ease those that trauell; such a one as Iacob vsed, Gen. 32. 10. Moreouer, the shooes that Matthew mentioneth are new, such as are with care and diligence prepared for to trauell in. The sandals in Marke are not new, but such as are daily worne on the feete.

From this fourth Consectarie many Prouisoes or Cautions arise meete to be obserued in thereconciling of places.

1 The holy Writers speaking of things and persons, that are past, doe anticipate, that is, they speake of them according to the custome of that place and time, in which they wrote Gen. 12. 8. Afterward removing thence vnto a mountaine East-ward from Bethel. The place was so called in the daies of Moses: but in Abrahams time it was not called Bethel but Luz. Gen. 28. 19. Gen. 12. 1. Abraham went vp out of AEgypt — towards the South, not in respect of AEgypt, but of that place wherin Moses was. 1. Pet. 3. 19. Christ in his spirit preached preached to them that are in prison. They are said to be in prison in regard of the time, in which Peter wrote this Epistle, & not of that wherein Noah liued. Psal. 105. 15. Touch not mine annointed. Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob are said to be annointed in respect of the manner and fashion of the time wherein Dauid liued. For they had no externall annointing.

2 Allegories are to bee expounded according to the scope or intent of the place. So Chrysostome saith vpon the 8. of Matth. Parables must not bee expounded according to the letter, least many absurdities doe follow. August. vpon the 8 Psalme speaketh on this sort: In euery allegorie this rule is to be retained, that that be considered according to the purpose of the present place, which is there spoken of vnder a similitude.

3 Places and persons in the Scriptures haue very often two names: Gideon was called Ierubbaal, Iudg 6. 32. and also Ierubbesheth, 2. Sam. 11. 21. Abimelech, 1. Sam. 21. 3. and Ahiathar, Mark. 2. 26. Salomon, 1. Sam. 12. 24. and Iedidiah, 25. Zimri, 1. Chro. 2. 6. and Zabdi, Ios. 7. 1. Hazariah, 2. Chro. 22. 6. and Ahaziah, 1. Chro. 3. 11. and Iehoachaz, 2. Chro. 21. 17. Iehoiakin, 1. Chro. 3. 15. and Iehoachaz, 2. King. 23. 30. and also Shallum, Ier. 22. 11. Iehoiachin, 2. King. 24. 6. and Iechoniah, 1. Chro. 3. 16. and Coniah, Ier. 22. 24. Mephibosheth, 2. Sam. 4 and Merribbaal, 1. Chro. 8. 34. Ahumadab, 1. Chro. 10. 2. and Ishui, 1. Sam. 14. 49. Elnathan and Iachim. 2. King 23. 24. Ozias and Azarias, 2. King. 15. 1. 2. Chro. 26. 1. Hester, Edissa, Hest. 2. 7. Simon, Peter, Iob. 1. 42. and Cephas, and Bariona: Ioses, and Barnabas, Act. 4 36. Saul and Paul, Act. 13. 6. 8. Matthew and Leui, Hierusalem is called Iebus and Salem.

Moreouer, the name, which is indeed one, receiueth many times changes and differences. As Salmon; Ruth. 4 21. is called Salma, 1. Chro. 2. 11. Abigal. 2. Sam. 17. 25. is named Abigail, 1. Chro. 2. 16. Tiglath-pilezer, 2. King. 15. 29. is tearmed Tilgath-pilnezer, 1. Chro. 5. 6. Aram, Matth. 1. 3. is the same with Ram, 1. Chro. 2. 9.

Againe, on the contrarie, distinct persons, and diuers places haue one name: Mat. 1. 11. Iosiah begat Iechoniah and his brethren about the time they were carried away into Babylon. 12. And after they were carried away into Babylon Iechoniah begat Salathiel. Here now, because Iechoniah, doth both finish the * second tesseradecade, and begin the third, one of them wil be wanting to one of those tesseradecads, vnlesse wee say that there were two Iechoniases both father and sonne. Succoth is a name of three places. The first in AEgypt, Exod. 12, 37. The second in the tribe of Gad, Ios. 13. 27. The third in the tribe of Manasses, 1. King. 7. 46.

4 In sacred accounts, by reason of the wickednesse of the Prince, either his name, or the number of yeares, in which hee reigned wickedly, are omitted and left out. 1. Sam. 13. 1. Saul reigned two yeares ouer Israel; that is, lawfully, or as Lyra speaketh, * rightly; but otherwaies he reigned longer. Matth. 1. 8. Ioram begat Ozias. Here three are left out for their wickednesse; to wit, Ahaziah, Ioas, and Amaziah.

5 The time spoken of is taken either * compleatly, or vncompleatly: and the parts thereof are vnderstood either inclusiuely or exclusiuely: As, 1. King. 15. 9. And in the twentieth yeare of Ieroboam Asa raigned ouer Iudah.

1. King. 15. 25. Nadab the sonne of Ieroboam [began to reigne ouer Israel the second yeare] of Asa King of Iudah: and reigned ouer Israel [two yeares.]

1. King. 15. 28. Euen in the third yeare of Asa king of Iudah] did Baasha slay Nadab, and reigned in his stead.

The Reconcilement.

Nadab, who began to reigne in the second yeare of Asa might reigne 2. yeares, although Baasha succeeded him in the third yeare of Asa; because the last yeares of the Kings of Israel and Iudah are not fully expired, but some of them (as in this place) doe scarcely containe moneths in them: the rest of the yeares beeing put compleatly.

Math. 17. 1. And the first day after Iesus tooke Peter, and Iames, and Iohn his brother, and brought them vp vnto an high mount aside.

Luk. 9. 28. And it came to passe about an eight daies after, that hauing taken to him Peter, & Iames, and Iohn, he went vp into a mount aside.

The Reconcilement.

Matthew puts exclusiuely onely the daies that were betweene, which were altogether accomplished, Luke puts in the reckening the two outermost daies also.

The parts of some are put sometimes inclusiuely, and sometimes exclusiuely. 1. That the number may bee more perfect. August. saith, qu. 47 on Exod. In a perfect number oftentimes that, which is either wanting or abounding, is not counted. Iud. 12. 26. Israel dwelt in Hesebon and Aroer and their townes three hundred yeares. These yeares are to bee reckoned from the departure of the Israelites out of AEgypt, after this manner. The time of their abode in the wildernesse was 40. yeares. The time of the gouernment of Iosua was 17. yeares of Othoniel, 40. yeares. Iudg. 3. 11. Of Ehud and Samgar, 80. yeares. Iudg. 3. 30. of Barak, 40. yeares. Iudg. 5. 31. of Gideon, 40. yeares. Iudg. 8. 28. of Abimelech, 3. yeares. Iudg. 9. 22. of Tolah, 23. yeares, Iudg. 10. 2. of Iair, 22. yeares. Iudg. 10. 3. The whole in all is, 305. yeares. Here therefore the fiue odde yeares are not named; it may bee because this euen number of three hundred is fitter both for the computation and the speech. 2. For breuity sake, Iudg. 20. 46. There were slaine of the Beniamites twenty fiue thousand. Here an hundred are not counted, as appeareth, vers. 35. The Israelites slew that day of the tribe of Beniamin, fiue and twenty thousand and a hundred men.

5. The King beeing hindred either with forraine warre, or with olde age, or by reason of some disease, doth whiles he yet liueth appoint his sonne to bee King in his stead: and therefore with the computation of the yeares of father and sonne raigning at one time, the yeares of the raigne are reckoned sometimes ioynly, and sometimes apart.

2. King. 1. 17. Ahaziah died, and Iehoram raigned in his stead [in the second yeare of Iehoram the sonne of Iehosaphat] King of Iudah.

2. King. 3. 1. Iehoram the sonne of Ahab raigned ouer [eighteenth yeare of Iehosaphat King. 3. 1. 6. In the [first yeare of Iehoram the sonne of Ahab] Iehoram the sonne of Iehosaphat, began to raigne, & raigned eight yeares.

The Reconciliation.

Iehosaphat determining in the 17. yeare of his raigne, to helo King Ahab against the Syrians, appointeth his sonne Ioram to be Viceroy. In the eighteenth yere of his own reigne, & in the second of his sonne, Ioram the sonne of Ahab raigned. Afterwards in the fift yeare of this Ioram the sonne of Ahab, Iehosaphat beeing stricken in age, confirmeth his kingdome to his sonne Ioram, who is said to haue reigned eight yeares, foure whilest his father was aliue, and foure alone by himselfe, after the death of his father.

2. King. 15. 30. And Hoshea the sonne of Elah wrought treason against Pekah the sonne of Remaliah, and smote him, and slew him, and reigned in his roome [in the 20. yeare of Iotham] the sonne of Vzziah.

2. King. 15. 33. 30. Iotham the sonne of Vzziah was 25. yeares olde when he began to raigne [and he raigned sixteen yeares] in Ierusalem.

The Reconciliation.

Hee raigned 16. yeares alone after his fathers death: he raigned also 20. with his father: for hee gouerned the kingdome for his father, who was diseased with leprosie.

6. The East-countrey men do diuerly distinguish their artificiall day, both into 12. equall houres (commonly called planetary houres) and into quadrants, hauing their name of the houre going next before. Beroald. Chronol.

The Easterne mens accounting:

1 2 3 6 9

1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12.

The minutes of our accounting: 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6.

Dan. 9. 25. And it was [the 9. houre] when they cryed.

Ioh. 19. 14. And it was the preparation of the Passeouer, [and about the 6. houre,] and hee said vnto the Iewes, Behold your King.

The Reconciliation.

The opposition is not in the same respect, therefore distinguish the manner of accompting the houres of the day, and then it will appeare that Christ might bee crucified at the third houre, and about the sixt.

7. The letter number is to be counted vnder the greater and the more compleate. Iud. 3. 11. The land had rest forty yeares when Othoniel died. Vnder this number are all the yeares comprehended from the death of Iosua, to the death of Othoniel, as also the 8. yeares of seruitude vnder the Syrians. Iudg. 3. 30. The land had rest 80. yeares. Here from the death of Othoniel are numbred also the yeares of Ehud & Samgar. For Ehud could not be Iudge 80. yeares: for when 18. yeares are expired, he with the time of warre run out. The like we meete with, Iod. 5. 31. and 13. 28. and 9. 22. and 10. 2. 3. and 12. 26. Where, in the three hundred yeares are included the forty yeares of their wandring in the desert.

8. Education or Nurture, is either naturall, or legall. Naturall is by generation: legall is by adoption, testified by education and bringing vp, and by succession in the kingdome, & in * Leuiration by the law of redemption.

2. Sam. 21. 8. And the King tooke the two sonnes of Michal the daughter of Saul, whome shee bare to Adriel the sonne of Barzillai the Mehalobite.

1. Sam. 18. 19. When Merab Saul's daughter should haue beene giuen to Dauid, shee was giuen vnto Adriel a Mahalobite to wife.

The Reconciliation.

They are the naturall sonnes of Merab, and the legall sonnes of Michal; and therefore (to beare) doth onely signifie to bring vp, to feede and to nourish. For thus the sonnes of Machir, Gen. 50. 23. are said to be borne (nati) on Ioseph's knees, that is, brought vp.

Mat. 1. 12. Iechonias begat Salathiel.

Luk. 3. 27. Salathiel the sonne of Neri.

That is, the second fourteenth generation, mentioned in Mat. 1. 17. in which place three fourteene generations are set downe.

* Deiure, according to law or equitie.

* That is, as fully finished, or as but in the finishing.

* To vnderstand this, reade Deu. 25. 5.

The Reconciliation.

Salathiel was the sonne of Neri by nature: and the sonne of Iechonias legally in regard of succession in the same kingdome. After this manner Zedekias is the brother of Iecnias or Iehoiakin. 2. Chron. 36. 10. and vncle, 2. King. 24. 17. and sonne, 1. Chron. 3. 16. His brother by generation, and his sonne by the right of succession. On this manner Matthew & Luke are reconciled in the genealogie of Christ. For the one followes the naturall order, as Luke, and the other the legall.

Confect. 5. When the naturall sense of the place (propounded) is giuen by the fore-said helpes, a figuratiue sense is word signifying diuers things (ὁμώνυμον) shall be giuen, which is fitting to the place.

Thus the significations of Vau the preface or copulatiue are (as Reuerius hath obserued in his Hebrew Grammer) distinguished according to the diuersity of the places. It signifieth, I. Et, Ila. 9. 10. Gen. 42. 10. II. Quia, Ila. 53. 11. III. Quia, Ila. 9. 11. Psalm. 73. 16. IV. 1. 16. Ila. 9. 19. 1. Sam. 7. 10. V. Idcirco, Prou. 1. 18. VI. Vel, Psal. 18. 39. Ila. 24. 20. VII. Sicuti, Ila. 10. 18. & 30. 32. VIII. Etiamsi, & Quod, Neh. 9. 19. IX. Atque, Psal. 73. 26. & 89. 6. X. Postea quam, Ila. 16. 12. Gen. 3. 3. XI. Autem, Ila. 1. 22. Neh. 2. 9. XII. Etiam, 2. Reg. 8. XIII. Nam, Ila. 37. 12. XIV. Hinc, Psal. 23. 3. Dan. 7. 1. XV. 1. Quia, quod, siquidem. 3. XVI. Quia, Quum. Psal. 27. XVII. Nisi, Ila. 49. 6. XVIII. Quamvis, Ier. 51. 58. XIX. Inquam, Ila. 55. 1. XX. Vtpote, Psal. 105. 22. XXI. Atqui, &c. Prou. 3. 4. XXII. Et vel, Ila. 58. 7. & XXIII. Etenim, & Vel, Psal. 119. 92. XXIV. Imo, Psal. 119. 28. XXV. Nunquam, Psal. 72. 16. XXVI. Verum, Psal. 73. 2. XXVII. Etsi enim, Iob 19. 26. XXVIII. Autem, Psal. 139. 7. XXIX. Quid, obq, Psalm. 139. 14. XXX. Et vero, Psal. 139. 17. XXXI. Tum, Neh. 12. 27. XXXII. Similiter, Ier. 50. 43. XXXIII. Si sic, 2. Reg. 5. 19. XXXIV. Nec, Ila. 41. 28. XXXV. Interim, Prou. 17. 23. XXXVI. Vel cum, Prou. 3. 28. XXXVII. Quod, Gen. 47. 6.

Thus it appeareth that (Berach) signifieth contrary things, as to bless and to curse, Iud. 5. 1. King. 21. 10. and 11. 2. 9.

To conclude, hence it is euident, that (Hubal) Gen. 4. 26. doth not signifie Prophaned, but Began. Reason 1. When Chalal Signifieth so prophane, it ought to bee ioyned with a nowne, and to gouerne it; but here it doth immediately follow Kara, a verb infinitiue. Reason 2. Amongst many causes of the Deluge, Moses reckoneth not the prophanation of Gods worship, which notwithstanding should haue beene chiefly noted, if so be the same had raigned among the people of God.

Confect. 6. If a word giuen in the Bible, whether it be an Hebrew word or a Greeke, if first it doe agree with Grammaticall construction, and with other approued copies: if also it doe agree verily vnto the sense with the circumstances and skope of the place: & with the analogie of faith, it is proper and natural.

I lay downe this rule, not because I thinke that the Hebrew and Greeke text is in all places corrupted, through the malice of the Iewes, as Cardinal doth wickedly calumniate, and after him all Papists, but that the diuers readings, which in some places haue crept in, either by reason of the vnskilfulnesse of negligence and ouer-light of the Notaries, might bee cleared and determined. As, Psal. 22. 16. In ordinary copies the words run thus, Caari, that is, As a Lion my hands and my feete, in other copies the reading is diuers, after this manner: Caarv, (They haue digged or pierced) my hands and my feete. Now the rule propounded, doth teach that this latter reading is to be followed. For it agreeth, 1. with Grammaticall construction: 2. with the circumstances of the Psalmes: 3. with some ancient copies: yea euē by the testimony of the Iewes.

CHAP. VI.

Of the right building of the word.

1. HItherto we haue spoken of Interpreting of the word. We are now to addise to speake of the right framing or diuine building of it.

Right cutting of the word is that, whereby the word is made fit to edifie the people of God. 2. Tim. 2. 15. Studie to shew thy selfe approued vnto God, a workeman that need not to be ashamed, diuiding (or * cutting) the word of truth aright. It is a metaphor taken from the Iewes, who might not cut the members of the sacrifices without due consideration. Isa. 30. 4. The Lord hath giuen vnto me the tongue of the learned, that I might know to minister a word in due season to him that is weary. The parts thereof are two: Resolution or partition, and Application.

* Resolution is that, whereby the place propounded is, as a weauers web, resolued (or vnwouen and vnfolded) into seuerall doctrines. Act. 18. 28. Mightily hee confuted the Iewes, shewing vnto them by the Scriptures, that Iesus was that Christ.

Resolution is either Notation, or Collection.

Notation is, when as the doctrine is expressed in the place propounded. Rom. 3. 9. We haue already proued that all, both Iewes and Gentiles, are vnder sinne. 10. As it is written, There is none righteous, no not one. 11. There is none that vnderstandeth, none that seeketh God. 12. All are gone out of the way: they haue beene made altogether vnprofitable: there is none that doth good, no not one. Act. 2. 24. Whome God hath raised vp, and loosed the sorrowes of death, because it was impossible that he should be holden of it. 25. For Dauid saith concerning him, I beheld the Lord alwaies before me: for he is at my right hand, that I should not be shaken. 26. Therefore did mine heart reioyce, and my tongue was glad, and moreouer also my flesh shall rest in hope. 27. Because thou wilt not leaue my soule with the dead, neither wilt suffer thine holy one to see corruption.

Collection is, when the doctrine not expressed is soundly gathered out of the text. This is done by the helpe of the nine arguments, that is, of the causes, effects, subiects, adiuncts, dissentanies, comparatiues, names, distribution, and definition. For example:

A place.	The collection.
Iohn 10. 34. Iesus answered them, Is it not written in your Law, I said ye are Gods?	From the comparison of the lesser. 35. If he called them Gods, vnto whome the word of God was giuen, and the Scripture cannot be broken: 36. Say yee of mee, whome the Father hath sanctified and sent into the world, thou blasphemest, because I said I am the Sonne of God?
A place.	The collection from the lesser.
1. Cor. 9. 9. For it is written in the law of Moses, thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the oxe, that treadeth out the corne. What hath God care of oxen?	Vers. 4. Haue we not power to eate, and to drinke?
A place.	The collection from the contrary.
Gal. 3. 10. For so many as are of the workes of the law, are vnder a curse: for it is written, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are in the book of the law to do them.	Vers. 9. Therefore those which are of faith are blessed with faithfull Abraham.
Vers. 11. For the iust shall liue by faith.	Vers. 12. And that no man is iustified by the law before God, it is euident.
A place.	A collection from the Adiunct.
Heb. 8. 8. For in rebuking them he saith, Behold, the daies will come saith the Lord, when I shall make with the house of Israel, & the house of Iudah, a new testament.	Heb. 8. 13. In that he saith a new testament, hee hath disannulled the olde: now that which is disannulled and waxed olde, is ready to vanish away.

In gathering of doctrines wee must specially remember that an example in his owne kinde, that is, an Ethique, Oeconomique, Politique; Ordinary, and Extraordinary example, hath the vertue of a generall rule in Ethique, Oeconomique, Politique, Ordinary, and Extraordinary matters. The examples of the Fathers are patterns for vs. 1. Cor. 10. 11. And whatsoeuer is written, it is written for our learning. And it is a Principle in Logicke, that the [a] Genus is actually in all the *species: and a rule in the Optikes, that the generall species of things, are perceiued before the particular.

[a] Or generals.

Or specials and particulars of that kinde or generall.

A place.	The collection from the Species.
Rom. 9. 7. Neither are they all children, because they are the seede of Abraham: but in Isaac shall thy seede bee called. 10. Neither hee onely felt this, but also Rebecca, when shee had conceiued by one, euen by our father Isaac.	Vers. 8. That is, they which are the children of the flesh, are not the children of God: but the children of the promise are counted for the seed.
Rom. 4. 18. Which Abraham against hope, &c. 21. Being fully assured, that he which had promised, was also able to do it. 22. And therefore it was imputed to him for righteousnesse.	Rom. 4. 23. Now it is not written for him onely, that it was imputed to him for righteousnesse. 24. But for vs also, to whom it shall be imputed for righteousnesse, which beleeue in him, that raised vp Iesus our Lord from the dead.

That also I adde, that collections ought to bee right and sound, that is to say, deriued from the genuine and proper meaning of the Scripture. If otherwise, wee shall draw [b] any doctrine fro any place. Prou. 8. 22. the Greek translation of the Seuenty Interpreters is (ἔκτισε μοι ἀρχὴν ὁδῶν), The Lord hath created me, it is the speech of Wisedome, that is, of Christ speaking of himselfe. Whence the Arrians collect very wickedly, that the Sonne was created. But in the Hebrew it is (Iehoua kaneni.) The Lord hath possessed me. Now the Father possesseth the Sonne, because hee begat him from eternity, and because the Father is in the Sonne, & the Sonne in the Father. And so, Gen. 4. 1. When a Sonne was borne vnto Adam, hee saith, I haue possessed a man from the Lord. The error perhaps came of this, that * Elisse was either through ignorance, or malice, put for * Ecce. Augustine also vpon the tenth verse of the 139. Psalme, readeth on this wise: I held my peace because thou hast made mee, fecisti me. From whence he doth wittily gather, that it is a marueile that hee should holde his tongue, that hath receiued a mouth to speake: whereas (me) is neither in the Hebrew, nor in the Greeke.

[b] Ad verbo any thing out of any thing, quid libet è quolibet.

* Iemin, he hath created.
* Iemin, he hath possessed.

And vpon the 72. Psalme, and 14. verse, hee disputeth much about vsuries, and prooueth that vsuries are sins: whereas there is no such matter in that text. For the words are, He shall deliuer their soule from deceit and violence, so precious is their blood in his eyes.

It shall be lawful also to gather Allegories: for they are arguments taken from things that are like, and Paul in his teaching vseth them often, 1. Cor. 9. 9. But they are to be vsed with these cautions: 1. Let them be vsed sparingly and soberly. 2. Let them not bee far fetcht, but fitting to the matter in hand. 3. They must be quickly dispatcht. 4 They are to be vsed for instruction of the life, and not to prooue any point of faith.

Any point of doctrine collected by iust consequence is * simply of it selfe to bee beleeued, and doth * demonstrate. Act. 18. 24. And a certaine Iew, named Apollos, borne at Alexandria, came to Ephesus, an eloquent man & mighty (δυνατὸς) in the Scriptures. 28. For mightily hee confuted the Iewes publikely with great vehemencie, demonstrating (ἐπιδεικνύων) by the Scriptures that Iesus was the Christ. From hence it followeth:

First, that humane testimonies, whether of the Philosophers, or of the Fathers, are not to be alleadged. Augustine vpon the 66. Psalm. saith thus: If I speake, let no man heare: if Christ speake, woe bee to him that doth not heare. So againe hee saith, (De vnit. at. Eccles. Let vs not heare, These things I say. These things he saith: but let vs heare, These things the Lord saith. Yet with this exception, Vnlesse they conuince the conscience of the hearer. Thus Paul alleadged the testimony of Aratus, Act. 17. 28. For by him we liue, and moue and haue our being, as one of your owne Poets hath said, For wee are all his progeny (γένος). 29. For as much then, as we are the progeny of God, &c. As also a saying of Menander, 1. Cor. 15. 33. Be not deceiued, euill conuersations corrupt good manners.* And of Epimenides, Tit. 1. 12. As one of their Prophets hath said, the Cretians are alwaies liers, euill beasts, and slowbellies. And then also it must be done sparingly, and with leauing out the name of the prophane Writer.

Secondly, that a few testimonies of Scripture are to bee vsed for the proofe of the doctrine: and that sometimes there is neede of none.

Lastly, hence it followes, that the Prophets deliuering their doctrine thus, are not to be reproued of other Prophets. 1. Cor. 14. 32. And the spirits of the Prophets are subiect vnto the Prophets. Yet afterwards he addeth, verse. 37. If any one seeme to be a Prophet, or spirituall, let him acknowledge, that those things which I write vnto you, are the commandments of God.

CHAP. VII.

Of the waies how to vse and apply doctrines.

APplication is that, whereby the doctrine rightly collected, is diuerslie fitted according as place, time, and person doe require. Ezech. 34. 15. I will feede my sheepe, and bring them to their rest, saith the Lord. 16. I will seeke that which is lost, and bring againe that which was driuen away, and will binde vp that which was broken, and will strengthen the sicke. Iud. 22. And hauing compassion of some in putting difference. 23. And some others with terror, pulling them out of the flame.

The foundation of application is, to know whether the place propounded be a sentence of the Law, or of the Gospel. For when the word is preached, there is one operation of the Law, and another of the Gospel. For the Law is thus farre forth effectuall, as to declare vnto vs the disease of sinne, and by accident to exasperate and stirre it vp: but it affoards no remedy. Now the Gospell, as it teacheth what is to be done: so it hath affo the efficacy of the holy Ghost adioyned with it, by whom beeing regenerated, we haue strength both to beleeue the Gospell, and to perform those things which it commandeth. The Law therfore is the first in the order of teaching: and the Gospel second.

It is a sentence of the Law, which speaketh of Perfect inherent righteousnes, of eternall life giuen through the workes of the Law, of the contrary sinnes, and of the curse that is due vnto them. Galat. 3. 10. So many as are of the workes of the Law, are vnder the curse: for it is written, cursed is he whosoeuer abideth not in all things, which are written in the booke of the Law to doe them. Matth. 3. 7. O generation of Vipers, who hath fore-warned you to flee from the anger to come? 10. And now also is the axe put to the roote of the trees: therefore euery tree which bringeth not forth good fruit, is cut off (ἐκκόπτεται) and cast into the fire.

A sentence of the Gospell is that, which speaketh of Christ & his benefits, and of faith beeing fruitfull in good workes. Ioh. 3. 16. So God loued the world, that he gaue his onely begotten Sonne, that whosoeuer beleeueth in him, should not perish, but haue euerlasting life.

Hence it is, that many sentences, which seeme to belong to the Law, are by reason of Christ, to bee vnderstood not legally (νομικῶς) but with the * qualification of the Gospell. Luk. 11. 28. Blessed are they which heare the word of God, and keepe it. Deut. 30. 11. 14. This commandement which I command thee this day, is not hidden, nor [et afarre off, but it is by thee in thy mouth, and in thy heart. This sentence which is legall in Moses, is euangelicall in Paul: Rom. 10. 8. Psalme 119. 1. Blessed are they of that are perfect in the way, who walke in the Law of Iehouah. 2. Blessed are they that keepe his testimonies, and seeke him with their whole heart. Ioh. 14. 21. He that hath my commandements, and keepeth them, is he that loues me: he that loues me, shall be loued of my Father. 23. If any man do loue me, he will keep my word: and my Father doth loue him, and we will come vnto him, and wee will dwell with him. Gen. 6. 9. Noah was a iust and vpright man [in his times: Noah walked with God: continually. Gen. 17. 1. I am the Almighty God, walke before me, and be vpright.

The vses of Application, are chiefly seuen, according to the diuers condition of men and people, which is fiue-fold.

1. Vnbeleeuers, who are both ignorant and vnteachable.

The first men in the first place are to bee prepared to receiue the doctrine of the word. 2. Chron. 17. Iehoshaphat sent Leuites throughout the cities of Iudah, to teach the people, and to bring them from idols.

This preparation is to be made partly by disputing or reasoning with them, that thou maist throughly discerne their manners and disposition, and partly by reproouing in them (some notorious sinne, that beeing pricked in heart and terrified, they may become teachable. Act. 17. 17. He disputed in the Synagogue with the Iewes, and with them that were religious, and in the market-place with whomsoeuer he met. Act. 9. 3. Now as he iourneyed, it came to passe, that as he was come neere to Damascus, suddenly there shined round about him a light from heauen. 4. And hee fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying to him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? 5. And hee said, Who art thou Lord? And the Lord answered, I am Iesus of Nazareth, whome thou doest persecute: it is hard for thee, to kicke against the pricke. Act. 16. vers. 27. Then the keeper of the prison awoke out of his sleepe: and when he saw the prison dores open, he drew out his sword, and would haue killed himselfe, supposing the prisoners had beene fled. 28. Then Paul cried with a loud voice, saying, Do thy selfe no harme: for we are all here. 29. Then hee called for a light, and leaped in, and came trembling, and fell downe before Paul and Silas. 30. And brought them out, and said, Sirs, what must I doe to be saued? 31. And they said, Beleeue in the Lord Iesus, and thou shalt be saued, and thine houshold. Act. 17. 22. *And Paul stood in the midst of Mars-hill, and said, Ye men of Athens I see that in all things ye are * too superstitious.* 23. For as I passed by and beheld your deuotions, I found an altar, wherein was written, To the vnknowne God: whome ye then ignorantly worship, him shew I vnto you. 24. God, that made the world, and all things in it, seeing that he is the Lord of heauen & earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands.

When now there is hope that they are become teachable and prepared, the doctrine of Gods word is to be declared to them generally in some common tearmes, or ordinary points. Act. 17. 30. And the time of this ignorance God regarded not, but now he commandeth (παραγγέλλει) all men euery where to repent. 31. Because he hath appointed a day in which he will iudge the world in righteousnesse by that man whom he hath appointed, whereof he hath assured all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead.

If they shall approoue this doctrine, then it is to bee opened to them distinctly, and in euery particular; but if they shall remaine vnteachable, without hope of winning them, they are to be left. Matth. 7. 6. Giue not that which is holy vnto dogges, neither cast your pearles before swine, lest they tread them vnder their feet, and turning againe, all to rend you. Prou. 9. 8. Reproone not a scorner, lest he hate thee, Act. 19. 9. But when certaine were hardened, and would not obey, speaking euill of the way of the Lord before the multitude, he departed from them, and separated the Disciples from them.

2. Some are teachable, but yet ignorant.

To these men the Catechisme, must be deliuered. Act. 18. 25. Apollos was catechized (κατηχημένος) in the way of the Lord. And he spake feruently in the spirit, and taught diligently the things of the Lord, knowing onely the baptisme of Ioh. 26. And hee began to speake boldly in the Synagogue. Whome when Aquila and Priscilla had heard, they tooke him vnto them, and expounded vnto him the way of God more perfectly. Luk. 1. 4. That thou maiest know the the truth of those things, whereof thou hast beene catechized (κατηχήθης) or instructed.

The Catechisme is the doctrine of the foundation of Christian religion, briefly propounded for the helpe of the vnderstanding and memory, in questions and answers made by the liuely voice.

The matter therefore of the Catechisme, is the foundation of religion.

The foundation is a certaine summe of the principles of Christianity. Heb. 5. 12. For when as concerning the time ye ought to be teachers, yee haue [ye need again, that wee teach you the first principles of the words of God.

A principle is that which doth directly and immediately serue, both for the saluation of men, and for the glory of God, which being also denied and ouer-turned, no saluation can be hoped for.

There are especially fiue principles: Repentance, Faith, Baptisme, that is, the Sacrament, Imposition of hands, that is, the ministery of the word by a Synecdoche, the resurrection, and the last iudgement, Heb. 6. 1, 2, 3.

The forme of the Catechisme is, to handle the elements or grounds plainely, by asking and answering. 1. Pet. 3. 21. *To the which also the figure that now saueth vs, euen baptisme agreeth (not the putting away of the filthines of the flesh, but the stipulation or * interrogation of a good conscience.)* Act. 8. 37. What doth let me to be baptized? And Philip said vnto him, If thou beleeuest with all thine heart, thou maist. Then he answered, saying, I beleeue that Iesus Christ is the Sonne of God. Tertul. de resur. car. saith: The soule is not purged with walking, but with answering.

And here wee must holde a difference betweene milke and strong meate, which are the same indeed, but do differ in the manner and fashion of deliuering.

Milke is a certaine briefe, plaine and generall explication of the principles of the faith: as when a man doth teach that wee must beleeue one God, and three persons, Father, Sonne, Sonne, and holy Ghost; and that we must rely onely vpon the grace of God in Christ, and that wee ought to beleeue the remission of sinnes; and when wee are taught that, wee ought to repent, to abstaine from euill, and to doe that which is good.

Strong meate is a speciall, copious, luculent and cleare handling of the doctrine of faith: as when the condition of man before the fall, his fall, originall and actuall sinne, mans guiltinesse, free-will, the mysteries of the Trinity, the two natures of Christ, the personall vnion, the office of Christ, the imputation of righteousnesse, faith, grace, and the vse of the law, are deliuered out of the word of God distinctly and exactly.

Moreouer, milke must be set before babes, that is, those that are rude or weake in knowledge: strong meate must be giuen to such as are of ripe yeares, that is, to them that are better instructed. 1. Cor. 3. 1. Moreouer, brethren, I could not speake vnto you as to spirituall: but I haue spoken vnto you as to carnall, that is, to infants in Christ. 2. I haue fed you with milke, and not with meate, Heb. 5. 13.

III. Some haue knowledge, but are not as yet humbled.

In such the foundation of repentance ought to bee stirred vp, that is to say, a certaine sorrow which is according to God. 1. Cor. 7. 8. For though I made you sory with a letter, I repent not, though I did repent: for I perceiue that the same Epistle made you sory, though it were but for a season. 9. I now reioyce, not that ye were sory, but that ye sorrowed to repentance: for ye sorrowed according to God (κατὰ θεὸν,) so that in nothing ye were hurt by vs. 10. For sorrow which is according to God (or godly) causeth repentance vnto saluation not to be repented of: but worldly sorrow causeth death.

Sorrow according to God, is a griefe for sinne, euen because it is sinne.

To the stirring vp of this affection, in the first place a man must vse the ministery of the Law which may beget contrition of heart, or the horrors of conscience, which though it be not a thing wholesome and profitable of it owne nature, yet is it a remedy necessarie for the subduing of a sinners stubbornnesse, and for the preparing of his mind to become teachable.

Now, that this legall sorrow may bee wrought, it is fit to vse some choice parcell of the Law, which may reproue some one notable sinne in men that are not as yet humbled. For sorrow for, and repentance[a] euen of one sinne, is for substance (κατ' ἔπος) sorrow for and repentance of all. Act. 8. 22. Repent therefore of this thy wickednes, and pray God, that if it be possible, the thought of thine heart may bee forgiuen thee. Act. 2. 23. Him haue ye taken by the hands of the wicked, being deliuered by the determinate counsell and foreknowledge of God, and haue crucified and slaine, Psal. 32. 5.

[a] Or, though but.

Yea further, if any man beeing afflicted with the crosse, and with outward calamities haue onely a worldly sorrow, that is, if hee mourne not for sinne as it is sinne, but for the punishment of sinne, hee is not by and by to bee comforted, but first this sorrow is to bee turned into that other sorrow, which is according to God: as is the counsell of Physitians in the like case. For if a mans life be in danger, by reason of blood gushing out at his nose: they commaund also that blood bee let out in his armes, or in some other place as the case requireth, that they might stay the course of the blood which rusheth out at the nostrils, that so they might saue his life, who was readie to yeeld vp the ghost.

[b] Godly.

Then let the Gospell be preached, in the preaching whereof, the holy Spirit worketh effectually vnto saluation. For whilest he reneweth men, that they may begin to will and to worke those things that are pleasing to God, he doth truly and properly bring forth in them that sorrow which is according to God, and repentance vnto saluation.

To the hard-hearted the Law must bee vrged, and the curse of the law must bee denounced with threatning, together with the difficulty of obtaining deliuerance vntil they be pricked in their heart. Mat. 3. 7. And when he saw many of the Pharises, and of the Sadduces come to his baptisme, he said vnto them, O generation of Vipers, who hath forewarned you to flee from the wrath to come? Mat. 19. 16. Good Master, what shall I doe that I may haue eternall life? 17. And he said vnto him, — If thou wilt enter into life, keepe the commaundements. Mat. 23. 13. Woe vnto you Scribes and Pharises, hypocrites, because ye shut vp the kingdome of heauen before men: for ye your selues goe not in, neither suffer ye those that are entring in (εἰσερχομένους) to goe in, &c. v. 33. O Serpents, and progeny of Vipers, how shall ye escape the damnation of hell?

But when the beginning of compunction doth appeare, they are presently to bee comforted with the Gospell.

IV. Some are humbled.

Here wee must very diligently consider whether their humiliation be compleate and sound, or but begun and but light or slight: least that bee or they, receiuing comfort sooner then is meet, should afterwards wax more hard, like yron, which being cast into the furnace, becomes exceeding hard, after that it is once colde.

Let thy proceeding bee after this manner with those, that are humbled in part. Let the Law bee propounded, yet so discreetly tempered with the Gospell, that being terrified with their sinnes, and with the meditation of Gods iudgement, they may together also at the same instant receiue solace by the Gospel. Act. 8. 20. Then Peter said vnto him, thy money perish with thee, because thou thinkest that the gift of God may be obtained by money. 21. Thou hast neither part, nor fellowship in this businesse, for thine heart is not right in the sight of God. 22. Repent therefore of this thy wickednesse, and pray God, that if it be possible, the cogitation of thine heart may be remitted. 23. For I see, that thou art in the gall of bitternesse, and in the bond of iniquity. Gen. 3. 9. And the Lord God cried vnto Adam, and said vnto him, where art thou? And God said, who hath shewed thee that thou art naked? What, hast thou eaten of the fruit of that tree, of which I forbad thee to eate? 13. And the Lord God said to the woman, what is this which thou hast done? And the woman said, the Serpent hath seduced me, and I haue eaten. 15. Moreouer, I will put enmitie betwixt thee and this woman, and likewise betweene thy seede and her seede: this shall breake thine head, and thou shalt bruise his heele. 2. Sam. 12. Nathan beeing sent from God, by a parable which he doth propound, hee recalleth Dauid to the conscience of his fact, and pronounceth pardon to him beeing penitent.

The doctrine of faith and repentance, and the comforts of the Gospell ought to be promulged and tendred to those that are fully humbled. Luk. 4 18. The spirit of the Lord is vpon me, therefore he hath anointed me to preach glad tidings to the poore: he hath sent me to heale the contrite heart, to preach deliuerance to the captiues, and to the blind the recouerie of their sight, and to set at libertie those that were broken. Act. 2. 37. When they heard these things, they were pricked in heart, and said vnto Peter, and to the rest of the Apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we doe? 38. And Peter said vnto them: Repent, and be baptized euery one of you in the name of Iesus Christ for the remission of sinnes. Matth. 9. 13. I came not to call the iust, but sinners vnto repentance.

V. Some doe beleeue.

To these must bee propounded. 1. The Gospel touching iustification, sanctification, and perseuerance. 2. The law without the curse, whereby they may be taught to bring forth fruits of new obedience beseeming repentance. Rom. 8. 1. There is no condemnation to those that are in Christ Iesus. 1. Tim. 1. 9. The law is not appointed for the righteous. Let the Epistle of Paul to the Romans bee the example. 3. How soeuer the curse of the law is not to be vrged against the person that is righteous and holy in the sight of God, yet it is to be vrged against the sinnes of the person, which are remaining. And as a father doth oftentimes set his yron rods that are appointed for the seruants before the eyes of his sonns, that they may be frayed: so the meditation of the curse is to bee stirred vp very often in the faithful themselues, least they should abuse the mercie of God to licentious liuing, and that they may bee more fully humbled. For sanctification is but in part: therefore that the remainders of sinne may be abolished, wee must alwaies beginne with the meditation of the law, and with the feeling of sinne, & make an end in the Gospell.

VI. Some are fallen.

Those that are fallen are they, which doe in part fall from the state of grace.

Falling is either in faith or in manners.

Falling in faith is either in the knowledge of the doctrine of the Gospell, or in the apprehending of Christ.

Falling in knowledge is a declining into error, whether lighter or fundamentall.

Now vnto those that fall thus, that doctrine which doth crosse their error, is to bee demonstrated and inculcated (or beaten vpon them) together with the doctrine of repentance, and that with a brotherly affection. Take for an example the Epistle of Paul to the Galatians. 2. Tim. 2. 25. Instructing them with meeknesse (that are (τοὺς ἀντιδιατιθεμένους) contrarily affected) if God at any time will giue them repentance that they may know the truth.

The fall which is in apprehending Christ, is desperation.

For the restoring of those that doe despaire, there are to be vsed a triall, and the remedie.

The triall or search is either of the cause of the temptation, or of their estate.

The triall of the cause is made fitly by priuate confession. Iam. 5. 17. Confesse your sinnes one to another, and pray for one another, that ye may be healed. But least that confession should bee made a kind of racke or torture, it must be limited with these prouisoes. 1. It ought to bee free, and not compelled: because saluation depends not vpon it. 2. It must not bee of all sinnes, but of those onely which wring the conscience, which vnlesse they doe reueale, greater danger may hang ouer their heads. 3. Let it chiefly be made to Pastours, yet so, as that wee must know that it may bee safely made to other faithfull men in the Church.

The triall of their estate is, whereby wee make diligent inquirie whether they bee vnder the law, or vnder grace.

That this may manifestly appeare, we must by asking of questions first draw out of them, whether they be displeased with themselues, because they haue displeased God, that is to say, whether they hate sinne as it is sinne: which is the foundation of repentance vnto saluation. Secondly, wee must demand of them, whether they haue or doe feele in their heart a desire to bee reconciled with God, which is the ground of a liuely faith.

When Triall is made, the Remedie must bee applied vnto them out of the Gospell, which is double. First, some Euangelicall meditations are to be often inculcated and pressed vpon them: as 1. That their sinne is pardonable. 2. That the promises are generall in respect of beleeuers, and that they are indefinite in respect of particular men, and doe exclude no man. 3. That the will to beleeue is faith, Psal. 145. 19. Reu. 21 6 4. That sinne doth not abolish grace, but rather (God turning all things vnto the good of those that are his) doth illustrate it. 5. That all the works of God are done by contrarie meanes. Secondly, they must be intreated to stirre vp in them in the very bitternesse of the temptation, their faith which hath lien in a swoune, and bin *couered (as it were) with ashes) and that they would certainely set downe with themselues, that their sins are forgiuen them, & that it would pleasethem to struggle manfully in prayer either alone or with others against carnall sense and humane hope. And that they may performe these things, they must be very earnestly beaten vpon, & those that are vnwilling must in a manner bee constrained. Psal. 130. 1. Out of the depths haue I called to thee, O Lord, 2. Lord listen vnto my voice: let thine eares attend to the voice of my prayers. Psal. 77. 1. My voice came to God when I prayed, my voice went to God, that he would turn his eare (vt aduertat aurem) vnto me. 2. In the day of my distresse I besought the Lord. Rom. 4. 18 Who (Abraham) against (παρ) hope beleeued vnder hope, that he should be the father of many nations.

* Sopitam fidem.

Now that these medicines may be of force, that ministeriall power of binding and loosing is to be vsed according to their true prescribed in the word. 2. Sam. 12. 13. Then Dauid said to Nathan, I haue sinned against the Lord. Whereto Nathan said to Dauid, God hath also forgiuen thy sinne, thou shalt not die. 2. Cor. 5. 20. Therefore we are Embassadors for the name of Christ, God as it were beseeching you by vs: We pray you in the name of Christ, that ye would bee reconciled to God. And if perhaps Melancholy trouble the minde, the helpe of the meditine must be in priuate sought for.

Faith in a man is, when any sinfull man falleth to the dominion of some actuall sinne in life, As Noahs drunkennesse, Dauids adulterie, Peters denyall &c.

To those that are falsen thus, forsomuch as grace remaining in the seed of her vertue and habit may bee lost for a time in respect of sense and working; the law must be propounded being mixed with the Gospell: because a new act of sinne requires a new act (or worke) of faith and repentance. Isa. 1. 4. Ah, sinfull nation, a people laden with iniquitie, a seede of the wicked, corrupt children: they haue forsaken the Lord: they haue prouoked the holy one of Israel to anger, they are gone backward. 16. Wash you, make you cleane, take away the euill of your workes from before mine eyes, &c. 18. Come now, and let vs reason together, saith the Lord, though your sinnes were as crimson, they shall bee made white as snow: though they were red like scarlet, they shall bee as wooll.

Isa. 1. 1, 2, 3, 4.

VII. There is a mingled people.

A mixt people are the assemblies of our Churches. To these any doctrine may bee propounded, whether of the law or of the Gospel: if the [a] limitation and circumscription of the doctrine be made to those persons, for whome it is conuenient. Ioh. 7. 37. Now in the last and great day of the Feast, Iesus stood and cried, saying: If any man thirst, let him come vnto me and drinke. And this was the manner of the Prophets in their Sermons, to denounce iudgements and destruction to the wicked: and to promise deliuerance in the Messias to those that doe repent. A doubt: if any man shall despaire in the publike congregation, when the rest are hardened, what ought to be done? Answ. Let those that are hardened, heare the Law circumscribed within the limits of the persons, and of the vices: and let the afflicted conscience heare the voice of the Gospell applied in speciall manner vnto it.

[a] 1. If it be limited and inclined vnto them.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the kinds of Application.

Application is either Mentall, or *Practicall.

Mentall is that, which respecteth the minde: and it is either doctrine or *Redargution. 2. Tim. 3. 16. The whole Scripture is giuen by God's inspiration, and is profitable for doctrine (προς διδασκαλιαν) for Redargution or improouing, (προς ελεγχον) for correction (προς επανορθωσιν) and for instruction (παιδειαν) in righteousnesse. 17. That the man of God may be perfect, being perfectly instructed vnto euery good worke.

Doctrine is that, whereby doctrine (or teaching) is vsed for the information of the mind to a right iudgement concerning things to be beleeued.

Redargution is that, whereby teaching is vsed for the reformation of the minde from error.

In confutations, which are made publikely before the assembly, these cautions must be vsed. 1. The thing that is determined (τὸ κείμενον) or the state of the question that is to be discussed must bee throughly vnderstood. 2. Let those errors onely be reproued, which trouble the Church; in which we liue: all other being altogether let alone, which doe either lie dead, or are externall: vnlesse some danger be readie to ensue of them. Mat. 16. Beware of the leauen of the Pharises and Sadduces. Mark. 9. Take heede, and beware of the leauen of Herod. Reuel. 2. The men of Pergamus are warned to beware of the Nicolaitans, to whom some of them did assent. 3. If the error bee out of the foundation of faith, the confutation must not onely be Christian-like, as it should be euer: but also a friendly, a gentle and brotherly dissention.

Practicall application is that which respecteth the life and behauiour. And it is instruction (παιδεια) and correction, ἐπανορθωσις.

Instruction is that, whereby doctrine is applied to frame a man to liue well in the [b] family, common-wealth, and Church. To this place belong consolation and exhortation, Rom. 15. 4.

Correction is that, whereby the doctrine is applied to reforme the life from vngodlinesse and vnrighteous dealing. Hitherto belongs admonition. This must be done, first generally, the circumstances of the persons beeing omitted. 2. Sam. 12. Nathan brings Dauid to the knowledge of his sinne by the helpe of a generall parable. Act. 19. 26. Ye see and heare that not onely at Ephesus, but almost throughout all Asia, this Paul hath perswaded and turned away much people (because he saith that those are not Gods which are made with hands.) 35. Then the Towne Clerke, when he had stayed the people, said, Ye men of Ephesus, &c. 37. Ye haue brought hither these men, which haue neither committed sacriledge, neither [doe blaspheme] your goddesse. Afterwards, if the former reproofe preuaile not, it must bee vrged after a more speciall manner. 1. Tim. 5. 20. Them that sinne, rebuke openly, that the rest may also feare. But alwaies, in the very hatred of sinne, let the loue of the person appeare in the speeches: and let the Minister include himselfe (if he may) in his reprehension, that it may be more milde and gentle. Dan. 4. 16. Then Daniel—said, My Lord, the dreame bee to them that hate thee, and the interpretation thereof to thine enemies. 17. The tree, which thou sawest—it is thou, 19. Gal. 2. 15. We that are Iewes by nature, and not sinners of the Gentiles. 1. Cor. 4. 6. These things, Brethren, I haue by a kinde of figure transiated to my selfe, and to Apollos for you, that yee might learne by vs not to bee wise aboue that which is written.

[b] Or gouernment of the family, oeconomia.

Now these foure kinds of application doe offer themselues in euery sentence of the Scripture. I will also set downe that example, which Illyricus hath propounded.

Illyricus in his booke of the way to vnderstand the Scriptures. Tract. 1.

Matth. 10. 28. Feare yee not them which kill the bodie, but are not able to kill the soule: but rather feare him, which is able to destroy both soule and bodie in hell. 29. Are not two sparrowes sold for a farthing, and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father? 30. Yea, and all the haires of your head are numbred. 31. Feare ye not therefore, ye are of more value then many sparrower.

It were easie to draw from hence many doctrines: partly of the confession of the faith: and partly concerning (Gods) prouidence.

Doctrine 1. That it is needfull for vs publikely to professe the doctrine which wee know, so often as there is need. 2. That wee must make confession also with the hazzard of goods and life. 3. That our life should be contemned in comparison of Christ and his truth. 4. That eternall punishments to be suffered both in soule and bodie are prepared for those that are not affraid to denie Christ, and his truth. 5. That God is intent and readie to gouerne vs, that wee might make our confession aright. 6. That the prouidence of God is not onely generall, but also speciall, which is diligently occupied about all our smallest matters, yea euen the haires of our head.

* Sopitam fidem.

* Inuocation.

* Mentall. Practicall.

* Improouing, confuting.

* Traditio.

* Redargution. 1. Those doe erre, who thinke it to be sufficient, if in heart they do embrace the faith and a right opinion concerning religion: and that it is at a mans choise in the meane season to graunt or affirme any thing before men, as the condition of the place, time, and persons requireth; especially when the life seemeth to be in imminent danger to be lost. 2. The Epicures erre, in that they deny the diuine prouidence: because they think it too base for the Maiestie of God to take care of humane affaires. 3. The Stoickes doe erre, who imagine that all things are gouerned by the fate, (or an vnresistable and violent necessitie.) 4. They doe erre who make chance and fortune, without any wise ordination of the diuine prouidence. 5. The Pelagians doe erre in giuing more then is due to mans strength, as if it were put in mens power to embrace the faith at their pleasure, to continue constant in the same, and to confesse it to the end without feare. 6. They doe erre, who doe leane more vpon outwards things and inconstant riches, then vpon the power and goodnesse of God.

* Errours Stoici.

* Instruction. 1. Thou must to the vtmost of thy power labour to haue the true feare of God before thine eyes: because thou now heares that one God is to bee feared aboue all men.

* Traditio.

2 Thou must learne such a contempt of humane things, as that thou mayest alwaies desire, hauing forsaken thē, to depart hence, and to be ioyned together with Christ in the heauens. 3. The consideration of (Gods) speciall prouidence doth cause thee to thinke of the presence of God that Beholder, to craue his helpe, and also to beleeue that thou art helped in all things, and finally that there is no danger so terrible, but he both can and will deliuer thee from, when it is fit.

* Errours Stoici.

* Correction. 1. These words of Christ correct their negligence, who in their prayers doe not craue of God sincere loue, that beeing inflamed with it they may not refuse to lay downe their life for his name. 2. The negligence of those men is also taxed, which doe not acknowledge and behold the prouidence of God shewing it selfe in all things. 3. Those are reproued, who giue not God thankes for vouchsafing to gouerne and defend vs in all things that belong vnto vs by his prouidence. 4. Those are reproued, that abuse the good creatures of God, seeing that it is manifest that God hath care of all things.

Thus any place of Scripture ought to bee handled: yet so as that all the doctrines bee not propounded to the people, but those onely, which may bee fitly applied to our times and to the present condition of the Church. And they must not onely be choice ones, but also few, lest the hearers bee ouercharged with their multitude.

CHAP. IX.

Of Memorie in Preaching.

[a] Memoriter.

BEcause it is the receiued custome for preachers to speake [a] by heart before the people, some thing must be here annexed concerning memorie.

Artificiall memorie, which standeth vpon places and images, will very easily without labour teach how to commit sermons to the memorie: but it is not to bee approoued. 1. The animation of the image, which is the key of memorie, is impious; because it requireth absurd, insolent and prodigious cogitations, and those especially, which set an edge vpon and kindle the most corrupt affections of the flesh. 2. It dulleth the wit and memorie, because it requireth a threefold memorie for one: the first of the places: the second of the images: the third of the thing that is to bee declared.

It is not therefore an vnprofitable aduice, if he that is to preach doe diligently imprint in his minde by the helpe of disposition either axiomatically, or syllogistically, or methodically, the seuerall proofes and applications of the doctrines, the illustrations of the applications, and the order of them all: in the meane time nothing carefull for the words, Which (as Horace speaketh) will not vnwillingly follow the matter that is premeditated. Verbaq; præuisam rem non inuita sequentur.

Their studie hath many discommodities, who doe con their written sermons word for word. 1. It asketh great labour. 2. He which through feare doth stumble at one word, doth both trouble the congregation, and confound his memorie. 3. Pronunciation, action, and the holy motions of affections are hindred; because the mind is wholly bent on this, to wit, that the memorie fainting now vnder her burthen may not faile.

CHAP. X.

HItherto hath beene spoken of the preparation or prouision of the sermon: the Promulgation or vttering of it followeth.

In the Promulgation two things are requisite: the hiding of humane wisedome, and the demonstration (or shewing) of the spirit.

Humane wisedome must be concealed, whether it be in the matter of the sermon, or in the setting forth of the words: because the preaching of the word is the Testimony of God, and the profession of the knowledge of Christ, and not of humane skill: and againe, because the hearers ought not to ascribe their faith to the gifts of men, but to the power of Gods word. 1. Cor. 2. 1. When I came vnto you brethren, I came not with the eminency of eloquence or of wisedome, declaring vnto you the testimonie of God. 2. For I did not decree to know any thing among you A but Iesus Christ, and him crucified. 5. That your faith should not consist in the wisedome of men, but in the power of God.

If any man thinke that by this means barbarisme should be brought into pulpits; hee must vnderstand that the Minister may, yea and must priuately vse at his libertie the arts, Philosophy, and variety of reading, whilest he is in framing his sermon: but he ought in publike to conceale all these from the people, and not to make the least ostentation. Artis etiam est celare artem; it is also a point of Art to conceale Art.

B The Demonstration of the spirit is, when as the Minister of the word doth in the time of preaching so behaue himselfe that all, euen ignorant persons & vnbeleeuers may iudge, that it is not so much he that speaketh, as the Spirit of God in him and by him. 1. Cor. 2. 4. Neither was my speech and my preaching in the perswasiue words of mans wisedome, but in the demonstration of the spirit and of power. And 14. 24. If all prophesie, and there enter in an vnbeleeuer, or one that is ignorant, he is reproued of all, he is iudged of all. 25. And so the secrets of his heart are disclosed, & so falling vpō his face, he wil worship God, returning word that God indeed is amōg you. And 4. 19. I will come vnto you shortly—— and I will know not their *words that are puffed vp, but their power. 20. For the kingdome of God is not in words but in power. Mich. 3. 8. I am filled with power by the spirit of the Lord, and with iudgment and might to shew to Iacob his desection, and to Israel his sinne. This makes the ministerie to be liuely and powerfull. Luk. 11. 27. And it came to passe, when he had spoken these things, that a certaine woman of the multitude lifting vp her voyce said vnto him, Blessed is the wombe that bare thee, and the breasts that gaue thee sucke.

* Non verba sed virtutem.

C This demonstration is either in speech or in gesture.

The speech must be spirituall and gracious.

That speech is spirituall, which the holy Spirit doth teach. 1. Cor. 2. 13. Which things also we speake, not in the words, which mans wisedome teacheth, but which the holy Ghost teacheth, comparing spirituall things with spirituall things. And it is a speech both simple and perspicuous, fit both for the peoples vnderstanding, and to expresse the Maiestie of the Spirit. Act. 17. 2. Paul disputed with them three sabbath dayes out of the Scripture. 3. Opening (διανοίγων) and shewing that Christ must suffer and rise againe. Gal. 3. 1. O yee foolish Galatians: ——to whome Iesus Christ before was described in your sight, and among you crucified. 2. Cor. 4. 2. But we haue cast from vs the cloakes of shame, and walke not in craftinesse, neither handle wee the word of God deceitfully: but in declaration of the truth we approoued our selues to euery mans conscience in the sight of God. 3. If our Gospell be then hid, it is hid to them that perish. 4. In whome the God of this world hath blinded the mindes, that is, of the infidels, &c.

D Wherefore neither the words of arts, nor

Greeke

Greeke and Latine phrases and quirkes must be intermingled in the sermon. 1. They disturbe the mind of the auditours, that they cannot fit those things which went afore with those that follow. 2. A strange word hindreth the vnderstanding of those things that are spoken. 3. It drawes the minde away from the purpose to some other matter.

Here also the telling of tales, and all prophane and ridiculous speeches must bee omitted.

The speech is gracious, wherein the grace of the heart is expressed. Luk. 4. 22. And all bare witnesse of him, and wondred at the gracious wordes which proceeded out of his mouth. Ioh. 7. 46. The Officers answered, neuer man spake like this man.

Grace is either of the Person, or of the Ministerie.

Grace of the person is the holinesse of the heart, and an vnblameable life: Which howsoeuer it makes not a Minister, yet is it very necessarie. 1. Because the doctrine of the word is hard both to be vnderstood and to be practised, therefore the Minister ought to expresse that by his example, which hee teacheth, as it were by a type. 1. Pet. 5. 3. Not as though ye were Lords ouer Gods heritage; but that yee may bee examples (τύποι types) to the flocke. 1. Tim. 4. 12. Be an example to the faithfull, both in word and conuersation. Phil. 4. 8. Furthermore, brethren, whatsoeuer things are true, whatsoeuer things are honest——thinke on these things. 9. Which ye haue both learned, and receiued, and heard, and seene in me, those things doe, and the God of peace shall be with you. 2. He that is not godly, howsoeuer hee may vnderstand the Scriptures, yet doth he not perceiue the inward sense and experience of the word in his heart. Psal. 25. 8. The Lord is good and right, therefore bee teacheth sinners his way. 9. He maketh the meeke to walke in the Law, and teacheth the meeke his way. Amos. 3. 7. Surely the Lord God will doe nothing, but he reuealeth his secret to his seruants the Prophets. Gen. 18. 17. And the Lord said, Shall I hide from Abraham the thing which I am about to doe? 18. Seeing that Abraham shall bee indeede the Father of a great and mightie nation, &c. 19. For I know him that he will command his sonnes and his houshold after him, that they keepe the way of the Lord to doe righteousnesse and iudgement. 3. It is a thing execrable in the sight of God, that godly speech should bee conioyned with an vngodly life. Psal. 50. 16. 17. Vnto the wicked God saith, what hast thou to doe to declare mine ordinances: and to take my couenant into thy mouth, seeing thou hatest to be reformed? It is a strange sight to see a blinde man, that is the guide of the way to others, to wander out of the way himselfe, and to see a Physitian of others to be ful of botches himselfe in the meane while, as Nazianzene speaketh. 4. It is an ecclesiasticall secret: That the Minister ought to couer his infirmities, that they be not seene. For the simple people behold not A the ministerie, but the person of the Minister. Herod heard Iohn Baptist willingly, not because he was a good Minister, but because he was a good man. Mark. 6. 20. Well saith Nazianzene, He that teacheth sound doctrine, and liues wickedly, preacheth that with one hand, which hee cleeketh away with the other. Chrysostome vpon the twentie of Matthew saith: The doctor of the Church by teaching well and by liuing ill instructeth the people how they ought to liue well: but by liuing ill hee doth instruct God how to condemne him. And in his 30. Hom. in Act. It is an easie matter to shew wisedome in words, teach me to liue by thy life, this is the best teaching. For words make not such an impression in the soule as workes doe. 5. A Minister, that is wicked either openly or secretly, is not worthy to

B stand before the face of the most holy, and the almightie God. Ier. 15. 19. Therefore thus saith the Lord, If thou returne, then will I bring thee againe, and thou shalt stand before me. Isa. 6. 6. Then flew one of the Seraphims vnto me with an hot coale in his hand, which he had taken from the Altar with the tongues. 7. And he touched my mouth and said, Loe, this hath touched thy lips, and thine iniquitie shall be taken away, and thy sinne shall be purged. 8. Also I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whome shall I send? and who shall goe for vs? Then I said, Here am I, send me. Leuit. 10. 3. Then Moses said to Aaron, This is that which the Lord said, I will bee sanctified in them that come neere vnto me, and I will be glorified before the sight of all the people. And hence it is, that the iudgements of God remaine for wicked Ministers to trembie at. 1. Sam. 2. 17. Therefore the sinne of the young men was very great before the Lord: for men abhorred the offering of the Lord, &c. vers. 25. They obeyed not the voyce of their Father, because the Lord meant to slay them.

The parts of sanctitie are especially, 1. A good conscience. 2. Cor. 1. 12. For our reioycing is this, the testimonie of our conscience, that in simplicitie & godly sincerity, & not in fleshly wisdome, but by the grace of God, we haue had our conuersatiō in the world. 1. Tim. 1. 19. Keeping faith & a good conscience, which some hauing put away, as

C concerning the faith haue made Ship-wracke. Act. 24. 16. And herein I endeauour my selfe to haue al way a cleere conscience towards God & towards men. If this be wanting, the mouth of the speaker is shut. Isa. 56. 10. Their watchmen are all blind: they haue no knowledge, they are all dumbe dogges, they cannot barke, they lie and sleepe, and delight in sleeping. 2. An inward feeling of the doctrine to be deliuered. Wood that is capable of fire, doth not burne, vnlesse fire be put to it: and he must first be godly affected himselfe, who would stirre vp godly affections in other men. Therefore what motions a sermon doth require, such the Preacher shall stirre vp priuately in his owne minde, that he may kindle vp the same in his hearers. 3. The feare of God, wheeby, being throughly

D strucken with a reuerent regard of Gods Maiestie, ieſſie, he ſpeaketh ſoberly and moderately. A

4. The loue of the people. 1. Theſſ. 27. But were gentle among you, as a nurſe that cherisheth her children. And that affection may appeare, the Miniſters duty is to pray ſeriouſly and feruently for the people of God. 1. Sam. 12. 23. Godforbid, that I ſhould ſinne againſt the Lord, and ceaſe praying for you. 5. The Minister muſt alſo be (σεμνὸς) venerable, that is, ſuch an one as is to be reuerenced for conſtancie, integritie, gratitie and truth-ſpeaking, who alſo knoweth how to performe reuerence to others either priuately or publikely, as is befitting the perſons of all his hearers. 6. He muſt be (σώφρων) temperate, who reſtraineth inwardly his ouer vehement affections, & hath B his outward faſhions and geſtures moderate and plaine, by the which dignitie and authoritie may be procured and preſerued. Therefore he muſt be neither couetous (φιλάργυρος, a louer of ſiluer) nor (πάροινος, a follower of wine,) nor litigious, nor a ſtriker, nor wrathfull: And let the young men exerciſe themſelues to godlineſſe, and flie the luſts of youth. 1. Tim. 4. 7.

The grace of the Miniſterie is 1. to bee apt to teach (διδακτικὸς εἶναι) 1. Tim. 3. 2. Now Pauls meaning is, that it is not only decent and laudable if this gift be had, but alſo that it is ſo neceſſarie, as that it may not be wanting. For this conſideration Nazianzene refuſed a bi- C ſhoprick: and Theophylact vpon this place ſaith, that this duty of teaching is eſpecially of all other neceſſarie to be found in Biſhops. In the Nicene and Miletian Councell, this was impoſed in ſtead of a puniſhment, to hold the name of a Miniſter, but not to preach the Goſpell. 2. Authoritie, whereby he ſpeaketh as the Embaſſadour of the great Iehouah. Tit. 2. 15. Theſe things ſpeake and exhort, and rebuke with all authoritie. 1. Pet. 4. 11. If any man ſpeake, let him ſpeake as the oracles of God. 3. Zeale, whereby being moſt deſirous of Gods glorie he doth endeauour to fulfill and execute the decree of election concerning the ſaluation of men by his miniſterie. Iob 32 18. I am full of matter, and the ſpirit within me compelleth me. 16. Behold my belly is as the wine which hath no vent, and like the new bottles that braſt. 2. Tim. 2. 25. Inſtructing them——proouing if God at any time will giue them repentance, that they may know the truth. Col. 1. 28. 29. Admoniſhing euery man——that wee may preſent euery man perfect in Chriſt Ieſus.

Geſture is either in the action of the voice or of the bodie.

The voice ought to be ſo high, that all may heare. Iſa. 58. 1. Crie aloud, and ſpare not: lift vp thy voice like a trumpet. Ioh. 7. 37. In that laſt and great day of the Feaſt Ieſus ſtood vp and cryed. Act. 2. 14. And Peter ſtanding with the eleuen lift vp his voice and ſaid.

In the doctrine hee ought to be more moderate, in the exhortation more feruent and vehement.

Let there be that grauitie in the geſture of the bodie, which may grace the Meſſenger of God. It is fit therefore, that the trunk or ſtalke of the bodie being erect and quiet, all the other parts, as the armes, the hand, the face and eyes haue ſuch motions, as may expreſſe and (as it were) vtter the godly affections of the heart. The lifting vp of the eye and the hand ſignifieth confidence. 2. Chron. 6. 13. Salomon made a braſen ſcaffold, and ſet it in the middeſt of the court——and vpon it hee ſtood, and kneeled downe vpon his knees before all the congregation of Iſrael, and ſtretched out his hands towards heauen. 14. And ſaid, O Lord God of Iſrael, &c. Act. 7. 55. And Steuen beeing full of the holy Ghoſt, bending his eyes vp to heauen beheld the glorie of God. The caſting downe of the eyes ſignifieth ſorrow and heauineſſe. Luk. 18. 13. But the Publican ſtanding a farre off would not ſo much as lift vp his eyes to heauen, but ſmote his breaſt ſaying, God be mercifull to me a ſinner.

Concerning the geſture, other precepts cannot be deliuered; onely, let the enſample of the graueſt Miniſters in this kinde bee in ſtead of a Rule.

CHAP. XI.

Of conceiuing of Prayer.

HItherto hath beene ſpoken concerning Preaching of the Word: it remaineth now to ſpeake of the conceiuing of prayers: which is the ſecond part of Prophecying, whereby the Miniſter is the voice of the people in calling vpon God. Luk. 11. 1. One of his Diſciples ſaid vnto him, Lord, teach vs to pray, as Iohn alſo taught his Diſciples. 1. Sam. 14. 24.

Here are to be conſidered:

1 The matter thereof, firſt the wants and ſinnes of the people: and then the graces of God and the bleſſings they ſtand in neede of. 1. Tim. 2. 1. I exhort therefore aboue all things, that ſupplications——be made for all men. 2. For Kings and thoſe that are in authoritie. Tertul. Apolog. ſaith, We doe all pray for all Emperours, that they may obtaine a long life, a quiet raigne, a ſafe family, couragious armies, a faithfull Councell, lo all ſubiect, a peaceable world, and whatſoeuer things are deſired of a man and of Cæſar. Againe, We pray for Emperours for their miniſters and powers, for the ſtate of the time, for the quietneſſe of their affaires, and for the delaying of their death. The Lord prayer reduceth this matter to ſixe heads, which are Gods glorie, kingdome, and obedience, the preſeruation of the life, the remiſſion of ſinnes, and the ſtrengthening of the ſpirit. D

2 The forme thereof. 1. Let there be one voice, and that the Miniſters alone, the people being in the meane while ſilent, and ſhewing their aſſent at the end, by ſaying, Amen. Act. 4. 24. Who when they had heard theſe things, they they lift vp their voice with one accord vnto God, and ſaid, &c. Nehem. 8. 6. And Ezra praiſed the Lord the great God, and all the people anſwered, Amen, Amen. 1. Cor. 14. 16. Elſe, when thou bleſſeſt with the ſpirit, how ſhall he that ſupplieth the place of the vnlearned, ſay Amen, at thy giuing of thankes? Iuſtine in his 2. Apol. to Antoninus, ſaith: When the (προεστὼς) Preſident hath finiſhed his prayers and thanks-giuings, all the people that are preſent, cry out with a ſauourable approbation, ſaying, Amen. Athanaſius Apolog. ad Conſtant. Imp. Euſeb. libro 7. capite 8. Ierome Procem. 2. in Gal. A

2 Let the voice bee vnderſtood. 1. Cor. 14. 15. I will pray with the ſpirit, I will pray alſo with the vnderſtanding: I will ſing with the ſpirit, I will ſing with the vnderſtanding alſo. B

3 Let the voice be continued, not iagged and abrupt, that idle repetitions may be auoided, (ἀπερισπάστως) Mat. 6. 7.

4 The parts, which are three: Conſideration, Ordering, and Vttering of it.

Conſideration is that, whereby fit matter for the framing of prayers is diligently ſearched for.

Ordering is that, whereby the matter being found out, is diſpoſed in the minde in a certaine order.

Proſation or vttering of it is that, whereby it is orderly pronounced in publike to the edifying of the people.

Trin vni Deogloria.

THE ORDER AND SVMME of the ſacred and onely methode of Preaching.

1. To reade the Text diſtinctly out of the Canonicall Scriptures.
2. To giue the ſenſe and vnderſtanding of it being read, by the Scripture it ſelfe.
3. To collect a few and profitable points of doctrine out of the matter all ſenſe.
4. To apply (if he haue the gift) the doctrines rightly collected, to the life and manners of men, in a ſimple and plaine ſpeech.

The Summe of the Summe.

Preach one Chriſt by Chriſt to the praiſe of Chriſt.

The Writers which lent their helpe to the framing of this Art of Prophecying, are:

Auguſtine, Hemingius, Hyperius, Eraſmus, Illyricus, Wigandus, Iacobus Matthias, Theodorus Beza, Franciſcus Iunius.

Soli Deo gloria.

A

DIGEST OR HARMONIE OF the bookes of the old and new Testament.

Printed at London by IOHN LEGATT, Printer to the Vniuersitie of Cambridge.
1613.

TO THE VVORSHIPFVL SOCIETIE OF CHRISTS COLLEDGE IN CAMBRIDGE, CHIEFLY TO THE Reuerend Master, D. EDMVND BARVELL, and the thirteene fellowes of the same.

IT was a custome among the Gentiles euery yeare to send new-yeares gifts one to another, which thing Suetonius doth declare, [a] where hee saith, that Tyberius did by an edict forbid the entercourse of new-yeres gifts. This custome the Church hath condemned of impietie, and for that cause hath thought good to abolish it. Tertullian [b] saith, it is a wicked thing among brethren, that the feasts of Saturne, of Ianus, of Bacchus, and Gossipings should be frequented, that presents should runne, that new-yeares gifts should goe and come, and bankets should ring of sporting. After him Alcuinus [c] called them diuelish new-yeares gifts. To both these agreeth a Canon of a certaine olde [d] Councell, which saith, that it is not lawfull to obserue the carrying about of diuelish new-yeares gifts vpon the first day of Ianuarie: but let all gifts be giuen on that day so, as they are on other daies. No marueil if these new-yeares gifts bee condemned, syth they were consecrated in the names of Ianus and Saturne, after a cursed maner.

Therefore (excellent Syrs) I doe not send vnto you a new-yeares gift after the olde custome; yet I send. For that very day, which ended the last yeare, hatched this my young brood: which now I dedicate to you to bee cherished and nourished, and I pawne it to you as a pledge of my thankfull minde, for your manifolde benefits.

It remaines then, that ye also vouchsafe me your new-yeares gifts: what may they be, will ye say? truly that ye rub ouer this my little worke with the file of a criticke iudgement, that yee frame it anew where needle is, that ye defend it with a Christian content so farre as it is meete, and that yee accept of this small testimony of my good will. These things if yee shall performe, I will make account that I haue receiued backe againe not a single new-yeares gift, but a double one, yea a [e] Tyberian, that is, one foure-folde; nay an hundred-folde. Fare ye well, most reuerend President, and yee thirteene worthy fellowes, fare ye well. God grant that ye may alwaies haue your Colledge well knitte together. This last of December, the 97. of the olde style.

[a] In Tiberio cap. 34.

[b] lib. de idolat. cap. 14.

[c] lib. de offic. diuin. cap. 4.

[d] Concil. Antisiod. cap. 1.

[e] Sueton. in Tyberio, cap. 34.

Your Worships most deuoted,
William Perkins.

An

An admonition to the Reader.

Lib de Baptis. cap. 1.

CHRISTIAN Reader, I set before thee a Tablet or little Briefe of the holy and heauenly History. I call it a Digest following Tertullian, and the example of the Romane law, because in the vnfolding it rehearseth the orders of times and deedes done. In it I haue endeauoured according to my small power, to set these fiue things before thine eyes.

1. An harmony or Chronicle of the times.
2. An harmony of the anncient History, and of the Prophets.
3. An harmony of the Gospell.
4. An abridgement of the whole sacred Historie.
5. The notable *hysteroses of euery chapter.

I would that thou shouldest see and iudge what I haue performed.

This also I warne thee of, that some of these things which I write are called into doubtfull question, because I am destitute of testimonies out of holy Scripture, on which I might relie. As for example: I assigne the History of Iob, to the times of Ioseph and Iacob, only vpon probable coniecture; because there bee ready reasons to proone that he liued before the law was giuen, and after Abraham. The like iudgement there is for the rest.

If any where thou seest me diuert from the receiued and common opinion of Chronicles, know that there is great controuersie and disagreeing about that place: know that there are some of the most learned, which are on my side: and know that it is not my minde to limit, to detract, or to accuse any man. In all things as neere as I can, I ayme at the truth, at least at that which is next to the truth. There is strife too much already, and these are not times for striuing, but for praying.

If this my Digest doe (ere before thee any thing vndigested, pardon it: for I send it forth into the light for this cause onely, that I may trie the iudgement of those that both can and will gently and truly censure, and that I my selfe might be directed, warned, corrected.

*See the proem, Col. 1, c.

The Proem, or Introduction.

A Digeſt or ſacred Harmony is the order and tenour of the bookes of the olde and new Teſtament, plainly deſcribed and laid forth. This order muſt needes be moſt excellent, and of all men moſt worthy to be known, which the Author of all order himſelfe hath obſerued in his writings.

A Digeſt doth afford two things: the order of deedes done, and the order of the times.

The order of deedes is threefolde, of Nature, of Dignity, of Wiſdome.

The order of Nature is, when that which is formoſt in nature and exiſtence, is propounded in the firſt place: as for example. In the booke of Geneſis, firſt the Creation is tolde, then the fall, afterward the promiſe of the Meſſias is reuealed.

The order of Dignity is when that which is moſt worthy obtaineth the 1. place, although in Nature it be latter: So Gen. 5. 2. 32. Noah begat Sem, Ham, and Iapheth. Here Sem is the firſt in worth, though not the eldeſt by birth: For Noah began to get children when he was 500. yeares olde. But Sem was borne 2. yeares after, for he was an hundred yeares old in the 600. & ſecond yere of his fathers age, Gen. 11.

The order of Wiſedome is, when things are placed in that tenour and dependance which ſerueth beſt for the compoſing of a ſhort, plaine, and continued narration.

This order doth often admit his hyſteroſes. Hyſteroſis is an inuerſion or (as I may ſay) a miſplacing of the order of nature for ſome iuſt cauſes: and it is twofolde; Anticipation, and Recapitulation.

Anticipation is that, by which ſomething is tolde as if it were done, which notwithſtanding was not done in that time and order as it is tolde, but afterward: or, it is a narration of a later thing in a former place.

The Anticipation of names is, when thoſe names are vſed in former hiſtories, which were giuen to things or places afterwards. Gen. 14. 7. Thence they returning, came vnto the fountaine Miſpah (which is Cadet.) Iterome vpon this place ſaith, that it is ſpoken by Anticipation, being not then, but a good while after ſo called: For the place at the rocke in the wildernes is named the [a] fountaine of iudgement, becauſe there God iudged the people, Queſt. Hebr. in Gen. So Agar is ſaid to haue wandred about Beerſheba, that is, the Well of the oth, which name notwithſtanding was giuen to the Well afterwards. Gen. 21. 14.

[a] Hen-miſpa.

Anteipation of things is, when things done later are mingled with former hiſtories, as Iſa. 38. 22. What is the ſigne that I ſhall goe vp into the Lord? This ſaying ought to be ſet before the ſeuenth verſe. This ſigne ſhalt thou haue—— and ſo it is ſet. 2. King. 20. verſe 8.

Recapitulation is that by which ſome things which belong to former times, are recounted ſo as if they followed in order of time. By this meanes the ſtory of Michah, and the warre of the Benjamites, which happened when Phineas was Prieſt, are annexed to the hiſtories of Eli and Sampſon. Phineas being dead long afore, vnleſſe wee will haue him to haue liued 300. yeares, Iud. 18. 19. 20. c.

And thus far of the order of things in the holy Bible; now followeth the order of times which the Chronologie doth declare.

Chronologie is a doctrine of the time of ages. This the holy Ghoſt hath reuealed in the Scriptures ſo farre forth as it belongeth to the Church of God to knew it: But the full knowledge thereof, God hath reſerued vnto himſelfe. Act. 1. 6.

The parts of Chronologie are two: Notation, and compoſition.

Notation is that which determineth the quantity and meaſure of the parts of ſecular time, ſo farre forth as they are conſidered by themſelues.

The parts of time are fiue; houre, day, week, moneth, yeare.

An houre is a certen part of the day deuided: and it is either ſimple or compound.

A ſimple houre is either naturall or temporary.

A naturall houre is the foure and twentieth part of a naturall day.

A temporary houre is the twelfth part of an artificiall day. Iohan. c. 11. Are there not twelue houres of the day? And Mat. 20. in the Parable of the houſholder, there is mention made of the morning, the third, the ſixt, the ninth, and the eleauenth houre.

A compound houre is a quarter, or the fourth part of an artificiall day.

There are foure quarters therefore of euery artificiall day, euery one of which quarters conſiſteth of three houres, and taketh his name from the laſt. The firſt quarter from the morning to the third houre, is called the third houre. The ſecond from the third houre, to the ſixt houre, is called the ſixt houre. The third, from the ſixt houre, vnto the ninth, is called the ninth houre. The fourth, from the ninth houre, to the Sunne ſetting, is called the euening. Of theſe kinds of houres thoſe places ſeeme to bee vnderſtood. Mark. 15. 25. And it was the third houre when they crucified him. Ioh. 19. 14. It was the preparation of the Paſſouer, and about the ſixt houre.——Then deliuered he him to be crucified. Luk. 23. 44. And it was about the ſixt houre, and there was a darkneſſe ouer all the land. The ſum is, that Chriſt was crucified at the third and the ſixt houre: the third houre beeing ended and gone: the ſixt houre going, but not ended.

If any one ſhall ſay that this partition of the day is fained and nouell, let him heare Cenſorine lib. de die Natal. c. 10. Some, ſaith he, doe deuide the day and likewiſe the night into foure parts. Let him know alſo that among the Iewes the night was parted into foure watches. Matth. 14. 25. And in the fourth watch of the night, Ieſus went vnto them walking on the ſea.

An Hebrew day is either Naturall or Artificiall.

A naturall day, is the ſpace of foure and twenty houres, containing alſo both the morning and the euening.

The morning and the euening are the bounds of euery day; and the euening is of two ſorts. The firſt, is from the ninth houre to the ſetting of the Sunne. The ſecond, is from the Sunne ſetting vnto the ſhutting in of the night. Leu. 23. 5. In the firſt moneth and the fourteenth day of the moneth betweene the two euenings ſhall be the Paſſouer of the Lord.

A naturall day according to the diuerſe vſes thereof, is either a [*] workie-day, or a holy-day.

[*] Ciuilis aut Sacer.

A workie-day is that which is appointed for our ciuill buſineſſes, and (as it ſeemes to me) this day among the Iewes laſted from Sunne riſing to the Sunne riſing, that is, it began at the morning. Exod. 18. 14. why ſitteſt thou thy ſelfe alone, and all the people ſtand about thee from morning to euen? Matth. 28. 1. In the end of the Sabbath when the firſt day of the weeke began to dawne. It is not likely that Matthew ſpake theſe things after the manner of the Romanes, ſeeing that hee wrote his Goſpell eſpecially for the Hebrewes.

An holy-day is that which is appointed for holy vſes. An holy day is onely made by God to whome onely it belongeth to bleſſe and hallow the times.

An holy day beginneth at the euening, and endeth at the euening. Leuit. 23. verſ. 32. From euen to euen ſhall ye celebrate your Sabbath.

The holy day common to all ages is the Sabbath, which according to the morall law is a certaine ſeauenth day ſet apart for diuine worſhip. Here is to be noted that ſometime the word Sabbath is put for the whole weeke. I faſt twice a Sabbath, Mark. 16. and the firſt of the Sabbath, 1. Cor. 16. 1.

An Artificiall day is the ſpace of time from the riſing of the Sunne, to the ſetting. Ioh. 11. wherefore it is longer in ſommer and ſhorter in winter.

A weeke is the ſpace of ſeauen daies, ſometime alſo of ſeauen yeares. Dan. 9. 24. Seauentie weekes are determined vpon thy people.

An Hebrew moneth is of two kindes: of the Sunne, or of the Moone.

A Sun-moneth was in vſe about the time of the flood, and it contained 30. daies. For (as Moſes witneſſeth Gen. 8.) from the ſeauenteenth day of the ſecond moneth vnto the ſeauenteenth day of the ſeuenth moneth, there are an hundred and fiftie daies, which is fiue whole monethes of thirtie daies apeece.

Moone-moneths were chiefly in vſe after the departure out of AEgypt. Some whereof were full monethes of thirtie daies; ſome other were ſcant monethes of 29. daies and a halfe. Hereupon euery yeare for the complement of the courſe of the Sunne, the Epact was of eleauen daies, and euery third yeare, yea and ſometime the ſecond was Embliſmeus, hauing the thirteenth moneth called Veadar.

The Hebrew yeare is the time of the ſunnes courſe through both Tropikes, and it containeth 365. daies, 5. houres, and 59. minutes. This Moſes doth plainly declare in the hiſtorie of the flood. Geneſ.

In Noah his 600. yeare the 2. moneth, and 17. day began the flood——7. 11.
The raine was 40. daies & 40. nights——7. 27.
The water preuailed 150. daies——7. 24.
The 150. daies being paſt, the Arke reſted the 17. day of the 7. moneth——8. 4.
The waters were a decreaſing to the firſt day of the 10. moneth——8. 9.
After the 40. daies the window was opened——8. 6.
Noah waited 7. daies——8.
He waited other 7. daies——8.
In the yeare 601. the 1. day of the firſt moneth the earth was dry——8. 13.

All theſe beeing conſidered and laid together it will appeare that the yeare did comprehend 12. moneths, & that euery moneth did conteine 30. daies, whereby alſo it is gathered, that before Moſes the Epact did not conſiſt of eleuen daies, but onely of fiue.

The naturall beginning of the yeare is in the moneth Abid or Niſan. For the world doth ſeeme to haue bin created in the ſpring time, not in Autumne. For Noah entred into the Arke, in the firſt moneth, and the yeare being ſpent he came out at the end of the ſecond moneth. But this firſt & ſecond moneth cannot accord with Autumne, becauſe after the 2. moneth Noah could not prouide victuall enough to ſerue himſelfe and the creatures for the whole yeare following, the ſecond harueſt beeing now paſt, and the winter comming on. To this opinion do agree Theodoret, queſt.72.vpon Exod. Ambroſe lib.1.Hexam. c.4. Leo Serm. 9. de Paſſion. Bede de ratione Temporum. But it is wont to be obiected, that hearbs and trees were brought foorth with ripe fruit, and therefore the creation was in Autumne. But I anſwer that God gaue euery tree power to bring foorth his fruite in his time: but that the fruits (I doe not deny but ſome, for that is moſt certaine,) but that all, were ripe in the creation it is not certaine, whether you ſay the world beganne in the ſpring or in Autumne. For euen the ſpring doth ſeeme to bring forth ſome ripe fruits as wel as Autumne, eſpecially among the Iewes and them of the Eaſt, which haue their harueſt not much off from Eaſter. Exo. 9.31.32. Luk.6.1.

The common beginning of the yeare was at the ſeuenth moneth, Thiſri. Exod.23.16. The feaſt of gathering fruits ſhalbe in the end of the yeare, when thou haſt gathered in thy labours out of the field. Here beganne the date of their bargaines, buyings, ſellings, bondages, releaſe of land, the yeare of reſt, and Iubilies.

There was alſo beſide the naturall yeare a propheticall yeare which by the like is to bee vnderſtood to bee of the ſpace of 360. yeares, and the Propheticall moneth in like manner conſiſteth of thirtie yeares. Reuel. 11.

Thus farre we haue declared the Notation of times, the computation followes.

Compoſition is the ſecond part of Chronologie concerning the ioyning of time with time, to which there belongeth foure things.

1 Duplication of time, by which the Scripture doth mingle the laſt part of the time ſpent with the firſt part of the time to come. Hence it is that the yeares of the kings of Iuda and Iſrael doe often fall one within the compaſſe of the other, which cannot iuſtly bee reckoned, but by a certaine doubling. Chriſt was in his ſepulcher ſixe and thirtie houres or there aboue; but the Euangeliſts ſay that he roſe againe after three dayes, and on the third day. How comes this to paſſe? why, double the middle part of the time, and you haue your wiſh.

2 Rotundation of time, by which either through adding vnto, or taking away ſomething from the ſet number giuen, the account thereof is made more eaſie in ſpeaking or writing. Very well ſaith Auguſtine, queſt.47. vpon Exod. The Scripture is wont ſo to call the times, as that which is ſomewhat ouer or vnder the iuſt number, is not reckened. Let that bee an example. Numb.14. verſ.34. You ſhall beare your iniquitie for fourtie yeares. Theſe words were ſpoken to the Iſraelites in the ſecond yeare after their departure; and therefore they ſuffered puniſhment full 38. yeares, and about 40.

3. The third is, that time is taken in accounts either for the time alreadie ſpent, or for the time now in ſpending, and not yet paſt. Matth.27. After three daies I will riſe againe. 1. King. 15. In the eighteenth yeare of Ieroboam raigned Abia three yeares: and yet afterward it is ſaid, that his ſonne began to raigne in the twentie yeare of Ieroboam.

4 The fourth is, that the beginning of the time in computation is put ſometime excluſiuely, ſometime incluſiuely.

A compound time is that which is made of ages, yeares, dayes, or moneths, ioyntly together: and it is either of the old world, or of the new.

The time of the old world is the continuance of the yeares from the beginning of the world to Chriſt crucified, which is about 4000. yeares.

The Sabbath of the old world is the ſeuenth day from the creation, which was conſecrated for diuine ſeruice in Paradiſe before the fall.

The preparation of the ſabbath, is part of the day going before, wherein chiefly after the law was giuen, proviſion of victuals was made for the approching ſabbath. Therefore whereas it is ſaid, Ioh.19. verſ.14. It was the preparation of the Paſſeouer, it is not for the Paſſeouer it ſelfe, but for the ſabbath in the Paſſeouer, or Eaſter. Mark. 15. It was the preparation which is before the ſabbath. And Luk. 23. And that day was the preparation, and the ſabbath drew on. Againe the whole day of the Paſſeouer was not holy, but the euening only, in which the Lambe was ſlaine, for it ſeemes the reſt was worke day. Mark. 14. verſ. 12, 13, 14. Hence it appeares that the Paſſeouer had not his Eue properly.

The time of the old world hath 2. parts, the 1. without the law, the 2. with the law.

The time without the law is from the beginning vnto the time when the law was giuen, and it hath three particles.

The firſt is from the creation to the flood, and it conſiſts of 1656. yeares.

The ſecond is from the flood to the promiſe made vnto Abraham 367. yeares and no more. For I thinke (ſauing a better iudgement) that Abraham was borne the 70. yeare of Terah, and not in the 130. yeare. Reaſon 1. The Teſtimonie of Moſes, Gen. 11. 26. Terah liued 70. yeares and begat Abraham, Nahor and Haran. Now the ſcope of the chapter is to declare the genealogie of Chriſt from Adam vnto Abraham. Therefore hee pointeth at Abrahams yeares not at Nahors or Harans, eſpecially having done ſo in all the precedent generations vnto Abraham. Reaſon 2. Vnleſſe it be taken for graunted that Abraham was borne the 70. yeare of Terah, it will be altogether vncertaine when hee was borne. For if any one ſhall ſay Abraham was borne the 130. yeare of his father, & that it is plaine plaine out of the Scriptures; I anſwer, that it cannot be ſhowne throughout the Scriptures that Abraham was borne the 130. yeare rather then the 131. or the 132. yeare of Terah. For Moſes ſaith not any where, that Abraham departed into Canaan preſently the ſelfe ſame yeare wherein Terah died. All things which are ioyned together in the order of hiſtorie, are not like waies coniopned in time. 3. Abraham did account it for a miracle that himſelfe beeing 100. yeare old ſhould haue a ſonne: how then could he bee borne in the 130. yeare of his father? and it is not likely that Abraham was borne 60. yeares after Terah had got Nahor, and Haran. 4. Abraham beeing commaunded to goe into Canaan did not delay his obedience, but went preſently without delay ſo ſoone as hee had receiued the command, not tarrying for his fathers death, becauſe by faith hee made that iourney. Heb. 11. But the charge & promiſe he receiued in Vr of the Chaldes before hee went to Haran. 5. The iudgement of the primitiue Church aſſenteth to me, and I thinke it worthie to be followed, vnleſſe it be manifeſt that it hath declined out of the way. Aug. de ciuit. Dei. l.16.c. 15. To him agreeth venerable Bede, alſo Ioſephus, and Iſidorus, Hiſpal. orig. lib. 5. If any obiect that Moſes doth tell the ſtorie of Abrahams going into the land of Canaan after the death of Terah. I anſwer, that it is done by Recapitulation, that he might finiſh the hiſtorie of Terah in a continued narration. If any vrge the words of Stephen, Act. 7. After that his father was dead God brought him into this land. I anſwer, that there was two goings of Abraham into Canaan. The firſt was before the death of his father, which going was rather on progreſſe, then for to dwell, and of this ſpeaketh Moſes. The ſecond was to place and ſettle his habitation in the land of Canaan of which ſpeaketh Stephen, for the Greeke word which he vſeth μετῳκισεν, ſignifieth that God brought him to dwell in the land of Canaan. And that it was ſo this may be an argument, that Abraham did not buy one plot of ground vntill a yeare or two after his fathers death. Thus S. Auguſtine in the forenamed place hath taught to anſwer, neither doe I ſee what can be ſaid againſt it.

The third particle is from the promiſe to the Law, and is 430. yeares, Exod. 12.40. The dwelling of the children of Iſrael in Ægypt was 430. yeares. Gal. 3.17.

The abode of the children of Iſrael in AEgypt was onely 210. yeares. For from the departure out of Vr to the birth of Iſaac was 30. yeares, from thence to Iacob was 60. from thence to the going downe into AEgypt 130. now if you take theſe numbers from 430. there will remaine 210. yeares in which the Iſraelites dwelt in AEgypt. If any ſay that 600000. armed men within the ſpace of two hundred yeares could not bee propagated out of the family of Iacob: I anſwer that they might, becauſe then polygamie was in vſe, and then they did beget children from twentie yeares of age vntill they were foureſcore and more, and then was the multiplication of ſeede promiſed. If any one vrge me that Abraham was not the ſonne of Iſrael, and therefore the 430. yeares of bondage is not to bee ſtretched vnto Abrahams time: I ſay the ſonne of Iſrael doth comprehend not onely the ſeed of Iacob, but all the poſteritie of Abraham. Gen. 48. Iacob ſaith of the ſonnes of Ioſeph, Let my name bee named vpon them, and the name of my fathers Abraham and Iſaac. Therefore the ſonnes of Iſrael are the whole nation and familie of Abraham, no not excluding the head.

The time of the Law is from the promulgation thereof vnto Chriſt crucified, and it hath fiue particles.

The firſt is from the law to the Temple 480. yeares. 1. King. 6. 1. At the beginning of this particle the Iewes neglected the true firſt entrance of the yeare, and ſo it was renued by God. Exod. 12. 2. Then were feaſtiual daies appointed, the Paſſeouer, Pentecoſt, the feaſt of Trumpets: of Expiation, and the feaſt of Tabernacles, &c.

Of the Paſſeouer there are two parts, firſt the killing of the Lambe, which was done the 14. day of the firſt moneth, at the euen which ſhutteth in the day. Exod. 12. verſ. 6. The other part is the feaſt or the ſolemnitie wherein the Paſchall ſacrifice was offered. Deut. 16. Thou ſhalt offer the Paſſeouer vnto the Lord thy God, of ſheepe and bullocks in the place which the Lord ſhall chuſe. See an example 2. Chron. 35. This feaſt laſted ſeauen daies, which were called the dayes of vnleauened or ſweet bread. The firſt day of ſweet bread began at the euen which ſhutte in the 14. day, for which cauſe this fourteenth day was called of his latter part the firſt day of ſweete bread. Mark. 14. 12. yet the ſacrifices were not killed before the 15. day. The laſt day of the feaſt was the ſabbath which was as ſolemne as any of the reſt, and for order ſake it was called the ſecond ſabbath after the firſt. Luk. 6. 1.

The feaſt of Pentecoſt was excluſiuely the 50. day from the end of Eaſter, becauſe the Iſraelites departed out the 15. day, and the beginning of the 50. dayes muſt be reckoned from the 16. day. Leuit. 23. 16.

There was alſo two holy yeares appointed: a Sabbatarie and a Iubilie.

The Sabbatarie was euery ſeuenth yeare, wherein reſt was giuen to the earth.

The Iubilie was 49. yeare excluſiuely from the former Iubilie, that is, if you exclude the former Iubilie yeare: but it is the 50. yeare from the former incluſiuely, Leu. 24. 11. This is the common ſaying, but perhaps the Iubily yeare is euery fifty yeare diſtinctly numbred.

More-

Moreouer in this particle was the gouernement of Iudges for 357. yeares, which by computation will easily appeare. And therefore whereas, Act. 13. vers. 20. it is said that God gaue them Iudges for the space of 450. yeares, it seemeth thus to bee taken: From the diuision of the land, vnto Samuel there are (as I said) but 357. yeares, and this number Saint Luke seemes to haue set downe reiecting the latter seuen, that the number might bee rounder: But afterward some body reading ouer the booke of Iudges for quarantino substituted cinquanta of meere ignorance: For indeede out of the yeares of the Iudges, and the yeares of the oppressours distinctly and separatly numbered, there doe arise iust 450. yeares. But those yeares must not bee separately numbred, but it is to be held for a sure rule of composition, that the yeares of the oppressours bee reckned in the yeares of the Iudges.

The second particle is from the founding of the Temple vnto the destroying of the same. 427. yeares. In this particle there are these rules of composition; 1. It often fals out that the yeares of the kings of Iuda and Israel are incomplete. 2. The sonne beeing Vice-roy did raigne with his father which was busied in forraine warres. 3. Sometimes the yeares wherein they gouerned wickedly are left vncounted as if they neuer were. 2. Sam. 13. 1. 4. The yeares wherein the sonne raigned the father being aliue, but spent with age or diseases, are reckned also to the gouernment of the same father.

The third particle is the time of the captiuitie in Babylon, of 70. yeares, Ierem. 25. vers. 11. The beginning of this particle seemes to bee at the burning of the Temple in the yeare of Nabuchad. 19. For this captiuitie was not only the desolation of the people, but also of the land, which also must keepe her sabbaths, 2. Chron. 36. vers. 22. But the land could not rest all the time before, hauing in her a king, priests, citizens, and husbandmen.

The fourth is from the returne out of Babylon to the beginning of Daniels weekes; and is about fourescore yeares. Reason. 1. Dan. 9. 25. he speaketh of such a going forth of a commandement as by which not only the reedifying of the Temple, but the inhabiting likewise and repairing of their citie was allowed: Now we reade of no such Edict in all the Bible, before the 7. yeare of Artaxerxes Longimanus. For the edict of Cyrus, and the edict of Darius Histaspis, both of these speake onely of building the Temple, but not of the citie. 2. The conuersions of the heauens, & the distances of the Eclipses doe make the like space. The Eclipse in the fift yeare of Nabupolasar, or Nabuchadnezar, is distant from that which happened the nineteenth yeare of Tiberius, 653. Iulian yeares: and lest any one should thinke that this Nabupolasar in Ptolemie was not the same with Nabuchadnezar, I adde this one thing, that the Eclipse of the Moone in the 7. yeare of Cambises doth differ from that which happened eleuen daies before the monarchie of Alexander, 192. Iulian yeares, and 64. daies, and that this is distant from that which happened in the nineteenth yeare of Tiberius, 363. Iulian yeares. Moreouer, from that Eclipse in the 3. yeare of Darius Histaspis, to the Eclipse in the last yeare of Darius Codomanus there are 151. Iulian yeares. These things to be so as I say, Ptolemeus his account doth plainly declare, who reckoneth 126. Egyptian yeares from Nabonassar to the Eclipse in the fift yeare of Nabupolasar, and are 424. yeares to the Eclipse in the seauenth yeare of Cambises, and 424. yeares to the death of Alexander, and 718. to the raigne of Augustus. Almegisti lib. 3. c. 8. and 5. 14. With this agrees the calculation of Prussia, whose accounts for beginnings and ends of times are most certen, which runne thus.

From Nabonassar to the beginning of the yeares Iul. yeares.—daies.
Of the death of Alexander——423.—269.
Of Iulius Cæsar——701.—309.
Of our Sauiour Christ——746.—310.
From the death of Alexander to the beginning of the yeares.
Of Iulius Cæsar——278.—50.
Of our Sauiour Christ——323.—51.
From Iulius Cæsar to the beginning of Christ——45!——1.

He which will thinke these things to bee fained, he must vtterly ouerthrow all logisticall Astronomie. And truly this seemeth to me to be a notable argument to prooue the truth of the holy Scriptures, because the sacred historie in the order of her narrations doth most exactly agree with the conuersions of the heauens. And on the other side this is vnto me a proofe, that the beginning of the weekes is not to be fitted to the yeares of Cyrus or Darius Histaspis, because then almost all humane histories, and all astronomicall obseruations are to bee denyed as counterfeit.

All the kings, of whome there is mention made in Ezra, Nehemia, Hester, and Daniel, for the most part did raigne in this time, whome I (following the iudgement of M. Gualter, and Temporarius) doe distinguish after this sort.

They were either Medes, or Persians.

The Medes were two. The first, Assuerus the father of Darius Medus. Dan. 9. 1. This is that Astiages the Emperour of the Medes & Persians extending his gouernment from India to Aethiopia in Arabia: neuer was this deprined of his kingdome by Cyrus King of the Persians as some historians doe falsly say. It is probable that hee was the husband of Hester, and not Darius Histaspis nor Xerxes. Reason 1. In Darius Histaspis, there was gra-uitie and prudence ioyned with a certaine pietie, but in Assuerus lust and leuitie. 2. Mardocheus in the first yeare of Cyrus, the captiuitie being ended, came againe into Iewrie. Ezr. 2. Therefore he did not liue in Persia vnder Cambises, Darius Histaspis, or Xerxes: and it is not credible that hee who was most carefull of the true worship of God, would returne againe into the East, when hee might vse the benefit of his libertie. 3. Xerxes in the 7. yeare of his raigne was out of Persia in Sardis or in Greece, not returning home vntill the eight yeare. Amestris also his wife was a most wicked woman. The obiection of the Palace of Shushan, is of small force; for say that it was the Palace of the Kings of Persia while Cyrus reigned, (as Strabo saith, libr. 15.) yet the Palace of the Medes might be in the same place before Cyrus his time. For Strabo saith in the aforesaid booke, that the Pallace of the Persians was not there before the Medes were ouercome. If any one thinke otherwise, he shall vse his owne iudgement by my good leaue. In these and such like things I will not contend.

The second is Darius Medus, hee was the chiefe in the sacking of Babylon, Isa. 13. 17. Ier. 51. 11. and the Babylonian Empire was in his hand for the space of 1 yeare, Dan. 6. 1. This same is Assuerus, Ezr. 4. 6.

The Kings of the Persians are these.

1. Cyrus, yeares 30. but after the conquest of Babylon 7. and from hence the Scripture beginneth the yeares of Cyrus: he (as Xenoph. witnesseth) acknowledged Darius to be Emperour of the Medes and Persians, when hee led the armie against the Babylonians, ouer which kingdome he ruled together with Darius Medus, Dan. 5. 28.

2. Cambyses 7. he is Artaxerxes, Ezra. 4. vers. 5.

3. Darius Histaspis 36. By this mans edict the Temple was builded, and not by the Edict of Darius Nothus, vnlesse we will say that there were some surueiuing in the second yeare of Darius Nothus, which were almost 200. yeares old. For* Agge in this very yeare of Darius doth take for graunted, that there were some of the people yet left who had seene and knew the beauty of Salomons Temple.

4. Xerxes, 21. Dan. 11. 2.

5. Artaxerxes Longimanus 40. Ezra. 7. 1. and 6. 14.

6. Darius Nothus or Ochus, 19. } Of these vntill Alexander, the holy Scriptures speake nothing, nor Iosephus.

7. Artaxerxes Mnemon 43.
8. Darius Ochus. 23.
9. Darius Arses. 3.
10. Darius Arsamis. 6.

The fift particle containeth the weekes of Daniell, and therefore it is of 490. yeares.

Cap. 2. 3.

These weekes seeme to me for to end at the death of Christ, and not at the finall destruction both of the Temple and citie by Titus. Reason. 1. The couenant with many was plainly confirmed, partly by the preaching of Christ, and partly by his passion. But if the last weeke bee extended further to the destruction of the citie, then in that time also some foule some league should haue beene confirmed: but no league was confirmed in the last weeke in more then was in the last but one. 2. Daniell doth plainly say, Seauentie weekes are determined vpon the people, and vpon the holy citie, to finish the wickednesse, and to seale vp the sinnes, and to reconcile the iniquitie, and to bring in euerlasting righteousnesse, and to seale vp the vision & prophesie, and to annoint the most holy, which is the Messias. Now if the destruction of the citie did end those weekes, then not 70. but 65. weekes and a halfe were determined for the finishing of these things; for in the 65. weeke was made the satisfaction for sinne, and the Messias annointed. 3. If you beginne the weekes from the 2. yeare of Darius Nothus, then Nehemias shall haue continued vnto the 32. yeare of Darius Mnemon and somewhat longer, and hee shall bee an 100. and 90. yeares old, and then also fitte for long iourneyes: and Ezra also shall be farre elder.

In the middle of the last weeke began the ministry of Christ or the time of his going vp and downe. Act. 1. 21. The beginning of his ministrie was when hee was baptized of Iohn, and beeing annointed with the holy Ghost, was sent to preach, and it endured vnto the day of his assumption, and consists of three yeares and an halfe almost.

The first yeare was from the first passeouer, Ioh. 2. 13. vntill the feast, Ioh. 5. 1. The second yeare is from that feast vnto the passeouer mentioned, Ioh 6. 4. The third yeare is from this passeouer vnto that whereat Christ was crucified, Ioh. 13. 1. This passeouer was celebrated the 14. day at euen, both by Christ and the Iewes themselues, Mark. 14. 12. Now the first day of vnleauened bread when they sacrificed the Passeouer, and his Disciples said vnto him, where wilt thou that we goe and prepare that thou maiest eate the Passeouer? Luk. 22. 7. Then came the day of vnleauened bread when the Passeouer must be offered. The eating of the Passeouer was either the eating of the Lambe, or of other cheere made of part of the sacrifice according to the law. The eating of the Lambe was alwaies on the 14. day, and it is not likely that the Iewes durst violate so plaine a law. The eating of the other cheere was on the 15. 16. and 17. daies, and yet not by any that was polluted; and of this latter is to bee vnderstood that place of Ioh. 18. vers. 28. They went not into the common hall lest they should be defiled, but that they might eate the Passeouer.

The

The time from the Baptisme of Christ vnto the first Passouer is almost halfe a yeare.

And this is the time of the old world: the time of the new followeth, which is from the ascension of Christ vnto the last iudgement.

The Sabbath of the new world is the day of Christs resurrection, which is the eight from the creation: and me thinkes the Scripture seemeth to assigne the Sabbath to the Lords day. 1. Cor. 16. 2. To make gathering on the first day of the weeke is an Apostolicall institution; therefore the hallowing of this day for the Sabbath is likewise an Apostolicall institution, because gatherings were not made but when the worship of God was A solemnely performed. Secondly, Iohn the Apostle doth acknowledge this day to bee the Lords. Reu. 1. 10. that is, a day consecrated to the honour of Christ. And the rest of the Apostles haue obserued this same day in stead of the Iewes Sabbath. Act. 20. 7. yea Christ himselfe doth seeme to haue done the same. Ioh. 20. 19. 26. Thirdly, it is the opinion of Cyprian, that circumcision was a Sacrament of the Sabbath to bee kept on the 8. day in the new Testament. d. 3. epi. 19. ad Fidum. Augustin. de ciu. dei. l. 22. c. 3. The Lords day was hallowed by Christs resurrection. And Ser. 251. The Apostles did ordaine the Lords day to be kept with religious worship. B

d.
		IN the beginning of time was created the vtmost heauen, and the matter of things visible. — 1
1		The spirit cherisheth that matter mouing vpon it. 1
2		Light riseth out of darknesse. — 1
3		The firmament is made, and separateth the waters. 1
		The water being gathered together, the drie land is fruitfull. 1
		Two trees are created in the garden of Eden. 2
4		Lights are created in the Firmament. 1
5		Birds and Fishes are made out of the waters. — — 1
6		Beasts and all cattell are framed out of the earth. 1
		Hitherto onely a mist did water the earth. 1 & 2
		The body of Adam was made of the dust. 2
		God breatheth into his nosthrils the breath of life. 1
		And man was fashioned after the likenesse of God. 2
		All creatures are brought vnto man to see how he would call them. 2
		Euery hearbe and fruit are appointed for meate. 1
		Eua is made out of the rib of Adam sleeping. — — 2
		God giueth her to Adam for to be his wife. 2
		Marriage is ordained. 2
		The wedded are brought into the Garden. 2
		The prohibition of trees is enioyned. 2
7		The institution and sanctification of the Sabbath. — — 2
		The first sinne of our first parents. 3
		Beeing arraigned and conuicted, they are punished. 3
		Christ promised of the seede of the woman. 3
		Ischa is now called Henah. — — 3
		The first garment made by God. 3
		The casting of Adam and Eua out of Paradise. 3
		Cain is the first that was borne of woman. — — 4
1		Abel borne. 4
		Cain and Abel offer sacrifice to God. 4
		Cain mooued with enuie killeth his brother. 4
		He despaireth and is throwne from the presence of God. 4
		The first city built in the world. 4 Chron. 1.
130		Seth borne in the 130. yeare of Adam. 5 1
135		Enosh borne the 105. yeare of Seth. 5
		Then men began to call on the name of God. 4
325		Kenan borne the 90 yeare of Enosh. 5
395		Mahalaleel borne the 70. yeare of Kenan. 5
460		Iared borne the 65. yeare of Mahalaleel. — — 5
622		Enoch borne the 62. yeare of Iared. 5
687		Methusalah borne the 65. yeare of Enoch. — 5
874		Lamech borne the 187. yeare of Methusalah. 5
930		Adam died being 930. yeares olde. 4
938		Lamech the first author of Bigamie. — 5
987		Enoch is taken vp aliue to heauen, yeare 365. 5
1042		Seth died beeing 912. yeares olde. 5
1056		Noah borne the 182. yeare of Lamech. 4
1087		The inuention of Musicke and the Smiths craft. 5
1140		Enos dieth the 905. yeare of his age. — — 5
1235		Kenan dieth the 910. yeare of his age. 5
1290		Mahalaleel dieth the 895. yeare of his age. 5
1422		Iared dieth the 962. yeare of his age. 6
1	1536	The sonnes of God marry the daughters of men. 6
		Of these were borne Gyants. 6
		Now all flesh had corrupted his way. 6
		Gods purpose concerning the flood, reuealed. 6
		The commandement to build the Arke. — — 6
		Noah preacheth repentance. 6
20	1556	Iaphet is borne the fiue hundreth yeare of Noah. 11
23	1559	Sem is borne the 503. of Noah. — — 6
25	1561	Ham is borne. 5
114	1650	Lamech dieth in yeare of his age 777.

The yeares of Noahs preaching 120

Prom.	m	World. d		Genesis.	Chron.
120		6 4	Methusalah dieth the 969. yeare of his age.	5
	2	10	The commandement to enter into the Arke.	7
		17	The entrance into the Arke.	7
			It raineth forty daies.	7
	3	27	The last day of the raine.
	7	17	The Arke resteth on the mountaines of Ararat.	8
			Here end an hundred and fifty daies.
	10	1	The tops of the mountaines appeare.	8
	11	12	The Crow and the Doue are sent forth, with returne.	8
		19	The Doue is sent out the second time.	8
			Shee returneth with an Olive leafe.	8
		26	The third time being sent shee returnes no more.	8
	7
1	1		The waters are dried from off the earth.	8
			Noah remooueth the couering from off the Arke.	8
2	27		God commaunding, Noah goeth out of the Arke.	8
			He offereth sacrifice vnto God.	8
			The course of nature is restored.	8
			The Rainbow is the signe of Gods couenant with the earth.	9
			Marriage is confirmed.	9
			Mans dominion is restored.	9
			The eating of flesh, except the blood, is permitted.	9
			The office of a Magistrate is established.	9
			The law for murther.	9
			The dressing of vines and Noahs drunkennesse.	9
			Ham is punished for mocking his father.	9
			The piety of Sem and Iaphet is rewarded.	9
			The dwelling of Iaphet in the tents of Sem is foretolde.	9
	8		Arphaxad is borne 100. yeare of Sem.	11
1693			Selah is borne the 35. yeare of Arphaxad.	11
1723			Heber is borne in the 30. yeare of the age of Selah.	11
1757			Peleg is borne the 34. yeare of the age of Heber.	11
			The parting of the earth, or the beginning of nations.	10
			Iapher the first king of Europe.	10
			Sem of Asia.	10
			Ham of Africa.	10
1787			Reu is borne the 30. yeare of the age of Peleg.	11
			Nimrod buildeth Babel, Erech, Acchad and Calneth.	11
			He was the first founder of the Monarchy of Assyria.	11
			The tower of Babel is builded.	11
1819			Serug is borne the 32. yeare of Reu.	11
1849			Nahor is borne the 30. yeare of Serug.	11
1878			Terah is borne the 39. yeare of Nahor.	11
1948			Abram is borne the 70. yeare of Terah.	11
1957			Sarai is borne.	17
1996			Peleg dieth the 239. yeare of his age.	11
2005			Noah dieth in the 950. yeare of his age.	11
2023			The promise of land, and of succession is made to Abram.	12
			Terah with Abram goe from Vr of the Chaldes.	11
			They come to Haran and dwell there.	11
			Abrams departure into Canaan.	12
			From thence because of the dearth he goeth into Egypt.	12
			Sarai being taken from him is restored inuiolate.	12
			They depart from Egypt safe and sound.	12
	6		Reu dieth the yeare of his age 239.	11
	9		Abram and Lot being come backe into Canaan, are separated.	13
2030			The promise of land and succession is renued.	13
	1		Lot is taken prisoner in the ouerthrow of Sodome.	14
			Abram deliuereth him from the hands of the 4. Kings.	14
			The other Kings honour him with the title of Victory.	14
			He offereth Sacrifice vnto God.	14
			He keepeth nothing of the prey to himselfe.	15
			Abram deploreth the want of children.	15
10			The promise of the land and succession is renued.	16
	3		Sarai giueth her maid vnto Abram.	16

Hagar

Prom.	World.		Genesis.	Chron. 1.
	4	Hagar hauing runne away, returneth to her mistris.	16
	2040	Ismael is borne.	16
20	7	Circumcision is instituted the 99. yeare of Abrahams age.	17
		The names of Sarai and Abram are changed.	17
		Abraham and his family are circumcised.	17
		Abraham receiueth three Angels into his house.	18
		Isaac is promised againe.	18
		The destruction of Sodome is declared vnto Abraham.	18
		Abraham prayeth for the Sodomites.	18
		Lot receiueth two Angels into his house.	19
		The wickednes of the Sodomites.	19
		The sauing of Lot and his daughters.	19
		The burning of Sodome.	19
		The incest of Lot with his daughters.	19
		Abraham goeth from Mamra to Beersheba.	20
		Abimelech is punished for taking away Sarah.	20
		Abraham prayeth for him, and he recouereth.	20
	8	Isaac is borne in the 100. yeare of Abrahams age.	21	1
	2050	Serug dieth in the 230. yeare of his age.	11
30	2	Isaac is weaned.	21
		Hagar is cast out with her sonne Ismael.	21
		The couenant betweene Abimelech and Abraham.	21
40	2060	Abraham is prooued in offering his sonne Isaac.	22
50	1	A Ramme is offered in stead of his sonne.	22
60	2070	The promise of the blessing is confirmed.	22
	2080	Terah dieth in the yeare of his age 205.	11
	3	Abraham goeth to dwell in Canaan. Act. 7.
	5	Sarah dieth in the yeare of her age 127.	23
		Abraham bewaileth her.	23
		He buyeth a field to bury her in.	23
		The burying of Sarah.	23
	8	Abraham casteth to get Isaac a wife.	24
		Rebecca is gotten to be his wife.	24
		Isaac being 40. yeares olde, taketh Rebecca for his wife.	24
		Abraham hauing married Keturah, getteth children.	25
	2090	He giueth them gifts and sendeth them from Isaac.	25
70	6	Arphaxad dieth the yeare of his age 483.	11
	2100
80	8	Iacob and Esau are borne in the 60. yeare of Isaac.	25
	2110
		Abraham dieth in the yeare of his age 375.	25
90	3	He is buried by Isaac and Ismael.	25
		Esau selleth his birth-right for a messe of pottage.	25
	6	Isaac going into Egypt hayeth at Gerar.	26
		For feare he faineth Rebecca to be his sister.	26
		He goeth to Beersheba.	26
		The promise is againe confirmed to Isaac.	26
	2120	Esau taketh wiues of the heathen when he was 40. yeares olde.	26
100	8
	2130	Shem dieth in the yeare of his age 600.	11
110	8
120	2140	Ismael dieth in the yeare of his age 137.	25
	1
		Isaac intendeth his blessing to Esau.	27
150	2170	Iacob by the craft of his mother getteth it from him.	27
160	2180	Iacob by the counsell of his mother, fleeth to Haran.	27
		In a dreame by the way he seeth a ladder.	28
		The promise is made againe vnto Iacob.	28
		Iacob is receiued into Labans house.	29
	5	He serueth seauen yeares for Rahel.	29
		Leah is brought to his bed in stead of Rahel, and is accepted.	29
		He couenanteth to serue seauen yeares more for Rahel.	29
		Rahel is married to Iacob with Leah.	29
	6	Heber dieth in 464. yeares of his age.	11

Prom.	World		Genesis	Chron. 1.
	7	Ruben. }
	8	Simeon. } are borne of Leah.	29	2
	9	Leui. }
	2190	Iudah. }
	2	Dan. } are borne of Rilhah Bahels maide.	30
170	3	Nepthali. }
	4	Gad. }
	5	Asser. } are borne of Zilpha Leahs maid.	30
	6
	7	Iilachar. } are borne of Leah.
	8	Zebulon. }	30
	9	Dinah is also borne of Leah.	30
		Ioseph is borne of Rahel in the yeare of Iacobs age 91.	30
		Iacob bargaineth to serue sixe yeares for cattell.	30
		He getteth double wages by his arte and cunning	30
	2200
	1	God commandeth Iacob to returne into Mesopotamia.	31
180	5	He departeth from Laban secretly with all his family.	31
		He being accused of theft, defendeth himselfe.	31
		The couenant of peace betweene Laban and Iacob.	31
		God comforteth Iacob by his Angels.	32
		Fearing his brother he craueth aid of God.	32
		He wrestleth with an Angell.	32
		who nameth him Israel.	32
		Esau receiueth Iacob friendly.	33
		Esau by much intreaty receiueth Iacobs gifts.	33
		He offereth himselfe and his followers to beare him company.	33
	6	Iacob dwelleth in Succoth.	33
	7	He commeth to Sechem where he dwelleth 8. yeares.	33
		There he buyeth a possession and buildeth an Altar.	33
	9	Iudah hauing turned from his brethren, marrieth Shuah.	38
	2210	Er is borne.	38
	1	Onan is borne.	38
	2	Selah is borne.	38
190	3	Dinah is rauished by the sonne of the King of Sechem.	34
		The Sechemites therefore are slaine by Dinahs brethren.	34
		Iacobs iourney into Bethel.	35
		There he payeth his vow.	35
		Deborah Rebeccahs nurse dieth.	35
		God confirmeth the blessing vnto Iacob.	35
	4	Rahel dieth in labour of Beniamin.	35
		Ruben committeth incest with Bilhah.	35
		The finding of Mules.	36
	5	Ioseph telleth his brethrens faults to their father.	37
		His dreames of his authority in his fathers family.	37	Iob
	6	He is solde into Egypt at the yeares of 17.	37	1
		Iob by Satans meanes loseth his wealth and his children.		1
		He is grieuously afflicted in his body.		2
		His friends visit him.		2
		He curseth the day of his birth.		3
		He maintaineth his owne iustice against his friends accusations.		3,31
		Elihu exhorteth him to acknowledge his sinne.		32
		Iob being reprehended by God, he repenteth.		40
		He offereth Sacrifice for himselfe and his friends.		42
		He is made whole, and his wealth is restored double to him.		42
	9	Thamar is giuen in marriage to Er, who dieth.	38
		Onan hauing married her, perisheth for the same wickednes.	38	4
	2220
208	2	Iudah committeth incest with Thamar.	38
	7	Ioseph made ruler of Potiphars house.	39
		The chastity of Ioseph.	39
		He is cast into prison three yeares.	39
		The keeper of the prison committeth all to Ioseph.	39
		He expoundeth the dreames of the Kings seruants.	40
	8	Isaac dieth in the yeare of his age 180.	35
	9	Pharaohs dreames.	41

Prom.	World		Genesis	Chron. 1.
		Ioseph expoundeth them.	41
		He giueth counsell to prouide for the famine to come.	41
		Hereupon himselfe is made ruler ouer the land of Egypt, beeing 30. yeares of age.	41
		The marriage of Ioseph.	41
	2230	The 7. yeates of plenty beginne.	41
	1	Manasses is borne.	41
210	2	Ephraim is borne.	41
	4	Ezron is borne.		2
	6	The beginning of the yeares of famine.	41
	8	Iacob sendeth his sonnes into Egypt.	42
		Here Ioseph entreateth them as if they were spies:	42
		They promise to bring Beniamin with them.	42
		They beare home their corne and the price in their sacks.	42
		Beniamin is sent with the rest.	43
		The cuppe is found in Beniamins sacke.	44
		Iudah offereth himselfe to be a seruant for Beniamin.	44
		Ioseph maketh himselfe knowne to his brethren.	45
	9	Iacob goeth downe into Egypt, being 130. yeares olde.	46
		Accompanied with his family of 70. soules.	46
		Ioseph meeteth his father.	46
		He teacheth his brethren what to answer to Pharaoh.	46
		Iacob commeth before Pharaoh and teileth him his age.	47
		The land of Gothen is giuen him.	47
		Where Ioseph sustaineth them with food quietly.	47
	2240	The Egyptians for hunger sell both lands and liuings.	47
220	1	Ioseph buyeth all the land of Egypt for Pharaoh.	47
	2	He giueth Seede corne to the Egyptians.	47
230	2.50	Iacob appointeth his sepulchre in Canaan.	47
	5	Iacob adopteth the sonnes of Ioseph.	48
	2280	By diuine instinct he preferreth the yonger before the elder.	48
		The right of the first borne is giuen from Ruben to Ioseph.	48	5
260		He blesseth his sonnes, and telleth them what shall come.	49
	2300	He telleth them that Christ shall come out of Iudah.	49
280		He willeth them to bury him with his fathers.	49
		Iacob dieth in the faith the 147. yeare of his age.	49
	9	Ioseph dieth the yeare of his age 110.	50
		They keepe his body embalmed.	50	Exod.
	2310
290	3	The Israelites are increased in number and power.	1
		The new Pharaoh grieuously oppresseth them.	1
		The Kings commandement to destroy the male children priuily.	1
	2320	Leui dieth the 137. yeare of his age.	6
300	5	So dieth all that generation.	1
320	2330	Ram is borne.
	2360	The edict of drowning the male-children	1
340	2370	Aaron is borne.	7
350	3	Cahat dieth.	6
		Moses is borne of Amram and Iocabed.	2
	2380	He is cast into the flagges, and taken vp of Pharaohs daughter.	2	6
360	2400	He is brought vp in the learning of the Egyptians. Act. 7.
380	2410	Iosuah is borne. Iosh. 14.
390	3	Moses killeth an Egyptian.	2
		For feare of Pharaoh, he fleeth to Madian.	2
		He is married to Zipporah.	2
	4	Caleb is borne, Iosh. 14.
	2420	The men of Gath beat the Ephraites for robberies.		7
400			6
420	2440	Amram dieth in the yeare of his age 137.
	2450
	1
	2		2
430	3	God heareth the mone of the Children of Israel.
		God calleth Moses to bee the deliuerer of his people at the age of 80. yeares.	3

Their departure out of Egypt.

		He is taught how to behaue himselfe.	3
		Moses drawing backe is confirmed.	4
		Aaron is giuen to helpe Moses, and he vndertaketh his calling.	4
		He bringeth his wife and children to Iethro his father in law.	4
		God confirmeth his calling vnto him againe.	4
		He asketh leaue of his father, and goeth toward Egypt with his family.	4
		The circumcision of his sonne, being neglected, is punished.	4
		He being circumcised by Zipporah, God is appeased.	4
		Moses sendeth Zipporah backe to her father.	18
		Moses and Aaron doe their message to Pharaoh.	5
		They are sent away as the heads of sedition.	5
		The labours of the Israelites are increased.	5
		The officers of the Israelites complaine vnto Pharaoh.	5
		They chide with Moses and Aaron.	5
		God heareth Moses, and renueth his promise.	6
		Moses speaketh to the Israelites, but they beleeue not.	6
		Being bidden to goe againe vnto Pharaoh, he refuseth through feare.	6
		Moses and Aaron are emboldened against Pharaoh.	7
		The rod is turned into a Serpent.	7
		Pharaoh is hardened by his Sorcerers iuglings.	7
		The waters are turned into blood.	7
		The King is blinded by the Wizemens sorceries.	7
		The plagues of Frogges, Lice, and Flies.	8
		Pharaoh faineth to yeeld, but his heart is hardened.	8
		The plagues of Murraine, Botches, and Haile.	9
		Pharaoh confesseth his sinne.	9
		But afterward he hardeneth his heart.	9
		God telleth Moses of the hardnesse of Pharaohs heart.	10
		The plague of Grashoppers is sent.	10
m. d.		Abib is made the first moneth.	12
1. 10		The Lord instituteth the Passeouer, and feast of Sweet bread.	12
		A choice lambe is to be slaine after foure daies.	12
		The plague of darknesse for three daies space.	10
		The threatnings of Pharaoh against Moses.	10
		The death of the first borne is signified to Pharaoh.	11
		Moses departeth away very angry.	11
		God passeth by the houses that are marked with blood.	12
14		The first celebration of the Passeouer.	12
		The first borne of the Egyptians are slaine.	12
1. 15		The Israelites are sent out with great spoiles.	12
		Moses leadeth them vnto their second standing place.	12	33
		They are commanded yearely to keepe the passeouer.	13
		Moses taketh with him the bones of the Patriarches.	13
		Pharaoh pursueth the Israelites.	14
		Moses deuideth the sea with his rod.	14
		The Israelites goe forth through the midst of the sea dri-shod.	14
		The Egyptians with their King are drowned.	14
		God the Author of their victory is praised in a song.	15
		They wander three daies in drie places without water.	15
		They pitch their tents in Mara.	15
		The people murmure by reason of the bitter waters.	15
		Moses by casting in wood maketh the bitter water sweet.	15
		God teacheth his people obedience.	15
		They come to Elim, where are twelue fountaines.	15
		They come into the desart of Sin.	16
		For want of meate they mutter against God.	16
		They vpbraid Moses and Aaron with their plenty in Egypt.	16
		The Lord sendeth Quailes and Manna.	16
		Manna is kept for a remembrance vnto their posterity.	16
		The Manna kept till next day putrifieth.	16
		The Sabbath day Manna could not be found.	16
		They murmure for lacke of water.	17
		Moses striketh the rocke, and the waters flow.	17
		Iosuah ouercommeth Amaleck.	17
		They are charged to roote out this nation.	17

		Moses buildeth an altar vnto the Lord.	17
		Iethro commeth to see Moses.	18
		He bringeth Zipporah and her children.	18
		Iethro reioyceth and offereth sacrifice to God.	18
		By his counsell 70. Elders are chosen.	18
		They pitch their tents ouer against Sina.	19
		God signifieth that he will renew the couenant.	19
		They are bidden to sanctifie themselues three daies.	19
		The people are forbidden to touch the hill.	19
		God appeareth on the Mount in thunder and lightening.	19
	3 5	The 10. commandements are giuen with the voice of God.	20
		A great prophet to be sent. Deut. 18.
		The people being afraid desire that Moses may speake to them.	20
	7	Moses goeth to the toppe of Sinai.	20
		He stayed with God fasting 40. daies.	20
		God giueth him the lawes which the people should obserue. ca. 21. 22. 23.
		God telleth him the forme of the tabernacle, cap. 24. to 31.
	4 16	Moses is angrie for the golden calfe.	32
		He breaketh the two tables.	32
		The Leuites slay 3000. of the children of Israel.	32
	19	Moses goeth vp into the mountaine to pray for the people.	32
		There he stayeth fasting 40. daies. Deut. 9. 18.
		Moses returning reprehendeth the people.	32
		The people repent changing their garments.	33
		The Tabernacle of the congregation is erected.	33
		There God promiseth to dwell with his people.	33
		Moses desireth to see the face of God.	33
		The tables are renued.	34
		Moses commeth from the Mount and his face shineth.	34
		Beeing come to the congregation he couereth his face.	34
		The obseruation of the Sabbath is againe commanded.	35
		The readinesse of the people to offer for the worke.	35
		God chuseth and nameth forth his workmen.	35
		The making of the Tabernacle with all the furniture.	36
2	2454		&c.
	1 1	The Tabernacle with the appurtenances is reared vp.	40
		The glorie of the Lord descendeth vpon the Tabernacle.	40
		They iourney not, vnlesse the cloud ascend from the Tabernacle.	40
			Leuit.
		God giueth charge out of the Tabernacle for the burnt offerings.	1
		Concerning meate offerings.	2
		The Sacrifices of thanksgiuing, or peace offerings.	3
		The offering for sinne done of ignorance.	4
		A larger declaration of the Sacrifices.	6
		A declaration of the Sacrifice of thanksgiuing.	7
		The consecration of Aaron and his sonnes.	8
		They must abide 7. daies at the dore of the Tabernacle.	8
	8	Aaron sacrificeth for himselfe and the people.	9
		Nadab and Abihu are burnt.	10
		The priests mourning for them is forbidden.	10
		The Priests are forbidden wine and strong drinke.	10
		A law for the eating of holy things.	10
		Of the cleane and vncleane beasts, birds, and fishes.	11
		How women should be purged after their deliuerance.	12
		Obseruations to know the leprosie.	13
		The cleansing of euery leprosie.	14
		The purging of vncleane issues.	15
		The ordinance of yearely cleansing of sinnes.	16
		A law concerning the circumstances of Sacrifices.	17
		A law concerning matrimonie.	18
		A law for iustice in weights and measures.	19
		The dutie of the Magistrate in punishing.	20
		Of the puritie and honour of the Priests.	21
		Ordinances for the priests and offerings.	22
		Lawes for keeping their feasts.	23

		The blasphemer is stoned.	24
		Lawes for keeping the feasts of yeares.	25
		The reward of obedience.	26
		Lawes concerning vowes and tithes.	27
			Numb.
	14	The 2. passeouer kept at Sinai.	9
		They which were vncleane must keepe it the 2. moneth.	9
		The reason why they wandred so long in the desert.	9
2	1	The number of the Israelites able to goe to warre 603 550.	1
		The office of Leuites in the seruice of the Tabernacle.	1
		The placing of their Tents, and the order of their iournying.	2
		The number, place, and office of the Leuites.	3
		The Leuites are consecrated in the place of the first borne.	3
		Offices are distributed to the Leuites.	4
		The polluted must be catt forth of the host.	5
		A law concerning iealousie.	5
		A law of the consecration of the Nazarites.	6
	2	The heads of the tribes offer in their order.	7
		The dedication of the Altar of burnt offerings.	7
		The manner of asking counsell of God is prescribed.	7
		The office of the high Priest about the Lampes.	8
		The Leuites are consecrated for the first borne.	8
		The time of the Leuites ministration.	8
		The vse of the siluer trumpets.	10
2	20	The cloud ascending giueth a token to goe forward.	10
		Their three daies iourney from Sinai to Paran.	10
		Hobab is their guide and companion in their iourneies.	10
	24	The people murmure and are punished with fire from the Lord.	11
		At the prayer of Moses they are deliuered.	11
		They loth Manna.	11
		Their lust after flesh is satisfied and punished.	11
		Moses desireth to be freed from his office.	11
		The 70. elders are chosen.	11
		Aaron and Miriam grudge against Moses.	12
		God preferreth Moses.	12
		Miriam is sticken with Leprosie, and is healed at the prayer of Moses.	12
		They goe from Hazaroth to Rithmah.	33
		From Rithmah to Rimmon-parez.	33
		From Rimmon-parez to Libnah.	33
		From Libnah to Rissah.	33
		From Rissah to Kehelathah.	33
		From Kehelathah to mount Sapher.	33
		From Sapher to Haradah.	33
		From Haradah to Makheloth.	33
		From Makheloth to Tahat.	33
		From Tahat to Tarah, thence to Mithkah.	33
		From Mithkah to Hasmunah.	33
		Spies are sent before into Canaan.	13
		After 40. daies beeing returned they tell the strength of the Cananites.	13
	1	The people are amazed and angrie with the spies.	13
		The people conspire to returne into AEgypt.	14
		They are barred from entring into the land of promise.	14
		They are commanded to goe backe into the wildernesse.	14
2460		They that would goe forward are slaine by the enemie.	14
		The lawes are renewed to them beeing about to enter Canaan.	15
	5	The punishment of him that brake the Sabbath.	15
10		The conspiracie of Corah against Moses and Aaron.	16
	7	Dathan, Abiram, and the company of Corah are swallowed by the earth.	16
		Corah going about to get the priesthood is burnt with fire.	16
		They are commanded to couer the Altar with the censers of the conspira-tours.	16
2470		The people murmure the next day for them.	16
20		The plague begun is stayed by Aaron.	16
		Aarons rod budded and so he is confirmed in his office.	17
2480		The office of the Priests, and their wages.	18

		The cleansing water is described.	19
		Miriam dieth.	20
30	2490	The people murmure for lacke of water, chiding with Moses.	20
		Moses is commaunded to speake vnto the rocke.	20
		He striketh with distrust.	20
		Hereupon Moses and Aaron are barred from entring into the land.	20
		Edom denieth the Israelites passage.	20
		Aaron dieth in mount Hor at the age of 123. yeares.	20
		Eleazar his sonne succeedeth in his roome.	20
		King Arad fighteth with the Israelites.	21
		Israel hauing vowed a vow vnto the Lord, vanquisheth Arad.	21
		They come to Zalmonah.	33
		They depart from Zalmonah and pitch in Punon.	33
		The fierie serpents are sent for the murmuring of the people.	21
		They are cured by prayers and looking on the brazen serpent.	21
		They goe from Punon to Oboth.	33
		From Oboth to the mountaines of Abarim.	33
		Afterwards to Sared and Dibon Gad.	33
		From thence to Almon-Diblathaim.	33
		From thence they pitch their tents before Nebo.	33
		There they praise God for a fountaine of water.	21
		The kings of the Amorites are destroyed, and their kingdomes taken.	21
		Og king of Basan is ouercome.	21
		Moab sendeth for Balaam to curse Israel.	22
		By the way he is rebuked of an Angell.	22
		Twice he assayeth to curse them.	23
		Beeing changed by instinct he blesseth them.	23
		Balaam prophesieth of the comming of Christ, and the destruction of the Nations thereabout.	24
		The people commit fornication with the daughters of Moab.	25
		There perish for lusting 24000.	25
		The zeale of Phineas stayeth the anger of God.	25
		God establisheth the Priest hood to Phineas and his posteritie.	25
		God commaundeth to kill the Midianites.	25
		The people are numbred the second time.	26
		Moses is commaunded to diuide the promised land.	26
		The heritage of the daughters of Zelophahad.	27
		Moses is forewarned of his death.	27
		Ioshua is chosen to be his successour.	27
		The law of sacrifices.	28
		Sacrifices for the latter Feasts of the yeare.	29
		The law of vowes.	30
		Reuenge is taken on the Midianites.	31
		The Rubenites and Gadites possesse the land on this side Iordan.	32
		The halfe tribe of Manasses gets Gilead.	32
		The land of Canaan is diuided to the 9. tribes.	34
		Cities are assigned to the Leuites.	35
		The inheritance must not be giuen from one Tribe to another.	36
			Deut.
		Moses about to die readeth ouer the law to the people, a primo capit. ad	28
		God renueth his couenant.	29
		Moses rehearseth his song to the people.	32
		Moses dieth in the yeare of his age 120. and is buried by God.	34
		The Israelites mourne for him 30. daies.	34
40	3	The Lord encourageth Ioshua to inuade the land.	1
		Ioshua sendeth men to spie Iericho.	2
		Rahab hideth them and saueth them.	2
		They promise to saue her and her family.	2
		Ioshua commandeth the people to prepare themselues.	1
		They come to Iordane.	3
		The people is sanctified.	3
		The priests are sent before with the Arke.	3
		Iordane parteth asunder while the people passe.	3
		They set vp a monument in remembrance of their passage.	4
		Circumcision commanded in Gilgal.	5

			They offer and eate of the first fruits.	5	Chron. 1.
			Being circumcised they keepe the passeouer.	5
			Manna ceaseth.	5
			Iosh̄ua is confirmed by a vision.	5
			The wals of Iericho fall at the sound of the trumpets.	6
			Iosh̄ua curseth him that shall build them againe.	6
			They of Ai put the Israelites to flight.	7
			The punishment of Achan for sacrilledge.	7
			The siege and winning of Ai.	8
			An altar is set vp in Geball.	8
			The law is written vpon stones.	8
			The blessings and cursings are rehearsed.	8
			The craft and league of the Gibeonites.	9
			Their deceit is punished with seruitude.	9
			God haileth, and the Sunne and Moone stand both still.	10
			The fiue kings are slaine at Gibeon.	10
			Their bodies are hanged vpon trees.	10
			Iosh̄ua subdueth that whole countrie.	10
			Caleb asketh Hebron.	14
			Iosh̄ua returneth to Gilgal.	14
	2500		And now the Land had rest.	14
			The commandement for deuiding the land.	13
50			The diuision of the land on this side Iordane.	14
			Hebron is established vnto Caleb.	14
			The lot of the children of Iudah.	15
			Sichem, &c. is giuen to the posteritie of Ioseph.	16
			Iosh̄ua fighteth against the Northerne Canaanites.	11
			The phrase of Iosh̄ua, and a catalogue of his acts.	12
	2510		The tabernacle is remooued from Gilgal to Shiloh.	18
			The rest of the land is distributed to 7. tribes.	18
			The cities of refuge are appointed.	20
			Cities are giuen to the Leuites by lot.	21
			Ruben, Gad, and the halfe tribe of Manasses are dismissed.	22
			There is great adoe for the altar which they built at Iordan.	22
			Iosh̄ua hauing called the Elders together giueth them counsaile.	23
			And hauing called the people he renueth the league.	24
			They set vp a pillar for a witnesse.	24
			Iosh̄ua bid deth the people farewell.	24
			The Israelites are reproued for not expelling the Canaanites. Iud. 1. 2.
			Iosh̄ua dieth and is buried in Timnah.	24
			Iosephs bones are buried in Sechem.	24
			Eleazer dieth, Phineas succeedeth him.	24
				Iudges.
			The yeares of.
			Iudg. Oppr.
		1	The Israelites aske the Lord who shall be their captaine.	1
			Adonibezeck is vanquished by Iuda and Ioseph.	1
		2 2	Othoniel yeares 40. the first Iudge of Israel.	3
60		3 3
		4 4
		5 5
		6 6
		7 7
		8 8
		9 9
	2520	10
		1 11
		2 12
70		3 13
		4 14
		5 15
		6 16
		7 17
		8 18

		9 19	1 The Israelites doe wickedly in their marriages and Idols.
	2530	20	Their bondage vnder Cushan eight yeares.	3	Chron. 2.
		1 21	2 Boaz is borne of Rahab, Matth, 1. 5.	3
		2 22	3 Michah restoreth his theft to his mother.
			His mother dedicateth it to Idolatrie.	17
			An Image is made of it.	17
			He hireth a Leuite to be his Priest.	17
			The children of Dan send men to search the land.	17
			They take the Gods and Priest of Michah away.	18
			They destroy Laish.	18
			They build it againe.	18
80			They set vp the Idoll which they tooke from Michah.	18
			A certaine Leuite fetcheth his wife from Bethleem.	18
			Being at Gibeah he is beset by the citizens.	19
			He is compelled to expose his concubine.	19
			She is most villanously abused to the death.	19
			The Leuite cutteth her in peeces.	19
			And sendeth her to the twelue tribes.	19
			The Israelites cite the Beniamites.	19
			They send for them that did the villanie.	20
			The Israelites are twice ouercome.	20
			At length they get the victorie.	20
			They aske counsell of God for the restoring of the tribe.	20
			They slay the men of Iabesh-Gilead.	21
			And giue of their virgins 500. to the Beniamites.	21
			The Beniamites take the daughters of Shiloh.	21
			The reconciliation of the Tribes.	21
		3 23	4
		4 24	5
		5 25	6
		6 26	7
		7 27	8 Cusham the King of Syria is ouercome.	3
		8 28	The Israelites are deliuered.	3
		9 29
		2540 30
		1 31
		2 32
90		3 33
		4 34
		5 35
		6 36
		7 37
		8 38
		9 39
		2550 40
		1 1	Ehud the second Iudge of Israel 80. yeares.	3
		2 2	He was left handed.	3
100		3 3
		4 4
		5 5
		6 6
		7 7
		8 8
		9 9
		2560 10	1 The Israelites sinne againe.	3
		1 11	2 Eglon, Amaleck, and Moab oppresse them.	3
		2 12	3 The Israelites are ouercome and Iericho is taken.	3
100		3 13	4
		4 14	5
		5 15	6
		6 16	7
		7 17	8 The Embassadour of the Israelites to Eglon.	3
		8 18	Eglon is slaine in his parlour.	3
		9 19	The escaping of Ehud.	3
	2570	20	The suppression of the Moabites.	3

Depart.	World.	Iud.	Opp.		Iudg.
	1	21
	2	22
120	3	23
	4	24
	5	25
	6	26
	7	27
	8	28
	9	29
	2580	30		The Israelites are oppressed of the Philistims.	3
	1	31		Samgar ouercommeth the Philistims with an oxes goad.	3
	2	32
130	3	33
	4	34
	5	35
	6	36
	7	37
	8	38
	9	39
	2590	40
	1	41
	2	42
140	3	43
	4	44
	5	45
	6	46
	7	47
	8	48
	9	49
	2600	50
	1	51
	2	52
150	3	53
	4	54
	5	55
	6	56
	7	57
	8	58
	9	59
	2610	60
	1	61
	2	62
160	3	63
	4	64
	5	65
	6	66
	7	67
	8	68
	9	69
	2620	70
	1	71
	2	72
170	3	73
	4	74
	5	75
	6	76
	7	77
	8	78
	9	79
	2630	80
	1	1	1	The Israelites againe sinne against God.	4
	2	2	2	They are oppressed by Iabin King of Canaan.	4
180	3	3	3	Deborah Iudg. 3. yeares 40. and a Prophetesse.	4
	4	4	4
	5	5	5

Depart.	World.	Iud.	Opp.		Iudg.	Chr. 1.	Ruth.
	6	6	6
	7	7	7
	8	8	8
	9	9	9
	2640	10	10
	1	11	11
	2	12	12
190	3	13	13
	4	14	14
	5	15	15
	6	16	16
	7	17	17
	8	18	18
	9	19	19
	2650	20	20	Barac is chosen captaine against Iabin.		4
	1	21		The battell at the brooke Kison.		4
	2	22		Iahel killeth Sisera.		4
200	3	23		Deborah singeth a song of thanksgiuing for the victory.		5
	4	24		God is acknowledged the author of the victory.		5
	5	25		Shee blesseth the Conquerours.		5
	6	26		A propheticall prayer.		5
	7	27
	8	28
	9	29
	2660	30
	1	31		Elimelech by reason of the famine, goeth into Moab.			1
	2	32		He dieth there togither with his two sonnes.			1
210	3	33
	4	34
	5	35
	6	36
	7	37
	8	38
	9	39
	2670	40		Naomi of Bethlehem returneth with Ruth her daughter in law.			1
				Ruth gleaneth corne in the field of Boaz.			2
				The gentlenes of Boaz toward her.			2
				Shee goeth secretly and sleepeth at Boaz feete.			3
				Shee telleth him of his neere kindred vnto her.			3
				He speaketh of her marriage to her next kinsman.			4
				He refusing, Boaz marrieth her.			4
				Obed the grandfather of Dauid is borne.			4
	1	1		The Israelites turne from God.		6
	2	2	1	They are oppressed of the Madianites 7. yeares.		6
220	3	3	2	A Prophet reproueth them.		6
	4	4	3	Gedeon Iudge 4. yeares 40.
	5	5	4
	6	6	5
	7	7	6	Gedeon called by an Angel is assured by signes.		6
	8	8	7			6
	9	9		Gedeon destroyeth Baal by night.		6
	2680	10		Beeing accused of sacriledge, he is defended.		7
	1	11		He sendeth backe part of his souldiers.		7
	2	12		The 300. that lapped the water are retained.		7
230	3	13		Gedeon is confirmed by a dreame.		7
	4	14		The enemies are put to flight with the trumpets, pitchers, and torches.		8
	5	15		Gedeon doth appease the Ephraimites.
	6	16
	7	17
	8	18
	9	19		The citizens of Sucoth deny him victuals.		8
	2690	20				8
	1	21		Gedeon is reuenged vpon them.

	2	22		Zebah and Salmunah are slaine.	8
240	3	23		He refuseth to be King.	8
	4	24		Of the spoiles he maketh an Ephod, which is the destruction of his fa-
	5	25		milie.	8
	6	26
	7	27
	8	28
	9	29
	2700	30
	1	31
	2	32
250	3	33
	4	34
	5	35
	6	36
	7	37
	8	38
	9	39
	2710	40		Abimelech Iudge 5. yeares 3.	9
	1	1		He vsurpeth the rule ouer the Sichemites.	9
	2	2		He putteth all his brethren to death except one.	9
260	3	3		Who denounceth his ouerthrow and the Sichemites.	9
	4	1		Hatred betweene Abimelech and the Sichemites.	9
	5	2		Abimelech is wounded to death by a woman.	9
	6	3		His armour-bearer thrusts him through.	9
	7	4		Tholah Iudge 6. yeares 23.	10
	8	5
	9	6
	2720	7
	1	8
	2	9
270	3	10
	4	11
	5	12
	6	13
	7	14
	8	15
	9	16
	2730	17
	1	18
	2	19
280	3	20
	4	21
	5	22
	6	23
	7	1		Iair [illegible] yeares 22.	10
	8	2
	9	3
	2740	4
	1	5	1	The Israelites fall into idolatry.	10
	2	6	2	God giueth them into the hands of their enemies.	10
290	3	7	3
	4	8	4
	5	9	5
	6	10	6
	7	11	7
	8	12	8
	9	13	9
	2750	14	10
	1	15	11	Eli is borne.
	2	16	12
300	3	17	13
	4	18	14
	5	19	15
	6	20	16	Iesse is borne of Obed. Matth. 1.

	7	21	17
	8	22	18	They are grieuously oppressed by the Philistims.	10
				They crie vnto God and are rebuked.	10
				They repent and obtaine mercy.	10
	9	1		Iephte Iudge 8. yeares 6.	11
	2760	2		He is made captaine of the warre against the Ammonites.	11
	1	3		He voweth a vow.	11
	2	4		Embassadours are sent to the Ammonites.	11
	3	5		The victory of Iephte.	11
310	4	6		His daughter is sacrificed.	11
				The warre of Iephte against the Ephraimites.	12
	5	1		Ibsan Iudge 9 yeares 7.	12
	6	2		The Ephraimites knowne by their tongue are slaine.	12
	7	3		Sampson a Nazarite is promised.	13
	8	4		The promise is confirmed by signes.	13
	9	5		The same promise is performed Sampson being borne.	13
	2770	6	1	The Philistims oppresse the Israelites 40. yeares.	13
	1	7	2
	2	1	3	Elon Iudge 10. yeares 10.	12
	3	2	4
320	4	3	5
	5	4	6
	6	5	7
	7	6	8
	8	7	9
	9	8	10
	2780	9	11
	1	10	12
	2	1	13	Abdon Iudge 11. yeares 8.	12
	3	2	14
330	4	3	15
	5	4	16
	6	5	17
	7	6	18
	8	7	19
	9	8	20
	2790	1	21	Sampson Iudge 12. yeares 20.	13
	1	2	22	He loueth a Philistim.	14
	2	3	23	On the day of his marriage he killeth a Lyon without weapon.	14
	3	4	24	Returning from his nuptials, he taketh hony from the body of the Lyon.	14
340	4	5	25	He propoundeth a riddle.	14
	5	6	26	His minde is detected by his wife.	14
	6	7	27	He goeth home without his wife.	14
	7	8	28	He killeth the Philistims.	14
	8	9	29	The wife of Sampson is married to his companion.	14
	9	10	30	His wife thus gone, he burneth the Philistims corne.	15
	2800	11	31	The Philistims reuenging themselues, againe he slayeth them.	15
	1	12	32	He is bound and brought vnto them.	15
	2	13	33	With the iaw-bone of an Asse he killeth a thousand Philistims.	15
	3	14	34	Being thirstie, God giueth him water.	15
350	4	15	35	He goeth to an Harlot at Azzah.	16
	5	16	36	He carrieth away the gates of the city.	16
	6	17	37	Dalilah deceiueth him, and bereaueth him of his strength.	16
	7	18	38	They put out his eyes, and put him in the mill.	16
	8	19	39	He pulleth downe the house on the Philistims.	16
	9	20	40	And there dieth with them.	Sam. 1.
	2810	1		Eli Iudge 13. yeares 40.	4
	1	2
	2	3
360	3	4		Hannah enuieth Peninnah.	1
	4	5		Shee is derided for beeing barren.	1
	5	6		Shee prayeth to the Lord for a sonne.	1
	6	7		Shee voweth her sonne vnto the Lord.	1
	7	8		Her answer to Eli reproouing her.	1
	8	9		Samuel is borne.	1

	9	10		Hannah singeth a song vnto the Lord.	2
	2820	11		The wickednes of the sonnes of Eli.	2
	1	12		The Israelites abhorre their offering.	2
	2	13		Eli his indulgence toward his sonnes.	2
370	3	14
	4	15
	5	16
	6	17
	7	18		God foretelleth Samuel of the destruction of Eli.	3
	8	19		Samuel denounceth destruction to Eli and his posterity.	3
	9	20		Samuel his authority in all Israel.	3
	2830	21
	1	22
	2	23
380	3	24
	4	25
	5	26
	6	27
	7	28
	8	29
	9	30
	2840	31
	1	32
	2	33
				The Israelites are put to flight by the Philistims.	4
390	3	34		The Arke of the Lord is brought into the campe.	4
	4	35		The Israelites are beaten the second time.	4
	5	36		The Arke of the Lord is taken by the Philistims.	4
	6	37		At this newes Eli and his daughter in law in childbed die.	4
	7	38		At the presence of the Arke, Dagon falleth downe, and is broken.	5
	8	39		The men of Ashdod are plagued with Emerods.	5
	9	40		Samuel Iudge 14. yeares 40.	7
	2850	1		The Arke is sent backe in a waine after sixe moneths.	6
	1	2		The men of Bethshemesh are stricken for looking in the Arke.	6
	2	3		The Arke is brought into the house of Abinadab.	6
400	3	4		The manner of the gouernment vnder Samuel.	7
	4	5
	5	6
	6	7
	7	8
	8	9
	9	10		Dauid is borne.	3
	2860	11
	1	12
	2	13
410	3	14
	4	15
	5	16
	6	17
	7	18
	8	19
	9	20		The Israelites by Samuels meanes repent.	7
	2870	21		They are saued from the inuasion of the Philistims.	7
	1	22		They recouer the cities which they had lost.	7
	2	23
420	3	24
	4	25
	5	26		Samuel maketh his sonnes Iudges ouer Israel.	8
	6	27		Who follow not his steps.	8
	7	28		The Israelites aske a King.	8
	8	29		Samuel dissuadeth them from their petition.	8
	9	30		Yet at length he yeeldeth vnto them.	8
	2880	31	1	Saul seeking his fathers asses, commeth to Samuel.	9
				He is forewarned of the kingdome.	9
				He is bidden to the feast.	9
				Sauls seruant is sent away.	9

				He is annointed King priuately.	10
				Saul is among the Prophets.	10
				Saul is chosen King by Lot.	10
				The people receiue him with acclamations.	10
				The Amonites warre against Iabesh Gilead.	11
				They take truce for seauen daies.	11
				Saul deliuereth them.	11
	1	32	2	Saul his calling to the kingdome is renewed.	11
				Samuel teacheth him his duty.	12
				He reproue the ingratitude of the people.	12
				God by miracle causeth them to confesse their sinne.	12
				Samuel exhorteth the people to follow the Lord.	12
				Ionathan vanquisheth the Philistims.	13
				The Philistims pitch their tents ouer against Gilgal.	13
				Saul mustereth the Israelites.	13
				Saul Sacrificeth without Samuel.	13
				God reiecteth Saul.	13
				The great slauery wherein the Philistims kept the Israelites.	13
				Ionathan putteth the Philistims to flight.	14
				Saul would put Ionathan to death.	14
				The people deliuer him.	14
	2	33		Saul destroyeth the Amalakites.	15
				Sauls sinne in too much lenity.	15
				God pronounceth his reiection againe.	15
				Samuel heweth Agag in peeces.	15
				Samuel is sent to annoint Dauid.	16
				The Spirit of the Lord commeth vpon Dauid.	16
				Saul sendeth for Dauid.	16
				The Rubenites warre.	17
				Goliah challengeth a single combate.	17
				He is slaine of Dauid.	17
				The Philistims flee.	18
				The Amity of Ionathan and Dauid.	18
				Dauid is made captaine of Sauls guard.	18
430	3	34		The women in their song preferre him before Saul.	18
	4	35		Saul therefore hateth Dauid.	18
				He conspireth his death.	18
				God by his prouidence deliuereth Dauid.	18
				Sauls euill intent is detected by Ionathan.	19
				Dauid is reconciled to Saul by Ionathan.	19
				He warreth against the Philistims.	19
				Saul seeketh his death.	19
				He is deliuered by his wife Michal.	19
				The spirit of prophesie commeth vpon Saul and his Embassadours.	19
				Dauid fleeth to Naioth in Ramah.	20
				He complaineth to Ionathan of his fathers iniury.	20
				Their counsell for the searching out of Sauls minde.	20
	5	36		They renew their league of friendship.	20
	6	37		Ionathan deliuereth Dauid.	20
	7	38		Dauid commeth to Ahimelech.	21
				He getteth the shewbread and the sword of Goliah.	21
				Being fled to Gath, the Philistims acknowledge him.	21
				He escapeth by faining himselfe madde.	21
				Dauid fleeth to the Moabites.	22
				Beeing warned by a Prophet, he goeth backe to Iudea.	22
				Which beeing heard, Saul feareth treason.	22
				Saul slayeth Ahimelech and his family.	22
				He raseth the whole citie.	22
				Abiathar escaping, commeth vnto Dauid.	22
				Dauid chaseth the Philistims from Keilah.	23
				He receiueth Abiathar.	23
				Dauid asking counsell of God, learneth all the counsels of Saul.	23
				He hideth himselfe in the wildernesse of Ziph.	23
				There he reneweth friendship with Ionathan.	23
				The men of Ziph betray him to Saul.	23

	9	10		Hannah singeth a song vnto the Lord.	2
	2820	11		The wickednes of the sonnes of Eli.	2
	1	12		The Israelites abhorre their offering.	2
	2	13		Eli his indulgence toward his sonnes.	2
370	3	14
	4	15
	5	16
	6	17
	7	18		God foretelleth Samuel of the destruction of Eli.	3
	8	19		Samuel denounceth destruction to Eli and his posterity.	3
	9	20		Samuel his authority in all Israel.	3
	2830	21
	1	22
	2	23
380	3	24
	4	25
	5	26
	6	27
	7	28
	8	29
	9	30
	2840	31
	1	32
	2	33
	3	34		The Israelites are put to flight by the Philistims.	4
390	4	35		The Arke of the Lord is brought into the campe.	4
	5	36		The Israelites are beaten the second time.	4
	6	37		The Arke of the Lord is taken by the Philistims.	4
	7	38		At this newes Eli and his daughter in law in childbed die.	4
	8	39		At the presence of the Arke, Dagon falleth downe, and is broken.	5
	9	40		The men of Ashdod are plagued with Emerods.	5
	2850	1		Samuel iudge 14. yeares 40.	7
	1	2		The Arke is sent backe in a waine after sixe moneths.	6
	2	3		The men of Bethshemesh are stricken for looking in the Arke.	6
400	3	4		The Arke is brought into the house of Abinadab.	6
	4	5		The manner of the gouernment vnder Samuel.	7
	5	6
	6	7
	7	8
	8	9
	9	10		Dauid is borne.	3
	2860	11
	1	12
	2	13
410	3	14
	4	15
	5	16
	6	17
	7	18
	8	19
	9	20		The Israelites by Samuels meanes repent.	7
	2870	21		They are saued from the inuasion of the Philistims.	7
	1	22		They recouer the cities which they had lost.	7
	2	23
420	3	24
	4	25
	5	26		Samuel maketh his sonnes Iudges ouer Israel.	8
	6	27		Who follow not his steps.	8
	7	28		The Israelites aske a King.	8
	8	29		Samuel dissuadeth them from their petition.	8
	9	30		Yet at lenghth he yeeldeth vnto them.	8
	2880	31	1	Saul seeking his fathers asses, commeth to Samuel.	9
				He is forewarned of the kingdome.	9
				He is bidden to the feast.	9
				Sauls seruant is sent away.	9

He

				He is annointed King priuately.	10
				Saul is among the Prophets.	10
				Saul is chosen King by Lot.	10
				The people receiue him with acclamations.	10
				The Amonites warre against Iabesh Gilead.	11
				They take truce for seauen daies.	11
				Saul deliuereth them.	11
	1	32	2	Saul his calling to the kingdome is renewed.	11
				Samuel teacheth him his duty.	12
				He reproue the ingratitude of the people.	12
				God by miracle causeth them to confesse their sinne.	12
				Samuel exhorteth the people to follow the Lord.	12
				Ionathan vanquisheth the Philistims.	13
				The Philistims pitch their tents ouer against Gilgal.	13
				Saul musstereth the Israelites.	13
				Saul Sacrificeth without Samuel.	13
				God reiecteth Saul.	13
				The great slauery wherein the Philistims kept the Israelites.	13
				Ionathan putteth the Philistims to flight.	14
				Saul would put Ionathan to death.	14
				The people deliuer him.	14
	2	33		Saul destroyeth the Amalakites.	15
				Sauls sinne in too much lenity.	15
				God pronounceth his reiection againe.	15
				Samuel heweth Agag in peeces.	15
				Samuel is sent to annoint Dauid.	16
				The Spirit of the Lord commeth vpon Dauid.	16
				Saul sendeth for Dauid.	16
				The Rubenites warre.	17
				Goliah challengeth a single combate.	17
				He is slaine of Dauid.	17
				The Philistims flee.	18
				The Amity of Ionathan and Dauid.	18
				Dauid is made captaine of Sauls guard.	18
430	3	34		The women in their song preferre him before Saul.	18
	4	35		Saul therefore hateth Dauid.	18
				He conspireth his death.	18
				God by his prouidence deliuereth Dauid.	18
				Sauls euill intent is detected by Ionathan.	19
				Dauid is reconciled to Saul by Ionathan.	19
				He warreth against the Philistims.	19
				Saul seeketh his death.	19
				He is deliuered by his wife Michal.	19
				The spirit of prophesie commeth vpon Saul and his Embassadours.	19
				Dauid fleeth to Naioth in Ramah.	20
				He complaineth to Ionathan of his fathers iniury.	20
				Their counsell for the searching out of Sauls minde.	20
				They renew their league of friendship.	20
	5	36		Ionathan deliuereth Dauid.	20
	6	37
	7	38		Dauid commeth to Ahimelech.	21
				He getteth the shewbread and the sword of Goliah.	21
				Being fled to Gath, the Philistims acknowledge him.	21
				He escapeth by faining himselfe madde.	21
				Dauid fleeth to the Moabites.	22
				Beeing warned by a Prophet, he goeth backe to Iudea.	22
				Which beeing heard, Saul feareth treason.	22
				Saul slayeth Ahimelech and his family.	22
				He raseth the whole citie.	22
				Abiathar escaping, commeth vnto Dauid.	22
				Dauid chaseth the Philistims from Keilah.	23
				He receiueth Abiathar.	23
				Dauid asking counsell of God, learneth all the counsels of Saul.	23
				He hideth himselfe in the wildernesse of Ziph.	23
				There he reneweth friendship with Ionathan.	23
				The men of Ziph betray him to Saul.	23

				Sauls enterprise is broken in pursuing Dauid.	23	Chron. 1.
				Saul pursueth Dauid in the wildernesse of Engedi.	24
				Dauid hid in a caue spareth Saul.	24
				He cutteth off the lap of his garment.	24
				Saul acknowledgeth his owne iniustice.	24
				He maketh Dauid to sweare vnto him to fauour his posterity.	24
	8	39		Samuel dieth.	25
				Dauid goeth downe into the wildernes of Paran.	25
				He helpeth Nabals heardmen.	25
				Nabal euill-intreateth his messengers.	25
				The Lord killeth Nabal.	25
				Dauid taketh Abigal to his wife.	25
				The Ziphims againe discouer Dauid to Saul.	26
				Saul bringeth an armie against him.	26
				Dauid taketh away Sauls speare.	26
				And a pot of water from his head.	26
				Saul confesseth his sinne.	26
	9	40		Dauid fleeth to Achish king of Gath.	27
				Who giueth him Ziglag.	27
				Dauid destroieth certaine of the Philistims.	27
				He maketh Achish beleeue they are the spoiles of Israel.	27
				The Philistims set vpon Saul.	28
				Dauid promiseth to Achish his assistance in the battell.	28
				Dauid hath the chiefe charge about Achish.	28
				The Philistims prepare warre with the Israelites.	28
				Saul consulteth with a witch.	28
				A ghost appeareth and declareth his ruine.	28
				With feare and faintnes he falleth downe.	28
				The Philistims cause Dauid to be sent backe.	29
				Achish is compelled to let him goe.	29
				The Amalekites burne Ziglag.	30
				Dauid pursueth them and recouereth the prey.	30
				Which he deuideth and sendeth part to his friends.	30
				Saul fighting with the Philistims, is put to flight.	31
				His sonnes being slaine in the battell, he killeth himselfe.	31
				The bodies of Saul and his sonnes are hanged on the wals.	31
				The men of Iabesh take down their bodies, burn them, & bury their bones	31
					Sam. 2.
				He that tolde Dauid of Sauls death, is punished.	1
				Dauid mourneth for the death of Saul.	1
442	2890	1	1	Dauid is annointed King in Hebron.	2
				Abner maketh Ishbosheth king ouer Israel.	2
				The same raigneth two yeares.	2
				The warre betweene Dauid and Ishbosheth.	2
				Abner and his men are put to flight.	2
	1	2	2	The children of Dauid in Hebron.	3
				Michal is restored to Dauid.	3
				Abner and the Israelites returne vnto Dauid.	3
				Abner by treacherie is slaine and buried.	3
				The king declareth that it was done vnknowne to him.	3
	2	3		Baanah and Rechab slay Ishbosheth.	4
	3	4		Dauid commandeth them to be slaine.	4
	4	5		The head of Ishbosheth is honourably buried.	4
	5	6		Dauid is made King ouer all Israel.	5
	6	7		He taketh the fort of Zion.	5
	7	8		He maketh amity with the King of Tyre.	5
	8	9		He ouercommeth the Philistims twice.	5
	9	10		The Arke is brought from the house of Abinadab.	6	13
	2900	11		Vzzah for rashly touching the Arke, is stricken dead.	6
	1	12		It is put into the house of Obed Edom.	6
	2	13		It is brought to Ierusalem.	6
450	3	14		Dauid danceth before it, and is despised of Michal.	6
	4	15		Shee therefore is punished with barrennes.	6
	5	16
	6	17		Nathan perswadeth the building of the Temple, and dissuadeth it.	7	17

				God promiseth to Dauid continuance in his kingdome.	7	Chron. 1.
		7	18	Dauid ouercommeth the Moabites and Syrians, &c.	8	18
				His friendship with the king of Camath.	8
				He dedicateth the spoiles vnto God.	8
				Dauid maketh officers in church and commonwealth.	8
				The kindnesse of Dauid to Mephibosheth.	9
		8	19	Hanun King of Ammon villanously handleth Dauids messengers.	10	19
				The Ammonites are twise ouercome.	10
				The Syrians require peace and become tributaries.	10
		9	20	The time of the warre with the Ammonites Dauid is at home.	11	20
				Dauid committeth adulterie.	11
				Vriah is slaine.	11
				Dauid marrieth Bathsheba.	11
				Dauid reproued by Nathan confesseth his sinne.	12
				The child conceiued in adulterie dieth.	12
				Dauid hauing before fasted and prayed for it then ceaseth.	12
		2910	21
		1	22	Salomon is borne of Bathsheba.	12
				Rabbah is taken.	12
				The citizens are grieuously punished.	12
		2	23	Tamar is sent in to Ammon by her father.	13
460		3	24 1	Ammon defileth her.	13
				Tamar is comforted by her brother Absolom.	13
		4	25 2	Absolom dissembleth his hatred two yeares.	13
		5	26	He prouideth that Ammon is slaine at a banquet.	13
		6	27 1	Absolom is banished 3. yeares.	13
		7	28 2
		8	29 3	Dauids heart is toward Absolom.	14
		9	30 1	He is called home by Ioabs meanes.	14
		2920	31 2	And at last he is reconciled.	14
		1	32
		2	33	The practise of Absolom to aspire to the kingdome.	15
				The people conspire with him against Dauid.	15
				Dauid fleeth out of the citie.	15
				The counsell to hinder Absolom.	15
				The goods of Mephibosheth are giuen to Ziba.	16
				Shemei curseth Dauid.	16
				Dauid abstaineth from reuenge.	16
				Hushais counsell to Absolom.	16
				The counsell of Ahitophel.	16
				Dauids concubines are defiled.	16
				Ahitophels counsell against Dauid.	17
				Hushais counsell is preferred.	17
				Dauid goeth ouer Iordane.	17
				Ahitophel hangeth himselfe.	17
				Dauid deuideth his armie.	18
				Absolom is hanged, slaine, and cast into a pit.	18
				Dauid lamenteth the death of Absolom.	18
				Ioab reproueth him.	19
				The tribe of Iudah bring him ouer Iordane.	19
				Dauid is restored.	19
				Shemei confesseth his fault, and is pardoned.	19
				Mephibosheth is restored.	19
				The Israelites contend with Iudah.	19
				The hospitalitie of Barsillai to Dauid.	19
					20
470		3	34 1	The Israelites follow the rebell Shebah.	20
		4	35 2	Only the tribe of Iudah bringeth the King to Hierusalem.	20
		5	36 3	The concubines which were defiled are committed to ward.	20
		6	37	Amasa followeth after Sheba.	20
				Ioab killeth Amasa traiterously.	20
				Ioab and his brother vanquish Sheba.	21
				The famine of three yeares beginneth.	21
				Which was sent for the slaughter of the Gibeonites.	21
				The seauen Nephewes of Saul are hanged.	21

				Dauids bartels against the Philistims.	21	Chron. 1.
				The issue of Goliah are slaine.	21
	7	38		Dauid causeth the people to be numbred.	24
	8	39		Dauid hath his choise of three plagues.	24
				He chuseth to fall into Gods hands.	24
				The repentance of Dauid and the people.	24
	9	40		Dauids song in the praise of God.	23
				The last words of Dauid.	23
				A Catalogue of the captaines ouer Dauids armies.	23	11
				The water fetch from the fountaine of Bethleem is powred out.	23
					King. 1.
				Roboam is borne.	1
				Dauid beeing stricken in yeares, Abishag is appointed to cherish him.	1
				The conspiracie of Adoniah to get the Kingdome.	1
				Salomon is annointed by the commandement of Dauid.	1	29
				Adoniah fleeth to the Altar.	1
				He is pardoned and let to come home.	1
				Dauid about to die, instructeth Salomon.	2
				He commanderh him to cherish the posteritie of Barsillai.	2
				And to kill Ioab and Shemei.	2	Chron.
	2930	1		Ioab and Adoniah are slaine.	2
				Abiathar is deposed.	2
				Salomon marrieth the King of AEgypts daughter.	3
				Salomon prayeth for wisedome.	3	1
				His iudgement concerning the two Harlots.	3
				The peace of the kingdome beeing well ordered.	4	9
	1	2		The fame of Salomons wisedome.	4
	2	3		Hiram greeteth him.	5	2
480	3	4	1	He sendeth him wood to build the Temple.	5
2	4	5	2	Salomon beginning to build the Temple.	6
3	5	6	3
4	6	7	4
	7	8	5
6	8	9	6
7	9	10	7
				A congregation of the Priests and Princes of the people.	8
				The Arke is brought from Sion into the Sanctum Sanctorum.	8	7
				God giueth a signe of his presence.	8
				Salomon blesseth the people.	8	7
				He maketh prayers and Sacrifices.	8
				He consecrateth the house of God.	8
				He celebrateth the feast of Tabernacles.	8
				God confirmeth his promises to Salomon.	9
8	2940	11	1	Now he began to build his owne house.	7
9	1	12	2
10	2	13	3
11	3	14	4
12	4	15	5
13	5	16	6
14	6	17	7
15	7	18	8
16	8	19	9
17	9	20	10
18	2950	21	11
19	1	22	12
20	2	23	13
21	3	24		Salomons pallace was finished.	7	9
22	4	25		Hiram refuseth the cities which Salomon offereth him.	9	8
23	5	26		The Canaanites become tributaries.	9
24	6	27		God will be worshipped after the prescript of his law.	9	9
25	7	28		Salomon sendeth ships to Ophir.	9	9
26	8	29		The Queene of Saba visiteth Salomon.	10
27	9	30		Shee heareth and admireth his wisedome.	10
28	2960	31		Shee giueth and receiueth gifts, and returneth.	10
29	1	32		Salomon is corrupted by his outlandish wiues.	11

He

				He falleth into Idolatrie.	11	Chron. 2.
	30	2	33	Ahia foretelleth the diuision of his kingdome.	11
	31	3	34	And that Ieroboam shalbe King of tenne tribes.	11	13
	32	4	35	Salomon seeketh Ieroboams life.	11
	33	5	36	Ieroboam abideth in AEgypt till the death of Salomon.	11
				Salomons writings. Prouerbs. Ecclesiastes.
	34	6	37
	35	7	38
	36	8	39
	37	9	40	Salomon dieth.	11	9
	2970	1	1	Roboam by his answer alienateth tenne tribes.	12	10
				Whereupon Ieroboam is the first King of Israel.	12
				Roboam the first King of Iuda.	12
				He stayeth his preparation for warre by Gods commandement.	12
				Ieroboam fortifieth himselfe.	12
				He setteth vp Idols in Dan and Bethel.	12
				He exileth the Prophets.	12	11
		2	2	A man of God threatneth the Altar in Bethel.
	1	3	3	Ieroboams hand withereth and the Altar cleaueth.	13
	2			The Prophet departing thence, by deceit returneth.	13
				Afterwards departing a Lion deuoureth him.	13
				Ieroboams wife asketh counsell of Ahiah.	14
				He declareth the destruction of Ieroboams house.	14
		4	4	The Idolatrie of Roboam.	14
	3	5	5	Sisak spoileth the Temple and Iudah.	14	11
	4	6	6	Semeia doth prophesie.
	5	7	7
	6	8	8
	7	9	9
	8	10	10
	9	11	11
10	2980	12	12
	1	13	13
	2	14	14
	3	15	15
	4	16	16		14
	5	17	17	Roboam dieth.	15	11
	6		18	Abiam the second King of Iudah yeares 3.		13
	7	1	1	The warre of Abiam with Ieroboam.	15
			19	Abiam dieth.
	9		20	Asa 3. King, yeares 41. in Iudah.	14
				Ierbooam dieth.
			20	Nadab the 2. King of Israel, yeares 12.	15
20	2990	2	21	1 He is wicked after the example of his father.	15
	1	3	22	Nadab is slaine by Baasa.	15
	2	4	2	2 Baasa the third King of Israel, yeares 24.
	3	5	3			15
	4	6	4	The Prophets flowrish.
	5	7	5
	6	8	6
	7	9	7	Iosaphat is borne.		22
	8	10	8
	9	11	9	Asa ouercommeth the king of AEthiopia.		14
30	3000	12	10	Asa restoreth true worship.		15
	1	13	11	Azarias flowrisheth.		15
	2	14	12
	3	15	13
	4	16	14		16
	5	17	15	Baasa sinneth like Ieroboam.	16	10
	6	18	16	Alike death is denounced against him.	15
	7	19	17	He oppugneth Iudah for restoring religion.		16
	8	20	18	Hanon is put in prison.		16
	9	21	19	The league of Asa with the Syrians.
40	3010	22	20
	1	23	21

The

	2	24	22			The death of Baaſa.	16	Chron. 2.
	3	25	23			Ella the fourth king of Iſrael, yeares 2.	16
	4	26	24			He is ſlaine by Zimri.	16
	5	27	1	1		Zimri, Omri, Tibni, Kings of Iſrael, yeares 12.	16
	6	28	2	2		Zimri after ſeauen daies burneth himſelfe.	16
	7	29	3
	8	30	4
	9	31	5
50	3020	32	6			Omri is King alone.
	1	33	7			He buildeth Samariah.	16
	2	34	8
	3	35	9
	4	36	10
	5	37	11
	6	38	12	1		Ahab the 5. King of Iſrael, yeares 22.	16
	7	39		2		In his daies Hiel buildeth Ierico againe.	16
	8	40		3		He is puniſhed.	16
	9	41	1	4		Aſa ſicke of his feete dieth.		16
60	3030		2	5		Ioſaphat the fourth King of Iudah, yeares 25.	22
	1		3	6		Eliah beginneth to propheſie.	17
	2		4	7		Ioſaphat reformeth Iudah.		17
	3		5	8
	4		6	9
	5		7	10		Eliah forewarneth of the famine to come.	17
	6		8	11		The heauens are ſhut by the prayer of Elias. Iames 5.
	7		9	12		The Rauens feede Eliah a whole yeare.	17
	8		10	13		God ſendeth him to Sarepti.	17
						A widdow nouriſheth him two yeares.	17
						Obediah bountifull to the Prophets.	18
	9		11	14		Eliah raiſeth the widdowes child.	18
70	3040		12	15		He goeth to Ahab.	18
						He reproueth him.	18
						The Prophets meete in Carmel.	18
						Eliah killeth all Baals Prophets.	18
						He fleeth from Ieſebel.	18
	1		13	16		And abideth in a deſert.	18
						And there is nouriſhed by an Angel.	18
						The faſting of Eliah in Horeb.	19
						God appeareth to him before the caue.	19
						He is charged to annoint Elizeus, Hazael, and Iehu.	19
						Elizeus is called to ſucceed Elias.	19
	2		14	17		The King of Syria inuadeth Iſrael.	20
	3		15	18		Ahab vanquiſheth him in two battels.	20
						Ahab honoureth him yeelding.	20
	4	16	19			Ahab his wicked league with the Syrian.	20
	5	17	1 20	1		Ahab beeing denied Naboth his vineyard is ſicke.	21
						Ieſebel giueth him hope to get it.	21
						Naboth is ſtoned.	21
						Deſtruction is denounced to Ahab and his poſteritie.	21
						Ahab repenteth.	21
						Thereupon the puniſhment is deferred.	21
	6	18	2 21	2		Ioſaphat maketh peace with Ahab.	22
						They aske counſell of the Prophets.	22
						Michaiah is caſt into priſon.	22
						Ioram is left his fathers deputie.	22
						Ahaſiah the 8. King of Iſrael, yeares 2.
	7	19	3 22	2		Ahab changing his apparell is ſlaine.	22
	8	20	4	3		The ſhipwracke of Ioſaphat in Aſion-gaber.	22	20
						Ioſaphat doth aſſociate himſelfe with Ahaſiah.		20
						Hereupon he is reproued by the Prophet.		King. 2.
						The Moabites rebell.	1
						It raineth fire.	1
						The wickedneſſe of Ahaſiah.	1
						His death is foretold by Eliah.	1
						He dieth of a fall.	1

						Ioram is the 9. King of Iſrael, yeares 12.	1	Chron. 2.
	9	21		4		Eliah deuideth Iordane with his cloake.	2	21
						The taking vp of Eliah.	2
						Elizeus likewiſe deuideth Iordane.	2
						He healeth the waters of Iericho.	2
						He curſed the children which mocked him.	2
80	3050	22	1	5		The Moabites rebell againſt Ahab.	3
						The ſecond election of Ioram at Iudah.	3	20
						Elizeus giueth their hoaſt water.	3
						Victorie is promiſed to Ahab.	3
						A curſe is decreed againſt Moab.	3
	1	23	2	6		The Prophet encreaſeth the widdowes oyle.	4
						The Sunamitiſh woman is Elizeus hoſteſſe.	4
						Of barren ſhee is made fruitefull.	4
						Her child beeing dead is raiſed againe.	4
						The bitter pottage is made ſweete.	4
						He feedeth a 100. with 20. loaues.	4
						Naaman is cleanſed from his leproſie.	5
						Gehezi taketh gifts vnknowne to Elizeus.	5
						He and his poſteritie are puniſhed with leproſie.	5
						The head of the hatchet ſwimmeth.	6
	2	24	3	7		The treaſons of the Syrians are detected.	6
						The fierie charets defend Elizeus.	6
	3	25	4	8		Elizeus deceiueth, taketh, and ſuppreſſeth the Enemie.	6
						A great famine in Samaria beeing beſieged.	6
						A ſuddaine abundance is foretold.	7
						The Syrians hearing a noyſe flee.	7
						The Lepers declare this to the Iſraelites.	7
						The famine is helped by the tents of the Syrians.	7
						A famine of ſeauen yeares is foretold.	8
						Ioſaphat dieth.		21
	4		5	9		Ioram killeth his brethren.		21
	5		6	10		The Edomites rebell.	8
	6		7	11
	7	1	8	12		Ahaſiah King of Iudah one yeare.	8
						Hazael is called to be King.	8
						Elizeus propheſieth againſt Ioram.		21
						Iudeah is ſpoiled.		21
						Ioram dieth of a diſeaſe in his bowels.	8	21
						Ahaziah viſiteth Elizeus beeing ſicke.	8
						Iehu King of Iſrael yeares 28.	10
	8		1	1		He conſpireth againſt Ioram.	9
	9		2	2		He killeth Ahaziah, Iezebel, and Ioram.	9
90	3060		3	3		He killeth the poſteritie of Ahab.	10
	1		4	4		His deede is commended by Eliah.	10
	2		5	5		He ſlayeth the kinred of Ahaſiah.	10
	3		6	6		He taketh away Baal and his Prieſts.	10
						Athaliah getteth the kingdome, and holdeth it ſixe yeares.	11	22
						Shee deſtroyeth the Kings ſtocke.	11
						Ioas is preſerued.	11
	4	1	7			Ioas King of Iudah 40. yeares.	11
	5	2	8			Ioiada killeth Athaliah.	11	23
	6	3	9			He reſtoreth the true worſhip of God.	11
	7	4	10
	8	5	11			Iehu continueth in the ſinnes of Ieroboam.	11
	9	6	12			Therefore God puniſheth him.	11
100	3070	7	13
	1	8	14
	2	9	15
	3	10	16
	4	11	17
	5	12	18
	6	13	19

Chron. 2. Ionas.

	7	14	20
	8	15	21
	9	16	22	Amasias is borne.		14
110	3080	17	23
	1	18	24
	2	19	25
	3	20	26
	4	21	27
	5	22	28	Ioas repaireth the Temple.		12
	6	23		Ioachas King of Israel, yeares 17.	1	13
	7	24		The Syrians vexe his kingdome.	2	13
	8	25			3
	9	26			4
120	3090	27			5
	1	28			6
	2	29		Iehoida high Priest, died beeing yeares 130.	7
	3	30			8		24
	4	31		Ioas falling away suffereth the worship of Idols.	9
	5	32			10		24
	6	33			11
	7	34			12
	8	35			13
	9	36			14
130	3100	37		Ioas King of Israel. yeares 16.	15	13
	1	38		He visiteth Elizeus beeing sicke.	16	13
	2	39		His seruants kill him.	17		24
	3		2	Zacharias is slaine in the Temple.	2		24
	4	40	2	Amasiah King of Iudah, yeares 29.	3	14
	5		3	He embraceth the worship of God.	4	14
	6		4	Elizeus dieth.	5	13
	7		5	A dead souldier touching the bones of Elizeus reuiueth.	6	13
	8		6		7
	9		7		8
140	3110		8		9
	1		9		10
	2		10		11
	3		11		12
	4		12		13
	5		13		14
	6		14	Ieroboam the 13. King of Israel, yeares 41.	15	14
	7		15	Amasiah is proud hauing conquered the Edomites.	16	14
	8		16	He is ouercome by the Israelites, and fined.	2	14
	9		17		3
150	3120		18	Ionas fleeth from God to Tarshish.	4		1
	1		19	A Whale deuoureth him.	5		1
	2		20	There he prayeth to God.	6		1
	3		21	The Whale casteth him vp.	7		2
	4		22	Ionas then beeing sent, preacheth to the Niniuites.	8		2
	5		23	The Niniuites beleeue and repent.	9		3
	6		24	Ionas is angrie because the Niniuites are spared.	10		3
	7		25	And againe, for the gourd that withered.	11		3
	8		26		12
	9		27	Vzzias is borne.	13
160	3130		28	Amaziah is slaine by his subiects in Lachish.	14	14
	1		29		15
	2	1		The kingdome of Iudah is a Democratie, yeares. 11.	16	14
	3	2			17
	4	3			18
	5	4			19
	6	5			20
	7	6			21
	8	7			22
	9	8			23
170	3140	9			24

Vzzias

	1	10			25
	2	11			26
	3		1	Vzzias is King of Iudah yeares 52.	27		15
	4		2	Zachariah is Vzzias counseller.	28		26
	5		3		29
	6		4		30			Amos
	7		5	Amos doth foretell the famine and earthquake.	31			1.7
	8		6	The destruction of other countries.	32			1
	9		7	The destruction and captiuity of both nations.	33			2.3
180	3150		8		34
	1		9	To the stubborne destruction is denounced.	35			4.7
	2		10	The abolishing of Ieroboams family.	36			5.6
	3		11	Amos is accused of conspiracie.	37			7
	4		12	Amaziah prouideth for his departure.	38			7
	5		13	The destruction of Amaziahs house is foretolde.	39			7
	6		14	Types of Israels subuertion.	40			8.9
	7		15		41
	8		16	1 The Israelites haue Kings not chosen by God, yeares 22.
	9		17	2
190	3160		18	3
	1		19	4
	2		20	5				Oseas.
	3		21	6
	4		22	7				1.2
	5		23	8 Oseas sheweth Israel of their idolatry.				3
	6		24	9 The subuertion of the Israelites is foretolde.				4
	7		25	10 Iudah is taught that thee be not like Israel.				6.7
	8		26	11 Their destruction is menaced for their wickednes.				11
	9		27	12 The elect being conuerted, shall embrace Christ.				12
200	3170		28	13 The Israelites are recalled from their sinnes.				13
	1		29	14 A remnant shall be saued.				Isaias.
	2		30	15				1
	3		31	16 Isaias reproueth the back-sliding of Israel.				1
	4		32	17 An exhortation to repentance.				2
	5		33	18 The kingdome of Christ, and the idolatry of the people.				3
	6		34	19 The pride of women.
	7		35	20
	8		36	21
	9		37	22
210	3180		38	1 Zacharias King of Israel 6. moneths, and dieth.			15
				Shallum King of Israel 1. moneth, and dieth.	1		15
	1		39	Manahen King of Israel yeares 10.			15
	2		40	2
	3		41	3
	4		42	4
	5		43	5
	6		44	6 Vzziah getteth the priesthood.			15	26
	7		45	7 The Priests resist him.			15	26
*	8		45	8 He is excluded the company of men for a leper.			15	26
	9		47	9				5
220	3190		48	10 The Parable of the Vine.				5 Joel
	1		49	The famine in Iewrie.				1
	2		50	The drouth and famine.				2
	3		51	1 A publike fast is commanded.				2.3
				Blessing through Christ is promised.
				Pekaiah King of Israel 2. yeares.			15
	4		52	2 1 Pekah King of Israel 20. yeares.			15
	5	1		2 Iothan King of Iudah 16. yeares.			27
	6	2		3
				4 Isaias is confirmed in a vision.				6
	7	3		5 The stubbornes of the people is foretolde.				6 Micha.
	8	4		6 Michah denounceth the destruction of both kingdomes.				1.2.3.4.
	9	5		7 The wickednesse of the people is reprooued.				5.6.7.
230	2200	6		8 The comfort of the Church.
	1	7		9
	2	8

Ooo Achas

		5	9			10
		4	10			11
		5	11			12
		6	12			13
		7	13			14
		8	14			15
		9	15			16	Achas King of Iudah, yeares 16.		16
The	240	3210	16	1		17	The expedition of Syria, and Israel against Iudeah.		16		7
yeares of		1		2		18	Achas and his people faint.				7
Esaias 65		2		3		19	They heare a promise of deliuerance.				7
cap. 7.							Achas is bidden to aske a signe.				7
1							Christ is promised.				7
							The destruction of Syriah and Samariah is fore-tolde.				7
							Ayd is asked of the Assyrians.		16
							Syria is inuaded, and the King is slaine.		16
							A patterne of the Altar of Damascus.		16
							The destruction of Iudeah is fore-tolde.				7
							Likewise of Samariah, Syriah, and Iudeah.				8,9
							The consolation of the godly.				11
							The destruction of Babylon.				13
		3		4	1	20	Pekah is slaine by Oseah.		16
		4		5	2		Oseah is King of Israel.
5		5		6	3
		6		7	4
		7		8	5
		8		9	6
		9		10	7
10	250	3220		11	8
		1		12	9
		2		13	1		Hosheah becommeth tributary to the Assyrians.		17
		3		14	2		He denieth to pay the tribute, looking for aid from Egypt.		17
		4		15	3
		5	1	16	4		Hezechiah King of Iudah, yeares 29.		18	29
		6	2		5		He restoreth the true worship of God.		18
		7	3		6		The brasen Serpent is broken.		18
							The destruction of Babylon is fore-tolde.				13
							And likewise of many other nations.				20
							The captiuity into Babylon is fore-tolde.				21
							Iudeah shalbe wasted by the Assyrians.				22
							The destruction of Tyre within 70. yeares.				23
							The conseruation of a remnant.				24
							The vastation of Israel.				28
							Safety is promised to the Iewes.				28
							Destruction by the Babylonians denounced.				29
		8	4		7		Salmaneser besiegeth Samariah.		17
		9	5		8
20	260	3230	6		9		Hoshea is slaine, and Samariah taken.		17
		1	7		Assyr.		He and all the people are brought to Assyria.		17
		2	8				New inhabitants are sent from Assyria.		17
		3	9				Lyons destroy them.
		4	10				Their new religions in Samaria.		17
		5	11				Sargon, that is, Senacherib, doth besiege Asotus.				20
		6	12				Senacharib commeth vp into the cities of Iudah.		18
		7	13				Hezekiah appeaseth him with a present.		18
		8	14				Senacharib doth not stand to promise.		18
							His Embassadours inuade Iudah.		18
							Their blasphemie.		18
							They exhort the people to rebellion.		18		37
							Isaias comforteth Hezekiah.		19
							In the tents of the Assyrians are slaine 185000.		19
							Aserhaddon succeedeth Senacherib.		19
							Hezekiah is sicke.		20		38
							His life is prolonged for 15 yeares.		20
							His recouery is ratified by a signe.		20
		9	15				He receiueth rewards of Berodach.		20

He

30	270	3240	16				He sheweth his treasures to the Embassadours.		20		39
		1	17				And is reprehended by Isaiah.		20
		2	18				He dieth, and Manasses his sonne reigneth.		20
		3	19				The Simeonites take fields from the sonnes of Chamus.
		4	20								5
		5	21
		6	22
		7	23
		8	24
		9	25
40	280	3250	26
		1	27				Deliuerance of the captiuity is promised by the meanes of Cyrus.				45
		2	28
		3	29		1		Deliuerance by the Messias.				49
		4			2
		5			3		Manasses King of Iudah, yeares 55.
		6			4		Destruction of his house and kingdome.		21		33
		7			5		He is carried away into Babylon.		21		33
		8			6		Repenting, he is restored to his throne.				33
		9			7		He restoreth the true worship of God in part.				33
50	290	3260			8
		1			9
		2			10
		3			11
		4			12
		5			13
		6			14
		7			15
		8			16
		9			17
60	300	3720			18
		1			19
		2			20
		3			21
		4			22
65		5			23
		6			24
		7			25
		8			26
		9			27
	310	3280			28
		1			29
		2			30
		3			31
		4			32
		5			33
		6			34
		7			35
		8			36
		9			37
	320	3290			38
		1			39
		2			40
		3			41
		4			42
		5			43
		6			44
		7			45
		8			46
		9			47
	330	3300			48
		1			49
		2			50
		3			51
		4			52

Apost.	World.	Iuda.	Assyr.			Kin.2.	Chr.2.	Ier.	Zeph.
		5		53					1,2,3.
		6		54
		7	1	55	Ammon a wicked King succeedeth y eares 2.	22	33
		8
		9	2	1	Iosias is King yeares 31.	22
	3403	33	10	2	Nebuchadnezzars first beginning.
		1		3
		2		4
		3		5
		4		6
		5		7
		6		8	Iosias seeketh after God.		34
		7		9
		8		10
		9		11
Ezechiel	3503	33	20	12	The reformation of Iudah.		34
yeare 40.		1		13	The calling of Ieremiah.			1
		2		14	He is confirmed with signes and promises.			x
1		3		15	A recitall of Gods benefits.			2
		4		16	Mercy is offered vnto the Iewes.			2
				17	For their stubbornnes they are punished.			2
					The wickednesse of all degrees is deciphered in the similitude of the sisters.			3
					Iudgement for their sinnes is fore-tolde.			4
					Ieremie lamenteth for his people.			9
					He warneth all men to lament.			9
					The idolatry of the people is reproued.			10
					The Law of God is to be expounded to the people.			11
					The destruction of the Iewes is denounced.			12
					The expostulation of the Prophet.			15
					The iustice of God against the Iewes.			18
					The destruction of the Iewes is prophecied.
					The promise of the kingdome of Christ.
		5		18	The instauration of the Temple is commanded.	22	34
		6		19	Hilkiah findeth the booke of the law.	22
		7		20	Iosias is astonished at the reading thereof.	22
		8		21	He receiueth the sentence of the destruction of Iudea.	22
		9		22	Idols and slewes are abolished,	23
10	3603	33	30	23	The altar of Ieroboam is throwne downe.	23
		1		24	The destruction of the Idumeans is denounced.				Obed.1.
		2		25	Ieremie fore-telleth the ouerthrow of Iudea.			19
		3		26	Passur putteth him into prison.			20
		4		27	The captiuity of Passur and his house is denounced.
		5		28
		6		29	Iosias warre rashly vndertaken against the Egyptians.	23	35
		7		30	He is slaine in Megiddo.	25
		8		31	The lamentations of Ieremie.		35
					Ioachas is King 3. moneths.	23	36
		9		1	He is led away into Egypt, and there dieth.	23
					Ioachim is made King by Neco, yeares 11.	23
					An exhortation to repentance.			26
					Iudgement against those which refuse.			26
					Hereupon Ieremie is taken.			26
					Ahikam defendeth him from danger.			26
					Ioachim killeth Vriah.			26
					Ieremie is put to silence.			26
				2	The rule of Nebuchadnezzar ouer the nations is foretold.			27
					{Ieremie perswadeth to yeeld.			27
					{The destruction of the King is fore-tolde.			27
20	2703	34	0
		1		3	Ieremie is commanded to write his prophesies in a booke.			36
		2		4 1	He fore-telleth the 70. yeares of captiuity.			25
					The anger of God against the nations is declared.			46
					He inditeth his prophesies to Baruc.			36
					Baruc being afraid, is comforted.			45

The

Apost.	World.	Iuda.	Assyr.			Kin.2.	Chr.2.	Ier.	Ezec.
					The booke is read before the King and the people.		36
					The King cutteth the booke and burneth it.		36
					Ieremie being sought for is hidden.		36
					He is bidden againe to write the prophesie.		36
					Ioachim is made tributary to Nebuchadnezzar, and dieth.	24	36
					The example of the Recabites.		35		Dan.
		3	5	2	Daniel with his fellowes are brought into Babilon.			1
		4	6	3	They are taught the learning of the Chaldeans 3. yeares.			1
		5	7	4	They will not eate the kings meate.			1
		6	8	5	Daniel and his fellowes are brought before the King.			1
		7	9	6	Nebuchadnezzar forgetteth his dreame.			2
		8	10	7	The Chaldeans are commanded to expound it.			2
					They not being able to expound it, are slaine.			2
					Daniel telleth it and expoundeth it.			2
					He is honoured by the King.			2
		9	11	8	Ioakim is taken by Nebuchadnezzar.		22
					He is bound and carried away to Babilon.		36
					He dieth in his iourney, and is left vnburied.		22
					Ioachim was King one moneth.
					They consent to Ieremie who perswadeth to yeeld.	24
					He, Ezechiel, and Mordecai are carried away captiue.
30	3803	35	0	1 9	Zidkias king of Iudah, yeares 11.	24
		1	2	10	Ieremy comforteth the captiues.		29
		2	3	11	The fauour of God is promised to Ioachim being banished.		24
					The destruction of Zidkias is denounced.		24
		3	4	12	Hananiah resisteth Ieremy.		28
					He dieth the same yeare.		28
					Zidkias is constrained to goe to Babylon.		36
					The booke of the destruction of Babylon is sent thither by Seraiah.		51
		4	5	13	The vision of Ezechiel.				1
					He is commaunded to eate the booke.				3
					He is confirmed by another vision.				3
					The siege of Ierusalem is pourtrayed in a brick.				4
					The destruction of it is signed by haires.				5
					The desolation of the Land is fore-tolde.				6
					He foresheweth the griefe of the godly.				6
					The sudden destruction of Israel.				7
		5	6	14	The idolatry of Israel is declared in a vision.				8
					They that shall be saued are marked with the letter Tau.				9
					The captiuity of Zidkias and his followers is denounced.				12
					A Sermon against false Prophets.				13
					The parable of the vine.				15
					The promise of Christ.				17
					The wicked prouerb is confuted.				18
					A serious exhortation to repentance.				18
					A lamentation is prescribed for the Iewes.				19
		6	7	15	A punishment for their sinnes is fore-tolde.				20
					Comfort for the penitent.				20
					The destruction of Zidkias is fore-shewen.				21
					The kingdome is to be restored by Christ.				23
					The destruction of the Ammonites by the Chaldes.				21
					Iudgement is giuen against Hierusalem.				22
					The sisters Ahala, and Aholiba.				23
		7	8	16	The parable of a seething potte.				24
		8	9	17	Ezechiels wife dying, is not to be lamented.				24
					The word of the Lord against Ammon.				25
					Zidkiah denying the tribute, the city is besieged.		29
					He asketh counsell of the Prophet.		21
					Pestilence, famine, and ruine is threatned.		21
					Ieremiah perswadeth to yeeld.		21
					He is bidden to pray for the safetie of the people.		37
		9	10	18	Zidkias ioyneth himselfe to the Egyptians.		37
					The siege is raised for a time.		37

									32	Dan.
							Ieremiah buyeth a field in Anathoth.		32	Eze.
							The restitution of the commonwealth is promised.		37		Hell.
							Ieremiah fleeing, is taken and cast into prison.
							The plague and famine inuade the city.
							The word of the Lord against Pharaoh.			29
							Ebdemolec deliuereth Ieremiah.		38
							The iudgement against Iudeah is repeated.		38
40							Zidkiah prepareth to flee.		39
							In his flight he falleth into his enemies hands.		39
The	390	3360	11	19			Hierusalem is taken.	25	36
yeares of	1	1		20			Zidkiahs sonnes are slaine before his eyes.		39
captui-	2	2		21			His owne eyes are put out, and he is brought to Babel.		39
ty. 70.	3	3		22			He dieth in prison.		39
							Nabuzardan returning, burneth the city, 4.d.	25	36	52
							The Temple is burnt.			39
							Nabuzardan carrieth away 832. Iewes.			39
							Ieremiah is suffered to tarry in his countrey.			39
							Godoliah is slaine by Ismael.			41
							Iochanan putteth Ismael to flight.			41
							The Israelites passe into Egypt.			42
							Ieremiah dissuading them, is taken away.
							A lamentation for Pharaoh.				32
							Of the duty of Pastours.				33
							Against Pastours that feed themselues.				34
							A promise of deliuerance by the Messias.				34
							The word of the Lord against mount Seir.				35
							Comfort on the mountaines of Israel.				36
							The drie bones are made aliue.				37
							Two sticks are vnited in the hand of the Prophet.				37
							The word of the Lord against Gog, and Magog.				39
							The men of Tyre reioyce for the desolation of Ierusalem.				26
							Their destruction is therefore threatned.				26
							Ieremiah foretelleth the ouerthrow of diuers nations.			51
	4	4		23			Nabuzardan carrieth 745. Iewes to Babylon.			52
							Nabuchadnezar commands his Image to be worshipped.				3
							Daniel his fellowes obey not.				3
							They are cast into the hot furnace.				3
							They being not hurt, are called out by the King.				3
		5		24
		6		25
		7		26
		8		27
		9		28
	10	3370		29
		1		30
		2		31
		3		32			A vision of the restauration of the city and temple.				40
		4		33	1		Astiages King of the Medes yeares 35.
		5		34			The destruction of the Egyptians by the Babylonians.				29
		6		35	2		Assuerus deposeth Vasti.				1
		7		36	3		Nabuchadnezzar groweth proud.			4
		8		37	4		He is astonished with the dreame of cutting down the tree.			4
					5		The Chaldeans cannot expound it, but Daniel doth.			4
		9		38	6		Nebuchadnezzar is to be thrust out among beasts.			4
	20	3380		39	7		Hester is Queene of Persia.				2
		2		41
		3		42			Nebuchadnezzar acknowledging God, is restored.			4
		4		43			He proclaimeth the benefits of God.			4
		5		1			Euilmerodach is King of Babylon yeares 29.
		6		2			Ieconias is freed after 37. yeares.	25		52
		7		3			Hamans tyranie against the Iewes.				3
		8		4			The fast of Hester.				4
		9		5			Mordocheus is brought forth and honoured.				5
	30	3390		6	17		Haman is hanged.				7
		1		7			The feast of Purim.				9
		2		8

		3	9								Ezra.
		4	10
		5	11
		6	12
		7	13
		8	14
		9	15
	40	3400	16		27
		1	17
		2	18
		3	19
		4	20
		5	21
		6	22
		7	23
		8	24		35
		9	25			1	Darius Medus. 24.				Chron. 2
	50	3410	26
		1	27			2	The vision of the foure beasts.				7
		2	28				The foure kingdomes that should rule ouer Iudea.				7
		3	29				Antiochus Epiph. will ouerthrow all the other.				7
		4	1				Beltashar King of Babylon, yeares 17.
		5	2				The vision of the Ram and the Goat.				8
		6	3				The estates of Media, Persia, and Grecia.				8
		7	4				The miserie that Antiochus would bring on the Iewes.				8
		8	5				A time is appointed for their comfort.				8
		9	6
	60	3420	7		12
		1	8
		2	9
		3	10
		4	11
		5	12				Beltashar inuiteth his nobles to a banquet.				5
		6	13				He drinkes in the vessels of Gods house.				5
		7	14				He reprocheth God.				5
		8	15				A hand is seene writing on the wall.				5
		9	16				Daniel expoundeth the writing.				5
From	70	3430	17		22		The next night he is slaine.				5
their re-				Per-
turne to				sians.
the full		1	1	24	23		Cyrus King of Persia is King of Babel, yeares 7.
restoring							Darius Medus raigneth with Cyrus yeares 2.
of the							Daniel prayeth for propheticall reuelation.				9
commō-							His prayer and confession.				9
wealth, is							The reuelation of the comming of Christ.				9
about							The returne from Babylon is granted by Cyrus.				36
yeares 80.							Zorobabel is the first captaine of the voyage.				1
							Iosua the high Priest goeth with him.				3
							Beeing returned they offer Sacrifice.				3
							The feast of Tabernacles is celebrated.				3
							The foundation of the Temple is laid.				3
							The building thereof is hindred.				4
							The kingdome of the Medes is translated to the Persians.				4
		2	2	25	24		Daniel is aduanced by Darius Medus.				5
							The nobles goe about to murder him.				6
							For 30. daies none must pray but to the King.				6
							Daniel doth not obey the edict.				6
							He is cast into the Lyons denne.				6
							He is saued, and his accusers are deuoured.				6
							An edict for the worship of God.				6
							Daniel bewaileth the calamitie of the Iewes.				10
		3	3	26			Their estate vnder the Persians, Grecians, and Seleucians.				10
							The wickednesse of Antiochus is foreshewne.				11
							The times of the presages are set downe.				12
							The death of Daniel.				12

Haggeus.

Cambises 2. King of the Persians, yeares 7. moneths 5.

Rhesa is borne. Luk. 3.
Darius Histaspis 3. King of Persia, yeares 36.
Their negligence in building the Temple.
Hagge exhorteth them to plie the worke.
The glorie of the second house is promised.
The promise of good successe.
A promise of Peace, and of the Kingdome of Christ.
Darius renueth the commandement of Cyrus.

Zacharias.

Zacharias exhorteth the people to repentance.
A vision concerning the providence of God ouer his Church.
The destruction of Babylon is foretold.
The vniuersall kingdome of Christ in his Church.
The fasting of the Iewes is reproued.
A prophesie of the kingdome of Christ.
Destruction is threatned against the impenitent.

The building of the Temple is hindred.
Dedication thereof.
The keeping of the feast of vnleauened bread.

Ianna is borne. Luk. 3.
Xerxes is the fourth king of the Persians, yeares 21.

Weekes.

Artaxerxes Longimanus 5. King of Persia, yeares 40.
Iuda is borne. Luk. 3.
Ezra intendeth a iourney to Ierusalem.
The fast of the people.
The vessels are put into the Temple.
The Edicts of the King are published.
The people are called together in Hierusalem.
They cleanse themselues from strangers.
The beginning of the 70. weekes.

Nehem.

The miserie of the Iewes is declared to Nehemiah.
He is sent to Ierusalem to reedifie the walles.
He buildeth walles and streetes.
Ezra readeth the booke of the law to the people.
The next day he expoundeth it to the Princes.
The couenant with God is renewed.
Ioseph is borne. Luk. 3.

Nehemiah departeth from Babylon.

He is chiefe ame among the Iewes.
He correcteth the Sabbath-breakers.
The wedding with outlandish women.

Darius Nothus yeares 16.

Semei is borne. Luk. 3.

Artaxerxes Mnemon 43.

Matthias is borne. Luk. 3.

Ochus 23

Maath is borne. Luk. 3.

Arses 3.

Darius Arsames 6.

The Monarchie of Alexander the great, yeares 6. Dan. 10. 20.

Nagge is borne. Luk. 3.

Cut of the Monarchie of Alexander arose 4. kingdomes: the Syrian, Egyptian, Asian, and Macedonian. Dan. 11. 4.

Esiis borne. Luk. 3.

	3	7			5	2
	4	8			6	3
	5	9		527.		4
	6	3670			1	5
23	7	1			2	6
	1	2			3	7
	2	3			4	8
	3	4			5	9
	4	5			6	3740
	5	6		337	1	1
	6	7			2	2
24	7	8			3	3
	1	9			4	4	Mattathias is borne. Luk. 3.
	2	3680			5	5
	3	1			6	6
	4	2			7	7
	5	3		347		8
	6	4			1	9
25	7	5			2	3750
	1	6			3	1
	2	7			4	2
	3	8			5	3
	4	9			6	4
	5	3690	Nahum is borne. Luk. 3.	357		5
	6	1			1	6
26	7	2			2	7
	1	3			3	8
	2	4			4	9
	3	5			5	3760
	4	6			6	1
	5	7		367		2
	6	8			1	3
27	7	9			2	4
	1	3700			3	5
	2	1			4	6
	3	2			5	7
	4	3			6	8
	5	4		377		9
	6	5			1	3770	Iosephis borne Luk. 3.
28	7	6			2	1
	1	7			3	2
	2	8			4	3
	3	9			5	4
	4	3710			6	5
	5	1		387		6
	6	2			1	7
29	7	3			2	8
	1	4			3	9
	2	5			4	3780
	3	6			5	1
	4	7			6	2
	5	8		397		3
	6	9			1	4
30	7	3720	Amos is borne. Luk. 3.		2	5
	1	1			3	6
	2	2			4	7
	3	3			5	8
	4	4			6	9
	5	5		407		3790
	6	6			1	1
31	7	7			2	2
	1	8			3	3
	2	9			4	4
	3	3730			5	5
	4	1			6	6

41	7	7			2	2
	1	8			3	3
	2	9			4	4
	3	3800	Ianna is borne. Luk. 3.		5	5
	4	1			6	6
	5	2		517		7
	6	3			1	8
42	7	4			2	9
	1	5			3	3870
	2	6			4	1
	3	7			5	2
	4	8			6	3
	5	9		527		4
	6	3810			1	5
43	7	1			2	6
	1	2			3	7
	2	3			4	8
	3	4			5	9
	4	5			6	3880
	5	6		537		1	Matthat is borne, Luk. 3.
	6	7			1	2
44	7	8			2	3
	1	9			3	4
	2	3820			4	5
	3	1			5	6
	4	2			6	7
	5	3	Melchi is borne. Luk. 3.	547		8
	6	4			1	9
45	7	5			2	3890
	1	6			3	1
	2	7			4	2
	3	8			5	3
	4	9			6	4
	5	3830		557		5
	6	1			1	6
46	7	2			2	7
	1	3			3	8
	2	4			4	9
	3	5			5	3900
	4	6			6	1
	5	7		567		2
	6	8			1	3
47	7	9			2	4
	1	3840			3	5
	2	1			4	6
	3	2			5	7
	4	3			6	8
	5	4		577		9
	6	5			1	3910
48	7	6			2	1
	1	7			3	2
	2	8			4	3
	3	9			5	4
	4	3850	Leui is borne Luk. 3.		6	5
	5	1		587		6
	6	2			1	7
49	7	3			2	8	Eli is born, Luk. 3.
	1	4			3	9
	2	5			4	3920
	3	6			5	1	1 Iulius Cæsar is by the Senate constituted Emperour of Rome. yeares
	4	7			6	2	2
	5	8		597		3	35.
	6	9			1	4	4
50	7	3860			2	5	5
	1	1			3	6

				The second Passeouer.	6			5
				The lame is healed at the Poole Bethesda.				5
				The Iewes contend with him about the Sabbath.				5
				Christ preacheth in Ierusalem.				5
				His Disciples pull the eares of corne on the 2. Sabbath.	6	12	2
				His doctrine of the Sabbath.	6	12	2
				The healing of the withered hand.	6	12	3
				The counsell of Herod for the killing of Christ.	6	12	3
				He goeth aside to the sea of Galile.	6	12	3
				He goeth vp into a mountaine.	6		3
				He chuseth twelue Disciples.	6		3
				He commeth downe from the mountaine to the people.	6
				Being pressed with them againe he goeth vp to the mount.		5
				He preacheth from the mount to the people.	6	5
				Being come downe he healeth a Leper.		3
				The Centurions seruant is cured in Capernaum.	7	3
				The widdowes sonne is raised at the gate of Naim.	7
				Iohn sendeth to Christ.	7
				Christs sermon, and his testimony of Iohn.	7	11
				A harlot being conuerted, annointeth Christ.	7	11
				The women minister to Christ while he preacheth.	8
				Christ returneth to Capernaum.		12	3
				By his word he casteth out diuels.		12	3
				They blaspheme Christ for casting out diuels.		12
				The signe of Ionas is promised.		12
				The mother and brethren of Christ.		12
				Going forth to the sea, he vttereth eight Parables.	8	13	4
				He passeth ouer to the Gadarens.	8		4
				He rebuketh the sea and the windes.	8		4
				He healeth two possessed with diuels.	8		5
				The hogges of the Gadarens perish.	8	8	5
				The people receiue him at Gennesareth.	8		5
				He teacheth the multitude by the sea side.			2
				Matthew maketh Christ a feast.	8	9	2
				A woman is healed of her bloody issue.	8	9	2
				The daughter of Iairus is raised from death.	8	9	2
				Two blinde men are cured, and one possessed.		9
				Christ is despised in Nazareth.		13	6
		17		He sendeth his twelue Disciples to preach.	9	10	6
				The beheading of Iohn Baptist.	9	14
6	9		32	Christ goeth to the further side of Iordane.	9	14	6
				Herod his opinion of Christ.	9	14
				Christs Disciples returne vnto him.	9	14	6
				He goeth to the further side of the sea of Galile.	9
				His sermon in Capernaum concerning the bread of life.				6
				The third Passeouer.
				They take counsell to kill Christ.				7
				His Sermon in Galile concerning traditions.		15	7
				He goeth aside vnto the borders of Tyre and Sydon.		15	7
				The womans daughter of Syrophenissa is cured.		15	7
				In the way to Decapolis he cureth the dumb and deafe.			7
				Many sicke are healed in the mountaine.
				He feedeth 4000. with seauen loaues.		15	8
				He goeth into the borders of Magdala.		15	8
				The Pharises aske a signe.		15	8
				In Bethsaida the blinde is cured.			8
				The confession of Peter in Cesarea.	9	16	8
				The transfiguration of Christ in mount Tabor.	9	17	9
				The healing of the Lunatike.	9	17	9
				Christ teacheth and healeth in Galile.	9	17	9
				The doctrine of his death.	9	17	9
				He payeth tribute in Capernaum	9	17	9
				He checketh the pride of his Disciples.	9	18	9
				The Samaritanes receiue him not.	9
				He goeth backe into Galile.	9

Some

				Some offer themselues to be Christs Disciples.	9
				Christ secretly goeth vp to the feast.				7
				He teacheth openly in the middle of the feast.				7
				On the 8. day he preacheth of the water of life.				7
				He deliuereth the Adulteresse.				8
				The Iewes would stone Christ.				8
				The blinde is healed.				9
				His Sermon of the Shepheard.				10
				Iesus confesseth himselfe to be the Messias.				10
				The sending forth of 70. Disciples.	10
				Christ teacheth the multitude in Bethabara.				10
				Beeing come thence, hee propoundeth the Parable of the man which fell among theeues.	10
				Christ goeth aside to pray.	11
				He teacheth a forme of prayer.	11	6
				He driueth out a diuell.	11
				He eateth with a Pharise.	11
				He refuseth the office of a Iudge.	12
				The murther of the Galileans is tolde him.	13
				He healeth the crooked woman.	13
				Herod would kill Christ.	13
				One sicke of the dropsie in a Pharises house is healed.	14
				The Parable of the great Supper.	14
				The Parable of the towar and warre.	14
				Sinners come vnto Christ.	15
				Three Parables are spoken to the Pharises.	15
				The Parable of the vniust steward.	16
				The example of Diues and Lazarus.	16
				To auoid occasions of offence.	17
				Ten Lepers are cured.	17
				He vttereth two Parables.	18
			18	He returneth into the borders of Iudea.		19
				The reformation of diuorcement.	18	19	10
				The blessing of little children.	18	19	10
				Lazarus falleth sicke.				11
		4000	33	Christ beeing sent for, doth not presently come.				11
				A Prince of the Iewes is reprehended.	18	19	10
				The workemen in the vineyard.		20	10
				Christ foretelleth his passion.		20	10
				The sonnes of Zebede are rebuked.	18	20	10
				The blinde man by the way is healed.	18
				Christ inuiteth himselfe to Zacheus.	19	20	10
				As he went from Iericho he healeth two blinde.		20	10
				Lazarus is raised from the graue.				11
				Christ goeth into Ephraim.				11
				Returning, he stayeth in Bethania.				11
				Lazarus his sisters prouide a supper.				12
				Marie annointeth Christs feete.				12
				Whereupon Iudas findeth fault.				12
				They come about Christ to see him.				12
				Christs entrance into Hierusalem.	19	21
				The money-changers are cast out of the Temple.	19	21
				He tarrieth all night in Bethania.		21
				Returning to Hierusalem, he curseth the fig-tree.			11
				Againe, he casteth out the money-changers.			11
				At euen againe he goeth out of the city.			11
				As they returne, they see the fig-tree dried vp.			11
				He answereth the Pharises in the Temple.	20	21
				The question concerning the paying tribute.	20	22
				The Sadduces are put downe.	20	22
				The summe of the Law.		22
				Christ whose Sonne he is.		22
				He inueieth against the Scribes and Pharises.		23
				The widdow offers, Christ looking on.	21		12
				The ouerthrow of the Temple and city is foreshewen.	21	24

			The Parable of the 10. Virgins.			25
			The Sermon of the day of Iudgement.			25
			Iudas bargaineth with the Phariſes.			26
			Chriſt is annointed in the houſe of Simeon.			26
			The Apoſtles grudge at it.			26	14
		1/31	The Diſciples are ſent to prepare the Paſſeouer.		22	26	14
70	7
		3/4	The Paſſeouer eaten at euen.		22	26	14
		5/6	The inſtitution of the Lords day.		22	26	14
		7	Chriſt waſheth his Diſciples feet.					13
		8	The traytour is deſigned.		22	26	14	13
			The Apoſtles contend for ſuperiority.		22			13
		1	Chriſt comforteth his ſorrowfull Diſciples.					13
			He exhorteth them to loue.					13
			Peters deniall is foretolde him.					13
			Chriſt comforteth his Diſciples in the dining chamber.					14
			He exhorteth them to conſtancie vnder the croſſe.					15
			To loue: & he ſhewes the hatred of the world to the Church					16
			The profit of Chriſts departure.					16
			Chriſt his prayer for the Church.					17
		9	Hauing ſung a Pſalme, they goe out into mount Oliuet.		22	26	14	18
			He foreſheweth how the Apoſtles ſhould be offended.		22	26	14	18
		10	Chriſt prayeth in the garden.		22	26	14
			He ſweateth blood.		22	26
		11	Chriſt is taken, his Diſciples flee.		22	26	14	18
		12	He is brought to Annas, and then to Caiphas.		22	26	14	18
		1	Peter denieth him.		22	26	14	18
			They enquire of his Diſciples and his doctrine.
		2	Peters deniall and his repentance.		22	26	14	18
		3	Falſe witneſſes are brought forth.
			Chriſt is condemned by Caiphas of hereſie.			26	14
		4	Chriſt is ſpitted on, buffered, and mocked.		22	26	14
		6	Chriſt is condemned by the aſſembly.		23	27	15
			After this he is brought to Pilate.
			The deſperate death of Iudas.			27
		7	Chriſt is accuſed of ſedition before Pilate.		23	27	15	18
		8	Herod mocketh him.		23
		9	Barrabas is preferred before Chriſt.		23	27	15	18
			He is ſcourged and condemned to the croſſe.			27	15	19
		10	He is brought to the place of execution.		23	27	15	19
6		11	Chriſt is crucified.		23	27	15	19
			He prayeth for his enemies.		23	27	15	19
			His garments are deuided.		23	27	15	19
		12	He commendeth his mother to a Diſciple.					19
			The people blaſpheme Chriſt.		23	27	15
		1	The conuerſion of the theefe vpon the croſſe.		23
		2	Darkneſſe is ouer all Iudea.		23	27	15	19
		3	He crieth out being about to yeeld vp the ghoſt.		23	27	15
			The vaile of the Temple is rent.		23	27	15
			The dead ariſing appeare to many.		23	27	15
			Chriſts ſide is pierced with a ſpeare.					19
		4	He is buried without enbalming.		23	27	15	19
			Keepers are ſet about the ſepulchre.			27
			The women come to annoint Chriſt the 1. day of the week.			28	16
			Magdalen ſeeth the ſtone rolled away.		24	28	16	20
			The Angel at the ſepulcher telleth of Chriſts reſurrection.		24	28	16	20
			Peter and Iohn ſee the ſepulchre empty.					20
			Magdalen ſeeth Chriſt in the garden.			28	16	20
			He appeareth to 2. Diſciples as they were going to Emaus.		24
			He commeth in to his Diſciples the dores being ſhut.		24	28	16	20
			He appeareth to his Diſciples being on fiſhing.					21
			He foretelleth Saint Peters death.					21
			The apoſtolicall commiſſion is graunted.			28	16
			He aſcendeth locally into heauen.		24		16	1
			The election of Matthias into the place of Iudas.					1

The

			The ſending of the Holy Ghoſt.					2
			The iudgement of the miracles of the Holy Ghoſt.					2
			The Sermon of Peter whereby 3000. were conuerted.					3
			Peter healeth the lame man.
			The ſecond Sermon of Peter whereby 5000 were conuerted.					3
			The perſecution of the Apoſtles begun in Hieruſalem.					4
			The Apoſtles are forbidden to preach Chriſt.					4
			They reioyce for their perſecution.					4
			The puniſhment of Ananias and Saphira.					5
		19	The ſecond perſecution of the Apoſtles.					5
			Peter preacheth before the aſſemblie of the Prieſts.					5
1		34	The election of Deacons.					6
			Stephen his contention with the Iewes.					6
			His defence and Martyrdome.					7
			Saul perſecuteth the Church at Hieruſalem.					8
			Hence all was ſcattered except the Apoſtles.					8
			Saul in the way to Damaſcus is made Paul.					9
			Ananias Baptizeth him at Damaſcus.					9
		20	At Damaſcus he preacheth the Goſpel.					9
2		35 1	Thence he goeth into Arabia.					1
			There he preacheth the ſpace of three yeares.					1
			Philip conuerteth Samaria.					8
			The wickednes of Simon Magus.					8
			The conuerſion of the Ethiopian Eunuch.					8
3		21 36 2	Paul returneth from Arabia to Damaſcus.					9 1
4		22 37 3	He is let downe through the wall in a basket.					9
			He abideth with Peter at Ieruſalem fifteene dayes.					9 1
			Thence through Ceſarea he commeth to Tarſus.					9
			Caligula is Emperour yeares 4.
5	1	2 3 38 4	Peter healeth A Eneas of the paſſie.					9
			At Ioppa he raiſeth Tabitha which was dead.					9
6	2	39 5	The vision and conuerſion of Cornelius.					10
			Peter Baptiſeth him and his familie.					10
7	3	40 6	Peter returneth to Ieruſalem.					11
			He excuſeth himſelfe for Cornelius.					11
			At Antiochia they are firſt called Chriſtians.					11
			Barnabas is ſent to confirme them.					11
			The Goſpel of Saint Matthew is written.					11
			Paul preacheth at Antiochia.					11
8	4	41 7	Agabus foretelleth the famine.					11
			Claudius Emperour yeares 14.
9		1 42 8	Almes ſent to Ieruſalem by the hands of Paul and Barnabas.					11
			Herod killeth Iames the Apoſtle.					12
40 10		2 43 9	Peter is caſt into priſon.					12
			He is let out by an Angel.					12
			Paul and Barnabas returne to Antiochia.					12
			Paul is ſet apart to teach the Gentiles.					13
			Sergius Paulus is conuerted.					13
			Elymas the ſorcerer is ſtroken blind.					13
			Pauls Sermon concerning the Adoption of the Gentiles.					13
1	2	44 10	Paul and Barnabas tarrie at Iconium.					14
2	3	45 11	Being driuen from Iconium they come to Lyſtra.					14
			At Lyſtra Paul healeth the lame.					14
			He is ſtoned out and goeth to Derbe.					14
3	4	45 12	Being returned he ſtrengtheneth the Diſciples.					14 2
4	5	47 13	They preach in Perga.					15
5	6	48 14	A Councel of the Apoſtles in Ieruſalem.					15
			There was Paul and Barnabas.					15
			Who were ſent with Letters to the Synode of Antiochia.					2
			Paul reſiſteth Peter to his face.
6	7	49 15	Paul and Silas goe through Syria.					15
			He circumciſeth Timothie at Lyſtra.					16
7	8	50 16	At Philippos Paul was beaten with rods.					16
			The viſion of the man of Macedonia.					16
			The conuerſion of Lidia, and driuing out of deuils.					16

The

World.	Rom.	Christ.	Paul.			Act.	Gal.
				The Thessalonians persecute Paul.	17
				Areopagita is conuerted at Athens.	17
				Paul goeth to Corinth, where he was a yeare and 6. moneths.	18		Thess. 1.
				The praise of the Thessalonians.		1
				Timotheus is sent vnto them.		3
				The resurrection is plainly described.		4
				Curious inquisition of Christs comming.		5
							II.
				Apostasie will bee before the last day.		2
				The mysterie of iniquitie begunne in Pauls time.		2
				Which should bee reuealed when the Empire should bee put downe.		2
8		9	51	17 Paul goeth from Corinth to Syria with Aquila and Priscilla.	18
				At the Passeouer he saluteth the Church of Ierusalem.	18
				The diligence of Apollo in teaching.	18
				From Antiochia Paul goeth to Laodicea.	18		Timoth. 1.
				Paul writeth to Timothie from Phrigia.		1
				He prescribeth a gouernement for the Church.		2
						3
9		10	52	18 Paul teacheth two yeares at Ephesus.	19		Cor. 1.
4020		11	53	19 His fight with the beasts there.		15
1		12	54	20 There the Corinthians are warned of contentions, Incest, whoring strife.		2 5.
				The institution of the Lords Supper is repeated.		11
				The confirmation of the resurrection.		15
2		13	55	21 Paul goeth from Ephesus to Macedonia.	19
				The 2 to the Corinthians is written from Philippos.
				The Epistle to the Romanes is written.
				The 1. of Peter.
				Nero is Emperour 14. yeares.
3		1	56	22 Eutichus is reuiued by Paul.	20
				Paul preacheth to the Elders of Ephesus.	20
				His iourney to Ierusalem.	21
				Agabus prophecieth.	21
				Paul is held captiue in Ierusalem.	21
				He is brought before Felix.	23
				His answere for himselfe.	22
				The high Priest commandeth him to be smitten.	23
				His comfort in Christ.	23
				The conspiracie of the Iewes against him.	23
4		2	57	23 Paul is 2. yeares prisoner in Cesarea.	24
				He appealeth to Cesar.	25
5		3	58	24 The Epicurisme of Festus.	26
				Paul saileth to Rome.	27
				He shaketh the viper from his hand.	28
				He healeth the father of Publius.	28
6		4	59	25 Paul teacheth two yeares at Rome.	28
				He writeth to the Galathians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, and to Philemon.			Tim. 2.
7		5	60	26 All forsake Paul at Rome.		4
8		6	1	27 He is deliuered from the mouth of the Lyon.		4
4030				He writeth to Titus.
9		8	6	Paul is againe brought afore Nero.		4
4040		14	70	36 He writeth his 2. Epistle to Timothie.
				37 He is beheaded.
		Christ.	Nations.	Satan			Reuela.
				A woman about to be brought to bed.			12
				A male childe is borne.			12
				The Dragon practiseth against him.			12
				Michael ouerthroweth the Dragon.			12
4062		95	1	1 Iohn is in the Ile of Pathmos.			1
				The woman fleeth into the desert.			12
4162		195	100	100 The Churches of Asia are instructed.			2
4262		295	200	200 Satan is bound 1000 yeares.			20

World.	Christ.	Nations.	Satan.		Reuela.
4362	395	300	300	Two Prophets preach cloathed in sackecloth.	11
4462	495	400	400	The beast with seuen heads persecuteth the Church and the Prophets.	13
4562	595	500	500		13
4662	695	600	600	Another beast helpeth the first beast.	13
4762	795	700	700	The seales are opened, slaughter, famine, plague, &c.	6.7
4862	895	800	800	The horsemen that destroy mankind.	9
4962	995	900	900	Christ defendeth his Church in deede and word.	14
5062	1095	1000		Iudgement against his enemies.	15
5162	1195	1100	1000	Satan is loosed.	20
5262	1295	1200		The 2. Prophet are slaine.	11
5322	1355	1260		The beast and the whore are ouercome.	17
				The conquest ouer the Dragon and death.	20
				The first resurrection.	20
				The last iudgement.	20
				The glorie of the Saints.	21
					22

FINIS.

An Alphabeticall Table of the chiefe points and Questions handled in this Second Volume: the first number notes the Page, the second the Colume.

A

Abias workes are counterfeit, 490.2.b.
Abnegation of our selues, 62.1.d. 207.1.d.
Abraham when hee was borne, 680.2.d.
Abrahams faith what it was, 207.2.c. how he was a publike person, 243.2.b. 244.2.c. His seede twofold, 229.2.b. 248.1.d. whether they were before Christ, 245.1.d. The true marke of the child of Abraham, 229.2.d.
Acception of persons is not with God, 194.1.d all men should follow God herein, 194.2.a wherein we ought not to accept persons, 194.2.b.
Accessaries many wayes, 197.2.d.
Accursed, what it is, 168. 1.a. and who are, 168.1.b.
Achan: why the people and his posteritie were plagued for his sinne, 374.2.b.
Acknowledgement of God aright 264 2.d.
Actions priuate and publike distinguished, 441.2.d.
Adam fell by Gods fore-knowledge and decree, 613.2.a. the cause of it was in man not in God, 606.2.c. reasons to proue it, 613.2.d. obiections against it answered, 615.1.d.&c. whether it was necessarie and how, 619.2.b. Gods permission of it, 606.1.c.
Adoption, whence it springs, 265.1.c. 276.2.a two actions of God in our Adoption, 253.1.d. faith is the internall meanes thereof, 254.2.a. Baptisme the outward meanes, 255.1.d. Excellencie of Adoption, 253.1.d. benefits from it, 268. 1.b. it giues assurance of saluation, 20.1.d.
How to be assured of it, 18.2.d. 20.2.b. 44.1.c. 278.2.b. All true professors ought to beleeue it, 253.2.c. Comforts arising from it, 253.2.d. Duties from Adoption, 254 1.b. Doubts of Adoption answered, 255.2.c.
Adoration, 62.1.c. foure vertues therein, 62.2.a. Adoration described, 61.1.d. 84.1.c. kindes of it, religious and ciuill, 84.1.c. To what thing Adoration is due, 84.1.c. 84.2.b. Religious Adoration due onely to the true God, 84.2.c. Adoration due to Angels. 85.2.a to men, 85.1.b. to Saints departed, 85.2.d. Adoring the vnreasonable creature vnlawfull, 86 1.a. of Adoration of the Sacrament, 86.1.a. 564 1.b. of Images, 86.1.b.
Adulterie described, 330. 1. b. greatnesse of this sinne, 330.1.c. punishment of it, 252 1.c.
Adulterous thoughts, 468.2.d.
Aethiopian Masse falsely ascribed to Saint Matthew, 489.1.c.
Affections naturall must be mortified and ruled by the word, 176 1.d.
Afflictions must not seeme strange vnto vs, 289 2.b. we must suffer it for the trueth, 427.1.d. we must liue in affliction by faith, 28 2.c. fiue grounds of comfort in affliction, 29.2.c. Seuen fruits of affliction, 30 2.c.
Agar figured Sina two wayes, 298 1.b.
Agar figured Ierusalem two wayes, 298. 1.c.
Aged persons dutie, 225.2.a.
All taken indefinitely for many, 59.1.d. 231 1.c. 624.1.a. 657.2.b. taken collectiuely and distributiuely, 623.2.c.
All-Saints-day, when made a feast, 502.1.c.
Alchimists censured, 227.1.d.
Alexanders ambitious practise when he left Iudea, 368 1.d. his Monarchie, 717.
Allegorie; what it is, 297.2.d. how expounded, 660 1.a. how vsed, 664.1.a.
Almes: who must giue Almes, 143.2.a. who are exempted from giuing, 144.1.a. to whom Almes must bee giuen, 144.2.a. Almes must be giuen with putting difference, 145.1.d.
How much releefe must euery man giue, 145.2.c. of Church Almes, 146.1.b. How many wayes may a man giue Almes, 146. 1.d. How Almes giuen become a good worke, 146.2.b. False fruits of Almes in merit and satisfaction, 147.1.b. Right fruit of giuing Almes, 147.2.c. motiues to Almesgiuing. 198 1.d. Why men are slacke herein, 198.2.b.
Altar: how the Communion Table is called an Altar, 553.1.b.
Alwayes for often or long, 657.2.d.
Ambrose: his counterfeite workes, 495. 2.b.
Amendment of life, whereon grounded, 163.2.d.
Anabaptists oppugning Magistrates answered: See Magistrates Oppugning the vocall ministerie by man answered, 380. 1.d.
Analogie of faith: what it is. 651.2.d.
Anastasius erronicus, 504.2.a.
Anathema what it is, 168. 1. a. how the Church vseth it, 168 1.b.
Andreas Cretensis his forged Orations, 502. 2.d.
Andrewes Passion and Masse forged, 489. 1.d.

Angels how to be adored, 85.1.a. of the orders of Angels, 602.1.b.
Anger; whether any wayes lawfull, 335.1.c. when it is a vertue, 121.1.c. when it is vicious, 122.1.d. 335.1.d. remedie of vniust anger, 123.1.b. 335.1.d. causes of vniust anger, 124.1.c. fruits of vniust anger, 124.1.b.
Anselmes doubtfull workes, 504.2.d.
Anthropopathie, 656.1.a.
Antichrist: Fathers doubtfull about him, 587.2.a.
Anticipation, 659 2.d. 678.1.c.
Antiquitie, 599.2.a.
Antiquitie of doctrine approueable, 486.2.a. Papists plead Antiquity in vaine, 231 1.b. 302.1.c. 229.2.d.
Apocrypha bookes excluded the Canon of holy Scripture, 650.2.b. by the fathers, 508 1.a.
Apostacie or reuolt in religion is of diuers sorts, 165.1.c. causes of Apostacie, 174 2.d. 315.2.a. 463.1.c. fiue degrees of Apostacie, 300.1.a.
Apostles: their honour and authoritie, 290. 1 b. how they differ from ordinarie ministers, 159 2.b. 189.1.a. 185.1.c. 289.2.d. wherein they had immediate assistance, 193.2.b. 199.2.d. their doctrine is the immediate word of God, 159 2.c. fiue properties of false Apostles, 410.1.d.
Apostles constitutions Apocryphall, 489. 1.a.
Apostles function ceased with them, 159.2.d
Apparell: wherefore it was ordained, 137. 2.a. right vse thereof, 135.1.d. care for apparell must be moderate, 135.2 a. New fashions in apparell censured, 136. 1.a. & 2.d. Seuen rules of decencie in apparell, 136.1.c. rules for the wearing of Apparell, 137.2.a. how to make a Spirituall vse of it: 159 1.d. That man should not weare womans apparell, is more then Iudiciall, 136.1.c. 252.1.d. Whether costly and gorgious apparell may bee vsed, 134.2.a.
Appeales to Rome how made at the first, 583.2.c. 598 2.d. prohibited in England, till Henrie the second, 584.2.a. why made from Councels to the Bishop of Rome. 599.2 b.
Application of doctrine in preaching, 664. 2.d. the kindes thereof, 665.1.a. 668.2.b.
Application is of the nature of iustifying faith, 219.1 c. how to apply Christ with his benefits, 15.1.d. 164.1.a. 308.2.d. Papists slander vs herein, 308.2.c.
Apprehension of Christ by faith wherein it stands, 208.1.c. three grounds of it, 208. 1.d. Degrees of it, 208.2.d.
Approue: how to approue our workes to God, 370.2.d. Whether we may approue our selues, and our works to men, 371.1.a. cautions therein, 371.1.c.
Arabia where it is, 181 1.a
Arke; it figured Christ, 303.2.d.
Arnobius counterfeit bookes, 492.2.a.
Artaxerxes Longimanus his raigne, 716. and Artaxerxes Mnemon, 717.
Assuerus is Astiages, who maried Hester; his raigne, 682.2.d. 714.
Athanasius, his counterfeit workes, 494.1.a. his suspected workes, 494.2.d.
Atheisme in practise, 460.2.b. in iudgement 460. 2.d. examination of our selues touching thoughts of Atheisme, 461.2.d. punishment of Atheists, 461 2.c. Their opinion of fortune confuted, 389.2.d.
Augustines forged and suspected workes, 498. 2.a.

B

Backe-sliding in religion condemned, 285. 1.b. cause of it, 315.2.a.
Baptisme taken sixe wayes, 256. 1.d. phrases of Scripture touching Baptisme explained, 256.2.a. how we put on Christ in Baptisme, 256.2.a. matter of Baptisme, 256. 2.c. Signe of it, 256.2.c. Whether it should bee by dipping or sprinkling, 256. 2.c. Thing signified, 257.1.a. Analogie in Baptisme, 257.1.c. forme of Baptisme, 257. 1.b. what it is to Baptise into, or in the name of the Father, &c. 257.2.d. whether it may be administred in the name of God, or of Christ alone, 258.2.a. what is done in Baptisme, 258.1.a. foure ends of Baptisme, 258.2.b. It admits into the Church, but makes not true members of Christ, 191.2.b. It conferres not the first grace, but confirmes it, 204.1.d. Efficacie of Baptisme, 258.2.c. how farre it extends, 79.2.b. 258.2.c. what Papists teach hereof, 259.1.a. whether it abolish originall sinne, 259.2.a. How it confers grace, 269.1.d. Whether it imprint an indeleble Character, 261.1.d. 547.1.b. whether it be necessary to saluation, 74.1.a.204.1 c. How the Fathers held it necessarie, 547. 2.b. How it is necessarie, 74.1.b. 261.2.c. how not, 74.1.d. 261.2.d. Popish errour about the necessitie of Baptisme, 78.2.a. Whether outward Baptisme be a true note of the Church, 256.1.a. 302.2.b. who are to be Baptised, 263.1.c. Whether children of excommunicate persons, 264.1.d. 78. 1.a. Whether children borne in fornication, 79.1.d. Whether children of Turkes and Iewes, 263.2.d. whether children of professed Papists, 263.2. d. whether the children of wicked Christians, 264.1.a. Who may Baptise: whether lay persons, 262.1 c. The ministers duetie or action in Baptisme, 262.2.d. whether his intention be necessarie, 546.2.d. whether Baptisme by a wicked man, or an heretick be true Baptisme, 262.2.b. and by an vnpreaching minister, 262 2.c. how oft is to be administred, 264.1.c.

Where it is to bee administred, 264.1.d. 550.1.a. Vses of Baptisme, 79.2.c. 264.2.a. it bindes to holy life, 311.1.b. Whether sinne after Baptisme take away the whole benefit of it, 80. 2. b. Markes of inward Baptisme, 255.2.a. It must be laboured for, 256.1.b. How Baptisme is a signe of Adoption, 255.1.a.
Baruc held Apocriphall, 508.2.d.
Basils corrupted and counterfeit workes, 495 1.c.
Beare-baiting disallowed. 141.2.a.
Beare one anothers burdens: see Burdens.
Bede his Martyrologium suspected, 503.2.d.
Before God, the formes of an oath, 184.1.c. vnlawfull in common talke, 184.2.c.
Beggers of two sorts, 144.2.d. Iustlie beggers are not to bee releeued, 144 2.d. saue in case of necessitie, 145.1.a. going about to begge disallowed. 145. 1.b. Christ liued not by begging, 143.2.d.
Beleefe: see faith. Whether all be bound to beleeue their redemptiō, 625.1.d. The Commandement to beleeue and repent is more generall then the promise of mercie, 257. 1.d. 608.2.b. why its giuen to all, 608.2.b.
Beleeuers considered two wayes, 266.2.d. foure kinds of beleeuers, 287.2.b. 634.1.a. how true beleeuers are knowne, 247.2.d. 308.2.b. they serue God freely, 217.1.c. 276.1.b. Their vnion with Christ, 216 2.b. other priuiledges: as free from the curse of euill, 308.1.b. nothing can hurt them, 308.1.b. theirs is Christian libertie, 308.2.b. not seruants to the law, 329 2.b. theirs is the inheritance, 244.2.c. They must be sufferers, 226.1.a. Their miseries many, 226.1.d. They must hold the promise against reason, 228.2.a. They keepe not a practise of sinne, 217.1.b.
Bellisarius his great miserie, 417.2.a.
Belteshar his raigne, 715.
Bernards suspected and counterfeit workes, 504 2.d.
Bind: power of binding in the Church hath foure degrees, 168.1.a.
Blasphemers ought to die, 252.1.a.
Blessing of God: how obteined, 243.2.d. How temporall blessings are to be rightly vsed, 228.2.a. how to moderate our affections toward them, 313.1.c. A threefold abuse of them, 320 2.b.
Blood of Christ, how it redeemed vs, 238.2.c.
Boasting lawfull and vnlawfull, 342.2.d when lawfull, 193.2.c. 418.1.a. reasons against vaine boasting, 417 2.c.
Body of Christ, threefold in the fathers, 562. 1.c. how the body troubles the mind, 45.2.d
Bondage: whether lawfull among Christians, 267.1.b. the Iewes bondage before Christ, 270.1.a. Spirituall bondage stands in three things, 306.1.a. the signe of it, 306.1.c. grieuousnes of it, 308.1.d.
Bonauentures Psalter of the Virgin forged, 505.2.c.
Brethren taken sundry waies in Scripture, 282.2.c. 351.2.c.
Brotherhood naturall and spirituall, the ground of meeke dealing, 350.1.c.
Brotherly kindnes, 21.2.d.
Bribes, whether they must be restored to the giuer, 198.1.a.
Bul-bayting, how allowed, 141.2.a.
Buls or Indulgences, 589. 1.d. accompted bubbles, by the Popes bastard, 415.2.d.
Burdens of two sorts, 359.2.d. 373.1.b.
Burdens which may be borne by others, 359. 2.d. how we are to beare them, 360.1.a. 442 1.d. How euery one must beare his own burden, 373.1.b. Christ hath freed vs from a threefolde burden, 375.1 c.
Burgesses of heauen, their behauiour, 300.2.c.

C

Cæsar of Arles, 503. 1.c. Iulius Cæsar made Emperour by the Senate, 719. Augustus Cæsar, when and how long, 720. Tyberius Cæsar, when and how long, 721.
Calamities, what to doe in common calamities, 219.2.a. 266.2.a.
Caligula Emperor, when and how long, 725.
Calling, euery lawfull calling is of God, 159 1.b. A calling necessary to Ministers, 158 2 d. Ministers calling extraordinary, and ordinary, 171 1.d. how God cals extraordinarily, 171. 2.a. how discerned, 171. 2.b.
Calling of our Ministers approoued, 172.1.a. b. Three kindes of calling in the Church, 159.2.a. Churches power of calling is ministeriall, 159. 1.b. 172.1.b. God ordaines euery man for his calling, 177.1.b. how to please God in our callings, 271.2.d. 322.1. d. faithfulnes in our calling, 177. 1.c. 389. 2.a. patience in the troubles thereof, 177.1. d. assurance of Gods protectiō therin, 177. 1.d. Gods calling two-fold, 320.1.a. time of Gods calling how long, 316.1.a. Gods calling to liberty or grace, 320.1.b. parts of it two, 320. 1.b. How wee must answer God calling, 180.1.c.
Cambyses his raigne, 683.2.c. 716. he is Artaxerxes, 683.2.c.
Canon of the olde Testament approoued by the Fathers, 508.1.c.
Canon taken two wayes in the Fathers, 509. 1.a.
Canonicall houres with the Fathers, 525. 1. d. with Papists, 68.2.c. Three abuses therein, 68.2.d.
Captiuity of Israel into Assyria, when, 710. of Iuda into Babylon, 714.
Cardinals, 593. 2. d. fouly degenerate from their ancient estate, 594.1.b.
Cares of this world vnbeseeming Christians, 268.1.c.
Carnall men described, 341. 1.b. two sorts of carnall men, 348. 2. d. How to know whether we be carnall. 394.2.c.

Carolus Magnus his booke against the Councell of Nice not counterfeit. 504. 1 a.
Cassianus bookes iustly condemned, 592. 1.a
Catalogue of our sinnes profitable to bee made, 329.2.c. 1p.
Catechisme described, 665.1.b. necessarie, 295.2.b.
Catharists and Puritanes confuted, 348 1.c.
Catholique: This word not in vse in the Apostles dayes, 431.2.a. What is to be accounted Catholique, 486.1.a.
Censurers rashly, reproued, 202.1.c. Too sharpe censurers reproued, 444.1.b.
Ceremoniall law, 251.1.b.
Ceremonies of the Iewes remained indifferent till the destruction of the Temple, 88.1.c.
How they became impotent and beggarly, 283.2.c. how we are to refuse ceremonies before the aduersaries of the truth, 192.2.c.
Ceremonies of signification and of order: and how abrogated, 251.1.b.
Chalenges vnlawfull to bee giuen or taken, 120.2.b. 226.1.c.
Change belongs to all earthly things. 285. 2. c.
Character indeleble with Papists, 261.2.b. not knowen to the Fathers, 547. 1. b. How the Fathers take Character, 547.2.c. The true indeleble character. 426.2.d.
Charity in Communicants necessary, 82.1.b
Charmes cure not but by diabolical operation, 196.2.b. 264.1.d.
How to know charmes, 332.2.b. Charming is a kind of witchcraft, 332.2.a. some saying charmes are no witches, 333.1.a.
Chastitie, how preserued, 331.1.c.
Childrens subiection to Tutors and Gouernours, 269.2.d. Parents must dispose of their callings, 269.2.a. they are not punished for their fathers sinnes, 373.3.b. A child of God two wayes, 253.1.c. in a two-fold degree. 294.1.d. Markes of Gods children, 278.2.a. 215.2.d. 279.2.d.
Children of Abraham of two sorts, 229.2.b. How to be indeed the child of Abraham, 230.1.a.
Chrisme in Baptisme, when it began, 572. 1.c. how it is spoken of by the Fathers, 572.1.d.
Christ is God, 52.1.d. 173.2.d. Christ made man: See incarnation. The vnion of his two natures, 273.1.b. when he was borne, 720. his birth held ordinary by some Fathers. 513.1.d. he is our Lord fiue wayes: 428. 1.a. for two causes, 163.1.a.
Hee is the storehouse of all Gods blessings, pag. 243.1.d. pag. 418. 1. d. 428. 1.a. the matter of the whole Bible. 179. 2.b. how he was made vnder the law, 273. 2.c. his two-fold obedience, Actiue and Passiue, 205.2.a. 273.2.d. whether he fulfilled the law for himselfe, 274.1.d. His death and sacrifice was voluntary, 163.1.d. Hee died for all, but not for euery one alike, 621.2.b. He is not reuealed to euery particular man, 640.2.d. we must behold Christ crucified, 223.1.d. The benefits of it, 223.2.a.
Christ is the great Prophet and Doctour of his Church, 172.2.b. Hee shewes it three wayes, 172.2.c. He hath neither partner, nor deputie as mediatour, 292.2.d. 309. 2.c. The time of Christs ministerie, 683. 2 c. He is not the minister of sin, 211.2.b. How Christ as man differs from all other men. 273.1.b. 274. 2. c. Hard speeches of the Fathers about Christ humanity expounded. 513.2.b. Christ taken for the Church. 242.2.a. 659.1.a.
Christian described. 340.2.a. Their duties. 340.2.b. 341.1.c. How men shew themselues Christians. 44.2.a. triall 423.1.b.
Chronologie, what it is. 678.2.b. parts of it. 678.2.b.
Chrysostomes bastard workes. 497.1.b.
Church on earth hath wicked men in it, 191. 1.c. Visible Churches subiect to Apostacie. 287.2.b. 299.2.d. Church consists of teachers and hearers. 380.1.a. Shee is troubled three wayes. 317.1.a. Most troubled with vnnecessarie matters of circumstance. 426.1.b. Three rules of direction in iudging of the state of a Church. 161.1.b. Infallible markes of the Church, 290.2.d. 302.1.d. of Antiquitie and vniuersalitie. 302. 1.c.
Churches Testimonie of Scriptures how to be esteemed. 171.1.a. Shee may giue no commandement different from the word 302.1.d.
How the Christian Church is called barren. 303.1.a. Desolate, 303.1.b. Gods watchfulnesse ouer his Church. 317.2.d.
Catholike Church. 598.2.a. tearmed the new Ierusalē for sixe causes. 300.1.d. How it is aboue in heauen dwelling on earth. 300.2.b. Its one in number onely. 300. 2.d. Its inuisible. 301.1.a. Shee is a mother. 301.1.b. How to finde this mother Church. 301.1.c. Who bee members of it. 302.2.a. its not a visible company vnder one visible head. 301.1.a. 303.1.d. Her two-fold estate. 303.1.b. How wasted. 175.1.d. Wherefore God suffers it. 175.2.a.
Churches for prayer: of their names, consecration, adorning. 525.1.a.
Circumcision, when instituted, 687. When necessarie: indifferent: vnlawfull. 190.1.a. 309.2.a. it had vse after it was administred. 259.1.b. false Apostles made it meritorious. 311.1.a 413.2.b.
Circumcision put for the preheminence of the Iew. 420.1.d.
Claudius Emperor, when and how long, 725.
Cleauing vnto God, 63.1.b.
Clemencie: see meeke eneſſe.

Clements counterfeits workes, 489.1.d.
Clergie in the Fathers, 601.1.c. of their exemption from politique iudgement, 601. 1.d.
Climacterical years not to be obserued, 286. 2.d. 406.1.c.
Cock-fighting vnlawfull, 141.2.a.
Collections for the poore in the primitiue Church; when and how, 286 1.b.
Collections of doctrine. 663.1.a.2.c.
Combating vnlawfull, 120.1.d.
Combate of flesh and spirit, 326.2.d. meanes of it, 327.1.b. cause of it, 327.1.d. in whom it is, 327.2.b. wherein it shewes it selfe, 327. 2. c. effects of it, 328.1.a.
Comfort spirituall, how gotten, 163.2.d. comfort to the distressed through want of sanctification, 379 1.d. 312.2. b. 329.2.a. for weake faith, 283.2.a. and vpon conceit of their vnworthinesse, 248.1.a.
Commandements twofold; of obedience; of triall, 625.2.b. Commandements negatiue more forcible then affirmatiue, 86.2.a the diuision of them in the Fathers, 602.2.a.
Communication of properties. 656.1.a.
Common-place-bookes, 651.1.d.
Communion: see Lords Supper. Communion vnder one kinde, 554. 2.c. vnworthy Communicants of two sorts, 82.1.c. Communion table, how called an altar, 553.1.b.
Communion betweene Christ and vs declared, 242.2.c. 265.2.a. how to be assured of it, 20.1.b.
Concealing of a thing is not a lie, but sometime lawfull, 183 1.d.
Confession, what it betokeneth. 659.2.a.
Concupiscence after Baptisme is a sinne, 328. 1 b. 364.2.a. what the Father held about the remainders of concupiscence, 519.1.c. Papists make three degrees of concupiscence, 259.2.d. its sinne in the first motion, 260.1.a.
Conference for vnity approoued, 188. 1. d. Conference betweene minister and people necessary, 295.1.d. a rule of Christian wisedome in conference, 443.1.c.
Confession of faith necessary, 86.1.d. when it is to be made, 86.2.a. Christian confession double, 89.2.a.
Confession of sinnes to God containes three things, 14. 1. b. priuate confession, how requisite, 2.1.c. Cautels therein, 2.1.d. 22.2.c. 667.2.b. Auricular confession when it began, 570.2.a. what the Fathers say of it, 571. 1.a. why it is retained. 416.1.c.
Confidence and faith differ, 208.1.c.
Confirmation with chrisme and imposition of hands, how vsed of the Fathers, 572.1.d. the originall of it doubtfull, 573.2.d.
Conformity with Christ twofolde, 272. 1.a. 294.1.b.
Confuting errors in preaching, how, 668.2.c.
Conscience described, 11.1.d. two actions of conscience, 51. 1. d. Gods word alone bindes conscience, 11.2.b. how mens lawes binde it, 11. 2.c. Questions of conscience decided, 12. 2.a. How a sanctified conscience is knowne. 19. 1.d. pacification of conscience, 306.2.d. How to keepe a good conscience, 16.2.d. How to comfort a troubled conscience, 22. 1.a. 248 2.d. insufficient waies, 23.1.d. grounds of true comfort, 24. 1.a. See distresse of minde.
Consecrate, what it is, 561 2.b.
Consent prepares the heart to beleeue, 160. 1.d. its no certen mark of the Church, 160. 2.a. nor of truth, 202.2.a. wherein consent standeth, 160.1.b. where consent in religion is to be found, 160.2.c. Catholike consent of beleeuers in matters of religion is not Scripture, 160.2.b.
Consideration spirituall, 478. 2.c. of Gods presence, 479. 1.c. of Gods Iudgements, 479.2.a. of Gods word, 480.1.a. of Gods Workes, 480. 2.a. of our selues, 356.2.a. 481.1.c.
Constancy in good things vrged, 211.2.a. 315. 1.d. 400.1.a. how attained for the truth, 165.2.a.
Constantines donation apocryphal. 490.2.d.
Consubstantiation more approoued then Transubstantiation, 563.1.a.
Contentation in a meane estate. 421.1.d. vrged on beleeuers, 240.1.c. 268 1.c. 276.1.a
Contentions lawfull, 335.1.d. Sinfull, 335 2. a. contentions hurtfull in the Church, 323. 2.c. they are violent. 323.2.b.
Contract of matrimony, whether it may bee dissolued vpon a contagious, incurable, deadly disease, 242. 1. b. whether parents may nullifie their childrens contracts made without their priuity, 269 1.d.
Contrary, God workes by contraries, 28.1.d. 240.1.a.
Conuenience in things indifferent described, 3.1.b.
Conuersation, how the conscience is to be pacified about it, 307.1.a.
Conuersion of a sinner wrought by degrees, 294.2.b. Its a greater worke then creation, 422.1.d. its of two sorts, 178.2.b. preparation for conuersion is by humiliation, 177. 2.d. whether violence be offered to the will in conuersion: see will. In conuersion are fiue degrees of grace, 637.1.c. Papists confuted about conuersion of a sinner, 422.2.c.
Co-operation of faith and workes, wherein, 205.1.d.
Corruption in man is exceeding great, 413.2. c. hidden corruptions dangerous, 289. 2.c. comforts to Gods children troubled herewith, 326.1 c. How we yeeld to the corruptions of the times, 193.1.b.
Couenant, See Testament: kindes of couenants, 299.1.b. legall and euangelicall, 392.2. d. How to shew a man to be within the couenant, 25 1.c. lawfull couenants must bee kept with heretickes, 241. 2.d. whether losses ensuing may cause breach of couenant, 242.1.a.

Councels praised by the Fathers. 599. 2. b. approoued for making peace. 324. 1. a. assembled by Emperours. 599. 2. c. Their decrees differ frō Scripture. 159. 2. c. Three conditions in a lawfull Councell. 188. 2. a. Councell of Neocæsaria hath 10. forged Canons. 492. 2. b. first Councell of Nice is corrupted. 493. 2. a. second Councell of Nice is idolatrous. 503. 2. d. Councell of Sinuessa forged. 493. 2. b. Second Councel of Arles depraued. 493. 2. b. Councell of Sardica suspected. 493. 2. d. Councels of Rome vnder Constantine and Siluester altogether counterfeit. 494. 1. a. Councell of Agatha hath no Canons extant. 503. 1. a. Councell of Trent reiected, and why. 188. 1. d. why Protestants ioyned not therein. 324 1. b.
Counterfeit workes ascribed to ancient Writers. 489 1. a. &c.
Creation described. 606. 1. c.
Creepers into the Church. 191. 2. a.
Critical daies in sicknes not to be obserued. 286. 2. d.
Crosse put for the Gospel of Christ crucified. 318. 1. a. for Christs Sacrifice on the Crosse. 418. 2. c. motiues to beare the Crosse. 414. 2. a. Comforts vnder the Crosse. 280. 1 d. Popish Crosses transient & materiall. 419. 1. d. how Papists glorie in them. 419. 2. a. how the signe of the Crosse was vsed by the Fathers. 523. 2. a. it was not the signe shewed to Constantine. 523. 2. a. How miracles were wrought by it. 524. 1. d.
Crosses wanted Crucifixes long after Christ. 514. 2. d.
Crucifying as Christs action containes three things. 341. 1. 3. How we are crucified with Christ. 214. 2. d. How to carry our selues as men crucified. 216. 1. b. how we crucifie the flesh. 341. 1. d. & 2. a. what it is to be crucified to the world. 419. 2. b, how the world is crucified to vs. 419. 2. c. Right vse of Christ crucified. 215. 1. c.
Curse of the law declared. 232. 1. b, 237. 2. d. Euery sinner is accursed. 232. 2. c. how to escape the curse. 232. 2. d. how Christ is made a curse for vs. 238. 1. a. in what nature 238. 1. c, how far forth, 238. 1. d. How God is said to curse his creature. 456. 1. d. Cursing by priuate persons condemned. 168. 1. d.
Cyprians false and counterfeit workes. 491. 2. d.
Cyril of Ierusalem, wherein suspected to bee counterfeit. 495, 1. c.
Cyril of Alexandria, his counterfeit and suspected workes. 501. 2. c.
Cyrus King of Persia, his raigne. 683. 1. c. 715.

D

Daies treated of, ex naturall, artificiall, 679. 1. b. Diuision of naturall and artificiall day. 679 1. c. & 2. a. Easterne distinction of the artificiall day. 661. 1. d. 678. 2. d.
Day and night before the sunne. 56. 2. d.
Dayes put for Iewish Sabbaths, 285. 1. d. Obseruation of dayes fourefold. 285. 2. a. Obseruation of dayes as good and bad for businesse, is heathenish, 285. 2. b. 286. 2. c. see time.
Damascenes workes doubted of, 504. 1. b. his distinction of Gods will into antecedent and consequent examined, 624. 1. c.
Damasus his counterfeit workes, 494. 2. d. Damasus Pontificall suspected, 497. 1. b.
Damnation described, 232. 1. d. Whether God created men of purpose to damne them, 612. 1. c. Whether any be necessarily damned, 620. 1. c.
Daniel, when brought to Babel, 713; When Daniels weekes begin, 682. 1. d. 716. When they end, 683.
Darius Medus his raigne, 683. 1. b. 715.
Darius Hystaspis his raigne, 683. 1. c. 716. he gaue the edict for the Temple. 683. 1. c.
Darius Nothus his raigne, 683. 1. d. 717.
Dauids combat with Goliah vndertaken by extraordinarie instinct. 120. 2. c.
Dauncing mixt of men with women condemned, 141 1. a.
Dead in sinne; the state of most men, 375. 2 c
Dead to the law; what it meaneth, 212. 2. b.
Death rightly considered of, 36. 1. b. 419. 1 a. 482. 2. a. preparation to death, 34. 1. a. Helpes for comfort in the pangs of death, 36. 1. b.
Debate, what it is, 335. 1. b.
Deceitfulnesse of sinne, 383. 1. d.
Deceiuers of themselues, 368. 1. b. two wayes 383. 1. c. in matters of saluation most dangerous, 368. 2. b. Deceiuers make enuie betweene ministers and people, 292. 2. a. they retaine the names of holy things, abusing the things, 311. 1. b.
Decree of God, how it makes things necessarie, 619. 1. c.
Decretall Epistles forged. 499. 2. d.
Defence by force, whether lawfull, 119. 1. d. when, 120. 1. b. wherein a iust defence stands, 120. 1. c.
Deliuerance in distresse, why God deferres it, 32. 2. d. how to comfort themind in such delay, 31. 2 c. meditations therein, 33. 2. b.
Delusion of the senses by Satan. 221. 1. c.
Desertion twofold: of triall, 611. 2. a. of punishment. 611. 2. c.
Desire twofold, 24. 1. d. Spirituall desires distinguished from carnall, 278. 2. d. Desires of the Spirit are loud cries, 278. 2. d. two speciall examples of these desires, 279 1 a.
Despaire described. 22. 1. b. how such are to be dealt with. 667. 2. b.
Detestation of things dishonourable to God, 247. 1. a.
Deuill: hee is good by a generall goodnes, 2. 2. c. hee casts into the minde blasphemous thoughts, 39 2. a. how to discerne them, 39. 1. d. wee must not adore him, 85. 1. d. he cannot make raine. 227. 1. c. his stratagems for mans hurt. 395. 1. c. Comforts against his molestations. 37. 1. d.
Deuotion toward the ministerie for maintenance, greatly wanting. 382. 1. b.
Dicing vnlawfull. 141. 2. c.
Difference betweene man and man, is in outward respects not in spirituall. 266. 2. d. 420. 2. c. It is of grace not of nature. 174. 1. b.
Difference in iudgement should not cause diuision in affection. 241. 1. d. Difference of Iewes and Gentiles. 203. 2. a. &c.
Digest, or Sacred harmonie described. 678. 1. a.
Dionisius Areopagita, his counterfeit works. 489. 2. b.
Discontent in religion dangerous. 166. 1. c.
Disgracefull thoughts against our brethren. 469. 1. b.
Distinction of a people and no people. 249. 1. d.
Distresse of minde in generall. 22. 1. b. two degrees of it. 22. 1. b. Generall remedie for all distresses. pag. 22. 2. b. How to shew the partie distressed to bee within the Couenant. 25. 1. c. Distresse of mind arising from a diuine temptation. 26. 1. d. effects of it. 27. 1. a. remedy. 26. 1. c.
Distresse of mind arising from outward afflictions. 29. 1. c. practises for comfort in this distresse. 29. 1. d. meditation for comfort. 29. 2. b.
Distresse of mind frō blasphemous thoughts 39. 1. d. cause thereof. 39. 2. a. Remedie. 39. 2. c.
Distresse of minde from some speciall sinnes or sinne. 41. 2. d. cure of the violent distresse. 41. 2. d. cure of distresse for want of grace. 43. 2. b. cure of distresse for wants in good things. 44 2. b. In conscience of our vnworthinesse. 248. 1. a. 266. 1. d. remedie. 266. 2. a.
Distresse of mind arising from the body. 45. 2. c.
Distrust: mans thought of Distrust in God. 466. 1. a. when it most assaults. 466. 2. a. fruits of it. 466. 2. c. how resisted. 467. 1. a.
Diuination superstitious, a kinde of witchcraft. 332. 2. a.
Diuision follows the Gospell through mans corruption. 323. 2. a.
Doctrines, how to be gathered. 663. 1. a. how to bee applyed. 664. 2. d. what doctrine must be deliuered to the people. 312. 1. d. peoples duty towards sound doctrine. 312. 2. a. 316. 1. d. Doubtfull doctrine publikely deliuered must be tried. 188. 1. a. How to iudge of doctrine. 315. 2. d. 316. 2. a. Doctrines and reuelations beside the word are accursed. 168. 2. d. notes of false doctrine. 166. 2. d.
Donation of Christ to vs. 265. 2. b.
Dorotheus of Tyrus, his Synopsis is forged. 494. 2. c
Doubtfull things should be taken in the better part. 443. 2. b. two cautions herein. 444 2. a.
Doubting of faith, how comforted. 255. 2. d.
Drowne, why God drowned the old world. 456. 2. d.
Drunkennesse described. 336 1. d. Diuisiues from it. 336. 2. b. effects of it. 336. 2. c. Arguments for it answered. 336. 2. d.

E

Eare: what the piercing of it signifies, 211. 1. a.
Earth-quake, Gods worke. 282. 2. c. what vse we should make of it. 282. c. d.
Eate to the Lord, how. 132. 1. b.
Election described. 607. 1. c. two acts in that decree. 607. 1. c. first act. 607. 2. d. second act. 608. 1. b. fiue degrees in this second act. 608. 1. c. Gods election is free 203. 2. b. Its not vpon foreseene faith or workes. 176. 2. d. 304. 1. d. 631. 2. b. its the ground of all sauing gifts. 283. 1. b. 610. 1. d, how we hold, that certen and few are chosen. 611. 2. d.
Election is double. 235. 2. d. assurance of election. 21. 2. b. c. 177. 1. a.
Eleuation of the Sacrament why vsed. 564. 1. c.
Ellipsis, wherefore vsed. 658. 1. b.
Ember weeke fasts when instituted. 544. 1. c.
Empire how translated from the Grecians. 592. 1. c.
Emulation twofold, good and euill. 335. 1. b.
Emulation in religion allowed. 175 2. d.
Enemies, priuate and publike. 65. 2. b. publike Enemies of two sorts. 65. 2. c.
Enmitie, whether it be a sinne, 334. 2. b. what it is. 334. 2. d. remedie of it. 335. 1. a. Its perpetuall betweene true beleeues and hypocrites. 304. 2. c.
Enuie, what it doth. 292. 1. d. Its compounded of carnall griefe and hatred. 335. 2. d. how to eschew it. 335. 2. d.
Ephrems workes not extant in Syriake. 494. 2. d.
Epicurisme. 460. 2. c.
Epistle to the Galatians, the largest that Paul writ with his owne hand. 408. 2. a. The author of the Epistle to the Hebrewes doubted of. 430. 2. a.
Epistle of the first Councell of Nice to Siluester, counterfeit. 493. 2. a.
Equitie: Christian equitie described. 436. 1. d. Necessitie of it. 436. 1. b. kinds of it. 426. 2. d. publike equitie handled. 427. 1. a. priuate equitie described. 442. 1. b. foure duties in priuate equitie. 442. 1. d. first bearing with naturall infirmities. 442. 1. d. 2. Taking doubtfull things in the better part. 443. 2. b. 3. Yeelding of our right. 444. 2. d. 4. Forbearing and forgiuing wrongs. 445. 2. d.
Motiues to practise Christian equitie. 1. From Gods dealing with vs. 448. 1. d. 2. From his presence with vs. 452. 1. b.

Equiuocation in an oth maintained by Papists,602.1.a.
Erre:excellent men may erre. 199.2.d.
Errors can hardly be discried by their beginning,191.2.a.how to discerne them, 316. 1.a.
Esteeme;how to esteeme of men,194.1.b.
Euangelists,how they differ,648. 2.b.
Eucherius his counterfeit workes, 501. 2.d.
Eue knew not whether the serpents could speake,57.2.b.
Euill-Merodach king of Babell his raigne, 714.
Euodius forged workes.501.1.d.
Eusebius taxed for making Peter Bishop of Rome,25.yeares,195.2. d.his Ecclesiasticall history commended, 492. 2. c. his Chronicle corrupted, 493.2.c.
Eusebius Emisenus homilies,not his,503.1.a.
Examination of our selues by that law , 245. 2.d.
Example;euill example must be taken away, 316.2.b.its contagious, 201.2.c.203. 1.a. force of examples,663 2.a.
Excommunication: whether parties excommunicate be members of Christ, 78. 1. d. who must be excommunicate, 317. 2. b. whether children of excommunicate persons haue right to baptisme,78.1.a. Three iudgements vpon the excommunicate, 78.1.b.

F

Fayning or fembling is not lying: and how lawfull,183.2.a.200,1.d. when vnlawfull, 200.2.a.
Fainting twofold, 399. 2.c. faint thoughts, 472.2.d.
Faith taken two waies. 224.1.b.228.2.d.faith for the doctrine of the Gospell, 224. 1.b. 249 1.c for true religion,21 2.c.
Faith iustifying described,63,1.b. 208.1.b.
Forme of faith not loue, 227.1.d. 313. 2. b. but affiance or application, 219.1.c. 313. 2.b.how faith Iustifyeth,309.2.d.228.2.d. 236.2.d.Alone,210.1.a.210.1.d.
Its necessarie to saluation, 15. 1. b. how it saues, 210.2.b. two things in sauing faith, 15. 1. b. cases of conscience touching saving faith, 15.1.d. how it is required in the law and in the Gospell, 236. 2. b. when it breeds in the heart.15.2.b.255.1.a.how it is conceiued,255. 1. b. Three degrees in faith,185.2.d. rarenesse of true faith,209. 2.b.How true faith may be knowne, 82. 1.d:236.2.a.Faith,weake and strong, 208. 2.d.254.2.d. how we attaine strong faith, 209.1.c. how faith is preserued , 16.2.d. great vse of faith, 244.2.c. 313. 1. d. it brings a speciall certentie of Gods mercie,312.2.c.538 2.a. 538 2.a. grounds of particular faith,208.2.b.263.1.b.
Three acts in a particular faith,254.2.a. obiections of Papist against speciall faith answered, 254. 2.b. prouocations to get faith,244.2.c.
how the fathers speake of faith to iustifie, 536.2.d.how faith is renued at the Lords Supper,83.1.c. Satans malice against our faith,185.1.d.222.1.a. whether faith may be lost,185.2.d.true faith cannot, 186. 1. a.632.1.c.See fall.
Our dutie in regard of our faith, 186.2.d. 209.2.b.313.2.d. The common faith of the world, 209. 2. a.230 1. b. false faith, how discerned,215.2.d.230.1.b.255.1.d. 314.2.a.339. 2. a. A generall faith sufficient to obtaine a miraculous cure,207.2.d.
Faith with Papists what it is , 207. 2.b. its a poore faith,209.2 a. how it iustifieth with them, 209.2.c.227 2. d. Implicite faith a blind faith, 223.2.a.
Faith towards men, 339.2. b. its rare, 339. 2.c.
Faithfull ones should vnite themselues, 404. 1.a.how preached vnto,667.1 c.
Fall of man: See Adams fall, grounds of answer to blind questions about the fall,248. 1.a.
Falling from God in profession easie, 227. 1.d.kinds of falling,667.2.a.
how they that are fallen ought to be dealt with in the preaching of the word, 667. 2.a.
False after conuersion may bee recouered by repentance, 227.1.a.293.2.d. Its dangerous to fall from grace in part, 295.2.d.
Euery sinne is not a falling from grace, 253.2.b. the child of God cannot wholly fall from grace,217.1.b.311.2.b.400. 1.c. 632.1.c. Obiections answered, 635.1.d. and 636.
Falsification of authors by Papists,492. 1.c.
Family of loue knowne by their opinions, 403.2.b. they abuse the Scripture in allegories,298.2.d.
Fast:what a religious fast is,102.1.a. how it is to be obserued , 102. 1.c. iust causes of a fast,102. 1.c. how long it must continue, 102.2.d. of eating during the fast, 103. 1.a.whether all persons be bound to keepe a solemne fast,103.1.c.
Right ends of a religious fast , 103. 1. d. Popish false ends, 104. 2.d. whether Popish fasts bee approoued of God, 104.1.a. of the set fasts in our Church, 104.1.d. fasting on the Sabbath allowed,490.2.d.
of fasting in Lent, Ember-weekes and Eues,542.1.d.
Fathers of the Church: their authoritie and manner of writing.486.2.d.how their writings are to be receiued,487.1.c.
They speake sometimes vnfitly in Sacred matters,and why,487.2.b. Their counterfeit doubtfull and corrupted workes.489. 1.a.They haue their errours 488.2.c.
Faults of others,when and how to be spoken of, 149 1.b.lessening of mens owne faults ordinarie,316.1.c.

Fauour of God:how obtained, 13. 2. d. 44. 1.c.
Faustus Rhegiensis condemned by Gelasius, 502.1.a.
Feare: 3.kinds of feare.201.2.a.natural feare is good , 201. 1. d. how it becomes euill, 201.1.d. Feare of God a great part of his worship,62.2.b.it stands in two things,62. 2.b.114.1.d.
Festiuall daies,597.1.a.&c.
Felicitie in this life,290.2.a.
Feeling followes faith,83.2.b.
Fellowship with God giues assurance of saluation,20.1.a.foure sure notes of this fellowship,2.1.b.
Filiation naturall and legall,661.2.c.
Fines should be moderate,440.1.b.
Flatterers are lyers,183.1.c.
Flesh not allowed for meate before the flood, 129.1.d. whether flesh may bee eaten with good conscience on times forbidden,130. 1.c.Cautions to be obserued thereabout, 130.1.d.
Flesh taken for outward things pertaining to the outward man,224. 1. c. Flesh put for the corruption of all the powers of the soule,320.1.d.326.1.d.and 2.d.341.1.a. it signifies more then sensuality.334 1.a.it is contrariety to the spirit,327.1.d.how they can fight,326.2.d.
Fooles to the world: and to God, 395.1.b. most men are fooles in religion, 221. 2.a. naturall fooles ought not to bee kept to laughat, 141.1. d.why impenitent sinners are called fooles, 115.1.a.why Paul called the Galatians fooles, 220.2.c. whether we may call another foole, 221.1.a.
For,doth not alwaies signifie a cause,392.2.a.
Force:whether we may defend our selues by force,119.2.d.and when,120.1.b.
Foreknowledge in God: how it goes before his will;and how after. 164.1. d. 230.1.c. 628.1.b.Its ioyned with his will, 230.2.a it is not in respect of our faith,176.2.d.
Forfeitures of bondes,how to be moderated, 439.2.b.Forfeitures of leases, 439 1.b.
Forgiuenesse of three sorts,82.2.b.Foure-fold,118.1.c. we must forgiue those that wrong vs,445.2.d.two cautions in this duty,446.1.c.
Fornication a manifest worke of the flesh, and not indifferent, 330.1.d. motiues to flee it, 331.1.a.
Forsake all,in 3 cases,127.1.c.
Francis epistle to the brethren, forged, 505. 2.b.
Freely taken two waies,219.2.d.
Free seruing of God vnder the Gospel, 252. 2.b.307.1.c.
Freedome in good things fourefold,307. 1.c.
Freers doe dreame about Christs sufferings, 239 1.a.

G

Galatia: what the Churches of Galatia are, 161.2.a.the principall argument of the Epistle to the Galatians,164.2.c.220. 2.b.
Games vsed for recreation of three sorts, 141.2.b.games of wit allowed, 141. 2. b. games of meere hazard condemned, 141. 2. c. Mixed games in some sort allowed, 142.1.a.gaming for gaine, vnlawfull.142. 2.b.
Gelatius booke of two natures,counterfeit, 502.2.c.
Gelinar prince of Vandals his miserie, 417. 2.a.
Generation of infants shewed, 294.2.b.
Genesis,647.2.a.
Gentilize:what it is.202.2.d.
Gentlenesse described,339.1.a.
Gifts of God of two sorts, 100.1.b. made ours two waies,43.2. d. the more we haue the more seruiceable wee should be to others, 349.1.b.
Glasse of the Trinitie,a fiction, 530.2.a.
Glorie:to glorie comprehends 3.things,416. 2. b. wherein we may and ought to glorie, 419.1.a.
Wherein we ought not to glorie, 416.2.d. vnlawfull glorying declared , 418.1. d. it may be done three waies,418.2.a. How to glorie in God; 371.2.c,d. of glorying in our selues,371.2.c.cautions,372.1.b. how it differs from vaine glorie,371.2.d.
Degrees of glory in heauen,387.1.d.
the ground hereof,392.1.b.
How to glorifie God in his workes, 187. 1.a.
Gluttonie described,336.1.d.
God:proofes that there is a God, from the light of nature, 49.1.b. from the soule of man,51.1.c.from the common confession of all,51.2.b.by an assertorie oath, 51.2.c. from the light of grace, 52. 2.c. from the light of glorie, 53.1.b. Men by nature denie God,459.2.a.How,459.2.d.false gods set vp two waies : 281.1. d. How the true God is made an Idol in worship , 84. 1.d. How God is to be conceiued in our minds when we worship him,61.1.c.
Gods knowledge, 384.2. a. His moderation towards all men, 448.1.d.457.2.c.towards his Church and children,450.1.b.
God is vnchangable,246.2.d.vses of it, 246. 2.d.
Gods presence,479.1.c.vses of it, 452. 2. b.
God is a Father in two respects,253.1.b.why the first person is most commonly called God,164.1.d.27.1.a.
Godfathers be witnesses.
Godly and vngodly, how they differ, 260. 1.c.337.2.a.
Godlinesse wherein it stands, 21.2. d. 225. 1.a.323.1.a.
Goodnesse handled,2.2.a.what it is,339.1.b. its threefold, 401, 1. d. foure degrees of communicating goodnesse,401.2.b.
The exercise of goodnesse, 339. 1. c. the want of it,339.1.d.
We must do good to all,267.2.d.402.2.d.

motiues, 400. 2. d. rules in doing good, 292. 1. b. 402. 1. b. order in doing good, 404. 2. b. delay therein reprooued, 407. 1. d. two sorts of good things, 89. 1. b. 125. 2. d.
Goods of two sorts, 125. 1. b. goods necessary two waies, 125. 1. c.
Gospel a precious treasure, 196. 1. c. The antiquitie of the Gospell, 231. 1. a. how to walke worthy of it, 202. 2. b. the least part of the truth of it must bee maintained, 192. 2. c. it was not reuealed to all before Christ, 249. 2. d. why called truth, 222. 1. c. The necessitie of the preaching of it, 318. 2. d. Pope Leo the 10. called it a fable of Iesus Christ: 416. 1. a. Contempt of it a most greeuous sinne, 456. 2. d. whether the Gospell be a new law, 363 2. a. How it differs from the law: see law. Wherin they agree, 363. 2. a. Gospell onely one, 166. 2. a. the scope of it, 164. 2. a. 165 2. c.
How to discerne it from other doctrines, 167. 1. a. why it is called a mysterie, 363. 2. d.
Grace distinguished diuers waies, 427. 2. c. 626. 1. b. restrayning grace, 113. 1. d. 626. 1. b. renuing grace, 113. 1. d. 626. 1. c. preuenting grace in conuersion declared, 178. 1. a. 637 1. c. its twofold, 283. 1. b. Grace sufficient is efficient, 637. 1. a. 2. c. wherein stands the efficacie of grace, 178. 2. d. Grace taken two waies, 219. 2. c. 427. 2. c. for Gods favour in Christ, 161. 2. c. 427. 2. c. 634. 1. b. its the first cause of all good in vs, 161. 2. c. 162. 1. c. 427. 2. d.
Grace of saluation twofold, 13. 1. a. first grace is to repent and beleeue, 13. 2. b.
How God worketh it, 13. 1. a.
The second grace of saluation, 13. 2. b. 427. 2. d. 634. 2. a. necessitie of the second grace, 329 1. c. Foure grounds or seeds of true grace, 24. 1. b. &c.
How to find out the same in man, 25. 1. c.
Groth in grace a duty, 315. 1. a. motiues thereunto, 270. 1. c. true grace is growing and spreading, 316. 2. d. nature will counterfeit grace, 292. 1. b. wee must looke to the soundnesse of grace, 289. 2. c. 292. 1. c. grace in this life is mingled with corruption, 328. 2. b. Saving grace cannot be lost, 217. 1. b. how farre grace may be lost, 634. 1. a. see fall from grace. Men are vnder grace two waies, 311. 2. b. whether a man may attaine to grace by the good vse of the gifts of nature, 629. 1. a.
Gregorie of Neocæsaria his suspected homilies, 491. 1. d.
Gregorie of Nissa, wherein corrupted and counterfeit, 495. 1. a.
Gregorie Nazian. Tragedie suspected, 495. 1. b.
Gregorie the Great, his suspected workes, 503. 1. b.
Guards whereby Christians are now kept, 250. 1. b.
Guides for Christians vnder the Gospell, 252. 2. a.
Guilt of sinne in Gods children is not vnto condemnation, 186. 1. c.

H

Hallowing of creatures condemned in Papists, 131. 1. c. what the fathers say hereof, 600. 2. a.
Hanging in chaines; whether lawfull, 239. 2. d. why hanging on a tree was accursed, 239. 2. a.
Happinesse wherein true happinesse stands, 290. 2. b. foure euils hindering our happinesse, 34. 2. b. errours about true happines, 290. 2. b.
Hardnesse of heart twofold, 83. 2. d. Comfort against trouble from hardnesse of heart, 14. 2. b.
How the hard hearted are to be taught, 666. 1. b. and 2. b.
Haulting in religion, 202. 1. d.
Heare: how to heare the word sauingly, 70. 1. b. causes of not profiting by hearing, 72. 1. a. comforts to them that are troubled with not profiting by hearing, 72. 2. a. A ground of reuerent hearing, 169. 2. b. 173. 1. a. Diligence in hearing, 196. 2. b. A priuate hearer may not censure the teacher nor his doctrine, 71. 1. b. nor meddle with publike ministeriall duties, 580. 2. a. They must not desire to be alwaies pleased, 169. 2. d.
They must bee content with the pure word, 381. 2. b.
Heart, sundrie waies taken in Scripture, 458 1. c. All the heart, taken in a double sense: 235. 2. d. It is the mansion of the Spirit, 277. 2. c. elevation of the heart, 477. 2. d. rules for the guarding of the heart, 41. 1. d. 477. 2. a. when the heart is right, 202. 2. b. peruersenesse of the heart shewed, 10. 2. d. 469. 2. c.
The humble heart, 202. 2. b. Honest heart, 202. 2. b.
Heathen men cannot be saued, 394. 2. d.
Heauen: Degrees of glorie in heauen, 387. 1. d.
Hegesippus historie now extant, not his, 491. 1. c.
Hell: degrees of torments in hell, 387. 1. c. what the Fathers say of Christs descending to hell, 514. 1. d. The seuerall places in hell either vnknowne to the Fathers or doubted of, 515. 1. c.
Henrie the fourth a victorious Emperour brought to great want 417. 2. a.
Heresie: what it signifies, 333. 2. b. what it is properly: 333. 2. b. how it differs from schisme, 333. 2. c. from errour, 333. 2. c.
How to keepe our selues from heresie, 334. 1. a. new heretikes reuiue the old, 651. 1. b.
Hiding of our selues is to no purpose, 329. 2. d.
Hieromes counterfeit and suspected workes, 496. 1. a.

Holydaies onely made by God, 286. 1. d. 679 1. d. how they are obserued among vs, 286. 2. b. how Papists abuse them, 286. 1. d.
Holynesse which is Gods Image, 421. 2. d.
Honour: what makes honourable, 150 1. d. how one man is to honour another, 150. 1. c. how to honour all superiours, 151. 1. a. how to honour superious in Authoritie, 151. 2. a. how to honour equalles, 152. 1. b. how to honour inferiours, 152. 1. c. how to honour a mans selfe, 152 2. a. what honour is to be sought for, what not, 343. 1. a. honour is not to be glorified in, 417. 1. d.
Hope described, 63. 1. c. the ground of sure hope of saluation, 243. 2 c.
Horoscope or time of birth not to be regarded, 286. 2. d.
Howres treated of, 678. 2. c planetary houres not to be regarded, 286. 2. c.
Housholds of faith who, 403. 1. d. why we must chiefely doe good vnto them 403. 2. d.
Humiliation twofold, 178 1. a. The excellencie of humiliation, 14. 1. b. Its necessarie to consolation: 22. 2. d. The exercise of humiliation in three things, 14. 1. a. 22. 2. d. Cases of Conscience, touching humiliation, 14. 1. d.
How the humble are to bee preached vnto, 666. 2. c.
How to worke humiliation, 22. 2. d.
Hypocrisie described, 460. 2. b. discouered, 323. 1. b.
Hysteroses in stories, 678. 1. c.

I

Iacobs ladder, what it is, 273. 2. b.
Iacobus de voragine his golden legend censured, 505. 2. c.
Iames the Apostle the Lords brother and how, 182. 2. c. His masse counterfeit, 489. 1. b.
Idol taken two waies, 331. 2. a. whether a man may goe to Idol seruice and keepe his heart to God, 87. 2. a. How mens mindes turnes the true God into an Idol, 466. 1. a.
Idolatrie described, 331. 2. a. its a common sinne, 281. 2. b. Its committed two waies, 281. 1. d. 331. 2. b.
Idolatrie Spirituall discouered, 281. 2. d. 332. 1. b. how Idolatrie should bee rooted out, 282. 1. a. Their pretences remooued, 85. 1. b.
Ieffrie Arthur of Munmoth censured, 505. 1. d.
Iehoshaphat: how called the king of Israel, 60. 1. d.
Ielousie twofold. 291. 2. b.
Iephte: whether he did offer his daughter vpon his vow, 98. 1. c.
Ierusalem is the mother Church, and not Rome, 182. 2. b. New Ierusalem is the Catholike Church, 300 1. d.
Iesus Christ the sonne of Marie is the sonne of God, and true redeemer 53. 2. a. How the Fathers ascribe vertue to the name Iesus, 514. 1 c.
Iewes, had three speciall sects, 174. 1. d. now no children of Abraham, 229 2. d. They shall be called, 231. 1. c. distinction of Iewes and Gentiles, 203. 2. a. wherein it stood, 202. 2. c. how long it continued, 203. 2. d. How the Iewes were holy by nature, 204. 1. a.
Ignatius hath fiue counterfeit Epistles, 490. 2. d.
Ignorance, euill and faultie, 5. 1. c. 57. 2. d. Simple ignorance, 4. 2. c. It iesteneth the sinne, 4. 2. d. affected ignorance, 5. 1. a. Faultie affected ignorance, 5. 1. c. 57. 2. d.
Ignorance of God, 280. 2. d. The ground of superstition and Idolatrie, 281. 1. c.
Ignorance of the scope of the law breeds spirituall pride, 296. 2. b. how the ignorant and vnbeleeuing are to be preached vnto, 665. 1. a. how the Ignorant and teachable are to be dealt with, 665. 2. a.
Image of God in our first parents was naturall, not supernaturall, 274. 2. d.
Image of Christ in vs, 294. 1. a. 421. 2. c.
Image and Idol not distinguished in the vulgar Bible, 522. 2. d. Images may not bee adored, 86. 1. b.
God worshipped in, at, or before an image is made an Idol, 85. 1. a.
Images are detestable in the congregation, 225. 1. a. what vse they had in the primitiue Church, 521. 1. b. when established in the Westerne Churches, 223. 1. a. what the Fathers held touching Images, 521. 1. b. Image-worship when received, 521. 2. c. when established, 522. 2. d.
Imagination of man naturally euill, 458. 1. c.
Impenitencie discouered, 451. 2. b.
Impenitent persons hauing knowledge, how to be dealt with in the ministerie, 444. 2. c.
Imprecations: whether lawfull and how farre, 65. 2. a. 319. 1. c. gifts necessarie in them that vse imprecations, 65. 2. d. 122. 2. d. 319 1. a. How we may vse Dauids psalmes of Imprecation, 66. 1. d. 319. 1. d.
Imputation, what it meaneth, 228. 2. b. Its twofold, 228. 2 c. see righteousnesse.
Incarnation of Christ, 272. 1. b. why the Son was incarnate, 272. 1. b. How farre forth the Sonne was made flesh, 272. 1. c. how he was made flesh, 272. 2. a. How free from sinne being incarnate, 272. 2. c. The comfort from it, 273. 2. b.
Incense disallowed by the Fathers, 564. 2 a.
Inconstancie of our nature in matters of religion, 165. 1. d
Inconuenience described, 3. 1. b.
Indifferent things 3. 1. a. Therein is conuenience or inconuenience 3. 1. a.

when they cease to be indifferent, 17. 2. a. vrged as necessarie to saluation they bee vnlawfull, 190. 2. b. 413. 1. b.
We may not vse them when we will, nor how we will, 190. 1. d. How to carrie our selues in things indifferent towards the weake and low: the obstinate, 190. 2. d. how farre mens lawes restraine the vse of them, 190. 2. a. or make them necessarie, 308. 1. a.
Indulgences see Buls.
Infants of beleeuing parents may bee baptized, 263. 1. c. whether they haue faith, 263. 2. c. how they must be iudged, 386. 1. a.
Infidelitie twofold, 629. 2. d.
Infirmities in others must bee borne with, 442. 1. d. 380. 1. d.
Iniurie: how to forgiue an iniurie, 118. 1. c. how to carie our selues, when we are wronged, 117. 2. b.
Innocents: How children are innocents, 374. 2. a.
Inscriptions or Titles, before Epistles are no part of holy Scripture, 429. 2. c. 430. 2. a. 431.
Instruction in conuersion twofold, 178. 1. b.
Intercession of Christ not a vocall but a verball prayer, 279 1. a. Its of force, 297. 1. d.
Interrogations and their vse, 169. 1. d. 659. 1. c.
Inuocation of Saints grounded on dreames, 529. 2. b. its carnall prayer, 299. 2. b.
Ioy twofold: of glorie, and of grace: 338. 2. a. how to haue some taste of the ioyes of glorie in this life, 34. 2. b. wherein the ioy of grace standeth, 338. 2. a. How to discerne the Ioy of Gods Spirit from carnall ioy, 35. 2. 2. True ioy belongs to Gods children, 303. 1. c. 372. 1. d. the matter of their ioy, 303. 1. d. ground of ioy in trouble, 289 1. d. 338. 2. a. the false ioy of the world, 372. 2. a.
Irenæus a Chiliast, 491. 2. a.
Ironies in Scripture, 659. 1. b.
Isaac a figure of true beleeuers, 304. 2. b.
Ismael, a figure of Iusticiaries by workes, 300. 1. a. when he was borne, 687.
Israel twofold, 415. 1. d.
Iubile yeare, 681. 2. d.
Iudaisme, 174. 1. d. what it is to Iudaize, 202. 2. d.
Iudges: the time of their gouernment, 682. 1. a.
Iudgements: how to consider rightly of Gods iudgements, 479 2. a. we should often doe it, 337. 1. c.
Iudgement twofold, vpon discourse and by reuelation, 222. 1. c. Three kinds of iudgement, 71. 1. a. we must passe through three kinds of iudgements in this life, 342. 2. d. of giuing iudgement of others, 148. 2. a. 221. 1. a. 326. 1. d.
Sixe rules hereof, 149 1. a. we must vse charitie herein, 317. 1. b. publike iudgement. 148. 2. a. priuate Iudgement, 148. 2. b. rules for it, 221. 1. a.
Iudgement of mens fast, 148. 2. c. of mens doctrines, 148 2. c. of mens persons, 148. 2. d. 327. 2. c. How we must iudge our selues, 149. 2. d. what thing are subiect to iudgement, what be not, 220. 2. c. Soueraigne iudge in controuersies in religion, 188. 2. c. 511. 2. a. what iudgement the Church giues, 188. 2. d. Last iudgement prooued, 385. 2. c. Gods integritie in iudgement, 388. 2. c. A patterne to magistrates in iudgement, 388. 2. c.
Iudiciall lawes, how they bindeve and how not, 251. 1. d.
How to know what Iudicials haue morall equitie, 251. 2. c.
Iuggling a kinde of witchcraft, 332. 2. a.
Iustice vniuersall, 148. 1. c. particular, 148. 1. d. particular iustice twofold, 148. 1. d. Iustice in distribution, 148. 1. d. Iustice of the person and of the action, 219 1. a.
Emblemes of Iustice, 388. 2. d.
Iustifie, how taken: 204. 2. a.
Iustification described, 204. 2. b. Its not by the law, 205. 1. b. The right cause thereof, 209. 1. d. Christ is the meritorious cause thereof, 205. 2. a. It is not by his essentiall diuine Iustice, 276. 2. b. It is perfect by Christ, 210. 1. c. 211. 1. a. His actiue obedience required thereto, 205. 1. b. 274. 1. a. nothing must be added to Christs worke herein, 309. 2. c. Its freely by grace through faith without workes, 165. 2. d. 220. 1. a. &c. 305. 2. c. 537 2. b.
Its twofold: before God, and before men, 235. 2. c. of the person, and of the faith of the person, 314. 1. d. how it differs from regeneration and renouation, 204. 2. b.
The disposition of the parte iustified, 204. 2. c. 229. 1. c. our care and duty for Iustification, 212. 1. b. 229. 1. d. 276. 2. c. how the conscience is pacified about it, 306. 2. d. the practise of the iustified, 207. 1. d. 211. 1. b. what the fathers teach of iustification, 533. 1. b.
Iustification with Papists, 204. 2. c. 207. 1. a. 314. 1. a. 276. 2. b. naturall preparation thereto confured, 327. 2. a. kinds of iustification with Papists, 210. 2. c. confuted, 210. 2. c. 211. 2. d. 212. 2. d. 229. 1. c. 236. 1. d. 299 1. d. 328. 2. b. 535. 1. b.
Workes of grace iustifie not, 220. 1. d. 309. 2. c.
Iustification by workes impossible, 247. 2. a. 310, 2. c. an Idolatrous doctrine, 285. 1. a. A fundamentall errour, 210. 1. d. 287. 1. d. 309 2. b. 319 1 d.
Iusticiaries by workes are Ismaelites, 300. 1. b. cast out of the Church, 305 2. b.
Iustine his errour and counterfeit bookes, 491. 1. d.

K

Kaies: The power of the kaies is annexed to doctrine doctrine in the new Testament, 172. 1. a.

Kill: he that killeth ought to die saue in one case, 252. 1. b. 446. 1. d.
Kindred: whether Baptisme make a spirituall kindred, 77. 1. b. whether this spirituall kindred can hinder marriage, 77. 2. b.
Kings subiect to Ecclesiasticall censures, 352. 1. d. of the power of kings. 590 2. c. of their deposing, 591. 1. d. 593. 2. b. of their annointing. 593. 2. d.
Kingdome, how to establish a kingdome, 290. 2. d.
Kingdome of God taken two waies, 337. 1. d.
Kingdome of Christ described, 175. 1. b. In it outward priuiledges are nothing, 313. 1. a.
Kissing the Popes feete, 85. 2. d.
Kneeling before the chaire of estate, 85. 1. c.
Knowledge of God twofold, 280. 2. d. 282. 1. b. it stands in sixe points, 258. 1. c. Spirituall knowledge of God and the properties of it, 282. 1. b. Gods knowledge of vs, 283. 1. a. 607. 2. b. fruits of it, 283. 1. c. properties of it, 283. 2. b. what knowledge ought to be in true beleeuers, 230. 1. c. how knowledge is renued at the Lords table, 83. 1. a.
Motiues to know God, 282. 2. b.

L

Lactantius his counterfeit workes, 491. 1. c.
Laitie, 601. 1. c.
Latine seruice, 557. 1. c.
Latria and Dulia. 530. 1. a. That distinction ouerthrowne, 285. 1. b.
Law diuersly taken, 296. 1. c. for the whole Oeconomie of Moses, 249 1 c. Time of it. 681. 2. b. Its threefold, morall, ceremoniall Iudicial, 251. 1. a. How the law was ordained by Angels, 245. 2. a. Two properties of the law, 299. 2. b. A rule in expounding it, 657. 1. a. It is wholly copulatiue, 311. 1. c. whether it reueale sin after Christs comming, 245. 1. b. what it is to be vnder the law, 274 2. d. 296. 1. d. who are vnder it, 213. 1. a. 275. 1. b. how wee are redeemed from it, 275. 2. a. How to know it, 307. 1. a. 667. 2. c. foure benefits of this deliuerance, 275. 2. d. How Christ was subiect to the law, 273. 2. d. when the law was abrogated, 250. 2. d. how farre forth, 251. 1. a. comforts against the terrours of the law, 248. 2. d.
Two kindes of fulfilling the law, 234. 1. c. 366. 1. b. none can fulfill it legally, 233. 1. c. 234 1. c. 264. 1 c.
The popish opinion confuted, 233. 2. c. 310. 2. d. 365. 1. a. 540. 2. b.
This inabilitie is of our selues not from God, 234. 2. d. what the Fathers say of fulfilling the law, 540 1. d.
Law and Gospel are not one in substance, 212. 2. d. 299. 1 d. 311. 2. a. Their difference. 224. 2. b. 236. 2. a. 244. 1. d. 299 1. b. 299. 2. b. and c. 363. 2. c. vse of the law, 235. 1. b. 237. 1. b. 249. 2. b. 366. 1. d. what repentance the law workes. 213. 1. d. whether it reueale sinne after Christs comming, 245 1. b. How beleeuers are free from the law. 212. 2. c. Threatnings of the law are conditionall, 233. 1. a. 237. 2. a. how it is our Schoolemaster, 250 1 c.
Lawes of men: whether a man may with good conscience defend himselfe by law, 118. 2. a. 446. 2. a. The manner how, 119. 2 c. 446. 2. b. of extremity in humane lawes, 437. 1. d. 480 1. c. Vrgers of it reprooued, 438. 2. d. 440. 2. c. The mitigation of law 437. 2. b. why it is not expressed, 439. 1. d. 441. 1. b. too much lenity reprooued, 438. 2. b. Cases of mitigation, 437. 2. d. Magistrate must doe it, 437. 2. c. 439 1. c. 440. 2. d. Good lawes ought to be obserued, 249. 2. c.
Lawyers among the Iewes were their Priests, 441. 2. b.
League with the diuell twofolde, 33. 1. d.
Learning: how to attaine to good learning, 295. 1. d. A reall learning of Christ, 179. 1. c. and 2. d.
Legacies for masses may bee applyed for Gods true worship, 241. 2. c.
Lent fast: what the Fathers say of it, 542. 1. d.
Leo his forged workes, 502. 1. c.
Letting of lands should be with moderation, 440. 1. b.
Liberalitie described, pag. 143. 1. c. See Almes.
Libertie of will in good things lost in Adam, 248. 2. a.
Christ: an libertie described, 306. 2. b. parts of it. 267. 1. c. 306. 2. b. benefits of it, 307. 2. d. 308. 1. b.
How magistrates authoritie may stand with it. 307. 2 c.
Christ the author of it, 308. 1. d. It belongs onely to beleeuers, 308. 2. b.
Duties from the benefits of Christian libertie, 308 1. c. 309. 1. a.
How Christians apply these benefits, 308. 2. c. abuse of Christian libertie, 320. 2. a. right vse of it, 321. 1. a.
Lie described. 183. 1. a. How it differs from vntruth, 183. 1. b. From a parable or figure, 183. 1. c. from concealing a thing, 183. 1. d. From faigning and fembling, 183. 2. a.
Sporting lies disallowed, pag. 183. 2. c. Officious lies disallowed, pag. 183. 2. d. Reasons against lying, pag. 184 1 a. 339 2. d.
Life vncreated, 341. 2. d. Life naturall and spirituall, 213. 2. b. 218. 1. c. 342. 1. a. two degrees of spirituall life, 342. 1. a. The roote of spirituall life, Christ, pag. 216. 1. d. how hee liueth in vs. pag. 216. 2 d. How to know know it, 217.2.c. How to attaine it, 217.2.d. How to liue wisely, 213.2.c. seuen rules of Godly life: 214.1.a. how to liue iustly, 214.1.d. why a beleeuer is said to liue by faith, 218.1.b. howhe liues by faith, 218.1.c. 236.1.c. To liue by sense only, is beastlike, 218.2.c. The end why man liues, 322.2.d.

Life of glorie, 342.1.a. it hath three degrees, 36 1.c. 214.2.a. its a legacie, 243.1.d.
Light of nature described, 49.2.a.
Linus counterfeit workes, 490.2.b.
Long suffering what it is, 338.2.c. how to get and keepe it, 338 2.c.
Lot in vse an holy thing, 141.2.c. how Lot differs from a casuall act, pag. 142.1.b.
Loue, Gods tender loue to his, 393.1.a. His speciall loue giues assurance of saluation, 20.1.c. How to know his speciall loue, 20.2.d. Two speciall effects of our loue of God, 63.1.d. our loue of God described, 338.1.c. its knowne two waies, 21.1.b. three signes of it, 338.1.c.
Loue is the law of Christ, 361.2.d.
Loue of our neighbour described, 21.2.d. 291.1.b. 321.2.c. 338.1.d. how the whole law is fulfilled in it, 322.2.b. Brotherly loue discerned three waies, 20.2.d. 338.1. How its called a new commaundement, 362.1.b.
Loue is not the forme of faith, 227.2.d. 338.1.c. how they differ, 314.1.b. How loue is a fruite of the Spirit, 339.1.b.
Loue of the truth and of the world cannot stand together, 414.1.d. How to come to loue Christ, 163.2.c. In what case we must loue another better then our selues, 291.1.c. 322.1.c. 362.2.a.
Ludouicus Pius his donation to the Pope is forged, 504.1.c.
Lust in the tenth commandement, 326.1.d. Diuers degrees of lust, 99.1.c. 326.2.a. fleshly lusts declared, 341.1.a. how farre they proceede in Gods children, 326.2.a. Two actions of this lust, 327.1.b. How to mortifie lust, 331.1.c.
Luther and Melancton did well temper one the other, 361.1.b.
Lycanthropia, 221.1.c.

M

Machiauels policie condemned, 117.1.d.
Magistracie necessarie among Christians, 266.2.c. defended against Anabaptists, 307.2.b. 421.1.a. how it meddles with Christian libertie, 307.2.c. Its ouer the publishing of faith and profession, 324.2.a. A magistrate may compell his subiects to professe true religion, 411.2.d. obiections against it answered, 412.1.b. Magistrates authoritie in making lawes, 437.1.a. In moderating the rigour of them: see lawes.
Magnanimity is a vice, 113.2.c. 334.2.b.
Man, How men are nothing of themselues, 367.1.a. his condition outward and inward, 194.2.a.
Manichees: their errours, 620.2.c.
Many, for all, 657.2.b.
Marriage described, 296.2.c. Its more then a ciuill contract, 297.1.c. of degrees prohibited in marriage, 574.1.b. Childrens marriage is at the disposing of the parents, 269.1.b. whether the father may command the child to marrie, 269.1.c. whether it be any marriage without consent of parents, 269.2.a. whether spirituall kindred may hinder marriage, 77.2.b. what the Fathers say of Priests marriage and single life, 575.1.a. second marriage after diuorce disallowed by some Fathers, 574.2.b. prohibition of marriage disallowed of the Fathers, 576.2.d.
Spirituall marriage betweene Christ and his Church, 291.2.a. vses of it, 303.1.d.
Marie conceiued in Originall sinne, 596.1.c. The booke of her translation doubted of, 491.1.a. the feast of her assumption instituted, 501.2.d. of houres and seruice to her, 596.2.d. of her assumption in the Fathers, 598.1.a. of the feasts of her conception and purification, 598.1.d.
Markes of Gods children: See children.
Marke of distinction in Scripture twofold, 261.2.a.
Marke of Christ twofold, 426.1.d. The vse of markes in Christians that suffer, 427.1.a. markes of Satan, 427.1.d.
Saint Marke his Masse counterfeit, 489.1.c.
Martiali of Burdeux a counterfeit Apostle, 490.2.c.
Masse: its a masse of Ceremonies, 270.2.a. The degrees whereby it came vp, 554.1.c. The masses fathered on the Apostles are forged, 489.1.b.c. Appurtenances to the masse, 564.1.d. of priuate masse, 555.2.d. whether a man may goe to the masse and keepe the heart to God, 87.2.a.
Matrimonie no Sacrament, 545.1.c.
Maximus Taurinensis, his sermons doubted of, 501.2.a.
Meanes: To seuer the meanes from the end, and contra, is the diuels pollicie, 395.1.c.
Meate: of difference of meates by way of religion in the new Testament, 104.2.a. 129.1.d. difference of meate in sundrie respects allowed, 129.1.b. how to vse meates to Gods glorie, 130.2.a. Rules for the measure of meate and drinke, 132.2.c. for Christian moderation in eating, 132.2.c. 336.1.d.
Motiues thereto, 134.1.b.
Mediatour: his ordaining, 608.1.d. Exhibiting, 609.1.c. Fathers acknowledge Christ God and man to bee Mediatour, 513.1.c. How Christ can bee Mediatour being God, 246.2.b. How Moses was a Mediatour, 245.2.c.
Meditation signified by chewing the cud, 71.2.c.
Meekenesse described, 117.2.a. 349.2.a.
how it is to be shewed, 117.2.a.
A practise of it in auoiding offence, 212.1.c. in putting vp wrong, 288.2.a. Motiues to meekenesse, 349.2.b.
Melancholy described, 46.2.a. effects of it, 46.2.b. How it differs from trouble of conscience, 47.1.d. How to cure it, 47.2.a.
Melchisedecks offering, 552.2.b.
Members of Christ of diuers sorts, 78.2.c. 636.1.c.
Memorie in preaching, 670.1.a. Artificiall memorie disallowed, 670.1.a.
Mercie, put for all spirituall blessings flowing from Gods loue, 425.1.a.
Gods mercie hath a double effect in vs, 177.2.c. Its tempered with iustice in the preseruation of mankinde, and why, 457.2.c. abuse of Gods mercie, 177.2.d.
Merit of workes confuted, 229.1.c. 391.1.a.
Papists take merit of condignitie three waies, 391.1.c. What the Fathers speake of merit, 535.1.d. Christ did not merit for himselfe, 272.2.d. Christs merit for vs, made not vs able to merit, 311.2.a. How Christs merits are sufficient; how effectuall, 609.1.c.
Methodius booke of creation doubted of, 492.1.d.
Meronymie Sacramentall shewed, 656.1.c.
Milke and strong meate in Scripture, 665.2.d.
Ministers of the Gospel ought to bee called, 158.2.d. their calling ought to be manifest to themselues, and to their hearers, 159.1.c. 171.1.d.
How a man may know himselfe called hereto, 159.1.d. 196.2.c. our Ministers calling defended, 172.1.b. 196.2.c. The matter of their ministerie, 169.2.b. 380.2.c. Their rule in preaching, 423.2.b. How they should learne Christ, 179.1.c. and handle the word, 169.2.b. and c. wherein powerfull teaching stands, 222.2.d. properties of the ministerie, 222.2.a. It breeds true loue, 291.1.a. It begets children to God, 293.2.c. Its a labour, 189.2.b 293.2.b.a calling subiect to troubles, 426.1.a. efficacie of the ministerie, 196.1.d. 222.2.b. why this calling must be chosen, 287.1.d. Ministers duty to the Gospel, 196.1.c. 170.1.a. Their duty to their people, 197.2.a. 312.1.d. 337.1.c. Their presence with them is necessarie, 294.2.d. They should frame themselues to their capacities, 295.2.a. Their fidelitie patterned, 287.1.d. 408.2.b. Their zelousie for Christ, 292.2.a.c. They must ioyne life with doctrine, 201.2.c. 212.1.d. 416.1.a. be labourers, 189.2.d. 287.2.a. 381.2.c. watchmen, 287.2.a.
Ministers should accord among themselues, 182.1.d. Their subiection to iniuries, 318.1.c. 383.2.c. Their comfort vnder iniuries, 383.2.d. and in their peoples not profiting, 389.1.c. why Ministers are called pillars, 196.2.d. Foure duties of their people vnto them, 377.1.b. Their maintenance from the people prooued, 377.1.b. how they should be maintained, 377.2.d.
A set stipend preferred before contribution, 378.1.b. why the people are sparing towards them, 386.2.c. they may take wages though they haue maintenance of their owne, 382.1.a.
Ministeriall teaching peculiar to Christ, 173.1.a. legall ministerie of death now abolished, 246.1.c. The subiection of auncient beleeuers to the ministerie, 203.1.b. when the people lost their right in elections, 601.2.d.
Miracles onely wrought by God, 227.1.a. the vse of miracle, 227.1.d.
Miserie of man by nature, 275.1.c. 481.2.c. through sinne, 481.2.b.
Missam facere: what it is in the Fathers, 552.2.c.
Mockers at Gods iudgements, 376.1.a. mockers shalbe cast out, 305.2.a. mocking is persecution, 305.1.a. It proceeds from contempt of grace, 305.1.b.
Moderation of mind about riches, 227.1.b. 313.1.c.
Modestie in speaking of our selues, 165.2.b. 176.1.a.
Monasticall life no state of perfection, 323.1.a. its against the order of nature, 100.2.a.d. 424.1.b. Three sorts of monasticall vowes, 99.1.a. whether they binde, 99.1.b. when monasticall life began, pag. 594.1.c. Monkes, 594.1.c.
Monethes put for the feasts on the day of the new Moone, 285.1.d. A propheticall moneth, 680.1.b. Two kind of monethes with the Hebrewes, 679.2.a.
Mordecai, why he denied to worship Haman, 85.2.d. when he was carried captiue, 713.
Moses a Mediatour, 245.2.c. Moses bookes are the word of God, 230.2.d. He slew the Egyptian as a Magistrate, 121.1.a.
Murther oppugned, 335.2.d. of triall of murther by bleeding of the corps. 120.2.a.
Murthering thoughts, 468.1.b.
Musicke of the Temple was typicall, 303.2.c.

N

Naaman: of his going into the house of Rimmon, 87.2.c.
Nakednesse corporall and spirituall, 266.1.a.
Names two to one thing, 660.1.b.
Narcissus a selfe louer, 367.2.b.
Nature in the Trinitie, 271.1.b.
Naturall men of two sorts, pag. 348 2.d. their morall actions are all sinnes, pag. 248.1.d. Nebuchadnezzars raigne begins with Iosias, 712.

Necessitie twofold, 74. 1. a. 135.2.c. 618.2.c. 619. 1.a. How it agreeth to things, 619. 1. b. Three degrees of neede, 144. 2.a.
Neighbour who is: mans naturall euill thoughts against his neighbour, 465. 1. d.
Nero Empetour: when and how long, 726.
New creature described, 421.2.a. it stands in qualities, 421.2.b. 422. 1. b. Triall of it, 422.2.d.
New yeares gifts condemned of old, 676. 1.a.
Niceneſſe of our nature in the good things of God, 166. 1. a. the remedie of it, 166. 1.c.
Nicephorus is fabulous, 505.2.d.
Nimrod his acts, 686.
Noe, the yeares of his preaching, 681. the quantitie of his arke, 58. 1.a. his drunkenneſſe, 336.2.d.
Nouatian errour confured, 348.1.d.
Number: why change of number is vſed, 650.2.d. how we number our daies, 181. 2.c.
Nunnes, when they firſt began, 595. 2.a.

O

Oath; what it is, 91. 1.d. Foure things in euery oath, 92.1.b. 184.1.c. how an oath is to be taken, 92.2.a. when an oath bindeth, 93. 2.d. when not, 95. 1. b. when it is to be taken, 92.2.d. whether a man may ſweare by the creature directly, and indirectly by by God, 93.1.d. 184.2.a. whether an oath by the creature be a true oath, and to be kept, 91.2.b. whether an oath by a falſe God be an oath, and doe bind, 91.2.c. 94. 1.c. whether an endamaging oath doe binde, 94. 2.a. whether an oath gotten by fraud and ſubtiltie doe bind, 94.2.b. whether an oath gotten by feare and compulſion do binde, 94.2.c. when we muſt ſweare, 184.2.b. Whether the Pope can diſpence with a lawfull oath, 95.2.b. How an oath differs from an obteſtation, 93.2.b.
Obedience described, 206.1.c. of a Chriſtian, 239.1.d. it muſt not bee partiall, 252. 2.a. it muſt be without conſultation, 180. 2.b. New obedience neceſſarie to ſaluation, 16.1.c. Three things in new obedience, 16. 1.c. How a man may frame his life vnto it, 16.2.a. men naturally reſolue not to obey, 464.1.d. Inward obedience, 62. 2.d. 477.1.b
Obedience of Chriſt whereby we are iuſtified, treated of, 205.1.b. and 206. 1. and 2.
Obedience to ſuperiours, 151.2.c.
Oblations, 553.2.a.
Obſeruation of others lawfull for three ends, 350.2.c.
Office what it ſignifies, 293.1.c.
Offences to vs from others, three waies, 117. 2.b.
Offend not God for all the world. 201.1.c.
ſundrie kindes of offenders, 212.2.d.
Old man, what it is, 421.2.b.
Order of deedes threefold, 678.1.a. of nature, ibid. b. of dignitie, ib. of wiſedome, 16.c.
Ordination of Biſhops no Sacrament, 545. 2.b. when the people may ordaine a miniſter, 172.1.a.
Organs, when erected in Churches, 565. 2.a.
Origen full of errours, and his counterfeit workes, 491.2.c.
Originall text of the Bible vncorrupted in the iudgement of the Fathers, 509. 1.d.
Ornaments of gold ſiluer, &c. lawfull, 134. 2.a. how they muſt be vſed, 139.1.a.b.
Otho the Emperours oath counterfeit, 504. 1.d.
Ouerweening our ſelues, 367.2.a. incident to the regenerate, 367.2.c. The cauſes of it, 368.1.a. Remedies of it, 369.2.a.
Outward calling and actions commend vs not to God, 421.1.a. They muſt not puffe vs vp, 421.1.b.
Outward things diuerſly oppoſed to the things of grace, 422.1.a.

P

Pacification in religion, how to be wrought 295.2.a. it may not be admitted with Papiſts, 323.2.d.
Painting of faces reprooued, 138.2.c. A worthie painting commended to them, 223. 2.a.
Palladius hiſtoria Lauſaica a fardle of fables, 499.2.d.
Papias of Ieruſalem cenſured by Euſebius, 491.1.b.
Papiſts preuaile much by outward ſhewes 421.1.a. like the Phariſes in ſtrict vrging of others, 415.2. b. They ioyne with Atheiſts againſt Scripture, 60.1.c. and 2.b.
Parable; how it differs from a lie, 183. 1.c.
Pardon of ſinne: grounds ſhewing the poſſibilitie of pardon, 42.2.a. Grounds of pardon graunted, 43. 1. a. foure degrees in pardon of ſinne, 186.1.d. what we aske in our daily praier for pardon, 186.2.c.
Pardon of ſinne with Papiſts, 207.2.c.
Parents authoritie ouer their Children, 269. 1.a. Their dutie towards them before they die, 269.2.c.
Paſcaſius depraued, 504.2.b.
Paſſion of Chriſt what it is, 274.1.a.
Paſſeouer had two parts, 681.2.c. The whole day of the Paſſeouer was not holy, 680. 2.c.
Paſtor: ſee Miniſter.
Patience towardes God, pag. 63. 1. a. in diſtreſſe diſtreſſe taught, 21.2.d. 177.2.a. 506.2.a. in waiting for Gods promiſes vrged, 398. 2. c. and 999.1. Gods patience to reward, 398.2.d. 448.1.d. and 2.450. 1.b.

Pauls calling to the Apoſtleſhip, 158.1.b. 177.1.d. and 178 1. his dignitie by calling aboue the reſt, 160.1.a. he rather then Peter was vniuerſall Biſhop, 185.1.b. His fidelitie, 287. 1. d. his iourneyes to Ieruſ. 187. 2. b. his motherly affection toward the Galatians, 293. 1.d. he ſinned not in purifying himſelfe, 117. 1. b. his beheading, 726.
Peace, for welfare, and proſperitie, 423. 2.b.
Peace described. 338.2.b. it is threefold, 161. 2.d. 324.1.a. 423.2.b. it ought to be ſought and maintained, 323. 2.d. how it is maintained, 338.2.b. Peace in man threefold, 424.2.d. Three rules for keeping Church peace, 324.1.a. How euill peace is got and preſerued, 324. 2.b. houſhold peace how preſerued, 324.2. d. peace in euill is Satans peace, 324.1.d.
Peace without grace is no peace, 162.2.b.
Pelagius held all to be redeemed but not deliuered, 639.1.a.
Penance: how diſtinguiſhed by Papiſts, 259. 1.c.
Penance Sacramentall, 565.2.c.
Pentecoſt treated of. 597.2.c. 681.1.d.
Perfection of parts and degrees, 234.1.b.
Perilous times, what to doe in them, 219.1.a. 266.2.a. 279.2.a.
Periury committed three waies, 95. 1. d. whether breaking of ſtatutes and orders of corporations whereto a man is ſworne, be periurie, 95.1.d. whether a man may exact an oath of him who is thought will periure himſelfe, 96.1.b.
Permiſſion of ſinne, 617.2.b. It makes it neceſſarie in man, 620.2.a.
Perſecution described, 175. 1.a. It followes true profeſſion, 505.1.a. 414.2.b. why God ſuffers it, 175.1.d. it ſhall haue an end, 305. 2.b. who perſecute, 304. 2.d. of ſlight in perſecution, 88.2.a. &c.
Eight conditions in Chriſtian flight, 89. 2.d. when a Paſtour may not flie, 90.2.b. The grounds of perſecution, 305.1.b.
Perſeuerance in grace, 637.2.d. what it is, 637.2.b. the ground of it, 242.2.d. arguments againſt it anſwered, 638.1.a.
Perſon in the Trinitie what it is, 271.1.c. Their diſtinction, 277.2.a.
Peters primacie was of order not of power, 182.1.c. 582 1.b. not ouer Iewes and Gentiles both, 195.2.c. hee was not Biſhop of Rome, 195.2.d. how the Fathers ſpeake of Peter, 582.1.c. how he is called a rocke, 583.1.c. how hee ſinned at Antioch, 200.1.d. and 2. his maſſe is forged, 489.1.b.
Phariſes; the principall ſect among the Iewes, 174 1.d.
The chiefe points of their doctrine, 175. 2.a.
Philoſophers of the heathen not ſaued, 394. 2.a. errours of naturall Philoſophie, 334 2.a.
Pilgrimage, when it got footing, 542.2.d. In what ſort lawfull, 582. 1. a. Popiſh pilgrimage condemned, 582.1. a. vowes thereof vnlawfull, 97.2.c.
Pilgrimage to the holy land vaine, 300. 1.c. Chriſtians muſt liue as pilgrimes, 300. 2.b.
Plaies or enterludes among Chriſtians ought to be forbidden, 140.2.c. 295.2.c.
Pleaſures of the world not to be eagerly in, 417.2.b.
Pleonaſmus: and the vſe of it, 658.1.c.
Pollicie without pietie what it breedeth, 417. 1.a. whether a Chriſtian may vſe pollicie, 116.2.c. rules of direction in the vſe of it, 116.1.c.
Poligamie in the Patriarkes a ſinne of tolleration, 97.2.a. 297. 1.a. it was not adulterie, 297.1.d.
Poore men muſt ſometime giue almes, 243. 2.b. grounds of contentation to the poore, 421. 1. d. our care for the poore, 198. 1.d.
Pope, not Peters ſucceſſour, 759. 2.d. How he is, 189.1.c. Popes primacie declared, 284.2.b. diſcuſſed out of the Fathers, 580. 2.d. ouerturned, 195.2.c. 284.2.b. of his temporall iuriſdiction, 585.1.b. of his authoritie ouer the whole Church, 588. 1.a. He hath not a definitiue iudgement infallible, 586.2.a. nor priuiledged from errour, 200.1.a. 586.2.a.
Popes were ſubiect to the Emperours, 590. 2.c.
Poperie: a kind of Atheiſme, 461.1.a. Its againſt Chriſtian libertie, 309.1.a. its the way to perdition, 231.2.d. 309.2.d. Their Idolatrie, 281.2.b.c. 331.2.d.
The impietie of poperie, 203.1.c. 269.2. b. No vnion with poperie, 792.2.d. 220. 1.d. nor tollleration of it, 310.1.a. Its a deprauation of the Goſpel, 167.1.b. 193. &c. how it may be called the old religion, 422. 2.d. Its not truly Catholike, 486. many grounds of poperie, ruinated, 220. 1.c. 284.2.b. diſſwaſions from poperie, 319. 1.d.
Ten motiues to poperie anſwered, 302. 1.c.
Popiſh pollicies, 416 1.b.c. Popiſh ſlanders of our doctrine, 398.1.b. Popiſh worſhip ſtands in outward things, 411.2.b. their perfection is abomination 425.2.a.
Popular applauſe not to be ſought, 371.1.d.
Poſtſcripts of Epiſtles no part of Canonicall Scripture, 429. 1. c. Sundrie poſtſcripts ſhewed to be erroneous, 429. 1. b. and 430. 1.
Poſſeſſion by the diuell; how knowne, 37.2.a. comfort therein, 37.2.c.

Powerte: why it oft befals the Church, 197. 1.c. comforts in powertie, 240 1.c. whether a man with good conscience may giue himselfe to volontarie powertie, 99. 2. b. 128. 1. a. 146, 1. a. when the vow hereof was first receiued, 596, 1. a.
Power of God twofold, 630. 2. c.
Prayer to God only, 64. 2. d. To God as to a Father, 279 2. 279. 2. c. prayer to Saints vnlawfull, see Inuocation. Right manner of praying, 279. 2. d. conditions before prayer, 63. 2. d. in prayer, 64. 1. a. after prayer, 65. 2. c. prayer of the heart, 63. 1. d. How to aske blessings temporall and spirituall, 64. 2. b. 100. 1. c.
A set forme of prayer lawfull, 67. 1. a. of the ministers prayer, 671. 2. c. of voyce in prayer publike and priuate, 66. 2. c. of gesture in prayer publike and priuate, 67. 1. c. of the place of prayer, 67. 2. b. time of prayer, 68. 1. b. what the Fathers say of prayer for the dead, 530. 2. d. comforts in trouble from inability to pray, 69. 2. b. from deadnesse of Spirit, and by-thoughts, 69. 2. c. from want of feeling the fruite of their prayers, 69. 2. d. 240. 2. a. 255. 2. d. 279. 1. d. why God defers the accomplishment of our praiers, 69. 2. b. He grants the two vaies, 69. 2. c. we must not limit God for time in granting, 277. 2. d. 270. 2. c.
Preaching described, 646. 1. d. matter of preaching, 646. 2. b. what it is to preach Christ, 179. 2. c. manner of preaching 269. 2. c. 222. 2. d. 289. 2. a. 670. 1. d. In what cases humane testimonies may be alleaged, 241. 2. b. 581. 2. b. 664. 1. b. Gesture in preaching, 672. 2. d. necessitie of preaching, 224. 2. b. whether all truth must alwaies be taught, 528. 2. a.
Right deuiding of the word, 661. 2. c.
Preachers should not be contemned in their ministerie for personall faults, 193. 2. c.
Preachers necessarie in them, 671. 1. b.
Their ministeriall gifts, 672. 1. b. why plaine and powerfull preachers are hated, 284. 2. d.
Preachers that restored the Gospel were called extraordinarily, 171. 2. b.
Predestination described, 606. 1. a. parts of it, 607. 1. b.
Predestination of all to life is not in scripture, 230. 2. d.
Foreknowledge of faith or infidelity is not the cuse of it, 631. 2. b. Crimes imputed to our doctrine of Predestination removed, the first, 611. 2. d. second, 612. 1. c. third, 613. 1. d. fourth, 621. 2. a.
Their forme of predestination that maintaine vniuersall grace, 627. 2. d. eleauen errours shewed in it, 627. 2. b.
Popish forme of predestination, 640. 2. c.
Pride in apparell: how great a sinne, 139. 2. c. height of pride, 470. 2. a. rootes of it, 368. 1. a. fruits of it, 467. 2. d. 470. 1. c. it keepes vs from pleasing God, 270. 1. a. c.
Pride in ouerweening our selues, 284. 2. a. 469. 2. d. in ouerweening our knowledge, 224. 1. d. remedies of pride, 224. 2. a.
Priests and Iesuits should die for seducing, 251. 2. d.
Principles in religion, 665. 2. c.
Prison, whether a man may breake prison, 90. 2. d.
Processions; when instituted, 544. 2. a.
Procorus historie of Iohn counterfeit, 491. 2. c.
Profanenesse, whence it ariseth, 257. 2. a.
Profession only, makes not Abrahams children, 229. 2. d. who deceiue themselues in their profession, 342. 1. d.
True profession subiect to persecution, 414. 2. b. with profession we must ioyne practise, 175. 2. d. 416. 1. a.
Progresse in good things vrged, 225. 1. d.
Promise: sixe rules in applying God promise to the distressed, 25. 2. b.
A promissarie oath and a single promise differ, 94. 2. b.
Promise of Canaan made to Abraham, 686.
Promise of life euerlasting, how rightly applyed, 25. 2. d. Christ the foundation of all Gods promises, 243. 2. d.
Promises respecting workes, presuppose reconciliation in Christ, 236. 2. c.
The power of Gods promise, 497. 2. c. 303. 2. b. children of the promise, 304. 1. c. difference of Legall and Euangelicall promises, 242. 2. c.
Promises of temporall blessings limited, 126. 1. c. 302. 2. a. 38. 2. a.
The promise made to Abraham is a couenant, and a will, 243. 1. c. what the certentie of Gods promises teacheth vs, 32. 1. d.
Propitiatorie: Christ is ours, 273. 2. b.
Prophecie or art of preaching, 646. 1. a.
Protestants differ from all others in Gods worship, 61. 2. c.
Prouerbiall sentences not alwaies true but for the most part, 385. 1. b.
Prouidence: workes of Gods prouidence shewing there is a God, 50. 2. a.
A threefold worke of Gods prouidence in mens action, 617. 1. d.
Gods prouidence scene in ordering euill things well, 299. 2. a.
wee must depend on Gods prouidence, 177. 1. d.
Prudence beginneth with the feare of God, 114. 1. d. The rule of prudence, 114. 2. a. The practise of prudence, 114. 2. c. nine rules thereof, 114. 2. d.
Prudentius, wherein counterfeit, 495. 2. a.
Puckius holding saluation in any religion confuted, 166. 2. b. 425. 1. c.
Punishment of sinne in the same kinde, 381. 1. a. obligation vnto punishment hath three parts. 306. 1. b. punishment of the wicked answerable to their desert, 388. 2. c.
Purgatorie confuted, 407. 2. b. who first spake of it, 506. 1. c. what Fathers say of it, 568. 1. c.
Put on Christ: what it is, 358. 1. a. 365 1. b. how done, 366. 1. b.

R.

Raca: what it signifies, 303. 1. b.
Race of religion, 314. 2. b. euery Christian must runne it, 314 2. d. How to runne well, 315. 1. b.
Recabits: of their abstaining from wine, 101. 2. c.
Recapitulation in stories, 60. 1. b. 678 2. a.
Receiue: how we receiue Christ, 265. 2. d.
Reconciling of Scriptures that differ, 659. 2. a. cautions therein, 659. 2. d.
Recreations are lawfull, 140. 1. c. what are lawfull; what vnlawfull, 140. 1. d. we may not vse holy things for recreations, 242. 2. a. nor sinnes, 140. 2. b. not God in iudgements, 141. 1. d. How we ought to vse recreations, 142. 1. d.
Recusants may be compelled to the exercises of Religion, 191. 1. a. 491. 2. d.
Redeemer proued by reason, 54. 2. d. and that he is both God and man, 55. 1. a.
Redemption exceeds the worke of Creation, 163. 2. a. 421. 1. d. Iustice in Christ, 284. 1. c. 309. 2. d. What Christ suffered in working it, 238. 1. d. To whom the price of it was paid, 237. 2. c. Its not vniuersall, 248. 2. b. 609. 1. d. 622. 2. b.
Readings: of diuers readings in the Bible, 221. 2. c.
Regeneration described, 204. 2. b. The state of it shewed, 311. 1. c. 327. 1. a. 421. 2. a. 635 1. d. is the proper worke of God, 196. 2. d. its neuer vtterly extinguished, 294. 1. a. 416. 1. d. it brings a totall change, 311. 1. c. motiues to seeke it, 273. 2. d. 302 2. a. The state of the regenerate, 52. 2. c. 45. 1. b. 200. 2 d. his priuiledge, 45. 2. d.
Relaps into sinne: how to comfort such, 43. 1. c.
Religion signifies two thing, 60. 2. d. parts of religion, 61. 1. a. What is true religion, 60. 2. d. Markes of true religion, 210. 1. a. 224. 2. d. Onely in true religion is saluation. 249. 1. a. 311. 2. d. It breedes ioy not melancholie, 303. 2. d. Infallible authoritie in matters of religion, 301. 2. a. How to know the certentie of religion, 159. 2. b. 224. 2. d. resolution in religion required, 180. 2. b. forwardnes in religion required, 328. 2. c. 175. 1. c. emulation in religion allowed, 175. 2. d. profiting in religion required, 175. 2. b. 315. 1. a. The fault of the world touching religion, 225. 1. b. 323. 1. a. to esteeme it humane policy, 463. 1. b. To esteeme of it by outward things, 313. 1. c. to bee ignorant of it, 189. 2. c. Causes of corrupting Apostolicke religion, 506. 1. a. mans leuitie in religion, 165. 1. d.
How to be reformed, 122. 1. b.
Reliques: what the Fathers held touching reliques, 525. 1. b.
Remembrance of Christ, 287. 2. d.
Remission of sinnes: how proper to Christ, 284. 2. a.
Renouation, what it is, 422. 2. b.
Rents should be moderate, 440. 1. a.
Repentance in God, how, 128. 2. a.
Repentance Legall and Euangelicall, 213. 1. d. True repentance, 15. 2. d. Its taught in the Gospell, not the Law, 236. 2. b. repentance is necessarie to saluation, 15. 2. b. necessarie before we pray, 63. 2. d. Its not in our owne power, 422. 2. c. renued repentance is Gods gift, 277. 1. a. repentance must not be delayed, 213. 1. a. 347. 2. b. 581. 1. c. repentable belongs to Baptisme. 79 2. b. 257. 1. d. particular repentance for known sinnes is necessarie, 597. 1. b. 14. 1. b generall repentance accepted for vnknowen sinnes, 597. 1. b. 7. 2. b. in two cases, 14. 2. a. repentant persons must not be vpbraided with sins past, 194. 1. b. Their practise in life, 16. 1. b. Their comfort, 163. 2. d.
Repetitions vsed for weighty causes, 169. 1. b 226. 2. d. 659 1. c.
Reports may bee heard and told, but how, 189. 2. b.
Reprobation described, 610. 2. b. Gods double act therein, 610 2. b. two degrees in the second, 611. 2. a. it rests not in mans necessitie of damnation, 620. 1. c.
Reproofe: who are to reproue, 354. 2. c. in what cases men need not reproue, 355. 1. d four waies of reproofe, 357. 2. d. who are to be reproued, 351. 2. b. for what, 355. 1. b. Ten rules for the maner of reproofe, 356. 1. a. reproofe must not be delayed, 357. 2. b yet time must be obserued, 358. 1. c. It must be in loue, 165. 1. b. with meeknesse, 159. 1. d. Three cautels therein, 196. 2. a. it must be on certeine knowledge, 356. 1. c. 202 2. c. why the wicked cannot endure reproofe, 347. 2. d. a patterne of humilitie vnder reproofe, 159. 2. c.
Resistance to euill practised, 199. 1. b. it must be present, 202. 1. b.
Restitution for wrong, 197. 2. d. who must restore, 197. 2. d. to whom, 197. 2. d. what, 198. 1. a. when, 198. 1. b. in what order, 198. 1. c.
Reuelation ordinarie and extraordinarie, 172. 1. d. Extraordinarie foure waies, 172. 1. d.
Reuenge; how to suppresse the desire of it, 328. 2. c.
Reuerence to superiours shewed in sixe rules, 151. 1. a. signes of reuerence to Gods ministers, 289. 2. d.
Reuolts of two sorts, 165. 1. c.
Reward double, 293. 1. c. God rewardeth foure waies, 394. 1. 2. the time of Gods reward, 558. 2. a. How life euerlasting is a reward, ward, 393.1.c. we may doe good with respect to reward, 397.2.b. reward haibe according to workes, 387.1.b.

Rhetorick in Scripture no foppetrie, 298.2.d.
Riches: how farre a man may seeke them, 125.1.b. how possesse and vse them, 226.2.a.d. necessarie vse of riches, 102.2.d. They may not be hoarded in, 417.1.c. How to become rich, 249.1.c.
Right: no reliq of our right, 448.2.d. A caution in this duty, 446.1.b.
Right hand: Scripture makes it a place of inferiority, 151.1.b.
Righteousnesse declared, 228.2.d. 421.2.d.
Righteousnesse twofold: Euangelicall and Legall, 148.1.b. of righteousnesse imputed, 229.1.a. it was taught by the Fathers, 229.1.b. man thought of his owne righteousnesse, 471.2.c.
Rites and Ceremonies, abounding in religion make it a bondage, 270.1.d.
Rome, no Church, 310.2.c. She hath no infallible assistance of the Spirit, 299.2.d. 302.2.c. Her beleefe declared, 486.1.a. It is not truely Catholicke, 486.1.a. She goes a whoring from Christ, 302.1.c. She is departed from grace, 166.1.a. 238.1.d. She abrogates the free promise, 244.2.b. Her religion is corrupt, 166.2.a. 244.2.c. Iewish for rites and ceremonies, 270.2.a. Baptisme there makes it no true Church, 302.1.b. Her abominations, 216.2.a. Her resemblance to Babylon, 582.2.c.
Rudiments of the world, c. not Moses ministerie, 270.1.a. 283.2.d.
Rule of Christian walking, 423.2.a. It is only one, 423.2.c. Popish rules of life are many, but naught, 423.2.d.

Sabbath: what it is, 679.1.d. what was Ceremoniall in it, 105.1.b. 251.1.b. 286.1.c. what is morall, 106.1.c. 286.1.c. 251.1.c.
Sabbath of the old world, 680.1.b.
Sabbath of the new Testament, 684.1.a. Ties'd to the Lords day, 106.2.d. 286.1.b. 687.1.a. whether the Church may alter it from the seuenth day, 105.1.d. whether it be obserued only for order, 286.2.a. how it is to be obserued. 108.2.d. whether we must rest as strictly as the Iewes, 105.2.d. 109.1.a. what we must rest from, 109.2.c. what workes may then be done, 110.1.b. of recreations on the Sabbath, 110.1.d. of doing the workes of our calling on it, 119.2.c. How the Iewes Sabbath and ours differ, 108.1.c.
How the Sabbath rest is sanctified, 111.1.a. of the preparation to the Sabbath, 111.1.c. 680.2.b. when the Sabbath begins, 111.2.b. Sabbath put for a weeke, 679.1.d. a Sabbatharie yeare, 681.2.d.
Sacrament: how the Fathers speake thereof, 544.2.c. of keeping the Sacrament, 556.2.d
Sacraments administred by meere priuate persons are nullities, 73.1.a. Whether they be true Sacraments being administred by Hereticks, Idolatrous and insufficient ministers, 74.2.d. Seuen Sacraments of the New Testament were not acknowledged for 1000. yeares after Christ, 544.2.a. How Sacraments confer grace, 260.2.c. not by the worke done, 260.2.d. 545.1.a. Its a morall instrument, not a physicall, 260.2.a. popish doctrine thereof, 260.2.d.
Sacrifice of the Masse, 550.1.c. what the Fathers say thereof, 550.2.a. Whether now Christ be sacrificed, 223.1.b. Whether intention be therein necessarie, 262.2.d.
Saints: when their canonizing began, 529.2.d. when Saints liues, lessons and hymnes were instituted, 458.2.a. what the Fathers say of their intercession, inuocation & worship, 525.2.c. how they are rightly honoured, 187.1.c. what worship they had in the Fathers time, 530.2.b. they are no mediatours, 246.2.a when their inuocation began, 527.2.b. 529.2.a.
Saluation: How a man may attaine it, 12.2.d. 250.1.d. foure things thereto are necessary 13.2.d. how we must worke it out, 257.2.c. Orders in the causes of Saluation, 176.2.c. Certentie of Saluation shewed, 176.2.d. 278.1.d. and how attained, 281.2.a. way of Saluation is only one, 166.2.b. 249.1.a. the manner of it, is pos.d. It is wholly and alone of grace, 423.2.c. How God would haue all to be saued, 623.1.a.
Sanctification double, 236.1.a. it is imperfect in this life, 43.2.c. 312.2.b. why, 43.2.c. It goes with Iustification, 247.2.c. It declares our Adoption, 19.1.d. How it is knowen, 19.2.a.
Sara figured the new Ierusalem, 300.1.c.
Satans power limited two wayes, 382.1.a.
Satisfaction for wrong done necessarie, 197.2.d. fiue points touching Satisfaction, 197.2.d.
Satisfaction for sinne by men confuted, 220.2.c.
Satisfaction in the Fathers is not Popish, 565.2.d.
Sinokes of these Prophets approued, 173.1.d. hadde Schooles in the Schoole of Christ. 250.1.b.
Schoolemens writings censured, 168.2.d.
Scisme: how it differs from hereſie, 333.2.c. How to auoid it, 335.2.c. Whether we be Scismatickes for separating from Rome, 355.2.b.
Scorners not to be repsooued, 352.2.b.
Scripture described, 647.1.b. They are the word of God, 54.1.c. 649.1.b. This is a principle in religion, 334.1.a. 511.1.c. proofes thereof from the author and penmen, 54.1.d. 174.1.c. 290.1.b. 649.1.c. from the matters of Scripture, 54.2.c. 474.2.d. from the effects, 55.1.d. 214.2.c. from properties, 55.2.d. from contraries, 56.1.a. from Testimonies, 56.1.c. 170.2.a. 649.2.c. objections objections against it answered, 56.2.c. To be assured hereof is necessarie, 170.1.d. great vse of this assurance. 171.1.c. how it is obtained, 170.2.a. 649.1.b. Sufficiencie of Scripture, 167.2.a. 646.2.c. Their perfection acknowledged by Fathers and Schoolemen, 487.1.a. Purite of Scripture, 646.2.d. Eternitie. 646.2.d. Authoritie of Scripture, 168.2.c. it depends not on the testimonie of the Church, 168.2.c. 171.1.c. 180.2.a. what the Fathers say herein, 510.2.d.

Scriptures are a iudge in controuersies, 248.1.b. 302.2.d. 647.1.b. the Fathers say so. 511.2.a. why called Canonicall, 423.2.b. 647.1.b. Antiquitie of Scripture, 650.1.c. Interpretation of Scripture, and right meanes thereof, 301.1.d. 334.1.c. 511.1.d. 651.2.b.d. Rules of exposition, 554.1.a. 654.2.a. The right sense of Scripture, 334.1.c. one place hath but one full sense, 298.2.a. 651.2.c. Senses of Scripture with Papists, 298.1.d. 651.2.b. when the Scripture speakes by figure. 298.2.c. Peculiarities of Scripture, 276.1.c. of alteration in places quoted, 652.1.c. The summe of Scripture, 179.2.b. 647.1.c. differences of the bookes of Scripture, 409.2.a. The new Testament treated of, 648.1.d. Threefold difference of the new Testament, 409.2.a. The right study of Scripture, 244.1.c. The Iewes deuision of the old Testament, 431.1.a. another diuision, 647.1.d. The summe of euery booke, 647.1.a.
Security, mans naturall thoughts of security, 472.1.c. causes of carnall security, 463.2.c. remedie, 4.2.2.d.
Seditions of two sorts. 335.2.b.
Seducers vse to make faire shewes, 416.1.a.
Selah, wherefore vsed in the Psalmes, 24.2.c.
Self-loue the bane of true loue, 369.1.a.
Sending argues no superioritie among the persons in Trinitie, 277.2.a.
Sending of the Sonne handled, 270.2.d.
Sending of the Spirit, 277.2.b. 240.2.b.
Separation: when wee may separate from a Church, 161.1.d. causelesse separation censured, 161.2.a.
Sermons: how they are the word of God, and hadde Schooles in the Schoole of Christ. how they are the word of man, 159.2.c. how humane testimonies must therein be alleadged, 241.2.b. why the learned must heare Sermons, 195.1.a.
Seruant of God: his profession, 170.1.b. his practise in a Christian life, 264.2.b. of doing Seruice in loue, 321.2.a. Sixe sorts denie that rule, 322.1.a.
Shauing not vsed of the Fathers, 565.1.a.
Signes: the twelue signes not to be regarded, 286.2.d.
Silke-worme shewes the diuine prouidence, 51.1.a.
Simeon Metaphrastes his Legend, 504.2.c.
Simulation, see fayning.
Sinceritie knowen two wayes, 292.1.d.
Sinne described, 3.1.c. It is not a thing formallie subsisting, 3.2.c. 617.1.b. Whether God willeth sinne: and how, 230.2.b. 615.2.b. How not, 615.2.d. 616.1.b. Whether he excite man to sinne, 617.1.c. A threefold action of God about sinne, 617.2.b. A twofold respect of goodnesse in sin, 615.2.c. Horriblenesse of sinne shewed, 272.1.b. Its threewayes infinite, 386.2.a. Originall sinne declared, 4.1.c. parts of it, 306.1.a. How the guilt remaineth after Baptisme, 260.1.b. How the godly and vngodly differ in regard of originall sin, 260.1.c. in actuall sinne, 635.2.c.d. Differences of sinnes, 4.2.a. Sinnes of knowledge, 4.2.b.c. ignorance, 4.2.b. Voluntary sinnes, 5.1.d. all are not voluntary. 5.2.b. Sinnes beside the will, 5.2.a. mixt sinnes, 5.2.c. sinnes of infirmity, 6.1.a. they are properly in Gods children, 6.1.a. 201.2.b. Sinnes of presumption, 6.1.b. three degrees therein, 6.1.c. sinne against the holy Ghost, 6.1.d. why it is vnpardonable, 42.2.a. properties of it, 284.1.b. Sinnes of commission, 6.2.a. of omission, 6.2.a. Degrees thereof, 6.2.a. Crying sinnes, 6.2.d. why so called, 7.1.b. Sinnes of toleration, 7.1.c. Sinnes against God, 8.1.b. against men, 8.1.b. Sinnes by communication nine waies, 8.2.b. all sinnes are mortall, 9.1.a. none venial in their own nature, 233.2.a. what the Fathers hold touching venial sinnes, 520.1.a. Popish distinction of veniall and mortall confuted, 365.2.c. All sinnes are not equall, 9.1.b. 10.2.a. How to consider our personall sinnes, 48.1.c. beginnings of sinne must be resisted, 175.2.b. 202.1.b. 316.2.c. Sinne admitted groweth dangerously, 175.2.a. a course of sin cannot stand with true faith, 227.1.b. 635.1.d. How sinne is aggrauated, 9.1.c. & 10.1. meanes and motiues to loath sinne, 4.2.d. 389.2.d.
Sinne is a burthen, 375.2.a. it sets all out of order, 347.1.d. why sinne is so little regarded, 375.2.b. according to the feeling of sinne is the measure of grace, 375.2.c.
Sinners: what makes a sinner, 3.2.d.
State of a sinner accursed, 233.1.b. great sinners must be great in repentance, 377.2.c.
Sobrietie in diet, 132.2.a.
Sonne of God is God, 271.1.d. objections against it answered, 271.2.a. why called the sonne, 271.1.c.
Sophronius sermon of Maries assumption is forged, 501.1.d.
Sorrow legall and euangelicall, 213.1.d.
Sorrow for sinne contained two things, 15.1.a. what if worldly sorrow be greater then for our sinnes, 14.2.c. Godly sorrow handled, 15.2.c. 24.2.a. 666.1.c. how it is caused, 163.2.d. 666.1.c. Its necessarie in true repentance, 15.2.c. whether its necessarie it should be alwaies sensible, 15.1.a. how it may be discerned, 24.2.b.

Soules of the dead returne not to the liuing. 602.2.c.where the soules of the Fathers were before Christ,516.1.b. 526. 1.c.

Sowing,what it notes metaphorically, 384. 2.d,what it is to sow to the flesh,390.2.c.to the Spirit,390.2.d.

Spying of two sorts, 192. 1. b. what spies we ought all to be,192. 1.c.

Spirit taken diuers waies for the third person,223.2.d.for the operation of it, 224. 1.2.for the gift of regeneration, 325. 1.b. c. for the powers of the soule sanctified, 311.2.d.for the whole man,428.2.a.

Spirit of God described,277.1.c.the office of it in Gods elect, 277.2.d. 329. 1. b. Two actions of it,327.1.c. fiue properties of it, 325.1.c. why it is called the Spirit of the Sonne,277. 1.c. why the workes of it are called fruits,337.2.d.How we receiue the Spirit,224.1.a.240.2.c.

Sixe ends of receiuing it,240.2.d.Rules of the operation of the Spirit,325.2.c. motions and operations of the Spirit, 226.2.d. 247.1.d. How to discerne them from carnall conceits, 19.1.b. How it teacheth vs to crie Father, 278.1.a.what it is to liue in the Spirit, 342.2.d. to walke in the Spirit, 325.2.d.342.1.b. How to know whether we haue the Spirit, 342.2.a. Our duty to retaine the Spirit,241.1.a.

Spirituall men of two sorts, 349. 2. a. their properties, 340.1.d.394.1.b. They are 394.2.d.we must be all spirituall, 326. 1.c.

Spirits,what men must do when their houses are haunted with euill spirits, 58.2.d.

Stage players condemned,See players.

Starres,none malignant,287.1.b.

State of euery man is ordained by God, 277.1.b.our state towards God should be considered,483.1.b.

Stations with the Fathers,544.1.b.

Stewes not to be permitted,310.2.b.

Stoicall fate renounced, 618.2.b. what it is 619.1.a.how we differ from them, 620. 2.b.

Strangers that beleeue must be brotherly respected,188.1.a.

Strength may not be gloried in,417.1.b.

Students duty in diuinitie, 265.1.b.his direction,650.2.d.

Subiection two folde,politicall and Ecclesiasticall,267. 1.b.in suffering and in doing,90.1.a. 851. 2.c.

Subscription to Epistles,see postscription.

Succession threefold, 171. 2.d. Its not always a note of the true Church, 485.1.d.

Succession from Peter scanned, 159. 2. d. How acknowledged in the Fathers, 598. 2.d.

Suffer: How Christs temporarie sufferings did countervaile eternall, 238.2.d.conformity to Christ in our sufferings, 215. 2.b. vses of sufferings,226.2.a.b.

Suffering must be without resistance to Magistracie,90.2.d.151.2.d.how wee may bee able to suffer, 226.1.d. motiues to be willing to suffer,414.2.a.427.2.a.

Supererogation in workes of counsell not knowne to the Fathers, 541. 1.b. Its the Philosophers decorum,506.1.c.

Superiours should giue good example, 201. 2.d.how they must be honoured, 151.1.a. they may be reproued, 352. 1.d. How, 357.2.a.

Supper of the Lord held necessarie to saluation by some Fathers,549 1.c.

How and why it was called a Sacrifice, 550.2.a. How farre forth men may vse or not vse it, 81. 1.a. How the members of the Church are bound to receiue it, 81. 1.b.c. Iust impediments from the Lords Supper, 81. 1.d. Voluntarie absteyners from it reproued, 81. 2.a. How to vse it rightly and to saluation,81.2.c. of preparation thereto, 81.2.d. what if a man finde himselfe vnworthie, 82. 1.c. of receiuing fasting, 82. 2. a. whether those that haue suits in law may communicate, 81. 2. b. 82.2.b.The right receiuing of it, 82. 2. d. Signes in the Lords Supper of two sorts, 82.2.d. what if a receiuer doubt whether he hath faith,83.1.d. Right behauiour after receiuing,84.1.a.Papists administring it in one kind sinne against the light of nature,242.1.c.

Sweare: How God sweareth,91.1.d.see Oath

Synode the first diuerslyiudged of, 503.2.d.

Syriacke Church reiecteth some Epistles, 431.2.d.

Syricius the Pope condemned all mariages, 330.1.b.390.2.a.

T

Tacianus refuted for condemning mariages, 390.1.d.

Tapers not allowed by the Fathers, 564.1.d.

Teachers must first be taught, 173.1.b. doue betweene teachers and people, 288. 1.c. properties of false teachers, 410. 2.c. 413. 1.d.414.1.b. &c.415. 2.a. Essentiall difference betweene true teachers and false, 414.1.c. Christs reall and liuely teaching, 178.1.b.

Teaching priuate and ministeriall, 262.2.a. the teaching of Christ: and of ministers, 372.2.d.

Temperance described,211.2.d.124.1.d.340. 1.a. foure rules for the practise of it, 340. 1.a.

Temple at Ierusalem differed from our Churches, 68.1.a.

Temptations of tryall, 22. 1.d. of Seducement,22.1.d. of Blasphemie with trouble of minde therefrom,and cure thereof, 59. 1.d.How to consider rightly of our particular temptations,482. 1. a. They must not discourage vs vpon the change of our liues, 181. 1. d. Fiue degrees or steps in temptation,635.2.b.

Tenths were partly Ceremoniall, partly Iudiciall,251.2.a. How due at this day,251. 2.a.

Tertullian his errour and counterfeit books, 491.2.b.

Testament old and new described, 299.1.b. they haue both the same inheritance in right,270.1.b. How the people of the old Testament were as children, 270.1.b. two properties of the Testament of workes, 299.2.b. Vnlawfull Testaments may bee abrogated,241. 2.c.

Thankefulnesse to God a part of adoration, 63.1.a. it must goe with prayer, 65.1.c.

Theeuish thoughts,469.1.a.

Theefe vpon the crosse had good workes, 386.1.c.

Theft may now be punished with death,251. 2.b. mitigation of that law,438.2.c.punishment of it by restitution or bondage concerned the Iewes onely, 251.2.b.

Theodorets doubtfull workes, 502.1.b.

Theophilus Antiochenus his counterfeit Commentaries, 491.2.a.

Thoughts inward and outward in respect of the ground of them, 40. 1.d. How mans thoughts may be knowne, 458.2.d. false meanes, 457.2.c How to discerne diabolicall thoughts from our owne,39.2.d.mans euil thoghts touching God,459. 1.d. touching his neighbour, 467.1.4. Touching himselfe, 469.2.d. mans naturall want of good thoughts, 473.1.d. The fruit thereof, 474. 1.d. of preuenting euill thoughts, 475.1.d. of repenting for euill thoughts, 476.1.a.rules for the reformation of euill thoughts,477.1.b.

Time; fiue parts of time, 678. 2 c. composition of time, 680. 1.c. we must know and obserue time, 405.2.c. The manifold obseruation of times, 285.2.a. The manifold lawfull obseruations of time, 406.2.a.285. 2.a. vnlawfull,both superstitious,406.1.b. and heathenish, 406. 1.c. How farre wee must yeeld to the time, 116.1.a. The time of all euents is determined, 177.2.a. wee must make vse of the time, 181.2.c. 405. 1.c. redeeme it, 181.2.d. 405.2.b. vse the present time, 407.1.c. & 2.b. of the spending of time,181.2.c.wicked men abuse it, 407.2.d. Time of all things must be left to God,270 2.c.fulnes of time,270.2.b.How to reconcile differences in computation of time,660.1.d.2.a.&c.

Titus the Emperour regarded spence of time,408.1.b.

Toleration of Poperie not lawfull, 249. 2. c. 324.2.a.of tolerating defects in our brother, 324 1.c.

Traditions tendred as parts of Gods worship,are abominable,167.2.b. Christ hath freed vs from humane traditions,307.1.b. what the Fathers holde of traditions,511. 2.d.

Translation: its probable the vulgar is not Ieromes,510.2.c. The Fathers before Ierom vsed not the vulgar translation,509.2.b.

Transubstantiation or reall presence. 558.1. b.its a magicall fiction,196.2.a.impossible, 272 1.d.a fond conceit,299 1.a.

Trauell; wee must haue warrant for our trauell, 188. 1.b. Three sorts trauell without warrant,188.1.c.

Treasure of the Church, 192.1.d.590.2.a.

Triall; how to stand in the day of triall, 309. 1.c.what Gods triall is,289.2.b.

Trinity of persons in the Godhead, 277. 2.a. the distinction of nature and person in Trinity,271.1.b.

Tropes; their vse,659 1 a.

Truth put for the Gospel, 222. 1.c. Truth is double,of the thing.92.2.b. of the minde, 92.2.c.motiues to speake truth, 339. 2.d. Truth in the graces of Gods Image, 421. 2.d.

Turkes no children of Abraham,229.2.d.

Turcisme,a kinde of Atheisme,460.2.d.

V.

Vau,hath diuers significations,662.1.b.

Vaine glorie described,342.2.c.It feedes on good things,343.1.c. excuses of it remooued,342.2.c.remedies of vaine-glory,343 2.a.

Vanity of all things,34.2.d.

Vertue described, 113. 1.b. kindes of vertue, 113. 2.d. no true vertues but from regeneration,164.1.c.337.2.d.350. 1.a. How ciuill Vertues differ from grace, 113. 1.c.325. 1. b. wherein the nature of vertue stands, 113.2.a.

Vestmēts appertaining to the Masse,564 2.c

Vigilius an Eutychian Heretick,502.2.d.

Violence two folde,178.2.c.

Virgines; how Christians should keep themselues as pure virgins,293. 1.a.

Vnbeleeuers; how to be preached vnto,665. 1.a.

Vncircumcision put for all the dignities of the Gentiles,420.1.d.

Vncleannesse, notes sinnes against nature, 330.2.b.

Vnction; extreame vnction how spoken of in the Fathers,580.2.a.

Vnion with Christ,216.2.b.265.1.c. wherein it stands,265. 1.d.& 2.a. How it is made, 265.2.b.

Vnity no infallible marke of the Church, 323.1.d.Vnity among beleeuers, 267.2.c. 404. 1.a. It must be maintained in diuersity of iudgements,241.1.d.

Vniuersall vocation confuted, 249.2.d. Vniuersal redemption confuted,248.2.b.250. 1.a.622.2.b.641.2.b. How the Fathers spake of it, 625.2.d. It is a Pelagian error, 639.1.a.

Vniuersall grace confuted,250.1.a. 628.2.a. Arguments for it answered, 630. 1.a. How Fathers speake of it,625.2.d.629.2.a.630. 2.c.

Vniuersality approoued,486.2.b.

Vow described, 96.1.c. foure conditions in a lawe-lawful vow, 97.2.b matter of a vow, 97.2.d. The forme of a vow, 97.2.d End of a vow, 98 1.a. Whether it be a part of Gods worship now, 96.2.b. 101.1.a. vowes of Ceremoniall duties, are now no part of Gods worship, 96.2.d. neither vowes of bodily exercise, as fasting, 97.1.c. when a vow bindeth, 97.2.b. of Monasticall vowes, 98.2.c 99.1.a. whether they bind or no. 98.2.d. How and when the vow of continencie tooke place. 576.1.a. vow of regular obedience, 595.2.d.

Vrbanitie is no vertue but a vice, 113.2.c. 334.2.b.

Vse of the creatures, politicke, and spirituall, 321.1.a.

Vsurie: The poore in necessitie may take vpon vsurie, 94.2.d.

W.

Waite on God for blessings promised, 297. 2.c. for saluation, 312.2.c. How we must waite, 312.2.c.

Wantonnesse described, 330.2.c.

War for the recouerie of the holy land needlesse, 300.1.c.

Watchfulnes of a Christian against spirituall enemies, 115.1.c. motiues thereto, 328.2.d.

Weake ones in religion, 190.2.c. supports against hurt by weakenesse, 227.2.a. comforts to weake ones, 293.2.a.

Wearie of well doing, a generall euill, 395.2.d. reasons of it, 396.1.b.

A weeke, 679.2.a. The seuentie weekes, see Daniel.

Whippings in Poperie no markes of Christ, 427.1.c.

Wife: whether she may giue almes without her husbands consent, 144.1.b. Two sorts of wiues, 297.2.a.

Will of God; generall and speciall, 613.2.a. The will of Gods good pleasure and his signifying will, 638.1.d. 657.1.c. How Gods will is exercised about good things, 621.1.b. also about euill, 621.1.c. A threefold action of Gods will, 615.2.d.

Will of man: The state of it in mans first conuersion, 162.1.c. 178.2.b. How it standeth with it in respect of Grace, 162.1.c. 637. 2.a. whether violence be done to it in conuersion, 178.2.c. whether mans will can resist Gods grace in conuersion, 179.1.a. 304 2.a. Free-will before conuersion confuted, 327.2.a. 338.1.b. 422.1.c. 475.1.c. 636. 2.c. 637.

What the Fathers held of Free-will, 515. 1.d. before Pelagius, they spake thereof securely, 517.1.c. How and when God accepts the will for the deed, 44.2.d.

Wine: of mingling it with water in the Lords Supper, 556.2.b.

Wisedome: we may not glorie in it: and why, 416.2.d. See Prudence.

Witch: a witch described, 332.2.d. How to discouer a witch, 333 1.c. false and vncertein signes, 333.1.d. witches cannot turne themselues into other creatures, 227.1.d. Witches should die for their league with Satan, 251.2.d.

Witchcraft prooued to be, 221. 1 b: what it is, and comprehends, 221.1.b. 332.1.c. 460.2.c. The ground of witchcraft, 352. 1.d. Three kindes of witchcraft, 332 2.a. Scratching of the witch vnlawfull, 332.2.c. How the Galatians were bewitched, 221. 2.b. How men doe bewitch, seeing it is Satans worke, 221.1.d.

Witnesses in Baptisme are not simplie to bee reiected, 76.1.d. whether they be necessarie, 76 1.a. How they ought to be qualified, 76.1.d. what they are to doe in behalfe of the child, 76.2.b.

Word of God described, 646.2.b. natural men iudge it foolishnesse, 462.2.d. examination of our selues touching this thought, 463. 2.b. why it is so neglected, 257.2.a. Word put for the Gospell, 376.2.b. Excellencie of Gods word, 170.2.a. 646.2.c. Thirteene points of excellencie in Gods word aboue other words, 170.2.a. word written or spoken by the Apostles is of diuine certentie, 168. 2.b. the right consideration of Gods word, 480.1.a.

Words haue no force in cures, 332 2.b.

Words of knowledge signifie good affection. 207.2.d. so do words of beleeuing, 208.1.a.

Workes of God must be considered, 480.2.a. his workes of grace imprint their image in vs, 283. 1.c. Good workes: How a man may doe them pleasing to God, 17. 1.b. How our workes please God, 235. 1.b. 338.1.a. The matter of good workes, 17. 1.d. the forme of good workes, 17.2.c. ends of good workes, 18.1.a. the best men sinne in doing good workes, 6.2.c. 328.1.d. 391.2.b. obiections answered, 328.1.d.

Workes differ in goodnesse three wayes, 387. 2.c. Gods acceptance of our good works, 18.1.c. motiues to good workes, 389.1.c. 390.1.a.

Workes of the Law put for the doctrine of iustification by workes, 224.1.b. what it is to be of workes, 229.1.a. All workes of the law excluded from being causes of iustification, 205. 1.b. 268.1.a. 310.2.a. euen workes of grace, 205.1.c. 237.1.b. 537.2.b. They concurre not with faith as causes of saluation, 247.2.b. workes made causes of iustification, doe nullifie grace, 287.1.c. Popish obiections for it answered, 391.1.a.

Workes of the flesh declared, 330.1.a.b.

World had a beginning, 49.2.d. It was created in the spring, 679. 2.d. time of the old world, 680. 2.b. time of the new world, 684.1.a. world taken for all beleeuers, 248. 2.c. for all nations in the last age of the world, 622.2.b. For profits, pleasures, and such oppolites vnto Christs kingdome, 419.2.b. Worldly things must not be respected, 420.1.a loue of the world causeth reuolt in religion, 414. 1 d. worldly men described, described, 420.1.b. They do good things for wrong ends, 291.2.d. why they hate the godly, 423. 1.c.

Worship of God twofold, inward and outward, 62. 1.b. heads of inward worship, 62.1.c. the inward onely is properly worship, 63.2.a. all worship should be in Spirit, 312. 2.d. outward worship described, 63.2.b. How God is to be worshipped, 62. 1.b. 162.2.c. all our actions in Gods worship must be grounded on the word, 317. 2.d. A man naturally iudgeth Gods worship a vaine thing, 465.1.d. distinction of worship into doulia and latria is a nouelrie, 530. 1.a. Will-worship a generall thing, 465.2.d.

Wrath of God: How Christ suffered it, 238. 2.a.

X.

Xerxes his raigne, 716.

Y.

A Yeare with the Hebrewes, 679 2.b. when the naturall beginning of it was, 679.2.d. The common beginning of it, 680.1.b.

Yeares put for the Iubile yeares, 285.1.d. a propheticall yeare, 680. 1.b. Two holy yeares; Sabbatarie and Iubile, 681.2.d.

Yeelding of two sorts. 193.1.b.

Yoke. The law a Yoke three wayes, 275. 1.a.

Z.

Zeale in religion described, 176.1.b. required, 176.1.c.

Zipporah her fact in circumcising her sonne a sinne of tolleration, 7.2.c. 262.1.d.

A Table of choice places of Scripture, explained or vindicated from the Aduersarie in this volume.

Chap.	verse.	pag.
	Genesis.
1	5.8	112 1a
	16	56 2d
		(&57 2c
2	9	656 1c
4	15	385 2d
	23	59 1a
	26	662 1d
5	32	678 1b
6	15	58 1a
8	21	456 1a
11	26	680 2d
12	8	659 2d
13	1	659 2d
14	7	678 1d
15	13	244 1a
17	4	231 1b
	14	261 2d
20	3	657 1c
		(658 1c
21	9	58 2c
	14	58 2c
22	14	678 2a
	18	231 1b
42	25	93 2a
43	8	58 2d
	34	337 1a
49	10	250 2d
	Exodus.
4	25	72 c
	28	262 1d
6	24	61 2a
7	19,22	59 1b
9	6,25	59 1c
10	22,23	59 2a
12	8	282 b
	40	244 1b
29	10	276 2c
32	10	183 2b
33	23	61 1c
	Leuiticus.
3	9	400 1b
23	5	679 1c
	32	1122a
	40	303 2d
24	16	252 1a
25	35	1442c
	Numbers.
14	34	680 1d
20	12	466 1b
24	24	551 b
25	4,9	374 1ac
	Deuteronomie.
9	4	471 1c
21	23	239 1d
22	5	136 1c
		252 1d
30	6	233 2d
32	4	234 2c
	Iosua.
2	5	183 2d
7	5,25	374 2b
	Iudges.
3	11	660 2d
		(661 2b
	30	660 2d
		(661 2b
11	26	660 2d
		(661 2c
	31	98 2b
	39	98 1c
16	29	59 2b
	30	336 1b
	Ruth.
1	17	92 1d
	1. Sam.
2	25	8 1a
		(656 2c
13	1	660 2a
16	19	60 1a
17	55	60 1a
18	19	661 2c
19	24	1372c
21	14	117 1c
25	19	144 1d
	26	93 2d
30	6	36 2d
	2. Sam.
12	12	618 2b
16	10	614 1c
		(618 2b
21	8	661 2c
24	1	618 2b
	1. Kings.
15	5	234 1c
	25,28	660 2a
	II. Kings.
1	17	661 1b
2	23	305 1c
3	1	661 1b
5	18,19	87 2c
10	18,30	88 1a
15	30,33	661 1c
23	25	2332d
25	1	646 1c
29	22	303 2d
	II. Chron.
21	2	60 1c
		(2672a
28	19	601 d
	Psalmes.
7	8	659 2a
15	1,2,3	19 2b
		(148 2a
22	16	662 5b
30	11	141 1b
34	9 15	1261b
37	16	1261b
39	13	1271d
40	7	211 1a
45	4	2982b
50	15	30 2a
62	10	1271b
69	28	311 2c
76	11	97 1d
78	22	385 2d
80	13	2492c
89	14	2982c
90	12	34 1b
105	15	6562c
		(6601a
106	21	2291a
122	3	1261b
	5	402 1d
116	11	466 1b
119	8	6562d
122	5	389 1a
130	1	282 d
	4	467 2d
139	21	3342c
	Prouerbs.
3	28	405 2a
4	23	411 d
8	22	663 2c
12	16	1241d
16	6	147 2a
18	14	221 b
19	11	117 2c
	31	4422a
20	18	41 2a
24	16	2001b
27	2	193 2d
	5	3581d
30	8	1252c
	Ecclesiastes.
3	1	312 d
	4	141 1b
4	17	111 1d
7	7	4372a
	16	1161d
	Canticles.
2	7	932 b
4	13	2492c
	Isai.
3	18,19,&c.	135.1b
5	3	678 1a
	4,5	249 2c
6	2	62 2a
11	6	4242c
19	18	9 1c
20	2	1 72c
23	18	146 c
28	15	472 1c
	17	3882c
38	1	657 1bc
	22	678 1a
45	7	29 2c
		(4562a
50	4	1 2a
53	10	2311b
54	1	302 2b
64	6	6592a
66	23	59 1d
	Ieremie.
2	24	390.1c.
4	2 92 1c&2b
9	23	4162d
30	11	30 1a
31	4	141 1c
	34	3801d
32	40	6332d
35	8,9,10	1012c
	Daniel.
3	6	88 1b
4	24	147 1c
	30	46 2d
5	30	32 1b
9	24	53 2b
1	25	682 1d
	Hoſea.
1	2	3302a
	Ionah.
3	4	657 1c
	4	141 1b
	17	111 1d
	16	1161d
	Habacuc.
2	4	235 2a
	Matthew.
1	8	660 2a
	11,12	660 1d
	12	661 2d
4	23	657 2c
5	3	127 1b
	6	24 1c
	21,22	123 1c
		(305 1b
	22	221 1a
	34	93 1d
	40	118 2c
6	13	633 1c
7	7	100 1b
	15	411 1b
	20	148 2d
	23	621 2b
9	13	43 1b
	15	104 1c
10	8	379 1d
	9	128 1d
		(379 2d
	10	659 2b
	25	88 2b
	28	62 2b
		(89 2b
	29,30	669 1c
	33	348 2a
	39	127 1c
13	19	376 2b
16	18	195 2d
		(632 1c
17	1	660 2c
18	15	353 1d
		(358 2c
19	11	100 1a
	12	101 1c
	21	101 2b
		(128 1d
	23	126 2b
20	12	387 2a
22	39	291 1b
23	16	94 1c
	37	618 1d
24	37	472 2b
25	34 35	392 1c
		(and 2a
26	29	362 2d
28	19	257 1c
	Mark.
6	8 9	659 2c
9	24	209 1a
15	25	661 2a
		(679 1a
16	17	361 2c
	6	234 1c
	37	103 2b
	11	136 1a
		(146 1a
	27	661 2d
	18	27 2d
	24	127 1b
	29	118 2c
	23	16 2b
	41	143 1c
		(147 1c
	33	128 1a
		(146 1a
	9	655 2c
	14	147 2b
	26	126 2b
		(127 1c
	33	127 1d
	7	471 1d
	9	126 2c
		(147 2a
	44	679 1a
	Iohn.
	51	276 1c
	5	75 1b
		(262 1a
	8	74 2c
	13	656 2a
	24	312 2d
	37	385 1c
	44	628 2c
	45	380 1d
	39	276 1c
	34,35	663 1b
	10	259 2d
	12	185
	26	193 2b
	1	298 2c
	13	193 2b
	2	208 1a
	12	418 2b
	28	683 2d
	14	661 2a
	(679 1a	680 2b
	23	284 2a
	15,16	195 2d
	Acts.
2	23	613 2d
	36	271 2b
	38	258 2a
4	28	614 1a
5	4	126 2a
7	16	60 2b
	25	121 1b
	51	638 2b
10	15	109 2a
13	20	682 1a
15	20	130 1a
	28	308 1b
	29	130 1d
	30	23 2a
		(623 1b
18	3,4	108 2b
20	7	111 2d
	28	656 2a
	34	379 1a
21	24	88 1c
	26	117 1
23	6,7	89 1ab
24	14	16 2c
27	33	657 2c
	Rom.
1	12	194 2d
	20	49 2b
2	29	311 2d
3	26	207 1b
4	18	28 2d
5	12	373 2b
	15	417 2d
6	3	80 1a
7	8	275 1a
		(617 2d
	17	45 1c
	18	214 1d
	19	40 2d
		(45 1b
	20	40 2d
		(259 2b
	23	364 2b
		(635 2c
8	1	7 1d
	4	234 2 1
	16	18 2a
		(208 2a
	24	87 2b
	29	607 1d
	30	18 2b
9	8	229 2c
	11	1607 1c
	13	334 2d
11	32	248 2c
12	18	323 2d
13	5	11 2d
	(130 1a	307 2d
	8	234 2b
	10	100 2a
	14	139 2a
14	5	108 1c
	6	132 1a
		(285 2c
	22	87 1d
	23	12 1a
16	18	167 2d
	1. Corinth.
1	21	462 2d
2	14	462 2d
3	13.15	570 1b
	18	70 1d
		(464 1c
6	7	118 2c
	18	8 1c
7	9	99 1b
	12	159 2d
		(168 2b
	14	261 2d
	23	267 1c
		(307 2d
	30	127 1d
	35	99 2a
8	13	17 2b
9	15	417 2d
10	8	374 1c
11	15	23 2d
	24	298 2d
		(654 2c
13	5	119 1b
		(443 2c
	7	442 2b
	12	53 1b
14	32	71 1c
		(149 2c
15	31	93 2c
		(184 2a
	44	242 1a
16	2	1 7 1a
	15	158 2d
	2. Cor.
3	6	299 2c
		(325 2c
	14	296 2b
4	4
	17	87 1b
5	10	407 1
	17	312 1
	18	23 2c
	19	248 2b
		(622 2b
	21	273 2d
		(533 1c
6	2	23 2b
		(623 1c
9	6	146 2d
10	12	372 1a
12	9	69 2d
	Galat.
2	21	365 2a
3	17	681 1d
4	10,11	108 1ab
		(406 1b
	Ephes.
1	17	172 1d
3	1	655 2b
4	2	324 1c
	17,18	428 1d
	24	41 1c
	30	224 1b
5	16	405 2b
	18	132 2a
	Philip.
2	1	369 1b

The table.

Chap.	vers.	pag.
	29.	623.2.d.
4	5.	436.1.a.
	8 9.	152 2.a.
		(477.1.d.
	12.	127.2.a.

Coloss.

2.	8.	334.2.d.
	16.	108.1.a.
	20.	129 2.b.
3.	18.	41.1.d.

1. Thessalonians.

4.	11.	115.2.b.
5.	17.	63.2.a.
		(478.1.c.
	23.	45.2.a
		(428.1.c.

2. Thess.

3.	8.	379 1.a.
	17.	409 2.a.

1. Timoth.

1.	19.	162.d.
2.	1.	672. 2.c.
	4	23.2.a.
		(231 1.a. 267.
		(2.a. 623.1.a.
	9.	134.2.d.
	15.	87.1.b.
3.	2.
	3.	132.2.d.
4.	3.	104.2.b.
		(129 2.c
	5.	130.2.b.
	8.	97 1.c.
5.	4.	130.2.b.
		(404.2.b.
	8.	404 2.c.
	12.	101.1.c.
		(330.1.b.
	17.	378.2.b.
	20.	358.2.a.
		(669. 1.b.
	22.	8.2.a
	24	8.2.d.
6.	17,18,19.	147.
		(2.c

2. Timoth.

1.	7.	199.2.a.
2.	15.	662. 2.c.
	19.	21.1.c
		(208.1.a.
3.	16.	668.2.b.

Titus.

2.	12.	213.2.c.
3.	10.	359.1.a.

Hebrewes.

3.	11.	92.1.a.d.
	12,13.	300.1.a.
4.	1.	71.1.d.
	12.	428.1.d.
5.	7.	69. 2.c.
	12.	667.2.b.
6.	1,2.	667.2.c.
	6.	259 1.c.
		(348.2.a.
8.	11.	380 1.d.
9.	8.	276.1.d.
10	5.	211.1.a.
	19.	205.2.d.
	26.	348.2.b.
12.	7.	31.1.d.
	13.	202. 2.c.
13.	17.	307.2.d.

Iam.

1.	14,15.	635.2.b.
	15.	101.c.
	19.	70.1.c.
2.	1.	150.2.
		(311.1.c.
	10.	16.1.d.
	22.	82.1.c.
		(204.2.b.
	24.	314.1.d.
	26.	228.1.a.
		(313 2.d.
2.	1.	70.1.d.
5.	17.	667.2.b.

1. Peter.

1.	9.	393.2.a.
3.	3.	134. 2.d.
	15.	86.2.c.
	18.	284.2.b.
	19.	659.2.d.

2. Peter.

1.	5,6,7.	21.2.c.
	10.	21. 2.b.

1. Iohn.

1.	3,4.	20. 1.a.
	7.	274.2.a.
3.	2.	20.1.d.
	9.	234.2.b.
		(253.2.c.633.2.a
	14.	25. 1.a.
	24.	217. 1.c.
4	17.	21.1.b.
5.	3.	234 2.b.
	15.	69.2.d.

Reuelation.

1.	10.	106 2.d.
3.	20.	638. 2.b.
5.	10.	159 1.a.
13.	6.	164 1.c.
18.	6.	385.2.c
20.	5.	301. 2.d.
21.	6.	24. 1.d

Errata.

Pag. 8. col. 1 a. lin. 12. read, 1. Sam 2.25. pag. 17, 1. d. lin. 15. read, for the matter, p. 20. 2. a. marg. Coloss 3. 4. Rom. 8. 17. p. 28. 2. b, marg Exod 12 8 ibid c. lin. 6. light of reason p. 40. 2. c. lin. 1. themselues at all in them, p. 118. 2. a lin. 6. when p. 140. 1. d. lin. 14 Deut. 22. 5 p. 141. 1. b lin. 15. my mourning into 1. id. d. lin. 36. a special recreation, p. 150, 2. c lin. 30 or nobles, p. 180. 1. b. l. 9 in euery good worke, p. 200. 1 b l. 12 Prou 24. 16. p. 261. 2. b l. 7. nother mar. 2. p. 271. 1. b. l. 6 is the decree, p. 278. 1. d l 5. no other certenty of our saluation, p. 325. 2. b. l. 14. fite property p. 350. 2. b. l. 4. fall in temptation, p. 358. 1. b. l 6 feuerity, p. 366. 1. b. l. 1. read ep. 2 : 3. & c p. 374. 2. c. l. 16. good, but he respects therein the priuate good of his elect, ibid. d. l. 2 not in furie. p. 407. 1 a. l. 1. read 2. Cor. 5. 10. p. 418. 2. d. l. 2. why Paul. p. 425. 1. c. lin. 13. read, p. 2 g. 162. 20 which p. 458. 1. c. lin. 1. The Ineffe of. p. 536. 1. d. lin. 1 prec. ede or. p. 633. 2. d. l. 17. Acts. 2. 2 3 p. 614. 2. c. 1. Sam. 16. 16. p. 616. 2. d. lin. 9. a failing, p. 617. 2. lin penult the way is, p. 641. d lin. 6, precedent will p 639. 2. d. lin. 14 not differ much, p. 660 2. c. lin. 13. the parts of time, 662. 1. d. lin penult he beene chiefely, p. 680. 1. c. lin 1. Composition followes, 688 lin. 5. Bilhan Rahels maide, p. 654. lin. 28. be praile of Iosua p, 699. l. p. 9. His daughter is consecrated to God p. 705. Salomon writeth