Oliver Lord S^t. Iohn,

BARON OF BLETSO,

His very good Lord,

Grace and Peace.

THe sacred Scriptures (Right Honourable) are stiled by the Spirit of truth, to be all and wholly [a] righteous, [b] perfect, and [c] pure, yea, most [d] pure; that it must needs savour of the spirit of Antichrist, to judge any part thereof (as the Papists doe) unmeet for Gods people to bee acquainted withall. And yet I doubt not but that on our behalfe for some respects, a kinde of preheminence may be yeelded to some parcels of Scripture above others, without any derogation therefrom: else the [e] Apostles should have wronged Moses and the Prophets, by preferring the Gospell farre before them in glory and evidence. And therefore, as Paul gave a speciall charge to [f] Timothy of his parchments above his bookes, as being, though not for matter more precious, yet for present use at least, more expedient; so may our hearts, embracing with reverence the whole truth of God as pure and perfect, in regard of fitnesse to our peculiar estate, cleave more neerely to some portion thereof than unto others: for seeing herein is both milke and strong meat, who will doubt, but that according to our age and growth in Christ we should affect? But I may not here dilate of this difference of Scripture, and therefore will come directly to that portion of it, Christs Sermon in the Mount, which is here explaned in this Commentarie; endevouring briefly to shew some notes of eminence in these three Chapters, for which they deserve among all the Lords worthies to have the name of the first three. And to omit the Author hereof, though Iesus Christ the sonne of God, because the [g] whole Scripture was given by inspiration from the holie spirit; as also his preparation hereunto (though extraordinary) by [h] prayer to God the whole night before, which must needs import some consequence of great importance; I will onely point at the manner of penning this Sermon, and the matter which it containeth.

For the first, when the beloved Apostle saith of Christs sayings and doings, that many things were not written, and yet some things were written for the ground and confirmation of our faith, none (I hope) will deny, but these things which were written, were by the holy Ghost judged more behovefull for the Church, than those which were omitted. Whence by good collection it will follow, that things more largely penned were also deemed the more expedient: for why should the holy Ghost in penning be more copious, unlesse the things propounded were (to us at least) more precious? Now search the holy records of Christ thorowout, and see what Sermon is so fully registred as this is, unlesse it were his [i] consolation uttered to his Disciples, with his prayer unto his Father, a little before his passion: This being his welcome to them into their Apostleship, and That, his farewell at his death.

But to come to the matter it selfe. This Sermon containeth twelve severall heads of Doctrine, answerable indeed to the number of the twelve Apostles, to whom it was principally intended, upon their calling to that office; although I dare not say, particularly to be applied part to part, but rather generally the whole to every one, unlesse it may be, in the last parcell by the great ruine of the house upon the sands, Christ had a speciall aime at the fearefull fall of Judas that betrayed him. Now the first of these concerneth mans chiefe good in true happinesse, which is here so plainly declared in eight severall rules, as they lead every man hereto, and give the childe of God most comfortable assurance hereof, even in his greatest misery. The second doth more peculiarly respect the function of the ministery, the ordinary meanes of attaining the former happinesse. The third restoreth the morall Law to his true sense and meaning, which the Iewish Teachers had shamefully perverted, so as now we may make straight steps unto our feet in the way of obedience. The fourth directeth us in the right manner of doing good workes, by speciall instance in these three, Almes, Prayer, and Fasting, wherein the Hypocriticall Pharisies had spent much labour in vaine. The fifth prescribeth that moderate care and desire of earthly things, which doth locke up covetousnesse, the root of all evill. The sixth reformeth the practice of rash judgement, for the better evidence of humility in our selves, and of love unto our brethren. The seventh prescribeth ministeriall discretion, in the dispensation of the holy things of God, for the pure keeping of the things themselves, and the safe being of the dispensers thereof. The eighth doth notably encourage us both by precept and promise, to the holy exercise of prayer and invocation. The ninth doth furnish us to the practice of justice and equity in our civill conversation. The tenth doth effectually urge us unto care of our salvation, by walking in the straight way of life, and shunning the broad way that leadeth to destruction. The eleventh doth forewarne us of false Teachers, who be the maine seducers out of the way of life. The twelfth and last, with the conclusion, doth knit up all, perswading us both by promise of happinesse eternall, and of security most comfortable; as also upon perill of utter ruine irrecoverable, with outward profession to joyne answerable obedience, both in heart and life.

Now all and every one of these (Right Honourable) are of that importance in the life of a Christian, that none of them can be neglected of him that with comfort and safety would live godly in Christ Iesus. For the better evidence whereof, I must referre your Honour, with the Christian Reader, to this godly and learned Exposition ensuing; wherein the reverend Author, of blessed memory, hath faithfully laboured upon sound interpretation of the Text, to lay downe wholesome instructions for the obedience of faith. My paines herein hath beene chiefly this, as neere as I could, out of mine owne and others notes, to commend unto the publike view, the Authors faithfull labours in his owne meaning. Onely I have here and there upon good occasion (though private to my selfe) added some references in the margent unto classicall Popish writers, for such opinions as are herein charged upon them. Mine interest for the publishing of this worke, I hope I shall approve unto any gainsayer. Now whatsoever it is, in all bounden duty and service, I humbly commend it unto your Lordship, and under your honourable protection, to the household of faith. And because I doubt not of your diligence in the faithfull and frequent perusall of it, I will turne my perswasions towards you this way, into prayer to the Almighty for you, that by the edifying of your faith, and other graces of God herein, you may more and more abound in the fruits of righteousnesse, enjoying here much true honour, with long and happy dayes, in the peace of our Sion, and the prosperitie of your family, and in the end eternall life through Iesus Christ. May 1608.

Your Honours to command,

Thomas Pierson.

AN ADVERTISEMENT TO THE CHRISTIAN READER, concerning the WORKES of Mr. W. PERKINS.

BEcause the Title of this Booke (Good Reader) importeth a consummation and finishing of the long expected labours of our godly and learned Divine, M. W. PERKINS, and yet in this Catalogue prefixed, beside the two former Volumes, thou wanteſt some particulars that heretofore were promised, (as his Exposition of the 32. and 110. Psalmes, The Confutation of Canisius Catechisme, with other Sermons) I thought good to acquaint thee with some reasons, whereby his Executors have beene perswaded to make a finall stay and suppressing of them.

1. They were of the first fruit of his labours, which if he had intended for the presse, he would no doubt have revised long since, as he did some other things, which then he handled and published for thy good.

2 Beside that the Church of God enjoyeth the benefit of other mens labours of the same [a] kinde (whereto our reverend Author had due [b] respect,) the truth is, that the most materiall points contained in these suppressed Lectures, are more largely and exactly handled in his Workes already published. To instance in some: The whole argument of the 110. Psalme, (to use our Authors owne division, containeth either Christs Kingdome, or his Priest-hood: both which points thou shalt finde particularly handled in the Golden Chaine, Chap. 18. and more at large in the Creed: His Kingdome, in these words, [He sitteth at the right hand of God,] and his Priesthood, in [c] handling Christs sacrifice. And for the 32. Psalme, the points of largest discourse, are The knowledge of remission of sinne, with assurance of salvation, upon the first verse; which is farre more fully discussed in the [d] Treatise of Conscience, [e] Cases of Conscience, and [f] Reformed Catholike: And upon the second verse, the point of Justification by imputed righteousnesse, and not by workes: which to thy full content are cleared, in the [g] Golden Chaine, [h] Reformed Catholike, beside many other places, which I purposely omit. And for the confutation of Canisius, what materiall point of controversie can be expected, which is not either in his Golden Chaine, The Reformed Catholike, The Idolatry of the last times, The Treatise of Gods free grace, and mans free will, or in his Probleme? Nay, I am perswaded it would not be any difficult thing, to note out in particular, the severall points of these forenamed Sermons, in some one place or other of his published Workes; whereby it is plaine, that the suppressing of them is neither prejudiciall to the Author, or to the Reader.

These things well considered, and withall the great quantity and price whereto his Workes are already risen, I hope thou wilt approve of their advice that deliberately wished their finall stay. It may be some will thinke it unmeet, that any thing of this reverend Divine should be suppressed; but let such consider well, what the beloved Apostle saith of the blessed workes of our Saviour Christ, to wit, that [k] many of them, yea, the greatest number of them were omitted, and those things onely written which were necessary for the ground and confirmation of our faith: There needs no application, seeing our our times are more like to ſurfet with abundance, than ſtarve for want of printed books. Wherfore I hope this may ſuffice, to perſwade thoſe that have unprinted copies in their hands, to uſe them for their owne private benefit. But if any reſt not ſatisfied herewith, I would yet intreat thus much of them, that before they put hand to worke for the preſſe, they would acquaint Maſter Perkins Executors with their reaſons that move them thereunto: from whom I doubt not, but they ſhall receive either ſufficient ſatisfaction for their ſtay, or good leave to proceed in their intended courſe. Which thing I doe the rather adviſe, becauſe the Executors have a generall Inhibition out of his Majeſties Court of high Commiſſion, prohibiting the publiſhing of any of his workes without their conſent. Now the God of all grace, who is Lord of the harveſt, ſend forth daily ſuch faithfull workemen, and bleſſe theſe and their labours for the beauty and wealth of Sion. Amen. September 1. 1609.

Thine in Chriſt Ieſus,

Thomas Pierſon.

A Godly and Learned EXPOSITION VPON CHRISTS Sermon in the Mount.

Matth. 5. 1. And when he ſaw the multitude, he went up into a Mountaine: and when he was ſet, his Diſciples came to him.
2 And he opened his mouth, and taught them, ſaying, &c.

IN this Chapter and the two next, is contained Chriſts Sermon in the Mount, preached to his Diſciples, and others that were converted unto him among the multitude. Hereof I have choſen to entreat, becauſe it is a moſt divine and learned Sermon, and may not unfitly be called the Key of the whole Bible: for here Chriſt openeth the ſumme of the old and new Teſtament.

Before we come to the parts of this Sermon, three generall points are to be ſcanned, for the clearing of the doctrine following: Firſt, the Time when this Sermon was preached; to wit, in the ſecond yeare of CHRISTS Miniſterie, upon this occaſion; when Chriſt[a] had wrought a miracle, in curing the man with the withered hand upon the Sabbath day, the Scribes and Phariſies went about to kill him, whereupon he departed from among them, and went into a Mount, where hee ſpent the whole night in prayer. And when it was day, hee choſe the twelve Apoſtles: which done, he came downe into a plaine place neere to the Mount, where he wrought many miracles, but becauſe the people thronged about him to touch him (for there went vertue out of him which cured them) therefore hee withdrew himſelfe out of the throng into the Mountaine againe, and there preached this Sermon unto his Diſciples ſoone after their election; no doubt for this end, to teach them his will, and alſo to frame and inſtruct them ſo as they might become profitable teachers unto others.

II. Point. The ſcope and drift of this large Sermon: namely, to teach his Diſciples, with all that beleeve in him, to lead a godly, an holy, and bleſſed life. Although this bee evident in the Text, yet the Popiſh Teachers have depraved this end and ſcope; ſaying, that Chriſt herein propoundeth a new Law, farre more perfect than the Law of Moſes: and alſo delivereth new divine counſell to his Diſciples, which was not given in the Law, or in the Prophets. But they erre and are deceived: for Chriſts intent is to cleare the true meaning of Moſes and the Prophets, which was corrupted by the falſe gloſſe of the Jewiſh teachers; and not to adde any new Law or Councell thereunto, as [b] afterward will plainly appeare. Againe, there cannot bee given unto man a more perfect rule than Moſes Law, the ſumme and ſcope whereof is, To love God with all the heart, with all the ſoule, and with all the ſtrength; than which there cannot bee greater perfection in a creature. We therefore upon the conſideration of this worthy end, muſt labour to ſhew the greater care and conſcience, to learne and doe the things propounded in this Sermon.

III. Point. Whether is this Sermon the ſame, with that which is ſet downe by S. Luke, Chap. 6. v. 20. This queſtion is neceſſarie: for if they be the ſame Sermon, then will the one give great light unto the other. Men indeed differ in judgement touching this point: ſome ſay there are divers Sermons; others ſay they are one and the ſame: and that opinion is moſt likely. For firſt, they have one beginning and one matter, the ſame order of preaching, and the ſame concluſion, as the comparing of them together will plainly declare. Secondly, this Sermon recorded by them both, was made upon the election of Chriſts twelve Apoſtles, a little after the curing of the man with the withered hand. This is plaine in S. Luke, and may well bee gathered from the doctrine of this Sermon recorded by [c] Matthew, wherein Chriſt inſtructeth his Apoſtles particularly in their office and calling: which he would not have done, if he had not formerly called them thereunto. If it bee ſaid, that S. Matthew recordeth their election afterward in the tenth Chap.

Chap. Anſ. In the writings of the Evangeliſts there be certaine Anticipations; that is, ſome things are ſet downe after, which were done before; and ſome things are ſet downe before, which were done after, as might eaſily be proved by ſundry examples, and in the point in hand is evident: for the election of the Apoſtles is ſet downe by S. Matthew in his tenth chap. upon occaſion of his recording their commiſſion to preach: ſo that this circumſtance of the Apoſtles election, doth notably prove theſe Sermons to be one, S. Matthew ſetting downe the ſame more largely, and Luke more briefly.

Their Reaſons who hold them to bee two diſtinct Sermons, are of no moment. They ſay, that the Sermon recorded by S. Luke was made on the plaine; this of Matthew in the Mountaine: that of Luke was made by Chriſt ſtanding, this of Matthew as he ſate downe. Anſ. But Luke ſaith not, that it was made by Chriſt in a plaine, or ſtanding: only this he ſaith, that Chriſt comming from the Mountaine, ſtood in a plaine place, and there wrought certaine miracles, and then preached: now all this might bee done, and yet Chriſt might preach this Sermon in the Mount ſitting: as S. Matthew ſaith: for the order of this ſtory is this; Chriſt being maligned of the Jewes, went into a Mount, and there prayed; after long prayer, he choſe the twelve Apoſtles, and then came downe into a plaine and wrought Miracles: but by reaſon of the throng which preſſed about him to touch him, hee went into the Mountaine againe, and there preached this Sermon to his Apoſtles, and others that followed him.

Parts of this Sermon.

Thus much in generall. Now we come to the Sermon it ſelfe: which containeth three parts. A Preface; the Matter of the Sermon; and the Concluſion.

1. Preface.

The Preface or preparation is contained in the two firſt verſes of this Chapter, wherein are ſet downe divers circumſtances pertaining to the Sermon. As firſt and principally, the Author of it, to wit, JESVS CHRIST the Redeemer and Mediatour of mankinde, who in the making of this Sermon, muſt bee conſidered two wayes, even as hee is a Prophet: firſt, as the Miniſter of Circumciſion for the truth of God, as the Apoſtle [d] ſpeaketh: whereby thus much is ſignified, that Jeſus Chriſt as hee was man, borne among the Jewes, was unto them a Prophet and Miniſter in his owne perſon, and with his owne mouth was to teach them the will of his Father: which thing was requiſite for the accompliſhing of Gods word, who had promiſed before to his ancient people by Moſes, that hee would raiſe up unto them a Prophet like unto Moſes, [e] whom they ſhould heare in all things that hee ſhould ſpeake unto them: which prophecie was verified in this Sermon: wherein he manifeſteth himſelfe to be the Miniſter of Circumciſion unto them. Secondly, here wee muſt conſider Chriſt as a Prophet like unto Eliah and Eliſha, who were as Fathers and Maſters to the reſt of the Prophets: for herein he doth not onely teach beleevers among the multitude, but his owne Diſciples alſo, who were afterward to make Diſciples unto Chriſt, and to build up further them that did beleeve: yea, this inſtruction of his Diſciples, is the chiefe ſcope of this Sermon.

2. Circumſtance: Place.

Secondly, here is noted the Place where this Sermon was made, to wit, a Mount-ayne in Galile: He went up into a Mountaine. This place hee choſe for two cauſes: Firſt, to avoid the throng that preſſed about him, while hee ſtood on the plaine, to ſee him and to touch him, becauſe [f] there went vertue out of him. Secondly, that he might have a fit place, both for himſelfe to ſit and teach, and for his Diſciples and the multitude attentively and orderly to heare and learne that wholſome doctrine which he delivered.

In this choice of the place, Firſt, he ſheweth great care and wiſdome to maintaine outward order in the diſpenſation of his Word; whereby he teacheth us, that in all holy miniſtrations, outward order is to bee kept, and convenient places choſen, where the Word of God may be reverently and profitably both ſpoken and heard. Secondly, herein he ſheweth ſpeciall care to diſpenſe his Fathers will when occaſion was offered; yea, hee declareth his diligence herein: ſo as it is true, it was [g] meat and drinke unto him, thus by teaching the people to doe his Fathers will. And this his practice muſt be a preſident and example to all Gods Miniſters. They muſt not preach by conſtraint, but of a willing minde; yea, they muſt rejoyce and bee glad when occaſion is offered, that they may diſpenſe the will of God unto his people. This Paul meant in his ſtraight charge to Timothy, that [h] He ſhould be inſtant, and teach in ſeaſon, and out of ſeaſon: that is, take all occaſions to teach the word; following the example of Chriſt, who ſtayed not till he came at Jeruſalem, or to ſome Synagogue, but having good occaſion offered, taught the multitude in this Mountaine.

3. Circumſtance: Geſture.

Thirdly, here is noted that bodily geſture, which Chriſt uſeth in this Sermon; hee taught them, not ſtanding, but ſitting; whereby he was fit ſo when he preached in Nazaret, [i] he ſtood up and read his Text, and then ſat downe, and preached unto them. And when his Father and Mother ſought him at the feaſt, [k] they found him in the Temple ſitting among the Doctors and diſputing them queſtions: and being apprehended, he ſaid to the multitude, [l] I ſate daily with you in the Temple teaching. Now Chriſt uſed to preach ſitting, becauſe it was the manner and cuſtome of that Church ſo to doe: The Scribes and Phariſees (ſaith [m] Chriſt) ſit in Moſes chaire: where he noteth their geſture in teaching and expounding the Law. Whereby we are taught to bee carefull in obſerving all ſeemely, commendable,

mendable, and convenient geſtures, which are uſed in that Church whereof we are members. If any ſhall aske, whether we may not preach ſitting, as Chriſt did? I anſwer, if it were the, cuſtome of our Church, we might lawfully doe it: for theſe geſtures bee indifferent in themſelves: but we doe it not, becauſe our cuſtome is otherwiſe. And ſo we may ſay of preaching with the head covered, which is the manner uſed by the Miniſters of the French Churches; but we uſe it not, becauſe we have no ſuch cuſtome in our Church.

4. Circumſtance. Hearers.

Fourthly, here are noted the parties whom Chriſt taught, namely his diſciples: for though he ſpake in the audiance of the multitude, yet herein he chiefly intended to inſtruct his Diſciples: that is, all thoſe whom he had converted by his former miniſtery, and among them principally the twelve Apoſtles, whom hee had newly choſen to become teachers of others. This circumſtance muſt be well obſerved, for as it helpeth to cleare ſome points in the doctrine following; ſo it ſerveth notably to prove and juſtifie the Schooles of the Prophets, wherein ſome teach, and others heare and learne, for this end, to furniſh themſelves with gifts, that afterward they may become good and able teachers in Gods Church: for what is this but to follow the example of Chriſt, who in this place delivereth doctrine and inſtruction to his twelve Apoſtles, the better to inable them to the faithfull diſcharge of their holy miniſtery.

5. Circumſtance. Chriſts manner of ſpeaking.

Laſtly, in this preface is noted Chriſts manner of ſpeaking, in theſe words: And he opened his mouth and taught them, ſaying: which ſome doe take to ſignifie nothing elſe, but a full and evident kind of ſpeech; as if the holy Ghoſt had ſaid, he ſpake with his mouth: as we uſe to ſay in Engliſh, I heard it with mine eares. But this phraſe hath a further meaning: for as Paul willing the Epheſians, [n] to pray to God for him that a doore of utterance may be given him, that he might open his mouth boldly to publiſh the ſecrets of the Goſpel, doth there make that opening of his mouth, a more ſpeciall kind of ſpeaking, and of a farre more weighty matter than his ordinary communication; and as Elihu ſaying, [o] I will open my lips, and will anſwer, doth thereby import, that his ſpeech ſhould be upon due conſideration, and ſound knowledge; ſo the Evangeliſt ſaying, Chriſt opened his mouth, doth thereby meane, that upon ſerious meditation upon ſundry points of heavenly doctrine, hee began to ſpeake with liberty and authority, and to deliver unto them deepe matter of weight and great importance: that this is the meaning, may appeare by the concluſion of this Sermon, where it is ſaid, [p] the people wondred at his doctrine, becauſe he taught as one having authority.

6 Vſes.

Doth Chriſt here open his mouth, and utter weighty points of doctrine in this Sermon? then it ſtandeth all Churches and people in hand to open their eares, and apply their hearts to heare, learne, receive, beleeve, and obey the ſame: this is that Prophet foretold by Moſes, who muſt be heard in all things that he ſhall ſpeake: yea, whoſoever will not heare his voice, muſt be cut off from among Gods people: and great reaſon, [q] for if the word ſpoken by Angels ſtood ſtedfaſt, and every tranſgreſſion received a juſt recompence of reward; [r] how ſhall we eſcape, if we neglect ſo great ſalvation preached unto us by Chriſt? Secondly, hereby all Gods Miniſters are taught, by all godly diligence to ſeeke to furniſh themſelves for their holy miniſtery, that they may bring ſerious and weighty matter unto Gods people, and deliver the ſame with that convenient boldneſſe and authority, which beſeemeth Gods word. Thirdly, in Chriſts addreſſing of himſelfe to ſpeak, all perſons muſt learne to make conſcience both of ſilence and of ſpeech: this we ſhall doe, if by ſilence we cloſe up our lips, till wee have juſt matter to ſpeake of, tending to the glory of God, or the good of our brethren: and being ſo prepared upon fit occaſion, and in due time, we may utter our minde: wee muſt remember that Chriſt left himſelfe an example, that wee ſhould follow his ſteps: and alſo conſider, that of every idle word that we ſhall ſpeake, we muſt render account unto God. If this were knowne and beleeved, there would not be ſo many ſins in words, by curſing, ſwearing, vaine and idle ſpeaking, as there be.

Matth. 12.36.

Thus much of the Preface. Now we come to the matter of this Sermon, beginning at the third verſe of this Chapter, and ſo continuing to the 28. verſe of the 7. Chapter. And it may be divided into 12. heads or places of doctrine: The firſt whereof, concerneth true happineſſe or bleſſednes: from the 2. verſ. of this Chapter, to the 13. wherein are propounded ſundry rules directing men to attaine thereunto. The ſcope of them all muſt be conſidered, which in generall is this: Our Saviour Chriſt had now preached two yeares among the people, and thereby had wonne many to become his Diſciples; and among the reſt, his 12. Apoſtles: to all whom hee promiſed happineſſe and life everlaſting, if they would continue in the faith and obedience of his word. Now though they beleeved in him, yet they ſtill remained in the ſame ſtate for outward things, and became more ſubject to outward miſeries than before: ſo as if they judged of happineſſe by their preſent outward eſtate, they might eaſily ſuſpect the truth of Chriſts doctrine, and thinke he had deceived them, becauſe he promiſed them happineſſe, and yet for outward things, their caſe was farre worſe, than before they knew him. This our Saviour Chriſt conſidering, doth here goe about to remove this falſe conceit out of their mindes; and for this purpoſe delivereth this doctrine unto them, in the firſt generall head of his Sermon; that true happineſſe before God, is ever joyned, yea, covered

many times with the crosse in this world. Wherby he ſtrikes at the root of their carnall conceit, who placed true happineſſe in outward things, and looked for outward peace and proſperity upon the receiving of the Goſpell.

As this is the ſcope of the doctrine following, ſo it ſtands us in hand to learne the ſame, and to finde experience hereof in our owne hearts, that true comfort and felicity is accompanied with manifold miſeries in this life. Indeed carnall wiſdome deemeth them happy that enjoy outward peace, wealth, and pleaſure, but this conceit muſt be removed, and Chriſts doctrine embraced, who joyneth true happines with the croſſe. Secondly, this ſerveth to teach us patience in affliction; for it is Gods will to temper happineſſe and the croſſe together: now this puts life into an afflicted ſoule, to thinke that Chriſt will have his felicity injoyed and felt in outward miſery. Thus much of this head of doctrine in generall: now wee come to the branches thereof.

v. 3 Bleſſed are the poore in ſpirit: for theirs is the kingdome of heaven.

1. Rule of happineſſe.

Here is Chriſts firſt Rule concerning happineſſe; wherein obſerve two points: firſt, the parties bleſſed, the poore in ſpirit: ſecondly, wherein this bleſſedneſſe conſiſts, for theirs is the kingdome of heaven. Before wee come to theſe parts ſeverally, note in a word, the forme of ſpeech here uſed; they that are led by humane reaſon will rather ſay, Bleſſed are the rich, for theirs are the kingdomes of the world: But Chriſt here ſpeaks the flat contrary; ſaying, bleſſed are the poore, for theirs is the kingdome of heaven, which is infinitely better than all the kingdomes of the world; whereby we may ſee that the wiſdome of this world is fooliſhneſſe with God, and the ordinary conceit of man, flat oppoſite to the ſaving doctrine taught by Chriſt.

2. Part. Beza.

Bleſſed are the poore in ſpirit. The word tranſlated poore, doth properly ſignifie a begger, one that hath no outward neceſſaries, but by gift from others: but here it is more largely taken, not onely betokening thoſe that want outward riches, (for [f] Saint Luke oppoſeth theſe poore to the rich in this world) but alſo thoſe that are any way miſerable, wanting inward or outward comfort: and ſuch an one was Lazarus, that lay begging at Dives gates. What is meant by poore in ſpirit, is plainly expounded Iſa. 66. 2. where the Lord ſaith, I will looke to him that is poore, and of a contrite ſpirit, and that trembleth at my words. Chriſts meaning then is this, that theſe poore are bleſſed, who by meanes of their diſtreſſe, through want of outward comforts are brought to ſee their ſins, and their miſeries thereby; ſo as ſinding no goodneſſe in their hearts, they deſpaire in themſelves, and fly wholly to the mercy of God in Chriſt for grace and comfort, as Lazarus did to Dives gates for outward releefe.

Seeing Chriſt doth thus ſet out the perſon that is truly bleſſed, let us ſee whether wee be in the number of theſe poore ones. Indeed wee have many poore among us, ſome that by exceſſe and riot have ſpent their ſubſtance, and others that through idleneſſe increaſe their want; as the wandring beggers, a ſinfull and diſordered people, who joyne themſelves to no Church: but none of theſe can by their poverty make juſt claime to true felicity. The bleſſed poore, are poore in ſpirit; and this poverty we muſt finde in our hearts, if we would know our ſelves to bee truly happy: but after triall, this will be found much wanting; for firſt, if men live outwardly civill, and keepe themſelves from groſſe ſinnes, this thought of pride takes place in their hearts, that they are righteous, and they perſwade themſelves with the [u] young man in the Goſpell, that they can keepe Gods commandements. Secondly, let worldly wants befall men, in body, goods, or name, and they are grieved; yea, their ſoules are full of ſorrow: but for ſpirituall wants, as blindneſſe of minde, hardneſſe of heart, unbeleefe, and diſobedience, their hearts are never touched. Now whence comes this, but from that pride of heart, whereby they bleſſe themſelves in their eſtate, and thinke all is well with them in reſpect of their ſoules? ſo that true it is, poverty of ſpirit is hard to bee found. Wee therefore muſt ſearch our ſelves, and labour to feele our ſpirituall wants; and looke how Lazarus lay for his body at Dives gates; ſo muſt we lie at Gods mercy gate in Chriſt, for our ſoules, abandoning this pride of heart, and acknowledging that there is no goodneſſe in us of our ſelves; for the ſtrait gate of heaven cannot receive a ſwelling heart that is puffed up with pride. And to induce us unto this good dutie, let us conſider the gracious promiſes made to them that be poore in ſpirit; [x] they are called Gods poore: The thinketh on them: though heaven be Gods throne, and the earth his footſtoole, yet will hee [z] looke to him that is poore and of a contrite ſpirit: yea, the Lord will [a] dwell with him that is of a contrite and broken heart: [b] Chriſt came to preach the glad tidings of the Goſpel to the poore: yea, [c] the Lord filleth the hungry (that is, the poore and hungry ſoule) with good things, but the rich he ſends empty away. Let theſe and many ſuch favors with God, which they enjoy, provoke us to become poore in ſpirit.

2. Poore mens deſire.

Secondly, are they bleſſed that be poore in ſpirit? then here all poore and wretched perſons in the world may learne to make good uſe of their wants and diſtreſſes; they muſt conſider them as the hand of God upon them, and thereby bee led to the view of their ſinnes: and by the conſideration of their ſinnes, bee brought brought to ſee their miſery in themſelves, the true ground of this ſpirituall poverty. Now, when they are once poore in ſpirit, they are in a bleſſed ſtate in the judgement of Chriſt. If a man bleed dangerouſly at the noſe, the beſt way to ſave his life, is to let him bloud elſewhere, and ſo turne the courſe of the bloud another way: even ſo, when a man is oppreſſed with worldly calamities, hee cannot finde any comfort in them, for in themſelves they are Gods curſes; yet if thereby he can be brought to ſee his ſpirituall poverty, then of curſes they become bleſſings unto him: and therefore when we are in any diſtreſſe, wee muſt not onely fix our eies upon the outward croſſe, but by means of that, labour to ſee the poverty of our ſoules; and ſo will the croſſe lead us to happineſſe.

3. Rich mens duty.

Thirdly, they that abound with worldly wealth, muſt hereby learne to become poore if they will be ſaved: Poore I ſay, not in goods, but in ſpirit: this indeed is hard to fleſh and bloud, for naturally every rich man bleſſeth himſelfe in his outward eſtate, and perſwades himſelfe that God loves him, becauſe hee gives him wealth: but ſuch conceits muſt he ſtrive againſt, and learne of God to rejoyce in thus, that he is made low: Iam. 1. 10.

4. Againſt the vow of poverty. Ballarm. de Monach. l. 2. cap. 30.

Fourthly, on this ſaying of Chriſt, that the poore are bleſſed, the Popiſh teachers (obſerving the word tranſlated poore, to betoken outward poverty) goe about to build their vow of voluntary poverty, whereby men renouncing their wealth and poſſeſſions of this world, doe betake themſelves to ſome Monaſtery, there to live a poore and ſolitary life. But their voluntary poverty will not agree with this text; for Chriſts poore here pronounced bleſſed, are ſuch, as by reaſon of their poverty, are miſerable and wretched, wanting outward comforts, as we ſhewed out of Luke, [d] where Chriſt oppoſeth them to the rich, who abound with all worldly delights: but to undergoe the Popiſh vow of voluntary poverty, is no eſtate of miſery or diſtreſſe; for who doe live in greater eaſe, or enjoy more freedome from the croſſes and vexations of this life, than their begging Friers? Againe, if their vowed poverty had any ground in this Text, then Chriſt ſhould pronounce ſuch poore bleſſed, as made themſelves poore; but that he doth not: for then in the next verſe he ſhould pronounce ſuch mourners bleſſed, as voluntarily cauſe themſelves to mourne: for that verſe dependeth on this, as a more full explanation of this firſt rule: But no man will ſay, that they that mourne without a cauſe, are there called bleſſed: and therefore Popiſh vowed poverty hath no ground on this place. And thus much of the perſons.

Kingdome of heaven.

II. Point. Wherein the bleſſedneſſe of theſe poore conſiſts; namely, in having a right to the kingdome of heaven: For theirs is the Kingdome of heaven. By kingdome of heaven (for the better conceiving of this bleſſedneſſe) wee muſt underſtand a ſtate or condition of man, whereby he is in Gods favor, and hath fellowſhip with God. The truth of this deſcription is evident by the tenour of the new Teſtament. Now this eſtate of man is called a Kingdome, becauſe herein God rules as King, and man obeyes as Gods ſubject: for no man can be in Gods favor, nor enjoy his fellowſhip, unleſſe God be his King, ruling in his heart by his word and ſpirit, and he Gods ſubject reſigning himſelfe to be ruled by him: for this happy eſtate conſiſts in Gods gracious ruling of man, and mans holy ſubjection unto God. Indeed few doe ſee any great happineſſe in this eſtate: but the truth is, mans whole felicity ſtands herein: Rom. 14. 17. The kingdome of God is not meat and drinke, but righteouſneſſe, peace, and joy in the holy Ghoſt. Here the Apoſtle teacheth us three things: namely, that when Gods ſpirit rules in a mans heart, then firſt, he is juſtified, there is righteouſneſſe: ſecondly, he hath peace with God, even that peace of conſcience which paſſeth all underſtanding: thirdly, the joy of the holy Ghoſt, which is an unſpeakable comfort, paſſing all worldly joy whatſoever. And theſe three doe notably ſet out the ſtate of an happy man: which will yet more plainely appeare by their contraries in Judas, who being a wretched ſinner, unrighteouſly betrayed his maſter, and thereupon fell into the miſerie of a guilty accuſing conſcience, which was the cauſe of his deſperate death, and alſo that his body burſt aſunder, and his bowels guſhed out: Now if an evill conſcience be ſo fearefull, then how bleſſed an eſtate is the peace and joy of a good conſcience? which a man then hath, when God by his word and ſpirit ruleth in his heart. Againe, this eſtate is called the kingdome of heaven, becauſe that man in whom Chriſt ruleth by his word and ſpirit, is already himſelfe in heaven, though in body hee be yet on earth: for heaven is like a citie with two gates, thorow both which a man muſt paſſe, before he obtaine the full joyes thereof: now ſo ſoone as God by his word and ſpirit rules in any mans heart, hee is already entred the ſtate of grace, which is the firſt gate; the other remaines to bee paſſed thorow at the time of death, which is the gate of glory, and then hee is in full poſſeſſion.

Doth true happineſſe conſiſt in this eſtate, where Chriſt ruleth and man obeyes? then here behold the error of all Philoſophers and wiſe men of this world touching happineſſe: for ſome have placed it in pleaſure, ſome in wealth, and others in civill vertues, and ſome in all theſe. But the truth is, it ſtands in none of theſe. A naturall man may have all theſe, and yet be condemned: for the civill vertues of the heathen, were in them but glorious ſinnes. Our Saviour Chriſt hath here revealed more unto us, than all the wiſe men of the world did ever know: and hereby we have juſt occaſion to magnifi-magnifie the bookes of Scripture, farre above all humane writings, because they doe fully set out unto us the nature and estate of true felicity, which no humane worke could ever doe: we must therefore account of them, not as the word of man, but of the everliving God: yea, this must perswade us to maintaine the bookes of Scripture against all deviliish Atheists, that deny the same to be the word of God.

Secondly, hereby wee are taught, from the bottome of our hearts, to make that petition for our selves, which Christ teacheth in his holy prayer; namely, that he would let his kingdome come: that is, not suffer sinne, Satan, or the world to reigne in us, but by his word and spirit to rule in our hearts, giving us grace to be guided thereby in all our wayes. We affect nothing more than happinesse, and therefore wee must oftentimes most seriously make this request to God, preferring this estate with God, before all pleasures and happines in this world, and use all good meanes to feele in our hearts the power of Christs kingdome.

Thirdly, this should move us to heare Gods word with all feare and reverence; for by this meanes, the kingdome of Christ is erected in us; when the word of Christ takes place in our hearts by faith, and brings forth in our lives the fruits of righteousnesse, and true repentance, then may we truly say, the kingdome of heaven is in us.

Lastly, Christ ascribing this happy title of his heavenly kingdome to them that be poore, and of a contrite heart, doth herein minister a sovereigne remedie against all temptations, from outward povertie and distresse: Doubtlesse poverty is a grievous crosse, not onely in regard of the want of bodily comforts; but especially because of that contempt and reproach, which in this world doth hang upon it: whereupon many doe esteeme their poverty, as a signe of Gods wrath against them, and thereby take occasion to despaire, thinking the kingdome of darknesse belongeth unto them. But here consider you poore, this sentence of Christ, where he plainly teacheth, that if a man in outward distresse, can be brought to feele his spirituall poverty, and the wretchednesse of his soule, by reason of his sinnes; then he is so farre from having just cause to despaire of Gods favour, by reason of his poverty, that on the contrary, he may gather to his soule a most comfortable assurance, from the mouth of him that cannot lie, that the kingdome of heaven belongs vnto him.

v. 4 Blessed are they that mourne: for they shall be comforted.

Here is Christs second rule touching blessednesse: wherein consider two points: first, the parties who are blessed, they that mourne: secondly, wherein their blessednesse consists, namely, in receiving comfort. For the first: by mourners, wee must not understand every one that is any way grieved, but such as have just and weighty causes of griefe, and doe therefore mourne: for the words import an exceeding measure of griefe, such as is expressed by crying and weeping, as is plaine by Saint Luke, who thus relateth Christs saying; Blessed are yee that now weepe. And yet every one is not blessed that mourneth under grievous distresse; for Cain, Saul, Achitophel, and Iudas were all deepely affected in soule with their most woefull estates, though farre from this blessednesse. This rule then, must thus be understood; that they are blessed who with their mourning for weighty causes of griefe, doe withall mourne for their sins: for so was the former Rule to be understood, of those that with the sense of their outward distresse, had adjoyned an inward feeling of their spirituall wants: and this verse is but a more full explication thereof, as if he should have said, they are blessed that are poore in spirit: Yea, put case a man be distressed for most weighty causes of griefe, so as he howle and cry under the burthen of them: yet if withall, he can unfainedly mourne and waile in heart for his sinnes, notwithstanding all his poverty and distresse, he is truly blessed.

This blessed sentence upon them that mourne, serves sundry wayes for a soveraigne salve to the conscience of a Christian. As first; put the case a man were distressed with grievous calamities, and withall were overtaken with some heinous sinne, whereupon not onely his body is afflicted, but his conscience also wounded, and so hee is cast into the gulfe of desperation: yea, say further, that by reason of the terror of his conscience, his flesh were withered, and his marrow consumed in his bones; were not this a cause of exceeding mourning? yet loe, our most blessed Physician Christ Jesus, hath made a plaster for his sore: for if this man of distresses, can withall truly mourne for offending God through his transgressions, he is undoubtedly blessed; for Christ hath said it, whose word shall never faile though heaven and earth come to nothing. A blessed text, which being well applied, will not onely support the heart in great distresse, but recover the conscience from under deepe despaire. Secondly, put case a man were grievously sicke, and that he felt the very pangs of death without all ease to seaze upon him, so as both speech and sight, with all outward comforts began to faile him; this state were lamentable: yet if in his soule hee can truly mourne for his offences, even in this extremity, he is blessed. Thirdly, put case a man were taken of his enemies, and his wife and children slaine before his face, having their braines dashed out upon the stones, afterward himselfe put to a most wofull racke and torment: this were an estate more wofull than death: yet herein herein a man must not judge himselfe as a cast-away, but with mourning for his miserie, he must labour to be forrowfull for his sinnes, and then he need not feare what flesh can doe unto him, for he is blessed. Christs Word must stand, let thy distresse be what it will, if under it thou mourne for thy sinnes, blessed art thou. Wee cannot conceive while we enjoy peace, of the worth of this rule in the evill day: neither doe we know how neere the time is, wherein wee shall have need thereof; and therefore we must now learne this never to be forgotten, to season all other mourning with godly sorrow for our sinnes.

II. Point. Wherein this blessednesse consists; namely, in that their mourning shall have an end, and be turned into true comfort. That this is true happinesse will appeare by the contrarie: for the woe and sorrow that is here begunne, and continued in the world to come, is the punishment of the damned spirits, and the portion of the Reprobate, which is endlesse misery: and therefore unto them that mourne, it is true happinesse, that they shall receive comfort. This promise of Comfort is accomplished foure waies:

Foure wayes of comfort.

1 First, when God tempers and delayes the sorrowes and afflictions of them that mourne, according to the measure of their strength: 1 Cor. 10. 13. God is faithfull, and will not suffer you to bee tempted above that you are able to beare. This was promised to David and his seed, that if they did sinne, he would correct them with the rod of men: but not take his mercie quite from them. 2 Sam. 7. 14. Secondly, when God removes the griefe with the causes thereof: thus he comforted Manasses, who for his abominable Idolatries and witchcrafts was carried captive into Babylon, and there laid in prison, fettered in chaines of iron: yet when he did mourne under that affliction, and withall humbled himselfe unto God for his sinnes, the Lord comforted him, by bringing him out of that captivity and prison, to Ierusalem into his own kingdome. Thirdly, when God gives inward comfort to the heart and conscience, by his Word and Spirit. In this case Paul said, We rejoyce in afflictions, knowing that the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghost, which is given us: yea, when he was exceedingly afflicted above his strength, so as he received the sentence of death in himselfe, having no hope of life, yet even then he professeth, that as the sufferings of Christ abounded toward him, so his consolations through Christ abounded in him. Fourthly, when God by death puts an end to all their miseries, and brings their soules to eternall life. Thus was Lazarus comforted, as Abraham saith unto Dives, Luk. 16. 25. and thus doth Christ comfort the theefe upon the crosse (who with his bodily torment for his lewd life, was undoubtedly touched in conscience for his sins, and therefore desires Christ to remember him, when he came into his kingdom) by telling him, that that day he should be with him in Paradise.

2 Chr. 33. 12.

3 Rom. 5. 3.

2 Cor. 1. 8. with v. 4, 5.

4 Luk. 23. 43.

Here then we have a notable remedy against the immoderate feare of death, whether in naturall or violent, and of any other judgement of God: for when death it selfe, or any other miserie whatsoever shall befall us, if wee can therewith bewaile our transgressions, we need not feare, still holding fast his promise by faith in our hearts, that we shall be comforted. Secondly, this promise well observed, may teach us to avoid the perill of this false conceit; That true faith doth alwaies minister present comfort. Many doe herewith perplex themselves, measuring their estate towards God, by that which they feele in themselves; so as if in time of trouble they finde not present comfort, they judge themselves void of faith, and cast out of Gods favour: but herein they greatly wrong themselves: for though the apprehension of comfort, from God in distresse, be a fruit and worke of faith, yet a man may have true faith, that wants this sense and feeling of present comfort. Doubtlesse none are blessed that want faith, yet many are blessed that want feeling: for here it is said, They that mourne for sin are now blessed: and yet it is not said, they are now comforted, but they shall be comforted; meaning afterward, in Gods good time.

v. 5 Blessed are the meeke: for they shall inherit the earth.

This is the third Rule of Christ touching happinesse; which as the former, containeth two parts: first, the parties blessed: secondly, wherein this blessednesse consists. For the first: The parties blessed be the meeke. That we may know aright who bee meeke, I will somewhat lay open the vertue of meeknesse, and briefly handle these foure points: first, what Meeknesse is: secondly, what be the fruits thereof: thirdly, wherein it must bee shewed: fourthly the cause and ground thereof.

Foure points touching meeknesse.

I. Point. Meeknesse is a gift of Gods Spirit, whereby a man doth moderate his affection of anger, and bridle in himselfe impatience, hatred, and desire of revenge.

What meeknesse is.

II. Point. The fruits of meeknesse are principally two: first, it makes a man with a quiet and patient heart, to beare Gods judgements: which is a worthy grace of God, and the greatest fruit of meeknesse: Levit. 10. 3. when Aarons two sonnes Nadab and Abihu were burned with fire from heaven, which was a grievous judgement, he went to Moses to know the cause thereof, who told him, that God would be glorified in all that came neere him; which when Aaron heard, he held his peace, and was not moved with grudging or impatience. So David being in great distresse through the hand of God upon him, doth notably shew forth this grace, saying, [a] I was dumbe, and opened not my mouth, because Lord, thou didest it. Secondly, meeknesse causeth one with a quiet minde to beare the injuries men doe unto him: yea, to forgive and forget them; and to requite good for evill, referring all revenge to God that judgeth righteously. When[b] Davids enemies laid snares for his life, uttered sorrowes, and imagined deceit against him continually; yet by this vertue he suffered all patiently, being as a deafe man that heareth not, and as the dumbe which openeth not his mouth: so farre was he from private revenge. And our Saviour Christ sees forth himselfe a patterne of this vertue; saying, [c] Learne of me, that I am meeke and lowly in heart: herein he left himselfe an example that we should follow his steppes, [d] Who when he was reviled, he reviled not again, when he was buffeted, he threatned not, but referred all to the judgement of him that judgeth righteously: yea, he prayed for them that crucified him. So did Stephen, Act. 7. 60. Lord, lay not this sinne to their charge: so Zachariah, the sonne of Iehoiada, being stoned, said only this; The Lord will see and require it at your hands, 2 Chron. 24. 22.

III. Point. Wherein must this meekenesse be showed? Answ. Not in the matters of God, when his glory is impeached: for therein we must have zeale as hot as fire: but in the wrongs and injuries that concerne our selves. Moses was the meekest man upon the earth in his time, Numb. 12. verse 3. and yet when the Israelites had made a golden calfe, in zeale to Gods glory, [f] He brake the two tables of stone; and put to the sword that same day, three thousand men, of them that had so dishonoured God. Dauid also that held his tongue at his owne wrongs, did consume away with zeale against his enemies that forgat Gods word, Psal. 119. 139. And our Saviour Christ, who as a lambe before the shearer, opened not his mouth for the wrongs done unto himselfe; did yet in reuenge of his Fathers glory, make a whip of cords, and drive the buyers out of the Temple, who made his Fathers house a denne of theeves: Matth. 21. 12.

IV. Point. The cause and ground of this meekenesse is affliction and povertie of spirit, as the order of these rules declareth; where it is placed after povertie of spirit, and mourning: and therefore Psal. 37. 11. whence these words are borrowed, the meeke person is called by a name that signifieth one afflicted; to teach us that he that is meeke indeed, is one who by affliction, and distresse, hath bin brought to mourne for his offences: for hardly can he be meeke and patient in spirit, that hath not beene acquainted with the crosse. Lam. 3. 27, 28, 29. The Church commendeth this bearing of the crosse in youth, because it maketh a man to sit quietly alone, to put his mouth into the dust, and to give his cheeke unto the nippers.

Doth blessednesse belong to meeke persons? hereby then we are admonished to labour for the moderation of all our affections, especially of anger, hatred, and revenge; and to beware of all hinderances to this blessed vertue, as choller, hastinesse, grudging, impatience under wrongs, with all rayling, reviling, chiding and brawling, and all such threatning speeches, which come too oft in practice, that we may forgive, but we will never forget: yea, in Action we must avoid all quarrelling, fighting, contending, and going to law on everie light occasion: for true meeknesse admits none of all these to take place with Gods children. And to induce us hereunto, consider first Christs precept and example, bidding us [g] Learne of him, for hee is meeke and lowly. Againe, consider Gods owne dealing with us, wee daily wrong him by our offences, and yet he beares with us; shall we then be unlike our heavenly Father, that wee will straight revenge the wrongs that others doe unto us? See Colossi. 3. 12, 13. As the elect of God, holy and beloved, put on the bowels of mercie, gentlenesse, lowlinesse of minde, meeknesse, long suffering, forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrell against another; even as God for Christs sake forgave you, so doe yee. Lastly, the fruition and practice of this grace hath the promise of blessednesse belonging to it; and therefore as we would be happie, so we must get the spirit of meeknesse into our hearts, and expresse the vertue and power thereof in our lives.

Object. I. Here some will say, If I put up all injuries, I shall be counted a dastard and a foole. Ans. In this case learne of Paul, to passe little for mans judgement: but be carefull to get and practise this grace of meeknesse, and then Christ will pronounce thee blessed, which ought more to prevaile with thee, than all mens estimation in the world; and so it will, unlesse thou love the praise of men, more than the praise of God. Ioh. 12. 48.

Object. II. Againe, it will be said, The more I use to put up wrongs, the more shall I have still done unto me. Ans. That is onely so with wicked men; for who [e] else will wrong thee, if thou follow that which is good? Yet say they doe, thy patient suffering, is praise-worthy with God: and, [k] he will take the matter into his hand: yea, Christ Jesus, who judgeth not by the sight of the eye, [l] he will rebuke aright for all the meeke of the earth.

Object. III. But yet thou sayest, this is the way to lose all that a man hath, and to bee thrust out of house and harbour. Ans. Nothing lesse: for Christ here saith, the meeke shall inherit the earth; doubt not but Christ will make good his word: and therefore if thou respect these outward things, labour to get and exercise the spirit of meeknesse.

II. Point. Wherein doth this blessednesse of the meeke consist? namely, in their inheriting of the earth. And this is a great happinesse for a man to to be Lord of the whole earth. But how can this be true? Sith many of Gods dearest servants have beene strangers on this earth, thrust out of house and land, and constrained to wander in mountaines, and desarts, afflicted and miserable, yea, destitute of convenient food and raiment, Hebr. 11. 37, 38. Ans. The meeke are here called Inheritours of the earth, not for that they alwayes have the possession thereof; but first, because God gives a meet and convenient portion of the earth, either to them, or to their posteritie; thus he dealt with Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, they had sufficient for themselves, and a promise of great possessions, which their posteritie did enjoy. Secondly, if it fall out, that meeke persons died in want, or banishment; yet God gives them contentation, which is fully answerable of the inheritance of the earth; so Paul saith to himselfe, and other Apostles, [m] They were as men having nothing, and yet possessed all things: meaning through contentation, with the peace of a good conscience. Thirdly the meeke have this inheritance in regard of right, being the members of Christ, who is Lord of all. Hence Paul saith to the beleeving Corinthians, [n] All things are yours, whether it be Paul, or Cephas, or the world, things present, or things to come, all are yours, and yee Christs. Fourthly, the meeke are made Kings by Christ, and after the last judgement, they shall rule and reigne with him for evermore, Rev. 5. 10. And in these two last respects, the meeke are more properly said to be the Inheritours of the earth. Object. Yet here it will be said againe, that wicked and carnall men are oftentimes the greatest Lords of the earth; as Nimrod in his time, and the Turke at this day. Answ. The right unto the earth is twofold; Civill and Spirituall: Civill right is that, which stands good before men, by their lawes and customes; and in regard thereof, men are called Lords of such lands, as they have right unto in the Courts of men: and so the Turke at this day, is a mighty Lord of a great part of the whole world. Spirituall right is that, which is warrantable and approved with God himselfe, and such right and title had Adam to all the world, before his fall, which he lost by his sinne, both from himselfe, and all his posteritie: but yet in Christ, the same is recovered to all the elect. And of this right Christ here speaketh, when he calleth the meeke Inheritours of the earth: in regard whereof, the Turke, and all unbelievers and ungodly persons are usurpers of those things, which otherwise civilly they doe lawfully possesse.

Here then is an excellent privilege of all the true members of Christ, that in him they be Lords of the earth: whereby first, we may see how farre most men doe over-shoot themselves in seeking earthly possessions; for the manner is, without all regard of Christ, to hunt after the world: but this is a preposterous course, these men set the Cart before the horses; for seeing all our right to the earth was lost by Adam, and is onely recovered by Christ, doubtlesse till we have part in Christ, we cannot with the comfort of a good conscience, either purchase, or possesse any inheritance upon earth. In regard of certaintie, men desire to hold their lands in capite, that is, in the Prince, as being the best tenure; but if wee would have a sure title, and hold aright in capite, we must labour to become true members of Christ, and hold our right in him, for he is the [o] Prince of the Kings of the earth, and Lord of all the world: and till wee be in Christ, we shall never have an holy and sanctified right to any worldly possessions.

Secondly, this serves for a bridle against all immoderate care for the world; for if wee bee members of Christ, and meeke persons, then the inheritance of the earth is ours: what need have we then to carke and care so much for worldly pelfe, as most men doe, who never thinke they have enough?

Thirdly, this serves for a just rebuke of all those that seeke to enrich themselves by cruelties, lying, fraud, and oppression: for if thou bee in Christ, thou hast right to the whole world: what need then hast thou to use unlawfull meanes to get that which is thine owne? But sure it is, thou hast no part in Christ, while thou giveest thy selfe to these courses; for if thou hadst, thou wouldest be content with whatsoever God sends in the use of lawfull meanes, Philip. 4. 11.

Lastly, hence all Gods children may learne to comfort their hearts against the feare of any punishment for the name of Christ; for keepe Christ sure, and whithersoever thou art sent, thou art upon thine owne ground: for the whole earth is thine, and in Christ one day thou shalt possesse it, when all Tyrants shall be banished into hell. Now being on thine owne ground, what need hast thou to feare?

v. 6. Blessed are they which hunger and thirst after righteousnesse, for they shall bee filled.

4 Rule.

Here is the fourth Rule touching blessednesse, which is also mentioned by Saint Luke, yet something different from that of Matthew: for according to Luke, Christ directeth his speech to his disciples, and speakes of bodily hunger, saying, Blessed are yee that hunger now, for yee shall be satisfied: as if he should say, You my Disciples doe now suffer hunger and thirst, but this shall not prejudice your happie estate, for hereafter you shall be satisfied. Now Matthew goeth a degree further, and layeth downe a cause and Reason, why they being hungrie are blessed; not simply, for that they were pinched with bodily hunger, but because wo-mail, they did further spiritually in their soules hunger after righteousnesse. Thus then the two Evangelists doe agree; S. Luke layes downe this Rule generally, but Matthew propounds therein the reason of this blessednesse.

This Rule, as the former, containes two parts: first, who are blessed: secondly, wherein this blessednesse doth consist. For the first, the parties blessed are such, as hunger and thirst after righteousnesse. The exposition of these words is diverse; Some give this sense: Blessed are those that are grieved with the iniquities that abound in the world, and withall doe in heart and soule long for the amendment and reformation thereof. Others expound these words thus: Blessed are those that by wrongs and injuries are deprived of their right in this world, and soare constrained to hunger and thirst after that which is their owne, enduring by patience to obtaine the same. But there is a third exposition which doth more fully open unto us the meaning of Christ; to wit, by righteousnesse we may well understand in the first place, the righteousnesse of faith, whereby a sinner is justified through grace in Christ, and so stands righteous before God, having the pardon of all his sinnes: besides this, we may here also understand inward righteousnesse, whereby a man is sanctified and made holy, having Gods image reuued in him by the spirit of grace, which was lost by the fall of our first parents. And that this imputed and reuued righteousnesse may here be understood, will appeare by these reasons: First, in such places of Scripture where like sentences are repeated, wee must understand not ciuill righteousnesse, but justification, sanctification, regeneration: Heb. 5.5.1. Hee that eateth of milk is vnskilfull, come to the waters, and buy without siluer: and Ioh. 7. 37. If any man thirst, let him come vnto mee and drinke: and Revel. 21. 6. I will giue vnto him that is a thirst, to drinke of the waters of life freely: all which places are one in substance: for by waters wee must understand righteousnesse, which is that spirituall grace of God, the fountaine of all blessings, whereby sinners are justified and sanctified. Secondly, that which is most of all to be desired, must needs be the most excellent righteousnesse: but this righteousnesse here mentioned is most to be desired; for Christ saith, men shall hunger and thirst after it, there by expressing a most earnest and vehement desire: and therefore by righteousnesse, we must understand Gods grace and mercie in Christ, absolving a sinner from the guilt and punishment of his sinnes, with sanctification the fruit thereof, whereby he is purged from corruption. Secondly, by hungering and thirsting, we must understand two things: first, a sorrow and griefe of heart in regard of a mans owne sinnes, and unrighteousnesse: Secondly, an earnest and constant desire of the righteousnesse of God, that is, of justification and sanctification in Christ. Answerable to these two things which are in bodily hunger and thirst, to wit, first a paine in the bottome of the stomacke for want of meat and drinke; secondly, an earnest desire and appetite after meat and drinke, to be satisfied therewith. And blessed is he that is so grieved for his owne unrighteousnesse, and withall hath an earnest desire after reconciliation with God in Christ, and after true regeneration and sanctification by the holy Ghost: for this is true spirituall hunger and thirst, whereto belongs this gracious promise, that in due time he shall be satisfied and filled with plenty of Gods mercie and grace, wherein this happinesse doth consist, which is the second branch of this Rule. This I take to be the true and proper meaning of these words, whereupon the two former expositions depend: for he that is thus spiritually an hungred, is oft deprived of his owne right among men, and so is said to hunger and thirst after that which is his owne in this world. Againe such a man doth unfainedly grieve at the iniquities that be in the world, and withall, his heart doth most earnestly desire reformation thereof, both in himself and others.

First, this sentence must be remembred, as a storehouse of true comfort in all grievous temptations, but especially against these three; the want of faith, the smallnesse of sanctification, and despaire. For the first, many in Gods Church haue a true care to please God in all things, and to liue in no sinne against their conscience; and yet they finde in themselves much distrust and despaire of Gods mercie, they feele more doubting than faith: whereupon they are brought to doubt of their election, and state of grace before God. Now how may such bee relieved, and be well perswaded of their good estate? Answer. The way is laid downe by our Saviour Christ in all his Rule; blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousnesse. For here he teacheth, that those are blessed, who are displeased with their owne doubting and unbeleefe, if they haue a true earnest desire to be purged from this distrust, and to beleeve in God through Christ. Indeed this desire of faith, and to beleeve is not true faith in nature, but in Gods acceptance: for God respects them for this true desire, as if they had faith. And they are blessed, because they shall have plentie of faith, and assurance of grace and favour with God in Christ: for it is mercie and grace with God, to hunger after grace and mercy, when the heart feeles the want thereof: But yet such persons must be admonished, that they shew the truth of this desire, by a constant endevouring in the meanes which God hath sanctified for the obtaining of a true and lively faith in Christ, wherewith they may be satisfied.

The second temptation is, from the smallnesse of sanctification. Many there be that endevour to please God, making conscience of all sinne, and yet they finde in themselves an exceeding exceeding measure of rebellious corruption, much ignorance in their minds, perverseness in their wils, and frowardnesse in their affections; yea, a continuall proneness unto all manner of sinne: and on the contrary, they can perceive but small fruits of sanctification; the old man they feele rushing in them like a mighty Giant, but the new man so weake and feeble, that they can hardly discerne any spirituall life: and hereupon they are sore troubled with temptations, yea, oftentimes driven to doubt, whether they have any true grace at all: This cannot but be an heavy case, and yet here is true comfort for them: for Christ calleth them blessed (not that are filled with righteousnesse, but) who hunger and thirst after it; that is, who feeling the want of righteousnesse in themselves, doe earnestly desire it in their soules. These persons therefore, that feele in themselves a sea of corruption, and scarce a drop of sanctification, must truly examine their owne hearts, how they stand affected to these things; for if they bee truly grieved for their corruption and rebellion, and withall doe earnestly desire grace and sanctification, using the meanes constantly, whereby they may be freed from the one, and endued with the other; then they have wherewith they may comfort their hearts, for Christ calls them blessed: and so they are, for in due time they shall be satisfied: and in the meane time, their will and desire is accepted of God in Christ for the deed it selfe.

The third temptation is, to despaire; when a man after the breach of conscience by some grievous sinne, is plunged into this gulfe, that he thinkes verily hell is prepared for him, and he must needs be damned: what remedie now in such a case? Answ. Some thinke the onely way is to propound unto him the grounds of universall grace; as that, because hee is a man, Christ died for him, for Christ died for all: but this is a fleander comfort, for the despairing conscience will thus reply; God indeed hath done his part, but I refused Gods grace when it was offered. Therefore another way of comfort must bee sought; which is, by proving unto him out of Gods Word, that he is within the covenant, and that the promises of grace and life doe belong unto him: for the effecting whereof, one main ground is here propounded; to wit, that though a man want all righteousnesse, yet if he truly hunger after it, hee is blessed: and the right applying of this ground, is this; search must be made, whether the party thus despairing, hath in him any sparke of true grace, or no; and this will be knowne by these two demands: first, whether hee dislike his sinnes, because they are sinnes? secondly, whether hee truly desire to bee reconciled unto God, to repent and beleeve in Christ? Now if his conscience tell him, that these things bee in him indeed, then hee is brought within the compasse of this blessednesse here pronounced by Christ, and hath title to this promise, that he shall bee satisfied: for he that is grieved for his sinne, because thereby hee hath offended God, and withall hath an earnest desire of mercie and grace, to repent and beleeve, is truly blessed. And therefore it may be said unto him, seeing thou findest in thy heart this griefe for sinne, and desire of grace, thou art blessed, and shalt be satisfied. Thus may the distressed soule receive comfort: but as for them that liue in sinne, here is no comfort, for they have no true dislike of sinne, no purpose or desire to repent thereof.

Secondly, as this rule of Christ ministreth comfort to some, so it discloseth the miserable estate of others; to wit, of all those that want this spirituall hunger after righteousnesse, for they have no title to the promise of heavenly satisfaction by Gods mercie in Christ. And yet generally this is the state of men every where: for after riches, pleasures, honours, and preferments, men hunger and thirst, as the drought in summer doth after raine; but rare it is to finde a man that favoureth the things of God, and thirsteth after his righteousnesse, and yet such only are blessed.

How to know who are happy.

Thirdly, this rule of Christ serves for sure direction, whereby wee may know our estate before God, in regard of true happinesse: if we hunger and thirst after righteousnesse, wee are surely blessed: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. Now this spirituall hunger is known by two things: first, by an unfained heartie sorrow and griefe for sinne past; where this is wanting, true spirituall hunger and thirst is not: secondly, by an earnest desire of Gods mercie in Christ, for the pardon of sinne, and for sanctification, testified by a constant endevour in the use of meanes to come thereby: hee that hath these things in him, may assure himselfe that he is blessed, for these bee the motions of Gods Spirit, and the true pledges of his grace. Hereby then wee must trie our estate, if these things be in us, we have wherein wee may rejoyce; but if our hearts be dead, and hard, so as we have no touch for our sinnes, no hungering after the bloud of Christ, nor desire of sanctification, then are wee void of grace, and so most miserable: for the smallest measure of true grace that can bee, is to hunger after grace in the want thereof.

Lastly, this rule of blessednesse must admonish us as we tender our salvation, so to labour for this spirituall hunger in our soules, after reconciliation with God in Christ for all our sinnes past, and for the sanctification of our hearts and lives by his word and spirit: we may heare, reade, and talke of Gods Word, and yet all to no end, unlesse wee bee in heavinesse for our owne unrighteousnesse, and from our hearts do send forth sighs and groanes after mercie and grace in Christ. For what availeth it to have wit and learning, honour, and riches, if the soule be void of mercie and grace in Christ? which doubt there it is, while this spirituall hunger is wanting in the heart. And to move us to labour for this hunger, the reason annexed is very effectuall, namely, the Lords promise that they shall be filled, which also shewes wherein this blessednesse doth consist. Now they that thus hunger are filled, partly in this life, by receiving the testimonie of the Spirit, touching reconciliation with God in Christ, and some fruits of sanctification, whereby the old man is mortified, and the new man renued in them; but principally at the end of this life, when they shall be fully justified and sanctified, and have Gods Image perfectly renued in them.

v. 7. Blessed are the mercifull: for they shall obtaine mercie.

This verse containeth the fifth rule or precept of our Saviour Christ touching true happinesse, in which obserue two points: first, who be blessed: secondly, wherein this blessednesse consists. For the first: the parties blessed be the mercifull. And that wee may the better know them, I will speake something of this vertue: first, shewing what mercy is: then, what bee the chiefe duties thereof.

Mercy described.

First, Mercy is an holy compassion of heart, whereby a man is moved to helpe another in his miserie. First, I call it a compassion of heart, because it makes one man to put on the person of another, and to be grieved for the miseries of an other, as if they were his owne: and therefore it is called [a] the bowels of compassion, because when a mans heart is touched therewith, his very liver and intrails doe stirre in his body, and are [b] roued within him as the Prophet speaketh: and he is affected, as though the bowels of him that is in misery were in his bodie. Secondly, I call it an (Holy) compassion, to distinguish it from foolish pity, whereby a man doth unlawfully tender him that is in deserued miserie: such was [c] Ahabs mercy to Benhadad, and [d] Sauls in sparing Agag, whereas the expresse commandement of God was to the contrary: but such mercy and compassion as God approueth, is a fruit of his spirit, and a vertue commended and commanded in the Word of God. Thirdly, this vertue of mercy stirreth and moueth the heart to helpe an other that is in miserie: for helpe in miserie is a notable fruit of true compassion, neither can these be severed: for in the compassion of the heart, and in the act of releefe, stands true mercy: and therefore [e] John saith, He that seeth his brother in need, and shutteth vp his compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? whereby also wee may see, that no worke of mercie is shewed to any man in misery, but that which commeth from compassion, and thus wee see what mercy is.

The diuision of mercy.

Secondly, the duties of mercy are answerable to mans misery: Now mans misery is either in his soule or in his bodie. The greatest miseries of man are in his soule; as ignorance, impenitencie, and trouble of conscience: mans bodily miseries are sicknesse, thirst, nakednesse, &c. and to these the works of mercie are answerable. Some therefore concerne the soule, and some the bodie. Mercy towards the soule is, when a man is carefull for the salvation of an other, using meanes to bring a man from spirituall darknesse unto light, from the power of Satan unto God, from the state of sinne and the danger of hell fire, to the state of grace in true faith and repentance, and so to life eternall. And looke how farre the soule is more excellent than the bodie, so farre doth this worke exceed any worke of mercie that concernes the bodie: Mercy towards the bodie is called Almes or Releefe, whereby a mans outward necessitie, for food, raiment, or such like, is supplied: that this is a worke of mercie, is manifest, Isay 58. 10. where the Releeving of the hungry, is the powring out of the soule unto him: and Saint John maketh the not releeving of our brother in need, to be the shutting of the doore of compassion from him.

f 1 John 3. 17.

Now by this which hath beene said concerning mercie, and the workes thereof, wee may see who is a mercifull man; namely, such a one as hath his heart touched with compassion towards the misery of another, and thereby is moued to helpe and releeve him in soule and body, according to his estate: and such a man is blessed by the testimony of Christ himselfe, howsoeuer in the world he may be despised.

A mercifull man.

First, here we have to consider, what a number of miserable and cursed persons doe liue, euen in the bosome of Gods Church; for if this rule of Christ bee true, then unmercifull men are accursed. Now such are common among us: The Richer sort which abound in outward blessings, thinke themselves happie; but if they be unmercifull, they are wretched: and such are all those, that for the maintenance of their outward pompe and braverie, spoile the poore that liue under them, by inclosing of commons, racking of rents, unreasonable fines, &c. or for the satisfying of their vaine pleasure and delight, bestow more upon hawkes and hounds, than on the poore: Such a wretched person also is the Carne-monger, who hath his barnes full, and his garners full, and yet suffereth the poore to want bread, waiting still for a deerer time: Such also are our common vsurers, ingrossers, and fore-stallers of needfull commodities whatsoever: all these seeke themselves, and have no mercy on them that are in misery: yea, such likewise are those householders, who spend their time and wealth in some disordered course, as whoring, gaming, drinking, or such like, and so neglect their family; these [g] denie the faith, and are worse than Iewes and Turkes, nay, than brute beasts, for they are mercifull towards their owne. It were an easie thing thus to shew through all estates, the great multitude of miserable persons: for now the common proverb is become the common practice, Every man for himselfe, and God for us all.

Motiues to mercy.

Secondly, seeing the mercifull man is blessed, we must learne to put on tender mercie, or the bowels of compassion towards those that be in misery. And to move us hereunto, let us marke these things: First, the state of the mercifull is here pronounced blessed of Christ. Secondly, mercy is a gift of the Spirit, and the grace of [1] Gods Elect, which alwaies accompanieth the happy estate of those that be in Christ: for the power of grace doth change their carnall nature, Ifay 11. 6, 7. Thirdly, hereby we become like unto God our heavenly Father, who is the [h] father of mercies. Fourthly, hereby wee are made instruments of Gods mercy to them that be in miserie: for God conveyes his blessings unto his poore creatures ordinarily by meanes. Wee count it an high honour and a great favour to be the Kings Almner; oh then, how great is this dignity, to be Almner to the God of Heaven, to dispose his goodnes and mercies among the children of men? and hereto we are advanced, if we helpe the poore that be in miserie. Fifthly, the exercise of mercy commendeth our Religion, not onely before men, but unto God: for [i] pure Religion and undefiled before God is this, to visit the fatherlesse and widowes in their distresse: and [k] God will have mercy, and not sacrifice: therefore the Apostle bids, [l] to doe good, and to distribute, forget not: for with such sacrifice God is pleased. Thus is the fast [m] which God requires, to loose the bands of wickednesse, to take off the heavy burthen, and to let the oppressed goe free, to take off every yoke: and on the other side, to breake thy bread unto the hungry, to bring the poore that wanders into thine house, and to cover the naked, &c.

And because this dutie is so necessarie and excellent, I will propound certaine rules to bee obserued for our furtherance herein. First, wee must exercise three of our senses; seeing, hearing, and feeling another mens miseries: for seeing, [n] we must be very wary it grieve us not to looke upon our poore brother, but wee must see and behold his misery and distresse, whether it be in soule or body. This is the Lords practice: Israel is oppressed in Egypt, and the Lord saith, [o] I have surely seene the trouble of my people, and the oppression wherewith the Egyptians oppresse them. And wee must be followers of God, as deare children, and learne to visit them that be in miserie, either through sicknesse, imprisonment, poverty, or such like; for sight will stirre up in a man a sense and compassion of others miseries. Hence it is said, that [p] when Iesus saw a great multitude, he was moued with compassion towards them. And who can see a poore distressed person to lie in straw, or on the ground, without needfull releefe, as many a one would not suffer his dogge to lie, and not to be moued with compassion? Secondly, if wee cannot come to see a mans miserie, then wee must bee content to heare of it, and give heed and credit to the true reports that others make thereof unto us. Thus did Nehemiah, hearing of the affliction of the residue of the captivitie, [q] He wept and mourned, fasted and prayed, and sought for releefe for them at the Kings hands. Thirdly, for feeling, if the Lord shall afflict our bodies with sicknesse, or our soules with temptations, wee must bee willing to suffer the same patiently, that thereby wee may be fitted to take more compassion upon others in like case, and to comfort them the better. Paul saith of himselfe and Timothie, that in [r] Asia they were pressed with affliction above measure passing strength, so as they altogether doubted of life: and yet (he saith) the Lord dealt mercifully with them; that they might bee able to comfort others which were in any affliction, with the same comfort wherewith God had comforted them.

Secondly, we must make our particular callings wherein we live, the instruments of mercie, and in doing the duties thereof shew forth compassion towards others. This rule is of great use, and therefore it will not be amisse to shew the practice of it in particular. The Magistrate must rule and governe in mercie: and the Minister must preach in mercie: every Sermon must be a worke of compassion towards the people, not onely for the matter which it containeth, but for the manner of his delivery, and in the scope and drift which hee aimeth at: he which preacheth otherwaies, doth barre himselfe of all mercy, even then, when hee intreats of mercy unto others. There is a carnall and humane kinde of preaching, which now adaies takes place, wherein nothing is so much regarded as the vaunting of wit, memory, and learning, by fine contrived sentences, multiplicitie of quotations, variety of allegations of Fathers, Schoolemen, and other learning: but herein is no mercy nor compassion to the poore soule. It is said indeed, that none condemne this kinde of preaching, but they that cannot attaine unto it. But the truth is, God will have his word delivered, [t] Not in the entising speech of mans wisdome, but in the plaine evidence of the spirit, and of power: and therefore a man cannot with good conscience apply himselfe to such kinde of preaching, else no doubt a man of meane gifts might finde it more easie to attaine unto, than to the true preaching of Christ crucified. Thirdly, every private man must make the duties of his calling, workes of mercie: the rich man must know himselfe to be, not a Lord, but a Steward of Gods blessings, and therefore must imploy and dispense the same in mercie, by giving and lending unto the poore freely, as God shall minister unto him just occasion. The trades-man must buy and sell in mercy, dealing justly with the rich, and shewing liberality to the poore. The master must eate immercie use the labour of his servant; and the servant thus in mercie doe service to his master, for conscience towards God. And happy were it with all estates, if this rule of mercy were observed: the want whereof, is the bane of all societies.

1 Rule.

Timely, for the more cheerefull practice of mercie, wee must lay aside some part of our goods, for the releefe of them that be in miserie. The Jewes were commanded to set apart the first fruits of their corne and cattell, for the Lords altar: but in the new Testament the altar is ceased, and the poore come in stead thereof; and therefore we must now bequeath some thing for their releefe. Many are given to great excesse in fare, and in attire; but they may doe well to abate some part thereof, and bestow it on the poore, for herby will the rest bee sanctified to their more free and comfortable use: nay, in case of necessitie, we ought to sequester some part of our owne necessaries, for the refreshing of the poore; so did the Church of 2 Macedonia, even beyond their power, give to the releefe of the afflicted brethren. Men are exceeding cold in charitie, and one maine cause thereof, is want of observing this Rule, in setting apart some thing, according as God shall bleese us in our callings, for the releefe of the poore.

2 2 Cor. 8. 2.

The second point to bee considered in this Rule is, wherein this blessednesse doth consist; namely, in the obtaining of mercy: hee that shewes mercie, shall finde mercie, both with God and man. Where first, we may see the error of the Church of Rome in their doctrine of merits: for they make a speciall part of humane satisfaction, to consist in Almes-deeds and releeving of the poore, teaching that a man may hereby merit eternall life: but they erre grosselie; for then Christ would not have said, blessed are the mercifull, for they shall finde mercie: but rather thus, they shall finde justice: for that which comes of merit, is due by right. Secondly, hereby we may see what to think of our Church, and Nation, in respect of the true Title to Gods mercie; for onely the mercifull shall finde mercie. Now it were easie to goe thorow all orders and conditions of men among us, and therein to shew abundance of unmercifulnesse and cruelty; so as we may be justly called a cruell people, and therefore cannot looke for mercie at Gods hand: for to the mercilesse shall bee judgement without mercie. This is evident by the Lords dealing with his people: for all their sacrifices and duties of religion were abomination vnto the Lord, because their hands were full of blouds: and because they had no mercy, therefore they were led into captivitie, as wee may see at large, Jer. 5. 28. Ezek. 9. 9, 10. and Zach. 9. 12. Now we being in the same case with them for unmercifulnes and cruelty, have no doubt deserved long since the same punishment; even that the enemie should deprive us both of Gospel and peace, and of all our prosperity and wealth: what then shall we doe? surely we must humble our selves by prayer and fasting unto the Lord, if not publikly, yet privately; every man and every family apart, even for this one sin of unmercifulnesse: and withall in this humiliation, begin to practise mercy, by bestowing that upon the poore, which we spare from our bodies in the day of our fast.

4 Isa. 1. 15, 23. 15.

v. 8. Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God.

6 Rule.

These words contain the sixth Rule of Christ, touching true happines; wherein, as in the former, observe two points: the persons blessed, and wherein their blessednesse consists. The persons blessed are thus qualified; they are pure in heart. This is diversly expounded: By pure in heart, some understand those that are chaste; others, those that are simple hearted, void of guile and deceit. But the words will beare a more generall sense, and betoken such as are holy in heart, having their hearts purged from the defilement of their sins, and be in part renued and sanctified by the holy Ghost: and that they are so to be taken, may appeare, Psal. 24. 4. whence these words are borrowed; where also the Prophet expoundeth the pure in heart to be such, as have not lift up their minde to vaine things: to which purpose, the Author to the Hebrewes saith, Follow peace with all men, and holinesse, without which no man can see God. Againe, the intent of our Saviour Christ in this place, was no doubt to crosse the Pharisaicall conceit of those times, whereby men did content themselves with outward holinesse, as sufficient to true happinesse; and therefore hee saith, Blessed are the pure, not outwardly, but inwardly in heart. Further, by heart we are to understand the soule, with the parts and faculties thereof; that is, the minde, the consetence, the will, and affections. And that wee may yet conceive more clearely of this point, we are to search out two things; first, in what manner, then in what measure the heart is made pure. For the first, the purifying of the heart is by a two-fold Action of the holy Ghost; first, by creating in the minde a saving faith, which unites a man unto Christ, and as an hand applyeth Christs purity, that is, his obedience to the heart: so Peter speaketh of the Gentiles, in the Councell at Jerusalem, that by faith the Lord purified their hearts. Secondly, when a man is in Christ, the holy Ghost purgeth and sanctifieth the heart inwardly, by mortifying all the corruptions in the minde, will, and affections, and by putting into it inward holinesse, whereby the Image of Christ is renued therein. And this our Saviour Christ expresseth, Joh. 15. 2. when he saith, that the father purgeth every one that bringeth forth fruit in him. Now unto these the holy Ghost addeth an excellent grace of Christian Resolution, whereby a man hath a constant constant purpose not to sinne against God any way, either in thought, word, or deed; but in all things to please God continually; so as if at any time he sinne, it is against his holy resolution. Now for the measure of this purification, it is onely in part in this life; for the grace of sanctification is not perfect till death, as the Apostle saith, We receive but the first fruits of the spirit: that is, not the Tenths, but as an handfull of corne to a whole field: the soule is free from the punishment and guilt of sinne, and in some sort purged from corruption, but not wholly. This we must alwayes have more diligently, because the Papists teach otherwise; to wit, that after Baptisme and regeneration, sin is so taken away, that there is in man nothing that God can hate: but experience in every childe of God, shewes this to be false. The chiefe ground of their opinion is this, that if sinne properly called, should remaine in the regenerate, then God should repute a man to be just, which is a sinner. But we answer, that God never reputeth an impenitent sinner just, but onely the repentant, and regenerate, which are by faith in Christ, and so in effect are no sinners, because though corruption remaine in them in part, yet it is not imputed to their persons: Besides, in the act of their conversion, corruption hath received that deadly wound, whereof it shall never recover, but daily die, till it be quite abolished, and therefore doth it not reigne in them. And thus we see in what manner and measure the heart is purified, whereby the pure in heart may be thus described: They are such as beleeve the pardon of their sinnes in Christ, and be in part renewed in their soules by the holy Ghost: having their naturall corruptions mortified and abolished in some measure, and the graces of Gods image repaired in them, and a godly resolution wrought in their hearts, not to sinne against God in any thing.

Heb. 12. 23.

Considering that the pure in heart be blessed, we must search our selves, and see whether our hearts be qualified with this grace: As in former times, so at this day inward puritie is much neglected. The ancient Jewes stood upon their legall puritie and righteousnesse, and the Pharises after them, relied upon their outward holinesse; and the holy Ghost foretold, that in a the later dayes should come perilous times, by reason of sundry sinnes, wherof this is one, that men should content themselves with a faire outward shew of Godlinesse, and in truth denie the power thereof. And doth not experience shew this to be true among us? for the pure heart is so little regarded, that the seeking after it is turned to a by-word, and a matter of reproach. Who are so much branded with vile termes of Puritans and Precisians, as those that most endevour to get and keepe the puritie of heart in a good conscience? Againe, the generall ignorance that every where abounds, doth plainly argue the want of this grace; for what can be in the heart but impuritie and iniquitie, where there is no knowledge of the will of God in the minde? And for hearts have more knowledge than the rest, generally they are not answerable unto it in practise; for take a view of all the markers in the land, and you shall hardly find a man that is so full hearted to me, that will bee brought to abate one jot of the highest price, no not to the poore that stand in extreme need; which as it argueth a bloody and cruell heart, so is there with our times to bee evill dayes, wherein men professe much, and doe nought: which in will draw Gods judgement upon us, and cause the Gospel to be removed and given to a nation, that with profession, will joyne the power of godlinesse in heart and life. What befell the b figge-tree, whereon Christ sought fruit, and found nothing but leaves, was it not accursed? and how shall we thinke to escape, if we be like unto it? c For the earth that drinketh in the raine that falleth oft upon it, and yet bringeth forth bryers and thornes is very neere vnto cursing, whose end is to be burned.

c Heb. 6. 7, 8.

Secondly, if the pure in heart bee blessed, then we must labour to practise the counsell of the Prophet, d Wash you, make you cleane; and e sanctifie the Lord in your hearts: yea, as the Apostle saith, f Let us purge our selves from all filthinesse of the flesh and spirit. Indeed it is the g worke of God to sanctifie the heart, man of himselfe can no more doe it than a Black-moore can change his skinne: but yet every one that would feele in himselfe this work of God, must use the meanes wherein the Spirit doth purge the heart; first, therefore wee must humble our selves unfainedly for all the sinnes and corruptions of our life already past, and for the time to come grow to a resolute purpose not to sinne against God in any thing: which wee must testifie by a godly endevour to obey him in all things; for a pure heart, and a purpose to live in any one sinne, cannot stand together: but this constant purpose not to sinne, is a notable grace, and a infallible token of a renued and sanctified heart.

The second point in this Rule is, wherein this blessed estate consists; namely in this, that they shall see God: for the understanding hereof two points must be handled. First, how God may be seene; Secondly, how the seeing of God is true happinesse. For the first, the Apostle saith, h No man hath seene God at any time: yea further, Paul calleth him, i King of kings, whom never man saw, nor can see. We must therefore know, that there is a two-fold sight in man, the sight of the eye, and of the minde; by the sight of the eye no man can see God in his essence and substance, which is meere spirituall, and so invisible; for the eye seeth nothing but things corporall and visible: a man by his eye cannot see his owne soule, and much lesse the substance of God.

h 1 Joh. 4. 12. i 1 Tim. 6. 16.

How God may be seene.

Object. 1. But k Abraham, and l Moses saw God, for he appeared unto them. Answer. They k Gen. 17. 1. l Exod. 33. 11.

They saw him not in his nature and substance, but in certaine created Images and similitudes, wherein God for that time did testifie his presence unto them: some indeed say, that though a man cannot see God in this life, yet in the life to come he shall see him with his bodily eyes. But this opinion is not true: for though the bodie shall then be perfectly sanctified, and the eye sanctified, yea glorified, yet still it remaines a true body, and a true eye, and therefore can not see the essence of God, which is invisible to the eye of flesh.

Iob 19.26.27. Obiect. II. I shall see God in my flesh (saith Iob) and mine eyes shall behold him. Ans. He speaketh there of God his Redeemer, who is not God simply, but God incarnate; for the word translated Redeemer, signifieth one allied unto us in bloud: now no man doubteth but God in Christ may be seene, as Ioh. 14. 9. He that hath seene me, hath seene my father.

Obiect. III. 1 Cor. 13. 12. We shall see him face to face. Ans. God hath no face, and therefore that cannot be understood literally; but thereby is signified, that we shall have plentifull knowledge of God, as we have of him whom we see face to face.

Obiect. IV. If we shall not see God with our eyes, then they serve to no use in heaven. Ans. God forbid: for besides the glorious companie of all the Saints, we shall therewith behold our Lord Jesus Christ, who redeemed us by his bloud, and made us Kings and Priests unto our God, to whom we shall sing praise, and honour, and glory for evermore, Rev. 5. 12.

The second kinde of sight, is of the minde, which is nothing but the knowledge or understanding of the minde, and that is two-fold; imperfect in this life, and perfect in the life to come. In this life, the minde knowes not Gods essence or substance, but onely by the effects; as by his word and Sacraments; and by his creatures: and indeed, the speciall sight we have of God in this life, is by these his effects to conceive in our mindes how God is effectuall to us; as that God is our Father, and Christ our Redeemer, and the holy Ghost our Sanctifier. The perfect vision of God, is reserved to the life to come, where Gods elect shall see him in regard of his substance: for [m] We shall see him as he is. Yet that we be not deceived herein, wee must know that perfect sight is two-fold, simple and comprehensive: Simple perfect sight is, when man sees a thing wholly as it is in it selfe; and thus God is not seene by the minde of man. Comprehensive sight is, when the Creature seeth God, so farre forth as it is capable of his knowledge; and thus shall men see God in the world to come perfectly, and be filled therewith, though they know him not wholly, as he is in himselfe: even as a vessell cast into the sea may be perfectly full of water, though it receive not all the water in the sea. But some will aske, how shall the minde see God? Ans. The manner is such, as neither eye hath seene, nor eare

A heard, neither can any man tell, but they onely that have fruition of it in heaven: yet certainly, such it is, as shall give full contentment to every one that doth enjoy it. But it shall be farre better for us, to seeke for a pure heart, whereby we may be assured of this blessed sight of God, than curiously to search how we shall see him: for to them that be of a pure heart, God will reveale himselfe perfectly, to their joy unspeakable and glorious.

The second point is, how this seeing of God can be true happinesse. Ans. A man that hath beene blinde, will count himselfe happie, when he receives his sight; and he that hath long lien in a darke dungeon, will count it a B blessed thing, to bee brought out to see the light of the Sunne: now if this bodily light be so comfortable, how endlesse is the joy of that heavenly light, which commeth from God himselfe? The [n] Queene of Sheba counted those servants blessed, that stood before Salomon to heare his wisdome; then doubtlesse the sonnes of God must needs bee happie, that stand before the Lord, hearing his wisdome and beholding his glory: [o] For in his presence is fulnesse of joy, and at his right hand are pleasures for evermore. Moses is renowned with all posteritie for this prerogative, that God vouchsafed [p] to let him see his backe parts: and Christs Disciples were so ravished with a glimpse of Gods glory in his transfiguration, that they would needs [q] abide there still. Oh then, what
C glorie is it to see him as he is? doubtlesse this sight of God is true happinesse. But then (will some man say) the Devils shall be happie, for they shall see him at the last day. Answ. Their sight shall be their sorrow, for they shall see him as a terrible Judge, not as a Saviour, with apprehension and approbation of his love and mercie, which is the sight here meant: as the Apostle saith, [r] We shall see face to face, and know as we are knowne. So then the meaning of these words is this, they shall see God by his effects in this life, and perfectly in the world to come, with approbation of his love and mercie.

This gracious promise must be observed as a D ground of speciall comfort to all Gods children: for they that endevour after puritie of heart, shall suffer much contempt and reproach in the world; but they must not be dismaied, for God will looke upon them, and shew himselfe favourably unto them: [t] He will appeare to their joy, and their adversaries shall bee ashamed: therfore they may say with David, [u] I will not feare what man can doe unto me.

Secondly, is it true happinesse to see God? then in this world we must strive to come as neere unto God, as possibly we can; for the nearer we come unto him, the more wee see him, and the nearer we are to our perfect happines. Now that we may come neere unto God we must set God always before our eyes; that is, wheresoever we are, and whatsoever we doe,

we must perswade our hearts that we are in his
A presence: this was Davids practice, Psal. 16. 8. I have set the Lord always before me: this perswasion will make us to walke with God, as Enoch did, who for this is said [u] to please God.

[u] Heb. 11. 5.

Thirdly, this must allure our hearts towards all those meanes wherein God shewes himselfe unto his children: the Lord revealed himselfe in his sanctuarie unto his people, and hereupon David was ravished with desire to Gods courts; see Psal. 27. 4. and Psal. 48. 1, 2. And the like affection must we have to Gods Word and Sacraments, therein he shewes his beautie, as in his sanctuarie; and therefore we must labour therein to see the goodnesse and mercie of God towards us, using them as pledges of his grace
B and love in Christ: yea, we must endevour to see him in all his creatures, as his wisdome, power and goodnesse to us-wards: this is a notable step to our perfect blisse.

v. 9. Blessed are the peace-makers, for they shall be called the children of God.

Here is the seventh Rule and precept of Christ touching true happinesse; wherein observe first, who are blessed; secondly, wherein this blessednesse consists. The parties blessed are Peace-makers. By peace we must understand concord and agreement betweene man and C man. Now peace is two-fold, Good, or Evill: Good peace, is that which stands with good conscience and true religion. This was among the converts in the Primitive Church, [x] who lived together, and were all of one heart, and one soule. Evill peace, is an agreement and concord in evil, as in the practice of any sin against Gods Commandements: in a word evill peace is such, as cannot stand with true Religion and good conscience. Hereof Christ spake, saying, [y] I came not to send peace, but the sword: that is, division by meanes of the Doctrine of the Gospel. Now in this place, good peace is the quality of those parties that be blessed. Further, by Peace-makers, two sorts of men are to be understood: first, all such as have care, so much D as in them lieth, to have peace with all men, good and bad: secondly, such as not only themselves be at peace with others, but also doe labour to reconcile parties at variance, and to make peace betweene man and man; both these sorts are blessed, that is, they are in a happie state and condition, because this gift of Peace-making, is a grace of Gods spirit in them alone who are blessed: for where Gods spirit worketh peace of conscience towards God in Christ, there the same spirit doth move the partie to seeke peace with all men; as also to make peace betweene those that are at variance, so farre forth as it may stand with Religion and a good conscience. Yet here are certaine questions to be scanned touching peace, which will give great light to the better understanding of this Rule.

Quest. I. Seeing Peace-makers are blessed, why should they be blamed which seeke to make peace betweene Papists and Protestants, by reconciling these two religions? Answer. Because this is not good peace, for there is no more concord betweene these two religions, than is betweene light and darknesse. Whereas it is said, they differ not in substance, but in circumstances, both having the same Word, the same Creed, and Sacraments; we must know, that notwithstanding all this, yet by necessarie consequent of their doctrine and religion, they doe quite overturne the foundation of the Bible, of the Creed and Sacraments: as in the points of Justification by workes, of humane satisfaction, of worshipping Saints and Images, and their masling sacrifice and Priesthood, may soone appeare. But they have the same Baptisme with us? Ans. Baptisme severed from the true preaching of the Word, is no sufficient note of a true Church; for the Samaritans had circumcision, and yet the Lord saith [z] they were not his people. Againe, they hold the outward forme of Baptisme, but they overturne the inward power by denying Justification by faith alone in Jesus Christ. Thirdly, Baptisme is preserved in the Church of Rome, not for their sakes, but for the hid Church which God hath kept to himselfe, even in the middest of all Popetrie: so that if they returne to us, we shall accoid otherwise we may not goe to them, lest we forsake the Lord.

Quest. II. If Peace-makers bee blessed, how can any Nation with good conscience make warre? Answ. The Lords Commandement to have peace with all men, doth not binde men simply, but with this condition, [a] if it be possible, and as much as in us lieth: but when there is no hope of maintaining peace, then the Lord alloweth a lawfull warre, such as is for just defence, or claime of our needfull due and right: for herein the case standeth with the bodily politicke, as it doth with the naturall body: while there is hope of health and faierie, the Physitian useth gentle meanes; but when the case is desperate, then he useth desperate meanes, and sometime gives ranke poyson, to trie if by any meanes life may be fived. And so may the fairie of a State be fought by warre, when Motions of peace will not take place.

Quest. III. How can suits in law be maintained with good conscience, seeing it can hardly stand with this blessed peace? Answ. So long as meanes of agreement other wayes may be had betweene man and man, suits in law should not be taken up; for Paul blameth the Corinthians, not only [b] for going to law under heathen Judges, but because they lawed for light matters upon small occasions: [c] Why rather (saith he) suffer ye not harme? But if by private meanes we cannot get or hold our right, we may use the helpe of law.

Quest.

Quest. IV. How farre forth may one man, or one people be at peace with another? League or faction betweene man and man, people and people, is twofold; either of concord, or of amitie. The league of concord is, when men bind themselves in peace one with another; and this may be had betweene all men, believers or unbelievers, good or bad; [d] Have peace with all men, (saith the Apostle.) League of amitie is, when men or people binde themselves one to another in speciall love, beside their outward concord: and this kinde of peace ought onely to be had with true believers. Good king Iehosaphat is greatly blamed of the Lord, for making this speciall league with wicked Ahab; Wouldst thou helpe the wicked, (saith the Prophet) and love them that hate the Lord? for this thing the Lords wrath is upon thee.

Whereas Peace-makers are blessed, wee are to be admonished, if it be possible to have peace with all men, as much as in us lieth; and within the compasse of our callings, to avoid all occasions of contention and strife: Saint Pauls exhortation must here take place, [f] We must hold the unitie of the spirit in the bond of peace. To the effecting whereof, three vertues are there propounded for our practice; Humility, Meeknesse, and Long suffering. Humility is a vertue, whereby one man thinkes better of another than of himselfe; for this makes a man thinke basely of himselfe, in regard of his owne sinnes and corruptions, whereupon he is content to give place unto others, and to yeeld of his owne right, for the maintaining of peace: when as on the other side, pride causeth men to seeke for more than their due; and so causeth contention: as Salomon saith, [g] only by pride doth man make contention. Meeknesse is a vertue, whereby a man is gentle in behaviour towards every person, good or bad: this causeth a man to put up injuries, and to forbeare wrongs, when occasion of revenge is given him. Long suffering is a vertue, whereby a man doth beare with other mens wants, as morositie and hastinesse, and in bearing yeelds of his owne right, for the maintenance of peace thus dealt Abraham with Lot, when their herdmen were at variance, though he were the superiour both for age and place; yet for peace sake, he put Lot [h] to cuhse the place of his abode, whether on the right hand or on the left. Besides these, there are many other vertues propounded in the writings of the Apostles, for the maintaining of peace; to wit, Humanitie, when a man can so carrie himselfe towards all others, that he can take well all indifferent sayings and doings, and construe them to the best part, if it be possible. This is a most needfull vertue for Christian peace, which we must follow, and hereunto frame our nature and affections, which are crooked and rebellious of themselves, that so farre as is possible, we may have peace with all men; for peace is the bond of every society, of families, townes, and common wealths, without which no state can endure; and Christian religion commends the same unto us, Jam. 3.17. The wisdome which is from above, is pure, gentle, peaceable, full of mercie, and good fruits.

Secondly, if Peace-makers betweene man and man be blessed, then much more happie are they, who make peace betweene God and man; and these are the faithfull Ministers of the Gospell, which set themselves wholly to reconcile men unto God: so Paul (speaking as a Peace-maker) saith, [i] We beseech you as Embassadours of Christ, that yee be reconciled to God: and therefore all those, that by Gods grace are set apart for this worke, must in sinceritie set their hearts, and imploy themselves diligently for this end, to reconcile men unto God, and to bring them to peace with God; and in their owne conscience, this shall be a seale of the Lords mercie towards them, whereby they may assure themselves that they be blessed: for howsoever unto some, their ministerie may be the savour of death, yet they are are alwaies a sweet savour unto God in Christ.

Thirdly, hereby we may see, what a blessed thing it is, in the day of Gods wrath against his people, to stand in the breach, and by earnest prayer to stay his hand, and so to make peace betweene God and his people by prayer. This was Moses practice many a time, for which he is renowned with all posteritie, Psal. 106. 23. Exod. 32. 10, 11. And so did Aaron, Num. 16. 47,48. David, 1 Sam. 24.17. and many others. This duty concerneth us, for God hath a controversie with our Land, for the innumerable crying sinnes hereof, as blasphemie, oppression, contempt of Religion, adulteries, and such like: now when we see the great mortalitie of our brethren, or heare of treasons and conspiracies, and rumours of wars by enemies, who threaten our overthrow; then must we know that God shakes his rod at us, and then especially is every one to intreat the Lord more earnestly for mercie and reconciliation: for this is a blessed worke of peace, to stay the Lord from the destruction of his people: Read Isay [k], Ieremie, Ezekiel[m]: sundry times God complaines of the want of such, as should stand in the breach before him for the Land, that he should not destroy it. Behold the weight and worth of this duty in Abrahams intercession for Sodome: for he so farre prevailed with the Lord, [n] that If there had beene tenne righteous persons in Sodome, the whole citie had beene spared for their sakes: but because there were none, so soone as righteous Lot was got out, it was burned with fire and brimstone from heaven, Gen. 19. 23,24.

Lastly, if Peace-makers bee blessed, the Peace-breakers are cursed: many there be of this sort, but above all, they are most notorious who disturbe the peace of the Land, which by Gods mercy we have for many yeares enjoyed. It may be thought we have none such among us, but only traitors, and such as plot with foreign enemies; but the truth is, all those doe disturbe our peace, that walke after their hearts lusts in sin and wickednesse, as idolaters, blasphemers, oppressors, drunkards, and such like; these are the peace-breakers, who cause the Lord to take away the blessing of peace: see Jer. 16. 5. the Lord saith, He hath taken his peace from his people: the reason is, v. 12. because every one walked after the stubbornesse of his wicked heart, and would not heare him: and Levit. 26.23,25. The sword of the enemy is sent of God, to avenge the quarrell of his covenant. It is then our transgression and rebellion against God, that will bring warre and rebellion into our Land; if this were not, our peace would continue for ever: for [o] the work of justice shall be peace, quietnesse, and assurance for ever. And againe, [p] in righteousnesse shalt thou be stablished, and be far from oppression. This therefore should move all ungodly persons to repent, and to breake off the course of their sinnes, unlesse they will continue professed enemies to the peace of the state under which they live.

The second Point, wherein this blessednesse of Peace-makers consists; namely, in that they shall be called the children of God: that is, they shall be esteemed and reputed for Gods children in this world, of God himselfe, and all good men; and in the world to come, fully manifested so to be. That this is true happinesse will soone appeare, by the view of the state of every child of God; for they are united unto Christ by the Spirit of grace, by which they are regenerate, and in Christ they are adopted for sonnes and daughters, and so enjoy Gods speciall grace and favour. Now hereupon they are Kings children, having God for their Father, who loves them more tenderly than any earthly Parents can love their owne children: secondly, they have Christ for their brother, and so are heires annexed with him, having Heaven and earth for their possession: [q] In him they are made Kings and Priests unto God: and shall be Iudges of the world at the last day: yea, they have the [r] holy Angels for ministring spirits to attend upon their persons, for their defence from the power of the enemie, which farre surpasseth the dignity of any guard of men on earth what soever: all things worke together for the best unto them, their crosses and afflictions are no curses, but fatherly trials and chastisements; yea, their sinnes are turned to their good; to them death is no death, but a sweet sleep unto their bodies, and a strait passage for their soules into eternall glorie: yea, in the act of death, they have the comfort of life in the joy of the Spirit, and the Angels ready, when breath departeth, to carry their soules to Heaven.

If this be true happinesse, to be called Gods children; then they that live after their owne wicked lusts, void of all care to keepe a good conscience, are miserable and accursed; for they are the children of the Devill, serving him in the workes of sinne, and expressing his Image in ungodlinesse and workely lusts. If thou then therefore in hand, if they have any care of true happinesse, to labour after regeneration: whereby, forsaking the lusts and courses of their former ignorance, and embracing and obeying sincerely the Word of life, they may become Gods children, and so happy.

Secondly, hast thou received this grace of Gods Spirit, whereby thou art inclined to have peace with all men, and to seeke for peace betweene God and thine owne conscience, yea, betweene the Lord and others? then comfort thy selfe, thou art the childe of God, these motions come from grace, flesh and bloud brings forth no such fruits: labour therefore to maintaine these good motions, with all other pledges of thine adoption, and so shalt thou grow fully assured of thine owne happinesse. In this age men make much adoe to get good assurance of earthly purchases: but what madnesse is this, so greatly to regard momentanie things, and to have no care, in comparison, of our eternall inheritance, which wee shall have assured unto us, when we become the children of God?

V. 10 Blessed are they which suffer persecution for righteousnesse sake, for theirs is the kingdome of Heaven.

11 Blessed are yee when men revile you, and persecute you, and say all manner of evill against you for my sake, falsly.

12 Rejoyce and be glad, for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the Prophets which were before you.

8 Rule. Here Christ propounds his eighth Rule touching happinesse, which he handles more largely than the former: for having laid downe the Rule, v. 10. he expounds the same in a speciall application of it to his Disciples in the 11. and 12. verses. In the Rule it selfe, note two points; first, the parties blessed: secondly, wherein their blessednes consists. The parties blessed, are they which suffer persecution for righteousnesse sake. Persecution properly signifieth pursuite, such as one enemy maketh after another: but here the Word must be taken generally, for all kinde of persecution whatsoever. Now because it is a paradox, and absurd in humane reason, to think him blessed, that for any cause is persecuted; therefore Christ to verifie the truth hereof, repeares the same Rule in the next verse, where also hee expounds every parcell thereof, wherewith I will content my selfe, because Christs is

In the 11. verse therefore Christ sets downe three things, all pertaining to the true exposition of this Rule: First, he explaines more particularly the parties that bee blessed, saying to his Disciples, Blessed are ye. In the beginning of the Chapter, we heard, that he cast his eyes upon them, and spake unto them; and now here he doth the like againe: and therefore this Rule must not be understood of all men in the world that suffer, but of all Christs true Disciples; and generally it is not true, for the heathen and infidels, doe often suffer for good causes, and yet remaine infidels, without the true God, and so are not blessed. Againe, a Christian professor may give up his life in a good cause, yet not of love to God or his truth, but upon ambition, and so not be blessed: for [a] Though I give my body to be burned, yet wanting love, it profiteth me nothing. Secondly, Christ expoundeth particularly, what hee meaneth by persecution, naming three parts thereof; first, slandering and reviling, which is the persecution of the tongue: Thus the Jewes persecuted the Apostles, saying, [b] they were drunke, or full of sweet wine: Thus Festus persecuted Paul, making him [c] mad, or beside himselfe. Secondly, persecution, meaning hereby (as the word doth properly signifie) first, pursuit, such as one enemie maketh after another, when hee seeks to spoile him of his goods, or of his life: secondly, the bringing a man unto the Barre, and there of malice to accuse and arraigne him: thirdly, evill speaking with lying, when as men of purpose be without cause maliciously carried thereunto, as when the Jewes called Christ a [d] Samaritan, that had a devill, and said that he cast out devils by Belzebub the Prince of Devils: and thus were the Christians in the Primitive Church persecuted, being maliciously accused for killing their owne children, for worshipping the head of an asse, for incest, and such like. To these three kinds of persecutions, S. Luke Chap. 6. 22. addes a fourth; namely, hatred: and a fifth, called separation, whereby men were excommunicated, and cast out of the Temple and Synagogues, for Christs sake and his Gospels. These are the severall kinds of that persecution, for the enduring whereof, Christ pronounceth men blessed, v. 10. wherof Hatred is the roote, and the rest are branches. Thirdly, Christ layes down the cause, for which this persecution shall bee inflicted; namely, for my sake: or as S. Luke saith, for the sonne of mans sake: which expoundeth this phrase, for Righteousnesse sake, ver. 10. to wit, for professing, beleeving, and maintaining the doctrine of the Gospell taught by Christ, touching remission of sinnes, and life everlasting, to them that beleeve.

The uses in generall. We see that Christ urgeth this Rule of blessednesse more largely than the former: this he doth for special causes; first, hereby hee would teach his Disciples, and us in them, that it is the will of God, his Church in this world should bee under the crosse, in such affliction and persecution, as their blood should be sought for the maintenance of the faith. And this hee will have to be the state of his Church for speciall causes: First, that the members thereof by their afflictions, may be acquainted with their owne wants and infirmities, which they would not much regard, if they were freed from the crosse. Secondly, that by affliction they may be kept from many grievous sinnes, into which they would fall, if they lived in peace. Thirdly, that others seeing the correction of the Church for sinne, might learne thereby to hate and avoid sinne: and lastly, that the Church might glorifie God, in a constant and couragious maintenance of his truth unto death; for even in persecution is Gods truth preserved against the reason of mans wisdome, Patient suffering for the truth, being faithfull witnesse-bearing thereunto.

Secondly, Christ had newly called the Twelve out of all his Disciples, to be Apostles; whereupon they might thinke, that they should be advanced to some outward honour, ease, and peace: but Christ hereby calls them from that conceit, and puts them in minde of affliction, which should befall them in time to come; that when it came they might the better endure it. And thus he prepares all Churches to suffer affliction; yea, and wee our selves, must hereby learne in time of peace, to prepare our selves against the day of triall, because his will is, That whosoever would live godly in Christ Iesu must suffer affliction.

Thirdly, hereby Christ intends to lay a ground of comfort to his disciples in their persecution, by a plaine and full declaration of their happinesse that suffer for righteousnesse sake, in that they have sure title to the Kingdom of Heaven; out of which estate no found comfort can bee had. And this same must wee lay up in store against the time to come: for wee live now in peace by Gods mercie, but we know not how long it will continue; we have beene threatned, and dangerously assaulted by our enemies many a time, beside the rod of God shaken with his owne hand against us; and we may not thinke our peace will last alwaies, but seeing our sinnes increase, wee may bee sure our joy and peace will one day be turned into sorrow: and therefore it will be good to have this Rule ingraven in our hearts, that they are blessed which suffer for righteousnesse sake. If therefore tribulation come for the defence of the Gospell, wee must have recourse to this promise of blessednesse, and that will be our comfort.

More particularly. In the words of this Rule, Blessed are they, &c. Christ would let us see that deadly hatred which the world beares unto Gods Church; for so much the word (persecute) importeth: The reasons of this hatred may bee these; First, the Church of God in the ministerie of the Gospell, seeks the ruine of the devils kingdome, who is the Prince of the world; the devill devill therefore rageth, and inflames the hearts of his instruments, with malice against Gods Church, that they may persecute and quite destroy it, if it were possible. Secondly, Gods Church is a peculiar people severed from the world in profession, doctrine, and conversation, and therefore the world hates them, Joh. 15. 16. And this very point may serve to stay our hearts when we shall be persecuted for the profession and embracing of the Gospell of Christ: for the world doth hate Gods Church, and will doe to the end: there must be enmitie betweene the seed of the serpent, and the seed of the woman, As then he that was borne of the flesh, persecuted him that was borne after the Spirit, so it now, Gal. 4. 29.

Secondly observe, that this hatred of the world, is not onely against the members of Gods Church, but even against Christs holy religion; so Christ saith, for my sake, or for my Religions sake. This is to be marked as a most excellent argument to perswade our consciences, that the Gospell of Christ which we professe, is the true and blessed doctrine of God, because the wicked world doth alwaies hate it; yea, it hateth us also for the Gospels sake: now if it were a doctrine of men, it would fit their natures well, and they would love it, for the world doth love his owne, Joh. 15. 19.

Thirdly, if they be blessed that suffer persecution, then how may any man lawfully flie in persecution? Answ. A man may flie in persecution with a good conscience, these two things observed: first, that he be not hindered by his particular calling: secondly, that he harh libertie offered by Gods providence to escape the hands of his enemies. The intent of this verse, is not to forbid flight, but to comfort such as are in persecution, and cannot escape: for the word signifieth such persecution, as is by pursuit and oppression, which cannot be avoided.

Lastly, seeing they are blessed that suffer for righteousnesse sake. Whether are they alwaies curst that suffer deservedly for an evill cause, for the contrary reason is in contraries? Ans. They are alwaies accursed, save in one case; to wit, unlesse they repent for their unrighteousnesse, for which they are afflicted; but by true repentance they become blessed. The theefe upon the crosse had lived in theft, & was there for apprehended, condemned, and crucified, and so he suffered for unrighteousnes; but yet he was saved, because he repented, and beleeved in Christ.

It is added, for righteousnesse sake: In this clause we are taught a speciall lesson; namely, that when God shall lay upon us any affliction or persecution; as imprisonment, banishment, losse of goods, or of life it selfe; wee must alwaies looke that the cause be good, and then suffer willingly. This is a necessarie Rule, for we must suffer affliction either publikely or privately, if we will live godly in Christ Jesus. Now it is not the punishment, but the cause that makes a Martyr: and to this purpose Peter faith, [f] Let none of you suffer as a Murtherer, a Theefe, or a busie-body; but if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed, but glorifie God in this behalfe: and therefore we must be sure the cause be good; yea, this we must have to the unto in our particular private examen.

Verse 11. Blessed are ye when men revile you, and persecute you, &c. In handling the former verse, we shewed the meaning of these words, and how they serve to expound the former Rule. The point here to be observed is this, That to revile and slander, yea (as Luke saith) to hate a man for a good cause, especially for Religion, is persecution: which throwes how fearefull the common sinne of the age is, whereby men revile their brethren, with hate and odious termes, because they shew some care to please God, and to adorne their profession by a godly life. But thou art a persecutor whosoever thou art, that useth this, and therefore repent and leave it, for it is a preparation to a greater sinne in this kinde, and most odious in Gods sight, as the punishment hereof declares, Gen. 21. 9, 10. with Gal. 4. 29, 30.

S. Luke addes a second word, shall vvhen they separate you, whereby is meant excommunication out of the Temple and Synagogue; a punishment which Christ foretold should befall his Disciples. This censure was put in execution in their Synagogues: for besides the administration of civill Justice, Ecclesiasticall matters were there handled. Now marke what Christ saith, Though excommunication bee mine owne ordinance; yet Blessed are you when men excommunicate you out of the Temple and Synagogues, for my Names sake: where he maketh excommunication a kinde of persecution, when it is denounced against men for righteousnesse sake.

Here then we may learne what to thinke of the Popes Bulls, whereby hee excommunicates Kings and Queenes, and particular Churches, for denying subjection to his chaire: namely, that they are the Devils instruments, wherewith Gods children are persecuted, and that all such as are thus excommunicated, for defending the truth of the Gospel, are blessed: for excommunication is not the instrument of a curse to them that suffer it for a good cause. Secondly, hence we learne, that excommunication abused against Gods Word, is no powerfull censure, though in it selfe, being used according to Gods ordinance, it is a most terrible thunderbolt, excluding a man in part from the Church, and from the Kingdome of Heaven: and therefore all Churches must see, that this censure be not abused, for the abusers of it incurre the danger of the curse, and not they against whom it is unjustly pronounced.

v. 12 Rejoyce and be glad, for great is your reward in Heaven: for so persecuted they the Prophets which were before you.

Here Christ drawes a conclusion from the former former Rule; for having said in generall, That they which suffer for righteousnes sake are blessed, v. 10. and applied it in particular to his Disciples, ver. 11. hereupon he inferres, that they must rejoyce in affliction, even then, or (as Luke s saith) In that day: yea, they must be glad; which word signifieth exceeding joy, such as we use to expresse by outward signes in the bodie; as skipping and dancing; such h as David used to testifie his joy, for the returne of the Arke of God to his City. This is a most worthy conclusion, often urged and commended unto us in Scripture: James 1. 2. Brethren, count it exceeding great joy, when ye fall into divers temptations. Rom. 5. 3. We rejoyce in tribulation, knowing that tribulation bringeth forth patience: and Act. 5. 41. The Disciples rejoyced, that they were counted worthy to suffer rebuke for the Name of Christ.

Here wee learne then, that Gods Church and people, that suffer in a good cause, must rejoyce and be glad. This must bee remembred, for we have beene many times in great danger of our enemies for the Gospels sake: and it may please God to leave us in their hands, for our manifold sinnes, and great abuse of his heavenly blessings: which if he doe, what must be our behaviour? must wee be swallowed up with sorrow and griefe? no, but humbling our selves for our sinnes, wee must remember for what wee doe suffer, and rejoyce and be glad in that behalfe; for though our outward man perish, yet the inner man shall bee revived.

Now because it is a hard thing to rejoyce in grievous afflictions, therefore Christ doth give two reasons to move them hereunto; first, from the Recompence of reward after this life, in these words, For great is your reward in Heaven. This point I have handled heretofore, and therefore I will here onely shew how the Papists abuse this Text, to prove the merits of mans workes of grace; for hence they reason thus, Where there is a reward, there is merit: But in Heaven there is a reward for mans works of grace: and therefore in this life, there is merit by them. To this it is answered divers waies: I will touch the heads of the principall. First, the word reward must not be understood properly, but figuratively; for Christs speech is borrowed from labourers, who after they have done their worke, doe receive their wages, which is the reward thereof: even so, after Christs Disciples and servants have suffered afflictions for the Name of Christ, at the end of this life they shall receive life everlasting. Secondly, when wee reade of wages and rewards in Scripture, we must not dreame of any thing due by right of debt and merit, but conceive thereby, that which is given by promise, and of meere mercie; like as when an earthly Father promiseth to his sonne, to give him this or that thing, if hee will learne; now the Fathers gift is not merited by the childe, but is freely given, the more to incite the childe to learne his booke. Thirdly, if wee understand reward properly; then wee must referre it, not to our sufferings, but to the sufferings of Christ: for there is no proportion betweene our sufferings, and life eternall: The afflictions of this present life, are not worthy of the glory which shall bee shewed unto us. Rom. 8. 18.

The second reason is taken from the example of the ancient Prophets; for so persecuted they the Prophets which were before you. In this Reason Christ intendeth two things; First, to teach his Disciples and us, that persecution for good causes, is no new or strange thing. Secondly, to comfort his Disciples and servants in their sufferings; for that thereby, they should bee made conformable to the ancient worthy Prophets, who were of old renowned among men, and are now glorified of God in Heaven. Hereto wee must compare the words of Luke spoken to the same purpose: i for after this manner did the Fathers to the Prophets. By Fathers we must needs meane the ancient people of the Jewes, for here he speaketh to his Disciples and others that were Jewes by Nation. Now hence observe a strange point; to wit, that the ancient Prophets, who were most worthy men of God, were persecuted in their times, not so much by forreiners and enemies to religion, as by those that were outwardly members of the Church of God, and professors of Religion. This may seeme strange, that men living in Gods Church should grow to this height of impiety, to become persecutors of Gods Saints: but Saint Stephen giveth the reason hereof, namely, their k hard hearts, whereby they resisted the Holy Ghost in the ministery of the Word: for which God left them to themselves, so as they ranne headlong to this height of impiety, to persecute Gods dearest servants. The like we may see in these our daies: some that have bin professors, after long hearing, breake forth into open Atheisme, calling this into question, whether there be a God: and among others there is also to be seene as vile cruelty and oppression in their particular dealings, and as abominable filthinesse, as is to be found among the Heathen and Idolaters: all which, and many other enormous sinnes proceed from this; that though men professe Religion, yet they deny subjection to the Gospel preached, so as it is not in them a Word of power: for which cause, God in his justice gives them up to hardnesse of heart, to commit sinne without remorse. And therefore, if wee would escape the fearefull judgement of a reprobate sense, let us labour with feare and trembling to become obedient to the Word which we heare; for if we doe not glorifie God in the meanes, wherein he offers grace and mercy, God will be sure to glorifie himselfe in our deserved confusion.

k Acts 7. 51.

V. 13. Ye are the salt of the earth, earth: but if the salt hath lost his savour, &c.

In this verse and the rest, to the 16. Christ propoundeth the second branch of this Sermon, touching the office of the Apostles, and in them of all Ministers; wherein, his intent is to move them to diligence in preaching the will of God to all people.

The Coherence of this part with the former, standeth thus: Christ had shewed before in divers precepts, that many are blessed, whereupon some might aske, how they should attaine to this happinesse, and to those graces of the Spirit, which make them fit for that estate? Christ here answers, that the preaching of the Gospel is the principall meanes to worke in their hearts those graces, to which true happinesse is promised. And because it is an excellent privilege to bring men to this estate, therefore hee exciteth his Disciples to diligence in this Ministerie by two Reasons, drawne from the properties of this worke, and propounded in two similitudes. The first is taken from salt, in these words; Ye are the salt of the earth: and amplified in the words following, to the end of the verse. The second is drawne from light, ver. 14, 15.

For the first: Ye are the salt of the earth: ye, that is, you whom I have called to be Apostles, and set apart for the worke of the Ministerie, are salt; not properly, but by resemblance; yet not in regard of their persons, but of their ministery; because hereby they were to season men for God, and to make them savourie both in heart and life: Of the earth; not of Judea only, but of the whole world, as may appeare by their commission, Matth. 28. 19. Goe therefore and teach all Nations.

From this description, both Ministers and people may learne their duty. First, for Ministers: by this title of salt here given unto them, Christ would teach them, first, how they ought to dispense the Word of God, both Law and Gospell; namely, so as they labour therein to expresse the properties of salt, whereto Christ alludeth in his Title. Now the properties of salt applyed to raw flesh, or fresh wounds are principally three: First, it will bite and fret, being of nature hot and dry: Secondly, it makes meats savoury unto our taste: Thirdly, it preserveth meats from putrifaction, by drawing out of them superfluous moistnesse. The Apostles therefore and other Ministers being salt, must not onely in generall deliver the Word of God unto the people; but withall apply the same particularly unto mens hearts and consciences, as salt is applyed unto meat: And that for three ends: First, the Law must be applyed to rippe up mens hearts, to make them see their sinnes; it must fret and bite them by the curse thereof to cause them to renounce themselves, and to cry with the Jewes, l Men and brethren, what shall we doe? Secondly, the Gospell must be preached, that men feeling their corruption, like rottennesse in their soules, may by the blessing of the Spirit bee thereby seasoned with grace, and so reconciled unto God, and made savourie in his sight. This is the end of the Ministerie, 2 Cor. 5. 20. We are Embassadours for Christ, as though God did beseech you through us, wee pray you in Christs stead, that you bee reconciled unto God. Thirdly, both the Law and the Gospell must be continually dispensed, that thereby sinne and corruption may bee daily mortified and consumed both in heart and life; even as superfluous humours are dryed up by salt; and this is the right dispenting of Gods Word: for every discourse upon a text of Scripture is not preaching, but hee that so expoundeth and applyeth the word, that his ministerie may be salt unto his hearers, he it is that preacheth the Word indeed.

Secondly, Christ calling his Disciples salt, teacheth them and all ministers, that they themselves ought first to be seasoned by the Word: for how can they fitly season others by applying this salt unto their consciences, who never felt the biting of it upon their owne? Hee that is unseasoned himselfe may speak Gods Word, which God may blesse to the good of others: but yet in respect of himselfe, it is a riddle which cannot be understood.

Thirdly, this Title giveth good direction to every Minister for his manner of preaching: for if the Word of God alone be that savoury salt, wherewith mans heart is seasoned for the Lord, then it ought to be dispensed purely and sincerely, without the mixture of humane inventions. This was Pauls care, m My word and my preaching (saith he) stood not in the inticing speech of mans wisdome, but in plaine evidence of the spirit and of power, that your faith should not be in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God. Experience teacheth us, that salt by mixture with other things loseth of his savour: and so it is with the Word: Indeed there is a place for Arts and tongues, and humane learning with every dispenser of the Word, wherein hee may use them with great commendation, to wit, in his private preparation: but not in the publike dispensation, whereby he seasoneth mens hearts unto God; that the Word of God alone must doe, for to it alone belongs the promise of the spirit, Isa. 59. 21. And therefore hee must use great discretion in this ministerie, and labour so to speake that the spirit may take delight to accompany the same.

Fourthly, this Title teacheth all Gods Ministers by patience to possesse their soules, when the wicked doe fret and fume against them for their ministerie: for this is a testimonie that their ministerie is salt, and bites their corrupt consciences as it ought to doe: therefore they are to goe on with cheerefulnesse, endevouring more and more to season their hearts herewith.

Secondly, the people of God that heare his Word, may learne good instruction from this Title: first, hereby euery one may see what he is by nature, namely, like unto flesh subject to corruption, nay, as unsavoury flesh, and stinking carion in the nostrils of God, for else what needed this salt? This therefore must move us to lay aside all pride of heart, whereby wee thinke highly of our selves: yea, wee must become base and lowly in our owne eyes, in regard of the unsavoury taste of our naturall corruption, else we shall never feele the seasoning vertue of Gods holy Ministerie.

Secondly, every one must hereby learne to suffer the word of reproofe, whereby his heart and conscience may be ripped up, and his sores of sinne discovered; when we have a cut or a wound in our flesh, we can be content to put salt upon it, to drie up the noisome humours, that otherwise would corrupt; now can wee endure the smart of salt for the health of our bodies, and shall we not much more suffer the word of God to rippe up our sinnes, and to mortifie the same, for the salvation of our soules?

Thirdly, every one must give all diligence to be seasoned thorowout, with this heavenly salt, that the thoughts of his heart, the words of his mouth, and the actions of his life, may bee all savoury and acceptable unto God in Christ; yea, in his conversation with men, hee must labour to shew the power of this seasoning: Coloss. 4. 6. Let your speech be gracious alwaies, and powdred with salt: that is, seasoned by the Word, that it may favour of grace, to those that heare us. If wee live under the Ministerie of the Word, and be not seasoned therewith, our case is dangerous; for therein it is of the nature of salt, which causeth barrennesse, where it seasoneth it: as we may see in the practice of Abimelech, who sowed [p] salt in Shechem, to make the ground barren, and the place despised.

But if the salt have lost his savour, wherewith shall it be salted? it is thencefor: h good for nothing but to bee cast out, and troden under the foot of men. Here Christ amplifieth the former reason, whereby hee moved his Apostles to fidelitie and diligence in their Ministery, by the danger of the contrary infidelitie, which is as unsavoury salt, incurable and unprofitable, and so subject to a fearefull curse; and therefore (saith Christ) you had need to bee faithfull in seasoning the world by your Ministerie. In this amplification we may observe foure points: First, the ordinary sinne that doth accompanie the calling of the Ministerie. Secondly, the danger of this sinne. Thirdly, the unprofitablenesse of such a Ministerie. Fourthly, the judgement of God due unto it.

I. Point. As other callings have their severall faults, so hath the calling of a Minister, noted in these words: If the salt have lost his savour, &c. Salt is said to become unsavourie, when it loseth that vertue and acrimonie which it hath in seasoning that flesh on which it is cast. Now Ministers are as unsavoury salt, when they become unprofitable in their Ministerie, and either doe not, or cannot dispence Gods word, for the seasoning of mens soules, that they may bee acceptable to God, and reconciled unto him in Christ. In this calling there bee especially foure kindes of unsavourie salt: First, the blind watch-men that have not knowledge; [o] and dumbe dogs that cannot barke: that is, such as either cannot, or if they can, will not dispence Gods word, for the salvation of mens soules. Secondly, Heretical Teachers, who preach false and damnable doctrine, such as doth not season, but poyson and destroy the soule: such were the false Prophets among the Jewes, who enticed to Idolatry, Deut. 30. 1, 2. and the false Apostles, and Heretikes in the Primitive Church, [p] Whose words did fret as a canker, & destroied the faith of many. And such are the Romish teachers at this day, and the Jesuits and Seminaries among us, who though they be qualified with many good gifts of learning, yet by mingling the word of God with their owne inventions, and humane traditions, they raise the foundation, they become unsavoury salt, and heretical Teachers. And here by the way, who cannot but wonder, that students in Divinitie, should so much affect the Postils and Comments of Fryers and Popish writers, as they doe? doubtlesse it argueth that the Word of God hath not seasoned their hearts; for where such unsavoury salt hath relish, the wholesome doctrine of Gods word hath never seasoned. Thirdly, they are unsavoury salt, who teach true doctrine, but yet mis-apply the same. Many such were in the Church of the Jewes in the dayes of [q] Ieremy, and [r] Ezechiel, who much complaine of sowing pillowes under the elbowes of the wicked, by preaching peace unto them, when they should have called to repentance by the discoverie of their sinnes, and denunciation of Gods judgement: as also, for making sad the hearts of those whom God had not made sad: And such are those at this day, who have smooth tongues, in respect of sinne, and yet are full of bitter invectives against the better sort. By this meanes the Word of God loseth his acrimony and sharpnesse, whereby the wicked should be awaked out of their slumber of securitie, and the godly further seasoned, and made more acceptable unto God. Fourthly, they are unsavourie salt, who though they teach the truth, and generally apply it well, doe yet lead ungodly and scandalous lives: for an offensive and unsavorie conversation in the Teacher, doth hinder the seasoning vertue of the word of his Ministerie in the hearts of the people; and his doctrine cannot so much edifie, as his course of life destroyeth, because naturall men regard not so much what is said, as what is done. This being so, all Gods Ministers fiers, and those also that destinate themselves to this calling, must have speciall care, so to be qualified for this worke, and so to preach the Word of God, that it may bee savourie in the hearts and consciences of them that heare it. This is a matter of great importance, as well in respect of the Minister, as of the people; and this shall it appeare, that they are not onely no unsavourie salt, but even such as doe season others.

II. Point. The danger of this sinne, in being unsavoury salt (that is unfaithfull in the Ministerie) is very great, noted in these words; Wherewith shall it be salted? Some referre this salting to the earth, as if Christ had said, wherewith shall the earth be salted; but it doth more truly belong to the salt it selfe, as Marke 9. 5. Salt is good, but if the salt be unsavorie, wherewith shall it, that is, the salt it selfe bee seasoned? Againe, the interrogation wherewith, imports a vehement denial; as if Christ should say, If salt once lose his naturall propertie of saltnesse, it can never bee recovered: now unfaithfull and unprofitable Ministers are unsavoury salt; and therefore their danger is exceeding great. And yet the comparison must not so bee urged, as thereby to prove the state of Ministers to bee incurable, if they once become unfaithfull: but Christs meaning is, to shew that unprofitable Ministers are very hardly, or seldom ever made savourie againe; at least, if formerly they have beene faithfull, and after have fallen from it. That this is the true meaning, may thus appeare; for notes of negation in [s] Scripture, doe not alwaies import an absolute denial, but sometimes they are put to expresse great difficultie, and to shew things that seldome come to passe: Mat. 23. 33. O generation of vipers, how should you escape the damnation of hell? that is, very hardly: And so where it is said, that David did not decline from the way of the Lord save in the matter of Vriah: that is, very seldome: for he sinned grievously in [t] numbring the people: so Matth. 13. 57. A Prophet is not without honour (that is, very seldome) save in his owne country; for sometime hee may be dishonoured elsewhere; and sometime also, have honour in his owne country: So in this place, this resemblance of incurablenesse in unfaithfull Ministers, must bee understood, of great hardnesse and difficultie; not of an impossibilitie, as experience also teacheth: for King Salomon was a Prophet of God, who by his adulteries and idolatry, became wonderfull unsavory, and yet no doubt, he afterward recovered, and became savoury againe by true repentance, whereupon hee penned the booke of Ecclesiastes: so Peter by his denial of Christ, became unsavoury; yet by Gods mercy upon his repentance, he was seasoned againe.

This then is the danger, that Ministers declining from fidelitie, doe seldome or hardly recover: the reason is; First, because they want teachers to instruct them, as they instruct the people: Secondly, the word in them is unsavory which should season them, and so there is no other meanes to recover them ordinarily. Goe thorow all ages, and observe the examples of false Prophets in the old Testament, of false Apostles in the new, and of Arch-heretickes in the Primitive Church; and hardly shall you find any that repented: yea, marke such Ministers as in our age incline to Poperie, and for the most part they become irrecoverable. Hereby then every Minister is taught to learne and practise Pauls lesson to Timothy, To take heed unto himselfe, and unto learning, continuing therein, fighting a good fight, having faith and a good conscience. These things Paul doth notably urge in that Epistle, giving good direction to attaine thereunto: 1 Tim. 4. 13, 14, 16. and 6. 11, 22.

III. Point. The unprofitablenesse of unfaithfull Ministers, expressed in these words; It is thencefor: h good for nothing: that is, as unsavoury salt, becomming unfit to season meat, is good for nothing; (for cast it on the ground, it makes it barren; nay, cast it on the dung-hill, and it hurts that also which otherwise serves for good use:) so is it with Ministers that become unfaithfull, they are of all other most noisome both to the Church, and common wealth; for Gods curse is upon them, and they are good for no societie. This might be declared by many examples, of such as having fallen to Poperie, from our Ministerie, have after proved not onely deadly enemies to our Church, and to the truth, but the rankest rebels and Traitors unto our Prince and State, of all others.

Question. Whether may such Ministers as become unsavourie salt, by making Apostacie from the truth (as if a Protestant Minister become a Masse-Priest) bee restored againe into the Ministerie of Gods Church, upon their repentance? Answer. Some bee of minde that they may not be received at all into the Ministery, after such Apostacie: but I finde nothing in the Scripture, which should hinder their restitution, if their conversion unto God, and to his truth, may appeare to be true and unfeined. It is alleaged, that the Priests under the law, falling to Idolatry, [u] were for ever debarred from the Priests office? Answer. That was for speciall cause; for the Priests were types of Christ, and their outward holinesse shadowed out the perfect integritie & holinesse of our Saviour Christ: for which cause there was none clean in to the Priests office, who had any blemish in his body. Now by such open Idolatry, they dissolved themselves from being figures of Christ; and therefore were rejected. Againe, we find that inferiour officers, were not debarred from their office in the Sanctuary, though they committed Idolatry as the Priests did. It is said againe, that a Minister must be unblameable; but a Masse-priest cannot be unblameable. Answ. Without true repentance none is unblameable; but by true true repentance, even a Masse-Priest may become unblameable. But such as fall away, become unsavourie salt, which cannot be made savourie againe? Answ. By the power of God it may; and so may an unfaithful Minister through Gods mercie be renued by repentance, and become profitable to the Church.

IV. Point. The curse and punishment of unsavourie salt: It is cast out and troden under foot of men: whereby Christ signifieth, that unfaithfull and unprofitable Ministers, shall bee condemned both of God and man: Hos. 4. 6. Because thou hast despised knowledge, therefore also will I despise thee. Mal. 2. 9. Therefore have I made you to bee despised and vile before all the people; because ye kept not my way, but have bin partiall in the Law. See the signe of the Lords contempt, in his fearefull judgements upon them; as on Nadab and Abihu, Levit. 10. 1, 2. Hophni and Phinees, 1 Sam. 2. 34. And though they may escape his hand in this life, yet will Christ at his comming, [u] Cut them off, and give them their portion with Hypocrites, where is nothing but weeping and gnashing of teeth.

The consideration whereof, must move all Ministers to beware of unfaithfulnesse in their calling, lest the curse of unsavourie salt light upon them. The Carpenters who builded Noahs Arke, were themselves drowned in the flood; because neither Noahs preaching, nor their owne working did move them to repentance: And the like judgement will befall unfaithfull Ministers; though they have the name of such as should season others, yet because of their unfaithfulnesse, they become unsavourie; God himselfe at length will cast them out, and tread them under foot. If this were laid to heart, as it ought to bee, it would drive many from their idlenesse, vanitie, and covetousnesse, whereby they become unsavoury unto God.

v. 14 Ye are the light of the world: a City that is set on a hill, cannot be hid.

15 Neither doe men light a candle, and put it under a bushell, but on a candlesticke: and it giveth light to all that are in the house.

Here Christ layeth downe the second reason, to induce his Disciples, and in them all Ministers, to preach the Word of God faithfully; as if he should say; By calling you are the light of the world, and your condition is such, that all your sayings and doings are open to the eyes of men: therefore be ye carefull that ye glorifie God therein. The first part of this reason, is in these words; Ye are the light of the world: the second is expressed by two comparisons, in the words following; A city that is set on a hill, &c. the conclusion in the 16. v.

For the first part: Ye are the light of the world. If Ministers be lights, why saith the Scripture, that Iohn Baptist was not the light of the world? Ioh. 1. 8. Ans. There be two kinds of lights, Originall and Derived: Originall is that, which is the cause of all light; and so Christ alone is the light of the world: and in this sense doth the Scripture deny Iohn Baptist to be that light. Derived light is that which shineth forth, but yet is received from another; and so [x] Iohn Baptist was a burning and shining lampe: so were the Apostles lights, [y] For God that caused the light to shine out of darknesse, shined into their hearts, to enable them to give the light of knowledge in the face of Iesus Christ. And so must these words be understood, that whereas the world naturally sits in darknesse, and in the shadow of death, the Apostles by the light of their ministerie were to shine unto them.

z 2 Cor. 4. 3, 4.

The use: First, this title of light given to Ministers, sheweth the right use of the Ministerie of the Word. The whole world lieth in darknesse, that is, in ignorance under sinne, and so subject to damnation by nature; now God hath ordained the Ministerie of the Word to bee a light, whereby this ignorance may be expelled, and they brought to the knowledge of their sinnes, and of the way that leadeth unto life: Act. 26. 18. Paul must preach, that both Iewes and Gentiles may come from darknes unto light.

Secondly, by this Title, Christ sheweth how his word is to be handled; namely, so as it may be a light unto mens minds and consciences, to make them see their sinnes, and their great miserie thereby; then, to let them see the remedy from that miserie, which is Iesus Christ: and lastly, to shew them that straight way of obedience in all good duties to God and man, which God requireth in this life of a Christian. Men may take long discourses upon a Text of Scripture; but that onely is true preaching, which gives this light of knowledge to the minde and conscience, which leadeth men to God.

Againe, the hearers of the Word must be admonished of their duties from this title. First, if Ministers be lights in regard of their Ministerie, then every hearer must so apply his heart unto the preaching of the Word, that it may inlighten his conscience with the knowledge of his sinnes, and of his miserie by reason of them; as also, with the true knowledge of Christ, and of the will of God, which may guide him in obedience; otherwise, this holy ordinance, turneth to his deeper condemnation.

Secondly, every hearer must learne Pauls lesson, Eph. 5. 8. Ye were once darknes, but now ye are light in the Lord; walke as children of the light:

light: that is, looke what the Word teacheth, which is this light, that doe. When the time is darke wherein we walke, we use Torches and Candles, that so we may see the right path: behold, the world is darknesse, we therefore must labour to have the Word of God to be a light unto our feet, in all the steps of our callings wherein we live; For hee that walketh in the darke, knoweth not whether he goeth. Ioh. 12. 35.

Lastly, there be many that live in ignorance, as blinde, as though they had never heard of Christ; and though they heare the Word preached, yet still they remaine in darknesse: but they must know, that their case is fearefull, for the Ministery of the Word is light: they therefore having the benefit thereof, ought to bee children of the light: and because they are not enlightened, undoubtedly a most fearefull judgement of God is upon them; for marke what Paul saith, [z] If our Gospel be hid, it is hid to those that perish, in whom the God of this world hath blinded the eyes of their minde: and therefore, such persons must labour to know and practise the speciall grounds and duties of true Religion, that so in conscience they may be truly assured, that the word of God is become their light.

The second part of this reason, is this; Your condition is such, in regard of your calling, that all your sayings and doings are scene of men: and it is expressed by two similitudes: First, of a City set on a hill, which cannot be hid: Secondly, of a candle put on a candlestick, vers. 15. And thus it dependeth on the former part: Whereas Christ had called his Disciples the light of the world, they might take it for a matter of some outward renowne: Christ therefore tells them, that his intent herein, is not to give them titles of praise, but to make them acquainted with their hard condition, in which they were like to bee, by reason of their great and weighty calling; wherein they should become spectacles to all the world: for thus hee saith, A City that is set on a hill, cannot be hid: but all that passe by may see it: and A Candle lighted and set on a candlestick, giveth light to all that are in the house; even so, you mine Apostles, by reason of your publike calling, shall have all your sayings and doings manifest to the eyes of the whole world.

Because both these similitudes serve to expresse the same thing, therefore the points of instruction, which specially concerne Gods ministers, shall be propounded from the joynt scope of them both. First, whereas the condition of Gods Ministers is such, to have their whole conversation open and manifest to the eyes of the world; therefore they especially, above all others, (though it concerne every man in his place) must have care that their lives and conversations, both for sayings and doings, be holy and blamelesse: for their place is such, that by their well doing, they win many unto the Lord; but by their bad conversation, they carry many a soule with them to destruction. 2. Hereby they must learne, not to think it strange, if they lie open to manifold reproaches and abuses, more than any other sort of men: for they of all other, lie most open to the world; and if their conversation be godly, it is, the more distastefull to the world: as Cain hated Abel for his good workes, 1 Ioh. 3. 12, 13. Hence it appeareth, that men in this calling, cannot without great sinne, hide the gifts and talents which God hath given them: for they are as lighted candles, which must not bee put under a bushell. Sundry men have heretofore offended this way, as those in the Primitive Church, who being godly men and well qualified for the Ministery, did yet withdraw themselves from publike societies, to live in solitary places: for by their gifts they were excellent lights, and therefore they ought to have shined forth to others. And at this day they offend this way, that will not abase themselves in their Ministerie, to speake plainly to the meane capacity of the simple: yea, they also put the light under a bushell, who being fit for this Ministerie, do spend their daies wholly in the Universities, except it be that they want a calling into the Church, and have a lawfull calling for their stay in the Universities: and though men have not much meanes of calling forth, as were to bee wished, yet they that live in Schooles of Learning, ought to shew themselves willing to become lights abroad in the Church; saying with the Prophet Isay, when his lips were touched with a cole from the Altar, [a] Here am I, Lord, send me. In a word, all persons in this calling, that any way hide their gifts, are here blamed: for they are lights which should not be hid.

a Isa. 6. 8.

From these comparisons, wherein Christ sets out the open state of his Apostles to the view of the world, the Papists doe gather, that the Church of God cannot be hid, and therefore visibility must needs be the note of a true Church. But we must know, that Gods Church may sometime lie hid in regard of the Word, and the Ministerie thereof; as it did in the dayes of [b] Elias, and in the time when Popery spread it selfe over these Westerne parts. Neither doth this place make ought against us for Christ here speakes of his Apostles, and of their ministerie properly, which could not be hid; and not of every ordinary Minister who are not lights of all the world, as the Apostles were, but only in their particular standing. Secondly, the Ministerie is a light, yet not alwaies shining to the whole world: and therefore it is added in the second similitude, that It giveth light to them that are in the house: that is, in the Church of God. And so in the darknesse of Popery, the Ministery of the Gospell was hid from the world, and yet it gave some light to the hidden Church, the house of God, to shew them their calling, and the meanes of salvation.

b 1 Kin. 19.

Now, as these similitudes concerne the Ministers, so they may well bee enlarged to every Christian Commandements place not in this regard the Minister as a patterne to his people, & many times in Scripture others besides the Ministers are called lights, 2 Sam. 21. 17. David is called The light of Israel: not only for the comfort of his Regiment, but also as hee was a King, by his upright life he give light to the people, whereof he was governour: And so answerably, all Superiours in their places must be lights: the publike Magistrate to the Common-wealth; the maister to his servants; parents to their children; and every Christian to his brother: Philip. 2. 15. Shine as lights in the world, in the middest of a naughty and crooked nation. This therefore is our duty, if we be Christians: as we must labour to get the knowledge of Gods will into our hearts, so must wee cause the power B thereof to shine forth in the example of a good life, whereby others may bee directed in the darknesse of the world. But alas, herein the case of many is lamentable, who through ignorance and disobedience, be yet in darknesse: these must be taken out of their places, as darke candles, and trodden under foot, and so cast into eternall darknesse, where they shall flame in woe for evermore.

A therefore that is to teach Gods will, must not only by doctrine instruct the care, but by a godly life exemplifie his doctrine unto the eye: 1 Tim. 4. 12. Be unto them that beleeve, an example in word, and in conversation.

In regard of this double charge, that lies on every Minister, the people for their parts, must remember, in all their prayers to crave of God that the Ministers may bee enabled to teach Gods will both in doctrine and life. The Apostle Paul doth sundry times require the Churches to whom hee writ, to pray for him in regard of his [c] Ministerie. Now if so worthy an Apostle had need to be prayed for, much more hath every ordinary Minister in Gods Church. And great reason it should be so, for the Devill stands at [d] Iehoshuahs right hand to resist him. [e] he hindred Paul from comming to the Thessalonians. Though he maligne every beleever, yet he aimes especially at the Minister, that he may cause him to faile, if not in teaching, yet at least, in the exemplifying of his doctrine by a sincere and godly conversation.

Now, because Christ requires of every Minister, besides teaching, the evidence of good works in a godly life, therefore here will I handle this point of good workes: and first, shew what a good worke is, secondly, the differences of good works: and then observe the necessity, the dignity, and use of good workes.

C 1. Point. A good worke is a worke commanded of God, and done by a man regenerate in faith, for the glory of God in mans good. First, (I say) it is a worke commanded of God, for Gods will is goodnesse it selfe, and the Rule of all goodnesse in the creature; and every good thing is therefore good, because it is answerable to the wil of God: no worke therefore can be good, unlesse it bee appointed, ordained, and commanded of God: men indeed may invent and doe many good workes, but they shall have no goodnesse in them, unlesse they do accord with Gods will. Again, good works must be done in obedience to God: now unlesse God appoint them, the doing of them cannot bee any obedience to his will. Thirdly, well-worship, whereby men thrust upon God their owne inventions for his service, is every where [f] condemned: and of D like nature be all these actions, wherein men of themselves doe fasten goodnesse, without the will and appointment of God. This point must bee remembred, because the Church of Rome doth teach the contrary, That a man may doe good workes, not required, or appointed by God: but the former Reasons shew this to be false; and the arguments which they bring for their opinion, are nothing but abuse of Scripture, as in their few may plainly appeare.

First, they say, the Iewes had free-will offerings, which were not commanded in the word, and yet were acceptable unto God; and so doe many now adaies many good workes acceptable to God, though not commanded. Ans. Their free-will offerings were ordained of God, and and therefore were acceptable: they were only free, in regard in the time of offering them; but for the manner how, and the places where they must be offered, both these were appointed of God.

Object. 2. Againe, they say, Phinees [h] slew Zimri and Cosbi with Gods approbation, though hee was no Magistrate: and therefore workes not commanded of God, may be acceptable unto him. Answ. Though Phinees had not any outward Commandement, yet hee had that which was answerable thereto; to wit, an extraordinarie instinct by the spirit, whereby he was carried to doe that fact; which was as much, as if God had given him an expresse commandement. And so we may say of the Ministerie of sundrie ancient Prophets, who by extraordinary instinct were moved thereunto: and upon this ground did [i] Elijah slay Baals Prophets.

i 1 Kings 18. 40.

Object. 3. Thirdly, Maries fact (say they) in [k] powring a box of costly ointment on the head of our Saviour Christ, was a good worke; and yet there was no commandement for it in Gods Word. Answ. Maries fact was a worke of confession, whereby shee testified her faith in Christ, and so was generally commanded, though not in particular. Againe, she was carried thereto by a speciall instinct of the spirit, for [l] she did it to bury him, (as Christ himselfe testifieth) because his burial was so speedy after his death, in regard of the approaching of the Sabbath, that they could not embalme him, as the manner of the Iewes was; now every instinct of Gods spirit in the conscience of the doer, hath the force of a particular commandement.

Object. 4. Fourthly, the Spirit of God (say they) moves every man to any good worke that is done; and therefore men need not a particular commandement for every worke: for those that are carried by the Spirit, cannot but doe well. Ans. True it is, the Spirit moveth men to good workes freely, but yet this motion of the Spirit, is in and by the Word of God: and at this day, those instincts which are besides the Word, are mens owne fancies, or illusions of the devill. Many other reasons they alleage to this purpose, for the justifying their vowes of chastitie, of regular obedience, pilgrimages, trentalls, and such like, but they are like to these, and notwithstanding them all, the truth is this: that for substance, a good worke is such a one, as is ordained, appointed, and commanded by God. And here by the way, we may observe, that they are farre deceived, who so much commend the times of Popery for good workes: for the truth is, that all their oblations to Images, to Monasteries, and to Churches, for Masses, Pardons, and such like, were no good workes, but onely in their owne opinion; for God commanded them not: Now it is the Lords revealed will, that must give the goodnesse to mans worke: Mich. 6. 8. He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good, and what the Lord requireth of thee.

A The Author of a good worke, is not every one in the world, but that man or woman that is a member of Christ, borne anew by the holy Ghost: so Christ here saith, Let your light, &c. restraining his speech to the persons of his Disciples. True it is that among Turkes and Infidels, many a civill man will doe workes of mercy, of civill justice, and liberalitie, and will abstaine from outward sinnes, and live orderly; now these, and such like, though in themselves they be good workes, so farre forth as they are required by the law of Nature, or commanded by Gods Word; yet in an Infidel, or an unregenerate person, they are sinnes: for first, they proceed from an heart which is corrupt with originall sinne, and with unbeleefe; B (for the [m] heart is the fountaine of all actions) and also they are practised by the members of the bodie, which are weapons of unrighteousnesse; and therefore must needs bee like unto water springing from a corrupt fountaine, and running through a filthy channell. Secondly, these workes are not done for Gods glory, and the good of men. Thirdly, they are not done in obedience to God, according to the Rule of goodnesse, the will and Word of God, and therefore cannot bee good workes. And this must teach every one that would do good, to labour for regeneration by the holy Ghost, that so his person may bee good, and then shall his workes of obedience be good in Gods sight: for such as the tree is, such will bee the fruit: An evill tree cannot bring forth good fruit, nor a good, evill fruit, Matth. 7. 18. Wee must therefore labour to bee ingrafted into Christ, for without him, we can doe no good thing: but being partakers of his grace, wee shall abound with the fruits of righteousnesse, which are by Iesus Christ, unto the praise and glory of God, Phil. 1. 11.

m Matth. 12. 35.

Thirdly, I adde: that Good workes must bee done in faith: for faith is the cause of every good worke, and without faith it is impossible to doe any good worke. Now, in the doing of a good worke, there is a twofold faith required: First, a generall faith, whereby a man is perswaded that God requires of him, the doing of that worke which he takes in hand: as when a man giveth almes, hee must be perswaded it is Gods will he should give almes; and so for other good workes: for [n] Whatsoever is not of faith, is sinne: that is, whatsoever proceedeth not from this perswasion in the conscience, that it is Gods will that such a thing should bee done, or should not bee done, is sinne: for hee that doubteth of the thing hee doth, sinneth therein, though the thing done bee good in it selfe. Secondly, herein is required Instifying faith, whereby a man is perswaded in his conscience, of his owne reconciliation with God in Christ: of this it is said, Heb. 11. 6. Without faith it is impossible to please God. This justifying faith hath a double use in the causing of a good worke: First, it gives the beginning to a good worke;

workes; for by justifying faith, Christ with his merits is apprehended, and applied to the person of the worker, and hee thereby is united to Christ, who renueth the minde, will, and affections of the worker, from whence the worke proceedeth: and so it is as pure water, comming from a cleansed fountaine. Secondly, faith covereth the wants that be in good workes, (for the best worke done by man in this life, hath it wants:) now faith apprehendeth Christ and his merits, and applyeth the same unto the worker, whereby his person is accepted, and the imperfection of his worke covered in the sight of God: and this must provoke us to labour for faith.

Lastly, I adde; the end of a good worke; namely, Gods glory in mans good. The honour of God, must be the principall end of every good worke: now Gods honour stands in reverence, obedience, and thankfulnesse; so that when we doe any good worke, we must doe it in reverence unto God, in obedience unto his Commandements, and in token of our thankfulnesse unto him for his manifold mercies. The good of man must herein also be respected; the Apostle saith, The Law is fulfilled in one word, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thy selfe: how can this be, seeing to love the Lord our God is the great commandement of the Law? It must therefore thus be understood; that the Law of God must be practised in the love of our neighbour, and not apart by it selfe. Againe, the end of a mans life, and of all his actions, is to serve God, in serving of man, and by serving of man, to serve God; as when we pray (which is a good worke) we must not onely respect our selves but pray for others; as for the Church of God, and for our brethren, as well as for our selves: yea, and for our enemies. So wee must heare the Word, and receive the Sacraments, that thereby wee may be better able to further our brethren in the way of salvation: this our Saviour doth here expresse, saying, [That they may see your good workes, and glorifie your Father in heaven:] as if he should say, Glorifie you God, and also cause others to doe the same.

First, here we may see what to judge of the works done by Papists: It is commonly thought that they abound with good workes, but it is not so; their best works are sinnes before God, for they faile principally in the maine end of well-doing, which is to glorifie God, in the good of men: for a Papist doing a good worke, according to the Rules of their religion, doth it to satisfie Gods justice, for the temporall punishment of his sinnes, and to merit Heaven by it; and so erreth quite from the right end of a good worke, respecting therein his owne good, and nothing at all the good of others.

Secondly, hereby we may see for our selves, how farre we come short in our good workes, for commonly we faile in the maine end thereof: men spend their daies and strength in labour and toile, but all is for themselves, for their owne pleasure, their owne profit and preferment, without respect to the good of their brethren: now all such actions wherein men seeke themselves onely, and not Gods glory in the good of others, bee sinfull in the doer, though otherwise good in themselves. And therefore we must learne, in all our actions to aime at the glory of God in the good of men.

II. Point. Thus we see what a good worke is: now follow the differences of good workes. Good works be of two sorts; First, those which God in his Word hath directly commanded, as parts of his worship; such are Prayer, Thanksgiving, receiving the Sacraments, hearing the Word, and releeving the poore; and these are the more principall kinds of good workes. The second sort are actions indifferent, sanctified by the Word and Praier, and done to Gods glorie; as to eat, to drinke, and such like; for howsoever in themselves they bee neither good nor evill, being things neither commanded nor forbidden; and therefore in respect of the things themselves, may with good conscience bee either used, or refused: yet because God hath commanded the manner how they must bee used; namely, by being sanctified by the Word of God, and Prayer; and the end thereof, to wit, Gods glory; therefore when they are so used, they become good workes.

Upon this difference of good works, observe the largenesse thereof, how farre they extend. There bee three estates ordained of God: the Church, the Common-wealth, and the Family; and for the preservation of them, there be sundry callings required; some whereof are prescribed of God, and others left to be appointed by men; as all trades, and such like: now not onely the callings appointed by God, and the duties thereof are good works; but even all inferiour callings appointed by men, for the good of these three estates; and the duties thereof, be they never so base, if they be sanctified by prayer, and done to Gods glory, are good workes. Example. A man is called to bee a shepherd, and doth willingly accept thereof; now, though the calling be but base & meane, yet the works thereof being done in obedience to God, for the good of his master, are good workes; yea, as good in their kinde, as the best workes of the highest callings: and the same may bee said of all lawfull callings, and the works thereof, bee they never so base: for God judgeth not the goodnesse of the worke, by the excellencie of the matter whereabout it is occupied, but by the heart of the doer. This point must be learned, for the Papists conceit doth sticke fast in mens hearts, That there are no good works, but the building of Churches, and Hospitals, the mending of high waies, giving of large almes, &c. but we must learne, that every action of a mans lawfull calling, done in obedience to God, for the good of men, is a good worke before God: and therefore we must so walke every one of us in our callings, that the duties thereof may be acceptable to God. Againe, this will will hence follow, that in these our dayes, wee may as well abound in such workes as be good indeed, as the Papists did in their superstitious. Thus much of the difference of good workes.

III. Point. Now more particularly, in the text are further set downe three points touching good workes: the Necessitie, the Dignitie, and the Vse of good workes. The necessitie of them appeareth by Christs commanding of them, saying, Let your light so shine, &c. for hereby hee bindeth all Christians, after the examples of his Disciples, to walke in good works. If it be said: that Christ hath freed us from the law, and therefore we are not bound to doe good works. I answer, Christ hath freed us from the Law in regard of the curse and rigour thereof; but not as it is a rule of Christian obedience.

Bellar. de Iustificat. l. 4. c. 7.

Quest. How farre forth are good workes necessarie to salvation, or to us that doe them? Answ. There be three opinions touching the necessitie of good workes: First, of the Papists, who hold them necessarie, as causes of our salvation and justification; but this we have confuted heretofore. Secondly, of some Protestants, who hold them necessarie, though not as principall causes, (for they say, we are onely justified and saved by Christ) yet as conservant causes of our salvation: but the truth is, they are no causes of salvation, neither efficient, principall, nor conservant; nor yet materiall, formall, or finall, as hath elsewhere beene shewed. The third opinion is the truth, that good workes are necessarie, not as causes of salvation, or justification; but as inseparable consequents of saving faith in Christ, whereby we are justified and saved; or as a way is necessarie to the going to a place. The dignitie of good workes is expressed in this, that they are called good: now they are good onely in part, not perfectly, as I shew thus: Such as the tree is, such is the fruit; but every one regenerate is partly spirit, and partly flesh; that is, in part regenerate, and in part naturall and corrupt: this is true of his minde, will, and affections, which are the fountaine of all his actions; and therefore the workes that proceed thence must needs bee answerable; that is, in part corrupt, as they come from nature; and yet good in part, as they come from grace.

2 The dignitie of good workes.

Quest. But how can God approve of them, if they be evill? Ans. We must consider good workes two wayes: First, in themselves, as they are compared with the Law, and the rigour thereof, and so they are sinnes, because they answer not to that perfection, which the Law requireth: for there be two degrees of sinnes; Rebellions, which are actions flatly against the Law: and Defects, when a man doth those things that the Law commandeth, but yet faileth in the manner of doing, and so are mans very best workes sinnes. Secondly, consider good workes, as done by a person regenerate, and reconciled to God in Christ, and so God accepts of them; for in Christ the wants thereof are covered. But here we must take heed of the Romish doctrine, which teacheth that good workes are so farre forth good, that there is no sinne in them; their reasons are many to prove this point, but they have beene heretofore confuted: First, they say, good workes have God for their Author, and therefore are perfectly good. Ans. This were true, if he alone were the author of them; but man is an other author thereof, from whom they take their imperfection. They say againe, that here they are called good, but if they had any sinne in them, they should be called evill, for every sin is perfectly evill. Ans. Where sinne is unremitted, it is perfectly evill; but when it is pardoned in our Saviour Christ, it is as though it were not. Thirdly, they object, that if good workes bee sinfull, then they must not be done; and hereupon they say, that by our doctrine men are bound to abstaine from all good workes. Ans. That which is evill must not be done, so farre forth as it is evill: now good workes are not simply and absolutely evill; they are good in themselves, and in us in part, comming from grace: and therefore they must be done, because God requires them at our hands: and for the imperfection of them, we must pray for pardon to our Saviour Christ. And here by the way we may justly tax the proud doctrine of the Papists, who teach, that man may be justified by good workes: when as the best workes of any man in this life, are tainted with sinne, and are farre unanswerable to that perfection, which the Law requireth: we must be of a farre other minde namely, that for our best workes; God may justly condemne us; because we have not done them as we ought: therefore Christ bids us say of our selves, that When we have done all that we can, we are unprofitable servants.

Isa. 64. 6.

The use of good workes.

The use of good workes is here set downe by our Saviour Christ, to glorifie God: this is not the whole end of good workes; and therefore I will propound the same more fully, out of other places of Scripture: for Christ here onely propoundeth that end of good workes, which concerned his intended purpose.

The use and end of good workes is three-fold, either concerning God, or our selves, or our brethren. As good workes concerne God, they have three uses: First, they serve as meanes whereby we give unto God testimonie of our homage, and obedience unto his Commandements; for by creation, preservation, & redemption, he is our Lord and our God, and so prescribeth lawes for us to keepe: in which regard we owe homage unto him; which, that we may shew forth and testifie, we must walke in good workes, as he in his word hath commanded us. Secondly, they serve to be tokens of our thankfulnesse unto God, for our creation, redemption, and manifold preservations, both in soule and bodie. Thankefulnesse indeed, is shewed in word; but yet true thankfulnesse stands in obeoffence: and our obedience is shewed by doing good workes. And therefore the Apostle Paul exhorts us, To give up our bodies, as holy and acceptable sacrifices unto God, Rom. 12. 1. Thirdly, they serve to make us followers of God: we are commanded to be holy, as he is holy, 1 Pet. 1. 15. and to put in practice the duties of love one towards another, [a] as the Lord loved us: and therefore we must walke in the duties of the Morall law, that therein we may imitate God: 1 Joh. 3. 3. He which hath this hope purgeth himselfe, as he is pure.

Secondly, the use of good workes in regard of our selves, is fourefold especially: First, they serve to be outward testimonies of the truth of our faith and profession; proving that the grace of our hearts is not in hypocrisie, but in truth and sincerity. And for this cause, [c] Abraham is said to have beene justified by workes; because his works did testifie that his faith was true and sincere: for where the fire of grace is, there it cannot but burne; and where the water of life is, it cannot but flow and send out the streames thereof in good workes.

Secondly, they serve to be signes and pledges of our election, justification, sanctification, and of our future glorification: as we know a tree to live, by the fruit and bud which it bringeth forth; so by keeping a continuall course in good workes, a man is knowne to be in Christ, and to have true title to all his benefits: and therefore when the Apostle willeth men, to [a] give all diligence to make their calling and election sure, he propoundeth certaine vertues, wherein they ought to walke, as being the most evident tokens of election, that we have in this life.

Thirdly, they serve to make us answerable to our holy calling: for every one that professeth the Gospel, is called to be a member of Christ, and a new creature, whose duty is to bring forth good workes: Eph. 4. 1, 2. Walke worthy of the vocation whereunto ye are called, with all humblenesse of minde, meekenesse, &c. and Eph. 2. 10. We are the workemanship of God, created in Christ Jesus, unto good workes, which God hath ordained that wee should walke in them. Now this is a most excellent thing for a man to bee answerable to his calling: When David was a shepherd, he kept his fathers sheepe, and lived as a shepherd; but when he was called to be a King, [a] he behaved himselfe like a King, in governing Gods people: and so every Christian ought to doe; being a new creature, he must walke as Gods childe, and testifie his vocation by shewing forth the vertues of him that hath called him, 1 Pet. 2. 9.

Fourthly, good works serve to be a way, in which we are to walke, that so we may receive the mercies of God promised to his children, and escape the Judgements threatned against sinners: for Gods word is ful of most sweet promises unto the obedient, and of terrible threatnings against rebellion and iniquitie. Now a man by walking in good workes eschewes the paths of wickednesse, wherein [x] Gods judgements light: and holds the wayes of righteousnesse, wherein Gods blessings are scattered, Prov. 2. 17.

Thirdly, the end of good works, in regard of our brethren, is principally this; that by our example in well doing, wee may winne some unto God, and keepe others in the obedience of the truth, and prevent offences, whereby many are drawne backe. The contagion of a bad example, especially in men of superiour place, is such, that it will not onely cast their owne soules to hell, but also draw many with them. When Ieroboam the King sinned, he caused Israel to sin: 1 King. 15. 34. And therefore we must carefully looke to all our waies, in regard of others, and so live according to Christs Commandement in this place, that others seeing our good workes, may be wonne to the truth, and so glorifie God which is in heaven. And thus we see the ends of good workes.

Now considering good workes bee of such excellent use, we are hereby admonished to exercise our selves therein with all diligence; for hereby we benefit our brethren, we helpe our selves, and we glorifie God: neither must any mans povertie hinder him from this dutie: for not onely almes deeds, and large gifts to Churches and high wayes, are good workes, but also the speciall duties of every mans lawfull calling, done in faith, to the glory of God, and the good of men, be the calling never so base: by the doing whereof, in faith and obedience, he may get sure testimony of his election. This exhortation is most needfull, for so soone as men have occasion to commit any sinne, then they shake off the yoke of all obedience, as there were no way of good workes to be walked in. The Papists indeed make the merit of justification, and life everlasting, the end of good works, but that hath bin sufficiently confuted hertofore.

Hitherto we have spoken of the first point in this conclusion, touching the manner of teaching.

The second point herein contained, is the end of all teaching; namely, to turne men unto God, and thereby to bring them to glorifie God. That men may see your good workes, and glorifie your Father which is in heaven: that is, to teach, that men may see your good workes, and be wonne thereby to the faith, and so glorifie God. Our Saviour Christ in his Commission given to his Disciples before his ascension, bids them, [y] Goe, make all nations my Disciples: and Paul saith, that [z] He became all things to all men, that by all meanes he might not onely instruct, but save some.

The Law in generall.

Hereby then all Ministers, and all those that set themselves apart for this calling, must learne to propound this duty unto themselves, as the maine end of all their studies and labours; namely, to turne men unto God, that being converted they may glorifie God. Againe, the same end of the Ministerie admonisheth all the same end of the Ministerie admonisheth all hearers so to yeeld themselves obedient to the Ministerie of the Word, that it may take place in their hearts, to turne them unto God, that after their conversion they may glorifie God. This the people ought the rather to yeeld unto, because it is the maine comfort that the Minister hath of all his labours, to see his hearers converted, and so inabled to glorifie God. And to move them hereunto, they are further to know, that if they heare, and be not thereby converted, that so they may praise and glorifie God, by their obedience; then this Ministerie will be a Bill of Inditement against them, for their deeper condemnation at the last day. See Matthew 11. 21, 24.

verse 17 Thinke not that I am come to destroy the Law, or the Prophets: I am not come to destroy them, but to fulfill them.

In this verse, and the rest which follow, to the end of this Chapter, is contained the Third part of Christs Sermon; wherein he goes about to restore the Morall Law to his true sense and meaning, which was much corrupted by the Jewish teachers. And to the end the same might be the better accepted, hee makes way thereto by a notable Preface, verse 17, 18, 19, 20. Wherein he seekes, as well to prevent and to remove the false opinion which the Jewes had conceived of him, in respect of the Law; as also to procure all reverence and loyaltie to bee shewed thereunto: For the Jewish teachers seeing our Saviour Christ condemne and neglect the traditions of the Elders, and not so much to respect the ceremonies of the Law, as they thought hee should, did thereupon judge him to bee a deceiver, and one that went about to overturne the whole Law of Moses. This opinion Christ confuteth by three arguments: First, from the end of his comming, in this verse: The second, from the nature of the Law, in the 18. verse; whereupon he inferres two notable conclusions, to procure reverence thereunto, verse 19. And thirdly, from the scope of his Ministerie, verse 20.

For the first: The Expolition. Thinke not that I am come, &c.] This comming of Christ, must be understood of the manifestation of the Godhead in our nature: for otherwise, his Godhead being every where, cannot bee said to come properly: and as for his manhood, it had not beene in heaven. To destroy the Law.] The Law in generall, is that part of Gods Word, which commands things just, honest, and godly: and being thus conceived, it is threefold; Ceremoniall, Judiciall, and Morall. The Ceremoniall law, is that part of Gods Word, which prescribed to the Jewes, ceremonies, rites, and orders, to be performed in the worship of God: this law is laid downe in the bookes of Moses, especially in Leviticus. The Judiciall law, is that part of Gods Word, which prescribed ordinances for the government of the Jewes common-wealth, and the civill punishment of offenders. The Ceremoniall law concerned the Jewes onely: the Judiciall law did indeed principally concerne them; but yet, so farre forth as it tendeth to the establishing of the morall law, having in it common equitie, it concerneth all people in all times and places. What the Morall law is, I will describe in three points: First, it is that part of Gods Word concerning righteousnesse and godlinesse, which was written in Adams minde by the gift of creation; and the remnants of it be in every man by the light of nature in regard whereof it bindes all men. Secondly, it commandeth perfect obedience, both inward in thought and affection; and outward in speech and action. Thirdly, it bindeth to the curse and punishment, every one that faileth in the least dutie thereof, though but once, and that in thought onely: Galat. 3. 10. Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things that are written in the law, to doe them. The summe of the Morall law is propounded in the Decalogue, or ten Commandements, which many can repeat, but few doe understand.

That we may further conceive aright the morall law, we must make a difference betweene it and the Gospell: for the Gospell is that part of the Word which promiseth righteousnesse and life everlasting to all that believe in Christ: the difference betweene them stands especially in five things:

First, the Law is naturall, and was in mans nature before the fall; but the Gospel is spirituall, revealed after the fall, in the covenant of grace.

Secondly, the Law sets forth Gods justice in rigour, without mercie; but the Gospell sets out justice and mercie, united in Christ.

Thirdly, the Law requireth a perfect righteousnesse within us; but the Gospell revealeth our acceptance with God, by imputed righteousnesse.

Fourthly, the Law threatneth judgement without mercie, and therfore is called [a] the ministerie of condemnation, and of death: but the Gospell shewes mercie to mans sinne, in and by Christ, if we repent and beleeve.

Lastly, the Law promiseth life to the worker and doer of it; [b] Doe this, and thou shalt live: but the Gospell offereth salvation to him that worketh not, [c] but beleeveth in him that justifieth the ungodly: not considering faith, as a worke, but as an instrument apprehending Christ, by whom we are made righteous.

[b] Rom. 10. 5.
[c] Rom. 4. 5.

The Church of Rome in a manner confound the Law and the Gospell, saying that the Gospell, which is the new Law, revealeth Christ more clearely than Moses Law did, which they call the old Law. But this is a wicked opinion, which overturnes all religion, being the cause of many grosse points in Poperie, which could not stand, if they would acknowledge a true distinction betweene the Law and the Gospel. They say for their defence, that the precepts of both are the same in substance; that both require righteousnes, both promise life, and threaten death; both command faith, repentance, and obedience; and therefore they are the same. Answer. First, the lawes and precepts of the Law and Gospel are not the same; for Adam in his innocencie knew the Law, but he knew nothing then of beleeving in Christ: and though both require righteousnesse, promise life, and threaten death, yet the manner is far different, as before was noted. So likewise they differ in the commanding of faith; for the Gospel commandeth faith, not as a worke done, as the Law doth; but as an instrument laying hold on Christ. Againe, the Law commands faith generally; as to beleeve in God, and to beleeve his Word to be true: but besides this, the Gospel requires a particular faith in Christ the Redeemer, whom the Law never knew. Thirdly, the Law commandeth not repentance, for the knowledge of the Law was in Adams heart, when he needed no repentance: true repentance therefore is a saving grace, wrought and commanded onely by the Gospel. And fourthly, for obedience, though it be commanded both by the Law and the Gospel; yet not in the same manner: The Law commandeth obedience every way perfect, both in parts and in degrees, and allowes none other: but the Gospell commandeth, and in Christ approveth imperfect obedience; that is, an endevour in all things, to obey and please God, if it be without hypocrisie. Againe, the Law commandeth obedience, as a worke to be done, for the obtaining of salvation: but the Gospel requires obedience, only to testifie our faith and thankfulnesse unto God. The Church of Rome therefore erreth grosly in confounding the Law and the Gospell, which indeed are far differing; and so we must beleeve, if we would come into, and hold the right way that leadeth unto life.

Tom. 6. ref. August. ad Bellisar. cap. 6.

Now whereas Christ saith, Thinke not that I came to destroy the Law: by Law he meaneth principally the Morall Law, and in the second place, the Ceremoniall Law also. Next observe the opposition that Christ maketh betweene the Law and the Prophets; thereby signifying unto us, that by the Law, he meaneth that part of Gods Word, concerning Righteousnesse and Justice, which Moses penned by Gods Commandement: and by the Prophets, he meaneth that part of Gods Word, which is contained in the writings of all the Prophets in the old Testament, after Moses; which bookes of the Prophets contained in them either an interpretation of Moses Law, or predictions of the state of the Church in the new Testament. Againe, by destroying the Law, we must not understand a breach of the Law, such as is made by mans sinne; but such a dissolution, as taketh from it all vertue and power, whereby it is a Law: and so to destroy the Prophets, is to put an end unto them, so as they should nothing availe, either to the interpretation of the Law, or to the fore-telling of the state of Gods Church under the Gospel. But to fulfill them. Christ fulfilleth the Law three wayes; by his doctrine, in his person, and in men. By his doctrine he fulfilleth the Law two wayes; both by restoring unto it his proper meaning and true use, as we shall see afterward, where hee correcteth the corrupt interpretations thereof by the Pharises; as also, by revealing the right way, whereby the Law may be fulfilled. Secondly, in his person he fulfilleth the Law two wayes: First, by becomming accursed to the Law, in suffering death upon the crosse for us. Secondly, by performing perfect obedience unto the Law, doing all that the Law required for the love of God, or of his neighbour; in which respect he was said, [d] To have beene under the Law. Thirdly, Christ fulfilled the Law in men: Men be of two sorts, Elect, and Reprobates. In the Elect he fulfilleth the Law two wayes: First, by creating faith in their hearts, whereby they lay hold on Christ, who for them fulfilled it: Secondly, by giving them his owne spirit, which maketh them endevour to fulfill the Law; which in Christ is accepted for perfect obedience in this life, and in the life to come is perfect indeed. In unbelievers Christ fulfilleth the Law, when he executeth the curse of the Law upon them; for that is a part of the Law, and the executionand enduring of the curse, is a fulfilling of the Law. And thus doth Christ fulfill the Law; so that the meaning of the words is this: Whereas you thinke that I came to destroy the Law and the Prophets, by making them of none effect, you are deceived; nay, on the other side, know that the end of my manifestation in the flesh, was to fulfill the Law, both in my doctrine and person; and also, in the persons of men both good and bad.

In this Apologie of Christ, for his behaviour towards the law; observe what malice some of the Jewes, especially the Scribes and Pharises, bare unto him: for Christ was the Author of the Law, and yet they maliciously suspect, and charge him with the abrogation thereof: so as he is faine to cleare himselfe in this behalfe.

The like hath beene the malice of wicked men in all ages, against the dearest servants of God; Acts 6. 14. Stephen is accused to speake blasphemous words against the Law: Act. 21. 28. Paul is charged with the same crime. And such is the malice of the Papists, against all Evangelicall reformed Churches; because we denie Justification by workes, therefore they condemne us for enemies to good workes: and in many other points, they fasten upon us notes of reproach, for holding the truth. Yea, among our selves, the like malice doth appeare in those that

Matth. 5. ver. 17, 18.

appeare in those that brand their brethren with odious names, because they shew forth more care than others, of their duty to God: but let all Gods children beware of this Pharisaicall practice.

Vse 2.

Againe, observe the Titles, under which he comprehendeth the whole Scriptures of the old Testament; The law and the Prophets: Luk. 16. 31. they are called Moses and the Prophets. Luke 24. 27. Christ began at Moses, and at all the Prophets, and interpreted unto them in all the Scriptures: there Moses and the Prophets doe containe all the Scriptures of the old Testament.

A properie of the old Testament.

Here then wee may note a propertie of the books of the old Testament; namely, that every one of them was either written by Moses or some other of the Prophets. And by this we may know the Canonicall bookes of the old Testament, and distinguish them from the bookes called Apocrypha: for the Apocrypha bookes were not penned by any of the Prophets, who spake and writ in the Hebrew tongue, the native Language of the Jewes; but by some other in the Greeke tongue, which was not the language of the old Prophets. These bookes may bee regarded in sundry respects, as containing many worthy Rules touching manners; in which regard, wee may preferre them before other writings of men, so farre forth as they are consonant with the Scripture; and so the Church of God hath of a long time reverenced them; but yet they are no part of the Law, nor of the Prophets. And therefore the Church of Rome doth notably wrong and abuse the world, in styling these Apocryphall Books, for Canonicall Scripture.

Consent of the Law and Gospell.

Thirdly, Christ in this his Apologie, sheweth a sweet consent betweene the Law and the Gospell: They are not contrary one to the other; for Christ, who is the substance of the Gospell, came to fulfill the Law: and therefore Paul saith, that by [e] faith we establish the Law: and Hebrewes 9. 19, 20, &c. When Moses had given the Law unto the people, offered sacrifices, and sprinkled the blood thereof upon the Booke, and upon the people, which was a type of the shedding of Christs bloud, as it is [f] here expounded; which did notably signifie this consent betweene the Law and the Gospell, infomuch, as without Christ, the Law could not stand.

Now this consent betweene them standeth herein; The Law requireth perfect obedience, and threateneth death to the least breach thereof, not propounding any way for the fulfilling thereof out of our selves; but the Gospell directeth us to Christ, who as our suretie hath fulfilled the Law for us; for which cause, Christ is called, [g] The end for the Law for righteousnes, to every one that beleeveth. And through Christ it is, that [h] the righteousnesse of the Law is fulfilled in us, which walke not after the flesh, but after the spirit.

h Rom. 8. 4.

v. 18 For truly I say unto you, till heaven and earth perish, one jot or one title of the Law shall not escape, till all things be fulfilled.

Here our Saviour Christ propoundeth the second argument, for the clearing of himselfe from their false imputation of destroying the Law, and it is drawne from the nature of the Law, which is immutable.

The Exposition. For: This sheweth the dependance of this verse upon the former, Truly I say unto you: This is a forme of speech, which our Saviour used, when he would solemnely avouch any weightie truth: and propounding this in his owne name, herein he sheweth himselfe to be the Doctor of his Church, whom we must heare in all things, for he speaketh as one that cannot lie. The thing he saith is this, Till heaven ad earth perish, one jot or title of the Law shall not passe. In which words he setteth downe the stability and the unchangeablenesse of the Law; and that he might fully expresse his minde, he borroweth a phrase from the Hebrew Alphabet, wherein Iod is the least letter: One jot; signifying, that not so much as this little letter Iod, shall passe out of the Law.

Againe, by title some thinke is meant the Hebrew vowels; but properly it signifieth a line bent crooked, or the top of an horne; so that here it properly signifieth the bending or bowing that is in the top of some Hebrew letters; insinuating, that not so much as the least part of a letter in the Law should passe away. Now these things must not be taken properly, for it hath beene and may be, that in the Hebrew copies of the old Testament some letters should be changed, as may appeare by the diverse reading in sundry copies; for that may be without the losse of any sentence: but Christs meaning is this; That not the least parcell or sentence in the Law shall passe away; making parts in the Law, to bee as titles in the Alphabet. Till heaven and earth perish: that is, never: so much this phrase insinuateth: for though heaven and earth shall be changed in regard of their qualities, yet the substance of them shall never passe to nothing: and in this sense is the Word Till used else-where, 1 Sam. 15. 35. Samuel came no more to see Saul, till the day of his death; that is, never. Till all things be fulfilled; that is, till every thing commanded in the Law be done, so as it shall no more urge a man to any obedience: which shall never bee, for it must eternally bee fulfilled: so that this phrase hath the like sense with the former, importing thus much, even for ever and ever: so that this is the meaning of this verse; That the Law of God is unchangeable, not onely in the whole, but for every part thereof; and the fulfilling thereof shall never have an end. Christs reason then stands thus; If the Law be immutable, and for observation eternall, then I came not to destroy it: but the Law is immutable and eternall; and therefore I came not to destroy it.

First, here observe, that the Law of God is made perpetuall and unchangeable: If any man aske how this can be, seeing the Apostle saith, [i] The Law is changed? Answer. The Law is threefold, Ceremoniall, Judiciall, and Morall, as hath beene said: now that place is principally to be understood of the Ceremoniall Law, which indeed is abrogated, in regard of the observation of it in Gods worship; but in the scope and substance of it, which is Christ crucified, with his benefits, whom it shadowed out, it remaineth still, and is now more plaine than ever it was. As for the Judiciall law, though it be abrogated unto us, so farre forth as it was peculiar to the Jewes; yet, as [k] it agrees with common equity, and serves directly to establish the precepts of the Morall Law, it is perpetuall. If it bee said, that Christ changed the Morall law, in changing the Sabbath day, from the seventh day to the eighth: I answer, Christ did so indeed by his Apostles, but that is no change of the substance, but of the ceremonie of the Sabbath: for the substance of that Law, is the injoyning of a seventh daies rest unto the Lord. Now though the seventh day from the creation be not kept, yet a seventh day is kept still. If it be further said, that the Law it selfe is abrogated; for that every one that breaketh the Law is not accused, according to the sentence thereof, Deut. 27. 26. Answer. We must know, that the Law is but one part of Gods Word, and the Gospell another, revealing another part of Gods will, besides that which the Law made knowne; for it addes a qualification to the Law, moderating the rigour thereof, after this manner; He is accursed (saith the Law) that falleth in any commandement, except (saith the Gospel) he be reconciled againe in Christ, and in him have the pardon of his trawsgressions. And yet the Morall law remaines for ever a rule of obedience to everie childe of God, though he bee not bound to bring the same obedience for his justification before God.

Againe, this propertie of the Law, in being unchangeable, and for ever to be kept, sheweth that no creature may dispense with the Law of God. Mens lawes may be abrogated and changed, but Gods law even in the least parts thereof, must stand for ever, till it be accomplished to the full: but if it might be dispensed with, then not jots and titles thereof, but whole lawes might be abrogated. This shewes the blasphemous impietie of the Popes of Rome, who in their [l] Canons be authorized to dispense with the lawes of God: yea, in the last [m] Councell of Trent, hee is privileged to dispense with some of the lawes of Consanguinitie, against nature, flatly forbidden in the [n] Word of God; which is most horrible rebellion, and a great disgrace unto God.

Thirdly, from the propertie of the Law, we may observe, that it is not likely that any whole booke of Canonicall Scripture is lost; for not one sentence of the Law shall passe till all bee fulfilled; much lesse then can whole books perish. Sundry men doe thinke that whole books be lost; but that opinion cals into question the fidelitie of the Church, and Gods owne providence, in preserving his Word: neither can it stand well with this text, that saith no title thereof shall faile. Those that seeme to be lost, were either humane writings, as books of lawes and Chronicles, such as our books of statutes or Chronicles be, or books of Philosophie, such as Salomon writ: or else some of them are in the Canonicall Scripture; for the books of Samuel and the Kings were written by divers Prophets: and therefore we may more safely hold, that no part of holy Scripture is lost, neither shall ever faile. For howsoever after the last judgement the use of the Word written shall cease, yet the substance thereof shall remaine in mens hearts, and be kept for ever.

Fourthly, this immutability of the Law, containes a matter of great terrour and woe unto all impenitent sinners; for howsoever they may flatter themselves with a presumption of Gods mercie, yet the curse of the Law which is against them, shall stand for ever: and therefore while they goe on in sin, they have just cause to howle and crie; for Gods justice in that his Law is inviolable: neither will [o] gold or silver pacifie Gods wrath: for though a man by his power and wealth were able to overturne heaven and earth, yet that would not helpe him: though heaven and earth be brought to nothing, yet every part of Gods Law must stand for ever, and be fulfilled. And therefore whosoever doe lie in any sin, must in time repent, humble themselves, forsake their sinnes, and betake themselves unto Christ, that he may fulfill the Law for them; or else the curse thereof shall certainly be fulfilled in them, and they shall lie howling under it eternally, where is nothing but weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Fifthly, this immutability of the Law, and so proportionally of every part of Gods Word, as it proveth the Scriptures to be the Word of God, so it is a most excellent ground of comfort for all Gods servants to stablish their hearts in the assurance of all his promises. A Christian heart is subject to receive many doubtings of the truth of Gods promises, especially in the time of triall and temptation: but this must be remembred for ever, that the whole Word of God is immutable; though mans promises may faile and their wayes bee abrogated, yet no jot or part of Gods Word shall passe unfulfilled: and therefore they must constantly wait for the accomplishment thereof, for in due time it shall be fulfilled.

Sixthly, we are hereby taught to put on patience in afflictions: for they come by the speciall appointment of our God, who saith in his Word, [p] That through many afflictions we must enter into the kingdome of heaven: now every part of Gods Word must be accomplished; and therefore Christ bade Peter to put up his sword, when he would have rescued his apprehension: for (saith he) I could pray to my Father, and he would send more than twelve legions of Angels to helpe me: but how should the Scriptures be fulfilled, which say, It must so be? Matth. 26. 52, 53, 54.

Seventhly, our Saviour Christ in this propertie of immutabilitie, giveth unto the whole Law, and unto every syllable and letter thereof, his proper force, vertue, and sense; so as there is nothing in it, not so much as one letter vaine or idle: for every commandement reveales the perfect justice of God, and every letter serves to expresse the same Commandement. And herein the Law of God differeth from mens lawes: for in them be many vaine and idle words, yea, oftentimes whole sentences; but in the Law of God it is not so: Prov. 8. 8. All the words of my mouth are righteous, there is no lewdnesse nor frowardnesse in them: yea, the Law of the Lord [q] is perfect, his statutes are right, and his judgements true and righteous altogether. Now the consideration of this integritie and perfection of the law, and Word of God, must move us to study the Scriptures with great diligence: so saith our Saviour Christ, [r] Search the Scriptures: that is, shake and sift them, (as the word signifieth) search narrowly, till the true force and meaning of every sentence, yea, of every word and syllable; nay, of every letter and jot therein, be knowne and understood: conferre place with place, the scope of one place with another, things going before with things that come after; yea, compare word with word, letter with letter, and search it thoroughly. This manner of studying the Scripture is most necessarie, as being the thing indeed which preserveth and upholdeth the Church of God, and the puritie of religion: for about foure or five hundred yeares agone, men left off to study the Bible, after this sort, and betooke themselves to the writings of men, occupying their wits wholly in vaine quiddities in Philosophie, and in hid mysteries of Divinitie: by which meanes it came to passe, that Poperie and Apostacie from the truth, spread it selfe over the world, for many hundred yeares together. Afterward, God of his meere mercie, put into the hearts of some men, to be carefull searchers in the Word of God, by which meanes the truth appeared, as light out of darknesse. Thus God stirred up Luther, about the yeare of our Lord, 1517. who by diligent search in the Scripture, and especially by serious meditation, with prayer, upon these words of the Apostle, Rom. 3. 21. That now by the Gospell, without the Law, the Justice of God is made manifest: did finde that by the perfect obedience of Christ, our justification was wrought; and thereupon began to maintaine and professe Justification before God to bee free, through and by faith in Christ onely, without helpe from the workes of the Law, against the Doctrine of the Church of Rome: and so by further diligence and industrie in the Scripture, the truth of God shone forth more and more. Let all men, but especially students in Divinitie, consider this effect, of searching out the Scripture, as a spurre to diligence, in this behalfe. By this meanes also errours and heresies are avoided and suppressed, and the will of God is plainely revealed. And here by the way, we may see how profitable and necessarie the gift of interpretation is; it is a most excellent gift of the spirit, pertaining to the ministerie; and therefore most commendable and necessarie is the vse thereof in Schooles of Learning.

Eighthly, this immutability ascribed to Gods Law, that every part thereof shall be accomplished to the full, teacheth all Princes and Magistrates, not onely to bee keepers of Moses law in their owne persons; but also within their rule and dominions, to doe their best endevour, that the same bee fulfilled and kept by others. For this cause did the Lord command, that the Prince of his people should have the Law written before him in a booke, to read upon continually, that he may learn to feare God, and to keepe all the words of the Law to doe, them: and that which is there injoyned unto Princes, belongeth also unto all Magistrates, Masters and Parents, within their places and charges; they must be carefull to see the whole Law of God practised, and obeyed, both in their owne persons, and of those that are under them.

Lastly, by this immutabilitie ascribed to the Law, we may learne, what is to fulfill the Law; namely, to keepe and observe to the full, every particular thing which the Law commands us: and upon this we may ground two conclusions against the Papists: First, that no man can come to life everlasting by his owne righteousnesse and obedience; for he that would come to heaven by his owne righteousnesse, must be able to fulfill the whole Law perfectly in every respect: but since Adams fall no man could keepe the Law in all things, saving our Saviour Christ, both God and man. Secondly, that our fulfilling of the Law, must be in the obedience of Christ, for he onely was answerable to the whole law in all things; and therefore if wee would come to heaven, wee must not come in our owne righteousnesse, but in his; as Paul wisheth to be found of God, Phil. 3. 8, 9.

v. 19 Whosoever therefore shall breake one of these least

Commandements, and teach men so, he shall be called least in the kingdome of heaven: but whosoever shall observe and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdome of heaven.

Our Saviour Christ having plainely propounded in his Apologie for himselfe, the stabilitie and eternitie of the whole Law; doth here lay downe two notable conclusions, for the upholding thereof: 1. Because the Law is immutable and eternall, therefore hee that breaketh one of the least of the Commandements, and teacheth men so, shall be called least in the kingdome of heaven. 2. Because the Law is eternall, therefore he that keepes the Commandements, and teacheth men so, shall be called great in the kingdome of heaven.

For the first; by least Commandement, he meaneth the precepts of the Morall law, though in the former verse, [by Law] he understood the whole law in three parts; Judiciall, Morall, and Ceremoniall. And he calleth them little, not simply in regard of themselves, as though they were so indeed; for in it selfe every Commandement of God is great and weightie, but he speaketh according to the opinion of the Iewes, for the Scribes and Pharises had ordained certaine rites and ceremonies, according to the tradition of their Fathers; the observation whereof, they made a greater matter of conscience, than the keeping of some of Gods Commandements: and so esteemed them little. Againe, saying these least commandements, he appointeth out what particular commandements of the Morall Law, the Jewes esteemed lesse than the traditions of men; namely, those which afterward he expoundeth in this Chapter, touching Murther, Adulterie, Swearing, and the rest: for they esteemed not all the commandements of the Law lesser than their traditions. Shall be called least in the kingdome of heaven: Here Christ sets downe the punishment of a false Prophet, which breakes Gods commandements and teach men so; to wit, his base esteeme in the Church of God: for the kingdome of God is twofold, the kingdome of grace, and the kingdome of glorie. The kingdome of grace is the societie and companie of Gods faithfull servants here on earth: The kingdome of glorie is the blessed estate of all the Saints in heaven. Now here by the kingdome of heaven he meaneth the kingdome of grace, which is the militant Church on earth: and so Iohn Baptist calleth it, Matth. 3. 2. Repent and amend, for the kingdome of heaven is at hand: that is, the Church of the old Testament is now abolished, and the Church of the new Testament is readie to take place by Christs comming; and therefore repent and amend: and Matth. 11. 12. From the time of Iohn hitherto, the kingdome of heaven suffereth violence. So then the meaning of this first conclusion is this, Whosoever breaketh one of these least commandements of the Morall Law (which afterward I shall expound) and teacheth men so to doe, he shall be contemned, and not counted worthy to be a member of the Church of God in the new Testament.

Matth. 5. ver. 19.

The meaning.

In this conclusion, in the practice of the Jewes, Christ setteth forth two notable corruptions of an hollow heart towards God: The first, to set little by the commandements of God, esteeming no more of them, nay lesse, than of mens lawes and traditions: but Saint Iames[t] saith, He that breaketh one commandement, be it never so little, is guiltie of all, though he make shew of keeping all: so likewise he that maketh light and base account of one Commandement, contemneth all; though he seeme to honour the rest never so much. Though Herod heard Iohn gladly, and obeyed his doctrine in many things, and so seemed to make some account of some commandements; yet because he would needs live in incest, against the seventh commandement, he did in effect contemne and breake them all: so at this day, there are many who professe religion, and give testimonie thereof, by hearing the Word, and receiving the Sacraments; and hereupon they would be counted lovers of Gods law: yet in the course of their lives, and in their particular callings, they will not sticke to oppresse the poore, and to deale unjustly for their advantage; to prophane the Sabbath for a little profit or pleasure, and to sweare, and curse, when they are a little provoked. Now howsoever such persons may make a glorious shew of profession outwardly, yet by these and such like particular actions, they shew plainely that they have but Pharisaicall hearts, which indeed make little or no account of Gods commandements. Let us therefore every one looke into our wayes, and search in our hearts, whether this corruption be in us, or no: and if it be, let us repent and forsake it, and labour to become like [u] David, who had respect unto all Gods commandements: and so shall we not be despised in the Church of God.

The corruptions of hypocrites respecting Gods Word.

u Psal. 119. 6.

The second corruption of an hollow heart, noted likewise of Christ, in these Jewes is, to place the ceremonies, rites, and traditions of men, above the Commandements of the Morall law: Herewith he doth expressely charge the Jewish teachers, Matth. 15. 3. Why doe ye transgresse the commandements of God, by your traditions? And this is also the practice of the Church of Rome at this day, they account [x] eating of flesh in Lent, and on their fasting daies, a deadly sinne: and yet they will [y] dispense with treasons and murthers of Christian Princes: they [z] allow of Stues, they permit and pardon Sodomie;

Sodomie; and yet [a] utterly forbid marriage in some estate, which the holy Ghost [b] calleth honourable among all men. In these and many moe, they preferre their owne traditions before the most holy Commandements of God: yea, many ignorant persons among us, are tainted with this corruption: for bee not some feastdayes appointed by the Church, as Christs nativitie, all Saints, and such like, observed by them with greater conscience and reverence, than the Lords owne Sabbath? Though the memorie of Christs nativitie may be celebrated; yet the Lords day should have the speciall honour. Now for the reforming of this corruption, we must labour to have the same minde that was in David, who grew into admiration with Gods Commandements, and thereupon inured himselfe to the observation of them. We must therefore labour to have an high estimation of the Lawes of God, and this will be a notable meanes, to draw us to a reverend feare and obedience towards the same: one cause why men doe not so highly advance the Law of God, as they ought, is because they doe not sufficiently weigh the dignitie thereof. In every Commandement therefore, we must first deeply consider the weight thereof; then labour to understand it aright: thirdly, learne to admire the wisdome and justice of God therein: and lastly, endevour to yeeld loyaltie and obedience thereunto.

A ground of obedience.

Secondly, in this Rule our Saviour Christ puts a difference betweene a false Prophet, and a true: The false Prophet breakes the commandements of God in his owne person, and also by his doctrine teacheth others to doe the like: But the true Prophet and servant of God, in the Ministerie, endevoureth the advancement of Gods glorie, as well by integritie of life, as by soundnesse of doctrine.

Difference betweene a false prophet and a true.

Thirdly, in the punishment of a false Prophet here set downe, we have good direction for our judgement, touching the present Church of Rome; namely, that she is not worthy to be esteemed a part of Christs Church on earth, by the sentence of our Saviour Christ; because she breakes Gods Commandements, and teacheth men so: for whereas the second Commandement forbiddeth the worshipping of Images, yea, and the making of Images to resemble God; the Church of Rome doth not onely allow the contrarie, against this Commandement; but teacheth others so to doe: saying, that it is lawfull [c] to resemble the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost in Images, either painted or carved, and to worship them therein; yea, and to worship [d] the very Images of Christ, and of Saints, as also the [e] Saints themselves, with religious worship.

Againe, they plainely breake the tenth commandement, which forbiddeth the first motions unto sinne with delight, though without consent of will, by teaching [f] that concupiscence after Baptisme is no sinne. And as they deale with the Commandements, so deale they with the Prophets, who give testimonie unto Christ: for first, they destroy his manhood, by their forged transubstantiation: secondly, they overturne his kingly office, by making the Pope the [g] head of the Church, and giving him power [h] to make lawes to binde the conscience. Thirdly, they overturne the priesthood, by their massing Priesthood, wherein [i] they daily offer up an unbloudie sacrifice, for the sinnes of the quicke and dead. Fourthly, they rob him of his propheticall office; in giving libertie to the [k] Pope, to make new lawes, and [l] to expound the Scriptures, as supreme Judge: these things they teach, and therefore that Church is not worthy to bee counted a member of Christs Church. But seeing God in great mercie hath vouchsafed us this favour, in this land that we should receive and embrace his holy Word, to publish and teach the same; and so esteemeth us worthy to bee accounted a member of his Church: we are therefore to rejoyce in this mercie, and to praise God unfainedly for this unspeakeable blessing; and to shew forth our thankfulnesse, not onely by teaching and receiving the truth of his Word, but also by yeelding obedience in all things thereunto: yea, our earnest and daily prayer must be, because it is so great a blessing, to be counted worthy of his kingdome, that God would continue the truth of his will to us, and to our posteritie for ever.

The second Conclusion: Whosoever shall keepe them, and teach men so, the same shall be called great in the kingdome of heaven; that is, he shall be honoured in the Church of God, and esteemed a worthy member thereof, because by this meanes, he endevoureth to keepe the Law unchangeable for ever. In this conclusion two points are to be considered; the office of a faithfull Teacher, and his reward: his office is two-fold; First, in his owne person he must be a doer of Gods Commandements: Secondly in his publike Ministerie he must teach men so to doe.

The office of a faithfull Teacher.

Doe, and teach.

Here first observe the order of these duties; Doing must goe before Teaching: This order Christ propounds, and that doubtlesse on speciall grounds; First, because a man cannot with joy and comfort fitly teach others, before himselfe be a doer of the thing he teacheth; for if a man teach others, from the instruction of the spirit, he shall finde his owne heart inclined by the same spirit, to the obedience of the Word he teacheth.

Againe, the experience of the fruit and efficacie of the Word, in his owne person, is the best Commentarie a man can have, for the opening of it unto others: The writings of men with the knowledge of arts and tongues, are excellent helpes; yet if a man want the spirit of God, framing his heart to beleeve, and obey the Word he teacheth, whereby he should become a doer of it: doubtlesse the Word will seeme seeme but a dreame or riddle unto him, neither can he fitly apply the same unto others, having never had experience of it in his owne soule. This then should move all Ministers, and such as set themselves to this calling, first and chiefely, to labour to become doers of the Word themselves; other helpes of learning are to be sought for with all diligence, to make them fit and able Ministers of so great mysteries; but especially they must labour for the spirit of grace, to frame their hearts to embrace, and their lives to obey the Word which they teach, that so they may be fitted, according to our Saviour Christs direction. Now this spirit is attained, by knocking at heaven gates by prayer, Luk. 11. 13. and by opening the doore of our hearts, when our Saviour Christ knocketh thereat by his Word, Revel. 3. 20.

Secondly, in laying downe this duty, our Saviour Christ propoundeth a singular comfort to such faithfull Ministers, as be grieved with the untowardnesse of their people; hee propoundeth not the conversion of the people, as a properties of a faithfull Teacher, but the doing and teaching of the will and Word of God. And doubtlesse a man may bee a faithfull Teacher, and yet not convert many unto God: hence the Prophet complaines that hee had [k] Laboured in vaine, and spent his strength in vaine: nay, the same Prophet is sent [l] to blinde the eyes of his people, to make them dull of hearing, and to harden their hearts by his Ministerie, which was an heavie case: but yet that saying of the Apostle Paul, must be remembred; that howsoever unto some, his Ministerie was the savour of death; yet [m] unto God it was always the sweet savour of Christ. So that a Minister mourning truly for his people, to see their hardnesse of heart, may comfort himselfe with this; that in a good conscience hee endevoureth to obey the Word of God, and to teach men so.

I I. Point. The reward of a faithfull Teacher is this; he shall be counted great in the kingdome of heaven: that is, he shall be honoured, and counted worthie to be a member of Christs church, both in this life, and in the life to come. This must be remembred, to incite all Ministers to become faithfull Teachers, both in life and doctrine. To get respect in Princes courts, is much sought after on earth: O then, how should this high respect with God prevaile in our hearts to incite us to be faithfull in this calling?

v. 20 For I say unto you, except your righteousnesse exceed the righteousnesse of the Scribes and Pharises, you cannot enter into the kingdome of heaven.

These words are commonly taken to be a Reason of the former verse, by way of answer to a secret objection which the Jewes might frame there-from, to this effect; Thou sayest, whosoever breaketh one of these least commandements, and teach men so, shall be called the least in the kingdome of heaven: But our Teachers, the Scribes and Pharises, looke to have chiefe place in the kingdome of heaven: and yet (if thy doctrine be true) they breake Gods commandements, and teach others so to doe. Now hereto Christ should answer thus; I say unto you, except your righteousnesse exceeds theirs, ye cannot enter into the kingdome of heaven. But if we marke well, the words may more fitly be referred to the 17. verse, as a third reason to prove that Christ came not to destroy the Law, or the Prophets, but to fulfill them; because he exacts at every mans hands, a more perfect and exact righteousnesse, than that which the Scribes and Pharises either have in themselves, or require in others; without which, no man can enter into the kingdome of heaven.

Scope.

In this verse are three points to be handled: First, what these Scribes and Pharises were: Secondly, what was their Righteousnesse: and thirdly, what is that true Righteousnesse, whereby a man may enter into the kingdome of heaven, and stand just before God.

A Scribe.

For the first, a Scribe is a name of office, whereof there were two sorts among the Jewes: Civill, who as Publike Notaries, did register the affaires of Princes; and such a one was Shimshai, Ezra 4. 8. And Ecclesiasticall, who were imployed in the exponding of the Scripture: such an one was Ezra, Ezra, 7. 1, 5, 6. And those of whom our Saviour Christ saith, Matth. 13. 52. Every Scribe taught unto the kingdome of heaven, is like an housholder: and Matth. 23. 2. The Scribes and Pharises sit in Moses chaire: that is, they are expounders of the Law of Moses. And such Scribes are meant in this place: to wit, men in Ecclesiasticall office, descending from the tribe of Levi, who expounded the Law unto the people; and these were all one with the Priests and Levites, under the Law: and therefore Ezra is called both a Scribe and Priest, Nehem. 8. 1, 2.

2 Ecclesiasticall.

Pharisie.

The name Pharisie betokeneth a sect, not an office; for there were three speciall sects among the Jewes: The Essenes, the Sadducees, and the Pharises. The Essenes were like Popish Monkes and Friers, which did separate themselves from the people, vowing and dedicating themselves to live in perpetual sanctity. The Sadducees were a sect that did expound the law, according to the letter and syllable, and withall denied the resurrection and the immortalitie of the soule, as is plaine, Acts 23. 8. The Pharises were such as did forsake the common exposition of the Scribes, and taught & framed a more exact and strict exposition of the Law, according to the traditions of the Fathers; and they were most holy outwardly, and of chiefe account among the Jewes: and therefore the Apostle Paul saith, faith, what after the most strict sect of their religion he lived a Pharisie; and that he was [o] a Pharisie, the sonne of a Pharisie. Yet besides these three were another sect, called Herodians, who (as some thinke) were courtiers, which held and taught that Herod was the Messias. And thus we see what the Scribes and Pharises were, whom Christ here joyneth together for amplification sake: understanding thereby such teachers among the Jewes, Priests and Levites, as lived after the most strait custome of the Pharises: for the Pharises were by office Scribes, as we may plainely see by comparing together Ioh. 1. 19. with v. 24. where the Priests and Levites (who were Scribes as we have shewed) are called Pharises.

Herodians.

I I. Point. What was the righteousnesse of the Scribes and Pharises, which is here to debased, as being unable to bring a man to heaven? By the tenour of Scripture it wil appeare, that it was [p] an externall righteousnesse onely, standing in the outward observation of the law: for they were carefull to abstaine from actuall grosse sinne, as whoredome, theft, murther, idolatry, and such like, and they were very forward in [q] fasting, praying, and giving almes openly, and in [r] keeping the traditions and ceremonies of the Elders, and in all things to carrie themselves in shew [s] conformable to the law: but the inward righteousnesse of the heart they nothing regarded, thinking that perfect righteousnesse consisted in outward obedience, and by that they looked to be saved; as it is said, Rom. 10. 2. Neglecting utterly the righteousnesse of God.

Mans naturall conceit of righteousnesse.

In these Scribes and Pharises wee may observe, what is the naturall perswasion of man, touching righteousnes: to wit, that an outward righteousnesse will serve the turne: and therefore every man naturally contents himselfe therewith: and hence it is that men will bring their bodies actually to the place of Gods worship to pray, to heare the Word, and receive the Sacraments: but few have care to bring their hearts with them, that they may inwardly worship God in spirit and truth: so likewise, many are content to rest from their ordinarie labours on the Sabbath day, but few are carefull to consecrate their rest unto God: men be carefull to abstaine from actuall murther, but few make conscience of malice, hatred, reviling, and quarrelling: many hate theft, that yet will not sticke to robbe their neighbours of their good name, by vile reports: many are asshamed to robbe openly, that make no bones to deceive by false weights and measures, by glosses, and such like: and yet all these will blesse themselves with their outward righteousnesse, and thinke all is well, not doubting but they shall be saved by it, though they have no more: but this is Phariſaicall pride and folly: for all such outward righteousnesse is here condemned, as unable to save the soule.

Againe, here we may see the palpable and grosse opinion of all worldly men, even of those who commonly are called honest men: if they be told of their sinnes, and of the danger of damnation, except they repent: their answer is, they are no theeves, no murtherers, no grosse sinners, and therefore they hope God will save them; for they live orderly, and doe no man wrong: but let all such take heed, lest they deceive their owne soules, for this carnall honestie was the righteousnesse of the Scribes and Pharises, which could neither bring them, nor any other into the kingdome of heaven, as Christ the God of truth saith expressely in this place. To give almes, to fast, to pray, and to deale uprightly with men, be very good things; but yet we must labour for more than these, if ever we meane to come to heaven: we must get another righteousnesse of the heart, renouncing utterly our owne righteousnesse, in the matter of Justification, and condemne our selves for our best actions, that so we may be fit to receive that true righteousnesse, which will commend us unto God.

True righteousnesse.

I I I. Point. What is that true righteousnesse which will bring a man to heaven? Answ. It is the righteousnesse of Christ, 1 Cor. 1. 30. for Christ is made unto us of God, wisdome, righteousnesse; yea, he was made sin for us, that we might be made the righteousnes of God in him. This is that righteousnesse, which exceeds the righteousnesse of the Scribes and Pharises, and whereby a sinner doth stand just before God: for when as by Adams fall we all became guiltie of sinne, and thereby subject to the curse of God, and to eternall condemnation, from which we could never have delivered our selves; then it pleased Christ to come from the bosome of his Father, and to become our Saviour, who in his life became obedient to the law for us, and in and by death upon the crosse, suffered whatsoever was due unto our sinnes: which obedience and satisfaction being made by him that was both God and man, was alone al-sufficient, both to free us from the curse of the Law, and also to justifie us before God: and this righteousnesse of Christ, is that which exceeds the righteousnesse of the Scribes and Pharises, and is able to bring a man to heaven. Yet further for our Justification, Christs righteousnesse hath three parts; the spiritie of his humane nature, the integritie and obedience of his life, and the merit of his sufferings upon the crosse; and all these must be ours, to answer for our corrupt nature, and sinfull life, deserving a curssed death.

Parts of Christs righteousnesse.

Here some make question, how Christs righteousnesse can bee ours? and how one mans righteousnesse can save so many thousands? Answ. Christs righteousnesse is not the righteousnesse of a meere man (for then it could save but one at the most,) but it is the righteousnesse of that person, who is both God and man; and therefore is an infinite righteousnesse, of merit sufficient to to save a thousand worlds. But some here say, If Christs righteousnesse be ours, then we are as righteous as Christ. Answ. The same righteousnesse that is in Christ, is ours, but not in the same manner or measure: for Christ hath it by merit and action of himselfe, we have it onely by mercie and imputation: it is in Christ as a root and fountaine, in us by reception and application; like the light in the Moone and in the Starres, which is not in them originally, but received from the Sunne, the fountaine thereof. Thirdly, it is said, If we by Christs righteousnesse be justified, and made the Sonnes of God; then is Christ by our sinnes made unjust, and so the childe of the Devill. Answ. We may safely say, that Christ was made a sinner by our sinnes, not actually, but by imputation: now hence it will not follow, that he should be the child of the Devill, for that commeth by the act and habit of sinning, after sinnefull conception; all which our Saviour Christ was free from: for at the very time when he bare our sinnes, he was in himselfe more holy than all men, and all Angels. Fourthly, it is said, that if Christs righteousnesse be made ours, then we are made Saviours. Anſ. It followeth not: for Christs merits and righteousnesse are conveyed and applied unto men, not as they are in Christs person, in whom they are sufficient to save ten thousand worlds, but as they serve to save and justifie that particular person onely, to whom they are imputed: so that this remaines an undoubted truth, that righteousnesse which bringeth salvation, is Christs righteousnesse onely.

C

Here some may say, How is Christs righteousnesse made ours, and we assured of it? Anſ. It is made ours by saving faith, which the holy Ghost creates in the heart and soule, as an hand whereby we may lay hold on Christ, and apply his righteousnesse unto our selves, as he is offered unto us in the promises of the Gospel. Some object, that if Christs righteousnesse be made ours, by our believing it to be ours, then if a man believe his neighbours house to be his, it is his also: and so for any other thing. Anſw. There is not the like reason in these things: for it is a meere fancie and imaginatiō, for a man to believe his neighbours house to be his, having no ground for it, besides his own conceit: but when a man believeth Christs righteousnesse to be his, he hath Gods commandement and promise, for his warrant and assurance, that it shall be imputed unto him; and withall that faith so grounded, maketh Christs righteousnesse as truly his, as any thing a man hath is his owne, being given him of another. Now this saving faith, laying hold on Christs righteousnesse, for mans justification, is never severed from sanctification by the spirit, with the fruits thereof, whereby the old man being mortified, and the new man in Christ renewed, according to his image, in knowledge, righteousnesse, and true holinesse, the whole person is turned unto God, and made carefull to please him, both in thought, word, and deed: and hereby doe we receive assurance of our justification; for true sanctification is the earnest of the spirit of adoption in our hearts, whereby we are sealed unto the day of our redemption.

D

Doth that righteousnesse, whereby we must be justified and saved in the day of our Lord, come from Christ onely, and not from our selves? then we see what just cause we have to humble our selves, and to acknowledge our great unrighteousnesse, and want of all goodnesse in our selves: and when we can doe this unfainedly, we have gone one step in the way to true happinesse. Secondly, we also must hereby learne, to esteeme all things as drosse and dongue, with the [2] Apostle, in respect of Christ Jesus, and his righteousnesse: for he it is that brings us to heaven, and therefore we must honour him above all, and value his righteousnesse, as that most precious jewell, which when a man hath found, he will sell all that he hath to get and keepe it, Matth. 13.46. Thirdly, we must hunger and thirst after Christ, and his righteousnesse, for it is the fountaine of all blessednesse, and without it we are most miserable: yea, though we had all the world beside, yet without it we lose our salvation. Now what will it profit a man to winne all the world, if he lose his soule? Fourthly, seeing Christs righteousnesse is made ours by faith, and we made assured of it, by sanctification of heart, and life; we must labour for true faith, whereby our hearts may be inwardly renewed: we must not content our selves with an outward holinesse, for that will never bring a man to heaven; but our endevour must be for inward holinesse, whereby we shal be preferred with God, above all the Pharises in the world, and get assurance of eternall happinesse. And this faith we must shew forth in all holy exercises; as when we heare the Word, we must lend the inward eare of the heart, with the bodily eare; and when we fall downe to prayer, we must bow the knees of our hearts; and in fasting from meat, we must abstaine from sinne: yea, in all things we must be carefull to serve God, in spirit and truth: for which cause, we must pray with David, Lord renew a right spirit within me, that so feeling Christ to live in us by grace, we may be assured that Christs righteousnesse shall bring vs unto glorie.

Psal. 51.10.

V. 21 Ye have heard that it was said of old, Thou shalt not kill, for whosoever killeth, shall be culpable of judgement.

Our Saviour Christ having laid downe his Preface, doth here begin his interpretation of the Law, being indeed the onely true Doctor of his Church; and herein especially he doth meddle with the second Table, beginning first Object. 1. Christs righteousnesse is made ours by faith.

first of all with the sixt Commandement, touching Murther. In the handling whereof, he observeth this order: First, hee setteth downe the false interpretation of this Law, by the Scribes and Pharises, in this verse: Secondly, he shewes the true meaning of it, v. 22. And lastly, he propoundeth rules of concord and agreement between those that be at variance, v. 23, 24, 25, 26.

For the first: The Exposition. Ye have heard: that is, you Jewes which now heare me, whether Scribes, Pharises, or others: you have heard that it hath beene said of old: that is, by your ancient Teachers, the old Scribes and Pharises, who have expounded this Law unto you: and that this phrase must be understood of the ancient Jewish Teachers, may plainly appeare, because in the next verse hee opposeth his owne teaching thereunto, and would have these his hearers, that before had learned a false interpretation of this Law, from their old Teachers, now to learne of him the true exposition thereof. The Law is this, Thou shalt not kill: The exposition of the ancient Jewish Teachers was this, For whosoever killeth shall bee culpable of judgement: that is, whosoever layeth violent hands on another, to take away his life (for they knew no other murther, neither did they extend this Commandement to forbid any sin, but actuall murther) shall be culpable of judgement: that is, shall be held guiltie of murther, both in the Courts of men, and also before the Judgement seat of God, where he shall receive the deserved punishment thereof. This was the interpretation of the Jewes.

Here first observe, that antiquitie is no infallible marke of true doctrine: for this exposition of this Commandement was ancient, received from ancient Teachers; and yet Christ, the Doctor of truth, rejecteth it, as false and corrupt: and therefore the argument which the Papists use, for the stablishing of their religion, drawen from antiquitie, is of no effect.

Secondly, by these words of Christ, ye have heard, it hath beene said of old, we may easily gather, after what manner the Scribes and Pharises expounded the Law; namely, they left the Scriptures, and followed the interpretation of their ancient Teachers. But here Christ checketh and reproveth this manner of teaching: and therefore the like cannot bee warrantable among us at this day: whereby we see that kind of teaching reproved, wherein everie point is stuffed out with the testimonies of Fathers, Schoolemen, and humane writers. And here also is discovered a wicked and dangerous practice of the [3] Papists, who referre all deciding of controversies, and interpretation of hard places of Scripture, to the Church and to the Fathers. If we say that Fathers oft dissent, and the Church may erre, then they send us to [4] the Popes breast. But if this course were safe, then the Jewish teachers might have had a good defence against this charge of Christ: for they had both Church and Fathers on their side, and the high Priest that was then in place. Indeed the Fathers must bee reverenced, as lights of the Church in their time, and their testimonies duly regarded, wherein they agree with the written word: but for the confirmation of the truth in mans conscience, and for the edifying of the soule in the graces of the spirit, the word of God hath the only stroke: by it alone Gods children are begotten, and borne anew to a lively hope, and by it alone they are fed and nourished in the faith: yea, by it alone they are confirmed and stablished in the truth.

Antiquitie no infallible marke of truth.

3 Rhem. Test. pref. sect. 19.

4 Illyr. conf. with Rainold. ch. 4. p. 2. div. 1.

Thirdly, in these Jewish Teachers, forbidding nothing as a breach of this Law, but the outward sinne of murther; and on the contrarie, approving of those as keepers of this Law, that kept their hands from this Actuall crime of bloud, and by consequent worthy of life everlasting; behold a plaine picture of everie naturall man: for is not this the common opinion, that unlesse a man kill another, hee breakes not this Commandement? and so for the rest, if he abstaine from the outward actuall grosse sinnes of stealing, adulterie, and false witnes bearing, then he keepes those Commandements though his heart bee never so full fraught with envi malice, lust, covetousnesse, falsehood, &c. Let us observe Christs reproofe of such erroneous interpretations of Gods Law, as a meanes to schoole our hearts from such vaine conceits.

Man is naturally prone to self-justification.

V. 22 But I say unto you, Whosoever shall be angrie with his brother unadvisedly, shall bee culpable of judgement: & whosoever saith unto his brother, Raca, shal be worthy to be punished by the Councel: & whosoever shall say, foole, shall be worthy to be punished by hell fire.

Here our Saviour Christ propounds the true interpretation of this Commandement: But I say unto you that is, whatsoever you have heard the Scribes or Pharises teach you from themselves, or from their fathers, it is nothing, let them not deceive you: for I that am the Lawgiver and Doctor of my Church, and therefore best know the meaning of my owne Law, I say otherwise unto you: whosoever is angrie with his brother, &c. Here Christ layes downe three kindes of murther, and three degrees of punishments for the same. The first degree of murther is Anger, not anger simply: but rash and undiscreet anger towards a brother: and by Brother he meaneth, first, one Jew with another, to whom Christ spake; secondly, one neighbour with another, whether Jew or Gentile: for by creation wee are all brethren, having ving one father which is God, as Adam is called the sonne of God, Luk. 3. 38. The second degree of murther, is calling his brother Raca. Some expound this word Raca, an idle or emptie braine: others, an evill man: others take it to signifie a loathsome man, one to be spit at, as we by spitting use to shew our contempt: but these interpretations cannot so fitly stand: for then the third degree of murther and this second, should be one and the same: for to call a man emptie braine, evill, or loathsome, and to call him foole, are equall in degree. Now Christs intent is to set downe distinct degrees of murther, as is evident by the distinct degrees of punishment adjoyned thereunto. A more fit exposition is this, that Raca hath no perfect signification, but is only an interjection of indignation, whereby a man doth not slander or revile his brother, but only in gesture shew the contempt and anger of his heart against him; as when in English we say, fie, tush, or such like: which words are not open railings, but only outward signes of the inward anger and contempt concealed in the heart; so that the meaning is this; He that is angrie with his brother, and expresseth this his anger either in gesture or countenance, by frowning looks, gnashing of teeth, or by imperfect speech, as tush, fie, pish, or such like, he is guiltie of murther. The third degree of murther is, when a man doth shew his anger against his brother by open railings, and reprochfull names; expressed in these words, Whosoever shall call his brother foole. And all these three degrees are beyond the interpretation of the Jewish Teachers, who only condemned actuall killing by this Commandement.

1 Third degree of murther.

Matth. 5. verse. 22.

Now to these severall kindes of murther, Christ addeth distinct degrees of punishment, The first is, to be culpable of judgement for unadvised anger. The second, to be worthy to bee punished with a Councell, for outward signes of this anger. The third is to be worthy of hell fire, for reprochfull names or railings. And here we must understand, that Christ speaketh not properly, in setting downe these degrees of punishment, but figuratively alluding to the custome of punishing offendors used among the Jewes: for they had three Courts: The first was held by three men for meane matters, and other cases of small importance. The second was held by three and twenty men, wherein were determined matters of great importance, that could not be decided in the first Court; as matters of life and death: and it was kept in the chiefe cities of the Land. The third Court was held at Jerusalem only, called the Court of the Seventie-two, from which none might appeale to any other. In it were all weightie and great causes determined, and this Court is here called a Councell. Now Christ alluding hereto, saith to this effect: Looke as among you Iewes there are different Courts, and some matters are adjudged in your Courts of judgement, and others in the Councell at Ierusalem; so God also he hath his Judgement, and his Councell: those that are rashly angrie, shall undergoe Gods judgement: and he that makes known his anger by speech or countenance, shall be punished more grievously, and undergoe a deeper judgement, as it were by the Lords Councell: but he that shall by open revilings and railings, shew forth his malice against his brother; as by calling him foole, or such like, he shall bee worthy the most grievous judgement and torment of hell fire: alluding to the highest degree of torment among the Jewes, which was burning: for before their Government was taken from them by Herod, the Jewes used these foure kindes of punishments; hanging, beheading, stoning, and burning. Further, the words translated hell fire, are properly the fire of Gehenna; for there was a place neere to the suburbs of Jerusalem called Gehenna, which is a compound Hebrew word, signifying the valley of Hinnon, wherein was a place called Tophet, Jer. 7. 31. where the idolatrous Jewes, following the horrible superstition of the Nations about them, used to burne their children unto Molech: for which fact the place became so odious to the godly, that to aggravate the heinousnesse of this crime, they used this name to signifie and betoken the place of torment appointed for the reprobate: whereupon in Christs time, Gehenna, and the fire of hell, were in signification all one. Now in this valley the Jewes used to burne their malefactors; and unto this kinde of judgement Christ alludeth, meaning not simply hell fire, the torments of the damned, but a more grievous and greater kinde of punishment than the former, because it was an higher degree of sinne: so that Christs meaning is this; Howsoever your Scribes and Pharises teach you, that there is no murther but actuall killing, and that it only deserves condemnation: yet I which am the Law-giver, say unto you, that as you have diverse punishments in severall Courts for diverse offences, as hanging, stoning, and burning: so God hee hath diverse degrees of punishments for the severall breaches of this Commandement: he that is rashly angrie, is worthy of judgement: and he that gives out any shew of his anger in gesture, shall be punished more grievously: but he that shewes forth his anger by railing and reviling, shall endure the most grievous punishment of all.

Celsus among the Iewes, three. P. Fagius in Deut. 16.

Celsus.

Rhem. on this place.

First, whereas Christ here maketh degrees of punishments for diverse sinnes, the Papists hereon would build their distinction of sinnes into veniall and mortall. Veniall sins (say they) are light sinnes, as bad thoughts, vaine speeches, and such like, which doe not deserve damnation, but some temporall punishment onely, such as were allotted to civill courts among the Jewes: for here (say they) Christ onely makes open railing and reviling of our brother, such an heinous sinne as deserves hell fire. But this distinction cannot here bee grounded: for Christ doth not appropriate condemnation to this terme of hell fire: but he hath reference thereto thereto in everie phrase that here imports a punishment; as, to be culpable of judgement for unadvised anger, is to deserve condemnation in hell fire; and to be punished by a Councell, for testifying anger by outward signes, is to deserve condemnation. but yet in deeper degree: And to be worthy to be punished with the fire of Gehenna, for open railing, is to deserve condemnation also, but yet in a deeper measure than the former: for as among the Jewes by the sentence of their Courts, some offences were punished by beheading or hanging; greater offences by stoning, and the greatest by burning; all which punishments differed in degree, and yet everie one was death: so before God, lesser sinnes deserve lesser condemnation in hell fire, and greater sinnes deeper damnation; and yet everie sin deserves damnation: for the wages of sinne, be it never so little, is death, Rom. 6. 23. so that Christ here makes degrees of punishment according to the degrees of sinne; and yet so, as everie sinne is mortall, deserving damnation, and none veniall in it selfe.

2. Rules for the expounding of the Law.

Secondly, wee may here observe two excellent Rules for the expounding of the Morall Law: First, that under one sin named in a Commandement, are forbidden all sinnes of the same kinde, with all the causes thereof: For Christ in expounding this sixth Commandement, doth not only condemne Actuall murther, but even Rash anger in the heart, and all signes thereof in countenance and gesture, with all railing and reviling speeches, as breaches of this Commandement: and the like he observeth in these which follow. II. Rule. To the breach of everie Commandement, there is annexed a curse, albeit it be not expressed: For Christ here setting downe the breaches of this sixth Commandement threateth condemnation to the least breach thereof, saying, He that is unadvisedly angrie with his brother, shall bee culpable of judgement. Is it not then a wonder to see, how ignorant people doe use the Commandements for prayers, when as indeed (if they could perceive it) they are Gods thunderbolts, to throw their soules to hell for everie sin they commit?

Thirdly, Christ condemning unadvised anger as a breach of this Law, giveth us to understand, that advised anger is not unlawfull: and true it is, that all anger is not sinnefull: for [a] Christ was oftimes angrie with the Jewes, and the Apostle bids us [b] to be angrie, but sinne not. If any here aske, how wee may discerne godly anger, from that which is evill and unadvised: I answer, two wayes: First, by the beginning of it: for good anger proceedeth from the love of him with whom wee are angrie; now love is the fulfilling of the Law, and therefore anger proceeding from love and guided thereby, cannot be a breach thereof: but evill anger proceedeth from self-love, from dislike or hatred of the partie with whom we are angrie. Secondly, we may discerne it by the end. Good anger is for Gods glorie against sinne, because God thereby is unhonoured: and for our brothers good: but evill anger wants these ends, and intendeth private respects. It is quickly moved, it continueth long, and also carrieth with it a desire of revenge.

Advised anger not unlawfull.

b Ephes. 4. 26.

How lawfull anger may be discerned.

Fourthly, seeing unadvised anger, with the signe thereof, is a breach of this Law, deserving death; hereby wee are admonished to beware of this headstrong affection of anger, and betime to restraine and bridle the same: it hath a bad beginning, and an evill end, and thereby we become murtherers. Now that we may overrule it, so as it prevaile not against us: first, we must lay to our hearts this Commandement of God, forbidding rash anger, as a barre to stop it. Secondly, we must remember, how lovingly and mercifully God deales with us everie day, in forbearing and forgiving us: and therefore wee ought to be like minded towards our brethren, Ephes. 4. 31, 32.

Anger must be bridled.

The second branch of sinne here condemned is, to say unto our brother, Raca: whereby wee may see that everie gesture expressing rash anger, and despite of heart towards another, is n uther before God; as casting downe the countenance towards him: this God reproved in Cain, Gen. 4. 6. frowning or nodding the head, or shaking it in contempt, as the Jewes did to Christ, Mat. 27. 29. also contemptuous laughter and deriding: hence [c] Ismaels jeering at Isaac, is called persecution, Gal. 5. 29. and the like may be said of all signes of contempt in words: as fie, pish, tush, and to thou a man in disdaine, for otherwise a superiour may thou his inferiour: so also when a man contemptuously takes a thing in snuffe, though hee say nothing, but flings away with an heart rising against his brother. All these and such like tokens of contempt and disdaine, are here condemned for murther of heart: and therefore it standeth us in hand, to make conscience of everie gesture of our body, of the casting of our eyes, of our laughter, and of all passionate words, lest thereby wee shew any contempt or anger towards our brethren.

Signes of despite are degrees of murther.

Make conscience of gesture.

If it be said, how can everie gesture expressing rash anger or contempt be murther, seeing the Law permits a widdow to [d] spit in the face of her husbands brother, or next kinsman, even before the Elders of the citie if he refused to raise up seed unto his brother. Answ. First, the Lord might command her so to doe, thereby to manifest his great dislike of want of love in him towards his dead brother. Secondly, I answer, the words may as fitly be translated thus, and spit in his sight, that is, spit on the ground before his face, that hee might see her: and that seemeth to bee the true meaning of that place: for it was verie unseemely for any one, much more for a woman, so publikely to spit in a mans face. And in that sense is the word used, in the same booke, Deut. 4. 37. where God is said to bring Israel out of Ægypt in his face, that is, in his sight.

d Deut. 25. 7, 8, 9.

Secondly, under this branch of murther by

signe of contempt, are many abuses of the tongue most justly condemned: as first, bitternesse of speech; when men that be at variance, give out hard and grievous words one against another: these are as pricks and swords, as the wise man saith: and therefore the Holy Ghost chargeth us, that [f] all bitternesse, anger, and wrath be put away from us. Secondly, all wrangling, and contentious speech betweene parties disagreeing, when as neither will yeeld, but each one will thinke to have the last word: Philip.2.14. Doe all things without murmuring and reasoning: for that springeth of choller and stout stomack, cleane contrarie to meeknesse and patience, a fruit of the spirit. Thirdly, [g] crying also is here forbidden, whereby men or women being at variance in private speeches, doe through choller and malice lift up their voices, that they may bee heard afarre off. This is a fruit of raging anger, and furie. Fourthly, threatning speeches are also here condemned, when as men from an inward dislike and rage in their owne private cause, do give out menacing words against others: Ephel.6.9. Masters are forbidden thus to deale with their servants: much lesse then may one brother thus threaten another. Fifthly, all kinde of girding and taunting others by privie and close nips, is here condemned, although there be no open railing: for thereby men seeke to disgrace their brethren, and to glad their owne hearts by grieving others; which is more than to say, Raca.

The third degree of murther is, in Reviling termes, calling our brother foole, or such like: this also is a sin against the ninth Commandement, by robbing him of his good name: for one sinne in divers respects may be against many Commandements. It is a breach of this sixth Commandement, in that hereby we grieve and trouble our neighbour, and so far as a reproach can goe, make him wearie of his life.

Upon the ground of this degree of murther, bee all grievous practices of men against their brethren, justly condemned for bloudie practices. As first, Usurie, whereby men binde their brethren to returne gaine, for the bare lone of money or other goods, which naturally yeeld no increase; without all respect to their necessitie, or to the successe of the imploying of it. Hereby many are brought to great povertie: reviling termes doe nothing so much pinch the poore, as this oppression. Secondly, the hoarding up of corne till times of dearth, that thereby they may gaine the more: these men make a private gaine of Gods common judgements upon the poore. Indeed it is not unlawfull in time of plentie, to lay up store against a time of dearth: but to doe it with the hurt of the poore, is to sucke their bloud, and to eat up Gods people: as when men keepe their garners full, and suffer the poore to starve; the peoples curse lies on such, Prov. 11. 26. Thirdly, fighting and striking by private persons, or by others in private causes: for they wound or weaken the bodie of their neighbours, which is more than to grieve him by reviling speeches. Fourthly, the detaining the food of the soule, by those that cannot, or will not preach, is a dammage against eternall life: and therefore Paul to cleare himselfe from bloud in this behalfe, said, He kept nothing backe, Act.20.26,27. Fifthly, to give offence by word or deed, whereby others are occasioned to fall: this is uncharitable walking, Rom.14.15. whereby we doe as much as in us lieth, destroy him for whom Christ died. As this is cruell in all, so especially in publike persons, as Magistrates, Ministers, Parents, Masters, and such like, because their practices are Rules to their inferiours. They are like lights in an haven, which guides the ships that saile by night, which standing amisse, lead the ships upon rocks and sands, and so cause shipwracke.

Having seene the true meaning of this Law expounded by Christ, let us here further observe, how hee restoreth the true use thereof. We must not thinke, that hee did only here intend the rectifying of our judgements for understanding, and not also strike at the reformation of our hearts and lives for practice. Touching the use of this law therefore, Christ here teacheth us two things: First, to descend into our owne hearts, and there to search how wee have broken this Commandement: as whether we have borne in our hearts any malice against our brother, and whether we have expressed the rash anger of our hearts by speech or gesture, or have any way wronged him by reviling termes, or other injuries against his life: if wee have, Christ tells us we are murtherers.

Secondly, Christ setting downe the curse to everie degree of murther; teacheth us, upon due examination of our hearts, finding our selves guiltie in any degree, to cast downe our selves before the Lord, to accuse and condemne our selves, crying out that all shame and confusion belongs unto us: this wee must doe, that by the view of our miseries, wee may bee moved more earnestly to sue for mercie. And indeed, if wee examine our hearts, and our behaviours thorowly, we shall finde, that we are all murtherers. For though we may bee free from actuall killing, yet our consciences will tell us, that the motions of wrath and malice, and the signes of unadvised anger have broken forth, both in our words and gesture: for who can say, he never snuffed at another by way of contempt or dislike? who can cleare himselfe from deriding and disgracing others? Now these things and such like, make us guiltie of sinne against the Law, and so subject to the wrath and curse of God: which needs must be fulfilled, though heaven and earth should passe away. This undoubtedly is our miserable and wofull case in our selves. And there is no way to escape this curse, but only this: wee must humble our selves before God, and confesse against our selves the murther of our hearts, out hearts, declared in our gesture, speech, and behaviour, then we must labour to be grieved for these sinnes; for which end we must apply unto our selves, Gods fearefull judgements due unto us for them. Thirdly, we must earnestly sue unto God for mercie and pardon, as for life and death, like as poore prisoners do, when the sentence of death is to bee pronounced against them: yea, wee must cry with sighs and groanes that cannot be expressed, and give the Lord no rest, till hee send into our consciences the comfortable message of mercie and pardon by his good spirit. This done, we must labour in our callings for the time to come, to procure and further the welfare and safetie of our brethren, as well as our owne: we must not seek our selves, but the common good, eschewing those things that may grieve our brethren, and doing those that may bee good and comfortable unto them, that so by new obedience wee may shew forth thankfulnesse for Gods mercie and favour towards us.

Hitherto we have handled the three degrees of murther, which Christ condemneth by this Law, beyond the doctrine of the Jewish teachers. Besides these, there is a fourth degree here condemned, which is actuall killing. This Christ doth not here name, because hee taketh it for granted, even by the doctrine of the Scribes and Pharisies. Now because it is the maine sin of this Commandement, therefore here it is to be handled; which we will doe thus: first, we will shew when killing is murther, and when it is not, and then handle the kindes thereof.

For the first: Killing is not alwaies murther, for sometime a man hath power given of God to kill, and it is no sinne: now God gives a man power to kil three waies: I. by the written word: thus Princes and Governours, and under them Executioners, are allowed to kill malefactours that deserve death: and thus Souldiers are warranted to kill their enemies in a lawfull war: II. by an extraordinarie Commandement: and so Abraham might lawfully have killed his son, if the [a] Angell of the Lord had not stayed his hand: III. by an extraordinarie instinct, which is answerable to a speciall Commandement: and so [b] Phinees slew Zimri and Cosbi, without guilt of murther. But killing is murther, when men of their owne wils, without warrant from God, slay others: and this sinne is plainely and directly forbidden in this Commandement.

II. Point. The kinds of killing be two; either voluntarie, or casuall. Voluntarie killing is, when a man killeth of purpose and intent: and this sin is so heinous, that it [c] defileth the land where the bloud is shed, till it be purged by the bloud of him that shed it. And this purpose to kill is twofold: either with deliberation and fore-desire of revenge, as when a man hath carried a grudge in his heart long before: or without deliberation, when a man without all former malice is suddenly carried by furie and anger to slay his brother: and this second kinde of killing is distinguished from that which is more heinous, as by the name of man-slaughter, and also favoured by the lawes of some Countries, because it is not done of set purpose, but through sudden anger before the bloud be cold: but Gods Law maketh both of them murther, and adiudgeth [d] no recompence for the life of the murtherer: nay, he doth adjudgeth the murtherer to eternall death, both in soule and body. To this voluntarie murther, we must referre those that give commandement, counsell, or helpe unto the murtherer: for hee that commandeth is the principall Agent, and the murtherer is his Instrument. Againe, it is voluntarie murther to strike another, though with purpose only to wound, if death follow thereon. And that also which is committed by a drunken man: for his will is free, though sense and reason bee blinded.

Casuall killing, commonly called chancemedly, is when a man killeth another, having no purpose to do him hurt. The presumptions of casuall killing be these: First, if a man kill another, having no ill will or anger towards him, nor to any other for his sake; neither is moved thereto by covetousnes, or any affection. Secondly, if he bee doing the lawfull duties of his particular calling. Thirdly, if he be well occupied, doing some lawful work bef de his calling. And Lastly, if he be doing a thing which he ordinarily practiseth, keeping his stiall place and time. And albeit this kind of killing, if t be meerly casual, is no sinne, yet the partie committing it, in old time was bound to come to his answer, thereby to purge and cleare himselfe from suspition of murther, as also to avoid the hatred and danger of the friends of the partie killed; and lastly to keep & maintaine the hatred of murther among Gods people. Now this sixt Commandement is not to be understood of casuall, but of voluntarie killing. And this also must be observed, that Christ giveth the name of murther, to all the occasions thereof, that he might breed in our hearts an hatred of them all, as of murther it selfe.

v. 23 If then thou bring thy gift to the Altar, and remembrest that thy brother hath ought against thee,

24. Leave there thy gift before the Altar, goe thy waies, first bee reconciled to thy brother, then come and offer thy gift.

Here Christ propounds a Rule of concord, by seeking reconciliation with them whom we have wronged: and it depends upon the former verse, as a consequent and conclusion drawen therefrom, as may appeare by the first words, If then, or therefore: as if he had said, If rash anger and the testification thereof, either in gesture, or reviling speech, be murther, and deserve condemnation, then we are with all diligence to seeke to bee reconciled to our brethren, whensoever any breach of love is made betweene them and us.

The Exposition. If thou bring thy gift to the Altar] Here Christ alludeth to the Jewes manner of worship under the Law; which was, to offer in the Temple sacrifices unto God both of propitiation, and thanksgiving. And though Christ here only name this one kinde of ceremoniall worship, yet under this hee comprehendeth all manner of true outward worship, whether Legall or Evangelicall; as if he should say, If thou come to worship God any way, either by offering sacrifices, or by praying unto God, by hearing his Word, or receiving the Sacraments; and remembrest that thy brother hath ought against thee, that is, that thou hast any way wronged and offended thy brother: this appeareth to be the true meaning by the like words of [a] Marke, If thou hast ought against thy brother, (meaning for injurie done unto thee by him) forgive him: and therefore our brother hath something against us, when we have wronged or offended him in word or deed, and he hath knowledge thereof, and just cause thereupon to complaine.

Leave there thy gift before the Altar] Still he alludeth to the manner of the Jewes worship; who when they went to sacrifice to the Lord, brought their sheepe or bullocke unto the utter Court: or as some thinke, tied it to the hornes of the Altar, in token that they presented it unto the Lord: now if at that verie instant, they did remember that they had any way offended their brother, then were they to leave their gift there, (not quite omitting this dutie, but only suspending or deferring it for a while) and goe seeke to be reconciled to their brother whom they had wronged.

Question. How could this departure bee warrantable, seeing the Jewes had a law [b] that when the service of God was once begun, none might depart, no not the Prince himselfe, till it was ended? Answ. This Rule must bee understood of departure out of the utter Court of the Temple, whither the people brought their sacrifice soone after they had presented it, before it was begun to be offered: for till the Priests had begun this service, it was lawfull for the people to depart, especially upon this occasion.

Question. II. But what if the partie offending, cannot possibly come to his brother whom hee hath wronged, by reason of his absence in some farre countrey, his close imprisonment, or such like? Answ. He must testifie his endevour to be reconciled unto him: and if the act it selfe be necessarily hindred by Gods providence, God will accept the will for the deed, if there bee a willing minde: for this is Christs meaning, that we should doe our utmost endevour to bee reconciled unto our brethren whom wee have wronged, shewing such care thereof, that wee preferre the same before the outward actions of Gods worship, not presuming to worship God, till we be reconciled to our brethren.

A

Here wee have a notable Rule for the maintaining of love and charitie among men; namely, brotherly reconciliation. In the giving whereof Christ still continues his exposition of the sixth Commandement: for having condemned murther, and the provocations thereunto, in the former verse; here hee commandeth the contrarie vertue of brotherly love, and the meanes to uphold the same; to wit, Reconciliation for offences given.

A third rule for expounding Gods Commandement.

Out of this Rule in generall we may observe: first, a Third direction to the right expounding and understanding of Gods Commandements; namely, where any vice is forbidden, there the contrarie vertue is commanded: and on the contrarie, where any vertue is commanded, there the contrarie vice is forbidden. This Rule must be observed as a privilege of the Law of God, above all humane lawes: for mens lawes are satisfied, by abstaining from the vice forbidden, though the contrarie vertue bee not practised: as he satisfies mans law, forbidding murther, that abstaines from the actuall crime, though he love not his brother: But hee transgresseth the Law of God, that performeth not the contrarie vertue, though he abstaine from the vice forbidden: for though a man abstaine from killing, yet if he doe not love his brother, he is guiltie of the breach of this sixth Commandement; which serves to confute the errour of our ignorant people, who because they abstaine from Murther, Adulterie, and other outward sinnes, doe perswade themselves that they keepe the Law, and that God will therefore be mercifull unto them. But they must know, that though they should abstaine from the vices forbidden, yet they stand culpable of Judgement, for want of doing the contrarie vertues: for it is not sufficient to abstaine from evill, but we must doe good, and therefore John Baptist saith, [a] Everie tree that bringeth not forth fruit, is hewen downe, and cast into the fire: and the sentence of damnation shall bee denounced against the Reprobates, for their omission of doing good: [b] I was hungrie, and ye gave me no meat, &c.

God rejects sacrifice without mercie.

Secondly, by this Rule of Reconciliation, it appeareth that the performance of any outward service unto God, is displeasing unto him, if it be separated from the love of our brethren: Isa.1.11,12. What have I to doe with the multitude of your sacrifices, saith the Lord: and so he proceedeth, rejecting in particular, all the service of the Jewes, because they lived in envie, debate, and oppression: Their hands were full of blood, Isa. 58. 5, 6. The Lord doth there reprehend the Jewes fasting from meats, because cause they did not withall abstaine from strife, and oppression; adding withall, that refraining from cruelties, and doing works of mercie, is the fast which he requires: which serves to overthrow the naturall conceit of men, who thinke that the whole worship of God, standeth in the duties of the first Table. This was indeed the conceit and practice of the Pharises, whereupon they taught the people, That if they gave oblations to the Church, though they releeved not their poore parents, yet God was pleased with them. And the like is the practice of the Church of Rome, who in cases of transgression, through want of brotherly love, doe not appoint this Reconciliation, but Auricular confession, and Canonicall satisfaction, as matters well pleasing unto Almightie God: yea, such is the conceit of our common people, that if they be present at Divine Service, if they heare the Word preached, and receive the Sacraments at ordinarie times, then they have done God good service, and he will respect them, though in their civill conversation they bee at enmitie with their brethren, or live in such like sins. But we must learne, that God is served, not only in the duties of the first Table, but of the second also; and that God abhors the duties of pietie in such persons as make no conscience of the practice of love and mercie: Ier.7.9,10. Will you steale, murther, commit adulterie, &c. and yet come and stand before me in this house, wherein my name is called, and say, Wee are delivered though we have done all these abhominations? as if he should say, Never thinke it: and therefore if we desire true comfort in our serving of God, let us make conscience to joyne therewith the practice of mercie towards our brethren.

B

Thirdly, here also wee may learne, how to behave our selves before we come to the Lords Table: if we call to minde, even when we be in the Church, that we have any way offended our brother, wee must first goe and reconcile our selves unto him, and then come to the Lords Table: we must not abstaine upon the remembrance of our wrong doing, for so wee adde sinne unto sinne, refusing spirituall societie with God, because we will retaine enmitie towards our brother; but seeking speedily reconciliation, we must returne to receive the Lords Sacrament. Which flatly condemnes the common practice of many, who abstaine from the Lords Supper, because they will not seeke to bee reconciled to their brethren. This argues an heart full stuft with pride and malice, which prefers it owne lust before the will of God: for God commands that the Sunne gee not downe upon our wrath; and it is his ordinance we should receive the Sacrament to shew forth Christs death, when it is administred by the Church, against both which hee offendeth that abstaineth, because he is at variance with his brother: for Christ will not have the gift that is brought to be taken away, but there left a while, till reconciliation be made.

Fourthly, in this Rule of Reconciliation, we may see, there be degrees in the duties of Gods worship; all are not equall, but some more, and some lesse necessarie. The first and highest degree of holy worship, is prescribed in the first Commandement, as to love, feare and rejoyce in God above all, and to believe in him, and all his promises. The second degree of holy duties, is to love our neighbour as our selves, to seeke peace and reconciliation with them whom wee have wronged or offended. Thus much doth Christ here import, in preferring the practice hereof before the offering of sacrifice. The third degree consists, in the outward ceremoniall duties of Gods worship, commanded in the first Table: as the outward actions of Gods worship, and the outward solemnitie of the Sabbath: for these give place to the works of love and charitie commanded in the second Table, and therefore Christ saith, First bee reconciled, and then offer thy gift.

Now by this distinction of holy duties, wee have a good direction for our behaviour: that seeing the love of God and of our brethren, are the two highest degrees of good workes, therefore we are above all things to seeke after them, and to preferre the doing of them before the outward worship of God; for that we see commeth in the last place. But the practice of men is otherwise; generally they are more forward in outward ceremonies, than in the maine duties of the love of God, and of their brethren; like to the Pharises, [d] who passed over judgement and the feare of God, and were verie strict in tything mint and rue: but this is a preposterous course, and cleane contrarie to this precept of our Saviour Christ.

d Luk.11.42.

Thus much of this Rule in generall. Now I come to more particular observations out of the words: Leave thy gift at the Altar] Here Christ approveth of this worship of God among the Jewes by offering sacrifices; from whence it followeth, that sacrificing at the Altar, and by proportion other ceremoniall worship, was not abrogated either at Christs birth, or Baptisme, for here Christ alloweth of them; and therefore they ceased only at his death, when upon the crosse hee said, [e] It is finished, then [f] he put out the hand-writing of ordinances that was against us.

D

Thy gift; that is, thy sacrifice; whereof the Jewes had two kindes: Propitiatorie, and Gratulatorie, or of thanksgiving: and they are here called gifts, because in sacrificing the people gave some thing unto God: in which respect a sacrifice differeth from a Sacrament, wherein God gives something unto us. Now the sacrifices of the Law, wherein men gave something unto God, signified two things; first, that Christ should give himselfe unto his Father for our sinnes: secondly, that we should wholly give our selves unto God, both in soule and bodie, to serve him: and therefore God saith, Prov. 23. 26. My sonne, give mee thy heart: Rom.

6.13. Give your members as weapons of righteousnesse unto God, as they that are alive from dead works: Rom.12.1. I beseech you brethren, by the mercies of God, that you give up your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, and acceptable unto God: this we ought to doe in token of thankfulnesse for Gods endlesse mercies: and this we then doe, First, when we acknowledge our selves not to be our owne, but Gods in Christ: Secondly, when we consecrate and dedicate our selves to the service of God, that both in heart and life we may shew our selves thankfull for our creation, preservation, and Redemption especially. But lamentable is the case with men in this behalfe: in stead of giving themselves to God, men bequeath themselves to the Devill, and become his slaves and vassals; they make their hearts his dwelling place, by malicious, wicked, and lustfull thoughts; they consecrate the faculties of their soules, with all the parts of their bodies unto him in the practice of sinne: this ought not to be, seeing Christ gave himselfe for us, let us give our selves wholly unto him.

Examination of ourselves before we doe service to God.

And there remembrest; that is, dost call to minde, that thy brother hath ought against thee, &c. By this Christ teacheth us, that whensoever we come to doe any service unto God, wee ought first of all to enter into our owne hearts, and there to search and try our owne estate, in respect of offences given to God or man, whereof we have not repented, that so before we come to Gods solemne worship, we may be reconciled both to God, and to our brethren. The want of this, brings many a curse upon mens soules, even in the meanes wherein they thinke to receive Gods blessing: and therefore we must looke to the practice of this durie, that we doe it speedily, and from our hearts. This wee had need to looke unto in respect of God whom we daily offend: for if hee have ought against us, and yet wee stand out against him by impenitencie, who can save us from his wrath? Let us thinke on Elies speech, 1 Sam.2.25. If one man sinne against another, the Iudge shall judge it: but if a man sinne against the Lord, who will plead for him?

v. 25 Agree with thine Adversarie quickly, whiles thou art in the way with him, lest thine Adversarie deliver thee to the Iudge, & the Iudge deliver thee to the Serjeant, and thou be cast into prison.

26 Verily, I say unto thee, thou shalt not come out thence, till thou hast payed

the uttermost farthing.

Our Saviour still goeth on with his former Rule of concord and Reconciliation. Now because the meaning of the words are controversall, it shall not be amisse somewhat to discusse the divers expositions that are made hereof. The Papists say, that by Adversarie is meant God, commanding men in his Law; and by way, is meant the space of time in this life: by Iudge, they understand Christ: by Serjeant, Gods Angels: by prison, hell: and because in hell there be many places, therefore here by prison, they understand Purgatorie: and by the uttermost farthing, veniall sinnes: as if this were the meaning; Agree with God while thou art in this life betweene this and the day of Judgement, lest thou come before Christ, and he cause his Angels to cast thee into Purgatorie, and there thou remaine till thou have satisfied for thy least veniall sinnes. This exposition they stand upon the more, because hereupon they would build their doctrine of Purgatorie.

Bellarm. de purgat. lib.1. cap.4.

The confutation.

But this cannot bee the true meaning of this place, for the reasons following: First, these words depend upon the former, and are a continuance of the rule of Reconciliation between man and man, and not betweene God and man. Secondly, their exposition overthroweth the mediation and satisfaction of Christ for man to God: for if (as they say) man may and must satisfie for his veniall sins, even to the uttermost, then Christ did not make a perfect satisfaction for man to God: for if he did, why should man satisfie for himselfe? Thirdly, by this exposition they confound the Adversarie and the Judge (for the Father and the Sonne are one) which in the Text are made diverse and distinct. Fourthly, they make a Redemption and deliverie from hell, from which indeed there is no redemption. And lastly, in making a parable of this place, they set their Purgatorie on a sandy foundation: for from the words of a parable can no sound collection be made, but only from the maine scope thereof.

C

Others there bee, that understand these two verses of the partie offended: for (say they) Christ had shewed before the duty of the party offending, to seeke reconciliation: now therefore hee layeth downe the dutie of the partie offended and wronged, namely, that when the partie offending comes unto him, and desires reconciliation, he must agree and bee reconciled with him quickly. This exposition, howsoever it is plausible and fit in reason, yet it cannot well stand with the words of the Text, which threaten to the partie that agrees not with his adversarie bettimes, to bee carried before the Iudge, and cast into prison, there to lye till hee have payed the uttermost farthing: but there is no reason why the partie offended should thus be cast into prison, and therefore it cannot be understood of him.

Thirdly, others expound these words, to be a parable, borrowed from the Courts of the Jewes; and hard it is to say, whether they bee the words of a parable or not.

A

But to leave all these, A fourth Exposition, which I take most fit and proper to expresse the true meaning of the place, is this: The words containe no parable, but are literally and properly to be understood: for Christ had before exhorted the partie doing wrong, to seek to be reconciled with his brother, by acknowledging of his offence, and making recompence according to the injurie offered. But because men are obstinate and stiffe-necked, and will not yeeld and submit themselves to this dutie; therefore hee further urgeth the partie offending, to the speedy performance of this dutie; by the danger ensuing upon the neglect hereof; saying, Agree with thine adversarie, &c.] that is, use meanes to become friends with him, with whom thou art at variance, (for an adversarie doth not here signifie an open enemie, but any one, with whom we are at difference, who hath an action against us in any matter by reason of our injurie done unto him.) Quickly] that is, without delay, stand not upon thy supposed right, but rather yeeld from thine owne right, than over-long to deferre to be reconciled. Whiles thou art in the way] that is, (as wee may plainly see, Luk. 12. 58.) while thou art going with thine Adversarie to have the matter tried before the Magistrate. Lest thine Adversarie deliver thee to the Iudge] That is, lest thine adversarie having a good action against thee, doe convince and cast thee, before the Magistrate. And the Iudge deliver thee to the Serjeant, and thou be cast into prison.] That is, lest after thou art convinced of wrong doing, the Judge command the Serjeant to cast thee into prison. And because it might be thought a small thing, to be cast into prison, for that he might quickly come out againe, therefore our Saviour Christ addeth in the last place, Verily, thou shalt not come out, till thou hast payed the uttermost farthing: this farthing, was the least coyne used among the Jewes, called a quadrin, which containes two mites; as wee may see, [a] by the widdowes gift cast into the Treasurie; and it is the fourth part of a penny in English: so that this last phrase is proverbiall, as if he had said, Looke for no compounding or agreement with thine adversarie, when thou art once cast into prison, for he will shew thee no favour, but use thee as hardly as may be, remitting nothing; but causing thee to make full restitution and satisfaction, even to the uttermost farthing. And this I take to be the true and proper meaning of the words.

B

The speciall points to bee observed in the words are two; a Precept, and a Reason thereof: The Precept in these words, Agree with thine adversarie quickly, whiles thou art in the way with him: that is, use all good meanes to become friends with whomsoever thou hast any wayes offended, before the matter come to be tried before the Magistrate. The Reason is in the words following, drawen from the danger that will ensue deferring of agreement, lest thine Adversarie deliver thee to the Iudge, and the Iudge to the Serjeant, &c. The Precept is a rehearsall of the Rule of Reconciliation given in the former verse, touching agreement with those whom wee have offended: which point, Christ stands the more upon, because of the stubbornesse of mens hearts, that cannot abide to submit themselves, either in yeelding a little of their owne right, or making satisfaction for wrong done to others. Now this precept is further set out, by these two circumstances; First, of the time, it must be done quickly, and not deferred upon any pretence or shew of our owne right: Secondly, of the place, in the way, as we goe to the Court.

How to preserve peace.

In this Precept, our Saviour Christ gives unto us a notable Rule of equanimitie, for the maintenance of peace and love, with those with whom wee are to deale in the private affaires of our speciall callings: namely, to deale moderately, if the matter concerne our selves, without all rigour or extremitie; unlesse our place bee such, wherein our silence may impeach the glorie of God, or the good of his Church, Phil.4.5. Let your patient minde be known unto all men.

To the practice of this Rule, many duties are required: First, we must construe all mens sayings and doings in the best part; herein they failed, that base false witnesse against our Saviour Christ, by applying his speech to the [b] materiall Temple in Ierusalem, which he spake of the Temple of his body. This mistaking and misconstruing of mens sayings and doings, is the cause of much debate continually. Secondly, we must learne to beare with, and to winke at our brothers wants, Prov.9.11. It is the glorie of a man to passe by an offence: if the same only concerne us, and bee not derogatorie to Gods glorie; as if he be froward, hastie, angrie, reproachfull, and so forth; we must in Christian patience passe by the same, as though we tooke no notice of it, till by our reproofe we may doe him good. Thirdly, though direct injurie bee done unto us, yet if the same bee private, and doe not impeach the glorie of God, our life, or good name, wee must bee content to beare it: 1 Cor. 6. 7. Paul doth sharply rebuke the Corinthians, for going to law about trifles; Why rather (saith he) suffer you not wrong? why sustaine you not harmes? And this by Gods grace a man shall doe, if first, hee duly and equally consider his owne desarts, both of like injuries from men, and of eternall damnation from God himselfe, whom he continually offendeth. Secondly, if hee have an eye to the providence of God, in that thing wherein hee is wronged, which disposeth all things for the good of his children. Fourthly, for the maintenance of peace we must yeeld of our owne right: so did [c] Abraham unto Lot though hee were above him both in yeares and authoritie, bidding him christe where hee would dwell, whether on the right hand, or on the left: and our Saviour Christ, though he were free, being of the Kings stocke, yet for the [d] avoiding of offence, paid tribute for himselfe and Peter. And observing these things with good conscience, we shall by Gods grace maintaine Christian concord.

Secondly, Christ commanding speedy agreement, condemneth that wilfulnesse and stubbornesse of men, whereby, rather than they will submit themselves, and yeeld a little of their right, they will carrie everie trifling matter before the Magistrate. This is a common fault among us in these dayes of peace, for everie trifle is made a Law-matter, which ought not to be among Christians; it plainly argueth great want of love, and small regard of this Commandement of our Saviour Christ. I speak not this, to condemne the lawfull use of the Law, but to reprove the bad practice of carnall men, who make lawing the meanes of their private revenge, and sometime of flat injustice against their brethren, whom they doe not affect.

Men naturall craftie.

Thirdly, Christ here also noteth out the hardnesse and cruelnie of mens hearts, who will never let a man goe, if once they get him in the lurch: such cruell wretches are they that take the forfeitures of leases, bonds, and obligations: and such, for the most part, are our common usurers: but all these must know, that they are void of love and grace, whereby they should maintaine this concord, which Christ requires.

Heart-burning in suits unlawfull.

Fourthly, by this circumstance of time, [Agree quickly] Christ would teach us to keepe our hearts cleare from grudging and heart-burning, even then, when we have occasion of suit or controversie with others; for this rancor of heart will cause further debate and contention, like to an angrie humour in the veines, which sets the whole body in burning fits.

Reconciliation with God must be sought hasten.

Fiftly, if we must use speed in seeking agreement with men whom wee have offended, before we come to the triall of a mortall Judge; then much more must wee give all diligence to bee reconciled unto God, for our daily sinnes, whereby wee offend him; and that with all speed, even in this life, before wee come to his Tribunall seat: for how soever in the courts of men we may goe upon sureties, yet at the barre of Gods judgement, none can answer for us. If wee bee not before-hand reconciled to God in Christ, this undoubtedly will be the issue; we shall be cast into utter darknesse, and there remaine till we have fully satisfied the Justice of God, which will never bee. Let all estates and degrees thinke on this, and especially the younger sort, who deceive themselves by deferring repentance, when as indeed, they as well as others, are everie day going forward to the bar of Gods judgement.

Use speedily in well-doing.

Sixthly, as in seeking Reconciliation, so in doing everie good worke that concernes Gods glorie in the good of others, wee must use all convenient speed; [e] while we have time we must doe what good we can unto all, for death and the last judgement come suddenly: Say not to thy neighbour, saith [f] Salomon, goe, and come againe to morrow, if thou hast it now. And againe, Eccles. 9. 10. Whatsoever thy hand shall finde to doe, doe it with all thy power. This is Iobs defence, [g] that hee restrained not the poore of their desire, nor caused the widdowes eyes to faile: and his practice must bee our president, for the more good we doe, the more grace we have, and the liker we be to our [h] heavenly father.

[h] Matth. 5. 44, 45.

Thus much of the Precept: The Reason followeth, Least thine adversarie deliver thee to the Judge, &c. which is thus much in effect, If thou shew extremitie, thou shalt finde extremitie shewed unto thee againe, even by the Magistrate. They that deale stiffely and rigorously, shall bee rewarded in their kinde: God in his just judgement will have men measured unto, as they measure unto others, Matth. 7. 2, 6. Mark. 4. 24.

Here then wee are taught to deale in equitie and moderation with all men, in the private affaires of our callings, even as we would have them to deale with us; and then God will cause others to deale well with us: but if we deale ill with others, God will reward us in the same kind. This point all Usurers, Ingrossers, Tradesmen, &c. should well observe, who thinke they may doe with their owne, what they will; but we must know, we are but Stewards, and our account will be exact.

Magistrates approved.

Secondly, here wee see Christ alloweth of the Magistrate, and his Judgement seat: 2. Of his proceeding against the guiltie, in delivering him to the Officer: 3. Of the office of the Serjeant: 4. Of casting guiltie persons into prison: 5. Of suing at the Law, when right cannot be gotten by any other lawfull meanes; but Law must not be the first course we take in seeking our right, wee must rather suffer some wrong, and seeke to end the matter by friends: and if Law, as Physitians use poysons, when gentle physicke will not serve the turne, then in case of extremitie they doe minister stronger physicke; yea, sometime poyson it selfe: so when we cannot otherwise procure our peace and right, then we may lawfully take the benefit of the Law.

V. 27 Yee have heard that it hath beene said of old time, Thou shalt not commit adulterie.

Here our Saviour Christ goeth about to restore the seventh Commandement, touching Adulterie, to his true sense and meaning, and so to his proper and right use, by purging it from the false and erroneous interpretation of the Jewes: for which end, he first layes downe the false interpretation of the Scribes and Pharisies, verse 27. and then adjoyneth the true sense thereof, verse 28. especially; yet so, as he continueth the same in the verses following.

For the first; before the interpretation of the Jewes Teachers, hee prefixeth this Preface; Yee have heard that it hath beene said of old time; or, of the ancient Teachers: the meaning and use whereof, wee have before shewed, verse 21. Then after follow the words of the seventh Commandement, Thou shalt not commit adulterie; which are the proper words of the Holy Ghost: yet here must not they bee taken in that sense which the Scribes and Pharises gave unto them: for the better conceiving whereof, this one thing especially must be opened; namely, what is Adulterie here forbidden. Adulterie properly, is the breach of wedlocke by such parties, some one whereof, at the least, is either married, or espoused: I call it the breach of wedlocke, to note the propertie of this sinne, which is not in any other sinne, unlesse it be of this kinde, though the sinne be far more grievous. Idolatrie is a more heinous sin than Adulterie, being a breach both of the first and second Commandement of the first Table; and yet it comes short of Adulterie, in this qualitie of breaking wedlocke: for wedlocke may bee kept of those which are Idolaters. Secondly, I say, betweene any parties, if one bee married; meaning the husband as well as the wife, to confute the opinion of some Jewes, and by some lawes also maintained, that the man hath a privilege above the woman, so as he breaketh not wedlocke, when hee goeth in to another woman, besides his wife; which is false: for though he have a prerogative over his wife, in being her head, yet he hath no privilege to free him from matrimoniall fidelitie, but is as much bound to keepe himselfe unto his wife, as she is to keepe her selfe to him. The preheminence of superioritie cannot free the husband from the bond of marriage, the husband is bound to the wife, as much as the wife is to the husband, and she hath power over his body, as much as he hath over hers, 1 Cor. 7. 4. Thirdly, I say, or espoused, because adulterie is not only committed by such parties, whereof one or both bee fully married; but also by them, whereof one is single, and the other contracted only; and therefore is the same [a] punishment allotted to both; for contract in right is marriage. Thus we see the sinne here directly forbidden, according to the letter of the Law. Now, though the Lord under this one includes all the sinnes of the same kinde, as wee shall anon perceive; yet the Pharises tooke this literall signification for the whole meaning, and taught that the sinne here forbidden, was bodily adulterie only; and so made the adulterie of the heart to be no adulterie; which exposition Christ here confutes.

The Vse. Fraud in expounding Scripture.

First, here observe the fraud and cunning of these Pharises; they would seeme faithfull Interpreters of the Law, in that they keepe themselves so close to the words, that they will not passe one jot beyond the literall sense: but yet in the meane time they omit the full meaning and true use of the Law. The like hath been the practice of hereticks in all ages; as the Arrians who denied that Christ was God, stucke fast to these words of Scripture, the Father is greater than I, and to such like. And the Papists to uphold their breaden-God, by transubstantiation, will needs keepe the literall sense of these words of Christ, This is my body, whereby they overturne the nature of that Sacrament. And the like might be shewed by sundrie examples in all ages; whereby wee are taught, not to stand upon the proprietie of the words of Scripture only, but to labour to have the true spirituall sense joyned with them.

Rhem. Mat. 26. fol. 8. 9.

Secondly, here observe how grievous a sinne Adulterie is, in that Christ by name doth expresly forbid it, among all the sinnes of this kinde; yea, the verie Pharises doe everie where condemne it: for though they would easily dispense with [c] disobedience to Parents; yet the woman taken in adulterie must be put to death, Joh. 8. 4. 5. The greatnesse of this sin might be shewed by many arguments; for if he be [d] worse than an Infidell, that careth not for his family, then farre worse is the Adulterer, for hee destroyeth his family. Salomon [e] (we know) maketh Adulterie worse than theft, and yet theft is a notorious sinne, greatly hated, and severely punished of all nations. Againe, Adulterie destroyeth the Seminarie of the Adulterie destroyeth the Seminarie of the Church, which is [f] a godly seed in the family, and it breaketh the covenant betweene the parties and God, it robs another of the precious ornament of chastitie, which is a gift of the Holy Ghost, it dishonoureth their bodies, and maketh them the temples of the Devill, and the Adulterer maketh his family a Stewes: for as David dealt with Vrias, so his owne sonne Absalon dealt with him: and lastly, it bringeth Gods vengeance upon the posteritie: and therefore Iob calleth it [g] a fire which shall devoure unto destruction: yea, the greatnesse of Gods punishment upon adulterers, partly in this life, and principally after death, may plainly shew the greatnesse of this sinne: for this and other sinnes, God overthrew [h] Admah and Zeboim, Sodome and Gomorrah, with fire and brimstone from heaven: and the place where they stood, is made a poole of poisoning water unto this day. And although the Lord doe not shew such extraordinarie revenge against sinne, yet his wrath is a consuming fire against whole families, townes, and kingdomes for this sinne: though David repented of his Adulterie, yet for that verie sinne, the sword [i] must not depart from his house for ever. And for the life to come, [k] Adulterers, and whoremongers God will judge. Againe, [l] Neither fornicators, nor adulterers, &c. shall inherit the kingdome of God: they may repent, and so bee saved, but then they cease to be Adulterers.

Now if Adulterie bee so grievous a sinne, worser wonder than theft, &c. then wee must wish that in all places, it were as severely punished as theft is; so would families be reformed, and become good Seminaries, both for Church and Common-wealth. Secondly, the grievousnesse of Gods wrath against this sinne, must admonish every one to beware thereof, for it brings the besome of destruction to sweepe all away, both in Church and Common-wealth.

v. 28 But I say unto you, that whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adulterie with her already in his heart.

Here our Saviour Christ layes downe the true sense of this Commandement, and as wee see, he speaketh as the Law-giver and Prophet of his Church, who hath absolute power to give lawes, and expound the same. But I say unto you: The Pharises said there was no adulterie, but that which was outward and bodily; but Christ plainly confuteth that, and saith, he that looketh on a woman to lust after her: that is, either in looking on her, lusteth, or by looking, lusteth after her; that is, desireth to increase his lust: hee hath committed adulterie with her already in his heart. Here then our Saviour Christ setteth downe two things touching the interpretation of this Law: First, the occasion of adulterie, which is looking to lust. Secondly, that the lust of the heart, that is, the motion and inward inclination of the heart unto this sinne, is adulterie before God, though it never come into action.

For the occasion: To looke upon a woman, is not sinne, but may bee done lawfully; yea, thereby a man or woman may glorifie God, as the Queene of Sheba, by beholding [a] Salomons person, and hearing his wisdome, did take occasion to glorifie God: but here is meant the abuse of the sight; that is the idle looking, or curious looking of men upon women, or women upon men. Now idle looking is when one looketh without just cause; as when a man looketh with intent to lust: Thus did the sonnes of God behold the daughters of men, Genes. 6. 2. by whose looking came lust, and for lust came the floud: so Potiphers wife [b] first, lift up her eyes upon Joseph, and then lusted after him: and Dina [c] Iacobs daughter, went out to see the daughters of the country, and to bee seene againe, and so when Sheechem saw her, he lusted after her, and ravished her: so the Prophet David [d] living in peace and security, cast his eye idly and curiously upon Bathsheba, as she was washing her selfe, whereupon he lusted after her and so committed both adulterie and murther. This idle and curious looking, Saint Peter calleth [e] an adulterous eye, both because it is the beginner of lust, and the increaser thereof. But this sinne is little regarded, and made a small matter with many, who can bee content to come with Christian eares into the assemblies, and yet will bring with them idle and curious, yea adulterous eyes: but such persons which so abuse their sight, to the dishonour of God, must know that they are adulterers before God: and howsoever they may perswade themselves, that grace enters into their hearts by hearing, yet undoubtedly by their idle curious eyes, Satan enters into their soule, and keepes out Gods Word, whereby the soule should bee renued. Wee therefore must here be admonished, to take heed how we use the sight of our eyes, especially when wee are in the assemblies of the Saints, and holy exercises: and to prevent this evill, it were to bee wished, that men and women would sort themselves, and not be mingled in the congregation, unlesse it were the husband with his owne wife. Againe, if the idle and curious eye be the beginning of adulterie, then wee must learne, with care to governe our eyes, as the servants of God have done. David prayed the Lord to [f] keepe his eyes from regarding vanity. And Iob, because hee would avoid unchaste thoughts, [g] made a covenant with his eyes, not to looke on a maid.

Now as looking to lust is here forbidden; so by proportion are all other like occasions unto adulterie: as first, reading of unchaste and wanton bookes of love matters, using light and wanton talke. Many are given to these kinds of delights, but they must know, that therein they sinne grievously, for they have not onely a wanton eye, but a lascivious tongue also. Secondly, the acting of all such Plaies and Comedies, the matter whereof, is the representation of the light behaviour of men and women; for therein are idle and curious lookes set forth to the eye, which ought not to bee, being here condemned. Thirdly, the wearing of vaine and light attire, whereby others are provoked to cast their eyes upon them unto lust; for if the light and wanton eye bee condemned, then that which causeth it, is much more condemned. This ought to be regarded; for light and forren attire is a secret profession of an unchaste heart. Fourthly, mixt dancing of men and women in time and measure: for therein is more occasion and provocation unto lust, than by the bare beholding of each other with the eye. Fifthly, evill company: so are the words of the Apostle Paul out of an Heathen Poet, [h] Evill conversings, corrupt good manners: which may well include that unseemely conversing of men with women, not warranted either by the generall or particular calling. Sixthly, the pampering of the bodie with dainty meats, or strong drinkes; that was the sinne [i] of Sodome: and it is much more an occasion of lust, than the bare sight of the eye. Seventhly, Idlenesse and lazines, in not imploying the body in some honest calling, for thereby also is lust incited. And

And thus much of the meaning of this commandement, forbidding all occasions to adulterie under a lustfull eye.

Now considering that a man is guilty of adulterie, that useth occasions thereof; hereby wee may see that wee cannot excuse our selves from the breach of this Law: for though we be cleane from the bodily outward fact, yet who can say, My heart is cleane? who is free from the occasions thereof? as from a wanton eye, vaine apparell, wanton speech, intemperance, and the rest: all which makes us culpable of this sinne: and therefore we must lay our hands upon our mouthes, and condemne our selves of guilt before God: wee must humble our selves, acknowledging our sinnes, and breaches of this commandement: and lastly, wee must take heed of all occasions, that may move or incite us unto lust or wantonnesse.

The second point which our Saviour Christ propoundeth, in the interpretation of this law, is this; that the lust of the heart, though it never come into act, is Adulterie: now that wee may know what our Saviour Christ meaneth by lust, sundry points are to be handled: first, how lust can be a sinne, considering it is onely a hidden desire of the heart: secondly, how lust can be a sinne of the seventh Commandement, seeing it is forbidden in the tenth: and thirdly, how great a sinne lust is.

For the first, that lust is a sinne, is thus proved: Gods Law requireth obedience of the whole man, both in soule and body, and in everie part, facultie, and power thereof: Thou [k] shalt love the Lord thy God, with all thy heart, with all thy soule, and with all thy strength: and that obedience which commeth not from the whole man is sinfull. Now when a man conceiveth unchaste thoughts in his heart, then his soule and minde, & his affections, have not done their duty unto God, and so he sinneth in lusting.

k Matth. 22. 37.

Yet this doctrine was never received of all, but some have still excepted against it, and their principall reasons are two: 1. They say, lust is a naturall inclination, desire, and appetite, which was in Adam before his fall, and so cannot be a sin. Ans. Lust or appetite in the heart, is not simply a sinne: for so it is a naturall desire, which was in our first parents in their integritie: but to lust after that which God forbiddeth, that is the sinne; as for a man to lust after a woman, or a woman after a man, not being man and wife, which wee see here Christ condemneth. 2. They say, God blesseth adulterers and fornicatours in their lust, with the issue of seed in child-bearing, as well as man and wife in lawfull marriage: and therefore it cannot be a sinne. Ans. In adultery two things may bee considered: the unlawfull lust of the heart, and the act of generation: now when God gives issue to adulterers and fornicators, it is no approbation of their sinfull lust, but onely a common blessing of naturall generation, which is his owne ordinance by creation: for howsoever God approves not of our sinne, yet hee preserves nature in sinfull works. And thus we see that lust is sinne.

Pelagians.

II. Point. How can lust be a sinne of the seventh Commandement, seeing it is directly forbidden in the tenth: for in this briefe decalogue there is no needlesse repetition of any thing? Ans. Lust is twofold, either without consent of will; as when unchaste desires come into the minde and heart, and are not entertained of the will, but be speedily checked so soone as they arise; and such lust is forbidden in the tenth commandement: or with consent of will, when a man is willing to entertaine and cherish the unchaste thoughts that come into his minde, though hee never put them into practice: and these are forbidden in the seventh commandement.

D

III. Point. The greatnesse of this sinne of lust: This is here expressed by Christ, calling it Adultery before God; as if he should say, Look how great a sinne bodily adulterie is before men, who punish the same with death; even so great and heinous a sinne before God, is the inward unchaste lusting of the heart, whereto a man gives consent of will, though hee never bring it into action; for this hee stands culpable of adultery before God, and shall therefore be condemned, unlesse he repent.

Lust of the heart a grievous sinne.

The use of this Third point is manifold: First, hereby wee may learne how to examine our selves by this seventh commandement: for our Saviour Christ here teacheth us, that they which willingly retaine unchaste desires with delight, though they never give their bodies to the outward act, are Adulterers before God: and therefore when wee would examine our selves by this commandement, wee must search our hearts, whether we have willingly retained therein any lustfull thoughts: and if we have, wee must know that wee are guilty of Adulterie before God. And because none of us are free from this sinne, it must humble and cast us downe before God as breakers of this Commandement.

How to examine our hearts by the seventh commandement.

Secondly, if the lust of the heart be Adulterie before God, then we must with care and diligence learne the Apostle Pauls lesson, 2 Cor. 7. 1. To purge our selves from all uncleanesse both of flesh and spirit: that is, wee must labour to keep our hearts and minds pure and chaste, as well as our bodies. And to induce us hereunto, consider the reasons following: First, wee all desire to see God, and to know his love in Christ, for our comfort in this life, and salvation for ever: but without holinesse and [l] purity of heart, we can never see God, nor know the comfort of his love: for when a man desiles his minde with unchaste thoughts, hee deprives himself of the taste of Gods favour, and of the experience of his love. Secondly, consider the state and condition of mans heart, by effectuall calling; it is the dwelling place and Temple of the holy Ghost, (for when a man is in Christ, he liveth in Christ by faith, and Christ in him by his Spirit:) now then looke as men uſe to trimme up their dwelling houſes, for the receiving of ſome noble gueſt, ſo ought we to keepe our hearts pure and cleane from unchaſte luſts, that they may be fit habitations for the bleſſed Spirit of God; but by unchaſte luſts, we make the heart a ſtable for the devill, and a cage of all uncleane ſpirits. Thirdly, if we ſuffer our hearts now to burne with fleſhly luſt, we make an entrance in them for the burning of hell fire for ever: for theſe two alwaies goe together, burning luſt and hell fire, (unleſſe repentance come betweene.) And therefore if we would eſcape hell fire, wee muſt quench the fire of luſt, and cleanſe our hearts from this uncleannes. Fourthly, by profeſſion we ſeeme to bee the members of Chriſt; and if we would be ſo indeed, then we muſt take heed of unchaſte luſts, for thereby we pull our hearts from Chriſt, and knit them to an harlot. Theſe and ſuch like reaſons muſt move us to avoid all unchaſte deſires: and for the preſervation of chaſtity in our hearts, theſe Rules muſt be obſerved.

First, the minde muſt bee filled with godly meditations, and the Word of God muſt dwell in our hearts plenteouſly: for unchaſte luſts do therefore ariſe in our hearts, becauſe we are idle minded, and empty of Gods Word: if that were truly ingrafted in us, theſe wicked deſires could not enter, or at leaſt take no place in us. Secondly, wee muſt often give our ſelves to the ſpirituall exerciſes of faith, repentance, and new obedience; as to the uſuall hearing, reading, and meditating in Gods Word, to the often receiving of the Lords Supper, and to continuall prayers, not only publickely, but privately eſpecially: for theſe confirme Gods graces in the heart, and doe even nip in the head all ungodly motions whatſoever. Thirdly, we muſt uſe ſobriety in meat, drinke, and appatell: for ungodly luſts are kindled, fed, and nouriſhed with too much pampering of the body: Sodom and Gomorrah, Admah and Zeboim ſinned moſt grievouſly in this kind through fulneſſe of bread: and therefore wee muſt uſe moderation in theſe things, that grace may bee ſtrengthened, and all evill luſts weakned in us. Fourthly, we muſt alwaies be doing ſome good thing, either in our generall calling of a Chriſtian, or in our particular calling: yea, in our lawfull recreation wee muſt intend and practiſe good: for when men are idle, Satan fills their hearts with evill thoughts, and ſo defiles the ſame. Fifthly, men and women muſt not privatly converſe together, without warrant ſo to doe, either from their generall, or particular calling, ſo as with good conſcience they can ſay, the Lord doth call them ſo to converſe: for the mutuall converſing of men and women, is the cauſe of many noyſome luſts: and therefore neither men nor women without good warrant, ſhould thruſt themſelves into ſuch occaſion of temptations. Remember what the Apoſtle ſaith, [a] Evill converſings corrupt good manners. The Apoſtle Peter felt the ſmart of this boldnes, though in another caſe: for comming to warme himſelfe in Caiphas hall, without good warrant ſo to doe, when a lilly maid demanded of him, Whether he was not one of Chriſts company, he denied him flatly, and that with curſing: and ſo many men and women converſing without warrant where they ſhould not, doe fall into many noyſome ſinnes; and when they thinke themſelves moſt ſtrong, then with Peter have they greateſt falls.

Scope.

In theſe two verſes, our Saviour Chriſt laieth downe a moſt heavenly inſtruction, for the avoiding of offences: propounding it by way of anſwer to a ſecret objection, which might be framed, by occaſion of his former expoſition of this ſeventh Commandement: for having condemned the Adulterie of the heart, declared by the eye, ſome man might ſay, What ſhall we do with our eyes, if an unchaſte looke be ſo dangerous? Our Saviour Chriſt anſwers, If thy right eye cauſe thee to offend, plucke it out: Which words muſt not be taken literally, in their proper ſenſe: for this is a Rule in the expounding of Scripture, That when the literall ſenſe is againſt any Commandement of the Law, then the words muſt not be taken properly. Now theſe words in their proper ſenſe, do command a breach of the ſixth Commandement, which bindeth every man to preſerve his owne, and his neighbours life; and ſo no man can without ſinne pul out his eye, or cut off his hand.

Expoſition.

By eye then, we are to underſtand: Firſt, the eye of the bodie: yet not that onely, but any other thing that is deare and precious unto us; as our eye, even our right eye is. If it cauſe thee to offend, that is, cauſe thee to ſinne, and to faile in the way of obedience unto Gods Commandements. Plucke it out, and caſt it from thee: Theſe words words are a lofty kind of ſpeech, called Hyperbole, whereby thus much is ſignified: Refraine and governe it moſt carefully; though it bee to ſome owne great paine, loſſe, and hinderance; For better it is for thee, that one of thy members periſh, than that thy whole body ſhould bee caſt into hell: These words containe a Reaſon of the former exhortation, to this effect; It is better for thee, to want the benefit and uſe of things moſt precious and deare unto thee in this life, and ſo to be ſaved; than by having and uſing them, to periſh for ever: So that the true meaning of this place, is this; as if our Saviour Chriſt had ſaid, Goe thorow the whole courſe of thy life, and take a view of all thy wayes, and therein ſee what thing is an occaſion of ſinne unto thee; that take heed of, and avoid, though the uſe ther of be moſt deare unto thee: for it is better that thou ſhouldeſt want the uſe thereof, and ſo be ſaved, than by it to periſh eternally in hell.

Alſo if thy right hand make thee to offend, cut it off: for it is better for thee, &c. Here the ſame exhortation and reaſon is againe repeated, which wee muſt not thinke to be a thing needleſſe & frivolous: for ſuch Repetitions in Scripture have ſpeciall uſe, to ſignifie that the things ſo delivered, be of ſpeciall importance worthy all carefull obſervation and obedience. Now by right hand, here is meant, any thing that is moſt profitable unto us, what ever it be, if it cauſe us to ſinne againſt God, it muſt bee avoided, and left off moſt carefully.

Vſe. Guard the ſenſes.

By this Exhortation of our Saviour Chriſt, wee are taught to carry a ſtrict watch over all our ſelves, and over all the parts of our bodies, eſpecially the eye and hands, that they become not unto us occaſions of ſinning againſt God: and for the government of the eyes, there bee two ſpeciall Rules: Firſt, wee muſt uſe our ſight, that is, open and ſhut our eyes, in obedience unto God. Salomon giving Rules for the well ordering of the tongue, ſight, and foot, ſaith thus of the eye, [a] Let thine eie behold the right, & thy eye-lids direct the way before thee: which words ſeeme to carry this ſenſe, That wee ſhould order our ſight according to the ſtraight Rule of Gods word, for that is the way wherein wee ought to walke. Now the neceſſity of obſerving this Rule, may appeare by ſundry examples: Eves [b] looking upon the forbidden fruit, with deſire to eat thereof, againſt Gods Commandement, was the doore and entrance of that ſinne into her heart: was not [c] Cham accurſed for looking upon his Fathers nakednes? was not Lots wife turned into a pillar of ſalt for [d] looking backe towards Sodome? Fifty thouſand threeſcore and ten men of Bethſhemeſh were ſtaine [e] for looking into the Arke of the Lord, againſt his revealed will: by all which it is plaine that wee ought to uſe our ſight in obedience to God: for which end, it will be good before we looke on any thing, to conſider whether the ſame will be for Gods glory, the good of our ſelves, and of our brethren: if it be we may uſe our ſight; if not, we may not uſe it.

Vſe. Leade to Gods glory.

Secondly, We muſt make our eyes not the weapons of any ſinne, but the inſtruments of God, worſhip and ſervice. This we ſhall doe, if we imploy them thus: 1. In beholding Gods creatures in heaven and earth, that in them we may ſee Gods glory, wiſdome, mercy, power, and providence, and thereby take occaſion to magnifie the Name of God. 2. In beholding Gods judgements very wiſhly and narrowly, that therin we may ſee his juſtice and wrath againſt ſinne, and ſo bee humbled in our ſelves, and tertified from ſinne. 3. In beholding of the Elements of Gods Sacraments, eſpecially the bread and wine in the Lords Supper, which be viſible words, wherein we may ſee our Saviour Christ, as it were crucified before our eyes. 4. In uſing them as inſtruments of Invocation, by lifting them up to [f] heaven, to teſtifie the lifting up of our hearts unto God. This uſe of the eyes nature teacheth us; for whereas other creatures have but foure muſcles in their eyes, whereby their eyes are turned round about, man onely above them all hath a fifth muſcle, whereby his eye is turned upward towards heaven. And this which is ſaid for the well ordering of our eyes, muſt bee obſerved in the reſt of the ſenſes, and in all other parts of the body; they muſt all be imployed and ſet a work in obedience to God: and continually obſerved, that they become not the weapons of ſinne, but the inſtruments of his glory.

Columb. l. 5. cap. 9.

Secondly, this Exhortation of Chriſt, muſt teach us to avoid all the occaſions of every ſinne, though it bee with great loſſe unto our ſelves, in the things of this life. This is the chiefe point that our Saviour Chriſt aymeth at in this place, and therfore it ought with ſpecial regard to be learned, and remembred. Mans nature is like to dry wood, or rowe, which will burne ſo ſoone as fire is put unto it, give a man the leaſt occaſion of any ſin, and he is as ready to commit it, as drie wood is to burne, though thereby he doe as much as in him lyeth, to caſt away his owne ſoule for ever. Looke therefore as Mariners on the Seas, have conſtant and continuall care to avoid both rockes and ſands, whereby they may ſuffer ſhipwracke; ſo muſt wee muſt warily avoid the occaſions of every ſinne. Almoſt worthy example hereof we have in Moſes, who was brought up in Pharaohs Court, till he was fourty yeares old, where he enjoyed all earthly pleaſures and honours that his heart could wiſh; and ſo might have continued if he would, for hee was the adopted Son of Pharaohs daughter, but yet Moſes [g] left them all, and [h] choſe rather to ſuffer affliction with the people of God in Goſhen, than to enjoy all the pleaſures of Egypt. And this he did, becauſe they were but the pleaſures of ſinne, which he could not enjoy, unleſſe hee would forſake the true feare and worſhip of God, and all good conſcience: and his example we ought to follow.

Avoid all occaſions of ſinne.

Now that wee may avoid all the occaſions of sinne, and so put in practice this wholesome precept of our Saviour Christ, I will here intreat of the occasions of sinne, and shew withall, how they may be avoided.

By occasion of sin, I meane any thing that either of it selfe, or by mans abuse, becomes offensive, and provoketh unto sin. In this large acceptance, an occasion of sinne extendeth it selfe, not onely to such things as are evill, but even to things good and commendable in themselves, which by mans abuse, cause transgression against God. Occasions of sinne are two-fold: either given, or taken. An occasion given is that thing, either word or action, that is evill in it selfe, the speaking or doing whereof, stirres a man effectually to sinne. Occasions given are two fold: either of one man unto another, or of man unto himselfe. The occasions whereby one man may provoke another to sinne, are many: I will reduce them unto six heads. The first, is bad counsell, whereby one man perswadeth another unto sin. This is a great cause of much evill in the world: thus came the fall of our first parents: for [h] Satan perswaded Eve, and Eve her husband: thus came the crucifying of the Lord of life, for the high Priests and Rulers perswaded the people to aske Barrabas, and to destroy Iesus. Hence commeth seeking to wizards: one friend perswades another, for their outward good, as they thinke: yea, from this bad counsell comes the common neglect of all good duties in Gods worship.

The second is, consent or approbation of sinne; and it is two-fold, secret, or open. Secret approbation and consent is, when men see sinne committed, and are not grieved thereat: for this cause the Apostle Paul checketh the [k] Corinthians, that they were not sorrowfull, but rather puffed up at the fact of the incestuous man: whereby they did in some sort hearten him in his sinnes: this is a great occasion of sinne in our dayes. The Prophet David was of another minde, Huh! eyes gushed out rivers of teares, because men brake Gods Lawes. Open approbation of sinne is, when men doe openly countenance sinners, and lewd persons, which make profession of bad practices: this is a great occasion of horrible impieties: hereby the hands of the wicked are strengthened in their wickednesse, as [m] the Lord complaineth: and this is the sinne of this age: for who is so bad, that hath not some patron of his evill, and some backe friend to sooth him in his sinne, which makes sinne shamelesse, and sinners impudent? But all Gods children must follow Elisha, who in great fervency of spirit told Iehoram to his face though he were a King, that [n] If it had not beene for the presence of good King Iehoshaphat, he would not have looked towards him, nor scene him: the Lord himselfe will not [o] take the wicked by the hand, neither can hee indure that his children should [p] helpe the wicked, or love them that hate the Lord.

The third occasion given is, provocation unto sinne, when either by word or deed, men excite or draw on others to some evill; as unto anger, revenge, hatred, to drunkennesse, or such like; and this is a common fault of those that delight in drunken fellowship.

The fourth occasion is, neglect of good duties unto our brethren; as of exhortation, admonition, instruction, or rebuke: Iosh. 7. Achan stole the execrable thing for himselfe alone, and yet all the people are charged with that fault, and punished for it: the cause was, their neglect to keepe one another from that sinne, according as God commanded them, chap. 6. 18. This is a great occasion of impiety among us; if neighbour would admonish neighbour, and one brother another, sinne would not be so rife as it is. But this duty is not onely neglected of private men one to another, but of publike persons, who are more bound unto it. The Magistrate is negligent in punishing, and the Minister in reproving sinne: and the master of the family careleese in reforming those that are under him, which causeth sinne to abound.

The fifth occasion given, is evill example in the practice of any sinne whatsoever, which may bee knowne: this is most dangerous, like unto wild fire, that inflameth all places whereon it lighteth. The truth hereof appeares among us: for let any one man or woman take up a new fashion in attire, and presently the same is generally received: let a man invent or sing a lewd song, and presently it is learned of all, even of little children that can scarce speake: whence also comes it, that crawling infants should sweare roundly, and frame themselves to all impietie, when they cannot speake readily, but from the bad example of their Elders, with whom they are brought up? Now among all men, their bad example is most dangerous, who make the greater profession of Religion. They are like false lights upon the shore, which lead the shippes upon the sands. And therefore such as shew any care or frowardnesse in holy practices of religion, must have speciall watch over all their wayes, that (if it be possible) they may bee blamelesse both in word and deed: for all men have an eye at them, and the wicked would gladly spie holes in their coat.

The last occasion given is, the private slandering of Gods Ministers, & the disgracing of their Ministery: this is an offence as generall as the rest, and it causeth many to contemne the means of their salvation. When men meet together, their common talke is of the Ministers, and of their doctrine, not to be edified by mutuall conference, but onely to disgrace their persons, and to make their ministery contemptible; but they little know what great mischiefe this causeth, and therefore it ought to be avoided.

These are occasions of sinning given by one man to another: for the avoiding whereof, which is the plucking out of the eie, & cutting off the hand here commanded, this Rule must bee observed; We must hate and eschew the occasion of of sin as deadly poison: and esteeme those persons that give them unto us, in that regard, as ill as the devill. Thus Christ dealt with Peter his owne Disciple, when hee went about to hinder him from doing his Fathers will in suffering for our sins; saying, [q] Come behind me Satan; considering him in that action, as if he had bin the devill himselfe: for we must know, that the devill comes not openly unto men, but cunningly conveyes himselfe in these occasions of sinne given by others, that thereby he may enter into them for the destruction of their soules: we therefore must endevour as Paul did, [r] To keepe a good conscience in all things: that is, to keepe our selves pure and uncorrupt from all the occasions of sinne in the world: with a watchfull eye against offences must we walke on, in that way that leadeth unto life, eschewing these stumbling blocks which the Devill casts in our way by other men: and so shall wee obey this good counsell of our Saviour Christ.

The second kinde of occasions of sinne given, are those which a man gives unto himselfe: and they arise either from his affections, or from his imaginations: from mans affections arise so many occasions of sin, as there be corrupt affections in him; as from corrupt desire ariseth covetousnesse, which is so great an occasion of sinne, that the Apostle calls it [t] The root of all evill. This drawes mans heart so much to the world, that he can spare no time for the meanes of his salvation; herewith he is so choaked, that hee never thinketh of repentance, till the last gaspe. Such another occasion of sinne, is pride of heart, whereby many give themselves so much to the garnishing of their bodies, that they neglect their soules altogether. The like is selfe-love, whereby men overweening their gifts, thinke not themselves honoured according to their desert, and so through discontent give themselves to plot and practise much mischiefe, for the advancing of their estate. Of this sort are the Romish Priests and Jesuits, as their manifold dangerous attempts against our Church and State doe evidently declare. And thus wee might runne thorow all the affections of mans heart, shewing that the corrupt motions thereof are the cause of much sinne unto him, and a most dangerous meanes for the ruine of his soule.

In regard whereof here also we must shew, how this eye may be plucked out, and this hand cut off: that is, by what meanes may we reforme our hearts, and stay the rage of our affections, that they cause us not to sin. The way is this, We must mortifie and crucifie our unruly affections and corrupt desires. And for this end wee must put in practice three duties: First, we must believe that we are crucified with Christ; that is, as we conceive our selves to bee in Christ by faith, whereby we have communion with him; so we must conceive that this communion with Christ is in his death and buriall, so as our sinfull nature, with all our corrupt affections, were nayled to his crosse and buried in his grave, as the Apostle shewes at large, Rom. 6. 3, 4, &c. Now when this perswasion shall take place in our hearts, it will by Gods grace keepe us from yeelding to corrupt motions and desires, and move us to labour to subdue them daily: for herein stands our assurance that wee have fellowship with Christ, when we have fellowship in his death. And therefore as we see malefactours to cease from stealth and robberie, when they are once hanged; so wee being crucified with Christ in respect of the old man, must not suffer the same to rule in our affections, or to have force in our members: knowing (as the Apostle saith) that our old man is crucified with Christ, that the body of sinne might be destroied, that henceforth we should not serve sinne: and, [b] they that are Christs have crucified the flesh, with the affections and lusts thereof: wherupon he bids us, [c] thinke that we are dead to sinne, meaning with Christ, and so cannot live therein: Saint John saith, [d] Hee that is borne of God, sinneth not, because the seed remaineth in him: that is, true faith assuring the heart that all the benefits of Christs death and passion belong unto him; whereof this is one, that in our nature hee suffered death upon the crosse, that wee by the power of his sufferings might have sinne crucified in us, so as it should not reigne in us, to bring forth fruits unto death. Secondly, we must remember Gods commandement forbidding every sinne, and every wicked lust and affection; and withall we must apply the threatning of his wrath against the same, that thereby our flesh may bee subdued. Thirdly, we must strive against our corrupt motions and affections, not giving them liberty to beare sway in us, but ruling them by meditating in the Word of God, and by prayer for strength of grace to overcome them all; dealing with them, as Parents doe with knives, turning the edges of them before they leave them in the hands of their children, lest they be hurt therewith: as if our love bee set upon the world, we must labour to set it upon Christ and his righteousnesse; and if our hatred be against our brethren, we must labour to set it upon sinne, and so for every affection, as joy, feare, &c. wee must so keepe them to their right objects, that they may rather further us in well doing, than become in us the occasions of any sinne against God.

The second kind of occasions of sinne which a man giveth to himselfe, arise from his minde and imagination: And they are many, I will onely note three: The first is an inward conceit of perfect knowledge, touching mans duty to God, and the way of his salvation: that this is a common conceit in the hearts of the ignorant especially, may appeare by this common speech of theirs; that they know as much as any Preacher can teach them: for the summe of all (say they) is, to love God above all, and my neighbour as my selfe, and to beleeve to be saved &c.

by Christ: now this they know as well as the best; and hereupon they become contemners of the preaching of the Word, the ordinarie meanes of their salvation, as of a thing needlesse and superfluous. This conceit is common among us, and doth much hurt to many a mans soule.

Remedie. The way to cut it off is this; the vaine man that is puffed up with this conceit, must examine himselfe touching his knowledge, whether it be sufficient to salvation. And for this end hee must make inquiry in himselfe for these two things: First, whether he see his owne naturall blindnesse, and whether he be moved thereby to labour for the knowledge of God and of his will: where this is wanting, there is nothing but a vaine conceit of knowledge. Secondly, whether his knowledge bee joyned with conversion of heart from sinne vnto God; and with reformation of life from evill to good. This change of heart and life goeth with all saving knowledge. Now if these be wanting, (as undoubtedly they are in all vaine persons) then is their knowledge so farre from being saving knowledge, profitable to salvation, that it rather turneth to their deeper condemnation.

The second Imagination in man, occasioning him to sinne, is The perswasion of his strong faith. The more ignorant sort that want both faith and repentance, will thus bragge of their strong faith; that no evill companie can hurt them, and hereupon they take occasion to live as they list. But that this is a vaine presumption, may hereby appeare; because a true faith purifieth the heart, and b strengtheneth a man in life to avoid sinne, yea, it ministreth sweet comfort towards the time of death. But usually these men that brag and boast so much of their faith, are corrupt in heart, sinfull in life, and fearefull in their death; many times despairing of Gods mercie: as lamentable experience oft times teacheth.

Remedie. Trie thy faith. Two waies. The way to cut off this occasion of offence is this; to make triall in our selves whether our faith be true and sound or not. This will appeare two waies: First, by the beginnings and degrees of the workes of the Spirit, which goe before a true and lively faith, which be three: first, a true sight of our sinnes, with an apprehention of the wrath of God due for the same: secondly, a true sorrow and griefe of heart for offending God by these our sinnes: and lastly, an hungering and thirsting after the mercie and grace of God in Christ, above all worldly things: where these things are, there is grace; but where these are wanting, there is no true faith, but a vaine presumption. Secondly, faith will appeare by the worke of love: for in love will faith bring forth all the duties of the morall Law, both to God and man: c faith worketh by love, and love is the fulfilling of the Law, Rom. 13. 10. Now all such persons as stand so much upon the strength of their faith, shall soone finde, if they examine themselves by these two Rules, that they have nothing in them but a vaine presumption, which will turne to their deeper condemnation, unlesse they repent, and get true faith.

The third Imagination causing a man to sinne, is a thought of security, whereby he puts farre away the evill day; perswading himselfe that though God will come in judgement against sinne, yet it is farre off. This was the wicked thought of the Jewes, who said, The d visions shewed to the Prophets, were of times a farre off, and for many dayes to come. This conceit is naturally bred in every man, and is the occasion of many foule sinnes: Mat. 24. 48. The evill servant said in his heart, my master doth deferre his comming, and thereupon he takes occasion to smite his fellowes, and to live lewdly, Ha. 28. 15. The wicked say, they have made a covenant with hell and death, and though a scourge run over, and passe through, yet it shall not come at them. And the ungodly that walke after their owne lusts, say, Where is the promise of his comming? And is not this wicked thought rife among us? for God hath now a long time called us to repentance by the preaching of the Gospell, and because it takes no place in our hearts, hee sends upon us his heavy judgements, as plague, famine, rumours of warres; but yet all this hath not caused us to meet the Lord: generally that complaint of the Prophet may be applied unto us, f No man saith, what have I done? now the cause hereof, is this wicked conceit, whereby we thinke g the evill shall not come nor hasten for us. In this regard we are like the men of the old world, who would not beleeve Noah though hee preached unto them both by word and deed; and so they knew nothing till the flood came and tooke them all away: so fearefull is it to put away from us the threatnings of Gods judgements. And yet this sinne takes place not onely in the ignorant, but many times in the hearts of Gods children.

Remedie. The way to remove this wicked conceit is, to esteeme of every present day, as the day of our death, or of the last judgement; and so accordingly, to prepare our selves to dye, and to meet God in judgement every day. This thing Moses aimed at, when he prayed God h to teach him and his people so to number their dayes, that they might apply their hearts unto wisdome: for this perswasion of long life, moves many to give themselves to the sinnes and vanities of this world excessively: wee must therefore shake off this vaine perswasion, and every day prepare our selves for death, and for the day of judgement; so shall wee number our dayes aright, and apply our hearts unto wisdome: for this is true wisdome in man, rightly to consider his latter end. And the more neere doth this duty concerne us, because of the continued intercourse of Gods judgements upon us, in famine, plague and pestilence, &c. which plainely argues, that more heavy judgements are to ensue, unlesse wee prevent the time by speedie

Offences taken. Having thus shewed, what be the occasions given whereby men are drawen to sinne, I come to occasions taken. An occasion of sinne, or an offence taken is, when a man of a good thing frames that unto himselfe which causeth him to sinne against God: and so much as in him lieth, to cast away his owne soule. These occasions taken, arise especially from foure heads: First, from the Scripture: secondly, from the doctrine of the Church drawen out of Scripture: thirdly, from the state of the Church: and fourthly, from the state of the wicked. For the first: though the word of God be most perfect even in every point, both for matter and style, yet hence doe many take offence, and that two wayes principally; partly from the plainnesse and simplicitie of the Scripture, and partly from the contents thereof. For the first, it is most true, that the Scripture style and phrase in many things, is plain and familiar, even to the capacitie of the simple; yet this is no disgrace to Scripture, but rather an honour, which more setteth out the Majestie of Gods word. And yet hereby many take occasion to contemne it, esteeming the studie of Scripture too base and shallow, and the knowledge thereof too plaine and familiar for their fine wits; whereupon some give themselves to other studies and courses, which might glorifie God in this calling. Others also, though they addict themselves unto Divinitie, yet they more imploy themselves in the writings of men for their private studies, than in the word of God; and in their publike Ministerie, they more affect the ostentation of humane wit, eloquence, and learning, in multiplicitie of reading, and set words and phrases, in divers languages, than that plaine evidence of the Spirit, which the Apostle a Paul so much commends. This also is a great fault in many hearers, that they are more delighted with the vaine conceits of men in preaching, than with the pure and plaine word of God, counting basely of that Sermon wherein the Prophets and Apostles are only quoted, but highly advancing that Sermon for deepe learning which is stuffed with Fathers, Schoolemen, Poets, and such like.

To cut off this offence: First, the will of God must bee considered, for the penning and preaching of his Word, in plaine and simple manner: for herein is that true, b that God hath chosen such things, as to the world are foolish, weake, vile, and despised, to confound and bring to nought the wise and mightie things of the world: and hereby also it is made evident, that c the faith of Gods elect, doth not consist in the wisdome of men, but in the power of God: againe, the preaching of th: Gospell, d was with the wisdome of words, makes the crosse of Christ of none effect: let no man therefore deceive himselfe, for e the foolishnesse of God is wiser than men, and the weaknesse of God stronger than men. Againe, hee that doth exercise himselfe in the word of God either privately or publikly, must must labour thereby to see his owne sins, and Gods heavy judgement due unto him for them: and so will he begin to reverence Gods Word, as the onely meanes of true comfort. The woman of f Samaria at the first began to cavill with Christ, when shee heard him talke of the water of life: but so soone as shee discovered her sinne to her conditence, telling her g shee had had five husbands, and hee whom shee now had, was not her husband: then shee left off to cavill, and h honoured him by beleeving his Word, and causing others to come and to beleeve in him. The Jewes made i light of the giving of the holy Ghost unto the Apostles at the first; but when Peter had k pricked their hearts, they sought unto the Word, and received it with gladnesse: so the Iailer, though over night he dealt unkindely with the Apostles l putting their feet in the stocks in the dungeon; yet being stricken with a feare, by the opening of the prison doores, he then fell downe before them trembling, and asked what hee might doe to be saved.

Secondly, others take occasion of offence from the contents of the Bible; as when they reade of the Miracles wrought by the Prophets, by Christ and his Apostles; they say, the like may be done by Magicke, and so blasphemously doe father upon the Scripture that most wicked practice of sorcery; like to the malicious Jewes, who said of Christ, that hee cast out devils by the power of Beelzebub. Luke 11. 15. Others deny the History of Moses to be true, by reason of Noahs Arke, which (they say) as it is described for quantity could not containe a couple of every kinde of creatures, with provision and fodder for them, for a whole yeares space: of this opinion was Apelles an ancient hereticke in the primitive Church: and many upon this occasion have become Atheists, denying the truth of Gods Word to their damnation. To these I answer; first, for the Miracles, that no creature, men, or Angels, is able to doe such workes, as are recorded in Scripture, to be done by the power of God: Joh. 9. Christ opened the eyes of one that was borne blind. The devill by his skill, and man by Art can doe much in curing blindnesse, cal'ed by wounds and diseases, but no power of Nature, nor of magicke, no not all the power of all Angels, is sufficient to procure sight to one that was borne blind; that must be done by a power creating, which is in no creature. Againe, as Histories record, the devill is able to enter into a dead body, and cause it to move, and can speake in it; but to raise up one to life that had beene dead foure dayes, as m Christ did Lazarus, is a worke that all the devils in hell, nay all the Angels in heaven, are not able to doe. And for Apelles the hereticke, who tooke occasion from Noahs Arke to condemne the bookes of Moses: the answer made to him in the Primitive Church may serve the turne: to wit, that it was in quantity sufficient to containe taine couples of all kinds of creatures, and provision for them for a whole yeares space: for to omit the heighth and breadth of it: was a [a] three hundred cubits long, and every cubit (according to the ancient measure) contained nine foot, which in all came to the length of halfe a mile and more. Againe, others say that though every cubit had bin but one foot and an halfe long (as our cubits are) yet having [b] three lofts, it was of sufficient bignesse to containe all kinds of creatures by couples, and provision for them for a yeares space. But yet put the case that we could not tell, how an Arke should be made great enough, to containe couples of all kinds of creatures, and provision for them: should wee thereupon take occasion to condemne the books of God that record the same, and the thing it selfe? God forbid: nay rather, wee must hereby learne to acknowledge and confesse our owne blindnesse, and the shallow reach of our understanding, and so admire the wonderfull worke of God.

The way to cut off this occasion of offence, taken from the Scripture, is, first to observe, that (howsoever nothing is more repugnant to our nature than the word of God) yet the same word of God hath more prevailed with many mens hearts, to win the same unto it, than any thing in the world besides could ever doe. Humane writings are far more plausible to naturall men, than the holy Scriptures of God: for the wisdome of God in Scripture, is esteemed foolishnesse to mans naturall reason: and yet who did ever cleave so fast to the writings of men, as Gods children have done to the Word of God, for the testimonie whereof they have beene and are content to live and die? This thing argueth plainly, that there is in Scripture a divine power: for if it had beene from man, and against his nature, as it is, man would have condemned it.

Secondly, this must be considered, that the pen-men of holy Scriptures, both the Prophets and Apostles, have recorded their owne faults in penning of it, which plainly argueth that they were penned by holy men of God, according to the direction of the holy Ghost, and are not the inventions of politike heads to keepe men in awe; for then the Authors and pen-men thereof, would rather have concealed their owne faults, than have published the same in their owne workes to their discredit. Lastly, consider the subject and matter of the whole Bible, to wit, Jesus Christ, who therein hath professed himselfe to bee the Sonne of God: now if Christ had not beene very God, and yet should have taken that honour unto him, then the like judgements would have befallen him that befell others for the like offence: for none ever tooke that honour unto them, who were not grievously punished. As was [a] Adam in Paradise, for seeking to bee like unto God: and Herod, for receiving and applying to himselfe, the blasphemous praise of the people, crying, [b] The voice of God and not of man: but howsoever most fearefull judgements befell Gods enemies that thus sought to rob him of his honour; yet Christs end was glorious and blessed: which may move us to thinke highly of Scripture, as of the Word of God.

The second head from whence offences are taken, is the doctrine of the Church grounded on the Word of God. The offences hence taken are manifold: first, from a supposed newnesse of our doctrine: this is taken of the Papists, and especially of our owne Recusants: for they say our doctrine is but of fourescore yeares continuance, since the daies of Martin Luther: avouching also that for the space of fourteene hundred yeares, wee cannot bring record of any Church that held and professed the doctrine, which we now teach and hold.

Now for the avoiding of this offence, two points must be remembred: I. that the doctrine of our Church for the substance thereof, is the doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles, Act. 2. 42. the doctrine taught by the Apostles concerning Christ, is made the foundation of the Church, and looke where this doctrine is rightly held and confessed, there it is an infallible note of a true Church. Againe, the Apostles to justifie their doctrine, had recourse to Moses and the Prophets, as we may see in the Acts of the Apostles in sundry [c] places: now the doctrine touching Christ held and received in our Churches, is confirmed by the testimonies of the Prophets and Apostles, and therefore for substance and doctrine is theirs. Secondly, wee must know, that for the ground and foundation of Religion, our Churches agree with the Churches after Christ, which continued for the space of six hundred yeares: for wee doe not onely allow of the Apostles Creed, but of the foure generall Councels, and of their confessions and Creeds, and that in the same manner and sense which they did; so as the religion of our Church is unjustly slandered to be new.

The second offence taken from the doctrine of our Church, is from the supposed strictnesse and rigour thereof: wee teach indeed, that a Christian man must wholly deny himselfe, his owne will and desires, and resigne himselfe wholly unto Christ, to be guided by his Spirit, according to the direction of his Word. Now hence some would gather, that our doctrine permits not a man to laugh, or be merry, or to doe any thing for his owne delight; and hereupon they grow to contempt of Religion, counting the profession and practice thereof precisenesse; and therefore will not bee bound unto it, but live as they list: and this is common among us.

The way to cut off this occasion of offence is twofold: 1. wee must know, that by the doctrine of our Church, it is lawfull for a man to be merry, so it be in the Lord: Phil. 4.4. Rejoyce in the Lord alway (saith the Apostle,) againe I say rejoyce. Psal. 104. 15. God causeth wine wine that maketh glad the heart of man, and oyle to make his face to shine, & bread to strengthen his heart. Againe, God doth put most glorious colours, and delightsome smels into the flowers of the field, no doubt for this end that man might take his delight therein: yea, besides the skill of musicke, God hath given to many a man, a voyce more sweet and pleasant than is the sound of any musicall instrument, which were to no end, if a man might not therewith cheare up his heart in a moderate delight: nay, laughter it selfe is the gift of nature, which was in Adam before his fall, and therefore is lawfull. But yet I say, mans rejoycing must be in the Lord, to cut off many abuses of delight: for first, there be many that cannot be merrie, but in the practice of some sinne; if there be a thought of God, or of his word, all their mirth is quasht. But wee must endevour our selves to to rejoyce, that God may approve thereof. Againe, I say, in the Lord; because sinne will soonest prevaile with a man; when he gives himselfe to delight and pleasures. This Iob knew well, and therefore while his sonnes feasted each other [d] he offered sacrifices for them particularly every day: for (saith hee) it may bee my sons have sinned and blasphemed God in their hearts.

The second way to prevent the taking of this offence, is to resigne our selves holy unto God, that hee may doe his whole will in us and upon us; so Christ said to his Disciples; [e] If any man will come after mee, let him deny himselfe, take up his crosse, and follow me: this is, wholly resigne himselfe to bee guided by mee: and Matth. 13.46. hee that would get the precious pearle, must sell all that hee hath, and buy it. Rom. 12. 1. Wee are desired by the mercies of God, to give up our selves, both soules and bodies unto God: whereby we may see, that wee have just cause to bewaile the case and condition of all such, as count religion precisenesse: for they are like unto Ananias, and Saphyra, who brought part of the sale of their possession unto the Apostles, and said it was all: so these men looke to bee saved by Christ, they heare his Word, and receive his Sacraments, and therein make as high a profession as any can do: namely, that they will give themselves wholly to Christ: but when they are out of the assemblies, they shew themselves to have dissembled with God: for they practise no such thing as they made shew of: and therefore they may justly feare lest that befall them in their soules, which befell [f] Ananias and Saphyra in their bodies, even sudden death: for they are liers unto God himselfe.

Thirdly, others take offence at the crosse, which accompanies the sincere profession of true Religion: many like well of the doctrine of our Religion, but yet they are loth to embrace and to professe the same, lest they should bee reproached for it in the world.

The way to cut off this occasion of offence is [d] Iob 1.5.

II. Rule. Resignation of our selves unto God.
[e] Luke 9.23.
[f] Act 5.5.10.
III. Offence taken from the crosse accompanying the truth.
Remedy.
A this, we must remember that the crosse ordained for the Gospel sake, especially if we profit by it, is an infallible marke of a child of God. Heb. 12.7. If yee endure chastening, God offereth himselfe unto you, as unto sons: for what sonne is it, whom the father chasteneth not? In reason wee finde this to bee true: for say that two children bee fighting in the street, and there comes a man who taketh one of them and beateth him, but the other he lets alone: will not all men say, that the man is father to the child whom he beateth? even so the Lord for our nurturing, will send crosses upon us, when we embrace his Gospel: now if wee shall profit by his corrections, and learne whereby to humble our selves under his mighty hand, then we begin to receive assurance of his fatherly dealing towards us: his sons and daughters: and therefore wee must bee so farre from being hindered in the course of our holy profession by reproaches and crosses, that they must bee the meanes to incourage us therein. Iam. 1. 2, 3.

B As from the doctrine of the Church in generall, so from the parts thereof, doe many both learned and ignorant take occasion of offence; as first, from the doctrine of Gods predestination, whereby we teach that God hath decreed the condemnation of some. This doctrine many doe renounce as a doctrine of cruelty, and thereupon frame unto themselves private opinions, which will not stand with the Word of God.

C The way to avoid this occasion of offence, is this; First, to grant unto God himselfe so much in this case, as wee will yeeld to mortall man in the like. Among our selves we allow of this liberty one to another that a man may kill a fly or a worm; and for his lawfull use & pleasure, kill sheepe, oxen, and other creatures, and yet be a mercifull man; shall we not then allow unto God, that he may glorifie his name in the just and deserved condemnation and destruction of his creature? This is lesse than wee grant to men, for a worm is something unto man; but a man is nothing in respect of God. Againe, among our selves, in something wee give liberty one to another to doe as wee will, and yet thinke the action just and lawfull; much more then ought wee to give freedome of will unto God in all his actions, without conceit of cruelty in any one of his workes; for all his workes are done in equity. Secondly, it must bee remembred, that wee teach not, that God doth simply ordaine some men to hell fire: but touching reprobation, our doctrine is this; that God hath decreed and purposed to glorifie his name, in the due and deserved condemnation of some: for in mans reprobation God hath two actions: First, he decrees to passe by some men without shewing his eternall mercy unto them, and only to declare his justice upon them; then after he decrees, when they are by themselves fallen into sinne, to inflict upon them deserved condemnation for the same.

D

The

Offences taken in the parts: 1. Of doctrine. 1. Of predestination.
1 Rule.
Doctrine of Reprobation.

The unlearned also, from this doctrine of Predestination, take occasion of most fearefull falling; for thus they reason: If I be predestinate to salvation, I am sure to be saved, let mee doe what I will: and if I bee predestinated to condemnation, I am sure to be condemned, though I live never so godly; for Gods decree changeth not, and therefore I will live as I list. Thus doe desperate persons imbolden themselves to sin, and to cast away their soules.

The way to cut off this offence is this, they must remember, that in Gods decree, the end, and the meanes that bring men to that end, go alwaies together: and therfore, that such as are ordained to salvation, are ordained to the meanes thereof; namely to vocation, justification, and sanctification, Rom. 8. 30. The end and the meanes in Gods decree must never be severed: Now righteousnesse and holinesse in Christ, is the meanes whereby God hath decreed to bring men to salvation: and therefore they sinne grievously, that upon the immutability of Gods decree, take occasion to live prophanely. [2] Hezekias sicknesse unto death, yet God promiseth to adde unto his dayes fifteene yeares: now if Hezekias had consulted with these men, they would have told him thus: Be of good cheare O King, neither eat nor drinke, nor use any thing to cure his sore, or to preserve life: for thou shalt certainly live fifteene yeares: God hath said it, and it must bee done: but Hezekias taketh no such course; nay, hee useth the meanes both to cure his sore, and to preserve his life. And so did Paul, for his owne and others preservation, keepe the mariners in the ship, who were the meanes upon the sea to bring them safe to land, though God had given unto him all that sailed with him.

The second speciall doctrine of the Church, whereat some take occasion of offence, is concerning the fall of Adam: for we teach, that God in some sort decreed his fall: whereupon some object, that we make God the author of sinne considering his decree is unchangeable. Now to prevent this offence, two Rules must be remembred: I. that Gods will may bee distinguished. It is either generall, or speciall. Gods generall will is that, whereby he willeth that sinne shall be, by his just permission. But Gods speciall will is the approving will of God, whereby he taking pleasure in any thing, will have the same done and brought to passe. Now wee say not that God willed Adams fall by his approving will, but only by his permitting will; because it was good in regard of God, that man should fall. II. We must remember, that Gods decree went before Adams fall, only as an antecedent, not as a cause thereof: for the unchangeable decree and will of God takes not away the liberty of mans will, or of the serond causes, but only inclineth and ordereth the same as the first and highest cause of all.

The third speciall doctrine of the Church, whereat offence is taken, is this, That man of himselfe can do no good, but all goodnes and grace in man comes from God. Hence our common people take occasion of looseneſſe of life: for tell them that they must repent and beleeve, if they will be saved; their answer is, that they doe it so well as God will give them grace: all goodnesse (say they) must come from God: yea, the wiser sort amongst us will not sticke to lay the fault of their loose life on God, who gives them no more grace. But for the avoiding of this occasion of offence, wee must know; that when we are not able to doe our duties as we ought, and to pray, to repent, and beleeve as God requireth, the fault is in our selves, and not in God: for we were created righteous in Adam, and in him had power and grace to have done whatsoever God required at our hands: but Adam lost this power through his default; and wee in him lost it also: and therefore our inabilitie commeth from our selves. Againe, wee must confider that God gives grace indeed, yet not miraculously in Ale-houses and Tavernes, but then when men use the meanes to come by grace, and doe that which by nature they are able: that is, come and heare the Word attentively, endevouring to beleeve and to obey the same: for though the good usage of the gifts of nature cannot merit any grace, yet ordinarily wee may observe, that in the use of meanes is grace received: Act. 2. 41. At one sermon there were converted three thousand soules, among the rebellious Iewes: Act. 16. 14. Lidia's heart was opened in hearing Paul preach: and ordinarily men are converted in the meanes: for Faith commeth by hearing the Gospell preached, Rom. 10. 17.

The last point of doctrine, from whence many take occasion of offence, is The doctrine of Justification by faith alone, without works. Hence the Papists condemne our Church as an enemy to all good workes: and many hereby take occasion of a lewd life, because good workes must not justifie them before God. Now to cut off this offence, wee must hold and know, that good workes and faith are dis-joined in the worke of our Justification before God; but they are conjoined in the whole course of our lives and conversation, both before God and man. No worke in man but faith is required to his Justification, though in God there bee respect to his owne free mercy, and to Christs merits: but in our lives faith and workes must goe hand in hand together. Now that these may thus bee well distinguished, I shew it plainely: in the fire is both heat and light, yet in the warming of the bodie the heat hath force onely, and not light, though to many other uses it serve necessarily; even so in a child of God are required both faith and works, but to justifie him faith onely is required, though workes bee necessary thorow his whole life: for they justifie us before men, and winne unto us a testimony of our Justification before God, not onely in our owne hearts, but from the Lord,

III. Head of offences, from the state of the Church. 1 From the wants in it. Remedie. I. Rule. A true note of the Church. Gods Church described.

The third head from whence offences are taken, is the state of the Church: first, in regard of the wants that be in the Church, and namely in this our Church. Hence sundry men take occasion to condemne our Church as no Church, our Sacraments as no Sacraments, our Ministers as no Ministers, and our people as no Christians; and therefore doe separate themselves from our Church, as being no true member of the Church of God. To prevent this occasion of sinning, three Rules must be observed: First, that to beleeve and confesse the doctrine of salvation, taught and delivered by the Prophets and Apostles, is an infallible and inseparable note of a true Church of God: for Gods Church is nothing else but a company of Gods people called by the doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles unto the state of salvation. This doctrine is the seed of regeneration, whereby men are begotten unto Christ: and it is that sincere milke whereby they are fed and nourished unto eternall life. Now I say, that this our Church of England (through Gods mercy) doth maintaine, beleeve, and professe this Doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles: for the proofe hereof, let him that doubteth have recourse to our English confession, and to a booke intituled, The Articles of Religion established in the Church of England; in which are set downe the foundations of Christian Religion, allowed and held by all Evangelicall Churches. And further to shew that this our profession is not in hypocrisie, but in truth; this our Church is ready to maintaine and confirme the same doctrine by the shedding of their bloud, against all foes whatsoever; and this thing indeed hath beene the only cause of all our dissentions with the Church of Rome: whereupon we see there is just cause our Church should be reputed the true Church of God, and a good member of his Catholike Church. B C

II. Rule. Christs practice towards the Church of the Iewes.

Secondly, observe the practice of Christ and his Apostles towards the Church of the Iewes, which in their time without all doubt, was exceedingly corrupt: for the office and place of the high Priest was bought and sold, and thorow ambition and covetousnesse became annuall; yea, there were two high Priests together at one time: all which were against Gods ordinance. Againe, the Scribes and Pharises which were the Doctors of that Church, erred in some fundamentall points of doctrine, teaching Justification by workes: and withall they greatly corrupted the Law of God, both by their doctrine and traditions; and the Temple became a den of theeves: and yet for all this, Christ did not separate from that Church, neither taught his Disciples so to doe: but was present at their sacrifices and assemblies, and D kept his Passeover with them: and so did his Apostles, till they saw them of obstinacy and malitiousnesse refuse the grace of God, offered unto them in the ministery of the Gospel. Now their example must teach us, that so long as our Church holdeth Christ, we must esteeme it to be the Church of God, and not for some wants thereof depart from it.

Thirdly, all the reformed Churches in Europe doe with one consent honour our Church as a true Church of Christ; now their judgement is not slightly to be regarded, but to bee preferred farre before the rash opinions of private men: for the Church hath a gift of discerning in weightie matters; shee can judge of bookes of Scripture, which bee authenticall, which not; shee can judge of Spirits, and of Doctrines; and therefore also can judge what company of men is a true Church, and what is not: and this their judgement also must confirme us in this truth, that this our Church is a true member of Gods Catholike Church. Now whereas some alleage the wants of our Church to make it no Church: I answer, though I will not excuse any default in it, wherein it is wanting, to that which Gods Word requireth, but rather desire, that the rightousnes thereof may breake forth as the light, and salvation thereof as a burning lampe; yet this may be said in behalfe of our Church, that the wants thereof are not such as doe any way raise the foundation of Religion, or of Gods holy worship, and so cannot make it to cease to bee a true Church, and therefore none ought to separate from it for such wants: and yet this hindreth not, but that Gods servants may in godly manner desire the Reformation of things that bee amisse: for a good Church may be bettered, and we ought to strive after perfection.

III. Rule. Reformed Churches, Iudgement of our Church. Isa. 62.1. 2 Offences from consequences of the Church. Remedie. 1 2 *Ier. 6. 16.

The second offence taken from the Church, is from the diversity of opinions that be therein: for hence many reason thus; learned men be of so many opinions, that we know not what to follow; and therefore we will be of no religion, till the truth bee established by some generall Councell, and all agree in one.

For the avoiding of this offence wee must know; that though men differ in sundry opinions in the true Church of God, yet they all agree in the Articles of faith, and in the foundation of Gods worship: their difference is in matters beside the foundation, and therefore it must hinder none from receiving and embracing true religion. Againe, it is Gods will that there should bee diversities of opinions: yea, schismes and heresies in his Church, that men might be proved, whether they hold the truth in sincerity or not; as we may see, 1 Cor. 11. 19. Deut. 13. 1, 2. Now in this case Ieremias direction must bee observed, * Stand in the parting of the wates (saith he) and inquire for the old and ancient way: (that is, the doctrine of the Prophets) what God saith and commande h by them, and by his Apostles, and that we must follow low with all good conference. This Christ intended, when hee bade the Iewes to [b] search the Scriptures which testified of him: and this wee must sanctifie by earnest prayer, as Cornelius did, Act. 10. 1, 2.

The third occasion of offence taken from the Church, is the miserie thereof: for the state of the Church is oftentimes in affliction, because it consisteth of such as are subject to the contempt and reproach of the world. Hence sundry are discouraged from joyning themselves truly to the Church: and although this occasion of offence bee not much among us, save onely in reproaches, yet it may be more: and therefore wee must learne to prevent it, and to cut it off.

The way is this; We must beleeve and remember, that out of the Church there is no salvation: In this regard Noahs Arke was a true type of the Church: for as none were saved from drowning, that were out of the Arke, in the generall deluge; so none can bee saved ordinarily from condemnation, that are out of the Church: for in the Church is Gods covenant of grace, with the Sacraments, which be the seales thereof. In the Church is vocation, justification, sanctification, and the way to glorification: but out of the Church are none of all these, and therefore it is said, that [c] God added to his Church daily such as should be saved. In the Church is protection against all enemies, and from all judgements so farre forth as shall bee for the glory of God, and the good of the Church: and in a word, in the Church is life everlasting; but out of the Church, is nothing but a fearefull looking for of eternall woe and condemnation: and for this cause [d] Moses chose rather to suffer affliction in Gods Church, than to enjoy all the pleasures in the world out of it: whose example wee ought to follow, and so shall not the miserie of the Church be any occasion unto us to forsake the same, especially if wee consider, that the whole world will profit a man nothing, if hee lose his soule, Matth. 16. 26.

The fourth offence taken from the Church is, From the Apostacie of some that live in the Church; for ordinarily in Gods Church are many Apostates, as in this our Church, many that were in times past Protestants, are become Papists, some Arrians, Sabellians, and some open Atheists, and blasphemers. Hence many, fearing their falls (as they pretend) dare not joyne themselves to the truth, and the profession thereof. But to cut off this occasion, two rules must be remembred; First, That the falling away of any man from the truth, is the worke of God, discovering an hidden hypocrite. 1 Ioh. 2. 19. They went out from us, but they were not of us, for if they had beene of us, they would have continued with us: but this is come to passe, that it might appeare, they were not all of us. Secondly, consider that the beginning and continuance of our religion and salvation, stands on Gods free election, which is unchangeable; and hereupon

A must wee stay our selves touching our estate, when we see others fall away. 2 Tim. 2. 19. Paul comforteth the Church, against the feare of griefe which they might conceive, by the Apostacie of Himeneus and Philetus, which were two pillars amongst them, by this Rule; The foundation of God remaineth sure, and hath this seale: the Lord knoweth who are his. Now because some might say, God indeed knowes it, but we doe not: to this (I take it) the Apostle answers, when he saith, and let every one that calls upon the name of the Lord, depart from iniquity: as if he should say, Looke that you call upon God for grace, and make conscience of all sinne, and by this you shall know your selves to belong to God; which thing when once you know, then stay thereon, for Gods calling is unchangeable.

B Againe, as these occasions are taken from the whole Church in generall, so more especially, some take offence from severall things therein: as first, from the wants that be in Ministers, both for judgement and doctrine. Hence politike carnall men plead thus: Preaching is full of imperfection, therein men publish their owne errors; but the written Word containeth in it the Sermons of Christ, and of his Apostles, which are most perfect: and therefore it is best to content our selves with the Scripture read, and to heare no preaching by men.

C To cut off this offence, wee must remember, that the preaching of the Word, though it bee by sinfull men, is Gods holy ordinance, prescribed and injoyned as solemnly, as any morall precept is, either against murther, or adultery: for from the beginning, till the Jewes came to Mount Sina, God himselfe preached to his Church, which was then contained in some few families. But from that time, [e] because the people could not abide the voyce of God himselfe, it pleased him to ordaine the Ministery of the Word, by the hand of sinfull man. Now it being Gods owne ordinance, unlesse we will make our selves wiser than God, wee must subject our selves thereto, with all reverence, albeit it bee delivered by sinfull man. Thus Cornelius did, Act. 10. 33. and the Thessalonians, 1 Thess. 2. 13.

D Secondly, many are offended at the lives of Ministers, and from the wants that be in them, whether in deed, or in suspition onely, many take occasion to condemne their doctrine; thinking, as the Rulers of the Jewes said to the blind man; Thou art altogether borne in sin, and doest thou teach us? Now to cut off this occasion, two things must be remembred: First, we must distinguish of every Minister, and consider in him a double person: both that he is a sinfull man, subject to many infirmities, as we our selves are: and also that hee is the Lords Ambassadour, sent in Gods name to deliver his will unto us. Now looke as wee honour the Ambassador of a Prince, though his person be vile and base; so much more ought wee to reverence verence the Embassadour of God himselfe, and receive his doctrine, as from God, though for his person, he be subject to manifold infirmities. Secondly, we must consider, that it is Gods will and commandement, that though ministers be manifestly faulty and sinfull, yet their ministery must be received and obeyed carefully, Mat. 23. 2. The Scribes and Pharises sit in Moses chaire (saith Christ,) all therefore that they bid you observe, that doe, but after their workes doe not. Phil. 1. 15. Some preach Christ of envy (saith Paul) and not in sincerity, but yet the Apostles rejoyced therein, because Christ was preached every manner of way, vers. 18. And therefore, as we doe not refuse meat for our bodies when wee be hungry, though a wicked person have dressed it; so must wee not refuse or contemne the Word of God, the food of our soules, for the sinnes of the party that delivereth it.

A fors; because that from a false ground of outward things, they perswade themselves of Gods love and favour. But to cut off this offence, wee must remember that mans case is the more fearfull, when hee wants all crosses: for God chasteneth every childe whom he receiveth, Heb. 12. 6. and it is a marke of Gods child, to be in affliction, if hee profit thereby: the stalled oxe commeth sooner to the slaughter, than the oxe that is under the yoke; and the sheepe that goeth in fat pasture commeth sooner to the shambles, than that which goeth on the bare commons: so oftentimes God fatteth the wicked with the blessings of this life, as hee did [f] the rich glutton, that he may more justly condemne them in the world to come. Lastly, we must remember what Salomon saith, [g] No man knoweth love or hatred, of all that is before him: that is, of all outward things: all things fall alike unto all, both good and bad: and therefore no man must so bleese himselfe with his outward estate, that he be drawne to esteeme of religion, as a thing needlesse or superfluous.

B Thirdly, many take offence at the lenity of the Church towards offenders; and for the presence of wicked persons at the Lords table, doe refuse to communicate with the Church: now albeit men should not be admitted hand over head, to the Lords table, but scandalous persons ought to be restrained; yet the want thereof ought not to keepe the godly from this Sacrament: for another mans evill conscience cannot defile thy good conscience, another mans sinne cannot hurt thee, unlesse thou doe some way communicate with him therein. Christ was more carefull in his duty, than ever man was, and yet hee communicated with the wicked Jewes, Scribes and Pharises, in the service of God, under the Law.

C The fourth head from whence offence is taken, is the state of the wicked, principally in regard of their prosperity. Hence some holy ones suspect their owne estate and religion, as either not good, or not regarded of God. This befell David, Psal. 73. when he saw the prosperitie of the wicked, and their increase in riches, with peace, and ease, he said, [a] Certainely I have cleansed mine heart in vain, and washed mine hands in innocency. Hence also Jeremy reasons with God, [b] why the way of the wicked should prosper, and they bee in wealth that transgresse rebelliously. Hence undoubtedly at this day, many call into question the good providence of God. Now the way to cut off this offence is, to [i] enter into the sanctuary of God, as David did; that is, to come to the assemblies of Gods people, where the Word is preached: for there a man shall see the manifold reasons, why God will have his owne people afflicted, and also the fearefull end of the pleasures of the wicked; namely, a fitting of them to further destruction. Againe, from this same ground, doe many rich men take offence; for having the world at will, they blesse themselves with this perswasion, that God loves them, and thereupon take occasion to condemne all religion, and to goe on in the pursuit of wordly profits and delights. And this is one maine cause, why among the rich, wee have so few good and sound Profeshim write her a bill of divorce and put in her hand, and send her out of his house. This law was not morall but civill, or politicke, for the good ordering of the Common-wealth. Now among their particular lawes, some were lawes of toleration and permission, which were such as did not approve of the evill which they concerned, but did onely tolerate and permit that evill which could not be avoided, for the preventing of a greater evill, which otherwise would fall out. As when the sea hath made a breach into the land, if it cannot possibly bee stopped, the best course is to make it as narrow as may be. Such was the law concerning usury, Deut. 23.20. permitting the Jewes to exercise it upon a stranger, but not towards a brother: and the like was the law touching polygamie, Deut. 21.15. If a man had two wives, the one hated, the other loved; and they both have borne him children: if the first borne be the sonne of the hated (though she were married to him the latter) yet her seed was legitimate, and her sonne had the right of the first borne. In both which lawes were tolerated that which God condemned, onely for the preventing of a greater evill. Under this sort comes our law of usury, for taking ten in the hundred, not approving but permitting so much for the avoiding of greater usury. Unto this kinde the Papists would reduce their law of permitting Stewes, for the preventing of greater sinnes: but that law can have no title to such permission: for a law of permission, is to diminish that evill, which by man cannot possibly be cut off altogether: now that sinne, which they would prevent by their Stewes, might be cut off among them, if they would give allowance to Gods owne ordinance of lawfull marriage unto all sorts and sexes. So likewise this law of Moses for divorce, was a law of permission, not approving of the giving a bill of divorce for every light cause, but tolerating of it for the preventing of greater mischiefe, even of murther: for the nature of the Jewes was this; if a man once tooke dislike of his wife, he would never be at rest till he had shed her bloud, if they might not be parted asunder. Now this law of divorce was given to restraine this great evill: for hereby a man was tolerated to put away his wife when shee found no favour in his eyes, left he should kill her: yet so, as he gave her a bill of divorce, wherein he must set downe the cause why hee put her away: whereby also many were restrained from putting away their wives, because it was a great shame for a light occasion so highly to transgresse Gods holy institution, who made them by marriage one flesh. The truth of this may appeare by the Lords owne complaint against his people, to whom hee speaketh as to a wife that had forsaken her husband without a cause on his behalfe, Isa. 50.1. Where (saith he) is that bill of your mothers divorcement, whereby I sent her away? As if hee should say, I gave her no bill, but her departure and separation from me, is by her owne sinnes: which phrase sheweth what was the custome of the Jewes in this case.

II. Point. The straitnesse of this Law appeares in this, that the man onely was permitted to give this bill unto his wife, but the wife might not give it to her husband: for Moses saith, Whosoever shall put away his wife: neither is there any place in Scripture to prove that the wife had this liberty so to deale with her husband. If it be asked whether the wife in a just cause, as for adultery, had not the like liberty: I answer, Have respect Gods institution touching marriage, the right of divorce is equall to them both: for in regard of the bond of marriage they are equally bound one to another. Here indeed this liberty is permitted onely to the man by this politicke law, not that he had more right, but to prevent the evill of the hardnesse of his heart, who taking displeasure at his wife, would rather spill her bloud than continue with her. If it be alleaged that a man is the womans head: I answer, that is for regiment and direction in her place, but not in regard of breaking the bond of marriage, whereby hee is bound to his wife as well as she to him, as the Apostle teacheth, 1 Cor. 7.4.

1 Cor. 11.3.

III. Point. The force and effect of this Law was this; It made the Bill of divorcement for any cause given, to be tolerable before men; and marriage after such a divorce, lawfull and warrantable in the Courts of men, Deut. 24.4. But yet in the Court of conscience before God, the divorcement it selfe, and second marriages made thereupon, were both unlawfull; for God hateth this separation, Mal. 2.15. And whether party soever marrieth another upon this divorce, commits adulterie, Matth. 19.9. This must be remembred for the true understanding of this law of Moses; the first words whereof are a permission to this effect: If a man doe conceive such a dislike against his wife, as that he will not abide with her, but will needs put her away, then he may; but yet so that he give her a bill of divorce: which doth not acquite him before God, but before men onely.

Having thus shewed the true meaning of this law, it remaineth now to see what the Pharises taught touching divorce. Their doctrine was this, That he which gave a bill of divorcement unto his wife, for any light occasion, was thereby acquited from her before God; and thereupon might marry another without the guilt of adultery: and also that another man might lawfully marry her that was thus divorced. That this was their meaning, may appeare by the contrary answer of our Saviour Christ, wherein he crosseth and confuteth this their interpretation, in the words following:

Vers. 32. But I say unto you, whosoever shall put away his wife, (except it be for fornication) causeth her to commit adultery: and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced, committeth adultery.

Here

Matth. 5. ver. 32.

Here Christ answereth not to Moses law, but to the corrupt interpretation of the Scribes and Pharises, whereby they depraved that law. By fornication, Christ meaneth not every sinne of that kinde, but onely the sinne of adultery, or that which is greater in that kinde, namely, incest. Adultery is a sinne that is committed by two parties, one whereof is either married, or espoused, as hath beene shewed before. Causeth her to commit adultery:] That is, giveth her occasion to marry againe, and so to commit adultery; because their first bond remaineth still. And hee that marrieth her that is divorced:] That is, for any small cause, and not for adultery, he also commits adultery.

Here then two points are set downe; First, that hee who puts away his wife for any light cause, causeth her to commit adultery. Secondly, he that marrieth her that is divorced, committeth adultery. Yet unto both these Christ putteth an exception in the case of adultery. The [a] Papists and some others, would restraine the exception to the first part of the sentence, and make it a negation to this effect; He that puts away his wife, being no fornicator, &c. But the truth is, that the exception belongs to the whole answer of our Saviour Christ, denying divorce, save onely for adultery; and permitting no marriage after divorcement, save onely where the divorce is for adultery.

First, whereas our Saviour Christ opposeth unto this politicke law of Moses concerning divorce, the law of Nature touching marriage, Gen. 2.24. he giveth us an excellent distinction betweene all politicke lawes, and the law of Nature, which is the morall law; for that is a law of eternall equity, commanding good, and forbidding evill simply, without respect of man: but politicke lawes are tempered according to the conditions of men, and though they doe not approve, yet sometime they permit evill, for the avoiding of greater mischiefe, yea, they tolerate that, which before God, and in conscience is condemned. This point must teach us, not to content our selves with performing obedience to the politicke lawes of men, for the lawes of men may tolerate that which Gods law doth condemne: so the law of this Land in practice tolerates usury, but usurers must not hereupon thinke that all is safe and well with them, and that they sinne not in taking ten in the hundred, because the law of the land permits it; for our law tolerates that for the preventing of greater usury, when as the law of God doth utterly condemne the same. Againe, our lawes are open for men to goe to law at the first, upon every light occasion, without seeking former meanes of agreement: but yet such men as doe so, are guilty of sinne before God, notwithstanding their liberty by our politicke lawes. Some politicke lawes also tolerate contracts of marriage, made without consent of parents; yet such children sinne against the law of God: for herein God requires childrens subjection to their parents and governours. And the like might be shewed in many other points; so that is no sufficient justification of our actions, to say the lawes of men allow us so to doe.

Secondly, hence we may learne that a man cannot lawfully and with good conscience put away his wife, except it be for adultery; the text is cleare both here, and also in Mat. 19.9. which confuteth the civill lawes of some countries, and the [a] Popish constitutions that allow other causes of [b] divorce, besides adultery. Here they object sundry things in their defence against this doctrine: As 1. the saying of Christ, Whosoever forsaketh Father, or Mother, Wife, &c. shall receive much reward, Mat. 19.29. Here (say they) is divorce for religion allowed. Ans. Christ by forsaking, meaneth not that separation which is made by giving a Bill of divorcement; but that which is caused by imprisonment, banishment, or by death.

b Non repudiised divorti. Bellar. de Matrim. c. 14.

2 Object. 1 Cor. 7.15. If the unbeleeving depart, let him depart; a brother or a sister is not bound in such things. Here (say they) is another cause of divorce. Ans. The malicious or wilfull departing of the unbeleever, doth dissolve the marriage; but that is no cause of giving a Bill of divorce: onely adultery causeth that. Here the beleever is a meere patient, and the divorce is made by the unbeleever, who unjustly forsaketh, and so puts away the other.

3 Object. Titus 3.10. Avoid an heretike after once or twice admonition. This (say they) is spoken to all Christians; and therefore for heresie may a bill of divorce be given. Ans. First, that commandement is not given to every private person, but to the Ministers of the Church, who after one or two admonitions are to excommunicate and cut off all heretikes from the Church. Secondly, it hinderech not, but that the bond of marriage may remaine sure and firme, though one of the parties be cut off from the Church; for the beleeving husband must not forsake his unbeleeving wife, if she will dwell with him: 1 Cor. 7.12.

4 Object. After marriage one party may have a contagious and incurable disease, which may cause the other to give a bill of divorce. Answer. A contagious disease may cause a separation for a time, but no divorce; and if that disease bee incurable, and disable the party from the duty of marriage, then such persons must thinke themselves, as it were, called of God to live in single life.

5 Object. But married persons may seeke to spill the bloud one of another, and therefore it is good to give a bill of divorce, to prevent that evill. Ans. Such enmity may cause a separation for a time, till reconciliation be made, but the bond of marriage must not therefore be broken.

6 Object. Death maketh a divorce. Ans. Death indeed endeth marriage-estate, and setteth the party living free, to marry in the Lord, where he or she will: but this comes not by divorce given of either partie: so that the conclusion still remaineth firme, that a man with good conscience cannot give a bill of divorce for any cause, but for adulterie: and therefore those lawes which permit divorce for other causes, are greatly faultie before God. If any shall aske, whether mens lawes may not make more causes of divorcement, than this one? I answer, no: for marriage is not a meere civill thing, but partly spirituall and divine, and therfore God only hath power to appoint the beginning, the continuance, and the end thereof. If any yet aske, why Idolatrie and Magicke, which be greater sinnes than adulterie, may not breake marriage? Ans. They are greater indeed, against God, but not in this ordinance of marriage: for the sinne of adulterie, breaketh only the bond of marriage, which may remaine still betweene two parties, though one be an idolater, a witch, or an Atheist. Now considering that Adulterie is so great a sinne, that it cuts off the knot of marriage, above all things, those persons that are called to this estate, must take heed of all sins, so of this especially.

Thirdly, here may be asked, whether after divorce for adulterie, the parties divorced may marrie againe, without committing adulterie? This point hath beene diversly discussed, wee will consider the reasons on both sides: First, for the lawfulnesse of it, especially to the partie innocent.

1 From Christs doctrine in this place: for in his answer to the false interpretation of Moses politicke Law, touching divorce, he first propounds a generall rule, and then puts an exception thereto: the nature of which exception is, alwaies to imply and put downe the contrary to the generall rule. As in this place; the generall rule is, Whosoever putteth away his wife, causeth her to commit adulterie: and he that marrieth her committeth adulterie. The exception then must be contrarie; namely, that in the case of adulterie, hee that puts away his wife lawfully convicted thereof, causeth her not to commit adulterie; neither he that marrieth her that is divorced, doth commit adulterie. If it be said, that Christ propoundeth two rules, one for the case of divorce, the other for the case of marrying after divorce; and applieth his exception for adulterie onely to the case of divorce, and not to the case of marriage after divorce. Ans. As the exception for adulterie, is here in this chapter joyned with the case of divorce: he that putteth away his wife, except it be for fornication, &c. so in the 19. chap. v. 9. the same exception for adulterie, is expressely applyed not only to the case of divorce, but also to the case of marriage after divorce; saying, Whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and marrie another, committeth adulterie: so that if in this place the exception make the divorce lawfull for adulterie, then in the 19. chap. it maketh it lawfull to marrie againe after such divorce, without the guilt of adulterie.

2. The innocent partie is not to be punished for the wilfulnesse of the offender; and therefore the party that is faultlesse may with good conscience marry againe, after lawfull divorce. 2. God hath provided marriage to bee a remedy against incontinencie for all persons, 1 Cor. 7. 2. But if parties lawfully divorced, might not marry againe, then they should want this remedie, and be deprived of this benefit. If it bee said, they may reconcile themselves each to other, and so have remedy. Answ. But what if the party offending live in adultery still, then the party innocent cannot in conscience joyne him or her selfe to the other, and reunite the bond of matrimony; for that were too much lenity towards so foule a crime: and a sinne against God, for want of Christian reconciliation, which requireth that this reuniting should bee in the Lord, and not in the flesh alone. 4. The phrases of Scripture used by the [a] holy Ghost, concerning marriage after divorce, restraining it to some cases, and allowing it in others, seeme to take it for granted, that after lawfull divorce, it is no sinne to marry againe.

Reasons alleaged on the other side: First, Christs generall saying, [b] Whosoever putteth away his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery. Hence some inferre, that there may be no marriage at all after any divorce. But they abuse that Scripture: for though S. Marke put downe no exception, yet Matthew hath made supply thereof in two places, Chap. 5. 32. and 19. 9. Now the Gospels were penned by severall men, that that which was not fully expressed by one, might be supplyed by another; that so by conferring writer with writer, the whole truth might be made manifest.

Secondly, Math. 19. 6. Whom God hath coupled, let no man put asunder: Therefore after divorce, they still remaine man and wife before God, and may not marry to others. Ans. The party offending breakes the bond of marriage, and so sinneth grievously against that commandement: but the party innocent marrying againe after lawfull divorce, onely taketh the benefit of that liberty, whereto God hath set him free, through the unlawfull breaking of the bond by the party offending.

Thirdly, Rom. 7. 2. The woman is bound to the man while he liveth, and therefore may not marry againe after divorcement. Ans. That place must bee understood of the state of marriage, continuing undissolved till death: but in the case of adultery, the bond of marriage is broken: and therefore that hindreth not, but marriage may be after lawfull divorce.

Fourthly, 1 Cor. 7. 10, 11. Let not the wife depart from her husband; and if she depart, let her remaine unmarried, and be reconciled unto her husband; and let not the husband put away his wife. Here (say they) is a plaine place against marriage after divorcement. Answ. The Apostle speaketh of departure, and putting away, for other causes than adulterie; as for hatred, dislike, dislike, &c. which indeed are no sufficient causes of divorce, and therefore they that separate thereupon, ought not to marry.

Fiftly, the bond of marriage, is a resemblance of the conjunction that is betweene Christ and his Church, which is inseparable and eternall: and therefore marriage also is inseparable. Ans. That resemblance stands not in every thing, but in this, That as in marriage two are made one flesh, so spiritually Christ, and every true member of his Church become one: and that as Eve was taken out of Adams side, and made flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bone; so the Church springeth as it were out of Christs blood, which issued from his side: for else, if their reason were good, we might say that marriage should be eternall in the life to come; because the union of Christ with his Church is eternall: which we know to be false, for in the [c] resurrection men marry not, but are as the Angels of God.

Sixtly, if parties divorced might marry againe, their children should be injured, having stepfathers, or step-mothers in stead of their owne naturall parents. Ans. This reason is not sufficient to disallow divorce, or marriage after it: for by the same reason we might delude all the judiciall lawes of Moses, and of all countries, which impose death for sundry crimes, because thereby some children should lose their parents: but Justice must be justice with all men, though the posterity have hindrance by the execution thereof. Quest. But what if the lawes of some countries forbid marriage after divorcement? Ans. Yet the liberty of conscience remaineth still: for this being given of God, cannot be taken away by man; and therefore when men have freedome from the Magistrate, they may with good conscience marry againe after lawfull divorce. And yet here we must know, that divorcement, or marriage after, must not be done privately, by man and wife upon their owne heads, but by order of law, before the Magistrate, according to the custome of that Church or common-wealth whom it concerns. Againe, there be some particular causes which may justly hinder marriage after divorce: as first if the parties reunite their bond againe by reconciliation: for the knot broken by adultery, may be reunited again by the consent of the party innocent. Secondly, when the one party is a manifest cause of the Adultery of the other, and so becomes an accessarie to the others offence: for it seemes unequall, that he who hath put his hand to the committing of a sinne, should reape any benefit or privilege by the same. And therefore I say the party innocent hath freedome in this case.

V. 33 Againe, yee have heard that it was said to them of old time, Thou shalt not forsweare thy selfe: but shalt performe thine oathes unto the Lord.

34 But I say unto you, sweare not at all, &c.

Our Saviour Christ having restored the seventh commandement to his true sense and meaning, doth here proceed to doe the like unto the third commandement: observing herein the same order that he did in the former: for first, he layeth downe the false interpretation of the Scribes and Pharises given to this commandement concerning swearing, v. 33. and then delivereth the true doctrine of an oath, v. 34. The corrupt sense given by the Scribes and Pharises, is propounded in the words of the holy Ghost, Levit. 19. 12. Deu. 5. 11. Thou shalt not forsweare thy self, but shalt performe thine oathes unto the Lord: which are not here taken in that true meaning wherein Moses set them downe, but in the false interpretation of the Jewish Teachers: whereof that we may the better judge, let us search out the true meaning of Moses law concerning an oath: for which end we must first see what perjury is; then propound the kindes of perjury; and lastly, shew the grievousnesse of this sinne.

I. Point. In perjury there must be two things: First, a man must affirme or avouch something against his owne mind, his owne meaning, purpose, intention, or perswasion. When a man knowes a thing to be true, and saith it is true: or knoweth a thing to be false, and saith it is false, and sweares thereto, this is no perjury, because his speech is answerable to that which is in his mind: but when a man knowes a thing to be true, and avoucheth it to be false; or knowing a thing to be false, avoucheth it to be true, upon his oath; this is perjury: because in so doing, hee speakes against his minde and perswasion. Secondly, in perjury there must be an oath; it is not perjury to speake a thing that is false, unlesse hee also sweare to the thing hee speaketh falsly, against his mind: and yet every oath maketh not direct perjury, unlesse it be a binding oath: for a man may sweare to a thing that is unlawfull, and after alter his minde, and not performe his oath, without the guilt of perjury: as if a childe being under age, doe binde himselfe by oath to marry, without his parents consent; but comming to riper yeares, doth better consider of the matter, and subjects himselfe to his parents disposing, who marry him to another. Now though he sinned in so swearing, yet hee is not perjured, because the oath was not a binding oath; for a child under yeares hath no power to take an oath.

Kinds of perjury.

II. Point. That we may yet better judge of this sinne, we must know that there be three kindes of perjurie: First, when a man confirmeth by oath, that which hee knowes or thinkes to be otherwise; as when he takes an oath that a thing is true, which he knowes to be false; that a thing was thus, which he knowes was otherwise. Secondly, Deceitfull swearing is perjury, when a man, either about things past, or to come, sweares contrary to the true knowledge and purpose of his owne minde. Example of this we have in the Romish Priests, who both defend in writing, and practise in action, this deceitfull swearing: for being brought before the Magistrate, and made to sweare to this demand, or such like; whether they said Masse, or knew where Masse was said at such a time? They answer upon their oaths, That they did not, nor knew not, (though indeed they did,) which is according to their doctrine, That unto dangerous Interrogatories a man may frame a false meaning unto himselfe, and sweare to it: as in the former instance, they sweare they knew not where Masse was said, meaning, to reveale it to the Iudge. But this is flat perjury: for their oath is given them to answer according to the meaning of the Magistrates demand: and if a man might lawfully frame a meaning to himselfe in sweating, hee might easily delude all truth, and to should not an oath for confirmation be the end of strife, but the breeder thereof, through infinite of false meaning in him that sweareth. The third kinde of perjury is, The breaking of a binding oath; as when a man upon his oath promiseth to doe a thing that is lawfull, and doth it not: yet this is not alwayes perjury: as First, If God after the oath taken, make the thing promised, impossible to be done: as if a man sweare to make another his heire, of such and such lands; now dwelling by the Sea side, the Sea breakes out, drownes all his land before he dieth: Is this man perjured, because hee performed not his promise bound with an oath? no verily: for God made the thing impossible. Secondly, if a man bee bound in conscience to breake his oath: Thus David swearing rashly to slay Nabal and his family, was yet staied from so doing by Abigails counsell, and brake his oath, and gave God thanks for it: for indeed his oath was unlawfull, being the bond of iniquity; and the doing of it had beene the doubling of his sinne.

Here it may well bee demanded, whether those that are sworne to the Statutes and lawes of societies and incorporations be perjured, if they breake the same? Anst. The Statutes of incorporations be of two sorts; some are of the foundation of societies, without which the incorporation cannot stand; and these (not being against the Word of God) cannot be broken without the guilt of perjury: others, are Statutes onely of outward order and decencie; as touching apparell, gesture, and such like: as in some incorporations the Statutes require, that every man therein should weare the round cap: hereunto many are sworne, who alwayes weare it not: now, though I say not that they are faultlesse altogether, yet they are not perjured; because this Statute of order, binds not a man simply, but either to obedience, or to pay the mulct; which if a man be content to pay, hee satisfies the Statute, and benefits the society, as much as if he kept the Statute.

Having shewed what perjury is, with the kindes thereof, let us see whether wee be free from it. After examination it will appeare, that mens lives are full of perjury; for where is much swearing usually, there cannot but bee much perjury: because they that sweare in their common talke, doe forget their oaths, as they doe their communication. But say wee are cleare from perjury, yet we wee in danger of Gods heavy judgements for the breach of our vow in baptisme; wherein we promise to believe in God, and to serve him, forsaking the world, the flesh, and the devill: now the breach of this vow, is as ill as perjury: for therefore may Baptisme be called a Sacrament, because of the oath and vow which a Christian makes to God therein; for the word Sacrament properly, betokeneth the oath which a Souldier maketh to his Captaine for his fidelity. The breaking of Iosha his oath unto the Gibeonites, by Saul, [c] caused three yeares dearth; and was not satisfied, but with the blood of seven of Sauls kindred. And [d] Zedekias perjury to the King of Babel, was one cause of the Lords fierce wrath against Jerusalem, and the Princes thereof. Now shall one mans perjury cause such judgements, and shall wee not thinke, that among other sinnes this our perjury unto God, in breaking our vow in Baptisme, bringeth upon us Gods heavy wrath, by plague, famine, and unseasonable weather? Wherefore let the consideration hereof perswade us to repentance, and to a more conscionable care of performing our vow unto God.

III. Point. The grievousnesse of this sinne of perjury, which the Lord here forbids, appeares by these three sinnes which are contained in it: First, the uttering, or maintaining of a lie. Secondly, the calling on God to be a witnesse unto a lie: wherein men doe, as much as in them lieth, set the devill himselfe, the father of lies, in the roome of God, and so greatly rob him of his honour and majesty. Thirdly, in perjury a man prayes for a curse upon himselfe, wishing God to be a witnesse of his speech, and a Judge to revenge, if hee sweare falsly; so as herein a man is his owne utter enemy, and as much as in him lyeth, doth cast both body and soule to hell.

Quest. Seeing this sinne of perjury is so great, whether may such a man bee put to his oath, as is certainely thought it will perjure himselfe, if hee be put to sweare? I answer, men that put others to sweare, are either private persons, or publike Magistrates: a private man for his owne private cause, may not put such a man to his oath; for he should have greater care of Gods glory, and of the other mans soule, than of of his private gaine: and therefore ought rather depart from his temporall right, than suffer his brother so to dishonour God, and to hurt his owne soule. But if a Magistrate be to put such a man to his oath, as is verily thought will perjure himselfe, he may lawfully doe it; but yet he is first, to advertise the party of the weight of an oath, and of the fearefull sinne of perjury; and then, if the order of Law and Justice so require, he may minister an oath unto him, leaving the event to God: for the execution of justice must not stay on mans misdemeanor, nor wait till they make conscience of sinne; for if it did, no Common-wealth could stand, no warre could be made: Moses and the Levites executed vengeance upon the idolatrous Jewes, without waiting for their repentance.

Exod. 32. 27, 28.

But shalt performe thine oathes unto the Lord.] These words are not set downe in any of Moses bookes, but are a collection from the former law of Moses, gathered by the Jewish Teachers: which collection though it be not expresly set downe, yet is it the very sense of the Law: for if a man cannot without perjury breake a lawfull binding oath, then that Law which forbiddeth perjury, bindeth man to performe all that hee hath lawfully sworne unto God.

The first bond of an oath.

Here then in this collection of the Jewish Teachers, is set downe an excellent point, touching the strauneese of the bond of an oath. In every lawfull oath, there is a double bond: First, it bindes one man to another, for the performing of the thing he sweareth to doe. Secondly, it bindes a man unto God: for he that sweareth, invocates God as a witnesse, and as Judge of the truth of his affertion; and he stands bound unto God, till the thing sworne unto, bee performed, if it be lawfull and possible. And herein the Pharises are good Teachers, and from this their collection, we learne sundry points:

First, that if a man take an oath, though he were constrained thereto by feare, yet it must bee kept, if it be of things lawfull and possible; because in an oath a man stands bound unto the Lord: as if a man sweare unto a Theefe for the saving of his life, that hee will bring him some money, or other booty of his owne goods; this he is to performe, because the losse is private; but if hee were sworne further, not to detect the Theefe, that were a bond of iniquity, tending to the hurt of the Common-wealth: and therefore such an oath a man ought not to take: and if he doe so sweare, yet hee must not keepe it, but repent of his rash oath.

Secondly, if a man be brought to sweare by error, being overtaken by another, yet if it were of things lawfull, within his power, it must be kept: so did Iosuah to the Gibeonites, and the breach thereof by [e] Saul was grievously punished, as we shewed before.

Thirdly, if a man sweare unto a lawfull promise, and it fall out, that the keeping of his oath procure him great temporall losses; yet the oath must be kept, because therein Iov is honoured to God: This David noteth for a property of him that must rest in Gods holy mountaine, to keepe his promise whereto hee is bound by an oath, though it turne to his owne hinderance. Psal. 15. v. 4.

Of an oath in it self considered.

Fourthly, here wee may see, that the [f] doctrine and [g] practice of the Church of Rome is wicked and damnable: They teach, that the Bishop of Rome, by the power of the Keyes, may free a man in conscience from the bond of a lawfull oath. Indeed if the bond were onely betweene man and man, it were something; but being betweene God and man, hee that will dispense therewith, must be above, or at least equall to God himselfe. The Phariſes doctrine was farre better, who taught that mens oaths must be performed unto God, without dispensing therewith. And therefore our English Priests who before have sworne to the Supremacie of this State, and now are reconciled to the Pope, are flatly perjured persons, and so to be held.

f Aquinas Iustit. Instit. Mor. ca. 15. g Anas. 5. Pontif. in Bullar. Rom.

But howsoever the Phariſes make this one good collection, yet they erre grossely in their further meaning and expounding of this law: for when as God forbiddeth a man to forsweare himselfe, hence they gather; first, that it was lawfull to sweare ordinarily in common talke, even by the name of God, so that they sware truly, and did not forsweare themselves: that this was their meaning, will appeare in Christs answer. Secondly, hence they gathered, that the Law spake nothing of indirect oaths: for they made two kindes of oaths: direct by the name of God, and indirect by the creatures. And as they held that a man might sweare directly by the name of God without sinne in common talke, so they taught, that swearing indirectly by the creatures, as by heaven, by the temple, the head, altar, and such like, was nothing; neither the breaking thereof, was any perjury, as Matth. 23. 16. And like unto these Jewes are Popish Teachers, who hold that men may not onely sweare by the name of God, but by holy things, as by the Rood, the Masse, Saints, and Angels, if they be not abused.

ver. 34. But I say unto you, sweare not at all, neither by heaven, for it is the throne of God, &c. Here Christ confuteth the false interpretation of the Jewish Teachers. And his answer is propounded first generally; sweare not at all: then particularly in the words following to the 38. verse. The words of his generall answer are somewhat hard, and perverted by many; therefore that we may come to the true sense thereof, two points are to be considered: First, what it is to sweare: then, how farre forth Christ forbiddeth sweating. For the first, we shall beft obneeive of an oath by the parts thereof. In an oath be two things: Confession, and Imprecation. Confession is three-fold; though for outward forme the words of an oath be few. 1. A man confesseth, that that which hee sweareth is true true in his conscience: 2. that God is a witnesse not onely of the outward action and speech, but also of his particular conscience: and 3. that God is an omnipotent Judge of all, and of him that sweareth, able to justifie him, if hee sweare truly, or otherwise to condemne him eternally, if he sweare fallly. Imprecation, the second thing in an oath, is a prayer to God for two things: First, that God would be a witnesse with him that sweareth, to testifie that he sweareth truly, and according to his conscience: so Paul did, Rom. 9.1. I speake the truth in Christ, I lie not: my conscience bearing me witnesse in the holy Ghost. Secondly, a man prayes that God would become a Judge to curse him with eternall wrath, if hee swore fallly: 2 Cor. 1. 23. I call God for a record unto my soule: and the forme of swearing in the old time, was the using of this imprecation; God doe so to me and more also, if I doe not thus and thus: 2 King. 6.31.

How farre Christ forbids sweating.

We see what it is to sweare. Now we come to shew how far forth Christ forbiddeth swearing, in these words; Sweare not at all. The Anabaptists gather hence that all swearing is forbidden, and so did some [a] Heretickes in the primitive Church; yea, and [b] some of the ancient Fathers (that otherwise deserved well of the Church) thought that the Lord in the old Testament did onely permit swearing, as he did some other things that were evill, which he approved not, and that now Christ did quite take away the same. But this opinion is false and erroneous: for swearing is [c] commanded as a part of Gods worship: now if Christ should here forbid it, hee should be against himselfe, condemning that which himselfe approved. Againe, the Apostle Paul used it, as is plaine to be seene in the most of his Epistles: and Heb. 6.16. An oath for confirmation is called the ordinance of God for the ending of all strife. Others (as the Papists) say that Christ here sets downe a counsell of perfection, not forbidding all swearing, but rather wishing that men could so live in faith, love, and truth, that there should be no use of an oath. But this cannot be true: for Christs words are not perswasive, but prohibitory, expresly forbidding swearing. And yet we must know, that Christs meaning is not here to forbid all swearing simply, but all swearing after the Jewish manner and custome; that is, in common talke and communication, as is plaine in the last words of this answer, when he saith, Let your communication be yea, yea. For this is a Rule to be observed in the interpretation of Scripture, that things generally spoken, must particularly be understood, according to the circumstances of the present matter in hand: as when Paul saith, [d] he became all things to all men; if it should be taken generally, we might say, that with blasphemers hee became a blasphemer, &c. but that speech must bee restrained to the use of things indifferent; in all which hee yeelded to the weakneſſe of all, that hee might winne some: and so here, Sweare not at all, must bee restrained to the Jewish custome, which was to sweare by the Name of God in their common talke, and by other creatures, both which Christ doth utterly forbid.

Vse. Against ordinary swearing.

Here first, we learne that ordinary swearing is unlawfull, either by the Name of God, or by other creatures. This is the common sinne of our age in all sorts and degrees: some sweare by their faith; others by their troth, before God, by the crosse of the coyne, (having money in their hands) by the fire that is Gods Angell (as they use to speake,) others by bread, drinke: and looke how many occasions men have offered unto them, so many oathes have they framed unto themselves.

2 Minced oaths.

Secondly, here is condemned all minced oathes; as by my fay, maskins, and yea marry; for the ground thereof was this Popish oath, by Marie. Thirdly, here are condemned all grosse oathes by the parts of Christs body, as by his heart, bloud, sides, and such like.

Pretences for swearing

Yet men have their excuses for common swearing; as first, that they sweare the truth, and nothing else. But the truth of their oath cannot dispense with the Commandement of God, for bidding all swearing in ordinary communication. Others that be more simple, say, they sweare by good things. But that makes their sinne the greater: for the goodnesse of a thing, doth aggravate the offence in the abuse thereof. Others say, that they cannot bee beleeved upon their bare word. Answ. But Christs commandement must not bee broken, to win credit to our speeches; that credit is deare bought, which is got by pawning the soule to the devill: God must be obeyed for the matter of our communication, though no man will beleeve us. Others, as Souldiers and young gallants use to sweare to testifie their courage and gentrie; these men shew that they love the praise of men, more than the praise of God. But that will be found in the end but sory reputation, which is gained by transgression; their glory will be their shame, and their end damnation, Phil. 3. 18. nay, their base minds and cowardlinesse are herein evident, that they glory in their slavish bondage unto sinne and Satan. These excuses will not free men from the guilt of condemnation at the day of judgement: for common swearing is a shamefull taking of Gods name in vain: now the Lord hath said, that Hee will not hold them guiltlesse, that take his Name in vaine. Those therefore that have this way offended, must betime repent of this impiety, and learne to feare the Name of God, making conscience of an oath, & let their communication bee yea, yea, and nay, nay, as Christ commanded. The wicked fact of Iezabel covering bloudy impietie under hypocrisie, [c] in proclaiming a fast, when shee would have Naboth slaine for blasphemy, shewes that the custome of those times was to have publike humiliation for such sinnes, left the wrath of God

God should come upon our land. And when good king Hezekiah heard the grievous blasphemy which Rabshakeh uttered against the Lord, [a] he fell to his prayers, and to humble himselfe before God: shall this good King doe this for another mans blasphemy, and shall not we doe the like for our owne, but continue in swearing without all remorse. Our common swearers are devils incarnate, yea, worse than the devill himselfe, for the [c] devils beleeve God and tremble; but they teare God in peeces, and are never moved. If men abuse earthly Princes in their name and titles, they are imprisoned, banished, or hanged, and that justly: how shall this be done to them that impeach the dignities of mortall men; and shall not Gods wrath be hot against that people, who live in the continuall blasphemy of his name? Let us therefore feare to open our mouthes in any kind of common swearing, though it be by the basest creature that God hath made: for the least creature is better than we can be allowed to abuse by our oaths.

c Iam. 2. 19.

Cursing our selves

Lastly, here is forbidden all cursing of our selves in our common talke, as when men say, If it be not so, I would I were hanged.; I would this bread might be my bane, and such like; for every imprecation is a part of an oath: as wee may see in the oaths specified in Scripture: 1 Sam. 25. 22. So and more also doe God to the enemies of David, &c. and 2 King. 6. 5. If I doe not so and so, then God doe so and so to me: now as we are not to sweare in our common talke, so neither ought wee to use imprecation therein: for being part of an oath, it ought not to be the matter of our common speech.

Two cases wherein an oath is lawfull.

Here two questions must be skanned: first, when a man may lawfully sweare; and when not? for Christs speech forbidding ordinary swearing, seemes to grant, that there is a time when in a man may lawfully take an oath. There be two times and cases wherein a man may lawfully take an oath: First, when the Magistrate ministreth an oath unto a man upon a just occasion: for the Magistrate hath the power of God in this case, and therefore when hee justly requires it of man, then may hee lawfully sweare. Secondly, when a mans owne calling generall or particular, necessarily requires an oath; and this is in foure cases: 1. When the taking of an oath serveth to maintaine, procure, or winne unto God any part of his glory, or to preserve the same from disgrace. In this regard, Paul moved with a godly zeale, useth an oath in sundry of his Epistles, for the confirmation of his doctrine, that the Churches to whom he writ might be stablished in the truth, and so glorifie God the more. 2. When his oath serveth to maintaine or further his owne or others salvation, or preservation in soule or body: in this case [a] Paul calls God for a record unto his soule, that hee came not to Corinth to spare them. And David to further himselfe in the way of salvation, [b] bound himselfe by an oath, that hee would keepe Gods commandements: 3. When the oath serves to confirme and stablish peace and society betweene party and party, country and country, kingdome and kingdome. Thus did Abraham and Abimelech sweare each to other, Gen. 21. 23. and Iacob and Laban, Gen. 31. 53. and by vertue hereof doe subjects binde themselves by oath in alleageance to their Princes, and souldiers to their Governours. 4. When a man by oath and not otherwise, may either free himselfe from temporall losses, or procure to himselfe temporall benefits which be of great weight and moment: for an oath for confirmation is among men the end of all strife: now wee know that much strife and controversie doth arise about worldly affaires. And in this regard a man by oath may lawfully purge himselfe of infamy and slander. In these foure cases, a man may lawfully sweare, not onely publikely before the Magistrate, but also privately, so it be with due reverence and good conscience. But in common talke, or on light occasion, a man cannot lawfully sweare, either by small or great oath, for that is to take the name of God in vaine.

a 2 Cor. 1. 23.
b Psal. 119. 106.

II. Quest. How must a man take an oath, when by just occasion hee is called to sweare? Ans. To this question the Prophet Ieremy answereth, chap. 4. 2. Thou shalt sweare, The Lord liveth, in truth, in judgement, and in righteousnesse: where three vertues are required in an holy manner of swearing: First, truth, and that respecteth two things, as well the matter whereto we sweare, for God may not be brought for a witnesse to a lie; as also the minde of him that sweareth: for his oath must be according to his minde, without fraud or deceit, and with intent to performe that truly which hee promises thereupon. Secondly, Iustice or righteousnesse, which also respecteth two things; first, the thing sworne to, that must be just and lawfull, and according to Gods Word: secondly, the conscience of the sweerer: for a man must not sweare for a trifle though the thing be true, but either by the authority of the Magistrate, or upon some necessary cause of his lawfull calling: and against this vertue doe those sinne, that sweare usually in their common talke, though the thing be true: for trifles and light matters are not a just cause of an oath. Thirdly, judgement, as well of the oath, as of his owne person: for the oath; he that sweareth rightly, ought to know the nature of an oath, and be able to judge of the matter whereabout he sweareth, and also discerne rightly of the persons before whom, of time, place, and other circumstances. And for his owne person, a man that sweareth, ought to see in his conscience that hee is fit to take an oath, and thereby to worship and glorifie God: for hee that sweareth ought to have his heart smitten with feare and awe towards God, as in all other parts of his worship: Deut. 10. 20. the feare of God, and sweating by his name, are joyned together: and a prophane man that hath no

feare of God in his heart ought not to sweare. And thus much of Christs generall answer to their false interpretation.

Neither by heaven, for it is the throne of God, v. 35. Nor yet by the earth, for it is his footstoole: neither by Ierusalem, for it is the city of the great King, &c. Here our Saviour Christ commeth particularly to forbid swearing in foure severall kindes of oaths used among the Jewes, under which he includeth all indirect oaths by the creatures: and withall observe, that hee addeth severall reasons in prohibiting these severall kindes of indirect oaths: as that a man must not sweare by heaven, because it is the throne of God, &c. Now as I take it, Christ doth not directly forbid swearing by the creatures in this place: for his intent is to forbid ordinary swearing in common speech, whether it be by God, or by the creatures; which here hee nameth, because the Jewes counted them but light oaths. Yet here this point must needs be skanned, Whether it be lawfull at any time to sweare by the creatures. Sundry Papists, and those of the best account both for learning and devotion, make two kinds of oaths, in swearing by the creatures: First, when a man sweares by the creature, and puts it in the place of God, making it a Iudge and witnesse to his conscience of the truth of the thing whereof he sweareth: and this doe all condemne as wicked and unlawfull, both Protestants and Papists. Secondly, when the creature is named, but yet the oath is directed to God in the minde of the swearer, under the name of the creature, as the creature is in relation to God a signe of his presence: and this kinde of swearing is taken for lawfull, not onely of all Papists, but of many Protestant Divines which bee of good account in our age. Yet with reverence to them all, I see no reason in the Word of God, to warrant this kinde of swearing by the creature, with direction to God in the minde of him that sweareth. Indeed a man may name the creature in his oath (as Paul did, I call God to record to my conscience) and yet sweare by God: for it is one thing to name the creature in swearing, and another thing to sweare by the creature.

Reasons against this forme of swearing by the creatures, are these: First, an oath is a part of Gods worship, as hath before beene shewed: now every part of Gods worship must be referred to God directly; so we pray and give thanks to God directly, and not in the creature, and so wee ought to sweare; but in indirect swearing by the creatures, the oath is directly referred to the creature, and indirectly unto God, namely, in the creature; which is not lawfull. Secondly, a man must sweare [b] by him that is greater than himselfe, and therefore [b] God sware by himselfe, because there was no greater to sweare by; where it seemeth the holy Ghost takes it for granted, that there is no lawfull swearing by the creatures; because they are not greater than man, and so there must bee but one onely direct kinde of swearing, by God himselfe. Thirdly, Deut. 6. 13. Thou shalt sweare by my name: there it seemeth he prescribeth such a forme of swearing, wherein the name of God in some plaine manner is expressed; but in indirect oaths, another besides him that sweareth, cannot tell whether hee sweare by God or no, because the oath is by the creature, and directed to God onely in the minde of him that sweareth. Fourthly, Matth. 23. 21. Hee that sweareth by the Temple, sweareth by God: whence I gather, that an indirect oath is superfluous, because it is sufficient that a man sweare by God onely, and not by the creature also.

By these reasons I have beene moved to dislike of indirect oaths: now let us see what is said in the behalfe of them. First, it is said, that [c] Ioseph a man commended for his faith, sware by the life of Pharaoh: therefore men may sweare by the creatures. Ans. It may well be expounded; not to be an oath, but an asseveration to this effect, as surely as Pharaoh liveth: but say it is an oath, yet this fact proveth not the lawfulnesse of this kinde of swearing: for no man is so good but he may be tainted with the impieties of the place wherein hee liveth, especially being so wicked a place as Pharaohs court was.

Second Reason. 2 King. 2. 4. the Prophet Elisha sweareth by Eliahs soule. Ans. That place proveth not the point in hand: for the question is of indirect oaths, where the name of God is concealed: but in that place Gods name is prefixed, as the Lord liveth, and as thy soule liveth. Againe, that phrase may be taken for a solemne Asseveration onely, as it is well translated; as the Lord liveth, and as thy soule liveth, I will not leave thee.

Reason III. Cantic. 3. 5. There (say they) Christ himselfe sweareth by the creatures; the Roes and the Hindes of the field. Ans. Those words are not an oath, but an admiration: for Christ chargeth the enemies of his Church not to trouble her; and hee confirmeth his charge by a testimony from the brute beasts, which may be done without an oath: for it is all one as if he had said, If you doe trouble my Church the Roes and Hindes of the field shall be witnesses against you, because you doe that which they would not doe, if they had reason as you have: now the creatures may be made witnesses unto an Admiration: as Deut 32. 1. Moses calleth heaven and earth to witnesse: and so doth the Lord, Isa. 1. 2. but when a man sweareth by a thing, the same is made a witnesse to his conscience, which no creature can be.

Reason IV. Paul (say they) sware by [d] their rejoycing, which is a gift of God. Ans. Those words, are not an oath, but an obtestation, to testifie the constancie which he shewed in his ministery, and they declared in the confession of their faith: now a testimony may be drawne from a creature, as we shewed before. But (say they) the word there used, is a note of an oath. Ans.

Not alwayes: for sometimes it betokens an asseveration, as in other authors might be shewed: so that I take it, there ought not to be any indirect oaths wherein Gods name is concealed, and the creature sworne by made a pledge of Gods presence.

Now I come to the reasons, for which Christ forbids these indirect oaths: the summe of them in generall is this; because Gods name, which must not be taken in vaine, is set in every one of his creatures, even the least haire of a mans head, (for therein a man may see the wisdome and power of God) therefore we may not sweare in our common talke, no not by the least creature that God hath made.

Hence we learne sundry instructions. 1 That it is not lawfull to sweare by faith, troth, bread, drinke, and such like: for faith (to insist in one) is a gift of God, which beareth Gods name in it: for the matter of our faith is Christ, so as when we sweare by it, we sweare by Christ, whose name wee may not take in vaine; and therefore may not sweare at all by any such oaths. Againe, God hath set his name on every creature, he hath imprinted in them the signes of his power, wisdome, justice and mercy; Rom. 1. 20. The invisible things of God are seene by his workes; and Acts 14. 17. Raine from heaven, and fruitfull seasons, were witnesses unto the Gentiles of Gods goodnesse unto them: which serveth first to condemne the world of great ingratitude; for we have set before our eyes, we daily taste and handle the good creatures of God; yet who beholds in them his wisdome, mercy and goodnesse, that thereby hee might take occasion to praise his name? for men are like to brute beasts who use the benefit of the creatures, but yet never thinke on God the Creator; and like unto the swine, who eateth up the mast, but never looketh up to the tree from whence it commeth; yea, some are so shamelesse, that they deny God by their works, though not in word.

Secondly, this teacheth us carefully to meditate upon the creatures of God, labouring therein to see Gods wisdome, justice and mercy, and the rest of his attributes; that hereby we may take occasion to praise his name: Psal. 139. 14. I will praise thee, for I am wonderfully and fearefully made: marvellous are thy works, and that my soule knoweth right well; here the Prophet doth professe: First, that he did meditate on the creatures of God seriously; then, that his meditation made him to feare and to be astonished: and thirdly, to praise God, Psal. 92. 5, 6. Oh how glorious are thy works? therein importing that he did meditate thereon: but the unwise man (saith he) knoweth it not, and a foole doth not understand this: where he sheweth that it is a great point of folly to see Gods creatures, and not to behold the wonderfull power and goodnesse of God in them. Psal. 145. 5. I will meditate upon all thy wondrous workes: and v. 10. All thy workes praise thee, O Lord. His example we should follow: And whereas Gods judgements are among us, we must labour in them to see Gods indignation against our sinnes, and his mercy in chastening us for our amendment, that we might not be condemned with the world.

Thirdly, if every creature carry in it some stampe of Gods name, then what should the reasonable creature doe? should not men much more beare Gods image? yes verily, both in thought, will, affection and action: we must therefore seeke to repaire in us Gods image decayed in Adam: and above all things take heed we carry not about us the image of the devill in any sinne: for if we doe, we are farre worse than the dumbe creatures.

Fourthly, whereas every creature beares about some part of Gods image, this serves to strip the ignorant sort of their false plea: who thinke God will hold them excused because they are not booke-learned: but they must know they deceive themselves, for sith they are ignorant of the wisdome, mercy and power of God, and of many other things in God, which the very unreasonable creatures might have taught them, if they had beheld the same, and meditated thereon: they may justly feare, lest these silly creatures stand up in judgement against them at the last day.

And lastly, seeing God hath set his image in every creature, wee must labour to use them all in an holy manner; as meat, drinke, apparell and such like: we must beware we abuse them not unto our lusts any manner of way, for the abuse redounds unto the Lord whose name they beare, and wee know God will not hold him guiltlesse that taketh his name in vaine.

Now I come more particularly to the severall reasons annexed to the severall prohibitions. The first particular prohibition is this; Thou shalt not sweare by heaven: and the reason followeth, for it is the throne of God. This reason is to be scanned. A Throne is a chaire of estate wherein earthly Princes use to sit in judgement, and shewe themselves in glory and majesty. Now heaven is not properly a Throne, but by resemblance; because that God doth in heaven, and from heaven shew his glory & majesty unto men. In heaven the Saints and Angels behold the unspeakable glory of God. And from heaven doth God shew his exceeding power, even in spreading the heavens like a curtaine above the earth, in setting therein the Sunne, the Moone and Starres, most glorious creatures; in giving particular motions unto them: by sending raine from heaven with stormes, lightnings, and thunder. Againe, hee sheweth his justice from heaven, by powring downe his judgements thence: As the [e] flood upon the world of the ungodly, fire and brimstone upon Sodome and Gomorrah: As the Apostle saith, Rom. 1. 18. The wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodlinesse and unrighteousnesse of men. Again, Gods mercy and goodnesse is manifested from heaven, heaven, from whence commeth every good gift, Jam. 1. 17. yea, thence our Saviour Christ descended for the worke of our redemption: thence also the holy Ghost descended in Christs baptisme; and the Fathers voyce was heard from thence, pointing out that lambe of God which taketh away the sinnes of the world: and thence shall Christ come againe in glory at the last day to be glorified in his Saints: all which doe magnifie unto us the glory of his Throne.

The ofs.

Is the Throne of God in heaven, and not on earth? then must we learne to conceive of God, as of an heavenly King: in the chapter following we are taught to call him our heavenly Father, v. 9. and therefore when wee speake or thinke of God, or doe worship unto him in prayer or thanksgiving, we must not conceive of him in any carnall sort, but in an heavenly manner. The second Commandement forbidding the representation of God in any similitudes, may teach us, that we must not conceive of God after any earthly or carnall manner. Indeed the Popish Church approving of the images of the Trinitie (as before was shewed) doe thereby teach the people to conceive of God, as of an old man sitting in heaven, with a crowne upon his head, because he is called [d] the Ancient of dayes; but all such carnall conceits of God are here forbidden.

How to conceive aright of God. 1

That we may then conceive aright of God, two Rules must be remembred: First, we must not frame in our mindes any image of God at all, as that he should be like unto man, or any other creature: but we must conceive of him both in his workes, as our creator, governour, and preserver; and also in his properties, as most wise, most just, holy, mercifull, and such like. Secondly, we must conceive that God is one in substance, and three in person: we must not confound the persons nor divide the substance, but conceive of one God in three persons, and three persons in one and the same Godhead. These two Rules being well observed, will keepe our hearts from those vaine conceits of God, which many frame to themselves when they thinke of him in their mindes.

An heavenly conversation.

Secondly, seeing Gods throne is in heaven, therefore our conversation must be there also: for where God is and his throne, there ought our hearts to be. Now we shall have our conversation in heaven, by doing two things; First, by a continuall elevation of our mindes unto heaven, morning and evening, and at all times when we have occasion: 1 Thess. 4. 17. we are commanded to pray continually, and that wee doe, so oft as in the duties of our ordinary calling, wee desire in our hearts the blessing and assistance of God: for the sighs and groanes of the soule are prayers approved before God: wee must therefore lift up our heart to God, as David did, Psal. 25. 1. Secondly, wee must set all our affections on God, and on heavenly things, as our love, our joy, and feare, yea, our care must be of coming to heaven: for where can wee be in a more happy place than before Gods throne in heaven, where God sets out his glorie and majesty to his creature?

How we must consider of Gods providence.

Thirdly, hence wee may learne to conceive aright of the providence of God: for God sitting in his majesty in heaven, and being infinite in wisdome, power and greatnesse, doth by a most carefull providence see, know, and governe all things that are done upon the earth: this is notably set forth unto us, Psal. 11. 4. The Lords throne is in heaven, his eyes will consider, his eye lids will trie the children of men: the words are very significant, importing that God from heaven doth most narrowly see into all mens dealings and affaires: which teacheth us when we shall be in any distresse, either in body, minds, goods or friends, to behave our selves in an holy manner, for God sees our case: and therefore first wee must make our moane unto him, and humbly intreat for that grace and mercy at his hands whereof we stand in need. David maketh this a ground of much comfort in affliction: Psal. 102. 19, 20. Out of heaven (saith he) did the Lord behold the earth, that he might heare the mourning of the prisoner, and deliver the children of death.

A terror to sinners.

Lastly, this serveth to terrifie every sinner: for the Lord sits in heaven with a piercing eye, beholding all thy doings whatsoever thou art; and therefore when a man sinneth, though hee hide the same from men, yet the Lord sees him, and will reprove him, and judge him: let us therefore make conscience of all sinne, and feare to doe evill, either by thought, word, or deed, seeing wee are before the Judge that sits upon this throne.

Verse 35.

The second particular prohibition is, against swearing by the earth; the reason is, because it is the Lords foot-stoole. The earth is the Lords foot-stoole, not properly, but by resemblance; because as the footstoole is nothing in glory to the throne, no more be those glimpses of glory, which God shewes here on earth, comparable to that surpassing dignity and glory, wherein God manifests himselfe in heaven.

Instruction. 1 Gods omnipresence.

Is the earth the Lords footstoole? then is he not included in heaven, but is present also upon earth: God is not in one place alone, but he is every where at one and the same time. Here then we have a plaine proofe of Gods infinite greatnesse and omnipresence, in regard of his essence and godhead; for Christ compares him to a King, who is of that bignesse, that hee fils heaven with his glory; and of that height, that the earth below is his foot-stoole, according as he saith, Jerem. 23. 23. I fill heaven and earth. This point David proves at large, Psal. 139. 7, 8. Whither shall I goe from thy presence, &c? shewing plainely, that there is no place where of it can be truly said, that God in essence is not there present. The consideration whereof teacheth us:

First, to understand aright that saying of Paul,

Paul, Act. 17. 28. In him we live, move, and have our being: we are not in God as parts of God; for his essence is most simple; and yet it is true we are in God, because his essence is every where: it is in us, forth of us, and about us, and being in us, and about us, gives us living, being and moving.

2 A right conceiving of Gods providence.

Secondly, this teacheth us to conceive aright of Gods holy providence; to wit, that God in regard of his substance, is in every place, giving being, life, and moving to all things that be, live, and move; preserving them, and killing them at his pleasure, and doing whatsoever he will.

3 A ground of feare and obedience.

Thirdly, this consideration of Gods essentiall presence, serves to kindle in our hearts that feare of God, which is the ground of true obedience in all estates. If God shall lay upon us any affliction, either in bodie or minde, friends, or goods, let us then consider the essentiall presence of God, laying that crosse upon us, and it will strike into our hearts a reverent feare of God, and move us to patience, meeknesse, and contentation; yea, it will cause us to humble our selves under his hand: for the cause why men flie not to God, by humbling themselves in their afflictions, is because they thinke God is farre off. Againe, if in prosperitie we consider Gods essentiall presence with us, giving unto us all good things, it will make us thankfull: so much we doe unto man, when we be in his presence that hath bestowed a favour upon us, we readily addresse our selves to thankfulnesse: and shal we not doe so to God? In a word, this holy meditation of Gods presence, will make us to humble our selves unto God, and to rest contented with his good will and pleasure.

4 No difference of place for worship in regard of holinesse.

Fourthly, if God in essence be present every where, then it is needlesse to make choice of places in regard of holinesse, for the worship of God; for one place is no more neere to God than another: which confutes the vanity of Popish Pilgrimages to chiefe places for religious worship: and it checketh also the blinde opinion of many among us, who thinke the Church is the onely place of prayer and other parts of Gods worship; whereupon they never regard to pray in their private houses. But God is in thee, and in thy house, as well as in the Church, and therefore thou maist lift up pure hands unto God in all places, and must pray at home, as well as in the Church (alwaies provided that thou honour Gods ordinance in the publike assemblies.)

5 Thinke on Gods presence.

Fifthly, if God be every where, then we must labour to have hearts affected with this perswasion, that wheresoever we be, God is present with us. This lesson God taught Abraham, Gen. 17. 1. Walke before me, and be upright: and this Enoch had learned long before, Gen. 5. 24. and therefore was reported of, that he had pleased God, Heb. 11. 5. Now where this perswasion taketh place, it will strike the heart with a reverent feare and awe towards God, making a man thus to reason; God is present with me, how then should I doe this evill in his sight? Oh that this thought did run in our mindes in the time of temptation, then by Gods grace we should feare to sinne, and endevour to walke before God in all holy obedience, as his servants have done. Many are shamelesse in sinning, which comes from the want of this perswasion of Gods presence, which should strike this feare into their hearts, as we may see, Gen. 20. 11. Psal. 10. 3, 4. 11. and 94. 6, 7.

6 An helpe against the feare of the Devill.

Sixthly, this knowledge of Gods presence, serves to quiet and strengthen their hearts that are troubled with feare of the Devill, thus they must reason with themselves; the Lord my God is present with me, both in power and essence, he can binde Sathan, and he will keepe those that trust in him from the snare of the hunter, wherefore then should I be afraid?

II. Instruct. A ground of an humble and penitent life.

Secondly, is the earth the Lords footstoole? then while wee live here upon the earth, our lives ought to be a daily practice of humiliation and repentance: when good subjects come before the chaire of estate, especially if the Prince be present, then they bow their bodies, to testifie their loyall subjection unto their Prince; shall man doe this to man, and shall not wee, whose dwelling is at the Lords foot-stoole, much more humble our selves? When Davids wroth was kindled against Nabal, Abigail Nabals wife being wiser than her husband, went to meet David with a present, and so soon as she saw him, [f] she lighted of her asse, and fell downe upon her face, and bowed her selfe unto the ground, and fell at his feet, and besought him humbly to forget the trespasse, and to stay his hand from blood: so likewise when Iacob met his brother Esau, [g] He bowed himselfe seven times, to move him to compassion towards him and his family: how much more then ought we to bow our selves before the Lord, who have ten thousand fold more deserved his wrath than Nabal did Davids, or Iacob Esaus? and besides, our humble walking before him at his footstoole here on earth, may give us assurance, that one day he will place us on his throne in glorie in the heavens. But if we walke proudly before him in the practice of sinne, being at his footstoole, let us know that he hath feet like unto fine brasse burning in a furnace, Rev. 1. 15. under which he will trample all his enemies, and make them his footstoole, Psal. 110. 1.

Jerusalem is Gods city, though abounding with corruption.

The third inhibition, is from swearing by Jerusalem: the reason is, for it is the citie of the great King: that is, the citie of God, the King of Kings: for God had chosen the Iewes to be his peculiar people; and Jerusalem for his holy citie where he had his Temple, and sacrifices for his solemne worship. Now here observe, that at this time, the Temple was made a denne of Theeves, and many of the Scribes, and Jewish teachers were notable Heretikes, erring against the foundation of religion; yea, the people, were rebellious and wicked, as Steven plainely telleth them, Act. 7. 51. and yet Christ here calleth Jerusalem the citie of God; and so the people, Gods people; though they for their parts had forsaken God. The reason hereof is this, because neither the Jewes, nor any other doe then presently cease to bee the people of God, when they by sin cut off themselves from God, and forsake him; but then doe they cease to be Gods people, when God forsakes them, and cuts them off from him: like as in the state of matrimonie, when either man or wife commits adulterie, the partie breakes the bond of marriage, and as much as in him lyeth, cuts off himselfe from the other: but yet while the partie innocent retaines matrimoniall affection towards the partie offending, and gives not a Bill of divorce, they still remaine man and wife. This appeares in these Jewes, whom neither Christ himselfe did then forsake, when they rejected him, (for he prayed for them when they crucified him) nor yet his Apostles, till they saw in them manifest signes of incurable obstinacy, Act. 13.46.

When a people cease to be Gods people.

This point must be remembred, as serving to rectifie our judgements touching the state of a Church or people, that have many grievous wants and faults among them, both for doctrine and manners: for though a people doe what in them lyeth, to cut off themselves from God, yet till God cut them off from him, they cease not to be his people: and therefore we must not judge them to be no people of God, till we see that God hath cut them off. And to apply this to our owne Church: put case we had forsaken God, and had amongst us all those abuses which some would fasten upon us, as making us to be no Church; yet this proves us not to be no Church, neither ought we for all this to be so reputed: for though we have deserved indeed that God should cut us off, yet seeing he vouchsafeth unto us the doctrine of life, and the pledges of salvation, it cannot be truly said, that we are no Church. If it be said, that by this reason we will make the Church of Rome to bee Gods Church, because they have some signes of Gods favour, as Baptisme and the Word, though grievously corrupted. Answ. Though I doubt not but God hath his companie in the middest of Poperie, yet if we understand by the Church of Rome, a companie of men who professe and hold the Pope for their head, and embrace the doctrine established by the Councell of Trent, then (I say) they are no Church: for Christ hath cut them off, and given them a Bill of divorcement in his holy Word, Rev. 18.4. Come out of her my people,

Rome no true Church.

Hence also we are taught to carrie a charitable opinion of such particular persons, as goe on in time without remorse: for though they for their part have forsaken God, yet we know not, whether God hath forsaken them: he may in mercie call them to repentance, and therefore we must not rashly give sentence of judgement against them. Quest. But what if a man give himselfe to the Devill by covenant, as many have done, and doe daily, may wee not then give sentence against them, or they against themselves? Answ. No verily: for though this case be most fearefull, yet they have not absolute power over themselves: Manasses [a] King of Juda had most wickedly forsaken God, and bound himselfe in league to the Devill; but yet when he humbled himselfe being in affliction, and prayed to God, he was received to mercie. Sauls case was fearefull, while [b] he made havocke of the Church; and yet the Lord converted him when he went to persecute. This must not embolden any to goe on in sinne, for the Lord will not be mercifull unto such, Deuter. 29.19.

Charitie towards the impenitent.

[b] Act. 9. 13.

Neither shalt thou sweare by thine head. This is the last forme of swearing forbidden by Christ: the reason, Because thou canst not make one haire white or blacke: that is, thou shalt not sweare by thine head, because thou hast not power over thine owne head, thou art not able to make thine head; nay, thou canst not make one haire of thine head: nay, (which is lesse) thou canst not give to any haire his naturall colour, by making it either white or blacke.

Verſ. 36.

Where observe the honour given to God, not onely to make the haires of mans head, but even to give a naturall colour to every one of them: man can not doe the least of these things.

This teacheth us, first, that there is a particular providence of God, whereby he disposeth of all things, even of the least and basest things that be in the world: for what is more base than the haire of a mans head? and what is lesse to be regarded than the colour thereof? and yet the Lords providence reacheth hereunto. This is a matter of endlesse comfort to Gods children: for when we are once perswaded of the particular providence of God over so base and light things, we shall easily be resolved that all things which befall us in this life, whether in prosperitie or adversitie, come by Gods speciall providence: which will move us to a patient bearing of all miseries, and to contentment in every estate, because it is the Lords sending; yea, this will be a notable comfort in any affliction to know that God is the author thereof.

Gods particular providence proved.

Secondly, hath not man power over the least creature, no not over the haire of his head? then doubtlesse he may not lawfully sweare by any creature, though he have relation to God therein: for if hee might lawfully sweare by a creature, it were because he might present that creature unto God, as a pledge of his presence, wherein he desires God to punish him, if he faile in his oath. This is granted of those that defend this forme of swearing: but a man may not lay downe any creature, as a pawne before God, and appoint the Lord to punish him therein; because the creature is not in mans power: every creature is the Lords, and we may not not appeale him how he shall punish us for our perjurie. If it be said, that the oath made by the creature is a binding oath, which must be kept, for Christ calls it an oath, Mat. 23.20. and therefore a man may lawfully use it. Ans. The reason is not good: for the oath bindeth and must be kept, because indirectly a man sweares by God, and so in substance it is an oath; but yet the manner of it is unlawfull, because an oath being part of Gods worship, ought to be directed unto God immediately: when an Infidell sweares by his false gods (as [c] Laban did by the god of Nahor) that is an oath, and it binds his conscience, because in his intent he sware by the true God; and yet the forme of it is unlawfull, because he puts that in the roome of God, which is not God.

Abuse about the haire of the head.

Thirdly, is the haire of the head the creature of God, and the naturall colour his workmanship? then all abuse hereof must needs be unlawfull: as First, the custome of those men or women, who being ashamed of Gods workemanship in their owne haire, doe beautifie their heads with bought haire, sometime of dead persons. This is an odious thing, and such persons take Gods name in vaine, as much as they which sweare by their head at every word: for be they what they will be, God in some sort hath set his owne name in the naturall colour of their haire, which none ought to be ashamed of. Secondly, the painting of faces, and colouring of the haire, is another abuse of Gods name set therein. This practice was abhorred of the heathen, who in their writings have branded Poppæa Nero's wife, because she used an oyntment made of Asses milke, to make her face faire and bright: what then shall we say of our ladies and gentlewomen, who paint their faces with Spanish white, and colour their haire? These doubtles beleeve not Gods Word, which Preferreth the feare of God before favour and beautie, Pro. 31.30. But yet me thinkes they should be ashamed to be followers of Iezabel, 2 King. 8.30. Thirdly, the wearing of long haire is another abuse thereof, in the younger sort: it began indeed among the aged, but now it is become a tricke of youth, and is the badge of a proud heart: for how can they say they glorifie God thereby, when the Apostle saith, It is a shame for a man to have long haire. Well, sith God hath set his name therein, we must beware how we make it an instrument of sinne. If it be said, to weare long haire is our English fashion: I answer, It is not our ancient English fashion, but indeed it is a forren tricke, and therefore as unlawfull as forren attire which God condemnes, Zeph. 1. 8. Our ancient English fashion (except it were among the aged) was to weare short haire: and in everie countrey, the most ancient and grave fashions ought to be followed; not onely in the use of the haire, but in apparell also, that therein men may shew the grace of their heart: for mans attire is Gods ordinance, borrowed from his creatures, wherein God hath set his name: and therefore we ought not to deface it, with the stampe of pride and vanitie; but rather shew therein, that libertie and modestie, that may honour Gods name.

v. 37 Let your communication be yea, yea; and nay, nay: for whatsoever is more commeth of evill.

This verse containeth two parts: A rule for the framing of our speech in common talke; and a Reason thereof. The Rule is this, Let your communication be yea, yea; nay, nay: where he sheweth that though men may not sweare in their common talke, yet they may use a simple affirmation, or negation to the thing they speak. This Rule is diversly expounded: some take it to respect the truth of our speech, as if Christ had said; Whatsoever you affirme in speaking, affirme it truly; and whatsoever you deny in speaking, deny it truly. But by the circumstances of the place, it rather seemeth, that Christ here propoundeth a Rule for the very forme of our common talke, to this effect; If you would affirme any thing in your ordinarie speech, let your affirmation be yea; and if you would deny any thing, let your negation or denial be no, and in your ordinarie communication say no more, though you be urged thereto. So must we take communication for ordinarie talke: for in some cases it hath beene lawfull to sweare, as hath beene shewed.

A rule of communication.

Firstly, by this Rule is condemned the adding of invocations to our common affirmations or negations: as O Lord, yea: nay, good God, and such like. In some cases, and at some times these may be used: but in ordinary and familiar communication, these invocations are abuses of Gods name. An earthly Prince will not suffer his name to be tossed in every mans mouth; and much lesse will the Lord, who herein is jealous of his glorie.

The first, 1. Invocations in communication unlawfull.

Secondly, here note, that asseverations may not be ordinarily used in common talke; as verily, verily, no in truth, and such like: these are more than simple affirmations and negations; and therefore in common speech may not be used. Our Saviour Christ, the patterne of pietie, never used them but in weightie matters, which were carefull to be remembred; and then hee said, Verily, verily, I say unto you.

2. Asseverations.

Thirdly, here is condemned the use of execrations, when we affirme or deny a thing in our common talke; as to say, Yea, or else I would I were dead, and such like.

3. Execrations.

Fourthly, ordinarie swearing is here against plainely forbidden, whether it be by the name of God, or by other creatures. Some to avoid swearing, (as they thinke) in their common talke, for yea, and nay, use to say, by ye's and by no; but herein they offend: for these phrases are

4. Ordinarie swearing.

Matth. 5. ver. 37.

oaths, as well by faith, and by troth: and in a word all speeches in common talke, added to confirme our speech, above yea and nay, are abuses against this Rule of Christ, for ordinarie communication.

For whatsoever is more than these, that is, whatsoever exceedeth a simple affirmation or negation in common speech comes of evill: that is, of the evill one, the Devill: so chap. 6.13. Deliver us from evill: that is, from the Devill, that evill one. This is a most excellent reason, to move men to put in practice this Rule: for all abuses of oaths, asseverations, invocations, and deprecations, in common speech, are abuses of Gods name, and they come from the Devill, he is the schoole-master that teacheth men to use them.

Quest. Whether doth every temptation come from the Devill? Ans. Every temptation to evill is of the Devill; so much this Text proveth: and Matth. 4.3. the Devill is called the Tempter, because he gives himselfe to tempt all men, by all meanes at all times. True it is, that some temptations come from our corrupt hearts, but yet the Devill hath an hand in them to further them. Quest. How can this be, seeing the Devill is but one, and can be but in one place at once? Ans. There is indeed one head of wicked spirits, called Beelzebub, and the Devill, who hath innumerable wicked angels ministring unto him, as may be gathered, Matth. 25. 41. where hell is said to be prepared for the Devill and his angels: and it is not unlike, but they are more in number, than all the men upon the earth: for where can any man be in this life, but some wicked spirit will be readie to tempt him unto sin? doth he not provoke the filthy person to uncleannesse, and every man to such sinne, whereunto he is most inclined? And say the evill motion ariseth from our owne corruption, yet the Devils helpe is never wanting to bring it into action.

Vse 1. Devils are about us though unseene.

This serveth to confute the folly of our common people, who never feare the Devill, but when hee appeares unto them in some shape: they thinke he is never neere them, but when they see him: but they must know that the Devill by his wicked spirits, is alwaies about them day and night, and in all places: and therefore they must learne more to feare his temptations, than his appearance: for that is not so terrible to the sight, as his temptations are hurtfull to the soule. Secondly, this presence of the Devill with every man, to tempt him at all times, must teach us to keepe strait watch against all sinne, and the occasions thereof: we are easily perswaded to watch against theeves that would deprive us of our temporall goods, or naturall life: now the Devill our spirituall enemy, is daily about us, to seeke the ruine of our soules, and therefore wee must alwaies have an eye to his temptations. And indeed, if wee would well consider his presence, and malice against us, it would make us watch and feare, lest he should take us in his snare.

But why is the Devil called the evil one? Ans. By a kinde of excellencie of speech, for these reasons: First, because he is evill in excesse, his sins are in the highest degree: for it is like, his first sinne was directly against the holy Ghost, which may be one reason, why God chose not Angels, but men, on whom he would shew mercie after their fall. Secondly, because hee commits evil and wickednesse without ceasing, and therefore is compared to an [a] hunger-bitten Lyon, who goeth about continually, seeking whom he may devoure. The most wicked man that is, or ever was, will sometime doe good: [b] Pharaoh humbled himselfe, and confessed his sins to Moses: and [c] Saul desires to worship God with Samuel: Herod also heard John Baptist [d] gladly, and did many things according to his Ministerie: but the Devill herein differs from all wicked men, that he doth nothing but practise wickednesse; he is alwaies murthering, and never ceaseth to seeke mens destruction. Thirdly, because he practiseth sins of all sorts and degrees, in himselfe, and by his Ministers: for the sins that be in the world, be all from him, either originally, or by furtherance. The vilest man that is, doth abstaine from sin sometime; yea, by nature he hateth some sins: the proud and prodigall man cannot abide covetousnesse; and the drunkard may abhorre idolatrie; but the Devill continually practiseth sinnes of all sorts; and therefore is justly called the evill one.

c 1 Sam. 15. 30.

Here then we may see a reason, why we are called the children of wrath, and of the Devill by nature: namely, because by nature we carrie in us, and about us, as lively an image of the Devill in sin, as any childe doth of his naturall father. For first, in our conception we are guilty of Adams sin, in eating the forbidden fruit. Secondly, our nature is stayned with originall sinne, which is (not a practice, but) a proneness to all manner of mischiefe and wickednesse, that is committed in the world. Seest thou a man kill his father or mother, or betray his master, as Judas did to Christ, though it may be, thou abhorrest such sinnes, yet doubtlesse the seed thereof is in thee: yea, if God in mercie did not keepe us from it, our corruption would carrie us to the blasphemie against the Spirit. And thirdly, from this naturall corruption, doe arise innumerable evill thoughts, words, and deeds, in the course of our lives, in all which we beare the image of the Devill, till God bring us to repentance; and therefore justly may we be called the children of wrath, and of the Devill by nature, having the same corruption in us, that is in the Devill, though not in the same degree and manner.

Why we are called the children of wrath, and of the Devill.

Hence we learne, First, to be ashamed and confounded in our selves, yea, to hang downe our heads: for what cause hath he to be puffed up with selfe-love, that is by nature in himselfe like to the Devill? Secondly, this teacheth us above all things, to labour to have the image of God

God renued in us, in righteousnesse, and true holinesse, which was lost in Adam, that so the devils image, in sin and wickednes, may be defaced. Thirdly, this must cause us to make no account of any worldly thing, that pertaineth to us; but all our joy must be in Christ, he must be our wisdome, and righteousnesse, our riches, and all things else, because by him we are renued from the devils likenesse to the image of God.

v 38. Yee have heard that it hath beene said, an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, &c.

Here Christ returnes to the commandements of the second Table, intending to restore the same to their proper sense, and withall to confute the erroneous interpretation thereof, given by the Jewish Teachers. And first, he commeth to a particular Judiciall Law of Moses, pertaining to the sixth commandement, touching the Requitall of like for like: in which, as in the former, he first sets downe the words of the law of Moses, but yet to be understood, with the erroneous interpretation of the Scribes and Pharisies, v. 38. then, he gives the right sense of that law, and withall confuteth the false interpretation of the Jewish Teachers, v. 39, 40, 41.

Moses law of like for like expounded.

For the first, the words of Moses law here set downe, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth, are written, Exod. 21. 24. whereto, as to the former, Christ prefixeth this preface, It hath beene said, thereby giving us to understand that hee is about to lay downe the law of God, in the false sense of the Jewish Teachers: for the better perceiving whereof, wee must observe the true meaning of that law: An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth: wherein the Lord requireth requitall of like for like, not by every private man, but by the publike Magistrate. As if a man did put out his neighbours eye, then the Magistrate should put out his eie; and strike out his teeth that strikes out his neighbours teeth: this appeares to be so, because revenge is directly forbidden to every private person, and plainely appropriated to the Judge, Deut. 19. 18, 19, 21. But the Jewish Teachers expounded this law of private revenge; as though God had said to every private man, If thy neighbour plucke out thine eye, pluck out his againe; and if he strike out thy tooth, strike thou out his tooth: this is the false interpretation of the Jewes. Quest. How could they so farre overshoot themselves in so cleere a case, seeing in all the bookes of Moses, it is plainely referred to the Magistrate? Ans. There may bee two reasons given thereof: First, it is a naturall opinion, that a man may revenge himselfe in his owne cause privately, and not wait for recompence of the Magistrate; and answerable hereunto, there is a mighty strong desire of revenge in every mans heart by nature; when he is injured: now it is like, that these Jewes followed their corrupt nature, and lewdly affections, in the interpretation of this law. Againe, the Jewish people were mightily given to revenge, by their naturall disposition, as may appeare by the law of the Cities of Refuge, and by mentioning of the Revenger of bloud: which plainly imports, that the Jewes would have bloud-gaine of him that shed bloud, wheresoever they met with him. Now the Jewish Teachers framed their doctrine to the common disposition and behaviour of their people, and so fulfilled the truth of God, as many times it falls out, that the common practice of men makes time to seeme no sinne.

Vse 1. Tempering religion to mens humours a Satanicall policy.

In the person of these Jewish Teachers, wee may see the politie of the devill, whose intent is and hath beene in all ages, to overturne religion: and to this end, he endevours to cause men to temper religion to their naturall disposition and common opinion in outward manners; whereby hee overturneth both religion and people. This appeares in other places among the Jewes, as well as in this case of revenge. They were a people given much to covetousnesse, as may appeare by the law of toleration for taking usury of strangers, and by their hardnesse of heart, so much reproved by all the Prophets. Now the Devill perceiving this to be their naturall disposition, makes Gods doctrine of salvation, seeme to them a doctrine of earthly benefits: for hee caused them to dreame of an earthly King for their Messias, and of an earthly flourishing Kingdome under him. Thus also hath the devill deale with other heathen people: The Romans in Italy, have beene ever grossly addicted to superstition, sorcery, and idolatry, as heathen writers doe testifie. Now though God vouchsafed them his true Religion in the primitive Church, yet the devill perceiving their naturall disposition to superstition, hath so tempered the truth of God among them, with a naturall and superstitious religion, that now they abound as much in idolatry and superstition, as ever they did when they were heathen. The like malicious practice doth the devill shew among the Protestants, where the Gospell is truly preached; for though he cannot (as he desires) corrupt religion in the mouthes of the Teachers; yet hee weakens it greatly in the hearts of men, both Teachers and hearers, causing them so farre forth onely to receive it, as it is suitable to their nature and disposition: but where it crosseth their humors, there to leave it. Is not this evident? for he that embraceth the truth with his heart, will frame his life according to it; but generally the entertainment of religion is only formall: for though men professe it, yet they live in their sinnes, they make it to jump with their naturall dispositions having indeed a shew of godlinesse, but they want the power thereof; and so in them religion is vaine, Jam. 1. 26. Wherefore we must be advertised, to take heed of this policy, of the devill, and whereas hee labours to draw some religion to mens dispositions, wee on the contrary must devout in all things to transforme our selves into religion, obeying that forme of doctrine, wherevnto we are delivered, Rom. 6. 17.

A property of a bad Teacher.

Secondly, in these Scribes and Pharises wee observe the property of a bad Teacher: namely, to transforme himselfe and his doctrine, to the customes and manners of the people, when as the people should bee transformed into his doctrine and practice, according to godlinesse. Hereof the Lord admonisheth Jeremy, [f] Let them returne to thee, but returne not thou to them: for it was the practice of the false prophets in his time, thus to [g] strengthen the hands of the wicked: and it is a common fault in many Teachers, that they frame themselves, both for doctrine and practice, to the custome and manners of the people: but this is the devils policy, whereby he overthroweth religion, and destroieth mens soules.

V. 39 But I say vnto you, resist not evill: but whosoever shall strike thee on thy right cheeke, turne to him the other also.

In this, and the three next verses, Christ confutes the false interpretation of this law. The summe of his answer stands in two points; the first is an inhibition, resist not evill, which is explained by three examples in the words following; The second, is a commandement to requite good for evill, v. 42.

Exposition.

For the first, by evill is meant, the injury or wrong that is done to man; or more properly, the evill one, that is, the evill man that doth the wrong. Resist not, that is, use not against the evill doer, to requite like for like, according to the injury he hath done unto thee: so vnderstand the word sagittarii. Now Christ forbiddeth not resisting evill by a lawfull defence, but by way of private revenge: for he speaketh to his Disciples, and to private men, saying, I say unto you which heare, as Saint Luke hath it, chap. 6. 27.) Yet further to cleare this interpretation, wee must know, that the Scripture mentioneth two kindes of revenge, Publike and Private. Publike revenge is, when the Magistrate according to justice, and the law of God, punisheth an evill person that wrongeth his brother. Private revenge is, when those that are no Magistrates, will revenge themselves on such as doe them wrong. The publike revenge is allowed by S. Paul, calling the Magistrate, [h] Gods Minister, for the executing of revenge upon evildoers. Private revenge, is forbidden by the same Apostle, [i] Revenge not thy selfe. Now by this doctrine is plaine, that the Saviour Christ here forbidding revenge, meaneth not publike, but private revenge.

[h] Rom. 13. 4.

[i] Rom. 12. 17.

The vse. Magistracy lawfull.

First, here we see those men confuted, who thinke it unlawfull for a Christian to be a Magistrate, to execute revenge upon malefactours by the sword, or to make warre against the common enemies: these men are deceived, by mistaking this text, which forbiddeth onely private, and not publike revenge. Secondly, here wee see, that all private revenge is flatly condemned, as a sin against the sixth commandement. This point must bee remembred, because it is our naturall opinion, and our hearts desire to requite like for like in private causes, when we are injured.

2 Private revenge unlawfull.

Now that wee may see more into this sinne, we are to know that private revenge is twofold; Inward, and Outward: Inward private revenge is a purpose in the heart, to doe a man an evill turne; this is commonly called the bearing of a grudge, and it is here condemned. Outward revenge is, when the spite of the heart comes into action, either by word or deed: by word, when a man gives out threatning speeches: as that hee will sit on his skirt, or be even with him, if he lie in his lot, and such like; or such cursing speeches, as a plague take thee, a murren or pestilence light upon thee: or rayleth or chideth, calling another knave, villaine, &c. By deed and action men shew outward revenge, when they beat a word and a blow, using to fight, and to strike one another, by way of private revenge. Hereto also we may referre an ordinarie bad practice of some Magistrates and Superiours, though (it may be) few thinke it to bee a fault; to wit, when the Magistrate doth aggravate the punishment upon a malefactour, for some private grudge he beareth to him: for then he useth private revenge: as also when Parents or Masters correct their servants and children in fury and rage; for though they be publike persons in this regard, yet to give correction in a cholericke mood, is to ease the heart by way of revenge.

Kindes of private revenge. 1. Inward.

2. Outward.

Vse 1.

Here then wee must learne, that wee may not requite evill for evill, in thought, word, or deed, to those that doe us wrong, any manner of way, but must rather suffer injury, and referre the revenge unto God that judgeth righteously. And because this duty goes against our naturall disposition, I will use some reasons to perswade our hearts to yeeld unto it: First, the Apostle teacheth out of Deuteronomie, that [k] vengeance is the Lords: if then we shall privately revenge our selves, we rob God of his right, and so sin against the first commandement. Secondly, in the next words he addeth, and I will repay, saith the Lord: where God takes upon him to be our debter in the case of injustice, and therefore when wee are wronged, we must not be rash to revenge our selves, but must wait with patience upon the Lord, laying downe our injury at his feet; for he will repay in due time, to them that have wronged us. Thirdly, consider the examples of worthy men in this case: for our Saviour Christ never sought revenge, but bare wrongs patiently, committing all to him that judgeth righteously, ly, leaving us an example to doe likewise, [l] 1 Pet. 2. 20. Yea, when hee was cruelly and unjustly crucified, he prayed for his persecutors, Luk. 23. 34. Steven also prayed for them that stoned him, Acts 7. 26. and David, though a King, would not suffer revenge to bee taken on Shimei that cursed him, 1 Sam. 19. 9, 10. neither would hee ever touch Saul, who sought his life, though he had him [m] often in his hands: nay, [n] his heart smote him for cutting off the lap of his coat: so farre was he from seeking revenge. Fourthly, in the fifth petition wee pray, Forgive us our sinnes, as wee forgive our trespasses: but if wee carrie grudging in our hearts, wee pray God not to forgive us, but to condemne us; for we will not forgive, but bee revenged on them that offend us. Now this is a most fearefull case, that a man should pray for vengeance upon himselfe. Fifthly, it is not meet in common reason, that the same partie should be the accuser and the Judge; and yet, if a man might revenge himselfe, this should be so: and therefore, if wee would bee Christs Disciples, wee must arme our selves with patience, in suffering wrong, and referre revenge to God that judgeth righteously.

Yet some will say, If we alwayes put up and suffer wrong, wee shall never be at quiet, but still bee abused. Answ. Though in our owne person we may not revenge our selves, yet wee may crave the helpe of the Magistrate, either for the preventing, or for the punishment of wrong done unto us: for the Magistrate is Gods Lieutenant, to releeve the oppressed, and to execute vengeance on malefactours: thus did [o] Paul send to the chiefe Captaine, to prevent a conspiracie that the Jewes intended against him, and [p] appealed to Cæsar, to avoid the danger of the Jewes at Jerusalem: and yet when wrong is done unto us, wee must beare it patiently, without seeking private revenge, although the wrong wore doubled or trebled upon us.

Wrong doing the properties of an evillman.

Thirdly, our Saviour Christ her calling the wrong doer an evill one, giveth us to understand, that it is the propertie of an evill man to doe wrong unto others; and this title is given to the wrong doer, to teach us, that wee must suffer wrong patiently, though he bee an evill man that offereth it unto us. It is the propertie of a good man to doe good continually, but to doe wrong is the marke of an evill man, who herein is like the Devill: which must teach us not to doe wrong to any one in his bodie, goods, or name, either by word or deed; but rather apply our selves to doe all the good wee can, to every one within the compasse of our calling. Hereby we shall see what our estate is, for if in our callings wee set our selves to helpe others, either by word or deed, wee answer the sight of Gods evill men: such are our Usurers, and Extorsioners, and all those that use fraud and deceit in their callings. But if wee would shew our selves to bee good men, approved of God in Christ, then we must referre our bredies and soules, and all that wee have, to the good of others. Although men by nature bee like to [q] savage beasts, as Lyons, Woolves, Cockatrices, &c. whose propertie is, to devoure and hurt other creatures, yet when it pleaseth God to receive them to mercie, and to place them in his kingdome, then they lay aside their cruell nature, and live peaceably one with another; for in the mountaine of Gods holinesse, none shall hurt or destroy, verse 9. It is a prophecie of Christs kingdome, that therein the sword and speare, which be weapons of war, shall be turned into sithes and mattocks, which are instruments of common good in time of peace; whereby was signified, that when men are converted, and become true children unto God, they lay aside all malice, and give themselves to doe good, and become serviceable unto all for the good of all. This was notably verified in Paul, who of a [r] persecutor became a preacher: yea, [s] he became all things to all men, that by all meanes he might win some. And thus doing, we are like to our heavenly father, who doth good to all; but if we give our selves to wrong doing, we are evill ones, and herein like to the Devill himselfe.

Fourthly, Christ here forbidding private revenge, which is unlawfull, doth hereby establish that revenge, which is lawfull & just. Now lawfull revenge (to speake somewhat hereof) is the worke of a just and lawfull power, requiring evill for evill. This just revenge is two-fold, Divine, and Humane. Divine revenge is the worke of Gods absolute power, taking vengeance upon offenders: of the lawfulnesse of this revenge in God, there is no question; only this we must remember, that God executes this vengeance dayly, in the manifold miseries of this life, and likewise in the just condemnation of the impenitent after death. Indeed as a father he chasteneth his Church and children, for vengeance in Christ becomes nurturement; but as a severe Judge he plagues the wicked, powring vengeance on them, both temporall and eternall. Humane revenge is the ordinance of God, whereby men being thereunto called by God, doe execute vengeance in the name of God: and it is two-fold, extraordinarie, or ordinarie: Extraordinarie, when men are extraordinarily stirred up by the Spirit of God, to execute vengeance upon offenders, in the name of God. Thus [t] Phinees slew Zimri and Cosbi: and thus many of the Judges of Israel, especially [u] Ehud and [w] Samson, tooke revenge upon the enemies of Gods people: thus Elias the Prophet slew Baals priests, 1 King. 18. 40. and destroyed three two Captaines and their fifties, with fire from heaven, 2 King. 1. 10, 12. thus [x] Peter killed Ananias and Sapphira: and Paul stroke [y] Elymas with blindnesse. This kind of revenge is now rare, for we are not to looke for extraordinarie instincts: we know Christ rebuked his [z] Disciples, for seeking to execute this extraordinarie revenge upon the Samaritans; and therefore when wee have a conceit hereof in our selves, wee may justly suspect what spirit it is that moveth us. Ordinarie revenge is that which men ordinarily put in execution, in the Church and Common-wealth, according to Gods will, being thereto called by God: and it is two-fold, Lesser, or Soveraigne. Lesser revenge is the inflicting of lawfull correction upon offenders, in word or deed, not reaching to the case of life and death: this kinde of revenge is committed to parents over their children, and masters over their servants, to Schoole-masters over their Schollers, and Tutors over their Pupils. Soveraigne revenge is that whereby the Magistrate may lawfully punish men according to their offences in bodie, goods, or life it selfe; this I call soveraigne, not simply, but because it is the highest that agreeth unto man, being of life and death. This revenge is executed partly in peace, and partly in war: In peace, by the confiscation of goods, by imprisonment, banishment, and (if the offence deserveit) by taking away of life, for the good of the State publike. In time of warre, when as (not for everie case) but for the just repelling or requiting of wrongs, warre is made against the enemies of the State. Now though it belong to the Magistrate only, to execute publike revenge, yet everie private man may have the benefit hereof, and may upon just causes use the Magistrates helpe for his revenge: as first, if his cause bee weightie wherein hee is wronged: 2. if it bee necessarie: and 3. if it be for his just defence, for the common good, and the punishment of the offender; and the Magistrate in these cases may lawfully, nay, he must put in execution revenge for private men: for without this, neither Church, nor Common-wealth, nor any Societie could stand.

Thus, we see what just revenge is: now considering it is the ordinance of God, this must admonish us to eschew all outward offences, that wee may so escape the just revenge of the Magistrate: and also to make conscience of all sinnes, that so wee may avoid the vengeance of God. And thus much of the generall rule.

Now because this generall rule might seeme to be hard, therefore Christ explaines the same in three particular examples, wherein he shewes how men are to behave themselves, when they are wronged. The first example is in these words, Whosoever shall smite thee on the right cheeke, turne to him the other also: under which are comprehended all injuries done to mens bodies, not only by blowes and words, but also in the contempt of their persons, signified by striking on the right cheeke: for usually men strike with the right hand, which directly should light on the left cheeke, and if the right cheeke bee smitten, it is commonly with the backe of the hand, which is a blow with contempt: now, say a man is abused in his bodie, even by blowes of contempt, yet hee must not revenge himselfe, but turne the other cheeke also: which words must not simply bee understood, but by comparison thus; Rather thinke thou revenge thy selfe, and resist the evill one that hath stricken thee on the right cheeke, turne to him the other: for this particular example comprehendeth in it the generall rule of not resisting evill by private revenge: and that it may not simply be taken may hereby appeare: first, because Christ should then command the sufferer to give further occasion of wrong doing to the evill man, which is not his meaning: againe, Christ himselfe who gave this Rule, did not so practise it, when he was smitten by the servant of the High Priest, Joh. 18. 22, 23.

First, by this example Christ condemneth the common practice of challenging the field for personall wrongs, and of taking that challenge when it is given; as also the fighting the single combat: for Christ teacheth, that a man must take many wrongs, before he seeke to revenge himselfe by any such course. If it bee said, it is a disgrace to refuse a challenge; wee must know, that true grace and credit standeth in yeelding obedience unto God, and not in sinning against him for the saving of our reputation with men.

Secondly, the common practice of fighting and quarrelling, is here condemned: many hold it unlawfull to give the first blow, but yet if another strike them they thinke they may strike againe: but this Christ here condemnes, and his owne example is against it: for when hee was smitten before the High Priest, hee [a] smote not againe: when Paul [b] was smitten, he only defended himselfe in word, but smote not againe. And Christ checketh Peter for taking the sword, to resist the Officers that apprehended him in the garden; indeed hee permitted his Disciples to weare weapons, yet not for revenge, but for their just defence only.

Thirdly, Christ here condemneth their opinion, that make it a matter of praise for a man, that he will not turne his face from a man. It is indeed the praise of the Magistrate to be courragious, and not to feare the face of man. But yet a private man, be he never so strong, ought to turne his face from the adversary, unlesse it be in the case of his necessarie defence: for a man must suffer double or treble wrong, rather than revenge himselfe. If any shall thinke this to be a great disgrace, still he must remember, that our chiefest honour consisteth in approving our selves unto God, by obeying his will, who here commandeth us rather to turne our backs and flie, than to resist in our owne revenge.

Quest. But what if a man be assaulted, either on the high way, or in his house, may hee not then resist, to save his life and his goods? Ans. In such a case, hee may doe two things: First, he may to the uttermost of his power, defend himselfe and his goods; for the Text speaketh not against defence, but against revenge. Secondly, if a man can see no way to escape, either by by flight, or calling for helpe of the Magistrate, then he is to stand so farre in his owne defence, that he is rather to kill than be killed: for in this case, God puts the sword into a private mans hand, and makes him a Magistrate, to execute revenge upon his adversarie: and thus might a man lawfully kill a theefe in the night without the guilt of blood, Exod. 22. 2.

Fourthly, hence observe, that no private man may lawfully kill a Prince, though he should tyrannically destroy both Church and common wealth; for this Rule must square the actions of private men, they must rather beare double and treble wrong, than by way of private revenge resist the evill one. The revenge of evill Magistrates must be referred to God, to whom it justly belongeth, as David did, 1 Sam. 26. 10. and Psal. 43. 1.

Lastly, in this first example of particular injurie, we may see one propertie of an evill man; namely, to be given to fighting, quarrelling, and contending: such an one may think himselfe a goodly fellow, but yet he that uses his strength to ordinarie quarrelling, and wrong doing to others, is here made an evill one, by the sentence of our Saviour Christ: and therefore such as excell in strength, if they would be approved of Christ, must make conscience of quarrelling and fighting, and offer violence to no man.

Pulpit-tyrants call the powers a Tyrants.

Quarrelling note of an evill person.

v. 40 And if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloake also.

2. Example of suffering wrong.

Here Christ propounds the second example of wrong done unto men, wherein he forbids the party wronged to revenge himselfe: to wit, being injured in his goods, either privatly, or under colour of law, for both these may here well be understood. By coat is properly meant the inner garment; and by cloake the outward: but here the words are not so strictly to be taken, but indifferently for any divers garments: for in Luke they are thus set downe, And him that would take away thy cloake, forbid not to take thy coat also. And Christs meaning is this; If one unjustly contend with thee, to take from thee one garment, let him have another also, whether coat or cloake, or such like thing. And yet this commandement is not simply, but comparatively to be understood; to wit, rather than a man should seeke private revenge, hee must not onely suffer the losse of one garment but of moe, and so of other temporall goods.

Out of this example, we may learne these Instructions; First, that Christians must be quiet and patient, and not given to contend, whether it be privately, or openly by suit at the law. This contention Paul reproved in the Corinthians, 1 Cor. 3. 3. and chargeth the Philippians that nothing be done among them by contention, Philip. 2. 2. which is a notable rule: for though men be at difference, yet there ought to be no contentious either in word or deed, all things ought to be done in love, and so strife shall cease: that wrangling spirit is not of God, whereby men strive to put downe others in words: when a man hath spoken his minde, he ought to cease, for multiplying of words is against Christian civilitie, and every where condemned in the holy Scripture.

Secondly, here is condemned, not the lawfull, but the common use of lawing, whereby men for every trifle will trouble the Courts. This argues a contentious spirit, and a minde that is given to revenge, which beseemeth not Christians, as Paul sheweth, 1 Cor. 6. 1, 2, 5, 6. and yet it is the common practice in these our daies, from whence come such unchristian speeches as this, I will be revenged on him, or else I will spend all that I have. But the truth is, that rather than a man should goe thus to law, hee ought to suffer a double and treble losse.

Thirdly, here Christ teacheth, that in all our dealings we must have a principall regard unto charitie, and rather seeke to maintaine this grace in our hearts, than our outward worldly goods.

Fourthly, we are here taught to preferre our owne peace and quietnesse, before our temporall goods; yet not simply, but in this respect, that hereby we may have fitter time with quietnesse to imploy our selves in the worship of God, and so edifie our selves in holinesse and pietie: this dutie concerneth them especially, which have much dealing in the world, and thereupon many occasions of anger and vexation: for such unruly passions make a man unfit for Gods service; it is the meeke and lowly heart that receives the blessing from the Lord, Matth. 11. 29.

4 How we ought preferre our peace.

Lastly, in this example is set downe unto us, a second propertie of evill men; namely, to bee given to wrong their brethren in their goods, either privately, or under colour of law: such a one was Zacheus before his calling, when hee gathered tribute and custome for the Roman Emperour, he used [a] forged accusations, for his owne gaine: and these our dayes abound with those that enrich themselves by pilling and polling of their brethren; but all such are unjust and evill persons, by the judgement of our Saviour Christ.

5 Wrong doing a note of an evill person.

verse 41 And whosoever will compell thee to goe a mile, goe with him twaine.

3. Example.

Here Christ propounds the third example of wrong doing, by Superiours towards their inferiours, wherein the partie wronged is likewise forbidden to make resistance by way of private revenge. For the understanding whereof, wee must know, that as in this our common wealth we we have Post-masters, so in other countries, especially in Persia, there were like officers, who by authoritie from their Kings or Emperours, might take mens cattell, nay, men themselves, and use them for travell and carriage, at their pleasure: and it is like, the Jewes had got this custome among them after their captivitie, as may in part appeare, by them [b] compelling Simon of Cyrene to beare Christs crosse when they met him. Now Christ speakes here of the abuse of this authoritie; saying, That if a man compell thee wrongfully, under colour of the Magistrates authority, to goe with him one mile, goe with him twaine: that is, rather than by resisting thou shouldest revenge thy selfe, goe with him two miles: whence he gives to all Inferiours a commandement, to beare patiently the wrongs that are done unto them by their Superiours, and rather to suffer a double wrong, than seeke to revenge them selves by private resistance.

Exod. 27. 34.

This vices of impatience commended.

Here then we see a just ground of reproofe of inferiours for sundry practices of impatience towards their superiours; as first, when a man is attached by an Officer, to make violent resistance. This practice swarveth from the Rule of Christ: for by thou art attached wrongfully, yet thou oughtest to acknowledge Gods ordinance in Magistracie, and to obey the same, without offering private revenge. Secondly, it often falls out, that Land-lords, and men of wealth, oppresse the poore, by inclosing of common lands, and such like; now hereupon the poore fort use to raile against them, and to curse them: but this practice is also here forbidden by our Saviour Christ; for albeit the rich men sin grievously in oppressing the poore, yet the poore must suffer rather a double or treble wrong, than by cursing speeches seeke private revenge.

A note of evill superiours.

Againe, in this example we may see a third kinde of wicked men; to wit, all such as being superiours, doe wrong and violence to their inferiours; as cruell Magistrates, oppressing Land-lords, cavelling officers, usurers, and such like: these are here called exiliones by our Saviour Christ: and therefore they must learne to shew mercy, and leave off wrong and violence, if they looke to escape to be judged as evill ones at the last day.

Christianlike a state of suffering.

Thus we see the three particular examples of wrongs, wherein men may not revenge themselves privatly. Now from them all joyntly considered, we may note two points: First, that the calling of a Christian is a state of suffering: 1 Pet. 2. 20, 21. If ye take it patiently when ye suffer wrong for well-doing, this is praise worthie, for ye are hereunto called: and therefore, if we would declare our lives to be the true members of Christ, wee must shew forth patience in bearing wrongs, without seeking revenge. This was Christs lesson to his Disciples; for having told them of afflictions to come, he bids them to [c] possesse their soules with patience: so when the spirit of God sets downe the afflictions of the Church, he addes this as an Item, [d] Here is the patience of the Saints. We therefore must labour to repell all malice and rancour when we suffer unjustly, remembring this rule of Christ, that rather than wee offer private revenge, we must suffer the doubling and trebling of the wrong. It is true indeed, this is hard for flesh and bloud to doe: but if we be but flesh, that is, naturall men, why doe we professe our selves to be Christians? for He that hath not the spirit of God, is none of his, Rom. 8. 9. And if we be in the spirit, we must obey the motions thereof, and learne of Christ who was meeke and humble, and following him, we shall finde rest for our soules.

Secondly, when Christ sets downe these three examples of suffering wrong, he applies himselfe to the present outward estate of the Jewes, which was this? For one man to suffer wrong of another in his bodie, and in his goods, and yet so rest contented, without releefe or amends. Now the cause of this their miserable condition, was their servitude to the Roman Emperour, who a little before Christs comming, had removed the Scepter from Juda, and made Juda a Province tributarie unto Rome, so as they were ruled not by a Prince of their owne, but by a foren enemies Deputies.

Forren regiment a grievous thing.

In this estate we may see the miserable condition of any people that are in bondage, to a forren enemie: their lives are every way miserable: for besides their personall bondage, they are constrained to suffer losses and wrongs, in goods, in their names, without all remedie or releefe. The consideration hereof must teach us, First, to be heartily thankfull unto God for the happie outward peace, which with the Gospell of Gods grace we now enjoy under our Soveraigne, being free from subjection unto any forren power. Secondly, to pray earnestly unto the Lord, for the good estate, life, and health of our Prince, by whom under God, we enjoy such joy and prosperitie; as also for the continuance of Gods holy hand of protection to preserve the whole land against all forren power whatsoever. Thirdly, to repent unfainedly of all our sins, that so we turning unto God from them, he may continue unto us those happie dayes of peace, wherein we have freedome from subjection to forren tyranny: for our sins are our greatest foes, they lay open the ports of our lands, and the gates of our cities to the spoyling enemie; they will pull downe our strong walls, and take away the strength of our armed men: no enemies can doe us so much harme as our owne sinnes: and therefore we must humble our selves for them, and if we have not repented, now we must begin; and if wee have begun, wee must proceed and renew the same more and more. If wee had felt the misery of subjection to forren power, as these Jewes now did, it would touch us: and therefore before these evils come upon us, let us meet our God by true repentance, that so he he may keepe from us this fierce wrath.

v. 42 Give to him that asketh: and from him that would borrow of thee, turne not away.

Doe good for evill.

Christ having forbidden private revenge, doth here command the requitall of good for evill, in two particular examples of well-doing, taken from giving and lending: by both which, though not expressely, yet in sense and meaning Christ would teach his hearers thus much; Let the man bee what he will, doe thou good unto him for evill.

Almes-giving a duetie.

B For the first, Give to him that asketh, &c. These words must not be taken simply, but in this sense: Give unto him that asketh on a just cause being poore, though he cannot requite thee againe, nay, though he had done thee wrong, and were thine enemy. This exposition is plaine, Luke. 6. for having set downe his commandement for giving, v. 30. he renders this reason thereof in effect; Because they cannot requite thee againe, v. 33. which plainely imports that it must be to the poore.

Here now first observe, the forme of Christs words, they are commanding, Give to him, &c. whence I gather that a man is bound in conscience upon the paine of death to give Almes and releefe: Matth. 25. 41, 42. Christ adjudgeth some to hell for the neglect of this dutie: now there could be no such curse, if there were no commandement, that did bind their conscience to doe that, for want whereof they are condemned. Againe, in the sixth commandement, we are bound to doe all duties that may preserve our neighbours life, of which sort is giving releefe unto the poore, without which they cannot live. If it be said, that [a] Daniel made Almes-deeds no commandement, but a matter of counsell unto Nebuchadnezzar: I answer, that things commanded may bee propounded by way of counsell: so doth Christ to the Church of Laodicea, [b] I counsell thee to buy of me gold, &c. Againe, Daniel used this forme of speech to the King, Let my counsell be precious unto thee: not because it was no commandement, but because he would so temper his speech, that it might better take place in the stout heart of this proud king. And when as Paul (2 Cor. 8.) speaking of Almes saith, he speaketh not by commandement, it is to be understood not simply of Almes-giving, but of the measure thereof, as the former verse doth plainely shew.

Vse 1. We may not doe with our owne what we will.

Here then we see those men confuted which say, they may doe with their owne what they will: this is not so, for mens goods are not their owne simply, but Gods also: and they indeed are but the Lords stewards to dispose of them as he commands: now his will is, that part thereof should be given to them which want.

Secondly, we see here also that those men A sin grievously who are so covetous, that they will give nothing to the poore: sell they will, and lend also, upon a good pawne, for their owne advantage: but by free gift they will part with nothing. These are miserable persons, who doe what they can to condemne themselves: for Gods commandement binds men in conscience to give unto the poore, and that freely. Yet here we must know, that not onely they who give freely doe a worke of mercie; but also they who lend and sell, when as their lending and selling will as much profit the poore as giving: this in effect is almes-deeds here also commanded: and therefore Joseph is commended, not onely for giving, but for selling corne to the Ægyptians and others in the time of dearth.

Lending and selling may be works of mercie.

Thirdly, this being a commandement binding conscience, must stir us up to doe all good duties of releefe with cheerfulnesse, that so meet and decent provision for the poore may not onely be begun, but also continued: for it is acceptable unto God.

A second point here to be observed is, what kinde of commandement this is: Give to him that asketh. Gods commandements be of two sorts, Affirmative and Negative; and in the Morall law the one is alwaies comprehended in the other: now this commandement is affirmative, which must be noted, because negative precepts lay a streighter bond upon the conscience than the affirmative: and therefore are the precepts of the Moral law for the most part propounded negatively: for the negative precept binds a man to obedience alwayes, and to all and every time: as when God saith, Thou shalt not kill, a man is never exempted from obedience hereunto: but an affirmative commandement, though it bind alwayes, yet not to all times, as this of Christ for giving almes, it bindes not all men, but only those who are inabled to give; nor yet the rich to all times, but then onely when just occasion of giving is offered: and the same may be said of every affirmative commandement, as of keeping an holy rest unto the Lord, it bindes a man for ever, but not at all times, onely for the seventh day, and such like.

Negative precepts more forcible than affirmative.

C

D Yet further to lay open this commandement touching Almes, we will herein handle eight points: I. who is to give: II. what is to be given: III. to whom we must give: IV. in what order: V. how much: VI. in what place: VII. at what time: VIII. in what manner we must give.

Of Almes-giving eight points.

For the first: The person that is to give, is not every one, but such as God hath set apart for this dutie: for, Matthew 25. 42, 43. some are there made to receive, as the hungry, thirstie, naked, sicke, &c. and others are made fit to give clothing, food, comfort, and such like. And Saint John telleth us who is made fit to give, namely, [c] He that hath the goods of this world: not onely he that hath abundance, but even he that that hath but a smal portion of worldly goods: and therefore the theefe that stole for want, is forbidden to steale, and commanded to labour, [d] that he may have to give to him that wanteth: and the poore widow is commended of Christ, that [e] of her penury gave to the treasury but two mites. Now in a giver there must be two things: first, a right unto the goods he giveth: for a man may not give that which is not his owne: secondly, a present full proprietie in the things he giveth, (unlesse it be in the case of necessitie:) and by this are children and servants excluded from giving, unlesse they have some things of their owne, or doe it by command.

Quest. Whether may the wife give releefe unto the poore, without her husbands consent? An ancient answer is this, that many wives in giving are Abigails in regard of their husbands, who are like unto Nabal; and therefore may give: and yet some other ancient Divines adde this, that the wife cannot give, where all consent of her husband is wanting, becaufe both shee and all her possessions belong unto him principally; yet here we are to know, that there is a double consent of the husband; expressed in open words, whereupon there is no question, but the wife may lawfully give: and secret, which is threefold; first, when the husband doth not dissent; secondly, when he gives consent generally, as when he allowes her to give, but names not any particular; thirdly, when the wife hath a probable conjecture and presumption, that if her husband did know, he would allow of her giving. And in these cases of secret consent, the wife may also give: but if shee have not his consent any of these waies, shee may not lawfully give, unlesse in these cases: 1. that shee hath something private of her owne, either by exception before, or by grant after marriage: 2. that her giving serves to preserve the life or good estate of her husband and family, as Abigails did when she gave to David: 3. that the necessitie of the receiver requires present releefe: for extreme necessity dispenseth with proprietie.

II. Point. What is to be given? namely, Almes. Here two questions are to bee skanned: I. what is almes? II. whereof almes are to bee raised? For the first, Almes is a free gift, tending to preserve the temporall life of our neighbour: first, I call it a gift, understanding it largely, because forgiving to them that are not able to pay, is an almes deed. Secondly, I say free, to distinguish it from subsidies to Princes, and Tenths-giving for the stipend of the Minister, and such like. These are gifts, but no free gifts: for the people receive protection from the Magistrate for their subsidies, and instruction from the Minister for their Tenths. Thirdly, I say, the end of Almes is to preserve temporall life; to distinguish it from spirituall gifts, which concerne the soule: the Papists make all workes of mercie whether they concerne the bodie or soule, to be almes; but almes properly, are gifts that tend to preserve this naturall temporall life.

II. Question. Whereof are almes to be raised? Ans. First, of our owne goods: for a man ought not to give that which is an other mans: and therefore those that owe more than they are worth, cannot give almes, but are rather fit to receive: for all that they have in right and conscience belongs to some others. Secondly, our Almes must be our first fruits: things wholesome and good, and such as are fit for the person releeved. They must not bee the refuse of our goods, which wee know not elsie what to doe with: Nehem. 8. 10. Part of the fat, and of the sweet must be sent to them, for whom none is provided. Thirdly, Almes must be of goods lawfully gotten: for evill gotten goods must be restored, either to the owner (if he be knowne) or to some of his kindred, or to the Magistrate: which shewes, that the Usurer ought rather to restore, than to give almes of his gaine for usurie. Fourthly, our Almes must bee given of our owne, with difference and discretion: every mans goods for the most part may be distinguished into foure degrees: first, some are necessary to preserve life, without which a man and his family cannot live: secondly, some are necessary to mans estate, as those goods by which a man putteth in practice the duties of his calling; such are bookes unto the Student, and tooles unto the tradesman: a third sort are such as are requisite for the decencie of a mans estate, and such are those that make a man walke in his calling with comfort, ease, profit, and delight: the fourth sort of things are superfluous; that is, all that portion which a man may want, and yet have things necessary for this life, and estate, and for the decencie thereof: these two last degrees are in Scripture called abundance. And answerably, there are two degrees of poverty: the first, is common want, when a man can live without receiving Almes, but yet very hardly: the second, is extreme want, when a man without releefe cannot possibly maintaine life: now in common want we must give of our abundance; that is, both of our superfluity, as also of our riches that serve for decencie: Luke 3. 11. He which hath two coats, let him part with him that hath none: now he that hath two coats, is not he that hath a coat and a cloake, for so had S Paul, and yet retained them both lawfully for his use: but Christs meaning is, that he which hath things necessarie, and besides something over, serving for decencie and superfluity, must give thereof to him that lacketh. And in extreme necessity, hee must give of those goods which pertaine necessarily to his life and estate: for our neighbours life must be preferred before our owne temporall goods, and outward estate: h Paul testifieth of the Macedonians; that in the extreme necessity of the Saints, they gave to their power, yea, and beyond their power: upon this ground the Christians in the primitive mitive Church, [i] sold their possessions for the releeving of the poore brethren in extreme want: rather diminishing their owne temporall estate, than suffering the poore to want that were in extreme necessity. This rule ought alwayes to be regarded and practised, especially in times of want: as for those that make advantage of a dearth, and enrich themselves by Gods judgement on the poore, they are most miserable and wretched people, quite voyd of every sparke of that gracious dispolition which was in Christ, who being rich, even King of heaven and earth, [k] made himselfe poore, that through his poverty, he might make others rich. It is the wil of God, that we should beare one anothers burdens, and helpe to lift up the poore that are prested downe with the judgement of God: which we shall do, when we give not onely of our abundance in common want, but even of our necessaries in the extreme want of the poore.

III. Point. To whom must we give? Ans. To the poore: this needs no proofe: yet in these poore two things are required: First, they must be truly poore: that is, such as are indeed either in common or extreme want: and of such Saint John saith, [l] If any have this worlds good, and seeth his brother have need, if hee shut up his compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him. Secondly, they must be such as cannot help themselves: Levit. 25. 35. If thy brother be impoverished, and have a trembling hand, thou shalt releeve him: the man of a trembling hand, is one that is not able to maintaine himselfe: of this sort are Orphans, widowes, the aged, sicke, blind, lame, maymed in service, and such like, all these must be releeved. But the case stands otherwise with that kind of poore, which we call lusty beggers, who are able to provide for themselves, if they would take paines: Saint Pauls rule belongs to them, [m] If they will not worke, they must not eat: that is, they must not be maintained on the Almes of the Church. Quest. 1. What must such lusty poore doe? Ans. They must be employed in some lawfull calling, wherein they may labour to get their owne bread, and not eat the common food of those that are poore indeed. For the Church and Common-wealth are as a mans body, wherein every member hath his severall office, for the good of the whole body: and indeed every man should have not onely a generall calling of a Christian, but a particular calling also, wherein he must imploy himselfe for the common good: it is against the Word of God, and the light of Nature, that any should live having nothing to doe. Adam in his innocency was injoyned to worke in the garden; and our [n] Saviour Christ before his baptisme, lived under his father in a particular calling, till hee was thirty yeares old; whose examples we must follow. Quest. 2. What is our duty towards these lusty beggers? Answ. From [o] Pauls rule we may gather, that wee must not ordinarily and of custome releeve them: indeed upon present necessity they are to be releeved, but yet with this advertisement, that they looke not for it againe, but that they provide for themselves by labouring in some lawfull calling: for this common releeving at mens doores, makes so many idle vagabonds and rogues as there are.

IV. Point. In what order must we give our Almes for distinction of persons? Ans. Touching order in releeving, the holy Ghost hath laid downe three Rules: First, by S. Paul, [p] He that provideth not for his owne, and namely for them of his household, is worse than an Infidell: whence this order may be observed, that I. a man must give to them that bee of his owne household and family: II. to his owne bloud, kindred, and alliance: III. unto strangers. The second Rule is this, Gal. 6. 10. Doe good unto all, but specially to the household of faith: first, believers must be releeved, and then all others, good or bad. The third Rule is given by Moses Deut. 15. 10. We must first releeve our owne poore, that is, such as live among us, and then give unto strangers, if our ability will afford, and their necessity doe require.

V. Point. How much must we give? Touching the measure of our Almes, there is no particular commandement in Scripture: but yet these generall Rules may thence bee gathered: First, that a man is not bound to give all that he hath: Prov. 5. 15, 16. Drink the waters of thine owne cisterne, and flowing streames out of the middest of thine owne well: let thy fountaines dispense themselves abroad: where under an allegory borrowed from waters, the holy Ghost directeth a man, for the disposing of his riches; namely, comfortably to enjoy his owne goods, and yet to bestow some part thereof on them that want: and Luk. 3. 11. Let him that hath two coats, give (not both) but one to him that wanteth: where we see them justly rebuked, that in prodigality doe riotously lavish and spend all that they have: for if a man may not give all, much lesse may he spend all wilfully. II. Rule. 2 Cor. 8. 13. A man must not so give to others, that he himselfe be grieved, and they be eased altogether. III. Rule. Almes must be according to the givers ability, and withall answerable to the necessity of the poore, whether in food, raymeat, or harbour: for Paul saith, speaking of common releefe, [q] the ministration of this service supplieth the necessity of the Saints: and S. Iames requires, that in releefe such things bee given [r] as be necessarie to the body: and Deut. 15. 8. If thy brother be poore, thou shalt open thy hand unto him, and lend him sufficient for his need which he hath.

VI. Point. In what place must Almes be given? Touching the place we must know this; that it is a disorder, not beseeming Gods Church, to give releefe to wandring beggers at our doores: this may appeare by these reasons. It is Gods commandement, [s] that among his people there should be no such beggers: If any man aske, how the poore were then relieved? I answer, God tooke sufficient order for their provision: for first, the husbandman [a] must not gather his grapes cleane, nor yet his corne-field, but leave the after-gathering and gleaning for the poore. Secondly, besides the [b] yearely Tenths for the Priests and Levites, every three yeares tenths were to be gathered and kept for the poore, and for strangers. Thirdly, every seventh yeare the land was to rest, and all that is brought for that yeare, with the fruit of vineyard and olives was for the poore, Exod. 23. 11. Againe, in the new Testament the Apostles ordained, that in every Church there should be Deacons, that is, men of wisdome and discretion, who were to gather for the poore, and likewise to dispose of that which was given, according as every man had need: in which very order of provision for the poore, the Lord forbids all wandring begging. II. These wandring beggers, are the shame and reproach of the people where they are suffered: for it argueth want of care of good order in Governours, and want of mercy in the rich, that they gather all to themselves, without regard how the poore should live. III. In releeving these wandring beggers, there is this double want in the giver; he cannot tell what to give, nor how much: because he knowes not the state of the party that beggeth. Now in almes-deeds there ought to bee a double discretion: the giver ought to know both his owne ability, and also the necessity of the receivers. IV. Common releeving at mens dores makes many beggers, and maintaines a wicked generation: for these wandring beggers are for the most part flat Atheists, regarding nothing but their belly, separating themselves from all congregations: and from begging many fall to stealing; or else they take such pleasure therein that they will never leave it, no not for a yearely rent. This is knowne to be true by experience. All which things duly considered, must move the Magistrates and every other in their place, to see that better order be observed for the poore than doore-releeving to all that come. And sith good lawes are made in this behalfe, men ought in conscience to see the same observed and kept: neither can any man without sinne transgresse the same. Indeed, if good order were not provided for the poore, it were better to releeve them in their wandring course, than to suffer them to starve: for so dealt Christ and his Disciples with the poore, when good order failed among the Jewes, they releeved them in the high wayes and streets.

Time of almes-giving. Rules I.

VII. Point. At what time must Almes be given? Ans. Hereof the Scripture speaketh little, yet this may be gathered thence: First, that releefe must be given when present occasion requireth: therefore Salomon saith, [a] Say not to thy neighbour, Goe and come againe to morrow, if thou now have it. Secondly, that the Sabbath day is a fit time for the giving of releefe for the poore: for the [b] Apostle commanded the Corinthians, that each one should lay a side upon that day, according as God had prospered him the weeke before, that which hee would give for the poore: where by the way, it may be observed, that daily giving at mens doores was not allowed by the Apostles. Also touching Trades-men this may be added: from this, that the Apostle makes contribution for the poore a Sabbath dayes worke; that whereas they use to imploy part of the Lords day, both morning and evening in serving their customers for their owne private benefit, this cannot be warranted: only this they may doe, upon the Sabbath they should sell unto none, but to such as buy of necessity, and then they may not make a private gaine of their sale, but must turne that worke to a worke of mercy for the poore, either selling without gaine, if it be a poore body that buyes; or giving the gaine of that which they sell to the rich, for the releefe of the poore. This indeed will hardly be obtained at trades-mens hands, but yet they must know, that the whole Sabbath day is the Lords, wherein hee will be worshipped with delight, neither ought men to doe therein their owne workes, nor seeke their owne wills, nor speake their owne words, Isa. 58. 13.

The manner of Almes-giving.

VIII. Point. In what manner must Almes be given? Answ. Hereof more is to be spoken in the chapter following: yet from this text these things may be observed: First, that Almes-giving must bee free; the giver must neither looke for recompence at the hands of man, nor thinke to merit any thing thereby at the hands of God. That Popish conceit deprives a man of the true comfort of the spirit in this worke of mercy: none but Christ by his obedience could ever merit at Gods hands. Secondly, our hearts in giving must be touched with charity, and the bowels of compassion: we must give with cheerefulnesse for without love, all that we give is nothing, 1 Cor. 13. 3. and the Lord loveth a cheerefull giver, 2 Cor. 9. 7. now if we consider the poore as our owne flesh, and see Gods image in them, this will move us to pitty. Thirdly, in the person of the poore wee must consider Christ Jesus, and give unto them as we would give unto Christ. This will move us to give, and that cheerfully: for in the day of judgment Christ will make it knowne that he comes for releefe to the rich in the person of the poore: to the mercilesse he will say, [b] In as much as ye did it not to them, ye did it not to me: but to the mercifull thus, [c] In as much as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me. Fourthly, our almes must be given as a pledge of our thankfulnesse unto God for the blessings we enjoy: for all we have, commeth from God, [d] and of his hands it is, whatsoever we give: now he professeth, that when men doe good, and distribute to the poore, he is well pleased with such sacrifices.

ving is, and how it must be performed; we must now stirre up our selves to put the same in practice: and to move us hereunto, consider the reasons following: I. We all desire to be counted righteous; now if wee would be such indeed, we must visit the fatherlesse and widowes, we must doe good, and give almes to the poore: for this is pure religion and undefiled before God, as S. Iames [f] saith. To come to the Church and heare the Word, and to receive the Sacraments are good things; but without mercy to the poore they are not regarded, but hated of God, Isa. 1. 13, 14, 15. II. If a man should offer unto us a peece of ground to manure and till for our owne reaping, we would take it kindly and bestow both paines and seed upon it: behold, the poore are sent of God to the rich; as a peece of ground to bee tilled, and when they give to the poore, they sow upon the ground: now as Paul saith in this case, [g] he lacke as a man soweth, so shall he reape: we therefore must sow liberally, that wee may also reape liberally. III. Prov. 19. 17. He that hath mercy upon the poore, lendeth unto the Lord: wee would easily be moved to lend, if we had an honest man to be surety unto us, for returning of our owne with advantage: well, the Lord offers himselfe to the rich to be surety for the poore; who then will feare to lend, having to good a debter? IIII. If these promises will not move us, let us consider the fearefull curses threatned against the mercilesse and hard hearted; for as he that giveth to the poore shall not lacke, so he that hideth his eyes from them, shall have many curses, Prov. 28. 27. And hee that stoppeth his eares at the crying of the poore, he shall crie and not be heard, Prov. 21. 13. and the woefull sentence of condemnation shall bee pronounced upon the wicked for the neglect of this duty, Mat. 25. 41, 42.

Further, from the words, Give to him that asketh, I wee may learne, that it is the will of God, that among his people there should be a propriety of goods, and that all things should not be common in that behalfe: for the Lord would have some to have to give, and some to want that they might receive; which would not be, if all things should bee common both for use and propriety, as some have fondly imagined. If any man thinke it was so in the primitive Church, because it is said, [h] they had all things common, hee is to know, that that community was in such things onely, as men had then freely given for the common good. And yet even then, none was compelled or bound in conscience to give all his substance in that sort: for there Peter tells Ananias, that his possession, while it remained unsold, appertained to him, and after it was sold, the price thereof was in his own power to dispose of as hee would. Obiect. 2. All things belong to beleevers, as Paul saith, All things are yours, 1 Cor. 3. 21. and therefore they ought to be common. Ans. The Apostle meaneth that they had right in Christ to all things, and did enjoy them by hope; but yet the fruition of them in actuall propriety, is not had before the day of judgement.

[i] Act. 5. 4.

Againe, if giving to the poore be a duty of every one, whom God inables hereunto, then no man may voluntarily dilable himselfe from it; whereupon the Popish practice of undergoing voluntary poverty falls to the ground, as unlawfull: for thereby they disable themselves unto this duty. Indeed the Papists make this a state of perfection, but David judged begging to be a curse, Psal. 109. 10. else he would not have spoken of freedome from beggery as of ableting, which he doth, Psal. 37. 25. I never saw the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging.

Rhem. in Mat. 19. in hap. Hieron. ad Matth. lib. 2. c. 5. 20.

Lastly, in this commandement see the error of those men, that give themselves wholly to gather riches to themselves, being like to the moule which is alwayes digging in the earth: for God requires that a man should give as well as get, nay he must get to give, and not to keep: for God is more glorified by giving, than by keeping: and herein his children resemble their heavenly father, who receiveth nothing of any man, and yet giveth liberally to every one that asketh, without reproaching any, Jam. 1. 5.

Gather goods to give.

And from him that would borrow of thee, turne not away.] These words containe Christs second precept, touching requiting good for evil, taken from lending & borrowing. To know the meaning of this Rule three points are to be handled: I. what it is to lend: II. to whom men must lend: III. in what manner. For the first, what lending is, is well knowne by common experience. It is a civill contract or bargaine, by which money, corne, or such like goods, passe from man to man, both in regard of use and title: yet so, as the borrower is bound in conscience to returne the thing lent unto him, or else that which in value is equall unto it.

Of lending three points.

1 What lending is.

II. Point. To whom men must lend. This circumstance is not here expressed by Matthew, but must be supplyed out of Luke, chap. 6. 34, 35. where Christ forbids them to lend, as sinners doe, to receive the like againe: but (saith he) love your enemies, and doe good, and lend looking for nothing againe: where it is plaine, that lending must be to such as are truly poore, and not able to lend againe like for like. For the better understanding whereof we are to know, that in humane Societies there bee three sorts of men: First, such poore as are unable to provide for themselves things necessary, by reason of some impotency, as sicknesse, age, lamenesse, or such like; and these are commonly called beggers. A second sort are those, which being poore have yet a trade, wherein they can provide for themselves some part of their maintenance, and yet by reason of their poverty, still want some things necessary, which of themselves they cannot procure. The third sort are rich men, such as have worldly goods in abundance, not onely sufficient for their necessaries, but much overplus: now to each of these belongs his peculiar duty. To the first sort of poore that have the stinking hand (as Moses speaketh) almes are due, and they must be releeved by giving freely, as wee have shewed in the former precept. To the second sort of poore, belongs lending properly, specially then, when their necessity requires. To the rich, neither gift nor lone is due; but on the contrary they ought to give and lend to the poore, maintaining themselves by the honest labour and industry of their lawfull callings.

a Lev.25.35.

Manner of lending.

3. Point. In what manner must men lend? Ans. With a willing minde, without any shew of grudging, either in speech, or by turning away the head or body; as it is here said, From him that would borrow of thee turne not away: which property in the lender, is yet further expressed by Luke, saying, Lend, looking for nothing again: where Christ doth not simply forbid men to looke for that which they lent; but his meaning is, to shew with what affection and disposition of heart men ought to lend: namely, having respect onely to the good of the party borrowing, and not to the restitution of the thing lent: as when a poore man comes to borrow, wee must reason thus with our selves; This man is poore, and it may bee will not pay me againe; not thus, This man is painefull although he be poore, and is like to pay mee againe, and therefore I will lend. This (saith Christ) is the practice of sinners, who lend, because they looke to receive the like. Bee thou therefore moved to lend upon a good desire to helpe the poore, and let not thy minde be running upon the losse, or safe returne of the thing lent. Thus is that clause of Christ, looking for nothing againe, to be understood, and not to be applyed to the gaine of usury, whereat Christ aimeth not in this place.

Vses 2. Lending is a duty

First, here obserue, that to lend unto the poore, is a commandement of God, binding the conscience of the rich; it is not left free to the rich mans choyce, whether he will lend or not, but if the poore mans case require, he sinnes against God if he do not lend: for he breakes this commandement. David therefore makes it the property of a good man, to be mercifull and to lend: Psal.112.5. where we see that wretched practice of many rich men condemned to the pit of hell, who are so farre from lending to the poore, that they hoard up their store till a time of dearth, that then they may inrich themselves by poore mens want: and thus they increase Gods judgement upon the poore, and as it were, grind their faces, and tread upon them, as the holy Ghost speaketh. But they shall one day finde, that they ought to have lent unto the poore, in their necessities; yea, and when the hand of God in common want lieth more heavy upon the poore, they ought then to open their hands more liberally towards them. It is an usuall and common practice, that when a man beginnes to decay in his estate, no man will lend him any thing; but because he beginnes to decay, therefore they withdraw their helpe, lest he should not pay them againe. But this ought not to be so: it is Christs commandement, that the rich by lending should sustaine such an one, as by reason of want is ready to fall into decay.

2 Free lending.

Secondly, this commandement Christ binds the rich, not only to lend, but to lend freely without taking any increase: for they must lend, not looking for any againe: yea, Exod. 22.25. the Lord expressely forbids to take increase of the poore: where wee see the common practice of Usurers condemned to the bottome of hell, who lend unto the poore upon bonds for increase: these are they, that live on the bloud and life of the poore, whose sin is every where condemned, and ought to be hated as bloudshed it selfe. But the rich will say, they are intreated so to doe, and are greatly thanked for so lending. Ans. This excuse will not serve the turne: for Sauls armour-bearer was a murtherer for killing his Master, though Saul earnestly besought him so to doe, 2Sam. 1. 9. 16.

3 Forgiving of due is lent.

Thirdly, here further leaine, that a man must lend, and yet not alwayes take againe the principall: indeed he may require and receive his owne, else there should be no lending but all giving, which two are here distinct: but yet when the poore that borrowed, is fallen into further poverty, the rich must turne his lending into giving, and forgive the principall or part thereof, as their severall estates shall require. Deut. 20.10, 11, 12. A man may take a pledge for his debt of the poore, but yet if the pawne be a thing necessary to the poore mans life, he must not take it, or at least not retaine it till the sunne setting.

4 a Talk.6.35. Of receiving increase for lending.

Fourthly, some may here aske (seeing Christ bids us lend looking for nothing againe) whether may a man at no time with good conscience receive increase for his lending? Ans. Lending is two-fold: of due, or of courtesie: lending of due is the lone of the rich unto the poore, when his necessity compels him to borrow: and for this a man cannot with good conscience take any increase. Lending of courtesie is, when one rich friend lends unto another: this is not forbidden in the Word of God, but is left to a mans owne liberty and discretion, neither hath it any promise of reward. Now in this case of courtesie, I doe not finde in Scripture that all taking of increase is simply condemned: nay, in some cases, both the Law of Nature, and the Lawes of all countries doe allow it. As first, when the increase is given onely in way of thankfulnesse, as a blessing to requite in kindnesse a good turne received: for ingratitude is abhorred of all; and the law of Nature requires to doe good for good: and all Divines both Protestants and Papists, doe allow this kinde of increase. Secondly, when a man sustaineth damnage by his lending, he may receive increase by way of satisfaction for his losse.

losse. Thirdly, when a man is contented to adventure his principall in the hand of him that borroweth it, then also may hee take increase: like as a man may receive hire for his horse, or for the use of any other goods, standing to their losse, Exod. 22.14.

Duties of the poore.

1 Contentation.

Thus we see what the will of God is for giving and lending unto the poore: now hence the poore may receive instruction. First, hereby all may learne, that God will have some poore among his people, to receive and borrow of the rich: which may serve to perswade the poore to be contented with their meane estate, esteeming it to be the best for them, because God in his wisdome and providence hath ordained it. Secondly, the poore must take occasion from their outward povertie, to seeke to be rich in God through grace; Jam. 2.5. Hath not God chosen the poore of this world, that they should be rich in faith? Herein they may match, and goe beyond the richer sort; which is a matter of great joy: Jam. 1. 9. Let the brother of low degree, rejoyce in that he is exalted: that is, with God, who counts them rich, Revel. 2. 9. Thirdly, hence the poore must learne to carrie themselves submissively towards the rich, of whom they receive great helpe and comfort by their giving and lending: Pro.18.23. The poore (saith Salomon) intreth supplications: noting their humilitie, which reproves many poore, who are so proud hearted and ingratefull, that they will not afford the rich a good word: but this becometh none, much lesse those that are to live by the rich: Psal. 101. 5. Him that hath a proud looke & high heart, I cannot suffer.

2 Seeke to be rich in grace.

3 Humble.

V. 43 Ye have heard that it hath beene said of old, Thou shalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemie:

In this verse and the rest to the end of this Chapter, our Saviour goeth about to purge the generall Commandement of the second Table, touching the love of our neighbour, from the corrupt interpretation of the Jewish Teachers, and to restore it to his true and proper meaning. And as in the former, so here, he first laies down their false doctrine touching this Commandement, v. 43. and then confutes the same, v. 44, 45, &c. In laying downe their false interpretation, he propounds the Law of Moses touching brotherly love, Levit. 19. 18. Thou shalt love thy neighbour, which must here be understood in their false sense, who by neighbour, meant a friend: as if God had said, thou shalt love thy friend. Then he adjoyneth their tradition gathered from the Law of God misconceived; namely, to hate a mans enemie.

In these Jewes we may obserue two manifest abuses of Scripture, which ought not to bee in any Teachers: to wit, misinterpretation, and a false collection. The word they misconstrue, is Neighbour, which in the old Testament is taken two wayes, either strictly and more properly for a familiar friend and acquaintance, in which sense it is commonly taken; or more generally, for any one that in any kinde of necessitie is neere unto us, as by consanguinitie, habitation, office, traffique, or being only in the same place with us: for so is the Samaritane said to be neighbour to the man that fell among theeves, because he found him lying in the way where he travelled, and had compassion on him. Now the jewish Teachers leave the generall signification of the word, which expressed the true meaning of the Holy Ghost, and take the speciall signification, and so restraine this Law of love to friends only. Whereby wee see how necessarie it is, that the Tongues wherein the Scriptures were penned should be well knowen and understood: for the mistaking of the signification of a word by the Jewish teachers, caused a manifest errour to be taught among them for truth. And this maketh greatly for the honour of the Schooles of learning, where the studies of the Tongues is professed. And herein also another thing may be noted in the Jewish Teachers, that in the time of Christ they were ignorant in their owne tongue, and therefore no marvell though at this day they know not the properties thereof, seeing their Commonwealth is decayed, and they dispersed among all people.

Schooles of learning approved.

Their second fault is a false collection and consequent, that because a man must love his friend, therefore he must hate his enemie: this is against the rules of Art: for unlesse the contraries be equall, a consequent will not thence follow in this sort.

Vse 1.

Here then obserue the necessitie of the study of humane Arts, and among the rest, especially of the Art of Logicke, whereby wee may discerne betweene true and false collections. Again, here observe an infallible note of a false Teacher; to wit, to temper the word of God to mens naturall affections, and so to expound it as they may both stand together. The Jewes were a people that loved their friends intirely, and hated their enemies bitterly: now adversarily doe these Teachers expound this Law, whereby they overturne both the Law of God, and the salvation of the people. Thirdly, mark here the fruit of corrupt doctrine, namely, to corrupt good manners. The Jewes were a people that did much brag of their Ancestours and privileges, and in regard of themselves contemned all forren Nations; yea, they hated them, and therefore they were hot in contention with Peter, for going to Cornelius a Gentile; Acts 11.2. now this their malice proceeded partly from nature, and partly from the false doctrine of their Teachers, which was, that they might hate their enemies. The like may appeare in many practices of Popery to this day: for when that Superstition was aloft, the people were taught a diſtinction of times and places, in regard of holineſſe, the fruit of which doctrine ſticks faſt in the hearts of many unto this day; for they thinke Churches and Chappels to be more holy than other places, and therefore ſome will not pray but when they come into ſome ſuch place. And doe they not make great difference of dates and times? all which are fruits of Poperie. In regard whereof, we ſee it is neceſſarie, that the puritie of Religion in faith and manners ſhould be ſtrongly maintained by the ſincere miniſterie of the Word: for many diſorders in mens lives, come from the unſound handling of the Scriptures. Whereby we may ſee Gods unſpeakable mercie and goodneſſe towards us, in vouchſafing us an holy Miniſterie, wherein the puritie of doctrine is, and hath beene long, and may bee ſtill through Gods mercie maintained and publiſhed. This ought to move us to all thankfulneſſe unto God, and to endevour to ſhew the fruit of this true Religion in all holineſſe and pietie, both of heart and life towards God and man.

v. 44 But I ſay unto you, Love your enemies: bleſſe them that curſe you: doe good to them that hate you, and pray for them which hurt you, and perſecute you.

Here our Saviour Chriſt propounds his Anſwer unto the former falſe doctrine of the Jewiſh Teachers, for the hating of an enemie. Wherein firſt he layes downe a generall Rule, containing the ſumme of his whole anſwer, ſaying, Love your enemies: then hee expounds that Rule in the ſame verſe, and after proves it, v. 45, 46. Of theſe in order.

For the firſt, Love your enemies. In this Rule two things muſt be known: I. what is an enemie: II. what it is to love an enemie: both theſe are evident in the words following, wherin Chriſt expounds this Rule, Bleſſe them that curſe you, &c. An enemie then, is any one that of hatred doth wrong unto his neighbour, either in word, by curſing or evill ſpeaking; or deed, by ſtriking and perſecuting him. But what is it to love our enemie? Love properly is an affection of the heart, whereby one is well pleaſed with another. But here more generally, love comprehendeth theſe two things: firſt, to bee lovingly affected in heart towards an enemie; ſecondly, to uſe an enemie lovingly in ſpeech and action: ſo it is taken, 1 Joh. 3. 18. Love not in word and tongue only, but in deed and truth. And Rom. 10. 13. Love is the fulfilling of the Law. For the firſt, love is the heart comprehendeth all good affections that one man beareth to another: as mercie, compaſſion, meekneſſe, and deſire to doe unto them what good wee can; as it is more plainly expreſſed, Luk. 6. 36. Be yee therefore mercifull, as your heavenly father is mercifull. And for the ſecond, that kinde uſage which love expreſſeth in word and deed, is here ſet out unto us in three branches: Firſt, bleſſe them that curſe you: where is commanded all good ſpeech, both unto our enemie, and of our enemie. The ſecond, Doe good to them that hate you: where is preſcribed all loving uſage in action, by affording them helpe, releeſe, and comfort, any way we can. The third, Pray for them that perſecute you: that is, for their good eſtate in this life, ſo farre forth as it ſerveth for Gods glorie, and for their converſion and ſalvation in the world to come.

See the evidence of theſe things in examples: For the affection of the heart, take Chriſts example, who ſo loved his enemies, that hee was contented to ſhed his owne hearts bloud for them, and to ſuffer the paugs of hell upon the croſſe for their ſalvation. For love in courteous ſpeech, ſee Davids practice towards Saul his profeſſed enemie: for though David had him in his hands, and might have killed him ſundrie times; nay, though he was provoked thereunto by his [a] ſervants, yet hee ſpared him, and with all termes of reverence towards Saul appeaſed his ſervants, calling Saul his maſter, and the Lords anointed. Thus lovingly alſo in ſpeech did Paul behave himſelfe to [b] Feſtus and Agrippa, though they were heathen men, and his enemies. For doing good in action to an enemie, reade Exod. 22. 4, 5. If thou meet thine enemies Oxe or his Aſſe going aſtray, thou ſhalt bring him to him againe: and if thou ſeeſt thine enemies Aſſe lying under his burden, wilt thou ceaſe to helpe him? thou ſhalt helpe him up againe with it: and Prov. 25. 21. If thine enemie be hungrie, give him bread to eat: if he thirſt, give him drinke. See the practice hereof in [c] Eliſha; when God delivered them into his hands, that ſought his life, he brought them to Samaria; and when the King of Iſrael would have ſlaine them, he forbade him: nay, he cauſed the King to refreſh them with bread and water, and ſo ſent them to their owne maſter. For praying for our enemies, we have the example of the Prophets, of [d] our Saviour Chriſt; and of [e] Steeven, who prayed for thoſe that put him to death.

Obiect. 1. It will be ſaid, the Scripture elſewhere ſeemes to make againſt this; as Pſa. 139. 21, 22. Doe not I hate them, O Lord, (ſaith David) that hate thee; and doe I not earneſtly contend with them, that riſe up againſt thee? I hate them with an unfained hatred: whereby it ſeemeth, that in ſome caſes a man may hate his enemies. Anſw. Firſt, we muſt put a difference betweene our enemies cauſe, and his perſon; their evill cauſes and their ſinnes muſt bee hated, and we muſt give no approbation thereto: but yet their perſons being Gods creatures, and bearing his image in ſome ſort, muſt bee loved. Againe, enemies be of two ſorts; private vate, and publike: a private enemie is hee that hateth a man for ſome private cauſe in himſelfe, or concerning his affaires: and ſuch an one we muſt love, and not hate, as Chriſt here commandeth. A publike enemie, is he that hates a man for Gods cauſe, for Religion and the Goſpels ſake: and theſe publike enemies be of two ſorts, curable, and incurable: If our publike enemies be curable, we muſt pray for their converſion, hating their conditions: If they be incurable, and we have plaine ſignes of their finall impenitence, then we may hate them, for ſo we hate the Devill: So Paul ſaith, [f] If any man love not the Lord Jeſus, Anathema Maranatha, let him be finally and wholly accurſed. And yet this we muſt know, that we ought to direct our hatred to their ſinnes, and for their ſinnes hate their perſons, and no otherwiſe. Now David in that Pſalme, ſpeaketh not of private, but of publike enemies, who hated not only him, but God alſo in his religion, and were alſo incurable.

Obiect. 2. But the practice of Gods children ſeemes to be otherwiſe: for David often curſeth his enemies, and prayeth for the deſtruction of them and theirs, Pſal. 109. 9, 10. and Peter wiſheth, that [g] Simon Magus may periſh with his money: and Paul prayeth the Lord, to reward Alexander the copper-ſmith according to his deeds, 2 Tim. 4. 14. How can this ſtand with the Text? Anſw. There be divers interpretations of theſe facts: Some ſay (which is true) that in Davids Pſalmes, his curſes are in proper ſenſe, prophecies of the deſtruction of publike incurable enemies of Gods Church, and are only propounded in the forme of prayers. Againe, David, Peter, and Paul, were inlightned by Gods ſpirit, and ſaw into the finall eſtate of theſe their enemies whom they curſed, and therefore doe they wiſh for their confuſion, not for their owne cauſe, in way of private revenge, but upon a deſire of the furtherance of Gods glorie, in the execution of his juſtice upon them whom he had forſaken. And it is not unlawfull for Gods children, to pray that God in juſtice would glorifie his name in the juſt puniſhment of impenitent ſinners, that be cruell enemies to his Church.

Obiect. 3. God gave Commandement to his people the Jewes, [h] to deſtroy the Canaanites, and to root out their enemies out of the land: now, how could they love them, whom they muſt ſo cruelly kill? Anſw. Wee muſt only love the Lord abſolutely, and others in God, and for God; that is, ſo farre forth as it ſtandeth with his pleaſure: and therefore when he commandeth to kill, we may lawfully kill. And this wee may doe by way of puniſhment appointed by God, not only without hatred, but in love, both forgiving the wrong which concernes us, and alſo praying for grace and mercie for the partie, if he belong to God.

Obiect. 4. There bee ſome that ſinne unto death, for whom wee are forbidden to pray, 1 Joh. 5. 16. and therefore we may not alwayes pray for our enemies? Anſw. Chriſts commandement to pray for our enemies, admitteth this exception, unleſſe they ſinne a ſinne unto death; but that ſinne is hardly knowen of the Church of God: and therefore private men muſt not in a conceit thereof, forſake this dutie, to pray for their enemies. Thus then is this Text to be underſtood; Love your enemies, that is, your private enemies, and doe good unto them, unleſſe God command you otherwiſe, and pray for them, if they ſinne not that ſinne unto death.

Vſes.

1 Papiſts doctrine of loving our enemies.

[a] Aqu. 2. 2. q. 25. art. 8. 9. Bonav. in 3. ſent. d. 29. q. 4. 5. 5.
[b] Tolet. inſtruct. 3. ſacer. l. 4. c. 10.

Here is confuted the old received doctrine of the Church of Rome, touching the love of our enemies, as comming neere to the doctrine of theſe Phariſes: They teach that a man is bound alwayes not to hate his enemies; but for loving them in good uſage outwardly, a man is not bound, ſave in two caſes: [a] Firſt, when our enemie is in neceſſitie, and danger of life; then he muſt be releeved and helped. Secondly, [b] in the caſe of ſcandall, when as by helping or releeving him wee give offence unto others: but out of theſe two caſes to ſhew kindneſſe to an enemie, is a matter of counſell and perfection. But this doctrine is damnable, flat againſt this Text, and the practice of Gods ſervants expreſſed in his Word; and therefore we muſt renounce it, and acknowledge that we are bound in conſcience, on everie occaſion, to ſhew our love in word and deed unto our private enemies.

[k] Iſa. 36. 4. 6. 12.

Secondly, hereby is condemned the common practice of men in theſe dayes; which is, to wrong their private enemies any way they can, by word or deed: ſome will raile upon them, as [i] Shemei did on David, and as [k] Rabſhekah did on Hezekias, and the people of God, yea, on God himſelfe. This is a damnable practice, flat againſt this commandement of Chriſt, and his holy practice, 1 Pet. 2. 23. Nay, Michael the Arch-angell durſt not blame the Devill with curſed ſpeaking, when he ſtrove againſt him, Jude 9.

3 O'd grudges unlawfull.

Thirdly, that fruit of rancour is here likewiſe reproved, whereby men will profeſſe they will never forget their enemies, though they doe forgive them. It is indeed agreeable to our corrupt nature, to keep a grudge long in minde, and to revive old wrongs: but this commandement of Chriſt condemneth this practice, and bindeth us both to forgive and forget: and therefore wee muſt labour to beat downe this ſpirit of revenge, and endevour to love our enemies in word and deed.

4 Hate no mans perſon.

Fourthly, here alſo ſee, that it is not lawfull to profeſſe enmitie to any mans perſon, for we ſhould love everie man. But how can we love him, to whom we profeſſe our lives enemies: Chriſtianitie and private enmitie cannot ſtand together: and therefore wee muſt labour to abandon out of our hearts, the hatred of any mans perſon, and ſtrive to ſhew forth loving uſage, even towards our enemies, though it bee againſt our nature, both by ſpeaking well well of them vnto others, and ſhewing kindneſſe vnto them, both in word and deed; wee muſt pray for them, and goe ſo farre in all good duties towards them, that by our well-doing, we may heape coales of fire vpon their heads: that is, cauſe their conſcience like a fire to burne within them, accuſing them of their ill dealing towards us, and not ſuffering them to reſt, till they lay away their enmitie and malicioufneſſe againſt us.

1 Rom. 12. 20.

Fifthly, this commandement of loving our enemies in word and deed, ſhewes it to be vnlawfull for any man to vtter evill ſpeeches of another, at any time, vnleſſe the occaſion be juſt, and he be lawfully called thereunto: for love covers a multitude of ſinnes, but diſgracing ſpeeches are fruits of hatred. Though Saul were Davids profeſſed enemie, and fought his bloud, yet David never reviled him; and wee ought to follow his good example.

v. 45 That yee may bee the children of your father which is in heaven: for he maketh his ſunne to ariſe on the evill, and the good: and ſendeth raine upon the juſt and unjuſt.

Becauſe it is againſt mans nature to love his enemie, therefore our Saviour Chriſt inforceth his Diſciples hereunto, by the benefit they ſhall reape hereby, in manifeſting themſelves to bee the children of God: for he ſpake to thoſe that were Gods children, thus perſwading them to love their enemies: That which will make you knowen to be Gods children, that you muſt doe; but by loving your enemies you ſhall make it manifeſt, that you are Gods children: this he proveth in the words following, becauſe it is a propertie of God ſo to doe; for hee maketh the ſunne to ariſe on the evill, and on the good, &c.

Vſe. 1 A true note of Gods child.

Here firſt obſerve a true note of the childe of God; namely, to imitate God his heavenly father, in loving his enemies, and expreſſing the ſame by all kinde uſage both in word and deed, praying for them, and relieving them in their neceſſities. And becauſe it is ſo bleſſed a thing to bee the childe of God, wee muſt therefore hereby ſtirre up our ſelves to the conſcionable performance of this dutie.

2 The exerciſe of a Chriſtian.

Secondly, from the ground of this reaſon wee are taught, that wee ought principally to imploy our ſelves to thoſe things, by the doing whereof, we may get aſſurance that we are the children of God; as alſo to ſhun the doing of all ſuch things, as declare us to be the children of Satan: that is, all ſinnes which are indeed workes of darkneſſe and of the Devill. In the evill day, whether it be of death, or of affliction, when no man can comfort us, this will breed only joy vnto our hearts, which will ſwallow up all feare, that we know our ſelves to be Gods children: for then the Lord will acknowledge us for his owne: but if by ſinne we be like the Devill, God will refuſe us, and ſo we fall wholly to the Devill. Let us therefore practiſe thoſe things, whereby this ground of comfort may be treaſured in our hearts.

3 Wherein Gods glorious eſſ. ſ. conſiſt.

Thirdly, note here the ſtyle and title of honour, which Chriſt giveth vnto God; he calls him not only their father, but their father which is in heaven: this he doth, to ſtir up reverence in his hearers towards God, and ſo have Gods children done, Dan. 9. 4. before that holy Prophet powres out his prayer vnto God for his people, he ſets out the Lord with moſt glorious titles; O Lord God, great and terrible, which keepeſt covenant and mercie, &c. And Ieremie praying vnto God, ſpends three or foure verſes, in ſetting out Gods great power and Majeſtie, Chap. 32. 17, 18, 19. So Hezekias in his prayer for the people, calls the Lord, the good God; which no doubt he did, to ſtirre up reverence in his owne heart, and in the people, towards God. Whereby we are taught, when we have occaſion to mention the name of God, to doe it with all reverence, and to uſe ſome titles of honour therewithall, to ſtirre up our ſelves and our hearers, to a gracious awe of heart towards Gods Majeſtie. But lamentable is the practice of the world in this behalfe: for everie where the name of God is toſſed in mens mouths like a tennis-ball: ſome in the middeſt of their laughter uſe, O God, O Lord, for breathing words: but others ſpare not to make Gods glorious name the enſigne of their rage and furie, in bloudie and blaſphemous oaths: but void of grace are all ſuch.

For he maketh the ſun to riſe on the evill, and on the good, and ſendeth raine on the juſt, and on the unjuſt. Here Chriſt propounds the propertie of God in doing good, and ſhewing kindneſſe to his enemies, to prove that by ſo doing, wee ſhall ſhew our ſelves to bee his children. Wherein firſt obſerve, the manner of Chriſts ſpeech; he ſaith not, He hath cauſed the ſunne to riſe, and hath ſent raine, &c. but ſpeaking of the time preſent, he doth now cauſe the ſunne to riſe, and ſendeth raine: ſo likewiſe Joh. 5. 17. My father yet worketh, and I worke together with him. In which phraſe is expreſſed a notable worke of Gods heavenly providence; namely, that after the creation of all things, whereby God gave being vnto the creatures, and power and vertue to doe the things for which they were created, he doth by his providence ſtill preſerve that being, and ſo in everie particular creature. It is God that gave being to the Sunne at the beginning, and it is he that ever ſince continueth the being of the Sunne, with the light and vertue thereof: and the ſame is true of all creatures, and of our ſelves: [a] for in him we live, move, and have our being:

being: hee is not like a Carpenter who builds an houſe, and then leaves it, but ſtill hee preſerves the things hee hath created. Herein hee may well be compared to a ſpring or fountaine, which cauſeth the rivers to flow while it ſendeth out waters, but when it is ſtopped, they are dried up: even ſo, whiles God continueth the being and uſe of creature, ſo long they are; but if he with-hold his hand from them, they ceaſe to be, and the uſe of them continueth no more. Thus it is with us, both in regard of our ſoules and bodies, with the faculties, powers, and graces thereof; but [b] what haſt thou that thou haſt not received from him? who [c] beareth up all things by his mighty word.

b 1 Cor. 4. 7.
c Heb. 1. 3.

Duties from Gods preſerving providence.

Now hence wee muſt learne theſe duties: Firſt, to ſeek to know him that is daily about us, and preſerveth us in ſoule and in body, from houre to houre. Secondly, to cleave vnto God with our hearts, and to ſet our affections of love, feare, joy, and hope, wholly upon him, becauſe hee is the author and continuer of our being, what ever it bee. Thirdly, to obey our God in all things: for ſhall hee give being to our bodies and ſoules, and ſhall wee diſpoſe of them after our pleaſures, to offend him, who doth wholly ſupport us, and that continually?

The ſunne is the Lords.

Secondly, here note Chriſt ſaith, his ſunne, not the ſunne; teaching us, that the ſunne which ſhineth in the firmament, is Gods ſunne, not mens: God himſelfe is the ſole author and governour thereof, hee continueth that being which it hath, and the power and vertue which it ſheweth forth. And the ſame thing by proportion, muſt be underſtood of all other creatures both in heaven and earth, the moone and ſtarres, all beaſts and cattell, yea, and wee our ſelves are Gods creatures, and he is our Creator, our Lord, and Governour: Pſal. 50. 12. The whole world is mine, and all that is therein. Now hence wee muſt learne two things: Firſt, not to abuſe any creature to our luſt, as food, rayment, &c. but to uſe whatſoever we enjoy to Gods glorie, according to his will. Secondly, to endevour to bee led by the creatures which wee enjoy, to the knowledge of our Creator, for they are his: but alas, the practice of the world is otherwiſe, men ſuffer themſelves by the creatures to bee drawen from God; for ſome make their belly their God; to others, riches and pleaſures are their God.

Thirdly, Chriſts ſaying of the Father, that he maketh his ſunne to ariſe on the evill and on the good, doth ſhew us that common bountie which God vouchſafeth to his creatures, both good and bad: for the riſing and ſhining of the ſun, is an excellent worke of God, by which many other bleſſings are convayed to the creatures: For firſt, everie thing upon the earth receiveth heat and warmneſſe from it, nothing is hid from the heat thereof, Pſal. 19. 6. In which regard it may well be called, the moſt vniverſall fire of the whole world. Secondly, the ſunne ſerveth notably for the diſtinction of times, by day and night, weekes, moneths, quarters, and whole yeares, whereby wee know the terme of times from the beginning, and ſo may doe till the end of the world: in regard whereof it may well bee called, the clocke of the whole world. Which things conſidered, may make us to bluſh and bee confounded in our ſelves, for that light regard wee have had of ſo excellent a creature, whereby God convayes ſo manifold bleſſings upon the earth! let us therefore learne to bleſſe God for the ſunne, and to expreſſe our thankfulneſſe by all good duties.

And ſendeth raine on the juſt and unjuſt. Here is noted the ſecond common bleſſing beſtowed of God upon the world; to wit, the falling of the raine upon the ground, both of good and bad. Now here firſt obſerve the forme of ſpeech uſed by Chriſt, ſaying, God ſendeth: ſee Deut. 11. 14. The Lord giveth raine in due ſeaſon, the firſt and latter raine. This worke is attributed to God, for weightie cauſes: Firſt, to ſhew that the ſame God, who ordained in the beginning, that the clouds ſhould water the earth, doth by his owne power uphold the continuance of the ſame bleſſing unto this day: and indeed, if hee ſhould not will the continuance thereof, it would for ever ceaſe to raine upon the earth. Secondly, to teach us that God diſpoſeth of the raine that falleth, reſtraining and inlarging it at his pleaſure, either for the bleſſing, or the puniſhment of the place whereon it falleth, and that many times without the helpe of the ſecond cauſes. Levit. 26. 3, 4. If yee walke in mine ordinances, I will ſend you raine in due ſeaſon: and verſe 19. But if you will not obey me, I will make your heaven as iron, & your earth as braſſe. Amos 4. 7. I have with-holden raine from you, and cauſed it to raine upon one citie, and not upon another; one peece was rained upon, and that which was not rained upon, withered.

Reaſon a common bleſſing of God.

Why God is ſaid to raine.

Here then we muſt learne firſt, that we ought to pray unto God for his raine of bleſſing; that is, for fruitfull ſeaſons; and alſo to be thankfull unto God for ſeaſonable weather when we receive it, becauſe he ſendeth it.

Vſe 1.

2. This muſt teach us to obey and ſerve God: for hee hath the clouds in his hands like a ſponge, and when hee will hee preſſeth out the raine thereof: now, if wee obey him, hee will cauſe it to fall upon the earth for a bleſſing; but if we rebell againſt him, hee will either hold it backe, or powre it downe upon us for a curſe.

3. Seeing God ſendeth downe the raine, we may gather that no man can certainly tell, by the courſe of the heavens, the particular ſeaſon of the weather day by day. If the raine depended wholly upon the celeſtiall bodies, then ſhould it fall alike in all places, that be of like poſition to the heavens; but that is not ſo, for God ordereth it according to the ſtate of the people, upon whom it falleth, either for a bleſſing, or a curſe, as we have heard.

Alſo by call prediction of time uncertaine.

4. Hence we may gather, that neither witches

ches by the helpe of Satan, nor yet Satan himselfe can cause raine, as many thinke; for it is God always yes that raineth. The Devill indeed is the prince of the aire, and by Gods permission he may joyne himselfe unto a storme, and make it more terrible and hurtfull; as hee did in the destruction of [a] Iobs cattell and children, by fire from heaven, and by a mightie wind: but yet he cannot make the matter of wind, or of raine; that is proper to God.

5. Doth God raine upon the earth? then we may well consider, why the land is so often plagued with unreasonable raine: it is no doubt for our disobedience, as we have heard, Levit. 26. 19. and the contempt of the word, among other sinnes, is one maine cause of this judgement. Now if we would either remove, or prevent this plague at any time, wee must turne unto the Lord, and repent of our sinnes, for thereto we are called by this judgement, Amos 4. 7. And if we doe turne, then will the Lord send a gracious raine upon our Land; but if we will not turne, we shall have another raine, the raine of Sodome and Gomortha; for [b] upon the wicked God will raine snares, fire, and brimstone. And this is certaine, where God sends his judgements for the contempt of his word, and yet men doe not repent, there [c] one judgement is but the fore-runner of a greater, till they bee consumed. And this experience teacheth, that after inundations of waters, usually comes plague and pestilence: for the preventing of these judgements, let us repent.

The last point to be here observed is this: in what termes our Saviour Christ expresseth, who be the friends of God, and who be his enemies. His friends, he calleth good and just; his enemies, evill and unjust. Now that wee may discerne of our estate towards Gods in that behalfe, we must see what a good and just man is.

In verie such an one two things are required: First, true faith, whereby a man layes hold on Christ for his righteousnesse, sanctification, and redemption; and for the obtaining hereof, hee must deny himselfe, and become nothing in himselfe, that he may be all in Christ. Secondly, true conversion of the whole man unto God, from all sinne, so as his heart must be renued and disposed to please God in all things. And because these things are inward and secret, therefore to make them knowen, there is further required, that a man carrie in his heart a resolute and constant purpose, from time to time, never to sinne against God: and this purpose of heart hee must testifie by a godly and conscionable endevour of life, to please God in all things: for this is the fruit of true faith, and of sound inward conversion: and in regard hereof, were Enoch, Iob, David, Zacharie, and Elizabeth called just. But hee that wants this constant purpose, and a daily endevour, from a beleeving and penitent heart to please God in all things, is a wicked person, and as yet Gods enemie.

By this, first, we see how many are deceived everie where, with civill honestie: for if a man live uprightly among his neighbours, and doe abstaine from murther, adulterie, oppression, and such like sinnes, hee is presently counted a good man: such an one indeed may be counted an honest man civilly, as [c] Abimelech was, but yet this outward honestie makes not a man just and good in the sight of God, so as hee reputes him for his friend; thereto are required true faith and true repentance, testified by new obedience.

[c] Gen. 20. 6.

A man may goe farre in religion, and not be the true friend of God.

Secondly, here also see, that neither the knowledge of Gods word, nor the hearing of it with some gladnes, and bringing forth some fruits, nor yet to bee able to conceive a prayer for the forme thereof; that none of these, (I say) no nor all of these, doe make a man the friend of God indeed, for all these may bee in an evill man, who hath a purpose in his heart to live in some sin, in whose heart as yet there is no true faith, nor sound repentance: without which (as we heard) no man is just in the sight of God, nor accounted for his friend. And therefore wee must not content our selves with these things, but labour to be good and just indeed. When affliction shall befall us, or death approach, wee would give all the world, if it were in our hands, for good assurance that God were our friend: now then let us labour for true faith and repentance, and testifie these by a constant purpose, and a godly endevour to please God in all things, thorow the whole course of our lives; and then will the Lord esteeme us for his friends.

v. 46 For if you love them that love you, what reward shall yee have? doe not the Publicans even the same?

A second reason to love our enemies.

In these words our Saviour Christ propounds a second reason to perswade his Disciples and hearers to love their enemies; and to the end it might take the deeper root in their hearts, hee repeats the same againe in the next verse, which in effect is the same with this. The words are plaine, if we know what Publicans were: Publicans therefore were Officers that gathered toll and tribute, taxes, and rents of the Jewes, for the Roman Emperour, to whom the Jewes were in subjection. Now in the gathering of it they used much injustice and oppression: for which cause they were hated of the Jewes, above all other people, and esteemed most basely of. Now (saith Christ) though these Publicans be void of all good conscience, yet they will love their friends, of whom they are loved. And hence Christ reasons thus; If you my hearers doe but love them that love you, yee doe but as these Publicans doe: but you must doe more than such ungodly persons doe: and therefore you must love your verie enemies.

Publicans.

Here

Rule of loving our neighbour.

Here first observe, that Christ doth not forbid one friend to love another, for then hee should bee contrarie to himselfe; but here hee condemnes carnall love, whereby one man loves another, only because he is loved againe, which in effect is nothing else, but for a man to love himselfe in another. And here to note the true manner of loving our neighbour, this Rule must be remembred, that all the Commandements of the second Table must bee practised in and with the first Commandement, touching the love of God: Thus father and mother must be honoured, in God, and for God; and thus one man must love another in God, yea, though he be his enemie, because he is Gods creature, and beares his image, as well as he himselfe doth: yea, he is by God commended to our love. This must be the ground, though for other respects our love may increase towards our brother.

What things we must specially adde unto our loves.

What reward shall ye have? Here Christ would teach us singular wisdome for the ordering of our lives; namely, that we give our selves especially to the doing of such things, as with God have promise of reward: what moved Moses to refuse to bee called the sonne of Pharaohs daughter, to forsake the pleasures and riches of Ægypt, and to chuse to suffer affliction with Gods people? the word of God is plaine, [d] he had respect to the recompence of reward. But this doctrine is not regarded, else how should all places abound so much with idle persons, and such as give themselves wholly to gaming and company keeping, to sports and delight: now what reward can these looke for at Gods hands, unlesse it be the wages of sinne, which is eternall death? Let us therefore beware of such a course, and learne to abound in good works, which are things good and profitable.

Christians must abound in love.

Doe not the Publicans even the same? Our Saviour Christs intent in this instance, is to shew that his Disciples, and so all professours of the Gospell, must goe beyond all other people in duties of love: indeed their whole life should be spent in the practice of this vertue, Eph. 5. 1. Walke, that is, lead the course of your life in love; and the state of the Church is, to dwell in love, 1 Joh. 4. 16. The reason is great, for Christians of all other, receive the greatest measure of love from God, through Jesus Christ, and therefore they must abound in this grace; first towards God, and then one towards another: this is the badge of a Christian, and the grace of our religion, and therefore let us shew it forth.

v. 47 And if yee bee friendly to your brethren only, what singular thing doe yee? doe not even the Publicans likewise?

Christs drift in these words, is further to inforce the duties of love, to the last effect with the former verse. The word translated bee friendly, betokens the friendship which was shewed in that countrey in salutations, by embracing: now saith Christ, the verie Publicans will kindly embrace their friends, therefore you must doe more.

Kinde usages of an enemie.

Prier to salutation.

We observed before three branches of kinde usage to be shewed towards an enemie; to wit, to speake well of him, to pray for him, and to doe him good: now here wee may annex a fourth, even friendly salutation. This Christ injoyned to his Disciples, when he sent them to preach: when yee come into an house salute the same, Mat. 10. 12. although it may be afterward they curbed it, because it was unworthy. And here wee must learne to be kinde and courteous in salutation to our professed enemie.

Obiect. 1. This is to countenance them in their sinne and wrongdoing unto us? Ans. In saluting an enemie, we must put a difference betweene his person and his sinne; wee must shew kindnesse to his person, but not countenance his sinne: nay, when we embrace his person, if occasion be offered, we must disgrace his sinne.

Obiect. 2. 2 Joh. 10. If any man bring not this doctrine, bid him not God speed. Ans. John there speakes of such persons as are enemies to God, to his truth, and to his Church; and such indeed wee must not embrace: 2 King. 3. 14. Elisha saith to Iehoram the idolatrous king of Israel, that hee would not have looked upon him, nor seene him, had it not beene for reverence of Iehosiphat the good king of Iudah then present. But private enemies, of whom Christ here speaketh, must alwayes be kindly used in salutation. And yet there is a case, wherein this kinde salutation may be denied to one that is not a publike enemie: to wit, when a superiour omitteth it as a part of chastisement and correction upon the inferiour. Thus David denied Absolon to come in his sight for a time, after hee had pardoned him for killing Amnon, 2 Sam. 14. 24. but among equalls and private men this must be practised: yea, we must salute kindly, though they salute us not againe.

Whie God commands men to be perfect.

v. 48 Be ye therefore perfect, as your father which is in heaven is perfect.

Here Christ inferres an excellent consequent from the former reasons, wherein hee exhorts his Disciples to perfection in all the duties of love. In it observe two parts: a commandement to bee perfect; and a patterne thereof in God. For the first, why doth God command that which no man can performe, for who can be perfect? Ans. God gives this and such like commandements for divers causes: First, in regard of his elect, for to them Gods commandements serve as meanes of obedience, God by his grace inabling them to doe that which by commaund hee requires: for as in the creation Gods commandement gave being to the creatures, so is it after a sort in the regeneration, as here, be yee perfect, is a meanes to make Gods children perfect. Secondly, in regard of the wicked, as well to restraine corruption in them, for the peace of his Church, as also to leave them without excuse, seeing the best workes they doe are short of that which they are bound to performe.

Of perfection. To come to the vertue commanded, which is perfection in duties of love. Perfection in generall, is twofold: of the Law, and of the Gospell. Perfection of the Law is, when a man loves God and his neighbour, according to the rigour of the Law. This is in no man in this life, but this shall be in Gods elect in the life to come. Perfection of the Gospell, is that endevour of obedience which God accepts in Christ, at the hands of his children. This distinction the Apostle maketh, Philip. 3. for first hee saith, he hath not attained to perfection, v. 12. meaning the perfection of the Law: and yet after hee speaketh of himselfe and others, as being perfect, v. 15. Let us (saith he) as many as bee perfect, be thus minded: that is, as many as be perfect according to the Gospell. Thus were Noah, Abraham, Job, Zacharie and Elizabeth perfect, that is, sincere and upright before God, both in heart and life: and this is that perfection which Christ here requireth.

Parts of Evangelicall perfection. 1 Further, this Evangelicall perfection hath two parts; either of mans nature, or of his actions. The perfection of mans nature is by regeneration: for as in originall sinne, is both guilt of Adams sinne imputed, and corruption inherent, which is the seed of all sinne: so in regeneration, which is the renuing of mans corrupt nature, there is an abolishing of corruption, and a restoring of grace in everie part and faculrie of the soule: for looke how far corruption spread it selfe by Adams sinne, so farre doth grace extend by regeneration. Of this perfection there bee three branches; First, an upright judgement in the minde, whereby a man understands and believes not only the grounds of religion, but everie other doctrine truly grounded in the Word, and is ready to receive it, as it is further revealed; this is sincerittie in judgement: whereby it is plaine, that to hold only the grounds of religion, and for other points, to follow the time, is a great imperfection and want of sincerrie. Secondly, a pure and honest heart, whereby a man is free from any purpose to live in sin; and on the contrarie is inclined to everie thing that is good. Thirdly, a good conscience, giving testimony according to the Word, and so excusing, that a man may say with Paul, [a] I know nothing by my selfe: meaning, for which he should condemne himselfe. And looke where nature is renued, there these three are never wanting.

2 Perfection of mans actions.

Perfection of mans actions standeth in two things; First, in bewailing his wants and imperfections, known and secret: for it is a degree of perfection, to bewaile our imperfection. Secondly, in setting himselfe from a sincere heart, to obey God in all his Commandements, as occasion is offered: Psal. 119. 6. I shall not be confounded, when I have respect to all thy Commandements: and this indeed is the perfection of a Christian: halfe obedience is nothing: for as [b] Iames saith, he that failes in one Commandement of purpose and custome, is guiltie of all, because if occasion were offered, hee would breake all the rest.

b Iam. 2. 10.

Perfection in parts and in degrees. But it will be said, a man may have both these, and yet want much of perfection. Answ. A thing is said to be perfect two wayes; either in parts, when it hath all the parts of perfection, though in weake measure; or in degrees, when it hath a full measure of perfection in everie part. A childe new borne is a perfect man in regard of his parts, having all the parts and members of a man; but it is not perfect in degree, till everie part grow up to his perfection. Now the childe of God when he is regenerate, hath all parts of perfection, both in soule and bodie, though in weake measure; but in this life, hee is not perfect in degrees, which is that full measure the Law requireth. 2 Chron. 15. 17. The heart of Asa is said to bee perfect towards God all his dayes: and yet the high places were not taken away; yea, he failed in seeking to the Physitian, and not unto God, chap. 10. 12. Asa then had perfection of parts, but to perfection of degrees hee attained not in this life: and therefore he failed in these particulars, through the weaknesse of sanctification, which here is not finished till death.

So then it is plaine, there is a perfection in the childe of God, though joyned with much weaknesse, even in this life, his nature is perfect, being renued in soule to sound judgement, to an honest heart and a good conscience: his actions are perfect in Gods acceptance through Christ, whiles hee bewailes his imperfection, and endevours sincerely to please God in all things. This is that which Christ injoynes to his Disciples: this wee must labour for, if wee will resemble our heavenly Father: we can get no higher in this life; but let us attaine to this, and in the life to come wee shall bee perfect in degrees, for then our regeneration shall bee accomplished.

But herein men faile and come short of their dutie; as first, all those that spend their strength and wit to get the things of this world: these men little thinke of this perfection which the Lord requires in his children: it may be they will heare the Word, but yet their hearts are so glued to the earth and earthly things, that they favour not of regeneration, they know not what it meanes: but if they will be Gods children, they must follow Iehoshaphat, 2 Chr. 17. 6. who lift up his heart to the wayes of the Lord: for that is the meanes to come to perfection.

Secondly, those also are reproved, that content themselves with a small measure of knowledge, and doe not strive after perfection, as Christ requireth: how can they have a found judgement, which study not to know the doctrine of the Scripture.

3 The generall want of Christian perfection. Thirdly, that generall want of Christian perfection is here reproved, when men content themselves, to yeeld to the outward duties of the first Table, that concerne Gods worship, and yet neglect the duties of the second Table, that concerne their brethren in generall, and pertaine to their functions and callings in particular. This is a common fault in Magistrates, Ministers, Parents, Masters, Servants, &c. they will be Christians in the Church, but they neglect to shew the power thereof in their callings, but this is a grievous want of sincerity, which makes them farre unlike their heavenly father: for he is ever like himselfe, and therefore looke what men professe in Gods worship, that must they practise in their callings. A Magistrate must bee a Christian upon the Bench, as well as in the Church; in the administration of Justice, as well as in the Congregation: and so must Ministers, Masters, and all estates. God allowes not of that service in the Church, that serve their wicked lusts at home, Jer. 7. 9, 10. Gods Sacrifices under the Law must bee whole and sound, not halt and lame, or maimed; and such should our obedience be under the Gospel, with sincere respect to all Gods Commandements. It profited Herod little to heare John gladly, and to doe many things, so long as he kept his brothers wife; nor Judas to follow Christ, while his heart was upon the bag. Let our practice of religion therfore, shew forth the truth of our publike profession, and so shall we in some sort resemble our heavenly Father.

CHAP. 6.

V. 1 Take heed that you give not your Almes before men, to bee seene of them, or else yee shall have no reward of your Father which is in heaven.

2. Part of Christs Sermon. IN the former chapter, the Evangelist hath faithfully recorded three parts of our Saviour Christs Sermon, and here he beginneth the fourth, which reacheth to the 19. verse of this chapter: wherein our Saviour Christ goeth about to reforme his hearers of all abuses in doing good workes, and he instanceth in these three; Almes-deeds, Prayer, and Fasting: not so much commanding them, as giving direction for the right manner of performing them, so as they may be acceptable unto God. From the first verse to the fifth, he intreateth of Almes-deeds, propounding two severall commandements, touching the manner of giving Almes. The first is in this 1. verse, Take heed that you give not your Almes before men, to be seene of them: which he inforceth by an effectuall reason in the words following, or else ye shall have no reward of your Father which is in heaven. And then exemplifieth it by a particular example of a corrupt manner of giving Almes, borrowed from the ambitious practice of the Scribes and Pharisies, vers. 2. The second commandement touching Almes-giving, is in the 3. verse, whereof hee renders a reason in the 4. verse.

Of Almes-deeds.

For the first Commandement, Take heed, &c. This may seeme to bee repugnant to that precept given before, Chapter 1. 16. Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good workes. But here is no contrariety, if wee marke well: for in the former Chapter wee are commanded to doe good workes before men, that they may see them, and glorifie God for the same. Now here wee are not forbidden simply to doe good workes before men, but to doe them before men for this end, to have our praise of men, that wee might bee glorified for doing them, howsoever it went with God.

A diverse reading. Before wee come to the Rule, the words are somewhat to be scanned: for whereas we read them thus, Give not your Almes before men, &c. Some ancient Churches, after other copies and translations read them thus, Doe not your righteousnesse or justice before men: which must not seem strange that in Gods book there should be diverse readings: for in former ages, before Printing was invented, the Scriptures of God were conveyed from hand to hand, by meanes of writing: now they that writ out the copies of Scripture, did now and then mistake some words and letters by negligence, or ignorance, and put one thing for another, whereupon doe come these diverse readings: yet wee must not think that the word of God is hereby maimed or made imperfect: for the true sense of the holy Ghost remaines found and perfect, though it may bee wee cannot discerne of the right reading. And the sense of Scripture is rather to bee judged the word of God, than the words and letters thereof. Now it being here uncertaine, whether reading to follow, (for either of them contains a sense convenient to the place) therefore I will exclude neither, but from them both propound this instruction.

Almes giving is a duty.

That the giving of Almes is Iustice, and a part of right worshipe which God requires at our hands. This the Apostle sheweth plainly out of the 2 Psalmes, 2 Cor. 9.9. He hath distributed and given to the poore, his righteousnesse remaineth for ever. And in common reason it must be so, for a man is but a steward over the goods he possesseth; the poore with whom he liveth, hath title to part thereof, and he must give unto them by b God's expresse commandement: so as unlesse hee give in time fort, hee playes the theefe, and robs the poore, by keeping backe that which is their due.

Psal. 112.9.

b Position for the Papists duty.

In regard whereof wee must learne: first, to acknowledge that providing of maintenance for the poore, is not a worke of freedome or liberty, left to mens choice, whether they will doe it or no, but a matter of justice; and the not doing of it is injustice, against the law of God and of Nature, which require that the poore should bee maintained at home without begging abroad. Secondly, this should move us, to lay aside some portion of our goods to give unto the poore, for the poore have interest unto them and for this cause we ought to cut off our superfluities in feasting, in attire, in sports and pleasures, that so wee may bee better inabled to doe justice in giving unto the poore: for hereby commonly men are disabled to doe this part of justice. Thirdly, this should teach us according to our places, to see those good orders well maintained and set forward, which are provided for the comen relefe and maintenance of the poore: for the neglecting of them is injustice, and a kinde of theft against the poore.

Secondly, of the word translated, Almes: it is very pithy, signifying mercy and pitty; whence wee may learne: First, what it is that makes our giving to the poore to be Almes: it is not the thing given, but the mercifull and pitifull heart of the giver, be the thing never so small, as was the poore widows mite: and therefore all our almes must proceed from a pitifull heart. Secondly, as the with what a one that party must be that is to be relieved, namely, such a one as is to be pitied, not our lusty beggers, but infants, orphanes, the lame, blinde, weake, maimed, and aged persons.

What motive to give with a pitifull heart.

Infants, &c.

Aged persons.

Thus much for the words: now followeth the Commandement it selfe: Take heed that you give not your Almes before men to be seen of them. This Commandement tendeth to this end, to teach men how to avoid the unlawfull manner of giving Almes: for a good thing may be done in an ill manner, and usually men offend this way in their good deeds. Now

A this Commandement prescribes a double circumspection in giving Almes: first, touching the ground: secondly, touching the end of Almes-giving. The ground of our Almes must not be the pride of our hearts: This Christ forewarnes us of, if we looke it should be good and acceptable in the sight of God. This is a point of great importance, and therefore for the better observing of it, I will here shew two points: I. What this pride is: II. Why it must bee so carefully avoided in our almes-deeds. By pride I meane not outward pride in apparell, but that which is inward in the soule, consisting partly in the minde, and partly in the will and affections. Pride of minde is a corrupt disposition thereof, whereby a man thinkes himselfe to bee better, and more excellent than indeed he is: this was the sinne of the Pharisie, who boasted unto God of his owne goodnesse, Luke 18. 11, 12. And hence it came that the Church of Laodicea a gloryed in her selfe, saying, I am rich, and increased in wealth, and lack nothing, when as indeed she was poore, and blind, and miserable, and naked. This conceit is most dangerous, especially in the point of grace, causing many to deceive their owne soules by thinking they have grace when they have none, and overweening that which they have. Pride in will is an inward affection, whereby a man is not contented with that estate wherein God hath placed him, but desires a better. This befell b Adam and Eve, who sought to be like unto God himselfe; and this taketh hold of most men in every age. Now from these two proceedeth that practice of pride in mans life, whereby hee endevours to doe what soever hee can for his owne praise and glory. This pride is not in some few persons alone, but in every man naturally that comes of Adam, Christ Jesus onely excepted. And where it takes place it is so strong, that it will not be crossed: for rather than a man will not have his will in this, he will commit any sinne. This caused Absalom to banish his father out of his owne kingdome: and Achitophel to hang himselfe, when his counsell was refused: and some Popes (as histories makes mention) to bequeath their soules unto the Devill for the obtaining of the Popedome. And this is that inward corruption which Christ here forbids to bee the ground of our Almes-deeds.

A double ground of mans giving.

Practise of pride.

Or of Popes Papists called Sede vacante.

II. Point. The reasons why this inward pride must be carefully avoided, bee these two: First, because whatsoever outward good worke the child of God can doe by grace, the same may a wicked man doe through pride: as conceive a prayer, preach the word, and practise the outward duties of repentance, of love, and such like: for pride is a sinne that will counterfeit grace, and man cannot discerne it, but God onely. Secondly, many other sinnes prevaile in the wicked, but pride is the sinne that troubleth the children of God; and when other sinnes die, then will pride revive; yea, it will arise out of

of grace it selfe: for the childe of God will be proud, because he is not proud: therefore Paul c must be buffeted by the Messenger of Satan, lest he should be puffed up with abundance of revelations.

c 2 Cor. 12.7.

How pride may be avoided.

Now the way to avoid this dangerous sinne stands in two things: first, we must be carefull to know the pride of our owne heart, for every man hath it in him more or lesse, and the more we see it, the lesse it is; but the lesse we see it, the more it is in us indeed: and though wee know nothing by our selves, yet let us suspect our selves hereof, and labour to see it in our hearts; for he that is the most humbled, is not altogether free from this inward pride: secondly, when we see our pride, we must labour to subdue it; which we shall doe, first, by considering the judgements of God upon this sinne: Were not our first parents cast out of Paradise when they would needs be as gods? And Herod was eaten up of wormes when hee took unto himselfe the glory due unto God, Act. 12.23. Therefore Peter d saith, God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. A man that would beg an almes, must not goe in proud apparell; and so he that would procure the favour of God, must not come with a proud heart. Secondly, we must search into our selves, and labour to see our owne wants and corruptions, as our blindnesse of minde and ignorance, our unbeleefe, &c. and the sight of our sinnes will be a meanes to humble us: for they that feele no wants in themselves cannot choose but be puffed up. Thirdly, we must meditate upon the death and passion of Christ, which he endured for our redemption; how he sweat water and bloud, and suffered the wrath of God both in soule and body for our sinnes; now how can a man thinke that Christ endured all this for him, and yet bee not cast downe with the sight of his owne sinnes, which had a part in the cause of all the curse that caus'd Christ to cry, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?

An ill end in Almes-giving.

The second branch of circumspection in Almes-giving here commanded, respects the end thereof: We must not give Almes to be seene of men, that is, to get praise and fame among men. This caveat Christ gives for a weightie cause: for the corruption of mans Nature through the instigation of the devill, causeth every one almost to doe all good workes for wrong ends: why doe many men toyle themselves to much in their ordinary callings? is it not partly for honour, partly for pleasure, partly for profit? and doe not the most men propound this end to themselves herein, to maintaine their families? But though this be a good and commendable thing, yet neither that, nor the rest are the right ends for which man should labour and travell: the right end of all, is the glorie of God in mans good, or the good of man in Gods glory; now when our good works proceed from an humble heart, which sincerely intends the glory of God in mans good, then is

A the worke pleating unto God. Other ends or beginnings doe prophane mens labours: and therefore Christ giveth this caveat, to look both to the beginning, and the end of our Almes-deeds.

Thus much of the commandement: the reason of it is this; or else ye have no reward of your Father which is in heaven: so the words are, ye have no reward; and they are very significant, importing thus much; If you doe your workes from an humble heart, for Gods glory in mans good, then you have a reward laid up for you in heaven: which though it appeares not presently, yet it is as sure as if you had it already in possession: but if you doe not so, you have no reward laid up for you by your heavenly father.

From this reason in generall we may gather, that hee which hath grace to doe, if it bee but one good worke (as to give Almes) upon a good ground, and for a good end, shall never perish, but shall receive eternall life: which may be a notable motive to provoke every man to doe good works: as also it proves that the child of God can never perish or finally fall away: for nothing is lost that is laid up with God.

More particularly, first, observe that the word reward is not taken properly, but by resemblance, thus: like as a labourer after hee hath done his worke, receiveth his wages; so the child of God having done that which God commandeth him, receiveth a reward. Secondly, it is said of your father, to signifie that this reward is not merited, but is the free gift of a father unto his children. Lastly, Christ saith your Father, speaking to all his hearers, among whom was Judas, whom else-where hee calls a devil, and others whom hee knew to be none of Gods children, and yet being here a preacher and Minister of circumcision (as the Apostle e speaketh) hee leaveth the secret judgement unto God, and following the judgements of hope and charitie, taketh all his hearers, to bee the children of God: which is a notable president to all Gods Ministers, for Christ here preaching of love, practiseth it; and so ought his servants doe. This also condemneth the practice of those, that upon a little falling out will not sticke to call others damned wretches, or reprobates; there is no charity in such censures: for love alwaies hopes the best, 1 Cor. 13.

V. 2 Therefore when thou giveſt thine Almes, thou ſhalt not make a trumpet to be blown before thee, as the hypocrites doe in the Synagogues and in the ſtreets, to be praiſed of men: verely I ſay unto you, they have their reward.

Here Christ propoundeth by way of prohibition, a particular example of the corrupt manner of Almes-giving, proceeding from pride of heart and ambition, borrowed from the practice of the Scribes and Pharisies; and withall he annexeth in the end of the verse an effectuall reason to move men to circumspection about the ground and end of their Almes-deeds.

The Exposition. The originall is this: Thou shalt not blow a trumpet before thee; so that our translation doth also expound the words of Christ, according to the common rule of Divines; that words of fact are often times put for words of speech: which being well observed, will cleare many places from false interpretation. Exod. 12. 2. God saith to Moses, Sanctifie unto me all the first borne: and to Iosua, Make thee sharpe knives, and circumcise the sonnes of Israel, that is, command them to be sanctified, and circumcised. Jer. 1. 10. I have set thee over nations and kingdomes (saith God to Jeremie) to plucke up, to root out, to destroy, and throw downe, to build, and to plant: that is, to preach, and by preaching to pronounce that I the Lord will doe these things. Joh. 4. 1. Christ is said to baptize, (that is, (as the next verse imports) hee commanded his Disciples to baptize: and Act. 10. 15. God is said to purifie things; that is, hee pronounceth things to be pure. As hypocrites doe in the Synagogues: The word hypocrite, betokeneth one that takes upon him to represent the person of another: as players doe, who sometime represent mighty Kings, otherwhiles poore beggers, and to them it properly belongeth. Now by resemblance it is applyed to any, that outwardly feigne themselves to have that goodnesse and holinesse which they have not: for hypocrisie is nothing else, but a shew of that goodnesse outwardly, which indeed is not in the heart. Now in this instance is included a second reason of the former Commandement, touching the manner of Almes-giving, serving to make all Christs hearers circumspect, both for the ground and end of their good workes: and the reason stands thus; That which hypocrites doe, you must not doe: but they doe their Almes to be praised of men, as is plaine in this example: and therefore you are not to give almes to be seene and praised of men.

Out of this example we may learne these Instructions: First, that it is the propertie of an hypocrite to doe good workes, for false ends: as to be seene of men, and to be praised of men: for indeed an hypocrite in his heart makes choice not of God, but of men to be the Judges and approvers of his good works. And this is grosse hypocrisie, because hereby the honour due to God is taken from him and given to men, for God ought to bee the Judge and approver of all our actions.

Now as Christ layes this sinne upon the Scribes and Pharisies, so ought every one of us to lay it on our selves, considering our selves as wee are by nature out of Christ; for so wee make not God, but men the Judges and approvers of our actions: this will hereby appeare evidently, for when we doe a good thing, and yet thereby incurre the displeasure of men, are wee not more grieved thereat, than when by sinne we offend God himselfe? which could not bee, but that our hearts doe more respect the censure of men, than of the Lord. And to cleare this point yet further; consider this; that the roote of hypocrisie and of Atheisme is in our nature, whereby naturally wee doe these three things, wee love, feare and trust in men more than in God, and therefore doe make men the Judges of our actions. 1. for love: are wee not grieved when wee our selves or our friends are dishonoured; and on the contrary, when wee our selves or our friends are praised, are we not glad and rejoice? But when God is dishonoured, who is grieved? Or whose heart doth leape for joy, when God is glorified? which argues plainely that our affection of love is more inclined towards our selves and to our friends, than unto God. 2. for feare: are not most men more afraid when they offend a mortall man like themselves, than when they offend the everliving God? 3. for trust and confidence in the time of affliction; most men are more comforted if some friend promise them helpe, than they are by all the promises of God himselfe in his Word. But men will say, that they love and feare, and trust in God above all: This indeed is the ordinary profession of ignorant people; but the truth is, that by nature wee refuse God to bee our Judge and our approver, and appeale unto them: and therefore we must labour to see and feele, and to beware this hypocrisie, and to be indued with the contrary grace whereby wee may simply and sincerely seeke to bee approved of God in all our actions.

Secondly, in this example note one evident cause of the disorder which was among the Jewes in respect of their poore: for they begged in the high wayes, in the streets of the cities, and gates of the Temple, flat against Gods commandement, who would not have such a begger in Israel: other occasions there were of this abuse, but one principall cause is here noted; namely, that private persons were permitted to give their private almes unto the poore with their owne hands in publike places. This was a great disorder, and the cause of many beggers: for private men could not discerne the particular wants of all that begged so; and therefore God had otherwise provided for them in the old Testament, as hee sheweth before. And in the new Testament there were chosen faithfull men called Deacons in every congregation, who were to looke unto their poore, to collect for them, and to distribute to every one according to their necessity. It is not unlawfull for a private man to give Almes in publike place if need require: but where the poore are no otherwise provided for, than by such such private releefe, it is a great disorder: like as it is in a family, where the children and servants know not where and when to have their dinners: for the poore are Gods children in his family, and ought to bee provided for in better sort, than by such private releefe: and therefore where good order is wanting for provision for the poore, it ought in conscience to be begun, and where it is begun, men must carefully maintaine and continue the same.

Thirdly, in this example of a corrupt manner of Almes-giving, see the concurrence of sundrie sinnes. First, here is noted hypocrisie, which were enough to condemne a man; but yet with this there goes ambition, and with both, an open contempt and breach of good order, in providing for the poore; which shewes evidently that no sinne goes alone, but ordinarily hath his companions: for sinnes are so infolded one in another, that he which commits one, is not free from any other: this may plainely bee shewed by many examples. In Adams sinne there was the breach of the whole law in every Commandement, either directly or by consequence: for hee shewed evident want of love to God, in beleeving Satan more than God; therein hee chose Satan for his God; hee worshipped Satan, and tooke Gods name in vaine; he shewed also evident want of brotherly love, for hereby he became a murtherer not onely of himselfe, but of all his posteritie: and thus doe sins concurre in every wicked action, in which regard it may be said with Iames 2, that he which faileth in one Commandement, is guilty of all: which must admonish us to make conscience of every sinne: for we cannot live in any one, but we must needs runne into many other.

Verely I say unto you, they have their reward. These words containe the reason of the former prohibition, wherein we may see the vanity of this giving of Almes: for the praise of men is all their reward; they have none with God, as we shewed in the former verse.

> 4 That thine Almes may bee seene in secret, and thy father that seeth in secret, he will reward thee openly.

These words containe Christs second Commandement touching the manner of Almes-giving, with the reason thereof. The Commandement is in the third verse, and it beareth this sense; that if the left hand could understand, yet it should not know what our right hand gave; and therefore much more must wee conceale the same from men. Yet here Christ forbids not all giving of Almes in open place, or in the sight of men, but his meaning is to restraine the ambition of the heart of the praise of men: the giver must not intend or desire that men should see him give almes, that they might praise him: but his heart must simply and sincerely seeke to approve it selfe unto God. This will appeare to be the right meaning of our Saviour Christ, by comparing this verse with the first: for here Christ renewes the Commandement there given, and forbiddeth the corrupt desire of the heart after vaine glory in the giving of Almes.

Now for our better understanding of this commandement, first, we will shew what is here forbidden; and secondly, what is commanded. Here are two things forbidden; first, all desire or intention of mens beholding of us, whenwe give our Almes: secondly, all respect and intent to please our selves in Almes-giving: for the left hand must not know what the right hand giveth. The thing here commanded is this, that he which gives Almes, must do it simply, intending and desiring onely to please God, and to approve his worke unto God without all by-respects of mens praise or approbation.

Here then first is condemned the doctrine of the Church of Rome, which teacheth men to doe good workes, with opinion of meriting life everlasting thereby at the hands of God: for that is farre more than to doe them for this end to get praise of men, which yet is here forbiddemand therefore the other must needs be abominable.

Secondly, seeing in our well-doing wee must simply intend to approve our selves unto God, it shall not bee amisse here to shew, how we may so doe our good workes that God may approve thereof. Hereunto foure things are required: faith, love, humility, and sincerity or simplicity. For the first, in every good worke there must be a two-fold faith: Iustifying faith, and a generall faith. Iustifying faith, whereby the person doing the worke must be reconciled to God, and stand before God a true member of Christ: for of this it is said, [e] Without faith it is impossible to please God. And Christ saith, [f] Every branch that beareth not fruit in me, the father taketh away: and without mee ye can doe nothing: where it is plaine, that whosoever would doe a worke acceptable to God, must first be in Christ: and the reason is evident: for first the person working must bee acceptable to God, before his worke can bee approved: but no mans person is approved of God, before he bee in Christ: and therefore justifying faith, whereby wee are united unto Christ, is chiefly necessary. By generall faith, I meane that, whereby a man beleeves that the worke hee doth is pleasing unto God. Hereof [g] Paul saith, Whatsoever is not of faith, is sinne. A worke may bee good in it selfe, and yet sinfull in the doer, if hee want this generall faith. Now unto this this are two things required: first, a word of God commanding the worke, and prescribing the manner of doing it: secondly, a promise of blessing upon the doing of it: for every good worke hath his promise, both of the things of this life, and of a better: these things must bee knowne and beleeved: upon these grounds wee must pray, give Almes, and doe every good worke, and so shall they bee approved of God. Now by this double faith required in every good worke, we see, how those that are bound to practise good workes, (as every one is more or lesse) ought to labour to bee acquainted with the word of God, that they may do their works in faith: for else though the worke be good, it may bee sinne in them because it is not of faith; which is the miserable state of ignorant persons, who through want of faith, cannot doe good workes in a good manner.

The second thing required, in the doing of a good worke, is love: love (I say) joyned with faith: for faith worketh by love, Gal. 5.9. Indeed faith doth some things of it selfe; as apprehend, receive, and apply Christ and his righteousnesse to the believer, which is the proper worke of faith: but other things it doth by the helpe of another: and so faith bringeth forth the works of mercy, and performeth the duties of the first and second table; not properly by it selfe, but by the helpe of love: and therefore here I say, that in every good worke is required that love whereby faith worketh. Now the kindes of love required in well-doing are two: first the love of God in Christ: for as wee know God in Christ, so must wee love him secondly, the love of our brethren, yea of our enemies: for howsoever in our understanding these two may be distinguished, yet in practice they must never bee severed; but must alwaies goe hand in hand, to move us to doe the workes of mercy, and all the duties of our calling: as Paul saith of himselfe, and the rest of the Apostles, The love of God constraineth us to preach the Gospel, 2 Cor. 5.14.

The third thing required in doing a good worke well is humilitie, whereby a man esteemeth himselfe, to be but a voluntary and reasonable instrument of God therein. This vertue will make a man give the honour of the worke to the principall Agent, that is, to God himselfe: who worketh in us both to will and to doe of his good pleasure.

The fourth thing required in well-doing, is simplicity, or singlenesse of heart: whereby a man in doing a good worke, intendeth simply and directly to honour and please God, without all by-respects to his owne praise, or the pleasing of men. This is a speciall vertue directing a man to the right end in every good worke, which is the obedience and honour of God, in mans good. This vertue was in Paul,[d] who in simplicity and godly pureneſſe had his conversation in the world: thus he preached the Gospel: and so ought we to doe every good worke. Now that

A this sincerity may shew it selfe, wee must take heed of a speciall vice which is contrary unto it, namely, the guile of the spirit, mentioned Psalm. 32. 2. which maketh a man intend and propound false ends and by-regards in doing good workes; as his owne praise and delight, to please men thereby. And that we may avoid this spirituall guile, we are to know, that it may and doth usually prevaile with men in foure cases: I. When those doe practise vertue in whom God only restraines the contrary vice: thus civill honest men that have no religion, may practise justice, temperance, mercy, and other morall vertues, because they are not inclined to injustice, intemperance, and the contrary vices: but these actions in them are no good workes before God, because they proceed not from sanctified hearts, sincerely intending to obey and glorifie God hereby. II. When men doe good workes for feare of divine justice and the penalties of mens lawes; and such for the most part is the repentance of the sicke: I grant indeed, that some doe truly repent in this estate, but commonly such repentance is unsound, and proceedeth not from a single heart, but from feare; whereby, being under Gods hand, they seeke to avoid his judgement. Such also are the outward duties of Religion, performed by our common Protestants, who come to Church, and receive the Sacraments chiefly for custome sake, and to avoid the danger of mens lawes. III. When men doe good B works for the honour and praise of men. This is a dangerous thing: upon this ground a man may preach the Word, use prayer, and professe the Gospel; yea, and be zealous for Gods glorie as Iehu was: and hence it comes, that many fal away to loosnesse of life from a strict profession of religion, because they received not the truth in simplicitie of heart, with purpose onely to obey and please God, but rather to get the praise of men. IV. When men doe good works C from some corruption of heart prevailing in them; as when a man is both proud and covetous, yet more proud than covetous: covetousnesse bids him not give to the poore; but yet pride desiring the praise of men prevailing in him, causeth him to give to the poore. And so when covetousnesse prevailes in a proud man, it D will cause him to abstaine from riot and proud apparell, which yet his pride would perswade him unto. In all these cases Spirituall guile corrupts the worke that otherwise is good in it selfe: and therefore we must have a watchfull eye unto singlenesse of heart in our well-doing and to the rest of the vertues before-named, that so we may bee able to say with good conscience, that our workes are such as God approveth.

Here is the reason whereby Christ inforceth the former Commandement; and it hath two parts: the first is drawne from a speciall propertie in God, to see in secret: the second is from his bounty, in rewarding openly.

For the first, the words are thus in the original, And thy father which is a seer in secret: for the word there used signifieth a discerning seer: whereby Christ would teach us, that God sees and beholds things that no man can see, even the secret thoughts and desires of mans heart.

God the secret seer.

Vse 1. Hence we must learne three things: I. To examine our selves strictly not onely of our grosse and open sinnes, which all the world may see; but also of our most inward and hidden corruptions; and when wee cannot see them, yet we must suspect our selves of our secret wants; for though men know them not, no nor wee our selves, yet God the secret seer beholdeth them. II. Never to hide our sinnes within our selves, but freely to lay them open before God to our owne shame, yea, to confesse our unknowne sinnes: we must not like Adam, sew fig-leaves together to cover our nakednesse, or flie from God thinking to hide our selves from his sight: for hee discerneth in secret. III. To be carefull not onely to doe good workes, but also to doe them in an holy manner, from good grounds, and to a right end: for God seeth secrets, and will not bee shifted off with false shews. [e] David saith, I have kept thy precepts and thy testimonies, because all my waies are before thee. And the rather must we be moved hereunto, because God knowing what is in mans heart, doth oftentimes prove men with temptations that he may discover the guile of their hearts: and therefore that wee may escape the judgements of God due unto hypocrisie, wee must labour to doe all good duties in singlenesse of heart.

e Psal. 119. 168.

The second reason drawne from Gods bountie unto them that in singlenesse of heart doe good workes, is in these words; he will reward thee openly: wherein he preventeth this objection, which some of his hearers might make against his former precept. If I may not doe good workes to be seene of men, then shall I loose my labour: Christ answers, Not so: for God the father will reward thee openly, if thou doe good from a single heart, onely respecting the praise and honour of God in mans good. If it be asked, how this can stand with that saying of Christ, Ioh. 5.22. That the father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the son: I answer, that in regard of deliberation, of authority, and consent, the last judgement shall be executed by the whole Trinitie: but yet in regard of immediate execution, the Father judgeth not, but Christ onely: for hee alone giveth the sentence both of absolution and condemnation.

Of praise. R The Author.

The second reason teacheth us sundry things concerning praise. First, that God himselfe is the sole author of true praise: Paul saith, he which praiseth himselfe is not allowed, but he whom the Lord praiseth: where hee compareth the world to a Theater, wherein men are actors, and men and Angels bee spectators; but God alone is the Iudge, who giveth praise and good name to every one that deserveth it, not onely in this life, but in the world to come: in regard whereof, wee must endevour our selves so to doe all our good workes, that God himselfe may approve thereof: to seeke the praise of men, is a fond thing, seeing that not man, but God is the author of true praise: yea, this must teach us not to depend upon man for praise and commendation for the good things wee doe, but upon God himselfe, from whom all true praise commeth.

b 2 Cor. 10.18.

Secondly, that God as he is a father, is the sole author of praise, for Christ saith, your father will reward you. Now God is our father onely in Christ, and therefore our union with Christ is the ground of all true praise: He is a true Israelite (saith [b] Paul) which is one with him, and the circumcision is of the heart, in the spirit, not in the letter, whose praise is not of men but of God. This then discovereth the errour of the world, in seeking after praise and reputation; for some seeke it in the comelinesse of their body, some in apparell, and some in learning, &c. but all these are wrong meanes; the right way to get true praise, is to bee in Christ, and to have an humble and sanctified heart, set purposely to keepe Gods Commandement: Psal. 119. 22. David prayed God to remove from him shame and contempt, because he kept Gods testimonies: as thought the keeping of Gods Commandements had beene the onely meanes to avoid contempt, and to procure true praise and fame.

b Rom. 2.29.

Thirdly, that the life to come is the only time of true praise, for Christ here saith, he shall reward thee openly: that is, in the last day: 1 Cor. 4.5. When the Lord shall come, then shall every one have praise of God. This must teach us, not to care for the contempt of the world which followeth our profession, so that our conversation bee godly; but to rest patiently contented, because it is the lot and portion of Gods children, and our sinnes deserve greater reproach, alwaies remembring, that the time of our praise is yet to come. Yea, hence we must learne not to aime at our owne praise, in things of this life but wholly to seeke the glory of God in all things; for if we seeke his glory now, the time will come when he will glorifie us.

Fourthly, that the praise that God shall give his children in the end of the world, shall bee open and manifest, before all men and all Angels, both good and bad, when they shall stand to be judged by Jesus Christ: and this is true praise which shall never have end, when unto the praise of men is not comparable: we count highly of applause and reputation with earthly Princes, and all men honour him whom the Prince commends: how much more then shall they be advan-

verse 5 And when thou praiest, be not as the hypocrites: for they love to stand and pray in the Synagogues, and in the corners of the streets, because they would bee seene of men: verely I say unto you, they have their reward.

In this verse and the rest to the fourteenth, Christ intreateth of the dutie of prayer, wherein hee dealeth as in the former point touching Almes-giving: for first, hee forbids a two-fold vice in prayer: Hypocrisie and Babling, and then teacheth the contrary vertues and the right practice of prayer. The vice of Hypocrisie in praier is forbidden in this fifth verse, and the contrary vertue injoined in the next.

The Exposition. When thou praiest] To pray properly is to intreat of God the gift of some good thing concerning our selves: and in this sense it is onely one part of that holy worship of God, which is called Invocation: for 1 Tim. 2. 1. the Apostle maketh foure kindes or parts of invocation to wit, I. Supplication, when we intreat God to remove some evill from us. II. Prayer, whereby wee begge at the hands of God the gift of some good thing unto us: and these two concerne our selves. The III. is Intercession, when as wee intreat the Lord to grant some good thing unto our brethren, or to remove some evill from them. The IV. is Thanksgiving, whereby wee give laud and thankes to God for blessings received, either by our selves, or by our brethren. Now in this place Prayer is not to bee taken strictely for one part of invocation, but generally for the whole worship of God by invocation; as it is commonly taken of us, and often used in Scripture, one part being put for the whole. Be not as the hypocrites] that is, doe not as they doe in prayer; by Hypocrites hee understandeth principally the Jewish teachers, the Scribes and Pharises, for at them hee aimeth in this part of his Sermon. For they love to stand and pray in the Synagogues and in the streets.] We must not here conceive that Christ condemnes altogether this gesture of standing in prayer as unlawfull: for himselfe prayed standing when he raised up Lazarus: and the primitive Church in their assemblies called Stations, prayed standing: but hee reproveth here the abuse of this gesture in these Jewish teachers. For first, they used this gesture to a wrong end, namely, thereby to get the praise of men: because standing is the fittest gesture which a man can use in prayer to make him bee seene of others. Secondly, these Scribes and Pharises thought themselves more righteous than all other men, and therefore judged that they had no need to humble themselves so much either in soule or body as the Publicans and sinners did. Againe, Christ here condemneth not the action of prayer in these places, the Synagogues and the streets: for no man was ever forbidden of God to pray in any place. The Patriarks were not tyed to any place: and under the Law, howsoever the Temple was the place appointed for Gods outward worship in sacrificing, and such like, yet even then it was lawfull for the Jewes to pray in any place; and after Christs comming Paul willeth, that men pray every where, lifting up pure hands unto God: but here is condemned this grosse fault of these Scribes and Pharises, that they minded to pray no where else, but in these open and publike places, which is expressed by this phrase, they love to stand and pray: So that in a word this is the meaning of this verse; You my hearers, when you pray, take heed of the hypocrisie of the Scribes and Pharises, for they regard onely the praise of men, and therefore doe use such gesture in prayer, and chuse such places to pray in, that they may best be seene of men. Where we see, he directly condemnes their hypocrisie, as well in respect of the ground thereof which was the pride of their hearts, and not Gods grace: as also in regard of the end thereof, which was the praise of men, and not the glory of God.

The use. I. Whereas Christ saith, When thou praiest: hee taketh it for granted, that all men of yeares must pray: and whereas he condemnes the false manner of prayer, and sets downe the right forme and manner thereof, he teacheth us that it is a most necessary thing for all that have discretion, to exercise themselves religiously in this dutie of prayer. And because our Saviour here urgeth this dutie so much, I will here shew the necessitie of prayer; which may appeare unto us by sundry reasons: I. Prayer is one of the most principall parts of Gods worship: for herein wee acknowledge him to bee the giver of all goodnesse, the searcher and knower of our hearts; and hereby we testifie the faith, hope, and confidence we have in God. And prayer is called the calves of our lips, because it is a sacrifice well pleasing unto God. II. By prayer wee doe obtaine, and also continue and preserve unto our selves every good grace and blessing of God, especially such as concerne eternall life: for God promiseth his spirit to them that aske it by prayer: and the first conversion of a sinner, howsoever it bee the free gift of God, yet by Gods grace moving and inabling a man thereunto, is obtained by prayer; and so are all the good graces following our conversion, both gotten and increased. III. The true gift of prayer is a pledge of the spirit of Adoption: and therefore Zacharie cals the spirit of prayer, the spirit of grace. And Paul saith, The spirit helpes our infirmities, even the Spirit of our Adoption, which teacheth us to cry, Abba, father. IV. By prayer wee have spirituall communion and familiarity with God: for in the preaching of the Word, God speaketh to us: and in prayer wee speake to God, and the more we pray, the nearer and greater fellowship we have with God: which one reason (if there were no more) is sufficient to perswade us of the necessity of prayer, and to move us unto diligence therein.

But sundry objections are made against the necessity of prayer: 1. It is said God knowes our thoughts before wee pray, and therefore it is needlesse to expresse them by praier unto him. Answ. Wee pray not, to acquaint God with our suites, or with our hearts, as though hee knew them not, but to performe obedience unto his commandement, who requireth this dutie at our hands. Againe, we pray unto God, to honour him, in acknowledging him to be the knower of our hearts, the giver of all good things, the stay of our faith and hope, in whom onely we put all our trust and confidence.

Object. 2. Whether we pray or not, God will give us the blessings which he means to bestow on us. Answ. This is flat Atheisme: and yet we must distinguish of Gods blessings, for some are common blessings which God oft gives to men without their asking, because they serve to preserve nature: as raigne and fruitfull seasons, food, raiment, &c. Act. 14. 16. and yet even these common blessings must bee prayed for: Phil. 4. 6. In all things let your requests be made known vnto God: and Iames b saith, You have not, because ye aske not: Psal. 106. 23. Moses prayer saves the people from destruction. Others are speciall blessings of the elect, and these must alwayes be sought and obtained by prayer.

b Iam. 4. 2.

Object. 3. God hath decreed all events, and every thing shall so fall out as he hath appointed, and therefore its needlesse to pray, and oftentimes its but the crossing of Gods will. Answ. The reason is naught: for as God hath decreed the event of all things, so likewise hee hath appointed the meanes whereby his decree shall be effected: and prayer many times, is a principall meanes to bring Gods will to passe: 1 King. 18. 1. God shewed to Elijah that he would send raine in Israel after that long drought, and yet the Prophet crouched unto the earth, and put his face between his knees; no doubt humbling himselfe in prayer to God for it, as S. k James saith. Where we may see, that prayer is not contrary to Gods decree, but a subordinate meanes to bring the same to passe: and therefore wee must rather reason thus, that because God hath decreed the event of all things, and hath appointed prayer as a meanes to effect sundry of his decrees, therefore we must use it.

k James 5. 18.

Vse. Diligence in prayer.

Considering then that prayer is necessary, notwithstanding all that can be said against it, wee must learne with speciall reverence to give our selves unto this duty, both publikely in the assemblies of the Saints, and privately in our families, being masters and governours: for no family ought to want this morning and evening Sacrifice of prayer and thanksgiving: yea, wee must pray by our selves particularly in regard of our particular wants. Indeed the most doe thus plead for themselves, that they use to pray often: but the truth is, that the common practice of our people in prayer is nothing but lip-labour and a mocking of God: for what be their prayers, but the lying over the ten Commandements and the Creed, which are no prayers: Yea, their repetition of the Lords prayer without understanding or devotion, is no prayer with God, when they do it only of custome, and rest in the worke done. But here is required another manner of prayer than this. And to incite us unto it, let us consider the worthy examples of Gods servants herein: Moses prayed for the saving of the Israelites fourty dayes, and fourty nights without meate or drinke: David praised seven times a day: and our Saviour Christ spent whole nights in prayer. Now these examples were written for our learning, to teach us to addict our selves to this holy duty wherein our hearts speake unto God. The want hereof is the cause of the common Atheisme that is in the world, of injustice and cruelty in mens callings, of swearing, pride, and backbiting in mens lives: for if men would often set themselves in the presence of God, by unfained invocation, the remembrance thereof would still be before their eyes, and cause them to abstaine from all these iniquities: for who being stained with such transgressions durst present himselfe before the Majestie of God, who is a consuming fire against all sinne and wickednesse, having fierie eyes to see their sinnes, and feet of brasse to bruise them in peeces that will not repent.

D ot 9. 18, 19.

Psal. 119. 164. Luke 6. 12.

Rev. 1. 13, 14.

Secondly, in this prohibition against hypocrisie in prayer wee may see, that to conceive a prayer, and to make profession of religion may for the outward worke, as well bee performed from pride of heart as from the grace of God: carnall men may doe that in pride, which Gods children doe by grace, as we shewed in the former point of Almes-giving: that therefore which Christ said of hearing the Word, take heed how you heare, must bee conceived to bee spoken to us of prayer and the profession of religion, take heed how you pray, and how you professe religion. And indeed before wee pray, wee ought to enter into our harts, and there to search out our corruptions diligently, that wee may be able to discerne in our selves betweene pride, and Gods grace; and to perceive upon what ground we pray, that it be not from a damnable pride, but from the saving grace of Gods holy spirit.

Thirdly, in this prohibition Christ condemnes this false end of prayer, when men doe it to have praise of men; whereby we may see, that it is a thing incident to the professors of the the Gospell, to doe the duties of religion, for the approbation of men, which notably bewraies the hypocrisie of our hearts, which naturally have more respect to men, than to the Lord, even then when wee have to deale with God himselfe. Thus did the Scribes and Pharises, and it is to be feared, the same fault is common among us: for men are farre more forward and carefull to performe the publike duties of religion, in the assemblies of the Church, than private duties either in their families, or by themselves: Many will pray in the Church, that never regard private prayer at home. Againe, in performing publike duties, men have more care of the outward action, than of truth and sincerity in the heart; and many study more for fit words to delight mens eares, than for good affections, which God approveth; for what is the cause that many ancient professors, when they come to die, know not how to commend their soules to God? Surely, this especially, that in the whole course of their profession, they more respected men than God; and therefore in the time of death, when they must needs deale with God indeed, they know not what to doe, nor how to behave themselves.

Lastly, Christ here reproves their behaviour in prayer, which was standing, without all humbling of themselves, either in soule or body. This is a thing incident to many in our congregations, who use to shew no manner of reverence or humility in the time of prayer; but either stand, or sit, as though they had no need to humble themselves; or else intended onely that men should see them. But wee must know, that howsoever the word of God prescribes no peculiar gesture in this action, yet it is not a thing indifferent, either to use, or not to use, some seemely gesture of humiliation in this worship of God; but some must needs be used, to expresse and further the humilitie of the heart, which is chiefly required: Hay 6. 2. the Seraphims standing before God, cover their feet and faces with their wings, in regard of Gods presence: and the poore Publicane that prayed with the Pharisie, howsoever he prayed standing, yet [a] he cast downe his countenance, and smote himselfe on the breast, to testifie his humiliation. Yea, Christ Jesus our Lord, when hee bare the punishment of our sinnes in the garden, fell downe upon his face, and prayed: thus also did [b] Moses and Aaron, [c] Elijah, Ezra, and [d] Daniel humble themselves. And it hath alwaies beene the practice of Gods servants in prayer, by some convenient gesture of the body, to expresse the humilitie of their hearts; which checketh the custome of our common people in prayer, who are so farre from bringing a broken heart to God, which is the thing hee chiefly requires, that they know not what to aske; and many there be that will not submit themselves to such outward gesture, as might expresse their inward humiliation. These things are farre unseemely for Gods people, and therefore let us learne to humble our selves at Gods footstoole, first in our very hearts, and withall, we must be carefull to testifie the same by some convenient outward humiliation.

Sincerity in prayer.

Christ having forbidden hypocrisie in the former verse, doth here command the contrary vertue; namely, sincerity, setting downe the right manner of prayer to God in that behalfe. Now because the words are not to bee taken in that sense, which at the first reading they seeme to beare; therefore for the better understanding of them, I will here lay downe two grounds: 1. That in this place our Saviour Christ doth not forbid publike prayer in the congregation, or in publike places; for publike prayer is Gods ordinance: Where two or three (saith Christ) be gathered together in my name, there am I in the middle among them: and whatsoever they shall desire, shall be given them of my Father. Againe, publike prayer serves for most worthy uses, for which it may be maintained: as first, to make mens prayers unto God more fervent and effectuall; as in the common-wealth, a private mans supplication is not so much respected, as when a whole incorporation, or a whole shire make petition to the Prince. Secondly, by publike prayer a man professeth himselfe to be a member of Gods Church, and one that severeth himselfe from all prophane societies and companies of men in the world. Thirdly, publike prayer serves to stirre up zeale in them that be cold and backward: for herein they are made acquainted with Gods blessings, they are left to see their owne wants, and they have the good example of Gods children. 2. Ground. That private prayer (though it be Gods own ordinance) is not heerein directly commanded: for looke what was forbidden in the former verse, the contrary thereto is here commanded; but Christ did not simply there forbid publike prayer, hee aimed at an higher thing therein: namely, hypocrisie, and therefore here he commandeth not private prayer directly, but intendeth the right manner thereof, for sincerity, whether publike or private.

The excellent use of publike prayer. 1

Having laid downe these two grounds, I come now to the true meaning of the words. When thou prayest, that is, either by thy selfe alone, or with others, enter into thy chamber, and when thou hast shut thy doore, pray, &c. that is, be as though thou didst pray in thy closet, intending tending onely to approve thy selfe, and thine heart unto the Lord, having no respect to any creature in the world: for this Christ meanes by praying in a chamber, or closet; namely, that a man in prayer should not respect himselfe, or any creature, but simply intend and approve himselfe unto God onely.

In the words thus explained, wee are to observe two things; a Commandement, and a reason thereof: the Commandement in these words, When thou prayest enter into thy chamber, and when thou hast shut the doore, pray unto thy father which is in secret. This commandement in joining the right disposition of the heart to God-ward in our prayers, doth prescribe the true and perfect manner of prayer; whereto that we may the better attaine, I will shew how the same is performed.

How to pray aright.

That a man in prayer may approve himselfe and his actions unto God alone, three kinde of duties are required: some going before prayer, some in the act of prayer, and some after prayer.

Foure Duties before the worke of prayer. 1

Before prayer foure duties are required: 1. A man must have knowledge of three things concerning prayer, (for every prayer must be made in faith, and in obedience to God, which without knowledge cannot be done) to wit, of Gods commandement to pray: of the things we aske in prayer, and of the manner of asking; which is this, spirituall blessings concerning life eternall; as remission of sinnes, sanctification, and other necessary graces must be asked simply without condition: but temporall things concerning this life, as health, wealth, liberty, and such like must be asked with condition of Gods will, as they serve for his glory, the good of our selves, and of our brethren. 2. A man must labour to finde himselfe converted unto God, having a true purpose of heart not to live in any sin afore [a] God heareth not sinners: and David saith, [b] If I regard wickednesse in my heart, God will not heare my prayer. When men come to the Lords table, they forsake their sinnes and turne unto God; which must also be done before wee pray for therein we are to deale with God, who cannot abide iniquity. 3. A man must seeke to bee in Christ, that would pray with comfort: Joh. 15.7. If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, aske what ye will, and it shall be done to you. In the old Testament the Sacrifices were to be offered onely upon the Altar of God, in the Temple, or in the Tabernacle, which prefigured this unto us, that in the new Testament, our prayers, which are our Sacrifices, must bee offered onely in Christ Jesus, who is our [c] intercessour in heaven, and our spirituall Temple. 2. Before prayer a man must sever himselfe from all creatures, in his thoughts and desires, and bring himselfe before God, with feare and reverence, that every power and facultie of the soule may say, as Cornelius did to Peter, We are all here in the presence of God: for this end, his minde and memory must be taken up with divine and holy thoughts, and his heart possessed with holy desires; God in Christ must be his whole delight, and all by-thoughts must be banished. Our Saviour Christ used to pray in the night, and in solitary places apart from the societies of men; this he did (no doubt) for this end, that hee might be himselfe wholly before God, and be free from all occasions of distraction in that divine duty.

[d] Act. 10. 33.

Duties in prayer are especially five: 1. Wee must labour to have a true sense and feeling of our wants, of our sinnes and corruptions, and be inwardly touched in conscience for the same: for as the begger sits still at home, and never goes to begge reliefe, till hee feele himselfe pinched with hunger and want, so it is with us; till wee feele our owne wants and miseries by reason of our sinnes, wee can never put up an earnest and hearty prayer to God. 2. Wee must have an inward, fervent, and unfained desire toward God, for the supply of all our wants and miseries; this is a speciall thing in prayer, which maketh it not onely to be a petition of the lips, but a true request of the heart. This the Prophet David expressed, when he said unto God, [e] My soule desireth after thee, as the thirsty Land doth after rain: and Hanna also, when she told Eli that she powred out her soule as water before the Lord; 3. Every petition must be made in obedience, that is, wee must have a commandement injoyning us to aske the thing we pray for, and a promise to affure us that it shall bee granted unto us: and yet here this speciall caveat must be remembred, that wee leave both the time, and the manner of accomplishing our requests, to the good pleasure and wisdome of God. 4. Every petition must bee preferred to God in the [f] name and mediation of Christ: for in our selves we are sinners, and [g] our iniquities make a separation betweene God and us; so that wee cannot have accesse unto the father, save only by the mediation of Jesus Christ. If wee would come with boldnesse into the holy place, it must be by the new and living way, which Christ hath prepared for us through the vaile, that is, his flesh. 5. In prayer we must have faith, whereby we believe, that the thing we aske shall be done unto us: Mark. 11. 24. Whatsoever ye aske in prayer, believe that ye shall have it, and it shall be done unto you: now the ground of this faith, must be Gods commandement and his promise, which I mentioned before.

[h] Isa. 59. 2.

Two duties after prayer.

The duties after prayer are chiefly two: 1. Wee must call to remembrance the prayer wee made to God. If our man talke with another, he will be so attentive, that as neere as may be, he will remember the words that passed between them; and much more ought we so to doe, when we talke with God: now wee must thus meditate on our prayers, for this end, that we may the better doe the thing we aske: as we crave in prayer the pardon of our sinnes, so we must after prayer endevour to leave the practice of them. What an horrible shame is it for men to beg at Gods hands the pardon of sinne, and when they rise from prayer, to fall againe to the practice of it? This is with the dog to returne to his vomit, and with the desperate theefe to stealing, after he hath intreated favour of the Judge. 2. After prayer wee must bee carefull to bee as plentifull in thanksgiving for blessings received, as wee were in petition to crave them. This indeed may bee done in the beginning of our prayer, though here I mention it last, but omitted it may not bee. Ordinary men have this humanity, that where they finde friendship, they will be more plentifull in tendring thanks, than in making new requests; and if wee deale thus with men, shall wee not much more doe it with God, with whom true thankfulnesse for one blessing, is a speciall meanes to procure many moe? Now this thankfulnesse must not be onely in word, but in deed testified by due obedience, in life and conversation: and these are the duties whereby a man shall avoid all carnall ostentation in prayer, and approve his heart unto God therein.

By this description of the true manner of prayer, we may learne three things; First, that the Romish Church doth neither know nor teach, nor practise the dutie of prayer aright; they pray not in knowledge, for they pray in an [a] unknowne tongue, and allow of [b] ignorance, as the Mother of devotion; they commend doubting, [c] by speaking against assurance, and so pray not in faith nor obedience; they pray not in humilitie for mercy for their sinnes, for they thinke to [d] merit by their prayers: and which is worst of all, they direct not their prayers to God only, in the name of Christ; but to God and his Saints, making the virgin Mary their Mediatresse: yea, they pray to the wooden crosse, which is most horrible Idolatry. Secondly, that our common people come far short of their duty in this part of Gods worship: for their prayers consist chiefly in the bare repetition of words, which is only a lip-labour: they pray without knowledge and feeling, and so must needs faile in many other duties. Now this bewraies the manifold wants that bee in the prayers of the best Christians: for besides their ignorance of many duties in prayer, their doubting and distrust, their dulnesse and deadnesse of heart, and their by-thoughts, doe all shew that their hearts are not wholly taken up with Gods glory, as they ought to be. Lastly, hereby wee may see the grosse ignorance of our common people, about spels and charmes; because they consist of good words, and many strange things are done thereby, therefore they thinke them to be good prayers: but herein they are deceived, through ignorance in the right forme of prayer: for they that make them and use them, are either graceleſſe persons that have society with the devil, or grosly deluded through palpable ignorance: and they cannot set themselves before God to approve their hearts unto him in this action: nay, the worship that is done herein, is to the devill, and the cure that is wrought thereby, is his worke: for these charmes are his watch-word, to stirre him up to such exploits.

Furthermore, in this clause, Pray unto thy Father which is in secret, that is, an invisible God; is couched a reason to induce men to the obedience of this Commandement, to this effect; He to whom thou prayest, is an invisible God, therefore thou must endevour to approve the hidden man of thy heart unto him. Hence I gather, first, that it is an horrible thing to make an image to represent the true God, or to worship God in it; for God is invisible. The second Commandement condemneth them both, as Moses himselfe doth expound it, Deut. 4. 15, 16. Yee saw no image in the day that the Lord spake unto you in Horeb, therefore corrupt not your selves by making you a graven image, or representation of any signe. Secondly, that there should be no outward pompe in prayer, either for gesture, or for garments; for prayer is made to an invisible Father. This overthrowes the whole worship of the Popish Church, which stands in outward shewes of carnall pompe; if there bee any pompe, it must bee inward, in the graces of the heart, among which humilitie is the first ornament. Thirdly, that all places are alike, in respect of Gods presence, and of his hearing; for hee is a God in secret, wheresoever a man hath occasion to pray, there God is: which confuteth them that make the Church a more holy place for prayer, than other-where, and therefore reserve all their prayers till they come thither; for now difference of place, in respect of Gods presence, is taken away: God is as well in the field, and in the private house, as in the Church: and yet Churches are ordained and used in a godly policie, because a congregation may more conveniently there meet, to their mutuall edification, in the publike exercise of the Word and prayer; otherwise private houses were as good places for Gods worship, as Churches, if they were so decent, and convenient for edification: for in all places men may lift up pure hands unto God, as the Apostle teacheth.

C

And thy father which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly. These words contains a two-fold reason, whereby Christ perswadeth his hearers, and in them all others, to the carefull practice of the former duty, of sinceritie in prayer. The first reason is drawne from Gods All-seeing property: the second from his bountie. Gods all-seeing property is set out in these words; and the father which seeth in secret: that is, though the father himselfe bee invisible, yet when thou prayest in secret, that is, as though thou wert in secret, intending onely to approve thine heart unto God in prayer, then thy father seeth thee, he knowes thine heart, and hears thy prayer. This is verified by the example of Jonas, who was heard praying in the Whales belly:

No difference of place in regard of Gods presence.

of Daniel, praying in the Lyons denne, and of Moses, [b] who is said to cry unto the Lord, when as he prayed onely in heart.

b Exod. 14. 15.

The use of this point is manifold: 1. It serveth to admonish us, that when wee pray, we must in singlenesse of heart, bring our selves into Gods presence, and heartily and truly put up our requests unto God, so as wee may approve us to him, both our hearts and our prayers: for there is nothing in our prayers that can be hid from God: and therefore we must not content our selves with the thing done, but labour so to pray, that God may be well pleased with the manner thereof.

A

Secondly, hereby wee are taught to make conscience, not onely of our doings and speeches, but even of our very thoughts, and that in secret places: for though we may conceale the same from men, yet wee cannot cover them from the eyes of God: he is invisible, and yet [c] all things are naked before him.

c Heb. 4. 13.

Prayer to Saints unlawfull.

Thirdly, this proveth that no prayer can lawfully be made to the virgin Mary, or to any other Saint departed; for hee alone is to be called upon in prayer, who sees in secret: but God onely sees in secret, neither the virgin Mary, nor any other of the Saints can see in secret; and therefore prayer is to be made to none but to God alone. The Papists answer, that Saints departed see in secret, though not of themselves, yet by God, and in God: but that is false: the Angels before their fall, saw not their owne future fall, nor the fall of man. The blessed Angels in heaven, know not now the time and day of the last judgement: yea, and the Saints departed lie under the Altar, crying, [d] how long Lord? being ignorant of the time of their full redemption: and therefore the Saints departed see not in secret.

d Rev. 6. 9. 10.

The second reason drawne from Gods promised bounty, is in these words, shall reward thee openly: that is, shall repay thee for thy prayer in the day of judgement, before the Saints and holy Angels, as we expounded the same words in the fourth verse. This is a notable reason to induce men to pray in a true and holy manner: wherein we may see the endlesse mercie of God, vouchsafed to them that pray aright: if any subject put up a supplication to his earthly Prince, he takes it for a speciall favour, if the Prince vouchsafe to admit him to his presence: behold here the King of Kings will not onely vouchsafe us accesse unto the throne of grace, when we put up our supplications unto him, but if we pray aright, he doth hold himselfe indebted unto us for the same, and promiseth one day to reward us openly. This farre exceeds the love of all creatures in heaven and earth, no Prince is so kinde and gracious to his best subjects, as the Lord is to all that call upon him in spirit and truth.

From this place the Papists would gather, that prayer is a worke that merits at Gods hand eternall life, for thus they reason: Where there is reparring by way of reward, there is something done which merieth: but some prayer there is a reparing: therefore it doth merit at Gods hand.

Rhem. on Matth. chap. 6. ver. 5. Bellarmine de bonis operum parti. lib. 2. cap. 3.

Ans. Reward is due to man two wayes, either by desert, or of free gift and promise: now in this place God will reward man for his prayer, not for his desert, but of his owne free will and grace, because he hath promised so to doe. That this is so, may thus appeare: If a begger should aske an almes of any man, it were absurd to say, that the begger by asking did deserve the almes: and so friends the case for the merit of our prayers; thereby we begge things at Gods hands, and therefore can no more merit thereby than the begger can deserve his almes by asking: nay rather wee may gather hence, that Gods rewarding them that pray, proceeds from his owne free grace alone; for prayer properly is a worke of man unto God, wherein may gives nothing unto God, as the Jewes did in the sacrifices, or as is done in some other spirituall sacrifices of the new Testament; but only asketh and receiveth for nothing from God, and therefore cannot hereby merit any thing at Gods hands. And by this may all other places be expounded, where reward is promised to mans worke.

Lastly, note the phrase here used; hee shall reward thee openly: that is at the last day: whence I gather, that till the day of judgement, no servant of God shall fully reape the fruit and benefit of his prayers. This must be well considered of all that have care to call upon God unfaindly: for many times after long and earnest prayer, we feele little or no comfort, whereby we may be brought to dislike our estate, as though God had no respect unto us: but wee must know, that God doth often long deferre to reward his servants that pray unto him: no doubt but Zachary and Elizabeth prayed for issue in their younger age, and yet they were not heard till they were both old: and David saith, his eyes failed for waiting on God when hee would accomplish his promise made unto him: this we may also see in the petitions of the Lords prayer: for they be all according to his will, yet the full fruition of the benefits there asked, is referred to the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ.

v. 7 And when ye pray, use no vaine repetitions, as the heathen, for they thinke to be heard for their much babling.

Against babling in prayer.

Our Saviour Christ having deale against hypocrisie in prayer, doth here come to the second vice, which hee intends to reforme therein, namely babling, consisting in the outward forme of prayer. The words containe two parts, a commandement, and a reason thereof: The commandement, When ye pray use no vaine repetitions, as the heathen doe: where first we must know, that Christ reproves not repetition in prayer simply, but needles repetitions only: for Psal. 51. Dauid doth sundrie times repeat his requests, for the pardon of sinne, and for sanctification: also Moses, Elias, and our Saviour Christ prayed fortie dayes together, and in this long prayer (no doubt) used many repetitions; much lesse can we pray one day together without many repetitions. Here then by vaine repetitions is meant babbling; that is, a desire and affection to vse and speake many words in prayer: and under this one vice, are condemned all sins of the same kinde, that is, all superfluous multiplication of words in prayer. As the heathen, that is, such as were not [a] the people of God, but aliens from the common-wealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenant of promise.

In this Commandement are condemned many abuses in the manner of prayer. 1. Meere babbling, when words are vsed for praier, which containe neither requests vnto God, nor giving of thanks: such are many popish prayers, and such is the vse of the Aue Maria, among our common people, for it is the salutation of the Angell Gabriel to the virgin Marie, calling her by commission from God, to be the mother of Christ; which words, none since that day, had warrant to vse to the virgin Marie, only they are to be read as a part of that historie: yea, the rehearsall of the ten Commandements, and of the Creed for prayers, is but meere babbling. 2. Prayers made in ignorance are here condemned: thus the Popish fort offend, who vse to pray vnto God in an vnknowen tongue; and thus many sin, that vse the Lords prayer without understanding of the words. 3. Cold and dull praying is here condemned, when the lips draw neere vnto God, but the heart is no whit affected therewith: this is a common vice, and some taint hereof may euerie man finde in his owne heart. 4. Superstitious prayers, when as Gods worship is measured out by set numbers. This is the Popish practise answerable to their doctrine, that the rehearsing of so many Pater nosters, Aues, Dirges, Masses, and such like, are effectuall with God, to procure such and such things: this opinion takes place with our common people, for they thinke God is serued by the worke done; if the words bee said, all is well. 5. Rash praying, without due preparation, is here condemned, when men pray only on the sudden, by the motion of the spirit, as they vse to speake: too many are of this mind, allowing no set forme of prayer to any sort; but howsoeuer conceiued prayer be most comfortable, yet without due preparation of the heart, it is most subiect to vaine repetitions. 6. Rash vowes, especially of things not lawfull, or aboue our power. 7. Rash wishes, of good or euill, being framed according to our carnall affections, and not by the word of God. And in a word, all vaine and superfluous speech in any manner of inuocation, wherein the heart is not affected according to the will of God: all which must be remembred, for they shew plainely, that our common prayers are farre short of that which the Lord requireth and alloweth.

How to speake aright in prayer.

Here some will say, If so many things be disallowed in prayer, how shall we speake aright in prayer? Answ. As the Apostle Paul said of singing, so say I of prayer; it must bee [b] with grace in our hearts, and all our words, both for measure and number, must be tempered thereto, and no more ought to be vsed in prayer, than may serue to expresse and further in our selues, or others, some inward grace of God; as faith, repentance, zeale of Gods glorie, &c. Eccl. 5.1. Be not rash with thy mouth, nor let thine heart be hastie to vtter a thing before God; for God is in heauen, and thou art on earth, therefore let thy words bee few: where wee haue expresse command, not only to prepare our hearts, but our words also, when wee come before God in prayer, that they be such as may expresse some grace of our hearts.

[b] Col. 3.16.

As the heathen] In this instance wee may note, that the heathen had some in-sight into matters of religion: for first, they knew there was a God, and that the same God may be worshipped: Secondly, they practised many excellent vertues of the second Table; as Iustice both in word and deed, liberalitie, continencie, fidelitie, and such like: yea, they cared to doe some duties of the first Table, as here wee see they prayed vnto God: and some of them performed this dutie in such sort, as they obtained hereby some temporall blessings. [c] The heathen Mariners that carried Ionas towards Tarshish, prayed vnto God, and obtained safetie: and Ahab, a wicked Idolater, [d] humbled himselfe vnto God in prayer and fasting, and obtained a temporall freedome from a fearefull iudgement. Now the consideration of this point, serues to checke many among vs, who thinke that God will hold them excused, because they meane well, and doe no man harme; they plead that they are no adulterers, theeues, nor outragious offenders: but all this the heathen man can doe, and yet he is but in a damnable case: for though these be good things, yet they will not bring any man to saluation: we must therefore get faith in Christ, and from thence practise all Christian vertues.

For they think to be heard by their much babbling. These words are a reason of the former commandement, wherin we may note three opinions of the heathen concerning God. 1. They thought God was like an earthly man, who might bee instructed and perswaded by words. 2. They denied Gods providence, and were not perswaded that God saw them, or regarded their estate; and therfore they vsed many words to acquaint him therewith. 3. They thought by the force of words to prevaile with God.

Three Opinions of the heathen concerning God.

Hence wee may learne these instructions. 1. That though the heathen knew there was a God, yet they turned him into an Idoll, when they worshipped him; and therfore Paul saith, [c] they

[c] they were without God in the world: for they made him like vnto man, without any prouidence, and perswasible also by mans reason, and by many words.

2. By these opinions of the heathen touching Gods, we may gather, that there was not alwayes in the old Testament, an vniuersall grace giuen to all, whereby they might be saued, if they would: for if they had had any such grace, they would neuer haue thought so grossly of God as they did: one sparke of true knowledge of the Messias, would haue expelled all these carnall conceits of God out of mens hearts: and therefore howsoeuer the heathen had so much knowledge of God, as made them without excuse, yet we are to hold, that before Christs comming, they were left to themselues, and forsaken of God in his iust iudgement, in regard of his speciall grace and fayour.

Mens naturall conceits of God.

3. By these heathen wee may see what bee our naturall conceits of God, for our nature is the same with theirs: and therefore of our selues we thinke God to be like some old man, sitting in heaven, without any regard of us at all: and when we haue all things needfull we will trust in God, but when meanes faile, we forsake him straight: and this we shew, by using vnlawfull meanes to helpe our selues in the time of distresse, as by seeking to witches, &c. Lastly, naturally we thinke we can prevaile with God by our words. The Papists teach, that the saying of five words, Nam hoc est corpus meum, will turne the bread and wine in the Sacrament into the body and bloud of Christ: and it is the common opinion of our ignorant people, that the saying of words pleaseth God: they thinke that the words of Scripture written or spoken, haue vertue in them to doe strange things, and this is one maine ground of all the practices of sorcerie which bee so common among vs: but we are to know, that there is no such vertue in any words, it is only faith in the heart that makes Gods word effectuall for our good. Words of themselues can doe no more but signifie, and that they doe not of themselues, but by the pleasure of men: and therefore wee are to renounce the vse of all spels and charmes: for be the words neuer so good, they are but the Deuils watch-word, and the ceremonies vsed therewithall, are his Sacraments to cause him to worke wonders. Wee therefore must learne by the word of God, to conceiue better of God than Nature can teach vs, as of an heauenly and inuisible God, governing all creatures by his prouidence, and not perswaded by mans reason, but working all things according to the counsell of his owne will.

Ex vi verborum: Conc. Trident. sess. 13. cap. 3.

> v. 8 Bee yee not like them therefore: for your Father knoweth whereof you haue need before you aske.

In this verse our Saviour Christ reparteth the former commandement touching prayer, made after the manner of the heathen: and withall annexeth a second reason to enforce the same. The commandement is repeated from the former reason in these words Bee yee not like them therefore: as if he should say, considering that the heathen in their prayers looke to bee heard for the multitude of their words, therefore yee must not pray in that manner which they doe. This repetition of the commandement serues to imprint the same more deeply in the hearts of his hearers, to cause them, and so vs in them, to be more carefull to auoid needlesse repetitions in prayer.

Now hauing handled this commandement in the former verse, I will here only obserue this point of doctrine, touching the distinction of people before the death of Christ: for here Christ saith vnto the Jewes, Be yee not like them: that is, like the Gentiles: where hee putteth a plaine difference betweene the Jewes and all the Nations of the world besides. And therefore when he first sent his Disciples to preach, he forbade them [a] the way of the Gentiles, and the cities of Samaria, commanding them to goe to the lost sheepe of the house of Israel. And this distinction was not only in Christs time, but had been from the beginning, for the space of 4000. yeares. In the first age of the world there were [b] the sonnes of God, and the daughters of men: after the flood, the [c] children of the flesh, and the children of the promise. And vnder the Law, a [d] people of God, and no people. This distinction stood in two things. 1. In regard of the grace of adoption, and of the especiall favour of God; for in this Text Christ saith, the Jewes had God for their Father, which the Gentiles had not, for they were strangers from the covenants of promise, Ephes. 2.12. 2. In regard of Gods true worship: for concerning prayer, a speciall part thereof, Christ here saith to the Jewes, Ye shall not be like the Gentiles: If any shall here thinke that this preferment of the Jewes before the Gentiles, in regard of Gods speciall mercie came from this, that God foresaw something in them, which was not in the Gentiles, let them heare what Moses saith to the Jewes: [e] The Lord did not set his love vpon you, nor chuse you for your multitude, but because the Lord loued you, and would keepe the oath which he sware to your fathers.

[b] Gen. 6.2.

From this ground of doctrine touching the distinction of people, in regard of Gods speciall mercie, follow three weightie points to bee knowen and beleeued: First, that the promise of remission of sinnes, and life everlasting in the Messias, is not universall to all, but indefinite to many of all sorts, kindes, and estates: for if the promise pertained to all, then there could be no distinction of man and man, of people and people, in regard of mercie: and therefore the opinion of vniuersall grace is false and erroneous. Secondly, that though Christ died for all, (for so the Scripture saith) yet hee died not alike effectually for all: for if Redemption by Christ had beene universall, then had mercie belonged alike to all, which is against the Text, and therefore the opinion of universall redemption is also a forgery of mans braine. Thirdly, that God calls not all men effectually to salvation by Christ, for then should every one have God to be his Father in Christ: and the Jew had no privilege before the Gentile, in regard of mercy, and the grace of adoption: but here we see, that God for many hundreds of yeares, was the Father of the Jew, and not of the Gentile, in regard of grace and adoption. And by this doctrine wee may cleare that place of the Apostle Saint Paul, 1 Tim. 2.4. where he saith, God would have all to be saved: for he meaneth not all men in all times, but in this last age of the world, after the ascension of Christ, when as the partition wall was broken downe, and the distinction betweene Jew and Gentile taken away, in regard of mercy and the grace of adoption.

For your Father knoweth where of yee have need, before yee aske of him.

These words are a second reason against the heathenish manner of prayer, to this effect; It is needlesse for you to use vaine repetitions in your prayers, because God knowes your wants before you pray: and therefore few words well ordered are sufficient.

The exposition. Your Father knoweth] This knowledge of God, is not a bare notice taken of our wants, but such a knowledge as doth withall include a speciall care to make supply unto them: for this is a rule in the expounding of Scripture, that words of knowledge are oftentimes put for words of affection: as Psal.1.6. The Lord knoweth the way of the righteous, but the way of the ungodly shall perish: where the opposition of knowledge to destruction, sheweth plainly, that by knowledge there is meant, the Lords due regard and respect unto the wayes of the godly: which is a point full of all comfort to the children of God: and for the clearing of it, three questions are to be scanned, which may well be moved out of this Text:

1. Quest. If God know our wants before we pray, why then should we pray at all? Ans. We pray, not to informe God of the things we want, as though he knew them not; but for other causes: as 1. to stirre up our hearts, to seeke unto Gods presence and favour: 2. to exercise our faith in the meditation of Gods promises: 3. to ease our wofull hearts, by powring them out unto the Lord: 4. to testifie our obedience unto Gods commandements, and our trust in his providence, for the receiving of every good thing we desire.

2. Quest. If God know our wants, and have care to make supply thereof, why then doth God oftimes delay to grant the prayers of his servants? Answ. God deferreth to grant the request of his children for many respects, tending to their great good: as 1. thereby to kindle their faith, and to stirre up their zeale in prayer, that they may more earnestly begge the things they want: for this end our Saviour Christ reasoned with the woman of Canaan, before hee would cure her daughter: 2. to keepe them in humility, and to prevent spirituall pride: thus hee denied to remove from the Apostle Paul, the buffeting of Satan, though he prayed for it, lest he should be puffed up through multitude of revelations, 2 Corin. 12.7, 8, 9. 3. to make them esteeme more highly of the blessings of God, and to stirre them up to more thankfulnesse for the same: for it is commonly true, that things lightly gotten, are lightly set by.

Why God delaies to grant to our prayers.

3. Quest. How falleth it out, that God doth never grant some men their requests? Ans. 1. Because they make their prayers, but not according to Gods will, either failing in the time, as did the foolish virgins, who cryed, Lord, Lord, open to us, when the doores were shut, Mat. 25.11, 12. or in the things they aske, and so the sonnes of Zebede had not their request, because they asked they knew not what. 2. Because they doubt and waver in prayer, for such shall not receive any thing of the Lord, Jam.1.6,7. 3. Because they pray for wrong ends; Yee aske and receive not, because yee aske amisse, that yee might consume it on your lusts, Jam.4.5.

Why God never grants some mens requests.

o Mat. 20. 22.

The Vse. First, this provident eye of God over all our wants, teacheth us what to do when we are assaulted by any enemy, either of body or soule: we must first of all make God our refuge and tower of defence, by getting assurance of our adoption: for if we be Gods children, he is our father, knowing, and weighing our wants, and he is most carefull to make supply thereto, before we pray, Genes. 25.22. when the two twinnes strove together in Rebecca's wombe, she sent to aske the Lord thereof, no doubt by Isaac her husband, who before had prayed for her, v.21. So when Iehosaphat was beset with many enemies, he cried unto the Lord for helpe, and was delivered, 2 Chr.18.31. and chap.20.12. And it was the Prophet Davids practice to have recourse to God in all his troubles, for which cause he calls the Lord his rocke, his resting and hiding place.

Christian behaviour in affliction.

Secondly, hereby wee are taught to have a moderate care for the things of this life: for we have a Father in heaven, who careth for us, knowing all our wants, and ready to make supply thereof before we pray. In these dayes, most men set their hearts upon the world, and trust to outward meanes more than to God himselfe, which comes from this; because they want a true perswasion of their adoption in Christ: for if they knew that God were their Father, then surely this perswasion would take place in their their hearts; God knowes my wants, and is carefull for the supply thereof, and therefore I will trust in him, and obey him.

Thirdly, this teacheth us, in any necessity or affliction, to subject our selves to the will of God, labouring to be thankfull for that estate, as well as for prosperity, and studying to please and honour God therein: for he is a father who seeth all our wants before we complaine, and is carefull for our good, knowing that affliction is better for us than prosperity, or else he would send us deliverance: for it is all one with him, and hee delights not in the affliction of his people.

Fourthly, this serves to arme us against all carnall and slavish feare, whereby mens hearts are oppressed, either in regard of death, or of the day of judgement: for though the devill rage against us, yet when death commeth, God is our father, who knoweth our wants, and the way to comfort us, and is both willing and able to save us. In a word, this meditation serveth to stir us up to all dutifull obedience in the whole course of our lives: for who can be but thankfull to such a father, as knowes all his wants, and as he is able, so also he is willing and ready to make supply thereto: this therefore should enlarge our hearts to bless God, that is such a father unto us in Christ.

v. 9 After this manner therefore pray yee: Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name.

Our Saviour Christ having forbidden his Disciples all carnall and superstitious kinde of praying, doth here prescribe unto them a most holy forme of true prayer: but before we come unto it, hee gives them this commandement, After this manner therefore pray yee: S. Luke hath it thus; When you pray, say, Our Father, &c. in which words Christ injoynes his Disciples to use a right and holy forme of prayer, the patterne whereof is after set downe. Now because this point is controversall, I will briefly set downe, how farre forth this prayer of Christ is prescribed unto us; to wit, for matter and forme we must imitate and follow it in all our prayers, but wee are not tied to the very words of this prayer, but may freely use them, or other words at our pleasure: for our Saviour Christ oftimes prayed in other words, and so did the Apostles, as we may see by Pauls prayers in his Epistles, wherein he observeth the matter and manner of this prayer, but yet useth other words: yea, S. Luke setting downe this very forme of prayer, doth somewhat alter from the words of Saint Matthew.

Upon this commandement it may well bee demanded, whether it be profitable and necessary to use a set forme of prayer, either privately or publikely in the service of God? Answ. I take a set forme of prayer, either publikely or privately, to be both profitable and necessarie; set (I say) both for the matter and manner, and if need require, for the very words also: my reasons are these: I. That which God hath ordained, is both profitable and necessarie: but God hath ordained that men should use set formes of prayer: for the Priests were injoyned a set forme of prayer in blessing the people, Numb.6.23,24. and the 92. Psal. is a set prayer for the Sabbath day: yea, all the Psalmes of David, (some few Psalmes of doctrine onely excepted) are set formes of prayers to bee used of the Church of God for ever: and in this place, Christ prescribes a set forme of prayer, not only for the matter and manner, but also for the words: and the like did Iohn Baptist, when hee taught his disciples to pray. II. Reason. In man there be sundry wants in prayer, as ignorance in the understanding, distractions in the minde, oblivion in the memory both of Gods commandement and promises; in the heart is much deadnesse, dulnesse, and distrust; in the tongue many times, is want of such convenient utterance as should be in him that would speak unto God; and in most men there is that bashfulnesse, that they cannot utter and dispose the desires of their heart before others in that order which were meet. Now to make supply of all these wants, a set forme of prayer is to be used, whereunto all the powers of body and soule may be well fitted. III. Reason. The ancient Church of God, long before the time of Popery, used a set forme of prayer: indeed for the first three hundred yeares after Christ, by reason of continuall persecution, they could not doe so: but after those times, there was a set forme of prayer used in all Churches, insomuch as the souldiers in the field had their set praiers. And in many Councels it was decreed, that no Church should use any forme of praier, but such as was allowed and appointed, and that for these causes: first, that there might be an uniformity in the solemne worship of God: and secondly, that the ignorance and negligence of many Pastors might be prevented, who otherwise would have omitted this duty in their congregation: and therefore there was then set downe a generall forme of Confession of faith, of prayer, and thanksgiving, and of administration of the Sacraments.

Now considering set prayer is Gods ordinance, and the imperfections of man require it, and the same hath beene so long used in former ages, I doubt not to affirme the same to bee both profitable and necessarie: whereby we may see how blinde and rash they are, who terme set prayer an abhominable Idol, and as loathsome unto God, as swines flesh was to the Jewes. These be loathsome and unreverent termes: but that we may know their errour and folly the better, let us here scanne their principall Reasons against set prayer; and they be two: I. To read a ſermon penned by an other, is no preaching, and therefore to repeat a ſet prayer is no prayer. Anſw. The reaſon is naught: for in reading a penned Sermon, a man cannot expreſſe the gift of prophecie; but in reading a ſet prayer he may ſhew the gift of prayer; as namely, a touched heart for his ſinne, an hungring deſire after grace, and a thankful heart for Gods mercies; and herein doth prayer conſiſt, and not in words. II. Reaſon. We muſt pray freely as the Spirit moves us; and therefore to uſe ſet formes of prayer, is to ſtint and quench the good motions of the Spirit. Anſwer. This reaſon were ſomewhat, if every one received ſuch a portion and meaſure of the Spirit as did inable him hereunto: but ſeeing in this life we have but the firſt fruits thereof, and not the tenths (as one ſaith); we are to uſe al good helps to make ſupply unto our wants: for in the practice of holy duties, we are like unto a man that is newly recovered of ſome grievous ſickneſſe, who can walke in his chamber, yet not by himſelfe alone, but either with his ſtaffe, or leaning upon another mans ſhoulder: even ſo we being weake and feeble in prayer, had need of the helpe of ſet formes of praier, to hold up our feeble hands unto God: and therefore it is requiſite for men to uſe ſet formes of prayer, at leaſt for the matter and order thereof in their owne hearts; yea, and many times it is needfull for ſome to uſe ſet prayers for words: for many that have true grace in their hearts, want utterance to expreſſe it: and if they might not uſe ſet forms of prayer, they ſhould be deprived of many great comforts, eſpecially when they pray with others. So that if the heart be rightly prepared thereto, ſet prayer doth not quench, but helpe the weake gifts of the Spirit both in the heart and tongue.

By this then we ſee, that neither our Church, nor any other, where a ſet forme of divine ſervice is eſtabliſhed, is therefore to bee blamed; becauſe the ſame is both neceſſary and profitable. Secondly, here we ſee, that it is meet and neceſſary wee ſhould have ſome ſet forme of prayer in our hearts according to our peculiar eſtates, whereby wee may expreſſe unto God our peculiar wants, and crave ſupply thereof particularly: ſome thinke we muſt onely pray upon extraordinary inſtinct and motion of the Spirit: but ſo many be our wants, that unleſſe we prepare our ſelves before-hand, we cannot pray aright: and therefore to avoyd many diſtractions and lets in our minde, heart, and utterance, it ſhall be found needfull to preſcribe unto our ſelves a ſet forme of prayer: wee are content to keepe a ſet order for our diet and apparell, and why ſhould we not doe it in prayer, which concernes the comfort and refreſhing of our ſoules.

A ſecond thing to be gathered from this commandement is this; That the Lords prayer is the moſt excellent forme of prayer that is, or can be made by any creature: for it was indited and propounded by the Sonne of God, who is the wiſdome of the Father. Now the excellency of it ſtands in theſe things: I. in the pithy ſhortneſſe of it: for in few words it compriſeth endleſſe matter: II. in the perfection of it: for it containeth in it whatſoever is to bee asked in prayer: in which reſpect it is well called of one, the abridgement of the whole Goſpell: III. in the order thereof, which hereafter wee ſhall ſee in the reſolution of it: IV. in the acceptation it hath with God the father: for it containeth the words of Chriſt his Sonne, in whom the Father is well pleaſed.

Uſe 1. The excellency of this prayer ſheweth plainely, that if any ſet forme of prayer may be uſed, then this may, being inſpired by the Mediatour of the Church. And therefore the Anabaptiſts of our dayes are ſoule deceived, who deny the uſe hereof for a prayer, when as before this time, for the ſpace of fifteene hundred yeares after Chriſt, there was never any that diſallowed it. Secondly, hence we ſee that the practice of thoſe Preachers is commendable, who uſe to conclude their prayers with the Lords prayer: for hereby, as by a moſt perfect and excellent prayer, the wants and imperfections of our prayers are ſupplied. Thirdly, whereas ſome would gather from the perfection and excellency of this prayer, that it alone is ſufficient to be uſed, they are deceived: for Chriſts intent was rather to commend this prayer unto us for matter and manner, than for the words thereof. Againe, though it bee a moſt perfect prayer, yet it is onely generall: but every true beleever muſt have particular prayers, whereby in ſpeciall forme and manner his particular eſtate and condition may be made knowne unto the Lord; yet ſo, as they bee alwayes ſuitable unto this forme here preſcribed. And thus much of the Commandement: Now followeth the prayer it ſelfe.

Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name, &c.

This Prayer hath three parts: I. a preface: II. the petitions: III. the concluſion. The Preface in theſe words: Our Father which art in heaven. In the handling whereof, as alſo in the reſt of this prayer, I will firſt propound the Meaning, then the Inſtructions.

I. The Meaning. Our Father] This title Father, properly belongs to God, who is a Father ſimply, by creation giving being to all things, and preſerving them by his providence. Men indeed are called fathers, but that is onely ſecondarily, becauſe in ſome properties of fatherhood they reſemble God. Now this title is given to God, ſometime ſimply conſidered without perſonall relation; as Deut. 32.6. Doe ye ſo reward the Lord, O fooliſh people? is not he thy Father that hath bought thee? Other-while it is given to the particular perſons in Trinity; as firſt and principally to the firſt perſon, who is commonly called the Father. And the ſecond perſon in Trinitie is ſometime called Father, as Iſa. 9.6. the Father of Eternitie: becauſe hee is the ground of our adoption, whereby we become eternally the ſonnes of God: and therefor hee is brought in thus complaining of reproach: Behold, I and the children which the Lord hath given me, are as ſignes and wonders in Iſrael: For the Author to the Hebrewes expounds that place of Chriſt, Heb. 2. 13. and he is ſaid to have ſeed, Iſa. 53. 10. And the Holy Ghoſt may proportionally be called Father, becauſe with the Father and the Sonne hee gives being to all things. But in this place by Father, is meant properly the firſt perſon, who is firſt and chiefly the Father of Chriſt; and in Chriſt our Father. He is the Father of Chriſt, firſt by nature, begetting him as he is the Sonne, of his owne ſubſtance before all worlds, by communicating unto him his whole Eſſence or Godhead. Secondly, hee is the Father of Chriſt, as Chriſt is man, by the grace of perſonall union: for the manhood of Chriſt doth wholly ſubſiſt in the Godhead of the ſecond perſon, and therefore Chriſt as he is man, (I ſay not his manhood, which is a nature, not a perſon) may well bee called the Sonne of God. And in this relation of himſelfe to the firſt perſon, Chriſt ſaith, My Father is greater than I, Joh. 14. 28. God the Father is our father, not by nature, or in regard of perſonall union, but by the grace of Adoption in Chriſt: for God ſent his Sonne made of a woman (that is, incarnate) that wee might receive the adoption of ſonnes. And this grace wee receive, when wee truly beleeve in his name, Joh. 3. 12. and Gal. 3. 26. God for Chriſts ſake being content to receive us for his ſonnes and daughters.

Which art in heaven] God is ſaid to bee in heaven, not as though hee were included in the circle of the heavens: For the heavens, and the heaven of heavens are not able to containe him, 1 King. 8. 27. and indeed hee is neither included nor excluded any place, being infinite, and ſo everie where; but becauſe his majeſtie and glorie is moſt eminent in the higheſt heavens to his Saints and Angels: and thence doth he manifeſt himſelfe unto us in his power, wiſdome, juſtice, and mercie, while we are on earth: for Heaven is his throne, and the earth is his footſtoole, Iſa. 66. 1. So that the meaning of this preface is this; O Lord God, thou art the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and in him our moſt mercifull Father by adoption and grace, thou art a moſt glorious God, who dwelſt in heaven and from heaven manifeſt thy glorious power, and mercie, thy wiſdome, juſtice, &c.

2. The Inſtructions.

I. This title Father, here given to God, teacheth us to whom we muſt direct our prayers: not to Saints or Angels, or any other creatures, but to God alone. Reaſons. I. This is a perfect patterne of true prayer, wanting no direction for the right performance of this part of Gods worſhip: now this directs us not any unto God in prayer. II. God only is the Author and Giver of all good things, Jam. 1. 16. and therefore we muſt aſke them of him alone. III. The Lord only who is infinite and omnipotent, can heare all mens prayers at all times, and in all places: and therefore hee alone is to be prayed unto, and not Saints departed, as the Papiſts teach.

II. By this title wee may ſee, in what order we muſt direct our prayers unto God: for as the word of God reveleth God unto us, ſo muſt we pray unto him: now the Scripture reveleth God unto us, to bee one in eſſence and three in perſon, viz. the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghoſt; whereof the Father is firſt, the Sonne is the ſecond, the Holy Ghoſt the third in order, though not in time or greatneſſe. Thus and no other ways muſt wee conceive of God, neither ſevering the Godhead from the perſons, nor the perſons from the Godhead. And thus alſo muſt we worſhip him, even one God in three perſons, and three perſons in one God. And yet ſeeing the Father is firſt in order, the Sonne the ſecond, and the Holy Ghoſt the third, therefore when wee pray to God, wee muſt obſerve this order, directing our prayers to God the Father, in the mediation of the Sonne, by the aſſiſtance of the Holy Ghoſt, as Chriſt here teacheth us to ſay, Our father.

Queſt. May we not direct our prayers to the Sonne, or to the Holy Ghoſt by name? Anſ. Yes: for Stephen prayed to the Sonne, Acts 7. 59. Lord Jeſus receive my ſpirit: and Chriſt bids his Diſciples, Goe teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghoſt: that is, calling upon the name of the Father, Sonne, and Holy Ghoſt: Object. But in this perfect platforme, we are taught to pray to the Father alone. Anſw. Though the Father alone be here named, yet the other two perſons are not hereby excluded: the Father indeed is moſt uſually named, becauſe hee is the firſt in order, but yet with him alwayes is implyed the Sonne, and the Holy Ghoſt: for as all the three perſons ſubſiſt in one and the ſame divine nature or Godhead, and are not ſevered in will, in counſell, or in outward actions, as creation, preſervation, and redemption, ſave only that they are diſtinguiſhed in the manner of working; ſo likewiſe muſt they be all conceived in our mindes together when wee pray, and none ſevered out though they be not named: we muſt pray to all, though we name but one, having in that one relation to the reſt in our minde and heart. And if we conceive aright of the order of the perſons in Trinitie, ſubſiſting in the unitie of eſſence, wee may fitly name in our prayers which perſon we will, ſo that withall we include the reſt in our minde, and may alſo (if we name all) place them in ſuch order as beſt fitteth our preſent occaſion: as the Apoſtle doth in his benediction, 2 Cor. 13. 13. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and the love of God

God the Father, and the communion of the Holy Ghost be with you all, Amen: where he placeth the second before the first, because by the grace of Christ we come to be partakers of the love of God the Father.

III. In this title Father, see the true ground of that boldnesse wherewith Gods children come before God in prayer; namely, their interest in the covenant of grace in Christ, in whom God becomes their Father. The Scripture mentioneth two covenants: one of works, which saith, Doe this, and thou shalt live: the other of grace, concerning reconciliation by the Messias through faith: for it saith, Beleeve in the Lord Iesus, and thou shalt be saved. Now the covenant of works through the corruption of our flesh, drives us from God, and throwes us to hell: but the covenant of grace shewes our reconciliation to God in Christ: for [a] God was in Christ, and reconciled the world unto himselfe, not imputing their sinnes unto them: for which the first covenant would have condemned them. And when wee truly beleeve in Christ, wee performe the condition of this covenant, and so through [b] faith in him have peace with God: yea, [c] boldnesse, and entrance with confidence. And therefore when wee come to God in prayer, we must ground upon this covenant in Christ, and so shall wee goe boldly unto the throne of grace: bring faith in Christ, then is God thy Father, and so thou shalt bee welcome: Hence it was that the Prophets and holy men under the Law doe so often intreat the Lord in their prayers, to remember his covenant made with Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, which was the covenant of grace; as the Apostle sheweth, Gal.3. and Rom.4.

IV. In this title Father, we are taught how to dispose our selves towards God when wee pray unto him; namely, as children towards their father, for our whole behaviour both outward and inward. And this stands especially in foure things: I. In due reverence both of heart and gesture, like as gracious children come before their awfull parents: II. In true humilitie, from our hearts renouncing our owne merits, and our owne wills, and relying wholly on Christs righteousnes, and on the will of God in him: III. In true contrition and sorrow of heart for our owne sinnes, whereby we have offended God, who hath beene so gracious and mercifull a Father unto us in Christ: IV. In a sound purpose of heart to breake off the course of all sinne, and to walke before God in new obedience to all his Commandements. This is such behaviour as becometh Gods children in prayer; and hereunto must wee labour to conforme our selves when wee come before God, or else we shew our selves not children, but Rebels and Traytors: beware therefore of all unreverent behaviour in prayer; beware of pride, of hardnes and wickednesse of heart, as having the least purpose to live in sinne: for as Davids faith, If I regard wickednesse in my heart, God will not heare my prayer: but (faith he) I will wash my hands in innocencie, and so will I compasse thine altar: with a contrite and broken heart, Psal.51.17. disclaiming his owne righteousnesse, v.1. and Psal.115.1. and in all reverence of behaviour, Psal.95.9.

Thus much of the title Father. Now let us see how we must apply it to our selves in prayer: Our Father, that is, my Father in Christ, and not mine only, but the Father of all that truly beleeve in him.

Hence we learne sundrie instructions:

I. That when wee pray, wee must apply to our selves all the promises of God in Christ, touching righteousnes and life everlasting: for he that makes them is our Father, and therefore they belong to us that bee his children. These promises are many and excellent. And that they must be applyed to our selves in prayer, is granted on all parts; but how, there is the controversie. The Papists say, we must apply them to our selves by hope; we say, by faith, which is the ground of things hoped for, laying hold on them for our selves particularly, as Thomas did on Christ, [a] My God, and my Lord: which I prove thus: Whatsoever we aske in prayer, we must [b] beleeve that God will grant it for his Sonnes sake: but this we cannot doe, unlesse we beleeve that God is our Father in Christ, and Christ our Redeemer: and therefore wee must first by faith lay hold upon the maine promises of righteousnesse and life everlasting in Christ, which is the ground of all other blessings we receive from God. O (will some say) this is hard to doe. Anso. Yet wee must doe our endevour herein, and strive against doubting, using the meanes whereby wee may come to that measure of grace, to say with Paul; I live now by faith in the Sonne of God, who hath loved me, and given himselfe for me; doing this in sinceritie, God accepts the will for the deed, even our desire and endevour to apply Christ and his benefits, for application is selfe. And if we continue in this use of meanes, he that hath begun in us this good desire, will finish it in the fruition of grace and full assurance.

II. This teacheth us when we pray, to bee mindfull of Gods whole militant Church and people: for we must say, Our Father. Indeed it is not unlawfull to apply this title in prayer to our selves particularly, for God saith of every one that truly beleeveth, Thou shalt call me my Father, Jer.3.19. and so did [c] Christ and his [d] Apostles apply to themselves this title in their prayers. But yet Christ would have us alwayes to pray for our brethren, being assured from this his direction, that they likewise pray for us. This was Davids usuall practice, no doubt: for when hee prayed [e] most earnestly for the pardon of his owne personall sinnes, he then forgets not Zion, but prayes the [f] Lord to doe well unto it, and to build the walls of Ierusalem. Now if in every prayer wee make, wee must have respect to the Church of God; then undoubtedly in the course of our lives we must employ our selves to seeke the good of others, especially of Gods Church: for our conversation must expresse the truth of our devotion. Every one will say, this is the Ministers dutie: which is most true; but yet it is not his only: for as in the naturall body every member imployes it selfe for the good of the whole body, so must it be in the mysticall body of Christ: for the meanest Christian hath some gift of the Spirit; and the manifestation of the Spirit (wheresoever it is) is given to profit withall. The common saying is, Every man for himselfe, and God for us all: but this is a graceless saying, flat against the communion of Saints, wherein every one seekes anothers good.

III. Hence we learne, how wee must come affected towards our brethren when wee pray to God, namely, lovingly and peaceably, as to children of the same Father: when we come to the Lords Table, wee make conscience of love and amitie with all men; and so should we doe in prayer, for therein we bring a spirituall sacrifice unto God, and therefore we must bee [a] reconciled to our brethren when wee offer it: for when mens hearts bee full of malice, or their hands full of blood, [b] God will not heare them, though they make many prayers. If therefore wee call upon God as on our Father, wee must be sure to love his children as our brethren: for [c] this commandement wee have of God, that hee which loveth God, should love his brother also: and he is not of God, that loveth not his brother, 1 Joh.3.10.

IIII. Here wee see that all true beleevers, whether high or low, poore or rich, are in an equall condition in regard of God: for God is no respecter of persons: and here Christ teacheth every one to say, Our Father. In earthly Kingdomes there bee differences of estates and degrees: some be noble, some bee base; some rule, others serve and obey; but with God in Christ there is neither bond nor free, &c. Col. 3.11. The beleeving shepherd may call God his Father, as well as the beleeving King, and have as good a place in Christs Kingdome. Which serves notably both to encourage the poore to embrace the Gospell in sinceritie, seeing their meane outward estate can nothing prejudice or hinder their high acceptance with the Lord, if they be faithfull: as also to admonish the rich and noble in this world, not to bee puffed up with these outward things to contemne the poore: for these things give them no title to the Kingdome of God: nay, [b] not many noble, nor mighty are the poore of this world, that they should be rich in faith. Jam.2.5.

Which art in heaven] These words shew towards what place we must dispose our selves in prayer: our Father to whom wee pray is in heaven, and therefore thither must wee direct our hearts, our eyes, our hands, and all that is in us. Indeed the Jewes under the Law looked towards the Temple, and in the Temple towards the Mercie-seat, because the Lord had there promised the manifestation of his presence: and therefore [c] Daniel turned his face towards Jerusalem when hee prayed in Chaldea: but now in the new Testament difference of place in respect of Gods presence, is taken away, and we are not tied in prayer to looke East or West, North or South, but men may now every where, and every way lift up pure hearts and hands unto God; towards heaven thou must dispose thy heart, because thy Father to whom thou prayest is there: and look which way thou wilt, or goe whither thou wilt, heaven is not neerer nor further off. Which shewes evidently two notable and grosse Popish fooleries in the matter of Gods worship: the first is, their going on pilgrimage from place to place to serve God the better: for God whom thou must worship is in heaven; in respect whereof all places are alike, goe whither thou wilt thou art not neerer, and stirre no foot, thou art not further off. Their second fooleric, which is also abominable before God, is to worship God in an Image, at Crosses, and in Crucifixes, &c. These they use to put them in minde of God, and of Christ; but this they learne by the precepts and traditions of men, and therefore it is but meere vaine and foolish worship in the sight of God: Christ teacheth us to set our hearts towards heaven, and not to pore on dumbe Images here on earth.

II. Instruct. Is God in heaven; then when we pray we must come before God with all reverence, feare and trembling; for he is in heaven a most glorious God, full of all majestie and power: Eccles.5.1. Be not rash with thy mouth, nor let thine heart be hastie to utter a word before God: why so? for he is in heaven, and thou art upon earth, therefore let thy words be few. Now this reverence must shew it selfe, first, in the holy disposition of the heart and affections towards the Lord, when the minde is not carried away with by-thoughts, but applyeth it selfe wholly and only to the present service it hath in hand: secondly, in the comely gesture of the body beseeming so holy an action, done to so high a majestie: thirdly, in the humble and reverent uttering of our requests, having before-hand well considered the things wee are to utter before God. But goes the case thus with men in their ordinarie prayers? nothing lesse; for beside the multitude that pray without understanding, even the better sort in the time of prayer, have their mindes running upon other matters, some about their profits, others about their sports, or such like: now is not this Pharisaicall prayer, wherein the lips draw neere to God, but the heart is farre removed? Againe, many shew no reverence in gesture or in speech; some disdaine to bow to God in prayer, and others doe rush upon God in many words without premeditation: But all these sinne grievously: for howsoever unreverent rent praying troubles few mens conscience, because it is not easily discerned, being against the first table: yet it is to be esteemed as a disgrace unto the Almightie: and being carelesly practised, when it is once knowen, it is plaine mockerie of Gods Majestie, worser than mocking of father or mother: and therefore we must with all carefulnesse avoid it, and set our hearts with all reverence towards God in prayer.

Where we must direct God in prayer.

III. Hence we must learne to aske of God in prayer heavenly things especially: these earthly blessings may be asked, so farre forth as they are helpes to further us towards our everlasting inheritance in heaven, to which we are called, 1 Pet.1.3,4. But to be ever groveling in the earth, is against the nature of him that hath a father in heaven.

Use. 1. Our mindes must be heavenly.

IIII. Our principall care must bee how to come to heaven, for there our father is: ordinarily a childe desires to be with his father, and is best pleased on his mothers lap, or in his fathers armes; herein therefore we must testifie our selves to bee the sonnes and daughters of God, by our unfained desire to bee in heaven where our father is. It is unnaturall for a childe not to be delighted with his fathers house; and so it argues them to be void of grace, that have no affection towards heaven and heavenly things: let us therefore delight to pray, whereby we may creepe into our fathers bolome, and though our bodies be on earth, yet in affection and desire let our soules mount up to heaven: here we are but pilgrims, if God be our Father, our hearts must bee upon our home which is heaven where our Father is.

A double prop to our prayers.

Now the words of this preface thus opened, containe a two-fold notable ground and prop to all our prayers: to wit, that God is both able and willing to heare and helpe when we pray: for his being in heaven, imports that he is Almightie, and therefore can heare and helpe us: Our God is in heaven, and he doth whatsoever he will. And being a Father, yea, our Father in Christ: he must needs be willing and ready to grant our requests: for no father is so tenderly affected towards his naturall sonne, as the Lord our God is towards all his children in Christ: Psal. 103.13. As a father hath compassion on his children, so hath the Lord compassion on all that call upon him: Luk.11.13. If you that bee evill can give good things to your children, much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Ghost to them that aske him: And hence it is that Christ saith, Whatsoever you aske the Father in my name, he will give it you, Joh. 16.23. Of these two must everie one be perswaded that prayes aright: everie one will grant that God is able to heare and helpe; but of his willingnesse thereunto none can be assured, but hee that is the childe of God, who knoweth God to be his Father. Yet here must none deceive himselfe, to thinke whatsoever hee askes on his owne head, God will grant it: for if we aske amisse we shall not receive; and therefore

Ioh. 15.5.

A we must carefully marke and observe the direction of Gods word, both for the things wee aske, and for our manner of asking.

Hallowed be thy name.

Thus much of the preface: here begin the petitions, which are six in number; whereof the three first concerne God, the three latter concerne our selves. Againe, of those which concerne God, the first concernes Gods glorie it selfe, the other two the meanes whereby Gods glorie is manifested and inlarged among men: for Gods name is then glorified among men, when his kingdome doth come, and his will is done.

Now this petition for the glorifying of Gods name, is rightly set in the first place: for Gods glorie is the absolute end of all things: Prov. 16.4. The Lord made all things for his owne sake, yea even the wicked for the day of evill: and therefore it must be preferred before all things: before life it selfe, yea before salvation, which is life eternall: Joh.12.27,28. our Saviour Christ preferres the glorie of his fathers name, before his owne life. And Paul preferres it afore his owne salvation: for he professeth that for Gods glorie in the salvation of the Jewes, hee could wish himselfe separate from Christ, Rom.9.3.

In this petition, as in the rest, we are to observe this order: first, shew the meaning of the words; then propound the uses.

I. The meaning. Name] The word ascribed to God, is here taken generally; first, for God himselfe; as Psal.20.1. The name of the God of Jacob defend thee: that is, the God of Iacob defend thee: Rom. 10. 13. Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved; that is, upon the Lord. Secondly, it here betokens any thing whereby God may be known, as men are by their names: and thus it comprehends, I. his divine attributes; as justice, mercie, power, wisdome, &c. II. his word, the holy Scriptures which reveale to them the true knowledge of God. III. Gods Iudgements, publike or private; for thereby hee makes knowen his presence, his power and justice. IV. his works and creatures; for all these beare a stamp of Gods name, and in them may the invisible things of God be seene, Rom.1.20.

How we sanctifie God in his Word.

D

Hallowed, or sanctified] To hallow Gods name, is to glorifie Gods name, as Joh.12.28. and this wee doe, when we give unto him the highest honour that may be: the highest I say, because there are two kinds of honour; First, the honour of religion, when we give our hearts to God, loving him, fearing him, trusting, and delighting in him above all; which we testifie by all outward adoration prescribed in Gods word: this is the highest honour of all. Secondly, there is the honour of societie, which passeth between man and man in Common-wealths; and it consisteth in the acknowledgement of preheminence and superioritie in another, either by word or gesture, civilly: thus subjects honour Princes and Magistrates; and inferiours their their superiours. This is due to the creature: the former to the Creator only, and that is the honour we heare pray for.

How we hallow Gods name. 1. In himselfe.

That we may yet the better understand the meaning of this petition, wee must know that Gods name is hallowed or sanctified of us two wayes: either in God himselfe, or in his works. In himselfe by three actions: 1. When we conceive God in our mindes, and acknowledge him as hee hath revealed himselfe in his Word; to wit, Creator and Governour of all things, most holy, most wise, just, mercifull, &c. 2. When we sanctifie the Lord in our hearts: that is, when we love him above all, and feare him above all, and put our trust in him in all estates. 3. When wee praise and laud the name of God, for his goodnes: yea, though we should never taste of his speciall favour, yet for his generall mercie, justice, and most wise providence, we ought to extoll the Lord with our mouthes.

1. Pet. 3. 15.

2. In his creatures.

Gods name is hallowed or sanctified in his creatures, by three speciall actions: 1. When we acknowledge the wisdome of God, and his powerfull hand in everie creature. 2. When we have a reverent estimation of the creatures, and use them in Christian sobrietie, in regard the stamp of Gods power and wisdome, which appeareth in them. 3. When wee sanctifie our moderate use of them, by the word and prayer, as God requireth, 1 Tim.4.5. See the practice hereof in the word of God, which is his owne solemne ordinance, whereby he makes himselfe knowen unto his Church: Therein we sanctifie and hallow Gods name: I. When we acknowledge the wisdome, mercie, and power of God in it: II. When we have a reverent estimation of the word, in regard of the glorious Image of God which appeareth in it: III. When we use it in a sanctified and holy manner, comming unto it reverently with prepared hearts, hungring after the graces of God which are wrought thereby, and giving our selves in heart and life to be framed and ruled thereby. And thus we sanctifie God in afflictions, (for they are his worke) when we labour to see the hand of God therein, in justice, mercie, and grace: wisdome chastening us, when wee have a reverent regard to the hand of God appearing in them; and labour to bee humbled thereby for the increase of our repentance, and the exercise of our faith and patience.

C

Thus then in this petition we desire in mind, in heart, and life, to glorifie God both in himselfe and in his workes: and the meaning of it may be thus expressed: O Lord, open our eyes that we may know thee aright, and may discerne thy power, wisdome, justice, and mercie: and inlarge our hearts that we may sanctifie thee in our hearts, by making thee our feare, love, joy, and confidence: and upon our lips, that wee may blesse thee for thine infinite goodnesse: yea, O Lord, open our eyes that wee may see thee in thy works, and strike our hearts with reverence of thy name appearing in them: and grant that when wee use any one of them, wee may honour thee in our sober and sanctified use thereof.

The Uses. I. Wants to be bewailed.

Sinne prophanes Gods name.

I. Here wee are to call to minde our wants, and to humble our soules for those sinnes, whereby we have hindred Gods glorie, or prophaned his name: and these especially are foure: I. Pride of heart: a vile affection whereby wee seeke our own praise and glorie, and not Gods. This is naturall, and so the more hardly discerned; but while it is nourished, Gods glorie is neglected, and therefore when we desire to glorifie Gods name, we must acknowledge and bewaile this inward corruption. II. Want of zeale, coldnesse of heart towards God. This is an inward corruption which debaseth the Lord in our hearts, and takes away that high esteeme of God which ought to be in us. This causeth us to omit to glorifie God, and to defend the causes of God, and the honour of his name, when wicked men disgrace and reproach the same: he that hath any insight into his owne estate may perceive this in himselfe: now it mightily hinders the glorie of God, and therefore we must unfainedly bewaile it in our owne hearts. III. Hardnesse of heart; whereby wee are hindred from the true knowledge of God in his Word, and from discerning his wisdome, power, justice, mercie, &c. in his workes, though wee have them before our eyes: Hence it comes, that either wee neglect the Word, and passe by the workes of God without consideration; or if we use them, yet it is without glorie to God, or profit to our soules. Mark. 6. 5. Christs owne Disciples considered not the matter of the loaves, because their hearts were hardened: they discerned not, or at least remembred not the power of God in that miracle, though themselves were instruments about it, and they might perceive the food to increase in their hands. IV. Prophanenesse and impietie in life: for God is glorified, when wee bring forth the fruits of grace, Joh.15.8. and our good workes cause others to glorifie God, Matth. 5. 16. And therefore our prophane life is a reproach unto the Lord, and causeth others to dishonour and blaspheme his name, Rom. 2. 24. Now this prophanenesse appeareth, either in mens speech, by blaspheming the name of God, abusing his titles, attributes, his Word, his creatures, or any worke of his providence; or in their conversation, when they dispose the whole course of their lives to wrong ends, seeking themselves and not Gods glorie.

These are the speciall sinnes against Gods glorie, which wee are to see and to bewaile in our owne hearts: if wee see them not in our selves our case is the worse, and wee must suspect our selves the more: if wee perceive them in us, we must be humbled for them, yea, ashamed and confounded in our owne hearts, thinking evill of our selves by reason hereof: and then shall we be able to say with some truth of heart, O Lord, hallowed be thy name. And indeed till wee bee inwardly humbled for these corruptions in some measure, the heart can never speake these words as a sonne and daughter of God ought to doe.

2. Vse. Graces to be desired.

Secondly, this petition teacheth us, earnestly to desire of God those spirituall graces, whereby wee may glorifie his name in our selves and others. The graces inabling us hereto, are these especially: I. The true knowledge of God, as hee hath revealed himselfe in his word, and in the workes of his power and providence: for hee that knowes not God cannot possibly glorifie his name. II. To sanctifie God in our hearts: by loving, fearing, and trusting in him above all. This makes greatly for his glorie, when we depend upon him in soule and body for all good things. III. The calves of our lips, which is a sacrifice of praise to God for all his mercies: Psal. 50. 23. Hee that offereth praise shall glorifie me. IV. To see Gods hand in all his works, how mighty, wise, just, and gratious the Lord is. V. To reverence the works of God for his justice, mercie, power, &c. appearing in them. VI. To vse all his creatures reverently, sanctifying the same unto our selves by the word and prayer.

These graces we must hunger after, and labour to have a lively feeling of in our hearts, and so shall we sanctifie Gods name, and honour him in all his works. And hereby we shall know our selves to bee the sonnes and daughters of God: wee may indeed belong to God in his secret counsell; but without these sanctified affections, we are not effectually called, and so indeed not actually become Gods children.

3. Vse. Duties to be practised.

Thirdly, whatsoever we aske of God in prairer, we must unfainedly endevour to practise in our lives: as therefore we pray that Gods name may be hallowed, so we must be carefull to sanctifie the same in our conversation. For this end we must have regard to three things:

I. That our lives be unblameable, not tainted with any crime, that as Paul said of carthly servants, They must count their masters worthy all honour, that the name of God be not evill spoken of: so the same may bee verified in everie one of us towards the Lord our master in heaven. Away therefore with all Idolatrie, blasphemous oathes, and curled speaking, with Sabbath-breaking, and all other sinnes against the second Table: for a prophane life brings great reproach upon the name of God which men professe.

II. We must prepound the right end of our life everie day in our calling and conversation, to wit, Gods honour and glorie, and not our owne praise, wealth, pleasure, or dignitie.

III. When God offers occasion by any worke of his providence, wee must endevour therein to glorifie and magnifie God: Example;

A Say God sends a grievous dearth and famine of bread among us, or the plague of pestilence as he hath done sundry times; then must wee strive herein to glorifie and praise Gods name: first, by labouring to see the hand of God smiting us for our sins: secondly, by reverencing the worke of God, esteeming it as his hand upon us: thirdly, by humbling our selves unto God, and renuing our repentance for our sinnes, that have brought Gods judgements upon us. Thus should wee glorifie God in his judgements; but alas, such is our blindnesse and securitie, that though Gods hand be upon us, yet few lay it to heart: where is he that saith, [a] What have I done? nay, though God himselfe call unto weeping and mourning, and to girding with sackcloth (as the Prophet [b] speaketh) yet behold, joy and gladnesse, — eating and drinking; so as Gods name is dishonoured in his judgements. So when Gods blessings are upon us, we should glorifie his name, by labouring to see his hand of mercie; and esteeming of them reverently, with praise and thanksgiving to God that is the giver: but herein also men dishonour God, by poring upon the meanes, praising their owne wit and industrie, and to sacrifice to their nets, as the [c] Prophet saith.

Motives to glorifie God.

Now because this dutie is of great weight and importance, I will adde some speciall reasons to move us hereunto: I. From the necessitie hereof in Gods Church and children: for Gods name is dishonoured over all the world. In the great dominions of the Turke, God is acknowledged, but yet out of the Trinitie; And the Jewes confessing God, deny Christ: The Papists in words confesse and acknowledge the Trinitie: but yet by their idolatrie they greatly rob God of his glorie, they rob Christ of his offices, and give divine worship unto creatures. And in the bosome of the Church are many Atheists, blasphemers, oppressors, drunkards, adulterers, and voluptuous persons, whose belly is their God; all which, though they will professe God in word, yet by their workes they deny him; so that unlesse Gods children seeke to maintaine and advance Gods glorie, it is like to be trampled and trodden under foot. II. There is great danger to Gods children in omitting and neglecting this dutie; for by calling they are brought neere unto God: now God will bee glorified in all that come neere him: if we doe not honour him according to our profession, his hand will be upon us for his glorie in our confusion: hence it was, that God slew [d] Nadab and Abihu the sonnes of Aaron, for offering strange fire before the Lord: and he debarred Moses and Aaron out of the promised land, [e] because they glorified him not at the waters of strife. This made the wrath of God to burne like fire against the house of Eli, for [f] the iniquitie of his sonnes, which their father saw in them, and yet stayed them not, and so honoured them above the Lord. Wee had need therefore to looke unto our selves, that wee glorifie God in in himselfe and in his workes, else his hand will be upon us in soule or body, goods, or calling, or some other way for the glory of his justice: for God will not lose his glory. III. If wee say, Hallowed be thy name with our mouth, and seeke not his honour in our life, wee bewray in our selves damnable hypocrisie, and make profession of that sinne which the Lord utterly detesteth: wee esteeme very basely of dissemblers among men; but much more odious is this sinne in the matters of God: and therefore let the practice of our lives, shew the sinceritie of our hearts, when wee pray for the glorifying of Gods name.

Vse 4. We must labour to be sanctified.

Fourthly, this petition teacheth us, that wee our selves must be hallowed and sanctified, for else wee cannot hallow Gods name: They that beare the vessels of the Lord, in his Sanctuary, must bee cleane, Isa. 52. 11. How much more ought they to bee holy, that beare the glorious name of God? When Ananias doubted of going to Paul, the Lord tels him, [g] he is a chosen vessell unto mee to beare my name: alluding to that state of sanctification, whereto the Lord had lately called him, whereby he made him a fit instrument for the glory of his name, in the ministery of the Gospell. And the same state must we labour after, if wee would be answerable to that we seeme to desire in this petition. We must therefore labour to be new creatures, changed in minde and heart, for an unholy person, cannot truly desire the glory of God; but when wee once feele the grace of sanctification, then will the desire of Gods glory breed in our hearts, and wee shall know how worthy the Lord is to have all glory given unto his Name.

Vse 5. More plentifull in thanksgivings than in petition.

Fifthly, if we compare this petition with the reason wherewith Christ concludes this prayer, wee shall see that the praise and honour of God, is the beginning and end of Christs prayer, and so as it were the first and last thing with Christ: whence wee learne, that we ought to be more frequent and plentifull in thanksgiving unto God, than in petition and request. Thus wee deale with those that bee bountifull unto us on earth, wee give them many thankes for one good turne; and therefore should wee much more abound in thanksgiving to our heavenly Father, from whom wee receive every good gift that wee enjoy. It beseemes not the child of God to bee alwayes and onely begging, as though hee had nothing: but withall must be plentifull in thanks and praise, for that argues he hath a taste of Gods mercy towards him: this made David say, [h] Praise is a comely and pleasant thing; it well becommeth upright men to be thankefull. Our life of glory shall be spent in praising God, and therefore we should inure our selves thereto, in this time of grace: and indeed, according to our thanksgiving is our grace; little praise, little grace; but he that abounds in thanksgiving, abounds in Gods blessings. Againe, hearty thanksgiving for that wee have, is an effectuall prayer for more increase.

Lastly, the place wherein this petition is set in this prayer, teacheth us to seeke the glory of God simply and absolutely before all other things. This ought to be the affection of Gods child, though hee should receive no blessing from God, for looke what God prefers in his direction, that must we alwaies prefer in all our actions, though no good should follow unto us thereupon: for this end, God gives us time to live in this world, that we might glorifie God in our places and callings; and hee that imployeth himselfe otherwayes prophaneth Gods name, and transgresseth this heavenly order herefor downe by Christ, who is the wilddome of his Father.

Gods glory must be sought absolutely.

V. 10 Thy kingdome come.

The Coherence. Christ having taught us to pray for the sanctifying of Gods name, in the former petition, doth in this, and the rest which follow, as it were expound the same, by directing us to the meanes whereby Gods name is hallowed of us: for then doe we glorifie Gods name, when he sets up his kingdome in us; and wee suffer him to rule in our hearts, when wee doe his will, depend upon his providence for the things of this life, trust in his mercy for the pardon of our sinnes, and on his power and strength against temptation. Now of them all, this second hath the neerest dependance upon the former, as being an especiall meanes thereof: for men ought to glorifie Gods name on earth, but of themselves they cannot doe it, till God rule in their hearts by his Word and Spirit, and so set up his kingdome in them.

The meaning. Gods kingdome is two-fold; Generall and Speciall. Gods generall kingdome is his absolute power and soveraignty, whereby hee ruleth all things in heaven, in earth, and in hell, even the Devils themselves: Psalm. 103. 19. The Lord hath prepared his throne in heaven, his kingdome ruleth over all: and this we acknowledge in the end of this prayer, For thine is the kingdome. Now this wee pray not for, because it is alwayes every where, no creature can hinder it, no not all the devils in hell: for every creature is subject hereunto, and can doe nothing but that which God either willeth or permitteth: [k] according to his will he worketh in the army of heaven, and in the inhabitants of the earth; and none can stay his hands nor say, What doest thou?

Gods kingdome two-fold.

k Dan.4.32.

Gods speciall kingdome is that, whereby hee ruleth his elect and chosen people, working his will not onely by them, as he doth in his generall kingdome, by the devils themselves, but in them also by his holy Spirit: and it is called speciall, because it is not exercised over all the world, but onely over the Elect, whom he hath ordained to eternall life.

a Speciall.

This speciall kingdom of God is two-fold, either of grace or of glory. The kingdome of grace is a spirituall estate, wherein God makes men willingly subject to his written Word, by his spirit. I call the kingdome of grace, a spirituall estate, both because it is principally exercised in the conscience, and also because this regiment in the conscience, is by the Spirit of God. Secondly, I shew wherein it consists; namely, in a voluntary subjection of the whole man in soule, and body, and spirit, to the will of God, revealed in the word: Psalm. 110. 3. Thy people shall come willingly in the day of assembling thine army, in holy beauty. And this subjection standeth in three things: in righteousnesse, peace, and joy in the holy Ghost, Roman. 14. 17, 18. In righteousnesse, that is, first, in Christs righteousnesse imputed; and secondly, in the righteousnesse of a good conscience; the ground whereof, is sanctification by the Spirit, which Christ gives to them, whom hee doth justifie. In Peace, that is, peace of conscience towards God, and peace with Gods Church; yea, with all creatures, so farre forth as is needfull for them. Now under peace, wee must comprehend love, and all duties of love: for as righteousnesse concernes the person in soule and bodie, so peace respects all duties and actions of the life: Righteousnesse is the root, from whence springeth this peace with every action thereof; for when the heart is sanctified, the life is reformed. Lastly, in joy in the holy Ghost: this is a fruit of both the former, respecting especially the state of affliction; for when a man is justified and sanctified, and hath peace towards God, then ariseth in his heart a spirituall delight in God, in all estates: yea, though great afflictions light upon him for Gods cause, yet hee beareth them with inward joy and delight, knowing that the spirit of glory, and of God, resteth upon him, and that hee shall bee glorified with Christ, if hee suffer with Christ: which things, while he compareth together, he little esteemeth the afflictions of this life, in respect of the glory that shall be revealed; 2 Cor. 4. 17. For the light affliction that is but for a moment, causeth unto us a far more excellent and eternal weight of glory. These are the branches of this spirituall subjection, which whosoever hath is a good subject in the kingdome of Grace; as the Apostle saith in the next verse, m Hee that in these things serveth Christ, is acceptable unto God, and approved of men. m Rom. 14. 18.

Gods kingdome of glory.

The kingdome of glory is the blessed estate of Gods elect in heaven, whereby God in Christ becomes all things unto them immediately; 1 Cor. 15. 28. This estate of glory is a subjection also, but yet such a subjection, as is indeed a glorious regiment: for there wee raigne with Christ, in whom, and through whom, God himselfe becomes honour, peace, health, food, raiment, and all things needfull to the perfection of felicity. Now these two bring Gods Kingdome, differ thus; The state of Grace is the beginning and entrance to the state of glory: and the state of glory is the perfection of the state of grace. This state of glory is the city, and the state of grace, as it were, the suburbs of it. In this life, wee live in the kingdome of grace: but the kingdome of glory is reserved for the life to come: and this speciall kingdome of God in both these estates, doe we here pray for.

Thy kingdome] This imports that there is an other kingdome, even the kingdome of Satan, which is a kingdome of darknesse, full of all disorder and confusion through sinne, which greatly hindereth and annoyeth Gods kingdome of grace especially.

Gods kingdome comes by degrees.

Come] That is, to us men in the world; and then it commeth, when God doth erect and establish the same in their hearts: now unto perfection it comes by five degrees: 1. When God gives unto men the outward meanes of salvation, wherein hee doth reveale his grace and favour in Christ; as the Gospell preached, which is therefore called the word of the Kingdome, Matth. 13. 19. And so Christ (having relation to his preaching, which he confirmed by miracles among the Jewes) saith, The kingdome of God is come unto you, Luke 11. 20. and being demanded by the Pharisies, when the kingdome of God should come? he tels them, it was among them, Luk. 17. 21. meaning, that it was brought unto them, by the ministery of John Baptist, of himselfe, and of his Disciples; although indeed it were without profit to many of them. 2. When the word preached inlightens the mind, so as a man knows and understands the mysterie of the Gospell, which is the Law of this Kingdome. 3. When a man is thereby regenerate, and so brought into this kingdome: for by regeneration wee have effectuall entrance into the state of grace, wherein Christ rules in us by his Word and Spirit, and wee yeeld subjection unto him. 4. At the end of this life, when the body goeth to the earth, but the soule to God that gave it, being translated to the joyes of heaven, in the glory of this kingdome. 5. At the last judgement, when body and soule being united againe, are both made partakers of the glory of this kingdome: and this is the full and perfect comming of it.

So then our request to God in this petition, is to this effect; O Father, let thy kingdome come to us that bee pilgrimes and strangers here on earth, prepare us for it, and enter us into it, that be yet without; renew us by thy Spirit, that wee may be subject to thy will, confirme us also in this estate, that our soules after this life, and both soule and body at the day of judgement may bee fully glorified: yea, Lord hasten this glory to us, and to all thine Elect.

The Vses. 1. Wants to be bewailed.

Mans nature lyeth in bondage under sinne.

The wants wee are to bewaile in this petition, either concerne our selves, or others. First, we must lament and mourne for our owne miserable estate by nature, whereby wee are the servants of sinne, and so in thraldome and bondage under Satan: sinne leads us into bondage, dage, for he that committeth sinne, is the servant of sinne: and where sinne raigneth, there the devill hath dominion. And hence it comes that we rebel so much against the kingdom of God, and refuse to stoope to the scepter of his Word. Indeed this bondage is weakened in Gods children, but none is wholly freed from it in this life, as Pauls complaint declares, Rom. 7. 14. The Law is spirituall, but I am carnall, sold under sinne. The naturall man is dead in sinne and feeles it not; wee therefore must labour to feele in our selves this spirituall bondage under sinne; and when we feele it, we must bewaile it, and so shew some life of grace to be in us. This Paul did, Rom. 7. 24. O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death! Looke as the prisoner feeles his bolts and fetters, so sensibly should wee feele the chaine of sin, wherewith our soules are kept in bondage; and til we feele it and bewaile it, the Kingdome of Christ doth not come unto us: we must therfore every day, crie unto Christ our Lord, that hee would shew himselfe to be our Redeemer, by breaking the fetters of sinne, wherewith our soules are kept in bondage, and giving us that free spirit, which may fully erect his blessed Kingdome in our hearts: for where the spirit is, there is liberty, 2 Cor. 3. 17.

Secondly, we must bewaile the sinnes of all the world, in the transgression of Gods Law, wherby God it dishonoured, and his kingdome hindred, and the kingdome of darknesse furthered: 2 Pet. 2. 7, 8. Just Lot vexed his righteous soule, with the unclean conversation of the wicked of his time. 1 King. 19. 10. When Elias saw the children of Israel forsake Gods covenant, breake downe his altars, and slay his Prophets with the sword, then he became very zealous for the Lord of hosts. Psal. 119. 136. Mine eyes (saith David) gush out with rivers of water, because they keepe not thy Law. vers. 139. My zeale hath even consumed me, because mine enimies, have forgotten thy Law. Mar. 3. 5. Christ mourned for the hardnesse of the harts of the people: and Luk. 19. 41, 42. he wept over Jerusalem, for that they knew not the day of their visitation. Now look how these were affected with the raigning sins of their times, so must wee also mourne for their sinnes that raigne among us; as Atheisme, and prophanenesse, contempt of Gods Word, blasphemie, Sabbath-breaking, oppression, cruelties, and pride. All good subjects are grieved much when they see forren enemies display among them banners of victory; how much more then ought the godly to grieve, when they see impietie practised with an high hand, which is as it were a flag of defiance in the Kingdome of Christ, and a speciall ensigne of Satans triumphing in the increase of his kingdome of darknesse? When the devil sees one that hath lived in sinne, but cast a looke toward the kingdome of Christ, he rageth greatly, and labours by all meanes to turne him backe: and when wee see those that have made profession of religion, returne againe to the lusts of their former ignorance, O it should grieve our soules, and cause us to pray, thy Kingdome come. Doe wee perceive the Turke, or Pope, or any instrument of Satan, either by subtiltie or tyranny, to hinder the Gospell preached, which is the scepter of Christs Kingdome, and the arme of God, whereby hee puls men from the kingdome of darknesse? O then we should mourne. Or doe wee see the want of Gods ordinance in preaching, sacraments, and discipline, which serve for the furtherance of Christs kingdome: or the Lords people committed to ignorant or idle Ministers, to scandalous Teachers, either for life or doctrine? In all these wee have cause of mourning, and they should stirre up our hearts to cry unto the Lord, Thy kingdome come.

Vse. 2. Graces to be desired.

As we must mourne for the wants and hinderances of Christs kingdome, so wee must hereby learne to have our hearts inflamed with spirituall desires after all helps and furtherances unto Gods kingdome, both in our selves and others: as first, for the preaching of the Gospell, and all other divine ordinances, whereby Gods kingdome is erected and maintained; our hearts desire to God must be, that these may be set up and continued, where they are wanting, and that God may blesse them, where they are vouchsafed. Secondly, that God would enlighten the eyes of our mindes, that we may see the wonders of his Law, as David did, that so the Lords ordinance may bee blessed unto us. Thirdly, that wee may be wholly subject unto Christ, and that of conscience, not only in outward behaviour, but in minde, and heart, and will, and in all our affections: wee must make sure this holy desire be in us indeed, and therefore must deny our selves, and subject our selves wholly unto God, as a willing people to serve him, and none but him; and then wee may be sure his kingdome is come unto us. Fourthly, wee must desire to be dissolved, and to be with Christ in the kingdome of glory, for this end, that wee may make an end of sinning, and become more obedient subjects unto Christ; yea, wholly ruled by him, though for the good of others, we must be content to live. Fifthly, that Christ would come in judgement, when all things shall bee subdued unto God, and all his obedient subjects shall be fully glorified. This we may desire in heart, though wee must leave the time to Gods good pleasure, still waiting for it by faith in his promise. Sixthly, that God would inlarge his sanctuary here on earth, gather his elect more and more, and still defend and maintaine his Church in every place in the world: when these desires affect our soules, then doe we truly say, Thy kingdome come.

3 Vse. Duties to be practised.

The Vses. 1. Wants to be bewailed.

The wants wee are to bewaile in this petition, either concerne our selves, or others. First, we must lament and mourne for our owne miserable estate by nature, whereby wee are the servants of sinne, and so in thraldome and bondage under Satan: sinne leads us into bondage, dage, ‖ for he that committeth sinne, is the servant of sinne: and where sinne raigneth, there the devill hath dominion. And hence it comes that we rebel so much against the kingdom of God, and refuse to stoope to the scepter of his Word. Indeed this bondage is weakened in Gods children, but none is wholly freed from it in this life, as Pauls complaint declares, Rom. 7. 14. The Law is spirituall, but I am carnall, sold under sinne. The naturall man is dead in sinne and feeles it not; wee therefore must labour to feele in our selves this spirituall bondage under sinne; and when we feele it, we must bewaile it, and so shew some life of grace to be in us. This Paul did, Rom. 7. 24. O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death! Looke as the prisoner feeles his bolts and fetters, so sensibly should wee feele the chaine of sin, wherewith our soules are kept in bondage; and till we feele it and bewaile it, the Kingdome of Christ doth not come unto us: we must therefore every day, crie unto Christ our Lord, that hee would shew himselfe to be our Redeemer, by breaking the fetters of sinne, wherewith our soules are kept in bondage, and giving us that free spirit, which may fully erect his blessed Kingdome in our hearts: for where the spirit is, there is liberty, 2 Cor. 3. 17.

Bewaile the sinnes of the world.

Secondly, we must bewaile the sinnes of all the world, in the transgression of Gods Law, whereby God it dishonoured, and his kingdome hindred, and the kingdome of darknesse furthered: 2 Pet. 2. 7, 8. Iust Lot vexed his righteous soule, with the unclean conversation of the wicked of his time. 1 King. 19. 10. When Elias saw the children of Israel forsake Gods covenant, breake downe his altars, and slay his Prophets with the sword, then he became very zealous for the Lord of hosts. Psal. 119. 136. Mine eyes (saith David) gush out with rivers of water, because they keepe not thy Law. vers. 139. My zeale hath even consumed me, because mine enimies, have forgotten thy Law. Mar. 3. 5. Christ mourned for the hardnesse of the harts of the people: and Luk. 19. 41, 42. he wept over Ierusalem, for that they knew not the day of their visitation. Now look how these were affected with the raigning sins of their times, so must wee also mourne for their sinnes that raigne among us; as Atheisme, and prophanenesse, contempt of Gods Word, blasphemie, Sabbath-breaking, oppression, cruelties, and pride. All good subjects are grieved much when they see forren enemies display among them banners of victory; how much more then ought the godly to grieve, when they see impietie practised with an high hand, which is as it were a flag of defiance in the Kingdome of Christ, and a speciall ensigne of Satans triumphing in the increase of his kingdome of darknesse? When the devil sees one that hath lived in sinne, but cast a looke toward the kingdome of Christ, he rageth greatly, and labours by all meanes to turne him backe: and when wee see those that have made profession of religion, returne againe to the lusts of their former ignorance, O it should grieve our soules, and cause us to pray, thy Kingdome come. Doe wee perceive the Turke, or Pope, or any instrument of Satan, either by subtiltie or tyranny, to hinder the Gospell preached, which is the scepter of Christs Kingdome, and the arme of God, whereby hee puls men from the kingdome of darknesse? O then we should mourne. Or doe wee see the want of Gods ordinance in preaching, sacraments, and discipline, which serve for the furtherance of Christs kingdome: or the Lords people committed to ignorant or idle Ministers, to scandalous Teachers, either for life or doctrine? In all these wee have cause of mourning, and they should stirre up our hearts to cry unto the Lord, Thy kingdome come.

Vse. 2. Graces to be desired.

As we must mourne for the wants and hinderances of Christs kingdome, so wee must hereby learne to have our hearts inflamed with spirituall desires after all helps and furtherances unto Gods kingdome, both in our selves and others: as first, for the preaching of the Gospell, and all other divine ordinances, whereby Gods kingdome is erected and maintained; our hearts desire to God must be, that these may be set up and continued, where they are wanting, and that God may blesse them, where they are vouchsafed. Secondly, that God would enlighten the eyes of our mindes, that we may see the wonders of his Law, as David did, that so the Lords ordinance may bee blessed unto us. Thirdly, that wee may be wholly subject unto Christ, and that of conscience, not only in outward behaviour, but in minde, and heart, and will, and in all our affections: wee must make sure this holy desire be in us indeed, and therefore must deny our selves, and subject our selves wholly unto God, as a willing people to serve him, and none but him; and then wee may be sure his kingdome is come unto us. Fourthly, wee must desire to be dissolved, and to be with Christ in the kingdome of glory, for this end, that wee may make an end of sinning, and become more obedient subjects unto Christ; yea, wholly ruled by him, though for the good of others, we must be content to live. Fifthly, that Christ would come in judgement, when all things shall bee subdued unto God, and all his obedient subjects shall be fully glorified. This we may desire in heart, though wee must leave the time to Gods good pleasure, still waiting for it by faith in his promise. Sixthly, that God would inlarge his sanctuary here on earth, gather his elect more and more, and still defend and maintaine his Church in every place in the world: when these desires affect our soules, then doe we truly say, Thy kingdome come.

3 Vse. Duties to be practised.

Duties furthering Gods kingdome.

Whatsoever we aske in prayer, that must we endevour after in life and conversation, else we mocke God, saying well, and doing nothing. First therefore, as we say, Thy kingdome come, so must we seeke to meet it, and strive to enter into it: for this end God gives us time to live in this world, that here wee might enter the gate of grace, and wait for the fruition of glory: and therefore wee must diligently frequent the suburbs of this heavenly Jerusalem, even the preaching of the word, and therein labour both for true humiliation and conversion, or else wee cannot enter into this Kingdome, Matth. 18. 3. John 3. 5. First, we must have the pride of our hearts pulled downe, and become as little children, being humbled in our selves through the knowledge of our sinnes, and the feeling of that misery which is due unto us for them: yea, wee must confesse them unto God, and cry unto him for mercy, and by this means lay aside this burthen, which hinders our entrance into the gate of grace. Secondly, wee must be converted and changed by the renuing of our minds, our hearts must cleave unto God, and we must carry therein a resolute purpose not to sinne: when these things bee in us, wee enter into Gods Kingdome; but till wee endevour after them in some truth, wee say in vaine, Thy Kingdome come.

Secondly, we must be carefull to bring forth the fruits of this Kingdome; for therefore doth he send it amongst us, and for want hereof, doth he take it from them: Matth. 21. 43. Now these fruits are righteousnesse, peace, and joy in the holy Ghost, Rom. 14. 17. whereof we have [a] spoken before: all which, we must labour to find in our hearts, and to expresse in our lives, else this kingdome shall be taken from us, and we shall never see the glory of it.

Thirdly, hence wee must learne to be contented in all estates of this life whatsoever, the hope of the glory of this kingdome which wee pray for, must swallow up all the sorrowes that earthly calamities can bring upon us: This it was that made the Patriarkes to walke contented in the state of Pilgrims and strangers here on earth, Heb. 11. 13, 14. Yea, this renues [b] the inner man, it cheers the heart, and keeps it from fainting, though the outward man perish, so look after the joyes of this kingdome, which are the things not seene: and therefore Christ herewith comforts his Disciples against the sorrow of affliction, saying, Feare not little flocke, it is your Fathers good pleasure to give you the kingdome, Luke 12. 32.

Fourthly, wee must all labour in our places and callings, to bring one another into this kingdome, one neighbour another, and one friend another; Ezek. 18. 30. Returne, (saith the Lord to the house of Israel) and cause one another to returne. This the Prophet Isay noteth as a practice of the subjects of this Kingdome, that they shall say one to another, come, let us goe up to the mountaine of the Lord, Isa. 2. 3. But Masters of families especially, must looke to the practice of this duty, and labour to bring Gods kingdome into their families: for this end they must see to these things; first, that there be no manifest or open sin permitted in their families: rid thy house of such a person, if thou canst not reforme him, Psal. 101. 7. Secondly, instruct thy family in the way of the Lord, that the ymay know to live righteously and uprightly both before God and man. Thirdly, set up and maintaine the private worship of God in thy family, joine thou with them in holy duties, especially in daily calling upon the name of God. In regard of these and such like duties it is, that the [c] Scripture ascribes salvation to a family, where the master or the governour of the house is converted to the faith. And for the practice hereof, the holy Patriarkes are commended to al posterity: God saith of Abraham, [d] I know him, that hee will command his sonnes, and his household after him, that they keepe the way of the Lord: and [e] Iacob commands his family to put away their strange gods, and to cleanse themselves: and [f] Iosuah professed publikely, That hee and his family would serve the Lord.

Fifthly, hence wee must learne, every day to prepare our selves to die: for by death our souls enter into the glory of this kingdome, which we pray may come unto us; and therefore we must bee ready to receive it every day, that whensoever our King commeth unto us, either by death, or in the last judgement, we may passe from grace to glory. And indeed wee cannot with comfort make this petition, unlesse wee bee in some measure prepared for death, and that every day. Now being prepared, wee must wait, as Iob 8 did, every day till our changing come. Looke how the godly in the old Testament looked for Christs first coming in the flesh; so must we wait for his coming to us, either by death, or judgement; neither must any thing dismay us in this waiting, no not death it selfe: for the sooner we die, the sooner wee may enter into glory. And here wee may take a view of the monstrous hypocrisie of the world: for who will not say these words, Thy kingdome come? But yet the most men neglect to prepare themselves for entrance into this kingdome; nay, many contemne the word and praier, which are the meanes whereby wee have admittance into the state of grace, and are prepared for the Kingdome of glory.

Sixthly, wee may here learne of our Saviour Christ the practice of humility, and in all things to give all glory to God; for though this kingdome pertaine equally to him (as hee is God) with the Father; yet because he hath it from the Father, as he is the Sonne, therefore he will have it wholly attributed unto him: for he teacheth us to say, Our Father, Thy kingdome come.

Lastly, here observe the necessity of this petition, in respect of our outward estate; for the comming of this kingdome to any estate, is a speciall cause of prosperity and happinesse unto unto us: for where this Kingdome is, Gods hand of blessing and protection is in a speciall manner: here the Lord raigneth and his glorious and blessed Angels, which are mighty in strength and power, keepe watch and guard in that kingdom, and about that people who have the Lord for their King and God. Hence it is, that this our Kingdome hath so long enjoyed peace and protection from many dangerous assaults, because wee embrace and professe the Gospel, which is the sceptre of Gods kingdom; and if wee could doe it in sincerity, and walke worthy of the Lord our King, our prosperitie should bee as the floods, and our peace as the Sunne and Moone in heaven. And therefore they that love the peace of this kingdome, must embrace and obey the Gospell, and pray for the happy and flourishing estate thereof: for therein stands our peace.

Thy will be done, in earth as it is in heaven.

The Coherence. This petition dependeth on both the former thus; as a meanes whereby we doe that which wee desire in the first petition: for Gods name is glorified, when his will is done: and as a manifestation of that which we desire in the second petition, for there we pray, that Gods kingdome may come unto us, and he rule in our hearts by his word and spirit: now here we crave that we may doe his will, and so testifie our selves to be his loyall subjects.

The meaning. This petition is propounded in a comparison, which naturally standeth thus; As thy will is done in heaven, so let thy will bee done in earth. And it hath two parts: The first respects the grace of obedience which we pray for, Thy will be done in earth. The second shews the right manner of performing it, As it is in heaven.

For the first, Thy will] Gods will is onely one, considered in it selfe, as God is one: yet for our understanding, it may be thus distinguished: It is either absolute, or revealed. Gods absolute will is the will of his good pleasure, whereby according to his eternall counsell, hee determines of all things, what shall be done, or what shall not bee done, and in what manner. This absolute will extendeth over all creatures, and over all their actions: Ephes. 1. 11. We are predestinate according to the purpose of him that worketh all things after the counsell of his owne will. Rom. 9. 19. Who hath resisted his will? Mat. 10. 26. Without this will of God, a sparrow cannot fall to the ground. And this absolute will of God is hidden from us, till God reveale it by the event. Gods revealed will is the sacred doctrine of God in his Word, whereby he signifieth unto man, so farre as concernes his happinesse and salvation, what hee ought to doe, or what he ought not to doe. This is not Gods absolute will, but rather an effect thereof concerning man, revealing unto him, not what hee simply and absolutely willeth to bee done, for that must needs bee done; but what is pleasing or displeasing unto him, done by man, and what he will have man to doe, or not to doe, if hee desire to come to life, and would not be condemned. And this revealed will comprehendeth both the Law and Gospell, with all their Commandements, prohibitions, threatnings, exhortations, promises, and such like, whereto the Apostle hath relation, when hee saith, Prove what is the good will of God, and acceptable, Rom. 12. 2.

Now this distinction of Gods will being according to the Scripture, hath his use in this place; for when wee say, Thy will be done, wee meane not the absolute, but the revealed will of God. Reasons. 1. The absolute will of God is always done, and cannot be resisted; My counsell shall stand (saith [a] the Lord) and I will doe what soever I will: and againe, [b] Who hath resisted his will? that is, his absolute will: for his revealed will is generally transgressed by men, and men doe that which seemeth good in their owne eyes, notwithstanding God reveale his will to the contrary. II. A man may sometime dissent from the absolute will of God without sinning, so be it hee still submit himselfe to the will of God, resting therein, when it is revealed. Thus Abraham [c] prayed for the safety of Sodome (yet submissively) which God willed and decreed to destroy: and David [d] prayed for the life of his child, which God would have to die: and our [e] Saviour Christ prayed for the removall of that cup, which God had absolutely decreed hee should drink of, yet submitting his will unto his Fathers. And [f] Paul according to his Apostolike function, desired to preach the Gospel in By thinia, but the Spirit suffered him not; which sheweth plainly it was not the will of God that he should preach there, and yet he desired it religiously without sinne, as did the rest before mentioned. And as in will, so in affection a man may differ from Gods absolute will without sinne: Christ as the Sonne of God, knew his Fathers will, concerning the destruction of Jerusalem, and yet [g] he wept for it, in a tender compassion over their misery to come: and so the brethren at Cæsarea, [h] wept and lamented for Pauls going to Jerusalem, though Agabus prophesied that God would have it so: neither must this seeme strange unto us, for two things may remaine both good, and yet differ one from another; and so may mans created will differ from Gods absolute and uncreated will, and yet both remaine good.

Having found that this petition must be understood of the revealed will of God, wee now come to search out the speciall branches of Gods revealed will: which wee shall finde in severall places of the holy Scripture. The first is, the conversion of a sinner, Ezek. 33. 11. As I live (saith the Lord) I will not the death of a sinner, but that the wicked turne from his way and live. The second is, that wee deny our selves, and rely wholly on our Saviour Christ Jesus for life and salvation: Iohn 6. 40. This is the will of God, that he that seeth the Son, and believeth in him, should have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day. The third is our sanctification in soule, and body, and spirit: 1 Thes. 4. 3. This is the will of God, even your sanctification. The fourth, is that every one that lives in the Church of God, beside his generall calling of a Christian, should have a particular calling to live in, wherein hee must seeke the glory of God, in the good of others: 1 Cor. 7. 20. Let every man abide in the same vocation wherein hee is called, and therein walke with God; v. 24. The fifth part of Gods will is to subject our selves under the hand of God in all crosses and afflictions whatsoever: when the brethren at Cæsarea saw Pauls resolution to goe to Jerusalem, notwithstanding the bonds that there remained for him, they said (as it were expounding this petition) The will of the Lord be done, Act. 21. 14.

Bee done] According to the Scripture there be two degrees of doing Gods will: the first is prescribed in the Gospell, to wit, a sincere endevour and strife according to all the power of grace that God hath given us, to doe the will of God; and this especially is here meant. The second is commanded in the Law, and it is a fulfilling of Gods will, doing that which God commandeth in that manner of perfection which he commandeth: but this is not attained unto in this life: and therefore our desire of God in this petition is, that he would give us grace, sincerely to endevour to doe his whole will here on earth, and to hasten that time and state unto us, wherein we shall doe it perfectly as the Law requires.

1 Use. Wants to be bewailed both in our selves and others.

I. This petition teacheth us to bewaile our naturall disposition, whereby wee are prone to rebell against the will of God, being wholly bent to disobedience in doing that which is evill.

II. We must bewaile our naturall hypocrisie, even that which remaineth in us after grace received: for though we may say these words, yet we cannot possibly have our hearts affected with such a perfect desire after obedience to Gods will, as we ought to have.

III. Though we have never so much grace, yet here wee must labour and bewaile our want of obedience in all good duties: for though we give our selves to doe good things, yet the best of us all faile in the manner of doing of them; as in hearing the Word, in receiving the Sacraments, and prayer; so as we must be humbled for our wants, and confesse that we are unprofitable servants, when we have done all that is commanded us, Luke 17. 10.

Secondly, we must bewaile the sinnes of others, whereby they disobey the will of God, and so rebell against him; hereby God is dishonoured, and therefore in zeale of Gods glory, and love to our brethren, wee must be grieved when others sinne. Thus was David affected, Psal. 119. 136. and Paul, 2 Cor. 12. 21. I feare lest when I come unto you, my God abase me among you, and I shall bewaile many of them that have sinned already.

2 Use. Graces to be desired.

As wee must bewaile the wants that hinder the doing of Gods will in our selves and others; so wee must stirre up our hearts unto heavenly desires after those graces whereby Gods will may be done. As first, that wee may have grace to deny our selves, our owne wils and affections; for naturally we are herein unlike God, and like the Devill: and this must every one learne that would bee Christs Disciple, Luke 9. verse 23.

Secondly, that God would incline and dispose our hearts towards his holy word, that we may not onely know, but obey Gods revealed will. This was Davids usuall request; Psalm. 119. 27. Make mee to understand the way of thy testimonies and 36. Incline my heart unto thy testimonies. For how should wee doe the will of God, unlesse wee know it? and how shall wee know it, unlesse our hearts affect the meanes of grace and of obedience.

Thirdly, that God would hasten that time and state unto us, wherein we shall perfectly doe the will of God: that is our state of glory.

Fourthly, that under every crosse which God shall lay upon us, wee may possesse our soules with patience, and so subject our selves to Gods absolute will. Thus Paul prayes in behalfe of the Colossians, that GOD would strengthen them by the power of his might, unto all patience and long suffering with joyfulnesse. Col. 1. 12.

Fifthly, that God would turne the hearts of men from sinne, and bring them every where to the obedience of his will.

3 Use. Duties to be practised,

Because we must seeke to practise that which we aske in prayer, therefore hereby we are also taught to endevour our selves after these good duties: First, to prove what is the good will of God, and acceptable, Rom. 12. 2. We must by often triall of our actions by the word of God, become expert in Gods will; use in all things makes perfect, and therefore in all our affaires we must consult with God, whether the things wee goe about bee agreeable to his will. Most men will have an eye to the lawes of the Land in their civill affaires, as in buying and selling; and why should wee not bee as wise for our soules in the matters of God? Doe we not dissemble with GOD when wee say with our tongues, Thy will bee done, and yet in life and conversation, have no regard to square our workes thereby?

Secondly, wee must be strict in the matter of sinne, making conscience of every evill way; yea, even of the first motions unto sinne, that never never come to consent: for this petition for obedience, respects not onely our words and deeds, but our secret thoughes: for even they must bee brought to obedience to God, 2 Cor. 10. 5.

Thirdly, wee must seeke to cut off all things that hinder us from doing Gods will: we must mortifie and crucifie the lusts of the flesh, and all sinfull motions of our corrupt hearts; for these make us rebels against God in transgressing his will. This is an hard thing to doe, and unto a naturall man of himselfe altogether impossible, and therefore wee must use spirituall meanes: for the deeds of the flesh must bee mortified by the Spirit, Roman. 8. 13. Now the ground of this worke is the death of our Saviour Christ applied by faith to our corrupt hart; for the olaman is crucified with him, (as the Apostle Paul saith) that the body of sinne might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin, Roman. 6. 6. This therefore must wee doe, if we thinke our selves to have part in Christ; we must perswade our hearts, that when our Saviour Christ was upon the Crosse in our roome and stead, bearing the punishment of our sinnes, then were we, in regard of the old man, crucified with him; the vertue and efficacy whereof, we shall undoubtedly finde in our selves, for the mortifying of sinne, when wee doe truly beleeve; for our fellowship with Christ begins in his death; and if wee bee dead to sinne, how can the motions thereof yet live and reigne in us? When a malefactor is put to death, he ceaseth from his bad courses; and so, if our corruption be crucified with our Saviour Christ, it must not reigne in our hearts, to bring forth the fruits of sinne. Let us therefore meditate on the death of our Saviour Christ, and apply it to our selves by faith, and consider the vilenesse of our sinnes, in the bitternesse of his passion; and then no doubt wee shall bee moved to strive against evill motions: For if we be Christs, wee have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts, Gal. 5. 24.

Fourthly, we must not live inordinately, but in that sort which God injoineth Christians in his word: every one must have a double calling; the generall calling of a Christian, common to all that live in the Church, concerning the service of God, in righteousnesse and holinesse; and a particular lawfull calling, in some set state of life, tending to the good of the Church, common-wealth, or family, wherein a man must glorifie God in the good of men: this is to live in order, and hee that wanteth both, or one of these, lives inordinately, for God would have every man to abide in that vocation wherein he hath called him: every one therefore according to his gift and grace received of God, must live in a lawfull calling, and hee that doth not so, resisteth Gods will. Whereby wee see that wandring beggers are not to bee suffered in Church or common-wealth; for they live without any calling, and so transgresse Gods will: yea, their course of life is here also condemned, that spend their life in sports and gaming; for such a life is rebellion against God, who will be glorified in workes done by vertue of our lawfull calling.

Fifthly, it is the will of God, that through manifold afflictions wee should enter into his kingdome; and therefore when any crosse befals us walking in our lawfull callings, we must endevour to subject our selves patiently to the will of God therein: in prosperity wee are cheerefull and thankfull, but when affliction comes, our nature would repine: O remember we say in all estates, Thy will be done! and therefore in the most bitter crosses that can befall us, we must labour to say with Iob, The Lord giveth, and the Lord taketh away: blessed be the name of the Lord. Iob 1. 21. So did the Prophet David being banished his kingdome by his owne sonne, 2 Sam. 15. 26. But if hee thus say, Behold, I have no delight in thee, behold, here am I, let him doe to mee as seemeth good in his eyes: and chap. 16. 10, 11. when Shemei cursed him, he stayed Abishai from revenge, upon consideration of Gods will to have it so: saying, Suffer him to curse, for the Lord hath bidden him.

In earth as it is in heaven.

Having spoken of the grace of obedience desired in this petition, wee now come to the manner how it must be performed: to wit, In earth as it is in heaven: that is, of us men living on earth, as the blessed Angels and glorified Saints doe it in heaven: for a the Angels that excell in strength, doe Gods commandements in obeying the voice of his word. And because this exposition is generally received, I will not stand to prove it; this onely we must remember, that here wee pray not to performe obedience equall in measure and degree, to the obedience of the Saints and Angels in heaven, but such as is like unto it: for this note of comparison here imports a likenesse and resemblance, and not equality.

Now this likenesse here stands in 2. things: First, in cheerefulnesse and willingnesse: for the holy Angels obey the Commandement of God freely, and readily, without murmuring or constraint: for this cause they are said to come and stand before God, Iob 1. 6. and to behold his face, Matth. 18. 10. to expresse their voluntary service unto God: and so should Gods children obey God, as Paul speaketh of b Philemons beneficence, it must not bee as it were of necessity, but willingly. As in the case of c Almes-giving, c God loves a cheerefull giver, so in all obedience hee likes a cheerefull doing: and therefore like faith, d if there be first a willing minde, it is accepted according to that a man hath. In this regard, Peter beseecheth the Elders, e to feed the flocke of God, depending on them: not to care for it; not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready minde: and the Apostle Paul

2 Secondly, in priority, for the Angels preferre to doe the will of God, before all other things: and therefore they are said to stand in his presence continually as it were wayting upon his pleasure: and the like affection for obedience unto God, must bee in all his children. Thisk Abraham notably testifies, when at Gods command he would have killed Isaac; testifying thereby, that he preferred obedience unto God, before the deerest thing in the world: this also we may see in David, Psal. 119. 14. I have had as great delight in the way of thy testimonies, as in all riches: and vers. 127. I love thy commandements above gold, yea above much fine gold: and in our Saviour Christ, who said, when hee was weary and hungry, My meat is to doe the will of him that sent me, and to finish his worke, Joh. 4. 34.

3 Thirdly, in speed, and quicknesse: for the Angels doe Gods will without all delay or slacknesse, which the Scripture signifies by their wings, and flying, which it ascribeth unto them: and the like alacrity should Gods children shew in their obedience unto God, Psal. 119. 60. I made haste and delayed not to keepe thy commandements.

4 Fourthly, in faithfulnesse: the Angels doe not Gods will by halves or peece-meale, but thoroughly and entirely, wherein soever God imployeth them: and so should wee bee faithfull in doing Gods will, endevouring to yeeld sincere obedience, not to some, but to all Gods commandements which concerne us: Psal. 119. 6. I shall not be confounded when I have respect unto all thy commandements. 2 King. 23. 25. King Iosias turned to the Lord with all his soule, with all his heart, and with all his might, according to all the law of Moses: an example to be followed of all Gods children, that so they may be like to the blessed Angels.

The 1. Vse. Wants to be bewailed.

1 First, this patterne of Angelicall obedience here propounded for our imitation, must teach us to acknowledge and bewaile the naturall hardnesse, deadnesse, and untowardnesse of our hearts, in yeelding obedience unto the will of God: if wee feele not this dull and untoward heart, we may suspect our selves of the want of grace, for every gracious heart feeles it more or lesse, and bewailes it unto God: and so must we doe, if we say in truth, Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven.

2 Secondly, wee must here also bewaile the want of sincerity and faithfulnesse in doing Gods will: our maymed and halt obedience, shewes how farre we come short of this Angelicall example: many content themselves with the outward service of the body, and never regard the inward worship of the heart; and others have respect to outward duties of piety, that concerne God, but for uprightnesse and mercy towards men, they little regard: this the Angels doe not.

2. Vse. Graces to be desired.

Hereby also wee must learne to pray for the Spirit of freedome, whereby we may be delivered from the bondage of corruption, and so may the more freely, and cheerefully, and heartily endevour to doe Gods will: Psal. 51. 12. Restore to me the joy of thy salvation, and stablish me by thy free Spirit: the holy Ghost is therefore called the free Spirit, because it gives liberty from the bondage of sinne, and makes the heart free, and forward, and cheerefull in Gods service; for where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty, 2 Cor. 3. 17.

B 3. Vse. Duties to be practised.

Because wee must practise the good things we pray for, therefore here wee are taught to frame our lives to an holy Imitation of the blessed Angels. Though we cannot attaine to the measure of their obedience, yet wee must endevour after their manner of obedience, in readinesse, &c. and so by following them beginne our heaven in this world. This will not stand with their humour, who accoume zeale in religion, affected precisenesse: but such as call God Father in sincerity, must lye before them the obedience of the holy Angels, as a patterne for their imitation. Now in them we may observe these things for us to follow:

C First, they desired before Christs incarnation, to looke into the mystery of our redemption wrought by Christ, 1 Pet. 1. 12. although it concerne them not as it doth us: for they never fell, and they are established by another grace than of redemption: now herein we must follow the Angels, or (if it were possible) goe beyond them, for Christ tooke not the Angels but the seed of Abraham: his redemption concerns us, and therfore we much more must be diligent searchers out of this mystery in the Gospell.

2 Secondly, the Angels are maintainers of true religion, and of the worship of God: for the Law was given by Angels, Gal. 3. 19. The most of Daniels visions were shewed by an Angell; and so was the revelations unto John, Revel. 1. 1. the Angels brought the Apostles out of prison to preach the Gospell a sundry times. They are enemies to Idolatry; for, Apoc. 19. 10. when John would have worshipped the Angel, he forbade him, saying, See thou doe it not, worship God: herein also we must be followers of Angels, by furthering the Gospel and true worship of God to the uttermost of our power, by inuring al Idolatry, & shewing our selves enemies to all the enemies of God and of his truth.

3 Thirdly, the Angels were always serviceable unto Christ: they brought the tidings of his birth to the shepherds, Luk. 2. 9, 10. they ministred unto him in his temptation, Matth. 4. 11. in his agony, Luk. 22. 43. in his resurrection, Mat. 28. 2. and ascension, Act. 1. 10. and so

4 should we performe unto Christ all the service we can.

Fourthly, they spend their time in praising and lauding the name of God: and so should we labour to have our hearts inlarged for his glorie, and our mouthes filled with his praises.

5 Fifthly, they be serviceable for our good, if we be Gods children, though they be farre better than we are: Heb. 1. 14. They are ministring spirits, sent forth to minister for their sakes which shall be heires of salvation. Psal. 91. 12. They are as nurses to beare Gods children in their hands. Psal. 34. 7. The Angel of the Lord pitcheth round about them that feare him: And all this they doe unto us of love, as though it were not injoyned them: So we after their example must imploy our selves in soule and bodie, calling, credit, and all we have for the good of men.

6 Sixthly, the Angels are joyfull when sinners are humbled and converted from sinne unto God: Luk. 15. 10. and they are grieved when men by sinne dishonour God. And the like affections should be in us: we should mourne for all sinne in our selves and others, whereby God is dishonoured; and have our hearts to leape for joy, when sinners repent and turne unto God. In the world to come we shall be like the Angels in heaven in glorie, Matth. 22. 30. let us therefore here testifie this hope by beginning our heaven upon earth, in becomming like to the Angels, though not in glorie, yet in obedience.

Vse 4. Here lastly observe, what honour we are to give to the Angels of heaven, namely, the honour of Imitation, becomming like unto them in obedience, and treading in the steps of their vertues: but for the honour of invocation, that is due to God alone, and we must not give it to Angels: damnable therefore is the doctrine and practice of the Church of Rome, who pray unto the Angels, and give unto them the honour of God in religious worship.

V. 11 Give us this day our daily bread.

The coherence. Hitherto wee have handled the petitions that concerne Gods glorie; now we come to the petitions that concerne our selves as the word Vs, doth plainely shew, in these three which follow: and they depend upon the former, as an explication of the manner of our obedience: for there we asked grace to doe Gods will, and here we pray for those blessings and mercies wherein we may expresse our obedience, for we doe Gods will, when we depend upon his providence for the blessings of this life: when we relie upon his mercie, for the pardon of our sins, and trust in his power for strength against temptation and deliverance from evill. Now then to come particularly to this fourth petition: having in the former craved grace to doe Gods will in our particular callings, here we pray for such sufficiencie of all

A temporall blessings, whereby we may glorifie God therein.

In the handling of this petition, six points are to be considered: 1. what we aske, Bread: 2. what bread we aske, daily bread: 3. whose bread, ours: 4. for what time, this day: 5. to whom, to us: 6. whence would we have it; by gift from God, give us.

For the first: The thing we aske is Bread. But what is meant by Bread, at is not agreed upon: some expound it spiritually of Christs bodie and bloud, the food of the soule in the Word and Sacraments. But the unfitnesse of this exposition we shall see by the weaknesse of their reasons alleaged for it. First, they say, it is not meet that in so heavenly a prayer, wee should aske so base a thing, as materiall bread of our heavenly father. Ans. If God command us to aske him bread, and to depend upon him for it, we must not judge basely of it: now in this a chapter God commands us to depend upon him for food to eat: yea, 1 Pet. 5. 7. we must cast all our care on him: and Iacobs practice in praying for bread to eat, Gen. 28. 20. and Agurs praying for a competencie in outward things, Prov. 30. 8. declare plainely the lawfulnesse thereof. Secondly, (they say) we must first seeke Gods kingdome and his righteousnesse, and then all these things shall be cast upon us, ver. 33. Ans. Distrustfull and distracting care is there onely forbidden, but a moderate care is there allowed: and therefore prayer for them is undoubtedly lawfull.

C The second opinion touching Bread is of the Papists, to wit, That here we aske not onely all necessarie sustenance for the bodie, but much more all spirituall food, namely, the blessed Sacrament, which is Christ the bread of life. But neither is this so fit: for first, we prayed for spirituall things directly in the second petition. Secondly, Sacramentall bread cannot here bee meant, because it was not ordained when Christ taught his Disciples this prayer. Thirdly, their exposition is against their owne practice: for if by bread were meant Christ in the Sacrament, then the people should be fed therewith every day, which they barre them from.

D The third opinion is, that by bread is meant corporall food and blessings, necessarie to comporall life onely: and this I take to be the truth for these reasons, which also make against the former expositions. First, S. Luke, the best interpreter of our Saviour Christ, expounds the words, of bread that serves for the day: that is, for every day, Luk. 11. 3. and therfore it must needs be bodily: for spirituall food once truly received serves not for a day, but for ever, Joh. 4. 14. Secondly, this is a perfect platforme of prayer, and therefore must containe petition for temporall blessings, else it were not perfect: now we cannot comprehend our requests for temporall blessings under any other petition but this onely, and therefore Christ here propounded them.

Now

Now properly bread imports that sustenance made of graine which is fit and convenient for mans bodily nourishment, such as Melchisedek brought out to Abraham and his companie, with wine for their refreshing, Gen. 14. 18. and such is meant in Scripture where bread is opposed to wine or water. But more generally it is taken for all kinde of food whatsoever, whereby life is preserved: in which sence goats milke is called bread, Prov. 27.27. and the fruit of trees, Jer. 11.19. and all things that passe to and fro in trafficke, Prov. 31.14. Now in this place it must be taken in a generall sense, not onely for bread, but for all other necessarie food, and for raiment also, with health, peace, libertie, and all other things that are meet and needfull for the good outward estate of man, of family, or common-wealth.

The uses. 1. In that Christ bids us pray for bread, and not for dainties; hereby he would teach us to be ware of covetousnesse, the common sinne of our nature, whereby we are discontent with our estate, and murmure with the Israelites, if we have no more but Manna: but we must strive against this corruption, and say with David, Lord, incline my heart unto thy testimonies, and not unto covetousnesse, Psalm. 119.36.

1 Cautions of covetousnesse.

Secondly, we must also hereby learne to practise sobriety and moderation in diet, apparell, and all other things appertaining to this life, using them so as we may be the fitter for our callings, and the service of God, and so bettered thereby and not made worse.

2 Sobrietie.

Thirdly, this must teach us contentation with that place and state of life, and measure of wealth which God gives us: for we must aske bread onely, that is, things necessarie, and therefore if God gives us things necessarie, we must be therewith content: and our corrupt minde must not be judge herein, but what God bestowes upon our sober use of lawfull meanes within our calling, that must we judge to bee our portion: 1 Tim. 6.8. If we have food and raiment, let us therewith be content. This was Pauls practice, I can be abased, & I can abound: everywhere in all things I am instructed both to be full and to be hungrie, to abound and to have want. The [a] Israelites in the wildernes were not content with Manna, but would needs have flesh to eat, and God gave them their desire; but while the flesh was in their mouths, his wrath fell upon them: therefore let us lust after no more than God gives upon our sober use of lawfull meanes, lest in seeking more, we draw Gods curse upon us. But alas, few are content with their estate, the yeoman will be like the gentleman in attire and diet; and the gentleman like the noble man; & hence comes usurie, oppression, injustice, and much ungodlinesse; hence it comes that Gods judgement in dearth is increased upon the poore, because men make no conscience of the meanes, so they may benefit and inrich themselves, and get aloft: but be ware of Gods curse with thine advancement; unlesse God change thine estate, rest contented with that which is present, and be thankfull for it: for better is a little with the feare of God, than great treasure and trouble therewith, Prov. 15.16. now what trouble like the wrath of God? and therefore be content with that which God sendeth in the use of lawfull meanes.

Phil. 4. 12.

a Numb. 11. 33.

D

Fourthly, must we aske of God every bit of bread we eat? then away with all chance and fortune, and let us learne to acknowledge Gods providence in all thing.

4 Chance confuted.

Fifthly, must Gods children aske of God their daily food, and receive it as a gift of mercie from the hands of their father? then away with merit by mans workes: for if bread be of mercie, life everlasting cannot be of merit or mans part.

5 Merit confuted.

Lastly, this petition ministreth unto us a notable ground of contentation against distrustfull care: for that which Christ bids us aske, God undoubtedly will give, because it is according to his will: and therefore the childe of God may assure himselfe of things sufficient for this life, in the sober use of lawfull meanes; and looke, if temporall blessings faile, for a good supply in spirituall graces.

Here a question may be asked, seeing wee aske of God but bread onely, that is, things necessarie for this life, whether may wee use the creatures of God for our delight? Answ. We may use the outward blessings of God for our honest delight: Eccles. 5. 17. Behold what I have seene good, that it is comelyto eat, and drink, and to take pleasure in all his labour wherein man travelleth under the sunne: yet three caveats must bee remembred lest wee abuse our libertie in this delight: 1. we must see God to give us not onely things necessarie, but for delight: II. in our delight and pleasure we must so moderate our affections, that they be not taken up with these earthly things, nor hereby withdrawne or hindred from things heavenly and spirituall: III. Our principall joy must be in spirituall food, even in Christ crucified, and in our true communion with him in his bodie and bloud: all our delight must stoope to this, and out of Christ wee must count nothing joyous.

Of using Gods creatures to our delight.

Ephesians.

II. Point. What bread: daily bread. The word in the originall signifieth bread put to our substances day by day: that is, such bread as serves to preserve health and life from day to day: this Agur calls bread or food convenient for him, Prov. 30. 8.

We may pray for temporall blessings.

The Use. In this second point we learne two things: First, that it is lawfull to aske temporall blessings at the hands of God, for he is our mercifull father, and bids us so to doe; which serveth to confirme the former exposition of this article. Secondly, that we ought to have a moderate care to preserve our bodily life and health, in the diligent use of all lawfull meares: for what we pray for, wee must endevour to doe.

doe. The fifth commandement saith, Thou shalt not kill; wherein the Lord injoineth us by all good meanes to preserve our owne and our neighbours life. And this we must doe for two causes especially: first, that we may doe all the good we can to the Church, Common-wealth, and family whereof we are members: secondly, that wee may have a sufficient time to prepare our selves for heaven: for death will come, and the day of judgment; and after death there is no wisdome, nor counsel, worke, nor invention therefore now must wee prepare our selves for God, that wee may bee ready to receive him at his comming; and he that is prepared for the Lord hath lived well and long enough, but without this our life is spent in vaine.

II. Thus petition for our owne bread teacheth us, that every one should have a lawfull calling, and therein so imploy himselfe, that hee may eat his owne bread, 2 Thess. 3. 12. No man ought to live out of a lawfull calling, nor yet idlely therein; therefore must banish idlenesse out of his family: and the magistrate out of the common-wealth: yea rich persons ought not to be tolerated, for such eat not their owne bread.

A lawfull calling a necessary.

III. Point. Whose bread doe we pray for? our owne, not other mens. But how doth bread or any other temporall blessings become ours? Answ. First, when we have true right thereto before God: secondly, when we have lawfull possession thereof before men. Our right before God is needfull, for we lost all in Adam, and have recovery of our right in the creatures onely in Christ Jesus, when by faith wee become his members: 1 Cor. 3.22. All things are yours and you are Christs. And yet for all this, the child of God may not use all things as his own though he have right thereto in Christ, unlesse by Gods providence he have also lawfull right thereto or possession thereof before men, as by lawfull gift, purchase, labour, or such like. Indeed right in Christ is the chiefest title, but yet right before men is also necessary: for Christian liberty doth not abolish good orders in civill estates, but establish them rather: Christ is no enemy to Cæsar, and therefore the Scripture injoines every man to eat his owne bread, 2 Thes. 3. 12. that is, such whereto hee hath right in Christ by faith, and also enjoyeth by Gods providence in some honest meanes allowed of men; for by good orders established among men, we are put into possession of those things whereto we have right in Christ.

Thieving condemned.

The use. I. Here wee learne to receive our bread from God, or any other temporall blessing wee enjoy as a fruit of Christs passion; and indeed Christ crucified is the foundation of every good gift and blessing of God. As for infidels and wicked men, who possesse and use many temporall blessings, it must bee granted, that they have right thereto before men: but yet having no part in Christ crucified, they want the true foundation, and so are no better than usurpers before God, for which one day they must be called to reckoning. If this point were learned, men should shew more conscience in getting, and more reverence and thankfulnesse in using Gods temporall blessings, than usually they doe: there would bee lesse riot and excesse in diet and attire, and lesse abuse of all Gods creatures: for the meditation of this price of our redemption, would refraine us from dishonouring God in any of his blessings.

a Isa. 3. 1.

Thirdly,

C

b Hab. 2. 5

Thirdly, to moderate our care in seeking for the blessings of this life: wee must have care to provide things honest and necessary; and for this end must exercise our selves in the use of lawfull meanes, otherwise we shall tempt God; but yet our care must be so moderate, that wee still depend upon our heavenly fathers care and providence for us, who bids us aske him bread for every day: and thus we shall have enough, when as distrustfull and immoderate care shall helpe us nothing. When the [e] Israelites lived by Manna, which God gave them from heaven, they were commanded to gather but for one day, and to reserve none of it till the morrow; whereby God would teach them to depend upon his daily providence: which while they did, they had sufficient, and that which was good; but when through covetousnesse they would needs gather more than for the day, and so reserved of it till the morning, Gods curse light upon it; [f] for it was full of wormes, and stanke: and afterward when they began to dislike Manna, and were not content with his providence, but 'lusted after flesh, hee gave them their desire, but withall his wrath fell upon them while the flesh was betweene their teeth before it was chewed, v. 33. and so it will be with us if we distrust in God: but if we learne and practise this dependance on Gods particular providence, we shall have experience of his goodnesse, though ordinary meanes faile, either by supply, as 1 King. 17. 6. or by patience to beare the want.

Fourthly, here wee have a good ground of that holy practice of Gods children, sanctifying their meat and drinke by prayer and thanksgiving: for here we are taught to pray for temporall blessings, and therefore when we have them and use them, we should glorifie God by praier and thanksgiving for his blessing upon them: the reason hereof is great: for first, hereby wee are distinguished from brute beasts, who live upon Gods blessings, but yet cannot praise him as man may doe: secondly, hereby wee testifie our right and interest into Gods creatures by Jesus Christ, which wee lost in Adam, for true prayer is a fruit of faith, and by faith wee are made partakers of Christ Jesus: thirdly, such is our corruption by nature, that wee are prone to abuse all Gods blessings, and therefore wee must pray for grace to use them moderately and thankfully.

Fifthly, here we may learne how to frame our daily prayers to God, for this circumstance of time must bee referred to every petition; and therefore this must bee our practice, every day to pray for grace to glorifie Gods name, to yeeld obedience to his will, to have our sinnes forgiven, and so for the rest.

V. Point. For whom doe we aske bread? not for our selves alone, but for our brethren; Give us: which serves to teach us brotherly love, which seeketh not her owne things onely, but is bountifull towards others, seeking their good also. And indeed here wee are but stewards of Gods temporall blessings, and therefore may not imploy them as wee will, but for his glory who is our absolute Lord: now his direction is to this effect; that first, we should glorifie God with our temporall goods, imploying them for the maintenance of his worship, and of true religion. Secondly, that we should imploy them for the common good, in the releefe of the poore, and other necessary duties for the common-wealth. Thirdly, that wee should provide for our owne, especially them of our family, that we may live in peace and quietnesse, and so the better prepare our selves for the life to come.

VI. Point. From whom must wee looke to receive our bread? namely from God: for wee say unto him that is our father in Christ, Give us: which teacheth us, that though wee bee his children, and so have right to temporall blessings, yet whatsoever wee have, wee must know it comes from God, and must receive and use it as from his hand. And this we shall doe if wee sanctifie the creatures of God unto our temporall use: for every creature of God is good, if it bee sanctified in his use. Now the creature is sanctified not as man is, when the Spirit of God worketh in him, abolishing corruption and renewing grace; nor yet as the elements in the sacraments are sanctified, which are set apart by God to an holy and spirituall use, to be seales and pledges of grace; but when it is made fit to our temporall civill use, which is done by the word and prayer, 1 Tim. 4.4. Where by the word is meant; first, the word of creation, whereby God in the beginning fitted the creature for mans use, and gave him power and soveraigntie over it: Secondly, the word of restitution, whereby after the fall, and after the flood, he granted unto man the use of his creatures, Gen. 9. 3. Thirdly, the word of the Gospell concerning our Christian liberty, wherein hee hath inlarged our use in the creatures of God, Acts 10. 15. And by prayer, wee desire God to give his power unto the creatures, and his blessing upon them to serve for our good and comfort; as also to give us grace to receive them as from his hand, and to use them to his glory. If wee could learne and practise this duty, wee should have more comfort in the creatures than yet we have; yea, it would restraine us from fraud, oppression, crueltie, and from pride and vanitie in getting and using all Gods blessings: for if wee were perswaded that all temporall blessings came from his hand, how durst wee sinne against him either in getting or using of them.

Secondly, in that after our labour and diligence in our callings, we must still pray to God to give us bread, we must learne to observe that order of causes which God hath set in the producing of all temporall blessings for this life: for not onely food and rayment, but our labour and diligence there about are secondary causes, causes depending upon the blessings of God, which is the first cause of all disposing and ordering all things unto goodnesse: for it comes from God that meat doth feed us, and cloathes doe keepe us warme. If hee say unto stones, become bread, they shall feed us, Mat. 4.4. yea, in the want of bread hee can preserve strength for many daies, Exod. 34.28. and 1 King. 19.8. yea, if he speake the word, poyson shall become bread and nourish us: but without his blessing nothing can doe us good: Psal. 127. 1, 2. Except the Lord build the house, they labour in vaine that build it: wee therefore must learne to relie upon Gods providence for a blessing on all our labour and studie, and wait for his blessing in all the meanes wee use for our good and comfort: for he is our life, our health, and preservation.

Right use of temporall blessings.

The order of causes in temporall blessings.

Why God the child of grace daily prayes for pardon.

V. 12 And forgive us our debts, as wee forgive our debters.

I. The Coherence. Christ having taught us in the former petition to pray for temporall blessings, and for grace to rely upon Gods provident dispensation for the things of this life, doth in this petition and the next, direct us to aske spirituall blessings for our selves, to wit, remission of our sins, and strength against temptation: and the reasons of this order is this; Christ makes the former petition a steppe unto these; for a man must rest upon Gods providence for the preservation of his bodie, that will relie upon his mercy for the salvation of his soule: hee that cannot bee perswaded that God will give him bread, will hardly be resolved that hee will forgive him his sinnes.

Where first, we may note what is the faith of worldlings: they doe not trust in God for food, rayment, and other temporall blessings; how then can we say that their faith is found for eternall mercies? Hab. 2.16. Flee that believeth will not make haste, but will stay Gods leasure, waiting for his blessings whereof hee stands in need: But is this the practice of the world? no verily; for let a crosse come, and men will not sticke to use unlawfull meanes for their deliverance: and so they deale, when hope of gaine is offered, making little conscience of fraud, lying, oppression, &c. and so making haste to be rich, they over-runne the provident hand of God, that would lead them by ordinarie lawfull meanes.

Secondly, hence we learne how to enjoy and use all temporall blessings, food, rayment, and such like; namely, as helps and meanes to draw us towards Gods mercy in Christ. Thus did Jacob, Gen. 28. 20, 21. If God will be with mee, and give me bread to eat, and clothes to put on. ---then shall the Lord be my God: Joh. 6. 27. Christ bids those whom he had fed miraculously, when they sought him afterward for outward things, that they should not labour for that food which perisheth, rejoycing thereat, but for that which endureth unto everlasting life; teaching them from bodily care and labour, to that which is heavenly and spirituall.

To come to the petition, wherein wee will handle, first, the necessity of it; then the meaning; and lastly, the uses.

For the first: This petition may seeme to be needlesse; for they that make us Gods children, who have all their sinnes forgiven them, both past, present, and to come. Ans. This indeed must be the daily petition of all Gods children in this world, and the necessity of it is great; for however in the purpose of God, all sinnes are pardoned to true believers; yea, all sinnes past repented of, are so forgiven, that they shall never be againe imputed: yet sinnes present, and to come, are not actually pardoned, till they be repented of. This experience teacheth, for who can feele the assurance of mercy for any sinne committed, before he have repented of it? and though true repentance once had, let us for ever in Gods favour, yet it must bee daily renued for our daily falls, or else we cannot know it to be true. Hence it is, that Paul intreats the Saints of God in Corinth (though they had truly repented at their conversion) to be reconciled unto God, 2 Corinth. 5. 20. meaning, by renuing their repentance. And David was the true childe of God, yet being left unto himselfe, hee fell into two grievous sinnes, wherein hee lay almost a whole yeare without repentance; during all which time, he had not pardon of them actually; for Nathan rebuked him to bring him to repentance, and upon his confession, pronounced them pardoned: yea, and David himselfe afterward, for the fuller assurance of mercy to his soule, most earnestly intreated pardon hereof at the hands of God, Psal. 51. So that this petition is most necessary, as well for actuall pardon of sinnes present, as for the more full assurance of sinnes past.

The meaning. This petition is propounded in the forme of a comparison, which naturally standeth thus; As we forgive our debters, so forgive thou to us our debts: and it hath two parts, a request for pardon, and a reason thereof. Our request for pardon is this; Forgive us our debts. In the word debt is a figurative kinde of speech taken from bargaining, wherein God is resembled to the Creditour. Man is the debter: the Law is the bond or obligation; and sinne is that debt of ours, for which we stand bound to God by the Law, this appeares by this, that in the Evangelists the word sinne and debt are used promiscuously; as Luk. 11. 4. compared with this of Matthew, and Luk. 13. 4. Now sinne makes us debters unto God, not for that we owe it unto him, for wee are bound by the Law to yeeld the contrary obedience; but because upon default of obedience unto God, wherein wee are bound by the Law, wee are bound for our sinnes unto punishment, which is as it were a second debt. Even as a man that is bound in an obligation to another, through default of performing the condition thereof, is bound to pay both the principall and the forfeiture: the punishment of sinne which is eternall death, being that forfeiture whereto wee stand bound before God, for want of obedience which is as it were the principall.

Remission of sinne not our whole justification.

The consideration of this resemblance for which sinne is called a debt, serves to direct us in some points of religion: as first, it confutes their opinion, who hold that our whole justification consists in the remission of sinnes, and that the same is wrought by the shedding of Christs bloud alone: for we owe to God a double debt, first, obedience, and for default thereof we stand bound to punishment: these two debts are different and distinct one from another, and they must be both paid, and Gods justice satisfied either by our selves or by a surety, before wee can be accepted as righteous unto life: Now wee our selves can discharge neither; therefore Christ our suretie must doe both: and so he hath: for our second debt of sinne whereby we stand bound to punishment, Christ discharged by his death and passion, wherein he made his soule a sacrifice for sin; and our debt of obedience in perfect love to God and man, hee also paid to God in fulfilling the law for us: whereupon it is true, c that the righteousnesse of the Law is fulfilled in them which walke not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. But (say they) the Scripture everywhere ascribes our whole redemption and justification to Christs bloud-shedding, and to his death and passion. Ans. Christs bloud-shedding must be considered two wayes: first, as a part of his passion, whereby we are discharged from punishment: secondly, as a part of his obedience, wherein he testified singular love both to God his father, and unto mankind: for in suffering he obeyed, and in obeying hee suffered: now because his bloud-shedding is a part of both, therefore is our whole redemption ascribed thereunto, not excluding, but including his actuall obedience therein, it being a part thereof.

c Rom.8.4.

Secondly, debt in this place betokening sinne as it binales unto punishment, sheweth plainely that sinne and punishment goe alwaies together: and therefore the Popish doctrine is false and erroneous which parteth them asunder, by making some sinnes venniall, not deserving the punishment of death, which is the wages of sinne.

Papists error in 1 Joh.1. sect.3.

Forgivenesse of sinne defended.

Forgive us] This forgivenesse here asked, is a free and full discharge from sinne and the punishment thereof, without any satisfaction on our part: and this God doth, when hee is content for Christs sake, not to impute sinne unto us, but to account it as not committed, and the punishment thereof as not due unto us; being fully and freely contented with the all-sufficient satisfaction made by Christ in his death and passion. This forgivenesse Hezekiah expressed, when he said to God, d Thou hast cast all our sinnes behinde thy backe: and Micheah, saying, e He will subdue our iniquities, and cast all our sinnes into the bottome of the sea. So that our request to God is this, that whereas our sins binde us unto punishment, the Lord would be pleased for his Sonnes sake, freely to remit all our sinnes, and never to impute them unto us, and to be fully contented with the suffering of Christ, that the punishment of our sinnes be never laid upon us.

e Mich.7.19.

Quest. But of what sinnes doe we here aske pardon? Ans. Both of sinnes past and present: for howsoever the child of God hath his sinnes past fully pardoned at once on Gods part, upon his true repentance; yet hee is not able so to receive pardon as God gives it, but must receive it by little and little, and as it were drop by drop: this we may see in David, who had the pardon of his sin pronounced by f Nathan the Prophet; and yet after that he penned the 51. Psal. wherein hee begs mercy and forgivenesse most earnestly for that sinne which God had already pardoned, ayming no doubt at a more full and comfortable assurance of Gods pardon in his owne heart: for this cause also in his old age he prayes for the pardon of the sinnes of his youth, Psal. 25. 7. Againe, here wee pray for the pardon of sinnes present, both that they may bee actually forgiven: and also that our hearts and consciences may be setled in the assurance thereof.

f 2 Sam.12.13.

Wantes to be bewailed. Security in sinne.

The uses. First, by this petition, we are taught to bewayle our carnall security; for naturally we goe on from day to day, in following the pleasures and profits of this world, and never thinke of our debt to God by sinne, till the evill day of death or distresse approach unto us; like to desperate bankrupts that never regard their debt, till the Serjeant be upon their backe. This is that sin which Christ foretold should reigne in the latter dayes, Matth. 24.39. and I appeale to the conscience in the view of all estates and conditions, whether it be not so: for though iniquity doe abound, yet no man saith, what have I done? Jer.8.6. yea, this is the sinne of many professors, for the nature of man is prone to incroach upon Gods favour. But wee must know, that this security cannot stand with this petition: for here we are taught to call to minde our sinnes, every day praying for the pardon of them.

Secondly, here we see whereon we must rely and settle our hearts in all estates, in affliction, temptation, and death it selfe; namely, on the meere mercy of God in Christ, by faith in his bloud for the pardon of our sinnes. Looke to the prayers of all the Saints of God in Scriptures, and wee shall finde that they made this their rocke, and anchor of stay in all distresse; Dan.9.18,19. O Lord, heare and behold,---not for our owne righteousnesse, but for thy great tender mercies: deferre not for thy owne sake, oh my my God. This wee must observe to arme us against the damnable doctrine of the Church of Rome, for they will grant that in his first conversion a man must rely onely on Gods mercy in Christs bloud; but after a man is made the childe of God, he may rest upon his owne good merits, so it be in modesty and sobriety. But this is the right way to hell, flat against this petition: for how can wee dreame of any merit, when as wee must every day aske mercy and forgivenesse? for to aske mercy, and to plead merit, are contraries: now by our daily sinnes we adde debt to debt, and so must still plead mercy and not merit, even after wee are converted and sanctified; ever praising God that hath delivered us from the slavish bondage of that accursed Synagogue.

Bellarm de justif. l.5.c.7.

Daily humiliation.

Thirdly, here we see what wee must doe in respect of our daily sinnes wherein wee fall; wee must not lie in them, but renue our estate by true humiliation and repentance. Also if thou be crossed in the things of this world, the way of comfort and deliverance is to be learned here: for as thou doest daily aske bread, so thou must aske forgivenesse for thy sinnes: and when they are pardoned, thou hast title and interest to all Gods blessings. Now this daily humiliation stands in three things: 1. in examination of our selves for our debt unto God by sinne: 2. in confessing our debt unto our creditour, yeelding our selves into his hands: 3. in humbling our selves unto him, craving pardon and remission earnestly for Christs sake, as for life and death: herein the children of God are presidents unto us: Psal. 32. 5, 6. David in great distresse found no release while hee held his tongue, but when he humbled himselfe, and confessed against himselfe, then he found mercy and ease: whereupon he professeth that he will be a patterne to every godly man for their behaviour in the time of distresse.

Remedy against despaire.

Fourthly, here wee have a notable remedie against despaire, wherewith the devill assaults many a childe of God, when though infirmitie they fall into some grievous sinne, or commit the same sinne often, which greatly wounds the conscience: for here Christ bids us aske forgivenesse of our daily sinnes whatsoever they be, or how often soever committed. And no doubt, he that bids us forgive our brethren that sinne against us, though it were seven times in a day, if they seek it at our hands, will much more forgive us. This must not embolden any to sinne presumptuously, for the Lord hath said, He will not be mercifull unto that man, Deut. 29.19. but if any fall through infirmity, hereon hee hath to stay himselfe from despaire.

1 Joh.1.9.

No man can fulfill the Law.

Fifthly, hereby wee see that no man possibly can fulfill the Law, for the Apostles themselves were commanded to aske pardon of sinne every day: whereby it is plaine they could never fulfill the Law, and therefore much lesse can any other.

Sixthly, that which we pray for we must in all

A godly manner, endevour after. And therefore as we pray for pardon of sinne every day, so must wee daily use the meanes wherein God gives assurance of remission to his children; as heare the Word, receive the Sacraments, and pray unto God publikely and privately: endevouring to resist all temptations, and to glorifie God by new obedience: for it is grosse hypocrisie to aske the pardon of sinne, and still to live in the practise of it.

Forgiveness to be pardoned.

Lastly, here we see we must pray not only for the pardon of our own sins, but of our brethrens also; Forgive us: whereby Christ would teach us to be carefull of the salvation of our brethren and neighbours; the good estate of their soules should be deare and precious unto us: and if this were so, happy would it bee with the Church of God; but alas, men are so farre from care of the salvation of their neighbours, that men of the same family are careless of one anothers soules; masters regard not their servants, nor parents their children: indeed, they will provide for their bodies and outward estate, but for their soules they have no care: wherein they bewray themselves to be cruell and mercilesse, having more care of their hogs and brute beasts, than of their children and servants: for when their hogges have all needfull provision, their children and servants soules shall want instruction.

Were it be careless of the salvation of others.

As wee also forgive our debtors] These words are here propounded as a condition of the former petition; and they include a reason thereof, as Luk. 11.4. Forgive us our sinnes, FOR even we forgive every man that is indebted unto us. And this Christ addeth for weightie causes, even to crosse the fraud and hypocrisie of our corrupt hearts, who would have forgivenesse of God, and yet would not forgive our brethren, nor yet leave off the practice of sinne our selves. But this condition imports, that wee must exercise mercy towards our brethren, and so breake off the course of our sinnes, if we looke for mercy at Gods hands. Now the words here used are comparative, betokening a likelihood and similitude betweene Gods forgiving and ours: which must bee rightly understood, because our forgivenesse is mingled with much corruption through want of mercy: and therefore we must not understand it of the measure of forgivenesse, nor yet of the manner simply, but especially of the very act of forgiving, for therein sometimes must similitudes be restrained; as Mat.9.29. According to your faith be it unto you. And the force of the reason stands in the circumstance, thus; If wee who have but a drop of mercy, doe forgive others; then doe thou who art the fountaine of mercies forgive us: but wee forgive others; therefore doe thou forgive us.

How we forgive.

Touching our forgiving others, three questions must be scanned: 1. How can any man pardon a trespasse, seeing God onely forgiveth sinnes? Ans. In every trespasse which one doth to his neighbour, be two things: the loſſe and damnage whereby man is hindered in body, goods, or name: and an offence againſt God, by a practice of injuſtice againſt his law. Now as a treſpaſſe is a dammage unto man, ſo may a man forgive it; but as it is a ſinne againſt God in the tranſgreſſion of the morall law, ſo God only pardons it: as when a man hath his goods ſtolen, that dammage done to him a man may remit; but the breach of the eighth commandement therein, God onely can forgive.

How farre we are bound to forgive.

I. Queſt. How farre is a man bound to forgive others that treſpaſſe againſt him? Anſw. There is a threefold forgiveneſſe; of revenge, of puniſhment, and of judgement. Forgiveneſſe of revenge is when a man is not deſirous of revenge from an inward grudge, but forbeares to render like for like to thoſe that wrong him: this is principally here meant; for we muſt [a] alwaies forgive our brethren, in reſpect of revenge; for vengeance is mine, ſaith the Lord, and I will repay, Rom. 12.19. Forgiveneſſe of puniſhment is the remitting of that puniſhment which another mans wrong-doing juſtly deſerves: this is not alwayes to be granted, eſpecially in the caſe of offence, which may tend to the publike hurt: for then were the ſtate of magiſtracy unlawfull, whoſe office it is to puniſh offences. The forgiveneſſe of judgement is the remitting of that cenſure which an evill deed doth juſtly deſerve; neither is this here meant, for being lawfully called thereunto, wee may freely cenſure that which is evill done.

How we muſt forgive the obſtinate.

II. Queſt. Whether muſt wee forgive thoſe that wrong us, if they will not confeſſe their fault, nor aske us forgiveneſſe? Anſ. We muſt forgive them freely, in reſpect of revenge. Obj. But it is ſaid, If he repent, forgive him, Luk. 17.3. therefore, unleſſe he repent, we need not to forgive him? Anſ. That place is meant of Eccleſiaſticall cenſures, that thoſe muſt proceed no further, after the party offending doth repent.

How we become debters againſt our neighbours.

Debters. Hereby is not meant ſuch as wee count debters in the civill ſtate; that is, ſuch as owe us money, graine, &c. but any one that doth us injury, or wrong: for no mans eſtate is ſo low, but in ſome degree God hath given one or moe of theſe ſoure things; honour, life, goods, or good name; and he that hinders his neighbour in any of theſe, is a debter before God, and ſo ſtandeth, till he make recompence to the party, and repent towards God: yea, further, wee muſt know that beſides the endammaging of our neighbour in theſe things, the very omiſſion of preſerving and furthering our neighbours life, honour, goods, and good name, makes us alſo debters before God.

These words thus underſtood, muſt be conceived as a reaſon drawne, not from the cauſe, or like example, but from the ſigne and pledge of Gods forgiveneſſe; for God hath made a promiſe to forgive us, if wee forgive our brethren their treſpaſſes, Mark. 11. 25. from whence mercifull men may gather aſſurance of pardon with God, from that inclination to compaſſion and readineſſe, which they finde in their own hearts, to forgive others that wrong them: for Chriſt teacheth them to reaſon thus; If wee be thoſe to whom thou haſt promiſed pardon when they aske it, then Lord pardon us: but we are ſuch, for wee feele our hearts inclined to mercy; therefore Lord pardon us. So that this reaſon ſerves to move us to pray to God for pardon with confidence and aſſurance: yea, further, they include a profeſſion to God of new obedience in amendment of life; for under one duty of mercy towards our neighbour, is comprehended the whole practice of repentance, and the performance of our vow made in baptiſme.

Remiſſion and repentance goe together.

Vſes. I. Marke here, that asking pardon of God, and teſtimony of repentance, goe together: he that receives the one, muſt expreſſe the other: for where God gives pardon, there alſo hee gives grace to repent, and mercy is not granted, but on condition of repentance, Act. 1-37,38. when the Jewes that were pricked in conſcience at Peters Sermon, asked what to doe to find mercy; Peter ſaid, Amend your lives, &c. And therefore when hee perceived want of repentance in Simon Magus, he tels him, [b] Thou art yet in the gall of bitterneſſe, and in the bond of iniquity, though he had formerly baptized him. Whereby we ſee, Firſt, with what affection we muſt come to God, when we pray for the pardon of our ſinnes: namely, with humble and contrite hearts, having a true purpoſe not to ſinne wittingly, and willingly, but to obey God in all his commandements: and the want of this, is the cauſe of that ſmall comfort in prayer, which many finde in themſelves: for the promiſe of pardon is not given, where the condition of repentance is not performed. Secondly, this ſhewes the groſſe and fearefull error of the blind world, who ſing this ſong while they live in ſinne, to their owne hearts; God is mercifull: Chriſt is a Saviour: but thus truſting to Gods mercy they deceive themſelves, for they truſt to nothing; for mercy is not due, where repentance is wanting: nay, the Lord hath ſaid, [c] Hee will not be mercifull to that man that ſhall bleſſe himſelfe in his heart, ſaying, I ſhall have peace though I walke after the ſtubbornneſſe of mine owne heart, &c. Let us therfore ſee to this, that we practiſe repentance, when we pray for pardon; and looke to the purpoſe of our heart againſt ſinne, when wee wait for mercy to our ſoules. Wee may not ſever thoſe things which God hath joyned, but looke how heartily wee deſire mercy, ſo earneſtly muſt we hunger after grace to repent: if wee truly ſeeke both, wee ſhall have both; but if we let ſlip repentance in our felves, wee ſhall come ſhort of mercy with the Lord.

[b] Act. 8.23,7.13.

[c] Deut.29. 19,20.

II. The joyning of this condition, implying repentance, to the petition, and the dependance of it on the former, teacheth us every day to to renue our repentance, and to humble our ſelves for our ſinnes, ſeeking for a new ſupply of grace, that ſo our purpoſe not to ſinne, may bee more and more confirmed in our hearts, which is the infallible ſigne of a new creature.

The practice of true repentance.

III. Here wee ſee wherein the practice of true repentance ſtandeth; namely, in exerciſing mercy, love, peace, reconciliation, and forgiveneſſe: for though forgiveneſſe be onely named, yet under it all other fruits of repentance are underſtood. Indeed to heare the Word, to receive the Sacrament, to preach and pray, be excellent workes; but yet the heart of man may more eaſily diſſemble in them, than in the duties of the ſecond table: the moſt infallible marke of true grace is the practice of the love of God in works of love and mercy to our brethren: 1 Jam. 1.27. Pure religion and undefiled before God, is to viſit the fatherleſſe, &c. Jam. 3. 17. The wiſdome that is from above, is firſt pure, then peaceable, gentle, eaſie to bee intreated, full of mercie and good fruits. And hence it is that love is called the fulfilling of the law, Rom. 13.10.

A true figure of pardon of ſinne.

IV. Chriſt knitting our forgiving our brother with Gods forgiving us, doth here afford unto us a notable ſigne of pardon of ſinne; namely, a ready and willing minde to forgive our brother offending us: our inclination to mercie in ſuppreſſing the deſire of revenge when we are wronged, gives aſſurance to our conſcience that wee ſhall finde mercy at Gods hands: whereby it is plaine, that the childe of God may know his owne eſtate before God, in regard of his mercy in Chriſt, even by deſcending into his owne heart, and there finding the affection of mercy, in forgiving thoſe that have wronged him: and this we muſt labour for, if we would know Gods mercy in Chriſt to belong unto us.

Deſire of revenge muſt be excluded.

V. Hereby wee are admoniſhed to beware in our ſelves, of the common ſin of this age, ingrafted in our nature; to wit, deſire of revenge, ſpite, and grudging upon every occaſion: for when we pray unto God with ſuch malicious hearts, we doe in effect deſire the Lord to exerciſe his wrath, and to revenge his juſtice on us. And undoubtedly, many a man doth fearefully curſe himſelfe in his owne prayers, while hee is cruelly minded towards his brethren; and God oftentimes ſuffers [d] Satan to ſuch cruties moſt deſperately, ſeeing men are ſo cruell to their owne ſoules, to curſe themſelves: and therefore wee had need to looke to our hearts when wee pray to God, that we forgive men, if wee would be forgiven of God.

d Chap.5.23,24. Anſwerable to 1 Pet.3.7.

When we ought to labour to be reconciled with our brethren.

VI. Here note a generall groſſe ſinne in this age: moſt men will ſeeke to be reconciled to their brethren, with whom they are at variance, when they come to the Lords table: but at all other times they take their pleaſure, thinking they may well enough performe all other duties of religion, though they retaine malice and enmity towards their brethren. But here we may obſerve, that we ought to be reconciled with our brethren, whenſoever wee goe to God in prayer: for elſe, if we come in malice and envy towards our brethren, we unite our ſelves and ſinne againſt our owne ſoules. In prayer we bring the ſacrifice of our hearts, and the calves of our lips unto God; but before wee offer it, we muſt reconcile our ſelves unto our brethren, as we heard before.

Mat. 5.23,24. Anſwerable to 1 Pet.3.7.

VII. Here alſo we may ſee the groſſe hypocriſie of our nature: for ſo oft as we make this petition, we make profeſſion of reformation of life in new obedience, (for this one branch of brotherly reconciliation here profeſſed, doth preſuppoſe our converſion from all ſinne, ſith that true repentance for our ſinne, cannot ſtand with a purpoſe to live in any other.) And yet behold, though men ſay this prayer often, yet ſtill they continue in their old ſinnes as in blaſphemy, drunkenneſſe, whoredome, oppreſſion, lying, fraud, &c. as though it were nothing to offlemble with God: but God is not mocked, either amend thy wicked converſation, or leave off to make this holy profeſſion.

Mat. 5.22. Is cruelty.

VIII. In that Chriſt tieth our duty of forgiving our brethren, to ſo weighty a condition, as is our forgiveneſſe with God; hereby he would acquaint us with the horrible cruelty of our nature, and pronenſſe to revenge: we muſt therfore take notice of it, and labour to ſee and to bewaile this corruption of our hearts: and on the other ſide, to hunger after love, mercie, gentleneſſe, meekneſſe, and to endevour to practiſe the ſame continually.

How to get and keepe peace of conſcience.

Laſtly, joyne both parts of this petition together, and they ſhew us a way how to keepe true peace of conſcience for ever; namely, Firſt, wee muſt call upon God for the pardon of our ſinnes every day. Secondly, we muſt follow after peace with men, in the practice of forgiveneſſe and reconciliation when offences grow; for when we are at one with God and man, we have eſtabliſhed peace: and hence will follow peace in our owne hearts, which is that peace which the world cannot give; which while we retaine, wee need not to feare any evill, no not death it ſelfe: for if God be with us, who can be againſt us?

V. 13 And lead us not into temptation: but deliver us from evill.

Coherence.

These words containe the ſixth and laſt petition, which is not needleſſe, as ſome may thinke, but for weighty cauſes fit after all the former, though a man had the fruition of all the graces there deſired: to wit, Firſt, to teach us who they bee that are moſt troubled with temptations: namely, the children of God, that for themſelves to ſeeke his glory, to advance his kingdome, to doe his will, to depend upon his providence, and to relie upon his mercie for the pardon of their ſinnes; theſe of all others are moſt ſubject to temptation; for being escaped out of the Devils snare, hee bestirres himselfe by all possible meanes to bring them in againe: grievous temptations doe always accompany remission of sinne, which is joyned with endevour to glorifie God, as both the Word of God, and Christian experience doe fully witnesse: which must bee well observed, both to stay the minde of those that are deeply humbled through Saints temptations, thinking that they are not the children of God, because they are so troubled with sinne and Satan, when as the case is cleane contrary: for spirituall temptations, if they bee resisted with godly sorrow, are rather a signe of Gods love, because the devils hatred is most toward them whom God loves best; and on whom God shewes mercy, towards them will the devill exercise his malice. As also this discovereth the folly of those, that sooth up themselves in this fond conceit, that God surely loves them, and they are deepe in his favour, because they are freed from temptations; when as indeed they ought rather to suspect themselves to be under the power of Satan: for when the strong man armed keeps the hold, the things that he possesseth are in peace, Luk. 11. 21. whereby is signified, that the wicked of the world being possessed of Satan, are at peace in themselves, in regard of temptations: for what needs hee to trouble them which are already at his command? but let them beginne to repent, and to seeke mercy for their sinnes, with endevour to leave them, and they shall soone finde that Gods favour is not enjoyed without the devils malice.

Secondly, this petition is joyned with the former, to teach us, that as we must be carefull to begge mercy and pardon for our sinnes already past, so we must be watchfull to prevent sinnes to come: he that saith, Forgive us our trespasses, must pray also, not to be led into temptation: and therefore as we would not have our consciences pricked with the sting of our old sinnes, so wee must be carefull we fall not into them againe, neither bee overcome with new temptations.

The meaning. The words themselves containe one onely petition, (though some have thought otherwise) consisting of two parts: the first is the petition it selfe, And lead us not into temptation: the second, is the exposition thereof, But deliver us from evill: for in effect it is thus much, That wee be not led into temptation, deliver us from evill.

Temptations two-fold.

For the first, that we may rightly understand it, we must search out two things: First, what a temptation is: Secondly, what it is to be led into temptation. There be two sorts of temptations, Good, and Evill. I call that a good and holy temptation, when as God tempts a man, and it is an action of God whereby he proveth and trieth man, to make manifest unto man himselfe and unto others, what is in his heart: for God knoweth well enough before

1. Good.

A he trie him. Thus he tempted Abraham by the offering of his sonne, Gen. 22. 1, 2. and the Israelites, by sending false prophets among them. Deut. 13. 3. And in this sense afflictions are called temptations, Jam. 1. 2. because God trieth man by affliction, as gold is tried in the fire: and all these are good, both in respect of the author, which is God, and of the end, which is the good of his servants: Job 23. 10. He knoweth my way and trieth me, and I shall come forth as the gold. An evill temptation is a wicked motion, allurement, or perswasion, whereby man is provoked to sin against God in the transgression of some commandement. Example. When a man is in distresse, he shall finde provocations to impatience, distrust, and murmuring against B God: as also to use unlawfull meanes to helpe himselfe: and in prosperity he shall finde sundry allurements to presume upon Gods mercie in some evill course, to neglect the ordinarie meanes of grace and salvation; as the Word, Prayer, &c. all these and such like, are evill motions, arising partly from our owne corruption, and partly from the suggestion of the devill, who by himselfe, and by his instruments, thus seekes to draw men from their duty to God: and these evill temptations be they, which in this petition we pray against.

2. Evill.

II. Point. What is it to be led into temptation? Ans. A man is led or carried (as the word imports) into temptation, when the temptation possesseth him, and holds him after
C it hath assaulted him: for we must know that in every temptation there be two actions; one of God, whereby in his just judgement he leaves a man to himselfe, or to the malice of Satan: another, of man himselfe, whereby being left of God, hee enters into the middest of the temptation, as it were plunging himselfe into it. For the better conceiving hereof, we must know that a temptation hath foure degrees, by which it proceedeth, till it bring a man unto destruction, unlesse it be cut off; to wit, Suggestion, Delight, Consent and Perfection, Jam. 1. 14, 15. Suggestion is when the minde conceiveth a wicked thought, put in by Satan, or arising from naturall corruption: Delight is when the evill thought conceived, and for a time retained in the minde, descendeth to the heart, and there pleaseth the will, and delighteth the affections: Consent is when the will yeelds to D the evill motion, and the heart resolves to practise it: Perfection is when a sinne is often committed, and by custome becomes as it were ripe, whereupon followes destruction. Now in the first and second of these degrees, a man is said to be tempted onely: for suggestion and delectation doe not defile the heart, but when the will consents, then the temptation takes hold upon him, and possesseth him: and by often practice he is plunged into it, intangled and infnared, and held captive under it. Now then (to apply this to the point in hand) a man is led into temptation, when hee is left of God to

To be led into temptation.

Foure degrees in temptation.

to an evill motion suggested into his minde. So
A as hee gives consent unto it, and goes on to the practice of it. See this in Judas, Joh. 13. 2. Satan cast this evill motion into his heart, Judas betray thy master: this he thought upon, and was delighted with the gaine that he hoped to reape thereby: and here God left him to himselfe for his hypocrisie and other sinnes, and then Satan entred into his heart, got consent of will, and so carried him to the practice of this treason. Hereto also the Apostle seemes to allude, 1 Tim. 6. 9. They that will be rich fall into temptation and snares, being left of God to their corruption in covetousnesse.

But some will say, that Gods owne children have beene thus carried into temptation; as David in the case of his adultery and murther, 2 Sam. 11. and Peter in denying his master, Matth. 26. 70, 74. Answ. It may seeme they were carried into temptation, for their evill motions were not onely received with delight, but consented unto and practised: yea, David
B lay in his sinne almost a whole yeare. But wee must consider, that they were the children of God by adoption and regeneration, and therefore howsoever God left them to be tempted, yet he forsooke them not wholly or finally, but still loved them, so as they were not carried into temptation with full consent of heart: but Gods saving grace remained in them, which when God stirred up, they were recovered by repentance. Indeed they went as farre as they could, and in regard of themselves, farre e-C nough to have cut off their salvation; but that was laid up with God in Christ, for his foundation remaineth sure, and whom he loves, he loves to the end, his gifts and calling are without repentance. So then, to be led into temptation is to be carried into it with full consent, being left of God unto the malice of Satan, and the powerfull working of a mans owne corruptions: and Christs meaning is, as if he had taught us to say thus; O Lord, we are every way subject to temptations, and by our sins we deserve to be left, therein, to the malice of Satan, and to thy power of our owne corruptions, yet we beseech thee not to forsake us in any temptation, but give an happy issue thereto, still upholding us by thy grace.

How God leads into temptation.

Quest. How can God lead a man into temptation, and yet not bee the author of sinne?
D Ans. Well enough: for as temptation is a punishment of sinne, so God may lead a man into it by permission, leaving the party to himselfe, and Satans malice, for some former transgression. Againe, God never puts any evill motion into the minde, but yet hee suffers Satan to doe it, and though the devill be a most wicked instrument, yet such is Gods power and wisdome, that he can use him without sinne, in a good manner, and to a good end.

Bellarm. de justif. l. 3. c. 13.

Vses. 1. This petition serves to confute a grosse error of the Papists, who teach that a man truly justified before God, may finally fall from grace, and bee condemned: as also

The child of God cannot wholly fall from grace.

A the opinion of some Protestants, who though they will not say that the childe of God may finally fall away and perish, yet they hold that hee may wholly fall away for a time, and that every grievous sinne which hee commits, cuts him off totally, till hee doe repent; for looke what the childe of God asketh in prayer, according to Gods will, that shall be granted him: but in this petition he asketh perfect vation from totall and finall apostasie, and that according to Gods will, by the teaching of Christ himselfe, Lead us not into temptation: and therefore it shall be granted. Indeed it stands with the will of God, and the good of his children, that sometime they should be buffeted by Satan in temptation: and therefore we pray not here to be freed from all assaults, but that wee bee not wholly left unto our selves, nor forsaken of God, but so preserved by his grace, that we be not swallowed up in temptation: and this petition being according to Gods will, shall be granted to him that askes in faith, 1 Joh. 5. 14. And hence it is, that he that is once the child of God indeed, shall so remaine for ever, and cannot finally or totally fall away from grace. Davids fall and Peters were great and fearefull, but yet therein, they were not wholly forsaken of God, unlesse it were in their owne feeling for a time.

Object. But David by his two sins became guilty of Gods wrath, and so lost his right of his prerogative in being the childe of God. Answ. If we consider the desert of those sinnes, B that undoubtedly should have beene his ettare; but yet in regard of Gods election and free grace of adoption, wherein God changeth not, as also in regard of the inward seeds of Gods grace in his heart, he remained still the child of God, though the signes of Gods favour were changed into the signes of his anger and displeasure. Ob. But by such sinnes a man loseth the graces which formerly he had. Answ. The graces of God in man are of two sorts; some are necessary to salvation, as faith, hope, and charitie, without which no man can be saved: others be very excellent and profitable, but not of like necessity with the former; as the sense and feeling of Gods love and favour, peace of
C conscience, joy in the holy Ghost, alacrity in prayer, courage and boldnesse with God: and these latter may bee lost, but the necessarie graces cannot, howsoever they may be greatly weakned; for so it was with David, by his fall he lost for a time the feeling of Gods favour, the joy of the Spirit, &c. but faith, hope, and love, were not extinguished, but sore weakned and covered, as fire in the ashes.

2. Vse. Wants to be bewailed.

Here also wee are taught to mourne for the corruption of our nature, whereby we are prone to yeeld up our selves to every temptation of sinne and Satan, and be slacke and negligent in D resisting: wee doe not watch and pray against temptations diligently, nor shunne the occasions of ſinne, as we ought to doe: nay, we offer our ſelves into temptation, and miniſter occaſion unto Satan, and to our owne corruption to aſſault us often. This we ſhall finde to be true in our ſelves, if wee ſearch out thoroughly our owne eſtate; and therefore it ſhould grieve our hearts when wee feele the law of our members rebelling againſt the law of our mindes, and leading us captive unto ſinne.

Christ helping against temptation.

2. Vſe. Grace to be deſired.

Here alſo wee muſt learne to deſire of God all ſuch graces as may helpe us againſt temptation, and they are many: I. Spirituall heed and watchfulnes to prevent temptations, and to avoid the occaſions thereof. II. Grace to pray in the time of temptation, that God would leſſen and moderate the violence and force thereof. III. That in temptation God would be ſo farre from withdrawing his grace from us, that hee would then adde grace to grace, even new grace unto the former. IV. That in the continuance of temptation, when it abideth long upon us, God would ſtrengthen us to hold out. V. That he would give us patience to beare the irkeſomneſſe and burthen of it. VI. That in the end of it, God would give a comfortable iſſue, for his glorie, and our owne good.

4. Vſe. Here alſo we are let to ſee, how great our weakneſſe is, even when wee bee Gods children, and have true grace; for wee muſt daily pray that God would not lead us into temptation: whereby we import, that of our ſelves wee are ſo farre from withſtanding a temptation, that if God ſhould leave us; wee would give up our ſelves as ſlaves unto the Devill. Here then beholde thine eſtate and condition whoſoever thou art, conſidered in thy ſelfe: if God leave thee, thou canſt not ſtand in any temptation, but muſt needs fall into the bondage of Satan: yea, in exceeding great is our weakneſſe in our ſelves, that in temptation there doth ſcarce appeare any difference betweene the child of God and a wicked one; for both are ſubject to the temptation of Satan: nay, the childe of God is uſually more aſſaulted than the wicked: when the evill motion ariſeth, or is ſuggeſted into the minde, the wicked receive it, and delight therein: ſo did David, and ſo doe we all: the wicked give conſent of will, to doe the godly, if God leave them: the wicked fall to practiſe ſinne, and ſo doe the godly, if God keepe backe his grace from them: the wicked lye in ſinne, and ſo doe the godly, till the Lord by grace doe raiſe them up. Where then is the difference? Surely the perſons themſelves doe differ in temptation, for the wicked is carried with violence into ſinne, and without reſiſtance in temptation: but the godly hath ſome reſiſtance in himſelfe; when hee gives conſent to ſinne, the evill that hee doth, hee would not doe; Rom. 7. 19. But the maine difference is Gods grace and mercie, vouchſafed to the childe of God, but denied to the wicked; for if wee eſcape temptation, it is of grace and mercie; if wee ſtand in temptation, and yeeld not to evill ſuggeſtion, if wee deny conſent of will, or bee kept from the practice of ſinne, it is all of grace: and if we be fallen into ſinne, and riſe againe by true repentance, that alſo is Gods ſpeciall grace, without which undoubtedly wee ſhould runne on with the wicked unto deſtruction. Here therefore wee muſt learne to renounce all confidence in our ſelves, and to walke in all humilitie before God, relying wholly upon his grace and mercie in Jeſus Chriſt: we muſt make his arme our ſtrength, and his grace our ſhield, to defend us from temptation. This was David's practiſe, who in all trouble and diſtreſſe had recourſe to God, calling him, his hope, for refuge and deliverer. Pſal. 91. 2, 3. his ſecret or hiding place, who preſerveth him from trouble, and compaſſeth him about with joyfull deliverance. Pſal. 32. 7. and when his enemies increaſed, yet the Lord was his buckler, his glorie, and the lifter up of his head, Pſal. 3. 2, 3. And thus ſhould we reſt upon God, conſidering that if wee receive a good thought, wee can hardly retaine it; and when evill motions come, wee cannot of our ſelves reſiſt them.

Difference between the godly and wicked in temptation.

Satan is limited in his tempting.

5. Vſe. Hence wee alſo learne, that in temptation, Satan can goe no further than God permits him: he could not touch Jobs goods, his children, nor his bodie, till God gave him leave, Job 1. 12. and 2. 6. neither could the Legion of Devils enter into the herd of ſwine, till Chriſt bade them goe: wee therefore muſt bee patient in temptations, and beare them as comming from Gods hand; neither muſt wee feare the Devill overmuch, though he pinch our ſoules by his violent aſſaults, nay, though hee ſhould torment and poſſeſſe our bodies really, for whatſoever he doth, is by Gods permiſſion: only we muſt be carefull to pleaſe God, and to relie on him, who will ſhortly tread Satan under the feet of all his children. Rom. 16. 20.

Mark. 5. 12, 13.

6. Vſe. That which we aske of God in prairer, wee muſt ſincerely endevour after in life; and therefore as we pray to God not to bee carried into temptation, ſo muſt we ſtudie to arme and furniſh our ſelves with grace, that we may bee able to encounter with our ſpirituall enemies, and to withſtand their aſſaults. This is the Apoſtles counſell, Ephe. 6. 11, 12, 13, &c. Put yee on the whole armour of God: that yee may bee able to ſtand againſt the aſſaults of the Devill, &c. then after hee nameth thoſe Chriſtian vertues, which as ſpirituall armour, the childe of God muſt take unto him, and arme his ſoule withall, if hee would perſevere in grace unto the end. The firſt part of this armour, is truth or veritie, wherewith the loynes muſt bee girt about: and this is an excellent grace, whereby a man profeſſeth true religion, and endevoureth himſelfe in the practice of all the duties of religion in ſinceritie, his ſpeeches and his actions are ſutable proceeding from an honeſt heart, heart, that truly meaneth whatſoever the tongue uttereth, or the members of the bodie doth practiſe. The ſecond part is juſtice, or righteouſneſſe, when a man leads his life ſo unblameably and uprightly, that hee can truly ſay with the Apoſtle Paul, I know nothing by my ſelfe, Corinth. 4. 4. Indeed the beſt Chriſtian hath his faults and fals, but yet hee muſt not live in known ſinnes; for then hee cannot ſay, I know nothing by my ſelfe. The third is the preparation of the Goſpell of peace, wherewith the feet muſt be ſhod. By Goſpell of peace is meant the glad tydings of ſalvation by Chriſt revealed in the Goſpell, which promiſeth pardon of ſinne, and life everlaſting by Chriſt, and commanderh us by way of thankfulneſſe, to deny our ſelves, to take up our croſſe, and to follow Chriſt: now when wee finde our affections thus cleaving unto Chriſt, though it bee through tribulation, then have we put upon our feet this ſpirituall furniture. The fourth is the ſhield of faith, by which a man layes hold on the mercie of God in Chriſt for his ſalvation, and under it ſhrowds himſelfe againſt the firie darts of Satan. The fifth is hope, by which we wait for that ſalvation which we apprehend by faith. The ſixth is the word of God, which wee muſt make a rule & ſquare to all our thoughts, words, and deeds, ſeeking to ſubdue thereby all contrarie motions that would take place in our hearts. The laſt is prayer, whereby we betake our ſelves to God in all eſtates, craving mercie for the pardon of our ſinnes, and ſtrength of grace to reſiſt temptation, and an happie deliverance out of the middeſt of it. And he that can take to himſelfe theſe excellent vertues, and put upon him this complete armour of Chriſtianitie, is ready and fit to meet with any temptation whatſoever; and howſoever he may be aſſaulted, yet he cannot be overcome, neither ſhall the gates of hell ever prevaile againſt him to hinder his ſalvation.

Evill compaſſeth us on all ſides in all temptations.

But deliver us from evill.

Theſe words containe the ſecond part of this petition, which is added as an expoſition of the former: for then are wee not lead into temptation, when God delivers us from it, giving ſtrength to withſtand, and a good iſſue out of it.

The meaning. Some thinke, that by evill here is meant Satan only, that evill one, as he is called, Matth. 13. 13. But we are to inlarge it further, to comprehend all our ſpirituall enemies: for firſt, this title evill, is not only given to Satan, but to ſinne alſo, Rom. 12. 9. Let us abhorre that which is evill: 1 Pet. 3. 11. Eſchew evill. And to the world: 1 Joh. 5. 19. The whole world lieth in evill: Gal. 1. 4. Chriſt gave himſelfe, to deliver us from this preſent evill world. And to the fleſh: that is, the corruption of our nature, for that is the evill treaſure of the heart, Matth. 12. 35. Secondly, that advantage which the Devill hath againſt us, is by the world, the fleſh, and ſinne; and therefore with that wicked one the Devill, ſinne, the world, and the fleſh muſt bee underſtood. Indeed the Devill is our maine and principall evill, that great Tempter againſt whom we pray chiefly: but yet we alſo pray againſt ſinne, the fleſh, and the world, becauſe they are Satans agents and inſtruments in temptation againſt us. We pray not to be delivered from Satans preſence, for that is not poſſible, while we live in this vale of teares, where the Devill is a Prince, with an infinite multitude of wicked ſpirits, all which beſtire themſelves to get advantage againſt Gods childe; neither is his preſence ſo dangerous, though it were viſible. But here we have a greater matter in hand which we pray againſt, even Satans ſleights and policies which he exerciſeth againſt Gods children, for their ruine and deſtruction: they indeed are many, but here I will propound ſix moſt dangerous policies of Satan, which wee are to watch againſt.

I. Policie. When men have many good things in them, as knowledge in the myſterie of ſalvation, beſide other morall vertues, as temperance, juſtice, &c. then the Devill labours that concupiſcence may ſtill reigne in their hearts, by their lying and living in ſome one ſinne or other, whereto they are naturally inclined. Cain no doubt was brought up in the knowledge and ſervice of God, as well as Abel; for he offered ſacrifice unto God (though not with the like truth of heart that Abel did) but herewithall the Devill ſo wrought, that the horrible ſinne of hatred and malice ſhould poſſeſſe his heart, which brought him to kill his brother, and ſo to deſtruction: ſo Judas no doubt had excellent gifts of wiſdome and providence, and therefore among all the Diſciples hee was made as it were the Steward of our Saviour Chriſts family; hee had queſtionleſſe much knowledge, and his carriage was ſuch in his profeſſion, that the Diſciples knew not hee ſhould be the Traitor, but everie one was afraid of himſelfe, when our Saviour Chriſt ſaid, One of you ſhall betray me, Joh. 13. 22. yet for all this, the Devill ſo wrought in his heart, that the concupiſcence of covetouſneſſe ſhould reigne in him, which moved him to betray his Maſter, and ſo brought him to perdition. And this courſe Satan holds to this preſent day in the boſome of the Church of God; he labours by might and maine to hold the profeſſors of religion in ſome one ſinne or other: and therefore we muſt alwayes pray, as here wee are taught, that this naturall concupiſcence may bee daily mortified and made weake, ſo as it bul not forth in any branch of ſinne reigning in us.

II. Policie. When Satan cannot procure ſome groſſe corruption to reigne in the childe of God, then he labours to get him to commit ſome offence and ſinne, whereby the name of God may bee diſhonoured, his profeſſion diſgraced, his conſcience wounded, and Gods children offended. Thus he dealt with David in his sinnes of adulterie and murther, 2 Sam. 11. and chap. 12.9. and with Peter in the deniall of his Master, Matth. 26.74. We therefore must pray according to this petition, that wee may [a] be sanctified wholy in our soule, and that our whole spirit, and soule, and body, may be kept blamelesse unto the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ: and that [b] our hearts may bee established in everie good word and worke: God delivering us from everie evill worke, and preserving us unto his heavenly Kingdome, 2 Tim. 4.18.

[b] 2 Thess. 2.17.

III. Policie. When the childe of God is fallen into any sinne, then the Devill labours to cast him asleepe therein, that hee might lye in it without remorse, and so never repent of it: thus hee dealt with David, who lay in his sinne of adulterie and murther without repentance, one whole yeare almost: and thus he hath dealt with the nation of the Jewes, blinding their eyes and hardening their hearts, from the knowledge of the Messias, whom they crucified, even unto this day: and thus hee dealeth with many Christians in the Church of God. In regard whereof, wee must pray in temptation as David did, that hee would not forsake us overlong, Psal. 119. 8. but though in justice hee may leave us to our selves for a time, yet hee would please to renew his mercies towards us, and repaire us by his grace.

IV. Policie. When the Lord vouchsafeth to men the meanes of salvation, as the Word and Sacraments, and chastisements for sinne, then Satan labours to make the same void and of none effect, that so they may not only misse of salvation, but bee condemned more deeply for the neglect and contempt of the meanes vouchsafed unto them: this Paul knew well, and therefore he sent Timothy to the Thessalonians, to know their faith, lest the Tempter had tempted them, and so their labour upon them had been in vaine, 1 Thess. 3.5. For this cause he is called that evill one, who steales away the seed of the word from our their hearts, Matth. 13. 19. and that envyous man who soweth tares among the seed, v. 28. Here therefore we must pray against this practice of Satan, that as the Lord vouchsafeth the meanes of grace unto us, so he would give his blessing withall, that they may be profitable unto us: for without this, the meanes will turne to our deeper judgement.

V. Policie. When he cannot worke his will in then soules inwardly, as he desires, then hee afflicts to doe them mischiefe by some outward Satanicall operations: as possession, witchcraft, or striking their bodies with strange diseases, or abusing their dwelling places with fearefull noises and apparitions: thus hee plagued [c] Iob in his goods, and in his body, when hee could not prevaile against his soule: and when hee could not prevaile against Christ by temptation, than he vexed him by transportation, Matt. 4.5, 8. and thus hee bound a daughter of Abraham eighteene yeares, Luk. 13. 16. Here therefore we pray for the comfort of Gods providence, and for the presence and assistance of the good Angels, that we may be preserved, though not from temptations inward in minde, yet from such bodily and outward abuses and injuries, as the Devill would inflict upon us: for herein he is curbed and restrained ordinarily, in respect of that malice and crueltie which hee beares to the children of God: wherupon (I take it) the childe of God may lawfully pray against all outward crosses and afflictions, so farre forth as they are evill, and proceed from that evill one, the Devill: for this is Gods promise to the godly person, Psal. 91.10. There shall none evill come unto thee, neither shall any plague come neere thy Tabernacle; that is, so far forth as it is evill: for otherwayes it is most true, that many are the troubles of the righteous, because it is many times good for them to bee afflicted, Psal. 119. 71.

How far we may pray against crosses.

Psal. 34.19.

VI. Policie. Lastly, Satan labours to bring Gods children to some fearefull and miserable end; not so much for the bodily death, as in regard of the inward horror and terror of conscience; for though he seldome spares any man, yet he referves the extremitie of his power and malice to mans last gaspe. Indeed hee is many times restrained, so as many a childe of God can say at his end, in despite of Satan, [d] Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace: but where he is not restrained, there hee labours to bring men either to presumption, or despaire. Here therefore wee are taught, to pray to God for a good and comfortable death in the Lord, and that wee may be so preserved therein, and inabled by grace, that our end may neither bee evill to our selves, nor in appearance; but that wee may have both time and grace to prepare our selves, so as though our death bee never so sudden, yet we be not unprepared: for though sudden death be verie uncomfortable, yet is it never dangerous to him that is ready for the Lord: but the unprepared death is the plague of plagues; for after it there is no time nor meanes allowed unto man to alter the state of his soule, Eccles. 9.10.

[d] Luk. 2. 29.

Pray for a comfortable death.

Vses. 1. That which we here pray for, wee must endevour to practise; and therefore our speciall care must be to resist the Devill, and to keepe our selves from the assaults of Satan unto sinne, whether they come from our owne corruption, or from this evill world: 1 Joh. 5. 18. He that is borne of God sinneth not, but keepeth himselfe that the wicked one toucheth him not. This we see may be done, and it is a notable signe of our adoption and regeneration: now the way to doe it, is set downe by the Apostle Paul, 1 Tim. 1. 18, 19. Fights the good fight: which hee expounds in the words following, which prescribe two duties; having faith and a good conscience. To have faith is to hold and maintaine true religion in life and death, renouncing all heresie whatsoever, whether of Jewes, Turkes, Papists, or any other: which, whosoever would doe, must not con-content himselfe with a shew of godlinesse in profession, but must get the power of religion fast rooted in his heart, which he must expresse in his conversation. And for this end these rules must be remembred: First, we must have in our hearts sincere love to God in Christ, and to his Church, and true religion: Christ must have the chiefe place in our hearts, and our love to God in him must be so strong, that it must overwhelme all other affections, so as wee may truly say with Paul, I count all things losse, and doe iudge them to bee dung, that I might win Christ: and this must be the order of our love, wee must love God and Christ for themselves, and the Church of God, and true religion, for Gods sake. Secondly, wee must not only know and believe that Christ died for our sinnes, and rose again for our justification; but we must labour to feele the power and efficacie of his death, killing sinne in us, and the vertue of his resurrection, raising us up to newnesse of life: he that hath only a shew of religion, may make profession of faith in Christs death and resurrection; but herein stands the power, when wee bee made conformable unto his death, in regard of the death of sinne, and know the vertue of his resurrection, by our holy endevour in new obedience, and doe frame our selves to his example in all such things wherein he left himselfe a patterne unto us. Thirdly, wee must not content our selves to know and professe that God is mercifull, but withall wee must take observation of his loving favour towards us particularly, adding one observation to another, that so our hearts may bee rooted and grounded in the love of God. A man may make profession of Gods grace and mercie, from a meere generall conceit and apprehension of it in his braine; but herein stands the power and pith of true religion, when a man by observation and experience in himselfe, knowes the love of God in Christ towards him. And thus is faith and true religion held and maintained.

To have a good conscience (which is the second dutie in this Christian fight) is to preserve and keepe our conscience so, as it may excuse us, and not accuse us unto God, in respect of living in any sinne, how soever there may bee infirmities in us: to this end wee must observe these rules:

First, wee must have a double calling: the generall calling of a Christian, wherein we must serve God; and a particular calling, according to our place and gifts, wherein wee must exercise our selves for the good of men. These two must not bee severed, so as either bee wanting: but hee that would keepe a good conscience, must practise his generall calling in doing the duties of his particular calling: it is an easie thing to professe Christianitie in the Church, and many a man doth so, that keepes no good conscience in his private calling at home: but this is the evidence of a good conscience, when a man shewes himselfe a Christian in his calling at home, and conscionable among his brethren.

Secondly, wee must always bee exercised in doing some good duties, either of our generall or particular calling, or in some commendable furtherance thereunto: for idlenesse is the Devills pillow, whereon men either ploe or devise some evill, or are lulled asleepe in Security: but diligence in our calling is our way, wherein we have promise of protection by Gods Angels from the Devill, Psal. 91.11. but if wee bee out of our calling, wee lye open to the hurt of the enemie: when Peter without warrant from his calling, generall or particular, would needs goe warme himselfe in Caiphas hall, what fell out? upon a small assault by a silly Maid, hee denied Christ in most fearefull manner, Joh. 18. 25, 26.

Idlenesse Satans pillow.

Thirdly, in every estate of life wee must labour to see a speciall providence of God, and therein to rest contented, bee it better or bee it worse. It is an easie thing to see and acknowledge Gods mercie in health, peace, and plentie, and to rest contented therewith: but if wee would have peace towards God in our owne hearts, wee must labour to quiet our selves with his disposing hand in the day of trouble, sicknesse, or any other distresse of life or death.

Fourthly, whatsoever wee would doe when we die, that we must now begin, and continue doing it every day while we live; to wit, repent of our daily sinnes and leave them, desire earnestly to be reconciled to God in Christ, and stedfastly to believe all his gracious promises: he that hath these graces shall die in peace; and therefore if we would live in the peace of conscience, we must labour for them every day.

Fifthly, in all societies and converſings with men, we must be carefull either to doe good unto them, or to receive good from them: for where neither of these is, there Satan shewes his presence, and therefore we must shunne such company as give themselves to plot or practise some iniquity: for evill converſings corrupt good manners.

How wee must keepe company.

Sixthly, we must lead our lives, not after our owne fancie, but according to the rule of Gods Word: we must live by faith, and not by sight: when we see no signes of Gods favour, but rather of his anger and indignation, yet then must we trust in him, and relie upon his mercy: this is against reason, yet a worke of faith, which is the evidence of things which are not seene; Heb. 11.1.

2. Vse. If we pray God to deliver us from evill, then we must beware of all Satanicall practices, as meanes of helpe in any distresse: this is grosse hypocrisie, to pray against the evils of Satan, and to give our selves to the practice of them: herein many offend; for the Papists say this prayer, but yet their religion in many things is a grosse practice of magicke and forcery: for first, the consecration of their host in the masse masse is plaine conjuration: and so are their exorcismes in hallowing salt, bread, and water, their calling out of devils by certaine words, by the signe of the crosse, the application of reliques, and such like: nay, come to our selves, what is more common among us than to use charmes and amulets, to seeke to witches and sorcerers when any strange affliction doth befall us? And the setting of a figure though it be not grosse magicke, yet therein is a close and privy worke of the devill, his hand is deepe therein: and the Church in former times hath condemned it for witchcraft: for charmes, characters, and amulets bee but the devils watchword and sacraments to set him a working: what though the words used be good, yet therein is Satans deeper policie, who turnes himselfe into an Angel of light, under faire shewes working the greatest mischiefe. But what horrible impiety is this: that when God gives us occasion to come unto him, we leave him and runne for helpe to his professed enemies.

2 Cor. 11. 14.

Vses. Inuented by the Papists and to be shunned.

2. Vse. This branch of the petition serveth to direct us what to doe in this case: say that a dwelling house, or some other place is by Gods permission, haunted and abused by some evill spirit, whether may a man lawfully frequent, or abide in such a place? Answ. By this petition its plaine he may not; for here we pray to be delivered from evill, and therefore wee may not voluntarily thrust our selves into such a place as is haunted by the devill: would we come within the compasse of the lyons paw, or within the chaine of a mad dog, or a hunger-bitten beare? why then should we rashly thrust our selves into the danger of the devill, who like a roaring lyon seeks continually whom he may devoure. Many ignorant people are so bold-hardy, that they will rayle upon and defie the Devill, and command him to be gone. But without a calling thereunto, wee may not so doe. Indeed, if by Gods providence wee be called to live in such places necessarily, then this wee may doe, wee must not reason with the Devill, but betake our selves to God by humble and earnest prayer, and complaine of Satans vexation, making God our shelter and defence both for soule and body: else if wee presume to meddle with him without a calling from God, we may justly be foiled and abused by him, (as the sonnes of Sceva were) because we have no promise from the Lord to be protected from him.

Act. 19. 13. 16.

For thine is the kingdome, and the power, and the glorie, for ever: Amen.

These words containe the reason of the former six petitions: touching which we must observe two things in generall: first, that they are not a reason to move God whose will is unchangeable: but to perswade the childe of God that prayeth thus, that God will grant his requests. Secondly, that this reason is not peculiar to the last petition, but generally belonging to them all: as, Hallowed be thy name, because thine is the kingdome, power, and glory: and so for the rest.

Why Gods glory comes in plaine.

The meaning. Kingdome. This large imports three things: First, that he is all sufficient of himselfe to doe all things whatsoever, needing no helpe nor instrument beside his soveraigne will: Gen. 17. 1. I am God all-sufficient. Secondly, that hee hath a soveraigne right and title to all things in heaven and earth, as a King hath to those which belong to his territories and jurisdiction. Thirdly, that hee hath soveraigne rule and authoritie over all things in heaven and earth, governing them as hee pleaseth, and bringing them into an absolute subjection.

Gods Kingdome twofold.

Further, the kingdome of God is twofold: The kingdome of his providence, whereby hee rules and governs all things in heaven and earth, even the Devill and all his angels and instruments: and the kingdome of grace, whereby he governes his Church by his Word and Spirit: and both these are here to be understood. Thine. The Kingdome is here called Gods, for two causes: First, to shew that God hath his Kingdome of himselfe and from himselfe alone: thus the Kingdome of grace and of providence are both his. Secondly, to distinguish God from earthly kings: for though they have a kingdome, power, and glory, as Daniel tells Nebuchadnezzar; yet they have all these from God, not of themselves: but God hath them of himselfe, and not from any other.

Now because our nature is blinde in the things of God, I will here propound some reasons to prove that God hath such a soveraigne Kingdome, as also to shew the excellency of it: First, this appeares by that excellent order which God hath set in all his workes by their creation: for how tirly doe times and seasons, as spring-time and summer, autumne and winter succeed one another? how sweetly doe the heavenly creatures, the sunne, moone, and starres serve for the creatures here below, as herbs and plants, how doe these serve for beasts and fowles? and all of them for the use of man: as this proves against the Atheist that there is a God, so it shewes the soveraignty and most wise regiment of his Kingdome. When a man sees a great army in good array, and every one keeping his place and standing constantly, he will presently commend the wisdome and authority of the leader: why then should wee not acknowledge the power and soveraignty of the almighty, in that constant station of the creatures in that sweet order which they observe from the creation?

Secondly, the terror and accusation of a guilty conscience doth argue evidently the absolute soveraignty of Gods Kingdome: for when a man hath committed some grievous sinne, either against the law of Nature, or the written Word of God, though it be so secretly that no man man know of it, yet will his conscience accuse and fright him; which it would not doe, unlesse he were to answer for that fact to God the soveraigne Lord of all.

Thirdly, men of death, that is, such as by some notorious crime deserve death, though through the ignorance or negligence of Magistrates they be let to escape, yet ordinarily they are overtaken with some fearefull judgement, and one way or other meet with their desert: which is a speciall worke of Gods soveraigne providence.

Fourthly, the Gospell preached is as contrary to mans corrupt nature, as fire is to water; and yet hath it in all ages wonne men unto it, to professe it, and to love it so, as they have beene content for the Gospels sake, to forsake house and lands, wife and children, yea and life it selfe. This no word of man could ever doe, and therefore it argues plainely, that some supernaturall power worketh with it, which drawes the heart of man unto it.

Here some may say, that the devill hath a kingdome contrary to Gods kingdome, wherein he reigneth; and therefore Gods kingdome is not absolute. Answ. If we regard the malice of Satan, or the practice of the wicked, it may seeme Gods kingdome should not be absolute, because they continually rebell against his revealed will: but consider the power of God, which overruleth Satan and all his instruments, disposing most wisely of all their workes, to his owne glory, the good of his Church, and their owne ruine, and then we shall plainely see that God ruleth over all: for howsoever the devill and his angels, and all other his instruments oppose themselves unto the word of God, which is the law of his kingdome of grace, yet God willingly permits all such workes, and restrains them all at his pleasure; so as that which comes to passe against Gods revealed will, is not contrary to his absolute will.

Gods power.

Thine is the power By power is meant an ability in God whereby he can doe whatsoever he will, and more than he will doe: for the better conceiving of it, notethese two things: First, that God is not only powerfull, but even power it selfe in regard of his nature, as hee is goodnesse and wisdome, &c. Men and Angels are called powerfull, as receiving power from God; but God onely is power it selfe, because his nature is infinite in power, as in all other properties. Secondly, that power and will in God are one and the same: for our better conceiving of them, they may bee distinguished, but in themselves they differ not: for Gods willing of a thing, is the effecting and doing of it. It is not so in us: for we will many things which we cannot doe: but whatsoever God willeth, that he doth; and that which he cannot doe, he cannot will. The Scripture saith, God cannot lie, nor deny himselfe, nor die, &c. now as hee cannot doe these things, so neither can hee will them: for they are no workes of power, but of weaknesse and frailty; and therefore is God omnipotent, because hee can neither doe nor will the same: Thine is, &c. Here also we say, Gods power is his owne, that is, of himselfe alone, not received from any other, as is also said of kingdome, and glory, to distinguish the true God from all creatures who have not power, and kingdome, and glory of themselves, but from God; whereas all these are of himself e alone.

Gods glory.

And the glory By glory is meant excellencie and majesty: and this property rightly ariseth from the two former; for seeing he hath an absolute soveraignty over all things, and power answerable to dispose and governe them at his pleasure; therefore of right all glory, and majesty, and excellency belongs unto him: yea, the glory of all creatures is from him: so that sinfull man must say with Daniel, Unto us belongs shame and confusion, Dan. 9. 7. but unto God be honour, and glory, and power, and dominion for evermore.

A ground of trust in God.

The use. I. This reason thus conceived and understood, containes a notable ground of trust and confidence in God, and of prayer to God in all distresse of life and death: for we have a father, whose is kingdome, power, and glory now his power assures us that he is able to helpe us: and is he our King, and we his subjects? then he is willing to helpe us. Is glory his? why, what can make more for his glory, than to shew mercy to his people, in hearing their prayers, and helping them in distresse? Psal. 50. 15. I will heare thee, and thou shalt glorifie my name.

II. These words are a notable forme of giving thanks and prayse to God: for when the heavenly creatures are said to give thanks to God, they doe it to this effect; Rev. 4. 9, 11. Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive honour, and glory, and power. Againe, Phil. 4. 6. Be distrustfull in nothing, but in all things let your requests be made knowne to God with giving of thankes; where wee see prayer and thanksgiving must goe together. Now this being a perfect forme of prayer, must needs comprehend thanksgiving with petitions, as therefore in the six petitions, Christ taught us to aske all needfull things of God; so in this reason he teacheth us how to give thankes: for these three, kingdome, power, and glory, doe generally comprehend all matter of prayse and thanksgiving unto God: yea, it is the summe of all the Psalms of praise: and therefore when David blessed God, it was to this effect, 1 Chron. 29. 11, 12. Thine, O Lord, is greatnesse, and power, and glory, and victory, and prayse: for all that is in heaven and earth is thine: thine is the kingdome, O Lord, and thou exceliest as head over all: both riches and honour come from thee, and thou reignest over all: and in thine hand is power and strength, &c.

We must be frequent in prayying God.

This point well observed, directeth us in two Christian duties: first, that wee must be earnest and frequent in giving praise and thanks to God: for the first thing wee aske, is grace to glorifie Gods name, and the last thing we here doe, is to ascribe glorie to God indeed. Secondly, here we see in what manner we must give thanks to God, namely, in every blessing we must ascribe kingdome, and power, and glory unto God: as in the use of meat and drinke, first, therein labour to see, and accordingly to ascribe the kingdome to God: that is, acknowledge Gods soveraignty in that creature: that the right and interest thereto belongs to God, and that thou hast it from him, and not of thy selfe. Secondly, see and acknowledge the power and providence of God in that creature: his providence in that thou hast it; and his power, in that it serves for thy good and comfort, in thy nourishment and refreshing. Thirdly, when thou art comforted therewith, give honour and glory to God, so that thou be truly thankfull. And thus must we be still full to God for his Word, and all other blessings that wee enjoy. Yea, this direction must we observe for our behaviour in affliction: we must labour to see and acknowledge Gods soveraignty and power over us as we are his creatures, and that hee hath right to dispose of us at his pleasure, and therefore we must humble our selves under his hand, desiring grace so to behave our selves therein, that we may glorifie his name. And thus shall we honour God even in affliction.

How to praise God.

How to obtaine our requests in prayer.

III. Here we see a way whereby wee may obtaine the things we aske of God: namely, we must confesse our owne unworthinesse, taking shame and confusion to our selves, and give all praise, and honour, and glory to God. Thus did Iacob, Gen. 32. 10. I am not worthy of the least of all thy mercies, and of all the truth which thou hast shewed unto thy servant: so, Dan. 9. 7. To thee, O Lord, belongeth righteousnesse, but unto us open shame. And thus continuing in humilitie of heart, renouncing our selves and all that wee can doe, and endevouring to give all glory to God, wee shall finde mercy with the Lord for the obtaining of all our requests.

IV. Is kingdome, power, and glory Gods? then he is to be feared above all creatures: for how soever Satan and earthly Monarchs have dominion and power, yet it is not of themselves, but from God: they can doe nothing but by power and permission from God, but God of himselfe can punish and destroy.

Lastly, hereby wee must be moved to love God, and to yeeld obedience unto him in all good duties: for to such will he shew his soveraignty and power for all good things, that so they may give the glory of all to God that gives them.

Amen. We have heard the preface, and the petitions of this prayer: now we come to the third part of it, which is the Conclusion, in this word, Amen: which is as much as verily, truly. It is commonly taken to bee a word of wishing in this place, importing as much as, So be it, I wish it to be so, or such like. But we must know, that it hath here a further use, to wit, not onely to expresse our desire of the things wee aske, but also to testifie our faith in assurance of receiving them according to our desire: for so it is usually taken in the new Testament, where it is used to affirme or assever a thing with vehemency and certainty. Againe, our Saviour Christ giving both direction and incouragement to prayer: saith thus, Whatsoever you desire when ye pray, beleeve that ye shall have it, and it shall be done unto you, Mark. 11. 24. where hee shewes two principall things required in prayer: the first, an earnest desire of the grace and blessing we aske: the second, is faith whereby wee beleeve that God will grant us the things we aske. Now our desires were sufficiently expressed in the six petitions: and therefore, this being a perfect platforme of prayer, here undoubtedly is propounded the testification of our faith, to this effect: As we have craved these things at thy hands, O Lord, so doe we beleeve that in thy good time thou wilt for Christs sake, grant the same unto us. So that it is not here to be taken, as it is commonly, onely for a bare assent of the people answering the Minister in the congregation; but for a part of the prayer both to Minister and people that pray in faith, whether publikely or privately: and that so much more excellent than the former, by how much our faith excelleth our desire: yea, it is the seale of our hearts, which wee must set to every petition, for to ratifie and confirme the same unto our selves; as when we say, Hallowed be thy name, our hearts must say, Amen: that is, as I desire grace to glorifie thy name, so I beleeve Lord, thou wilt enable me thereunto: and so for the rest.

An Amen, what it signifies here.

Pardon of sinne must be beleeved particularly.

Concil. Trid. sess. 6. c. 9. & can. 14.

The use. I. From the union of this word with the petitions, we learne, that every childe of God must beleeve, particularly and certainly the pardon of his owne sinnes, and endevour by grace to attaine thereunto, if as yet hee cannot be perswaded of it. This the Papists deny, teaching that a man must onely beleeve in generall, that remission of sinnes belongs to Gods Church, and hope well for himselfe; and they make it presumption for a man to arrogate particular certainty unto himselfe. But it is no presumption, because wee must beleeve to receive from God, that wee aske according to his will: now God bids us aske forgivenesse of our particular sinnes, and therefore we must beleeve it, and so by faith, may be assured of it: as for their generall faith, it differeth not from the faith of devils; for they beleeve there is remission of sinnes in Gods Church. And to say we hope well when we are not assured by faith, is to be way both ignorance and negligence in the matter of our salvation: for faith is the ground of things hoped for, and therefore their hope without faith must needs be a blinde presumption. And here further we may note, that by their opinion they abolish a great part of the Gospell; for with the gracious promises of promises of mercy in Christ made therein, the Gospell commandeth every penitent person that beleeveth, to apply the same promises particularly to himselfe; and this part of it they cut off, and so deprive the childe of God of all true comfort.

Prayer in a knowne tongue.

II. This testification of our faith joyned to our requests, shewes that all prayer ought to be made in a knowne tongue, for else the assent and affiance of the heart cannot be given together. Ob. The word here used is an Hebrew word, which was unknowne to the Greeke Churches, now if one word of maine use in prayer, may be in an unknowne tongue, why may not many, and so a whole prayer. Ans. Though this word Amen be Hebrew, yet by use it became as familiar and well knowne in the Greeke Church, and so in other Churches, as any word in their owne dialect; as many Latine words (as Nisi prius, and other termes of law) by common use, become familiar and well knowne in our English tongue.

The use of the Lords Prayer.

The principall use of prayer is, to be a patterne and direction whereby the Church of God, and every member of it, may frame their prayers to God on any occasion. And because many through ignorance faile in this point, therefore I will stand somewhat to shew how the Lords prayer must be made a patterne to our prayers. For this end we must apply the severall petitions of this prayer, both to the speciall times of prayer, as morning and evening; and also to the speciall occasions whereupon we pray: which may be reduced to some of these three, to wit: 1. some weighty businesse we have in hand: 2. some affliction we are in, or in danger of: 3. or in regard of death.

How to make the Lords prayer a patterne in praying.

For morning prayer.

Now to apply the petitions to each of these severally: I. In the morning. A fit prayer for that time, before we set upon the duties of our calling, may thus be framed from these petitions: 1. we must desire the Lord to give us grace to seeke the advancement of his glory that day following, in the duties of our calling, and in every thing we take in hand. 2. that hee would rule in our hearts by his grace, and guide us by his word that whole day. 3. enable us to doe his will that day and not our owne, even with readinesse and delight. 4. strengthen us to depend upon his providence that day for all things needfull for this life, 5. that hee would humble us in our selves for our sinnes, and give us repentance for them, and pardon in Christ Jesus, that so no judgement light upon us for them, and that our hearts may be inclined to love and mercy towards our brethren, as we desire mercy with God for our owne soules. 6. that God would strengthen us against temptation, that neither the world, the flesh, nor the devil prevaile against us. And of all these wee must gather assurance, because all soveraignty, and power, and glory, belongs to God.

Evening prayer.

II. At evening also, wee may fitly apply these petitions for the comfortable commending of our selves to God that night: 1. interesting God to blesse our rest unto us, that thereby we may bee fitter to glorifie God. 2. That wee may rest and sleepe safely as his true subjects, under his gracious regiment. 3. That we may doe his will as well in rest as in labour, in the night and secretly, as in the day and light of men. 4. That he would blesse our rest and sleepe, that it may comfortably serve for the preservation of our lives. 5. That he would forgive the sinnes of the day past, that so no curse, terrour, nor feare meet with us for them the night following. 6. That hee would keepe us in our rest from all sinnefull lusts, from all wicked motions and suggestions either waking or sleeping.

How to pray in weighty affaires.

III. When we enterprise any weighty matter or businesse of our calling, wee may fitly apply these petitions in prayer to God for ability and good successe therein: for whatsoever we take in hand, we must doe it in the name of the Lord: 1. We must pray that in this whole businesse our hearts may be set sincerely to seeke the advancement of Gods glory. 2. That the Lord would vouchsafe to guide and governe us in doing the worke whatsoever it be. 3. That in doing of it, we may make conscience to doe the will of God, and to obey him, from the beginning to the end of it. 4. That wee may by faith relie upon Gods providence, for the issue and effect of our whole endevour. 5. That none of our sinnes may bring a curse upon us in the worke. 6. That neither Satan nor any other enemy of our soules, may hinder us by temptation, but that God would deliver us from them all.

How to pray in affliction.

IV. When any affliction lies upon us or ours, we may hence frame holy requests to God: Intreating, 1. That we may honour God by patience and obedience in that affliction, and not dishonour him. 2. That God would shew in us the power of his gracious regiment in that affliction, and not suffer Satan or our owne corruption to reigne in us. 3. That we may obey God therein, as well as in any other estate of peace or ease. 4. That wee may see his providence therein, and be patient, relying also upon the same hand of God for our deliverance. 5. That our sinnes may not turne it into a curse, but that we having the pardon of our sinnes, may make good use thereof, for our humiliation and reformation. 6. That wee may not in that our weaknesse bee assaulted of Satan above our strength, but that God would deliver us from all temptations.

In the houre of death.

V. In the houre of death we may most comfortably commend our selves to God, following these petitions: praying, first, that we may glorifie God in sicknesse and death, as well as in life and health. 2. That God would now shew the comfortable worke and regiment of his Word and Spirit in our hearts, even above all that we have felt in the time of our health. 3. That we may as readily and cheerefully obey God dying as living. 4. That God would give his blessing upon all meanes wee shall use for our comfort or recoverie, making us contented with his providence, even in death it selfe. 5. That wee may be truly humbled for our sinnes, and having comfortable assurance of mercy and pardon, may with joy render up our soules into the hands of God in the moment of death. 6. That seeing Satan is most busie and malicious in our greatest weaknesse, it would please the Lord to magnifie his mercy in strengthening our soules against all the assaults of sinne and Satan. Thus we see how in all estates of life and death, we may have sweet and comfortable recourse to God following these petitions: wee must therefore labour to know and understand this heavenly prayer, that so we may use it on all occasions to the glory of our God, and the comfort of our soules: we cannot give more evident testimony of the grace of Adoption, than by the sincere exercise of the gift of prayer, when we can come with boldnesse into the presence of our heavenly father: and therefore wee must give our selves to the serious and often imitation of this heavenly patterne, and not content our selves to say over the words, but from a feeling heart powre out our soules before God, according to the meaning of this prayer in all estates.

A patterne of a godly life.

2. Vse. These petitions may serve for a notable direction according to which wee may frame our whole lives: for what wee aske of God in prayer, that must we endevour to practise in our lives: and therefore according to our requests in these petitions, must wee spend our time in a godly endevour after these six things: 1. Our chiefe care and endevour must be every day to bring some glory to God. 2. Wee must every day yeeld up our selves in soules and bodies unto God, submitting our selves in all things unto his godly regiment. 3. We must endevour to doe his will in all things, every day; making conscience of all sin whereby we rebell against him. 4. Wee must apply our selves faithfully to our callings, yet so as wee still depend upon Gods providence for a blessing in every thing we take in hand. 5. Wee must humble our selves every day before God in regard of our daily offences, still confessing our sinnes, and craving pardon for them at the hands of God. 6. Wee must daily flie to God for helpe and succour in our spirituall combate with sinne and Satan, striving manfully against our owne corrupt nature, against the world, and the devill.

Notes of Adoption out of the Lords prayer.

3. Vse. This prayer of Christ, ministers most heavenly comfort to every childe of God, by certifying him of his Adoption: for out of every petition he may gather a speciall note thereof. As, 1. an earnest and hearty desire in all things to further the glory of God. 2. A care and readinesse to resigne our selves in subjection to God, to be ruled by his Word and Spirit in thought, word, and deed. 3. A sincere endevour to doe his will in all things with cheerefulnesse, making conscience of every thing wee know to be evill: this is an infallible note of the child of God. 4. Upright walking in a mans lawfull calling, and yet still by faith to rely upon Gods providence, being well pleased with Gods sending whatsoever it is. 5. Every day to humble a mans selfe before God for his offences, seeking his favour in Christ unfainedly, and so daily renuing his faith and repentance. 6. A continuall combat betweene the flesh and the Spirit, corruption haling and drawing one way, and grace resisting the same and drawing another way: where this striving and resistance is in minde and heart, there is the Spirit, for else all would goe full sway with corruption. Hereby then make search in thy selfe for these graces of God, and if thou finde them in thee, comfort thy selfe in assurance of thine Adoption; and though thou canst not finde them all, yet if there be an unfained desire after them, when thou puttest up these requests unto God, comfort thy selfe, for thou art the childe of God: for without the Spirit of prayer, which is the Spirit of adoption, we cannot call God father, nor say hallowed be thy name, from a true heart, unfainedly desiring Gods glory.

Markes of a carnall man.

4. Vse. Out of these petitions wee may observe the plaine markes of a carnall man: as, 1. To neglect the glory of God, and to seeke his owne prayse and glory. 2. To follow the sway of his owne corruptions, suffering them to be his guide, and to neglect to yeeld subjection and obedience to the Word of God. 3. To make no conscience of sinne, if it fit his humour, so his owne will be satisfied, he cares not for the doing of Gods will. 4. Not to rest on Gods providence for the things of this life, but wholly to rely upon the meanes; if they faile, his heart is downe, and his hope is gone. 5. To goe on in sinne, without remorse, or humbling himselfe unto God: this impenitence is a plaine marke of a carnall man. 6. To runne headlong into temptation, without feare or feeling, so as he findes no occasion to pray for deliverance from sinne: hee that hath any of these six things reigning in him, is a carnall man; therefore trie thy selfe, if thou finde them in thee, turne unto God by true repentance.

And looke what we have said of prayer, according to the patterne of the former petitions, may also be said of thanksgiving, after the example of these words, For thine is the kingdome, the power, and the glory. We have shewed the use of them before, and so accordingly in all Gods blessings and works of his providence, for which we must give thanks; we must first labour to see therein the soveraignty and power of God, and then we must ascribe the same to God, with all glory, and prayse, and thanksgiving. And not onely give assent, but with affiance of heart wait for the fruition of every grace and blessing blessing we aske of God, according to his will: Amen.

V. 14. For if ye doe forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly father will also forgive you.

V. 15 But if you do not forgive men their trespasses, no more will your heavenly father forgive you your trespasses.

Of forgiving others.

These two verses containe a reason of the fifth petition, concerning the forgivenesse of our sinnes; which is propounded with a limitation and condition of our forgiving them that trespasse against us: the reason here is, because in this behalfe, wee shall finde such measure with God, as we mete out unto our brethren.

Who must forgive.

For the meaning of the words, three points must be discussed: First, whom this reason doth concerne, namely, private men for private trespasses: it reacheth not to Magistrates and publike persons in their function, who be the Ministers[a] of God to take vengeance on them that doe evill: for to such the Lord saith, Thine eye[b] shall not spare the offenders: but according to the quality of the offence, must hee execute judgement upon offenders, for the removing of evill. And so must parents and masters deale in their families, and Ministers in their publike dispensation of the Word: for else offences would so abound, that there could be no living for Gods people in the world.

[a] Rom.13.4. [b] Deut.19.13.19.

II. Point. How doe these depend one upon another, our forgiving of men, and Gods forgiving us? Anſ. Wee must not conceive that our forgiving men their trespasses, is a cause why God forgives us: for we are by nature dead in sinne, and cannot doe any good thing of our selves, till we be enabled thereunto of God: but our forgiving is a signe that God hath forgiven us, being indeed a fruit of our reconciliation with God; for it is a signe of true repentance, which is a fruit of faith, whereby we apprehend the mercy of God for the pardon of our sinnes in Christ.

He must forgive, that seeth both before Gods.

III. Point. How should our forgivenesse, goe before Gods forgiving us: for so the words seeme to import, If you forgive--your heavenly father will forgive you, &c. Anſ. The pardon of sinne which God gives must bee considered two wayes: first, as it is given in heaven; secondly, as it is revealed and assured to the conscience of man: now the pardon of sinne in heaven alwayes goes before our forgiving others: but our assurance of pardon with God, followes after our forgiving of men: for a mans sinnes may be forgiven with God, and yet hee may long remaine without the assurance thereof in his owne conscience. This we may see in David: for when Nathan said, [c] The Lord hath put away thy sinne, no doubt it was forgiven in heaven; but yet his [d] earnest prayer for pardon afterward shewes plainly, that he did not upon Nathans speech receive the comfortable assurance of pardon in his owne conscience. This then is Christs meaning: that if we forgive men their trespasses, God will assure us in our consciences that he hath forgiven us; otherwise, if we will not forgive, God will deny us that assurance.

[c] 2 Sam.12.13. [d] Psal.51.

Private wrongs must be forgiven.

The use of this point is first and chiefly this; wee must learne to forgive and forget all private wrongs and injuries done unto us, whether great or small, without desire of revenge. The reasons to move us hereunto are these: First, it is Gods commandement here expresly injoyned, which must needs binde the conscience to obedience. Secondly, if wee will not forgive men, God will not forgive us: this Christ inforceth by doubling the sentence: now without Gods forgivenesse there is no salvation, and therefore we must be ready to forgive, as wee tender our owne salvation. Thirdly, the frailty of our nature is such, that wee our selves are subject to offer wrong to others: this is intimated in this phrase, Except you forgive men their trespasses; so that every man is prone to trespasse against others: and therefore as we would be forgiven when we trespasse, so must we also forgive men their trespasses.

Motives.

Now for the better performing of our duty herein, these rules must be observed: I. We shall perceive in sundry men many wants and frailties, which mens lawes punish not; as in old men frowardnesse, in others hastinesse; and in some ambition and desire of praise: now these and such like we must in love passe by, without taking notice thereof, Prov.19.11. It is the glory of a man to passe by an offence. II. Rule. If men give us some light occasions of offence, as upbraid us with our ignorance, unskilfulnesse, basenesse, poverty, or such like, we must lightly passe them over, preferring the bond of peace before outward reputation. III. Rule. Though a man doe unto us that which is indeed flat injury, yet if it doe not manifestly hinder Gods glory, or too much prejudice our good estate; by hurting our good name, our goods, or life; wee must cause our private griefe and hurt to yeeld to publike peace. IV. Rule. If men doe us such great wrongs as manifestly hinder Gods glory, and our good estate, in life, goods, or name; then we must use the helpe of the Magistrate, and the lawfull defence of lawes provided for that end. Always remembring, that in seeking to right our selves, wee lay aside all malice, hatred, and desire of revenge, and with a single heart propound Gods glory in the reformation of the party that doth us wrong.

Confeſſion and reformation neceſſary to pardon.

Secondly, in this reaſon perſwading to forgiveneſſe we may ſee, that pardon of ſinne before God, and reformation of life goe together: for here by this one branch of a reformed life in brotherly forgiveneſſe, is underſtood all of the ſame kind: but where is no reformation of life, there is no pardon of ſinne before God. Wouldeſt thou therefore be aſſured in thy conſcience of Gods ſpeciall favour towards thee in Chriſt? then reformе thy life by every Law of God; for this will give thee aſſurance from God: but if thy life be unreformed, thy hope of pardon is a meere conceit of thine owne braine; and therefore if thou want reformation, now begine, and if thou have begunne, then hold on, and doe it more and more, for thy more full aſſurance.

v. 16 Moreover, when ye faſt, looke not ſowre as the hypocrites: for they diſfigure their faces, that they might ſeeme unto men to faſt. Verily, I ſay unto you that they have their reward.

Of Faſting.

Our Saviour Chriſt, having rectified the abuſes in Almes-giving, and in prayer, doth here come to a third Chriſtian duty, namely, Faſting: wherein as in the former, firſt hee ſeekes to reforme abuſes, and then preſcribes the true manner thereof. But before we come to theſe particularly, I will in generall handle the doctrine of Faſting, for the better underſtanding of this text, and exerciſe of this duty. And firſt we muſt know, that Chriſt here ſpeakes not of a civill faſt, appointed by Magiſtrates in their dominions for civill reſpects; but of a religious faſt, reſpecting the worſhip of God which appeares by this, that he joyneth the doctrine of faſting to the doctrine of prayer, which is a ſpeciall part of Gods holy worſhip.

Of a religious faſt ſix points. 1 What kinde of workes faſting is.

Now touching a religious faſt, I will here handle ſix points: Firſt, what kinde of worke a faſt is. The Scripture ſpeakes of two kinds of workes: ſome commanded of God; others left indifferent. Workes commanded, the good workes, and parts of Gods ſervice, becauſe he commandeth them, as prayer, thankſgiving, almes-deeds &c. Workes indifferent be in themſelves neither good nor evill, becauſe they be neither commanded of God, nor forbidden; as to eat, drinke, buy, ſell, &c. And to this kind of works muſt wee referre faſting: for it is not ſimply commanded of God, and ſo no part of his worſhip in it ſelfe, more than eating is. And yet conſider faſting in it circumſtances, to wit, as a meanes to further and to teſtifie our humiliation in repentance, and our zeale in prayer, and ſo it is a good worke: for in that uſe, and to that end God commandeth it, and it is a part of his worſhip. If it be ſaid, there is no commandement for it in the new Teſtament: I anſwer, if wee conſider it in the forenamed uſe and end, there is: for the ſame commandement that injoyneth prayer, and humiliation, injoyneth faſting; becauſe it is a meanes to further them both: for every commandement includeth all neceſſarie furtherances to the meane duty. Againe, we have in the new Teſtament examples of ordinary faſting, which are without all exception, in our Saviour Chriſt and his Apoſtles, with the occaſions thereof ſet downe, whereupon they faſted. Now this is a rule in Divinity, that the ordinary examples of the godly approved in Scripture, being againſt no generall precept, have the force of a generall rule, and are to be followed.

2 Whether examples are a rule.

2 In performing a religious faſt, three things. 1

II. Point. How a religious faſt is to be performed. In a religious faſt three things are required: Firſt, Abſtinence from meat and drinke for one day, at leaſt, till the evening: for abſtinence from morning till noone is no faſt. When Heſter required the Jewes to faſt for her, ſhee forbids them [a] to eat, or to drinke, during the faſt. And when Davꝺ faſted and prayed for his child begotten in adultery, he would [b] eat nothing till he had ended his humiliation, perceiving that the childe was dead. This is a thing granted by all Proteſtants. And the very names of faſting uſed in the old and new Teſtament, import a totall abſtinence for that time: which muſt be obſerved, to diſcover the abſurdity of Popiſh faſts, wherein they allow men to drinke oft if they will, and eat alſo, ſo it be not fleſh: but in faſting, abſtinence muſt be uſed from all meat and drinke, to farre as health and itrength will ſuffer. Secondly, Abſtinence from all delights of Nature, whereby the outward man may be cheered and refreſhed, as muſicke, ſweet ſmells, ſoft apparell, recreations, and ſuch like. This Daniel obſerved for three weekes of dayes; I ate (ſaith he) no pleaſant bread, neither came fleſh or wine in my mouth, neither did I annoint my ſelfe at all: and the like may we ſee in many examples of the old Teſtament. They caſt [d] duſt and aſhes upon their heads, in ſtead of annoynting themſelves with oyle: and for ſoft apparell, they put on [e] ſackcloth next their skin: they [f] walked when they ſhould have ſlept; and lay upon the ground in ſtead of beds: the [g] bridegroome went out of his chamber, and the bride out of her bride-chamber: for mirth there was mourning; and [h] howling in ſtead of ſinging. Thirdly, a man muſt humble and afflict his bodie in faſting; and therefore muſt be ſparing in his diet and delights before the day of faſting: for a man may ſo pamper and fill himſelfe, that hee ſhall not need to eat or drinke for one whole day; but ſuch perſons faſt not: the time of our faſt muſt be a [i] time of our humiliation: men muſt afflict themſelves therein, as [k] Ezra ſaith: they muſt beat downe the body and bring it into ſubjection, as [l] Paul did: for though call for mercie: and for this cauſe in Scripture many times joynes prayer and faſting together.

IV. Point. The cauſes or occaſions of a religious faſt, which may iuſtly move us thereunto: and they bee ſeven. Firſt, when wee our ſelves have fallen into any grievous ſinne or ſinnes, whereof our conſcience accuſeth us, and whereby we procure the wrath of God againſt us: then to reforme our ſelves, and to eſcape the wrath of God, wee have need to give our ſelves to prayer and faſting: 1 Sam. 7. 6. The Iſraelites having fallen to idolatrie, put away their ſtrange gods, and turned unto the Lord with weeping and faſting: And when they kept the feaſt of Expiation, which was a type of their forgiveneſſe by the Meſſias, then they humbled themſelves in faſting before the Lord, Levit. 16. 29. Secondly, when ſome among us fall into any grievous ſinne, though wee our ſelves be cleare from it, yet then we muſt faſt, becauſe for the ſinnes of others, Gods judgements may juſtly fall upon us. Hence it was that Paul blames the Corinthians, [o] becauſe they ſorrowed not for the ſame of inceſt committed among them. And in this regard, every godly perſon ought to humble himſelfe, becauſe of the grievous ſinnes of atheiſme, blaſphemy, oppreſſion, &c. which abound among us. Thirdly, when the hand of God in any judgement lies upon us: ſo did the [p] Iſraelites, when they fell in battell before the Benjamites: and ſo ought we to doe for many judgements of God that have laine long upon us. Fourthly, when the hand of God in any fearefull judgement lies heavy on others, among whom wee live, though we our ſelves be free: in this caſe David oftimes humbled himſelfe, not only when his child gotten in adulterywas ſicke, 2 Sam. 12. 16. but even when his enemies were ſicke he faſted, Pſal. 35. 13. Efidibly, when Gods judgements are imminent, and as it were hang over our heads: ſo did Iehoſaphat [q] when his enemies came againſt his country: and in this regard wee ought to humble our ſelves, for the profeſſed enemies of Gods grace are daily plotting our ſubverſion. Seuerally, when wee ſtand in need of ſome needfull bleſſing of God, eſpecially ſuch as concerne ſalvation: thus [r] Cornelius befought the Lord in prayer and faſting, when hee deſired true reſolution concerning the Meſſias; and ſo ought we to doe, to get aſſurance of our reconciliation with God, in the pardon of our ſinnes. Seuerally, for Gods bleſſing and good ſucceſſe upon the miniſterie of the Goſpell: ſo did the Church for Paul and Barnabas, when they ſent them to preach, Act. 13. 2. and ſo ought wee to doe at this day. Theſe bee the juſt occaſions of faſting mentioned in the Word, whereto wee may referre thereſt: and when any of theſe befall particular perſons, families, congregations, cities, countries, or kingdomes, then they ought to humble themſelves in faſting, before the Lord.

The time of a religious fast.

The kinds of a religious fast.

[a] Zach.12.12.

[b] Joel 2.14. [c] Jon.3.9. [d] Chr.20.3.

V. Point. The time of a religious fast: this A now is free in regard of conficence. Indeed in the old Testament, they had a set time of fasting, to wit, the tenth day of the seventh moneth: but in the new Testament there is no set time which bindes the conscience; only men must fast as just occasion is offered. If it be said, that divers reformed Churches have set times of fasting: I answer, these fasts are set for orders sake, and not to binde conscience, and they are civill fasts and not religious, for the Church may alter them at her pleasure. The time of a religious fast, is the time of mourning, which is uncertaine unto any Church, and therefore the time thereof cannot bee set; which must be marked, because the Church of Rome doth herein erre, in that they binde mens consciences to their set times of religious fasts. Tollet. instr. Sacerd. l.6.c.2.

VI. Point. The kindes of a religious fast: and they are two; private, and publike. A private fast is that which is performed privately, either by one man alone, for some of the forenamed occasions peculiar to himselfe, as Cornelius did (Act. 10.30.) when he desired to know the true Messias; or by a private family, upon peculiar causes moving them thereto, and so did Hester fast with her Maids, Hest. 4.16. This fast was foretold by [a] Zacharie, The land shall bewaile, every family apart, the family of the house of David apart, and their wives apart, &c. A publike fast is that which is performed publikely, by divers families assembling, in one or C more congregations: and this publike fast is appointed partly by the Church, and partly by the Magistrate: the [b] Church must judge of the time and occasion thereof; and the [c] Magistrate must authorize and proclaime it. Againe, a religious fast may bee distinguished otherwayes, in respect of the time of continuance, and manner of abstinence therein: for sometime a religious fast is only from one meale for one day, as Judg. 20. 26. sometime it is from one meale for many dayes together, as 1 Sam. 31.13. they fasted seven dayes together for Saul and Jonathan; abstaining from their dinners, and taking some refreshing in the evening: and so Daniel fasted for three weekes of dayes, that is, each day from morning till night, Dan. 10. 3. And sometime it is from all kinde of sustenance for many dayes together; so Hester and her maids fasted three dayes, Hest. 4. 16. Now the two former may be used of us as occasion serveth; but this last is verie dangerous: for it is not with us in this regard, as it was with the Jewes; they lived in hot countries, and so had cold stomacks, by reason whereof, they might fast three dayes without any great inconvenience: but we that live in colder climates, have hotter stomacks, and so have need of more and oftner refreshing than they had; neither can we fast so long without endangering life and health: now fasting must bee to humble and afflict the body, but not to destroy it.

Thus much of fasting in generall: now I come to Christs doctrine of fasting here prepounded. And first, of his reformation of the abuses thereof then used among the Jewes: When yee fast, looke not as the hypocrites, &c. Quest. How doth this agree with the commandement of God, Joel 1. 13, 14. where hee bids them howle and crie in their fast, which cannot bee without a mournefull countenance; and indeed in a true fast rightly celebrated, the sorrow of the heart must needs bee testified by some convenient signes and gesture in the bodie. Answ. Christ doth not here simply condemne a sorrowfull countenance in fasting, when as just occasion of sorrow therein is offered: for [d] Nehemiah looked sad: but only the B hypocrisie of the Pharisies, who when they fasted had a sad countenance, without a sorrowfull heart: for all their heavie lookes, they had no broken spirits: this therefore Christ faith, carrie not a sad and heavie looke, when thou hast no sorrowfull mourning heart; minde not thine outward countenance, in respect of thy heart and conscience. For they disfigure their faces, &c. This also may seeme not blameworthy, for Gods children have in their fasts divers wayes disfigured their faces, and beene approved: Ezra [e] plucke off the haire of his head, and of his beard: and [f] Iosua and the Israelites fell to the ground upon their faces, and put dust upon their heads, which could not but disfigure their faces. Ans. The Pharises are blamed for disfiguring their faces, in divers respects, and that justly; for first, this was the chiefe and only thing they looked to in their fasts, even the outward shew thereof, which God hateth. Againe, the word translated disfigure, signifieth the very abolishing of their favour and visage, which is far more than the ancient Jewes ever used to doe: they indeed humbled their bodies, and testified their sorrow which God approved: but they sought not to deforme their naturall complexion, they pined not themselves to make their faces pale, that so men might the better take notice of their much fasting, as these Pharises did: and such were they in Pauls time, who spared not their bodies, Col. 2. 23. Thus much for the meaning.

D The words thus explaned containe two parts; a commandement, and a reason thereof. The commandement forbiddeth fained mourning in fasting, Looke not as the hypocrites: as if hee should say, The hypocriticall Scribes and Pharises when they fast, make an outward shew of contrition and sorrow, when as indeed their hearts are no whit humbled; but you shall not doe so. The reason of the former prohibition, is drawne from the practice of hypocrites, which is set out by the end and fruit thereof: their practice is to disfigure their faces, therein is all their sorrow: their end is ostentation, that they might be seene unto men to fast. And the fruit is answerable, Verely I say unto you, they have their reward: that is, reputation and prayse praise of men. Thus when wee see that Christ condemnes not religious fasting, nor godly sorrow therein, no nor yet the seemely signes of godly sorrow; but onely hypocriticall fasting, when men have mournfull looks without humble and contrite hearts.

The Uses. 1. Here observe the practice of these Scribes and Pharises in Christs time: they did not onely fast often, as twice a weeke, but they were carefull in observing all outward rites and signes pertaining to a religious fast: yet as in the two former duties of Almes-deeds, and prayer, so in this, the principall thing is wanting; that is, truth and sincerity of heart; for their fowre looks came not from forrowfull hearts: they were whole and righteous in their owne conceit, and so needed not the Physician Christ Jesus, nor amendment of life. Now in them we may see a true patterne of the property of naturall men in matters of Religion: they more busie themselves about the outward worke, than inward truth; they content themselves with outward rites and ceremonies, and little regard the true worship of the heart. See this in [b] Ahab, who humbled himselfe outwardly in great measure, for feare of punishment, but hee contented himselfe therewith, and never came to true humiliation of heart, in sorrow for sinne, for hee continued still in his old sinnes: and the Israelites, both in the wildernesse, and in the land of Canaan, when God afflicted them, would humble themselves and seeke his favour; but yet not in constant sincerity and truth: for as [c] David saith, They flattered him with their mouth: —for their heart was not upright with him: they performed the outward ceremonies, and [d] so drew neere to God with their lippes, but their heart was farre from him. And thus it goeth generally with naturall men: the whole religion of the Papists standes in outward ceremoniall actions, partly Jewish, and partly Heathenish; and when they have observed them, they looke no further. And so it fareth with many among us, that professe true religion; for the ignorant sort (which are very many every where) content themselves with the outward actions of religion; as comming to Church, hearing the Word read, and sometime preached, and receiving the Sacrament once or twice a yeare; and when the worke is done (though without understanding) yet all is well, they thinke God is served well enough. Yea, many that have knowledge doe yet rest in the outward actions of religion; for doe not some esteeme the conscionable endevour of morall obedience to bee but precisenesse? and so though they beare some shew of religion, yet they reproach the power of it in others. And another sort doe onely so farre forth maintaine and professe religion, as it standeth with the good of their outward estate, and their peaceable fruition of wealth, honour, and delights, and so make a policy of religion and piety. But let all these take heed unto their soules, and betime repent, for these practises make them hypocrites in religion, whose end will be damnation; and therefore bring thy heart to God with thy outward worship and content not thy selfe with the shew of godlinesse, but get the power of it, and shew it in thy conversation; and embrace religion for it selfe, and not for the world.

Secondly, is the Pharises fasting condemned of Christ, because they rested in the outward worke, and did it in ostentation, for the prayse of men? then doubtlesse Popish fasting is abominable, because it aboundeth with more abuses: For 1. in their religious fasts they allow one meale, so it be not flesh; and besides that, drinking of any kinde of wines, or drinkes, taking of electuaries, and strong waters, conserves and such like, at any time of the day; which is a mock-fast, and nothing else. 11. They make distinction of meats necessary to a fast, and that not for evill ends, as Magistrates may doe; or for temperance sake, as private men may doe: but for conscience sake, which is a doctrine of devils, as the [e] Apostle saith. 1. 1. They binde men in conscience to many set dayes of fasting, and make the omission thereof a deadly sinne; wherein they take away our Christian libertie: for there was no want of care in our Saviour Christ, to appoint all good meanes for mortifying of the flesh, and yet hee prescribed no set fasts in the new Testament. 1V. They make fasting meritorious, teaching, that a man thereby may satisfie Gods justice; whereby they doe blasphemously derogate from the all-sufficiencie of Christs obedience and passion. Now fith they have thus defaced religious fasting, let us learne by Christs command, not to fast as the Papists doe.

Thirdly, Christ saying to his Disciples, when ye fast, takes it for granted, that sometimes they fasted, and so ought to doe: and here he blames the Pharises, not for fasting simply, but for their hypocrisie therein: whereby wee see that Christ requires of all the godly, that when just occasion is offered, they should fast, either publikely, or in private. And if Christ blame the Pharises for their bad manner of fasting, then much more will hee blame them that fast not at all, though never so just occasion bee given unto them: for in this case it is not a thing indifferent, but necessary: for the want whereof, God doth many times renue and increase his judgements, as we may see, Isa. 22. 12, 13, 14. Wherefore to move our hearts hereunto, let us consider these reasons: First, we have herein the worthy president of most holy men in times past, who carefully performed this duty, when occasion was offered; as David, Daniel, Ezra, Nehemiah, our Saviour Christ, and his Apostles, especially [f] Paul, who fasted often: now their examples must be a cloud of witnesses unto us, for we come farre short of them in many graces of God, and in obedience, and therefore had more need to humble our selves. Secondly,

Popish fasting is abominable. Reasons. 1 Aquin. 2.2.q. 147.a.6.8. Navar.c.22.n.13, 14.15. 2 Bellarm. de bon. operib. partic. l.2. c.5.and 7. [e] 1 Tim.4.3. 3 Tollet. instr. Secondly, we have among us continuall occasions of fasting, both in publike and private: as, I. Gods judgements present; for when have wee beene free from some one of these, either famine, or pestilence, or unseasonable weather? II. Gods judgements imminent and hanging over our heads; for our professed enemies watch for our subversion, and we are in danger to have the kingdome of heaven taken from us, in the power of the Gospell, the comfort of prayer, and of the Sacraments, because we doe not bring forth the fruits thereof. III. Wee have our owne corrupt natures to subdue, and many sins to breake off, with particular judgements upon our selves to remove; for any one whereof wee have great need to fast often. IV. Though we had no such cause in regard of our selves, yet the horrible sinnes that abound in our land, are cause sufficient to bring us on our knees. Paul[t] feared hee should bee humbled at Corinth, in bewailing many that had sinned: and shall not the common Atheisme, the contempt of Gods word and judgements, the blasphemies, oppression, and fearefull securitie of this age cause us to waile and mourne? V. Wee should oft humble our selves for the Church of God; and for the continuance of the Gospell in sinceritie among us, and to our posteritie: hereby we shall best expresse zeale for Gods house, which should eat us up, as it is said of [d] Christ, and of[e] David: Gods Ierusalem should be our[f] chiefe joy: and we must testifie it by [g] praying for the peace thereof: Christ prayed and[h] fasted when he chose his Apostles for the planting of his Church: much more therefore must we doe it for the continuance of it.

Of care for the bodie.

Fourthly, Christ here disallowes not only the affectation of praise in these Pharises, but the disfiguring of their faces by a kinde of pining of themselves; whereby hee would teach us, that a true fast stands not in the afflicting and weakning of the bodie. Now albeit few offend this way at this day, for most are given too much to pamper the flesh; yet here may fitly bee shewed, what care men ought to have of their bodies. And first of all, a two-fold care must be avoided; as well an immoderate care to pamper the bodie with meat and drinke, for that makes the heart heavie, and the head drousie, and hereby lust is kindled, and sinne cherished; which the Apostle forbids, Rom. 13. 14. as also too little care, whereby the bodie is pined and pulled downe to overmuch weaknesse, which is one thing here reproved. The care required is that moderate regard unto the bodie, whereby it is so sustained by meat and drinke, that it may alwayes become the temple of the Holy Ghost, and a fit instrument for the soule unto workes of righteousnesse, and the worship of God. Now hee that would thus order his bodie, must doe two things: First, he must observe perpetuall temperance in food and rayment, taking that which may well suffice nature, but not fulfill the lusts thereof. Secondly,

A if this will not serve to subdue the flesh, but that it will still rebell against the law of the spirit of life, (as in some it will not) then fasting must be used, in which the bodie is to be afflicted, and the soule humbled, for the subduing of the rebellious flesh: but yet herein we must beware, that we destroy not our health, our strength, or our constitution; for thus we neglect our life, which is a sinne of murther: wherein (though few) yet some doe offend, who in the meane time live in the practice of foule and grosse sins otherwayes.

Outward exercise more embraced than weighted duties.

B Fifthly, here note how farre the Pharises goe in outward humiliation: they are content to afflict their bodies, even to the disfiguring of their complexion; but yet they will not repent and leave their sinnes, no though John Baptist and Christ preach repentance unto them: wherin behold the properties of our corrupt nature in Gods service: if outward actions and bodily exercises will serve the turne, we can be content to bestow much cost, to take great paines, and to endure some affliction; but yet still we desire to live in our sinnes. This is evident in Poperie, for who are more austere to their owne bodies, in watchings, wandring, in whipping themselves, fasting, &c? and yet where is more abhominable filthinesse than among them? and this makes that religion so embraced, because in dispensing with sinne, for the performance of these bodily actions, it fits so well to our corrupt nature. Wherefore let us

C take notice of this our corruption, and though we must not neglect the humbling of the body upon just occasion; yet let us principally look to the mortifying of sinne, and the obedience of the heart.

v. 17 But when thou fastest, anoint thine head, and wash thy face.

18 That thou seeme not unto men to fast, but unto thy father which is in secret; and thy father which seeth in secret, will reward thee openly.

D Christ the true Doctor of his Church, having in the former verse sought to reforme the exercise of Fasting, from Pharisaicall abuses, doth in these two verses seeke to restore the same to his right use; not so much intending to command us to fast, as to bring us to the right manner of fasting.

The Exposition. When thou fastest, &c. It seemeth that Christ here speaketh especially of a private fast: for besides that he useth words of the singular number, Thou, Thine, &c. he injoyneth neth the concealing of it from others, which cannot bee done in a publike fast: and yet the maine thing here injoyned, is the approbation of the heart unto God, which must be obtained in all religious fasts, as well publike as private. Anoint thine head, and wash thy face: Here Christ alludeth to the custome of the Jewes, who to shew their cheerefulnesse, used to annoint their heads with sweet ointments, and to wash their faces; as wee may see by Naomies command to [a] Ruth, and by [b] Davids practice, when hee perceived his childe was dead, and would refuse that hee had ceased from mourning for it: as also by the speech of Christ, justifying the woman that anointed his feet with ointment, Mine[c] head thou addedst not unto: but she hath anointed my feet with ointment: for as David saith, God giveth oyle to make the face to shine, Psal. 104. 15. But yet these words are not to be taken properly, neither doe they bind us to anoint our heads when we fast, as may appeare by these reasons: 1. If the words should bee taken properly, then should Christ condemne all the fasts of holy men in the old Testament, who used neither ointments nor washings, but abstained from all such bodily delights for that time. 2. Christ should command contraries, namely, the use of such things in fasting, as were more proper to feasting, wherein men use to bee joyfull and cheerefull. 3. Hee should injoyne that to some countries, which were not in their power, or at least could not bee used of them without excessive charges; as in this or other cold countries, where sweet oyles are rare and costly. The true meaning therefore must bee gathered out of the circumstances of the place: now Christs intent is here, as in the former points of Almesdeeds and prayer, to prescribe unto men the approving of their hearts unto God in fasting, by avoyding ostentation thereof, and desire of the praise of men: and therefore he names such behaviour, as doth no way intimate a fast unto others; meaning thereby, that wee should conceale our private fasts from men: as if he should say, When thou fastest privately, so carrie thy selfe, that it may not appeare to men that thou fastest, and in all thy fasts seeke only to approve thy heart unto God.

D

The words thus explained containe two parts; a commandement, and a reason thereof. The commandement is two-fold: First, that we should conceale our fasts from men, intimated by wash thy face, and anoint thy head: Secondly, that we should seeke to approve our selves, not to men, but to God in our religious fasts, in these words, That thou seeme not to men to fast, but to thy father which is in secret. In this first branch of this commandement we may learne, that the private worship of God must bee performed privately unto God, and concealed from men: for that which is here said of private fasting, which is a meanes to further our prayers, is true of prayer it selfe, and of every part of Gods private worship, for there is the same reason of all: as may thus appeare; First, that actions of Gods worship, there must be observed an holy comelinesse and decencie, which is then done, when they bee performed with fit and convenient circumstances; that is, publike actions of worship, with publike circumstances; and private actions, with private circumstances: as publike prayer must bee made of a publike person in a publike place, with an audible and loud voice; and private prayer must be made in a private place, by private persons, with a still and low voice, and other seemly private gestures. Secondly, when private worship is performed with publike circumstances, there are many occasions given to ambition, pride, and hypocrisie; but being done privately, these occasions are prevented, and the heart is more fitted to seeke the approbation of God only.

1 Of private preparation to Gods publike worship.

This doctrine serves to direct our practice in Gods worship; as first, that we must not reserve our private preparation to Gods publike worship, till we come to the publike congregation; but prepare our selves at home privately in our chamber or closet: for though to pray every where bee lawfull, yet because convenient circumstances must bee observed in all our actions of worship, therefore private prayer in a publike place is not so seemly nor convenient; for publike circumstances doe not beseeme private worship. Quest. What if a man wanted time, or had forgot to prepare himselfe before hand? Answ. Slight pretences cannot justifie any disorder in Gods worship: and yet if a man will needs there performe his private preparation, he must conceale all outward signes of prayer, and only lift up his heart unto God: for a good duties may become offensive by inconvenient circumstances. Secondly, this shewes how Christian families must order their private exercises of religion, namely so privately for voice and gesture, that they may conceale the same from others, beside their family present: and so must particular persons praying alone, observe such circumstances as may conceale their prayers from others: for all occasions of ostentation must bee avoided, that so the heart may apply it self wholly towards the Lord.

2 How private families must worship God.

That thou seeme not to men to fast.] This is the second branch of Christs commandement, wherein we learne a second dutie in a religious fast; namely, that therein wee seeke to approve our selves and our actions only to God: for which end, wee must observe three things. 1. With our fasting wee must joyne a conversion of our heart from sinne unto God: Joel 2. 12. Turne you unto me with all your heart, and with fasting: there God hath joyned them together, and they may not be severed. Now that our hearts may turne to God in fasting, wee must have especiall regard to our behaviour both before, in, and after our fast, whether publike or private. Before the fast, wee must prepare our selves thereto:

What fasting is approved to God in fasting, and how.

deration of the cauſes and occaſions of our faſt:
a worthy example hereof we have in a Iehoſhaphat, who conſidering a fearefull judgement to be at hand, in the approaching of his enemies, wee muſt labour to have more tender affections, and deeper humiliation than ordinarie:

water, and powred it out before the Lord:* which words import their deepe humiliation, whether it were by abundant weeping, (as ſome expound the place) or by powring out water indeed, to ſignifie, that they powred out their ſoules before the Lord. After the faſt we muſt labour for reformation and amendment of life, that our behaviour both towards God and man, may be everie way better than before. A notable example hereof, we have in the Jewes, who having renued their covenant with God, upon their b humiliation, did not only b write it, and c ſeale unto it; but bound themſelves thereto by d curſe and oath. 2. That we approve our ſelves and our action to God in faſting, we muſt be ſure we propound unto our ſelves therein the right ends of a religious faſt, which wee have before propounded: for if we faile therein, and propound other ends unto our ſelves, wee corrupt the whole action unto our ſelves. 3. With our faſting we muſt joyne the duties of the ſecond Table, in the works of juſtice, mercie, and love to our brethren: for without theſe, our love to God is not ſincere: nay, God rejects that bodily humiliation, which is ſevered from the exerciſe of mercie and compaſſion, as wee may ſee at large, Iſa. 58. 3, 4, &c. I ſhewed before that we had juſt cauſe to humble our ſelves; which when we doe, we muſt be carefull thus to approve our hearts unto God.

Thus much of the commandement: now followeth the reaſon thereof, drawen from the promiſe of Gods reward to them that faſt in an holy manner: And thy father which ſeeth in ſecret, will reward thee openly: that is, ſeeing thee intend only to approve thine heart and action unto God in faſting, will give thee an open reward at the laſt day.

Popiſh concluſion. I

Bellarm. de bon. oper. in part. l.2. c.6, & 12.

This Text the Papiſts doe notably abuſe, to prove two hereticall concluſions touching faſting, Firſt, that faſting in it ſelfe for any good end, is a part of Gods worſhip, becauſe it hath a promiſe of open reward, even life everlaſting, made unto it, as before was made to prayer and Almes-deeds; and therefore muſt needs bee of the ſame nature with them: for things indifferent, and bodily exerciſes, profit little; that which hath the promiſe is a part of godlineſſe, 1 Tim.4.8. Anſ. This promiſe is made to him that faſteth, not to the worke; and that not ſim-ply for his exerciſe of faſting, but for his repentance, converſion, and invocation, which goe with faſting, and are furthered thereby. But Matth.6. verſ.17,18.

they alleage, that c Anna ſerved God with faſ-ting and with prayer. Anſw. In the old Teſta-ment, faſting was a part of Gods worſhip; for it was commanded to be performed the tenth day of the ſeventh moneth: and then alſo was the making and performing of vowes, a part of religious worſhip commanded of God. Now in all likelihood Annah had bound her ſelfe by vow to God, to that courſe of prayer and faſting, and therefore was approved of God therein. But now in the new Teſtament, wee have no commandement for ſet faſts or vowes:
and therefore the caſe is not the ſame, and ſo her example cannot prove the thing for which they alleage it: indeed we have the vow of morall obedience made in baptiſme, but that everie one is bound to performe that takes God for his God, though he ſhould not vow it. Againe, a man may bee ſaid to ſerve God in prayer and faſting as Annah did, becauſe prayer is a true part of Gods worſhip; and though faſting in it ſelfe bee not the worſhip of God, yet being joyned with prayer, it is a notable furtherance thereunto: and being ſo performed upon juſt occaſion, it is a part of his worſhip, becauſe hee requires it.

II. Popiſh concluſion. Bellarm. de bon. oper. in part. l.2. c.12.

The ſecond concluſion which the Papiſts would gather hence, is; that Faſting ſatisfieth Gods juſtice, and merits remiſſion of ſinnes, and life everlaſting; becauſe this promiſe of open reward is here made unto it. Anſw. We muſt know, that the promiſes of God for remiſſion of ſinnes and life everlaſting, being grounded upon Chriſt, are only made to them that be regenerate and beleeve in Chriſt; and ſo they are not made to him for his works ſake, but for his faith whereby he is in Chriſt, and ſo indeed are made unto him for Chriſts ſake only, in whom we grant, that God of his free grace makes him-ſelfe a debter by his promiſe to everie beleever that doth any good worke: yet the debt is not due to us for any thing we do, but due to Chriſt who hath merited it, and in Chriſt due to us.
But it will be ſaid, that workes are oft mentioned with Gods promiſes, and eſpecially faith, which is a worke. Anſ. True: but yet the reward promiſed is not given for works ſake, nor yet for faith; but for Chriſts ſake, whoſe merit imputed to us is received by faith, which faith we teſtifie by works: and ſo according to our faith and works, we receive a reward of God, but not for them: as Chriſt ſaid to the Centurion, f As thou haſt beleeved, ſo be it unto thee.
Thus then muſt wee conceive of this promiſe made to faſting; though in it ſelfe it be a bodily exerciſe; yet being done in obedience to God upon juſt occaſion, by him that beleeveth in Chriſt, and being joyned with prayer and converſion to God, it is a worke of faith, and ſhall have a reward.

Now this gracious promiſe made to faſting in this holy manner, muſt ſtirre us up to a love of this exerciſe, and to the practice of it, ſo oft as juſt occaſion is given. And undoubtedly one ſpeciall

ſpeciall cauſe of the continuall renuing of Gods Judgements among us is, becauſe we humble not our ſelves by prayer and faſting under Gods mightie hand. It were therefore to be wiſhed, in regard of the manifold juſt occaſions, that publike faſts were more often commanded by publike authoritie, and private faſts more con-ſcionably uſed in every family.

And thus much of the fourth part of Chriſts Sermon, containing a reformation of abuſes in Almes, Prayer, and Faſting: out of all which we muſt learne this one thing which Chriſt principally intends; to wit, in all holy duties to avoid hypocriſie, endevouring to doe them with that ſimpliciti e and ſincerit ie of heart, whereby we truely deſire to have God and not man the ſeer and approver of them. And ſo ſhall our workes be not onely good in themſelves, but in us, and acceptable unto God: otherwiſe, if we doe them in oſtentation, or for other ſiniſter reſpects, the hypocriſie of our hearts defiles our good workes, and ſo makes them unacceptable unto God, and unprofitable to our ſelves.

The fifth part of Chriſts Sermon.

v. 19 Lay not up treaſures for your ſelves upon the earth, where the moath and canker corrupt, and where theeves dig thorow and ſteale.

20 But lay up treaſures for your ſelves in heaven, where neither the moath nor canker corrupteth, and where theeves neither dig thorow, nor ſteale.

Here beginneth the fifth part of this excellent Sermon, and it continueth to the end of this chapter; wherein our Saviour Chriſt intendeth to reforme his hearers of covetouſneſſe, and to worke in their hearts a moderate care and deſire of worldly things. Now the order of this diſ-courſe is this; Firſt, he layes down the ſubſtance of his perſwaſion, and then enforceth and amplifieth the ſame. The ground and ſubſtance of Chriſts perſwaſion, conſiſts in a double commandement: the firſt ſhewes what we muſt not doe in reſpect of treaſures, v.19. the ſecond, what we muſt doe, v.20. both which he enforceth by their ſeverall reaſons, in the ſame verſes: as alſo with a reaſon common to them both, verſ.21.

Sermon of Gen.

For the firſt commandement, Lay not up treaſures, &c. The meaning. The word here tranſla-ted lay up, is more ſignificant in the originall, than our Engliſh doth expreſſe; for it imports
two things: Firſt, to gather together: ſecondly, to hoord or heape up in ſtore things gathered, a-gainſt the time to come; ſo Rom.2.5. Thou heapeſt up unto thy ſelfe, &c. Treaſures, that is, worldly wealth in abundance, pretious things ſtored up; as ſilver, gold, pearls, &c. Upon earth:

here Chriſt aimes not ſo much at the place, as at the kinde of treaſures; for heavenly treaſures may be laid up while we are here on earth: and therefore he forbids hoording of earthly treaſures. For your ſelves: that is, reſpecting your private gaine and benefit, all reſpect to the good of the Church and Common-wealth laid aſide.
So then the words beare this ſenſe, Take heed that you gather not riches together, to hoord up here below, for your owne private uſe and benefit alone, making them your treaſures in which you put your truſt, and place your joy and delight.

But yet that we may not miſtake the meaning of our Saviour Chriſt, I will diſtinctly ſet downe what things Chriſt forbiddeth not, pertaining to the gathering or keeping of worldly goods; and then what it is which he doth directly forbid. There be three things reſpecting the world, which Chriſt forbiddeth not: viz.

Three things allowed about wealth.

1. Diligent labour in a mans vocation, whereby he provides things needfull for himſelfe, and thoſe that depend upon him; for elſe he ſhould be contrarie to himſelfe, injoyning man to eat his bread in the ſweat of his face, Genetis 3.19. and commanding that he that will not labour, ſhould not eat, 2 Thel.3.10. 11. The fruition and poſſeſſi-on of goods and riches: for they are the good bleſſings of God being well uſed, and have beene poſſeſſed of Gods children, as Abraham, Iob, Salomon. &c. 111. The gathering and laying up of treaſures is not ſimply forbidden, for the word of God alloweth hereof in ſome re-ſpect, 2 Cor.12.14. The father muſt lay up for the children: and the Diſciples underſtanding of the generall famine, by the prophecie of Agabus, which ſhould be in all the World, a gathered proviſion aforehand for the brethren in Judea: and b Ioſeph s provident wiſdome is commended by the holy Ghoſt, for hoording up the corne in Ægypt, againſt the time of dearth, for the common good: and the c Temple of God had his treaſurie by Gods appointment, for the upholding and repaire thereof; ſo that Chriſt doth not ſimply forbid all gathering and laying up of treaſure or wealth.

Practices of covetouſneſſe here forbidden.

What is it then which Chriſt here forbids?
Anſ. Sundry practices of covetouſneſſe, whereof the firſt is exceſſive ſeeking of worldly wealth, when men keepe no meaſure nor moderation therein; although God give ſufficient, yet they are not content, their deſire is ſo unſatiable.
And that we may ſee the danger of this practice,
I will here ſhew how farre forth a man may ſeeke for and lay up worldly wealth: for the better underſtanding whereof, this diſtinction of worldly goods muſt be laid downe for a ground; They are either neceſſarie, abundant, or ſuperfluous. Neceſſarie goods are of two ſorts; either neceſſarie to mans nature, without which no man can live, nor family ſtand; as meat, drinke, apparell, lodging, &c. or neceſſarie to a mans ſtate and condition of life, without which he cannot exercise the duties of his calling wherein God hath placed him; as bookes to a student, tooles to a trades-man, &c. Now here ariseth the question: How much of these things are to be counted necessarie, and so may be provided for, and laid up? Ans. The opinion and judgement of the covetous man must be no rule in this case; for his corrupt heart is unsatiable, like the sea which cannot be filled, and like d the fire, that never saith, it is enough. Now because of the diversitie of mens estates, by reason of their difference in properties and conditions, there can be no certaine rule set downe: for that which is enough for one, will not suffice another: and therefore the judgement and practice of the godly-wise, who know how to use the creatures as blessings of Gods providence, must be our rule to judge what is necessarie: other rules we have not in the Word, but what they judge needfull, according to the Word, that must be esteemed necessarie, and accordingly provided. Yet further this may here be added, that things must not be deemed necessarie, onely in regard of the present use, but also with respect to the time to come, wherein they may be needfull. Example. A trades-man having nothing besides his trade to live upon, may provide for things necessarie, while his strength continueth, to maintaine himselfe in old age, when through decay of strength or sight, he is not able to worke. And so a man having many children, may in the use of lawfull meanes, provide for their portions before-hand, that when their age requireth, he may therewith dispose of them in some good state of life. The second sort of worldly goods is Abundance, whereby I meane that plentie and store, which serves not onely for necessitie, but for holy comelinesse and delight. The third sort is Superfluitie, whereby I meane such abundance, as a man hath neither use of for the present, nor in any likelihood shall have for the time to come.

Now these grounds thus premised, I set downe this rule touching mans provision for worldly wealth. Things necessarie for mans person and his calling, a man may seeke for and lay up; but for abundance, and for superfluities, no man ought to labour or be carefull: hereto Christ hath put this barre, Lay not up treasures for your selves: and Salomon prayes as directly against superfluitie, as against povertie, Prov. 30. 8, 9. Give me not riches nor povertie, (saith he) but feed me with food convenient for me: and he renders this reason against abundance, lest I be full and denie thee, and say, who is the Lord? Now hence I reason thus; looke what we may aske of God, that onely must we seeke for, and no more: but we may onely aske for things necessarie; for to pray for abundance we have no warrant, and therefore we must onely seeke for necessaries, and not for abundance. Hereto the Apostles rule agreeth well, c If we have food and rayment, let us herewith be content: for they that would be rich or abound (as the word signifieth) fall into temptation and snares. Quest. If we may not pray for abundance, what must we doe, if God give abundance? Answ. If God blesse us with abundance, upon our moderate labour and care in our lawfull callings, we must receive it thankfully, and as good stewards lay it up to be bestowed on good uses, either in our families, or in the Church and Commonwealth, as God in his providence shall offer us just occasion.

Now this being evident, that we must onely seeke for things necessarie, and no more; then we must all learne to beware of carking care, and be contented with things necessarie, when God gives them. And to move us hereunto, consider the reasons following: First, it is Gods commandement, that we should be contented with things necessarie, 1 Tim. 6. 8. and therefore we must make conscience of obedience in the practice of contentation. Secondly, they that are greedie after abundance, have many temptations to bad dealing, and so can hardly keepe a good conscience: They fall into snares (as the f Apostle saith) and into many foolish and noysome lusts, which drowne men in perdition and destruction. Thirdly, in time of persecution (which oft accompanies the Gospel) the richer a man is, the more danger he is in to forsake the truth; for the heart of man is naturally so glued to the World, that without Gods speciall grace, it will sooner forsake Christ, than worldly wealth: this we may see in Demas, who to embrace the World, forsooke Paul, 2 Tim. 4. 10. whereupon Christ saith, How hardly can a rich man enter into the kingdome of Heaven. And thus much of the first practice of covetousnesse, which is excessive care and labour after worldly goods.

Marke 10. 23.

The second practice of covetousnesse which Christ here forbids, is when men seeke onely or principally for worldly goods, neglecting spirituall graces in regard thereof. This appeares by the opposition of the next verse unto this, lay not up for your selves earthly treasures, but lay up for your selves treasures in heaven. This was Esaus practice, who sold his birthright for a messe of pottage, Hebr. 12. 16. and the sinne of the Gadarens, that upon the losse of their swine, desired Christ to goe out of their coasts, Luke 8. 37. And this is the sinne of ourage, wherein many things, nay, almost every thing, which may yeeld profit or delight, is cared for above the Word; or else how could there be so much preaching, and so little profiting, but that mens thoughts and delights are taken up with earthly things? but this is a preposterous and disordered care, which every one must labour to reforme, as Christ commands, verse 31.

The second practice of covetousnesse.

The third practice of covetousnesse is forbidden, is to put trust and confidence in worldly things treasured up: this is the Idolatrie of the heart, for looke whereon a man sets his heart, that he makes his God, and therefore is covetousnesse covetousnesse called idolatrie, Colos. 3. 5. Hence it is that Christ makes it so hard a thing for a rich man to enter into heaven, Matth. 19. 23, 24. because they g trust in their riches: and if we marke well, we shall finde it commonly true, that rich men are proud hearted and secure, not regarding Gods judgements, nor the meanes of their salvation; for they h take not God for their strength, that trust in their riches. Davids counsell therefore must be followed, i If riches increase, set not your heart thereon.

The fourth practice here forbidden, is when men lay up for themselves onely, without regard to the Church or Common-wealth, or releefe of the poore. This is a devilish practice: for every one is but a steward of that he hath, to dispense the same for Gods glory to the good of other. The poore are Gods poore, and members of his family, and therefore hee requires, that every steward in his family should see they have their portion: God will call the rich to the raccount, when this will not be taken for good disposing, to say I kept my riches to my selfe: so much will the slothfull servant say, that hides his talent in a napkin. And therefore let us learne to make conscience hereof, with the rest of these bad practices.

Where the mouth and canker corrupt, and where theeves digge thorow and steale. These words containe a speciall reason of the former commandement, to this effect: Earthly treasures, as riches, raiment, &c. are subiect to be carried away by theeves: and therefore we must not excessively or principally seeke after them, set our hearts upon them, or hoord them up for our selves.

The Exposition. The word translated moath, signifieth a worme that eateth the finest cloth, and consumeth the best garment: yet here it must be taken more largely, for any worme that doth destroy or consume any creature. And so the word translated canker, must be largely taken, for any thing that by rust or fretting doth eat into and consume metall, or any other creature.

Here then Christ noteth a two-fold vanitie of the creatures, both in respect of their nature, and of abuse: for their nature, they are subject to corruption by rust, moath, and canker, be the creatures never so pure and costly, as gold, silver, pearles, &c. for the heavens themselves are subject to vanitie. And for abuse, they are subject to the injuries of ungodly persons, theeves may steale them, and covetous persons may hoord them up that they shall serve to no use. Now if all earthly treasures be subject to vanitie both by corruption and abuse, then we must not make them our chiefe creatures, but seeke for them, and use them in a moderate and sober manner. Quest. But whence came this vanitie upon the creatures? Ans. God hath subjected them unto it for the sinne of man, Rom. 8. 20.

The consideration hereof must let us see the grievousnesse of our sinnes, and the greatnesse of Gods anger due thereunto, in that he hath imprinted the stampe of his wrath upon every creature for the sinne of man, by subjecting it to this two-fold vanitie. And therefore when we see a moath upon apparell, or rust and canker upon metall, or other creatures corrupting them, we ought rather to be humbled for our sinnes, than to suffer our hearts to be drawne to immederate desire and delight after earthly things. Secondly, are the creatures that never sinned, subject to vanitie for mans sinne? then how vaine a thing is man, that by his transgression bringeth vanitie upon the creatures? let us therefore in them behold our owne vanitie, and when we pitie them, learne to lament our owne iniquities.

v. 20 But lay up treasures for your selves, &c. Christ having shewed what we must not doe in respect of treasures here on earth, and knowing mans inclination to be such, that he will needs have something for his treasure, doth here come to the second branch of his commandement; shewing what treasure we must lay up for our selves, and enforceth us thereto by a speciall reason. The treasures we must lay up are treasures in heaven. Quest. How should we lay up treasures in heaven, for we cannot of our selves come there; no man can give himselfe; the beginning, progresse, and accomplishment of our Salvation is of God in Christ wholly? Ans. It is usuall with God in Scripture, to ascribe the worke of the principall efficient cause, to the instrument the end. This in the last verse of Obadiah, Preachers, are expresly called Saviours: and 1 Tim. 4. 16. In doing this thou shalt both save thy selfe, and them that heare thee: and 1 Cor. 4. 15. I have begotten you through the Gospel: and yet both salvation and regeneration are the workes of God alone, onely Preachers are the instruments thereof. So in this place, to make us rich with heavenly treasures, is the worke of God alone: for we rather treasure up unto our selves wrath against the day of wrath, by our transgressions: and yet because we are instruments by his grace in the use of meanes to get this treasure, therefore he giveth this commandement unto us, as though the worke were wholly ours, though himselfe be the principall Author.

But yet that we may the better conceive of, and practice this commandement, two points are to be considered. First, what this treasure is: Secondly, how a man must lay it up for himselfe: both these we must marke with reverence, because they are points of great weight and moment, in the practice whereof standeth our salvation. For the first: In searching it out, we will first consider, what is erroneously thought to be this treasure which Christ would have us to lay up. The Church of Rome hath for many hundred yeares, abused the World here-abouts, making the overplus of Christs merits, and of the merits of Saints and Martyrs, to be the trea- sure of the Church, which being gathered together and put into a ſtore-cheſt, is (ſay they) in the Popes cuſtodie; and he alone hath the plenary opening and ſhutting of this cheſt, and the ordering and diſpoſing of theſe merits: by vertue whereof hee gives out Indulgences and Pardons, when and to whom hee will. And hereby indeed he maintaines and upholds his kingdome: for hereby comes infinite wealth and revenewes. But this cannot be the true treaſure; nay, it is corrupt and deceitfull for two cauſes: for firſt, hereby they abaſe the true treaſure which is Chriſts merits, by adding ſupply thereto from the merits of Saints: for if Chriſts merits receive increaſe from the merits of men, then it is not al-ſufficient of it ſelfe, and ſo but a poore treaſure. Secondly, hereby they make the merits of Saints departed, to be the merits of others which live long after them, by the Popes application; which is a thing impoſſible and abſurd: for no man can merit of himſelfe: but ſay he could, yet ſhould his merits be for himſelfe alone and for none other; for every man in regard of ſalvation is a private man, and the reward of his workes he doth that way can onely redound unto himſelfe, onely Chriſt Jeſus our Mediatour, God and man, who was by God himſelfe made a publike perſon for this end, can merit for others.

Anſw.

The true treaſure.

How God is our treaſure.

The true treaſure then (to let the other paſſe) is in a word, the true God, that one onely eternall eſſence in three perſons, who made all things, and governs all things; in him alone is all goodneſſe and happineſſe to be found, Gen.15.1. I am thy buckler, and thine exceeding great reward, ſaith God to Abraham: and Pſal.16.5,6. The Lord is the portion of mine inheritance (ſaith David) --- I have a goodly heritage: which is as much as if he had ſaid, The Lord is my treaſure. I will not ſtand on this, for men by the light of nature have ſeene and ſaid thus much. This rather is to be conſidered, how God becomes our treaſure: And for this end we muſt conceive of God, as he hath revealed himſelfe unto us in Chriſt: for out of Chriſt he is not our God, and ſo not our treaſure; but God incarnate is our treaſure: Col.2.3. In whom, that is, in Chriſt, are hid all the treaſures of wiſdome and knowledge: Col.2.3. Our life, even eternall life, is hid with Chriſt in God, as in a treaſure. 1 Cor.1.21. Chriſt is made unto us of God wiſdome, righteouſneſſe, ſanctification, and redemption: and John 1.16. Of his fulneſſe, as out of a full treaſure, we all receive grace for grace. Now we muſt not reſt in his incarnation, but conceive further of him as he was crucified for us in our nature, and is ſet forth unto us in his Word and Sacraments: for his obedience, death and paſſion is our treaſure, which is revealed and applyed in the Word of promiſe, and in the Sacraments: and this is that thing prepared of God for them that love him, which eye hath not ſeene, eare hath not heard, neither ever entred into the heart of naturall man to conceive, 1 Corinth.2.9. But why (will ſome ſay) ſhould Chriſt crucified be called our treaſure? Anſw. Becauſe he is the fountaine and ſtore-houſe of all true bleſſings conveyed from God to man. Wouldeſt thou have remiſſion of ſinne, and righteouſneſſe with God? why, Chriſt was made ſinne for us, that we might be made the righteouſneſſe of God in him, 2 Cor.5.12. Wouldeſt thou have life everlaſting? This ſame Jeſus Chriſt is very God, and life eternall, 1 John 5. And he that hath him hath life, 1 John 5.12. Wouldſt thou have comfort in diſtreſſe, and true delight in temporall bleſſings? then get Chriſt Jeſus: for he is life in death; and without him, the good things of this life be no bleſſings unto us.

How to lay up Chriſt crucified for our treaſure.

II. Point. Having found what this treaſure is, let us now ſee how every one muſt lay it up for himſelfe: for ſo Chriſt here commandeth, Lay up for your ſelves, &c. That we may lay up Chriſt crucified for our treaſure, we muſt be carefull to doe five things, intimated in the parable of him that bought the field wherein the hidden treaſure was: 1 We muſt finde this treaſure: 2 We muſt value it: 3 Obtaine and get it: 4 Aſſure it to our ſelves: 5 Uſe it as a treaſure.

How to finde the true treaſure.

I. Dutie. We muſt needs finde this treaſure firſt of all, elſe we cannot value it, nor obtaine it, we cannot aſſure it to our ſelves, nor uſe it. And thus much is implyed in that parable, where it is called an hidden treaſure; for we cannot have a thing that is hid before we finde it. Now the finding of this treaſure ſtands in Gods revealing of it unto us, letting vs ſee that naturally we want it, and making us feele that we are poore without it, and therefore ſtand in great need of it, whereupon we begin to ſeeke it. Every revealing of this treaſure is not the finding of it, for God enlightens the minde of man two wayes: firſt, generally, whereby a man in reading the Word is able to conceive the true ſenſe and meaning of it. Secondly, more ſpecially, when beſide the generall ſenſe, God makes a man feele the truth and power of the Word in his owne conſcience: and in this ſpeciall illumination ſtands the true finding. This indeed is a great bleſſing of God, but not common to all: for our naturall eyes cannot diſcerne it, and the more we are dazled with the ſight of worldly treaſures, pompes, and vanities, the blinder we are about this ſpirituall treaſure: yea, this treaſure is hid from many that are able to expound the Word of God truely; as Chriſt ſaith, theſe things are hid (oftentimes) from the wiſe and prudent, and revealed unto babes: for till the Lord give this ſpeciall illumination whereby a man ſees his owne miſerie in himſelfe, and his great need of Chriſts righteouſneſſe, Chriſt is a hidden treaſure unto him. In regard whereof we muſt deſcend into our owne hearts, and there trie whether by the ſenſe of our owne miſerie in our ſelves, and our owne deſire and hungring after Chriſt, God have revealed this treaſure unto us: we may ſay, b we ſee, with the Jewes, and yet be blinde, unleſſe we truely feele the want of Chriſt in our owne ſoules: oh therefore labour for this ſpeciall illumination; for the doctrine of the Goſpell will never be ſweet and pleaſant to us, till we finde this precious treaſure hid therein.

How to value the true treaſure.

II. Dutie. Having found this treaſure, wee muſt highly prize and value it, even above all that we have or can get; nay, more worth than all the world beſides. So did the man in the parable, Mat.13.44. eſteeme the treaſure hid in the field above all his goods: And c Paul ſo eſteemed of Chriſt crucified, that counted all things loſſe for the excellent knowledge ſake of Chriſt, and judged them as dongue that he might win Chriſt. This high eſteeme of Chriſt is needfull, if ever we meane to lay him up for our treaſure; and then have we made good progreſſe in this heavenly purchaſe, when wee truly value Chriſt in our hearts at ſo high a rate: and therefore we muſt endevour our ſelves hereunto, and labour ſo to frame our whole converſation in ſpeeches and in action, that they may teſtifie at how high a rate we value Chriſt. And becauſe the word of God reveales Chriſt Jeſus unto us, in which regard it is d called a treaſure, therefore it alſo muſt be highly valued, even above all earthly things. Thus David did, Pſal.119.72. The law of thy mouth is better unto me than thouſands of gold and ſilver: verſ.127. I love thy commandements above gold, yea, above much fine gold: hereof Wiſdome ſaith, e My fruit is better than gold, even than much fine gold, and my revenewes better than fine ſilver. It were happie for us if we did thus value the word of God. Many hold there is but one truth, and ſo that be knowne, it is no matter whence it is learned, whether out of Gods word, or the writings of men: but they are farre deceived, for the Scriptures of God onely are that truth which is according to godlineſſe; and they alone diſcover unto us this heavenly treaſure, and therefore they muſt have the preheminence in our hearts, and be eſteemed farre above all the writings of men: which if wee would doe, wee ſhould feele that power and comfort of the Word in our hearts, which naturally we lacke.

How to get the true treaſure to our ſelves.

III. Dutie. Having found out, and rightly valued this true treaſure, we muſt ſeeke to get it for our ſelves, and make it our owne: ſo did the man in the parable, (Matth.13.44.) when hee had found the treaſure hid in the field; and ſo Chriſt here commandeth, lay up treaſures for your ſelves. Now that we may get this treaſure to our ſelves, we muſt conſcionably uſe ſuch meanes as God hath appointed for this purpoſe: to wit, I. heare the word of God preached, with all reverence, care, and diligence, labouring to mix it with faith in our hearts: II. receive the Sacraments with all reverence and due preparation: III. pray to God in faith earneſtly and conſtantly for the pardon of our ſinnes, and the fruition of this treaſure. The reaſon hereof is plaine: for the word and Sacraments are as it were the Lords two hands, wherewith he reacheth out this heavenly treaſure and all ſpirituall bleſſings unto us; and our faith is the hand of our ſoule, wherewith we receive them, now by our prayers we teſtifie this faith, and ſanctifie unto our ſelves the two former meanes.

How to make this treaſure ſure to our ſelves.

IV. Dutie. Having gotten this treaſure, we muſt labour to make it ſure unto our ſelves. And to this purpoſe we muſt follow Pauls counſell and charge to rich men: 1 Tim. 6. 17, 18, 19. Charge the rich men in this world, that they be not high minded, neither truſt in uncertaine riches, but in the living God: that they doe good, and be rich in good workes: --- laying up in ſtore for themſelves a good foundation againſt the time to come, that they may obtaine eternall life: whereto marke how by truſting in God, and by liberalitie and bountie, we are exhorted to lay a good foundation. What (will ſome ſay) muſt we be ſaved by our Almes-deeds, and good works? Anſ. Not ſo: for the f ground of our ſalvation is Gods election & love in Chriſt, which he himſelfe hath laid up in heaven for us. But the foundation which we muſt lay up for our ſelves, is in our owne conſcience, for our aſſurance in Gods foundation: and this we lay by our good workes of love, mercie, and juſtice; all which be fruits of faith: and being done in faith, and with ſingleneſſe of heart to Gods glorie, they are ſure teſtimonies of our portion in the true treaſure Jeſus Chriſt: for hereby we know we are tranſlated from death to life, becauſe we love the brethren, 1 John 3.14.

How to uſe Chriſt as our treaſure.

V. Dutie. Having got this treaſure ſure to our ſelves, we muſt uſe it as a treaſure. Hereunto three duties are required: I. Wee muſt have our converſation in heaven, for there Chriſt our treaſure is: and where our treaſure is, there will our hearts be: and if our hearts be on Chriſt in deſire, in joy, and delight, it cannot be but our lives will bee holy and heavenly, though our bodies be here on earth: but let us beware that our affections be not ſet on things below, for then is not Chriſt our treaſure at all. II. We muſt turne our earthly goods into heavenly treaſures. This we doe by imploying them in workes of mercie, for he that gives unto the poore, lends unto the Lord, Prov.19.17. ſo that the mercifull man hath the Lord for his debter: for the Lord ſends the poore man as his meſſenger unto the rich, to borrow of him ſuch things as the poore man lacketh: and the Lords returne of payment is in heavenly bleſſings: and therefore Chriſt himſelfe as it were explaining this point, 2 bids, ſell that ye have, and give almes: make you bagges which wex not old, a treaſure that cannot faile in heaven, where no theefe commeth, neither moath corrupteth: This then is the Lords owne direction, for this happie exchange of earthly goods for heavenly treaſures, than which, who can wiſh a better increaſe. III. Wee muſt rather part with all that wee have, than with Chriſt Jeſus; friends, goods, Countrey, libertie, nay, our owne life, and dearest hearts blood must all goe A for this treasures sake: so doth the good purchaser, part with all he hath for to buy the field in which this treasure is. Matth.13.44. but if we will rather part with Christ, than with some, or with all of these, then we use not Christ as the true treasure. Thus we see how Christ becomes our treasure; let us therefore make conscience to practise these five duties so long as we live: for when Christ becomes our treasure, marke what will follow; we shall finde in our hearts such sweet content therein, that neither prosperitie shall lift us up too high, nor adversitie cast us downe too low; nothing shall daunt us while we have this treasure sure; no kinde of death, no not the day of Judgement.

Thus much of the commandement, now followeth the particular reason thereof: where neither moth nor canker corrupteth, &c. This reason is drawne from the unchangeable certainitie and safetie of this treasure: earthly treasures are subject to corruption, and to losse by stealth; but this heavenly treasure is free from all such things: for the highest heaven is not subject to corruption, nor to the violence of theeves and robbers: and therefore our treasure must bee there. Quest. Why should the highest heavens be free from that vanitie, whereto all creatures else are subject by the sinne of man? Ans. The heavens above, which we looke upon, and the earth below, with all creatures in them, belonged to man by the right of creation, but the B highest heaven is the throne of God: Now when man fell, he was punished not onely in his owne person, but in all the creatures that belonged unto him, which by his sinne were made subject unto vanitie: But the highest heaven was free from that curse, because it did not belong to man by the right of creation, but is a supernaturall gift, whereto we have right and title onely by the grace of Adoption and Redemption in Christ Jesus: now sith man had no right thereto by creation, it was not meet that the sinne of man should make it subject to vanitie or corruption. If therefore the safetie of an enduring substance can allure our hearts to love and like, then let us set our selves for this heavenly treasure.

How the highest heaven is free from vanitie.

v. 21 For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.

This verse containes a reason of the former commandements, common to them both; tending to perswade us to the obedience of them both. The reason standeth thus: Where your treasure is, there will your hearts be also: But your hearts should not be on earth, but in heaven: Therefore lay not up treasures upon earth, but in heaven.

The exposition. By treasure (as we said before) must be understood things precious and excellent in our estimation laid up for time to come, wherein we repose our trust, and take a speciall joy and delight. By heart we must conceive, not onely the affections which are seated in the heart, as love, joy, care, desire, and delight; but the more inward powers of the soule in thought and imagination; yea, and the effects hereof, in action, as labour, studie, and endevour: As if he should say; Your treasure and your heart are joyned together, looke where that thing is wherein you trust, and take chiefe delight, and thereon will your thoughts runne; your love, feare, desire, and care will draw unto it; and your chiefest paines, studie, and endevour will be after it.

The use. Doe heart and treasure goe together? Then here first we learne to search out and trie the state of our owne hearts: for though it be a bottomlesse gulfe, and [b] deceitfull above all things, so as none can throughly know it, yet if we apply this sentence aright, unto our selves, we shall be able to give true judgement of the state of our owne heart. An earthly treasure, and an earthly heart; but heavenly treasure, and an heavenly heart: these cannot be severed: and therefore looke whereon thou spendest thy C thoughts, and setteth thy love, thy care and delight, and bestowest thy wit, industrie, and labour, and thereby judge of the disposition of thy heart. If the thing be earthly and worldly, then thy heart is earthly and carnall: thou maist plead that thou hearest the word, receivest the Sacraments, and prayest often; yet all this will not prove thee to have Christ Jesus for thy treasure: for thine heart being set upon the World, there undoubtedly thy treasure is, and that proves thy heart to be earthly and carnall. And on the contrarie, if thy principall thoughts, thy chiefe love, joy, and delight be on Christ crucified, thy speciall care and industrie be after his merits and righteousnesse, then is Christ thy treasure, and thine heart is heavenly.

b Jerem.17.9. How to trie the state of our owne heart.

Secondly, hereby we may know whether we have any portion in heaven: for looke where our heart is, there our portion is: If our heart in thoughts, desire, and industrie, be set on earthly things, then is our portion upon earth: but if we minde heavenly things, if wee delight in them, and labour after them, then is our portion in heaven. It is not the exercise of religious D actions now and then, but the setling of the heart either on earth or heaven, that shewes where our portion is.

The knowledge of our title to heaven.

Thirdly, this coupling of the heart and treasure together, teacheth us, not to regard this World, nor temporall life, in respect of heaven and life eternall; nay, in this regard we must despise the world and temporall life, so farre forth as it may be done without ingratitude to God, and without hatred of the worke of his hands, and of his temporall blessings: for as earthly creatures are the workmanship of God, so temporall life is his good blessing, given us as a time wherein wee are to prepare our selves for for life eternall; and therefore simply we may not despise it, but onely in respect of life eternall. Now we must shew this high respect to heaven, and to life eternall, above that we have to this world and temporall life, by heavenly meditations, and by spirituall desires, joy, and delight: for if heaven be our treasure, then must our delight be drawne from worldly things, and set on heaven.

v. 22 The light of the body is the eye: if thy eye be single, thy whole body shall be light:
23 But if thine eye be wicked, then all thy body shall be darke. Wherefore if the light that is in thee be darknesse, how great is that darknesse?

These two verses have sundrie expositions, which we must discusse, before we can see the scope and coherence of them in this place. Of sundrie which I take to misse the right scope of Christ in this place, I will onely touch one, which is the most probable: and then set downe that which I take to be the best. By single eye some understand a liberall minde; and by the wicked eye, an envious and covetous minde: and so they make Christ here to speake of liberalitie and covetousnesse. Now it is true that the words will beare this sense, for Salomon puts the good eye, for the liberall and mercifull person: Prov. 22.9. He that hath the good eye, he shall be blessed: for he giveth of his bread unto the poore: and the evill eye, for the covetous person: Prov. 28.22. A man of a wicked eye hasteth unto riches. But though the words will beare this interpretation, yet it is not (as I take it) the proper meaning of Christ in this place: for here, the light of the body, the single eye, and the light that is in us, be all put for one and the same thing. Now the light that is in us, is the understanding and judgement of the minde. Againe, the eye is here called the light of the whole body: but the liberall minde cannot be the light of the whole D body for all actions, but for workes of mercie and bountie onely.

The true meaning.

To come therefore to that which I take to be Christs true meaning: The words containe in them divers similitudes: In the first words, The light of the body is the eye, is a parable taken from a candle in an house; for as a burning candle set up in an house, lighteth the house and all that be in it; so the light of this eye (which is the understanding) lighteth the whole body, and giveth direction to the whole man, in all his actions. In the next words, If thine eye be single, &c. to the end of the 23. verse is a second similitude, which standeth thus: If a man have a good and cleare bodily eye, hee can guide A himselfe in the right way, and keepe his feet from stumbling and from falling: but if his eye be dimme and darke, then he cannot walke without stumbling: and if he want an eye, or that his eye be starke blinde, then of himselfe he cannot walke without stumbling and wandering: so in like manner, if the understanding which is the eye of the minde, be found and cleare, able to judge of good and evill, then is the whole life well ordered: but if the judgement be corrupt, then is there much disorder in the life: and if it be cleane put out, then is there nothing but brutish confusion.

Thus stand the comparisons in these words: Now the meaning of them is this. The first words are plaine, The light of the body is the eye, that is, the eye gives light for the direction of the bodie; as a light in an house directs the housholders in their affaires. If thine eye be single, &c. By eye here is meant the minde, resembled by the bodily eye: and the single eye is the understanding minde, able to judge of good and evill, of things to be done, and not to be done. Thy whole body shall be light: by body is meant, the life, and by light is meant, well ordered and directed: for the minde is to the life for the directing of it, that which the eye is to the body for the ordering thereof. But if thine eye be wicked, &c. The wicked eye is the corrupt minde, having the understanding darkned, and judgement so depraved, that it cannot rightly discerne of good and evill, what is to be done, and what B is to be left undone. Then all thy body shall be darke; that is, thy whole life in all thine actions shall be full of sinne and disorder. Wherefore if the light that is in thee be darknesse; that is, if the naturall light of reason and judgement left in man after the fall, be quite extinguished. How great is that darknesse? that is, wonderfull shall his corruption and disorder be; yea, so full of confusion, that there shall be no difference betweene his life, and the life of a brute beast. And this I take to be Christs proper meaning.

Coherence.

Now the words thus explained, depend upon the former as an answer to a secret objection, which the heart of man might frame unto it selfe, against these two commandements, to this effect: If there be such necessitie of laying up treasures in heaven, and of avoiding to lay up treasures in earth, then why doe not the most wise and learned men of our time doe so; they seeke more for earthly treasures than for heavenly? Hereto Christ answers thus, as if he had said; marvell not at this, for they want the single eye, the understanding minde to discerne of things that differ, they cannot judge aright of the true treasure, and so not knowing the heavenly, they seeke the earthly treasure onely. Now that we may perceive the words of Christ thus to answer the former objection, we must know that Christ doth here presuppose thus much; that everie mans eye is either single, corrupt, or blinde: and the single eye which is a good a good vnderstanding, befalls not all men, no not all wise and learned men, but them onely to whom God in mercie gives it. But the corrupt eye befalls everie man naturally. And some by sinne put out the light of nature, and so become senselesse in spirituall things. And hence it is, that all men naturally wanting the single eye, and having the corrupt eye, yea, many having the blinde eye, doe not discerne of the true treasure: and so leave the heavenly, and give themselves wholly to the earthly.

Thus we see both the meaning and the coherence, leading us to the maine cause of covetousnesse, with the blinde eye of the minde not able to discerne of true spirituall treasure. Now in the words these three points are to be handled: I. The single eye, with the fruits thereof: II. The wicked eye, with his fruits. III. The darke and blinde eye, with the fruits thereof.

I. Point. The single eye is the minde of man indued with some portion of true heavenly wisdome; and the sense of it is to give the body light. To know this single eye the better we must fetch out what true wisdome is. This true heavenly wisdome is no common gift, which every professour may have, but a speciall gift of God in Christ, peculiar to them that doe truely beleeve in him. 1 Corinth.1.30. Christ is made wisdome vnto vs of God; not onely because hee is the matter of our wisdome, we being then onely truely wise, when we know Christ and him crucified; but also because hee is the root from whence all our wisdome springs: for being ingraffed into Christ by faith, we become, as it were, [a] flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bones, and so are not onely made just by the imputation of his obedience, but doe also receive inherent holinesse and wisdome from him; our wisdome and holinesse being derived from his, as the branch is from the stocke, and the fruit from the root. And this wisdome befalls not at all to the Devill and his angels, though they know much, nor to all that are Christians in name; but onely to the members of his mysticall bodie by faith.

This heavenly wisdome hath two actions: First, to discerne aright of things that differ, and to distinguish one thing from another spiritually: this Paul prayed for in the behalfe of the Philippians, Phil.1.9. That their love might abound more and more in knowledge, and in all iudgement or [b] sense, that so they might discerne things that differ: that is, good from evill, and heavenly from earthly; what to doe, and what to leave undone, which is a propertie of men of age in religion, who through long custome attaine hereunto, Hebr. 5. 14. And hence it is that the childe of God can, I. discerne the voyce of Christ, the true shepherd, from the voyce of all false teachers. II. By this gift of discerning, he can put a difference betweene the water of Baptisme, and all other water; and betweene the Bread and Wine in the Lords Table, and common bread and wine. III. Hereby the Church, and everie true member of it is enabled to judge rightly of crosses, distinguishing fatherly chastisements, from Gods plagues and curses for sinne. IV. Hereby he can discerne the things of God, even his owne election, his vocation, adoption, and justification; these and such he can perceive in himselfe more or lesse. V. In a word, hereby he can discerne the true treasure, from worldly; hereby he knowes the excellencie of heavenly things, above earthly. These things the naturall man cannot, but the spirituall man discerneth all things, 1 Cor.2.15. looke whatsoever befalls him, therein he can see the hand of God working for his good, therein he can discerne Gods wisdome, power, and providence: in all which we may perceive the most excellent use of this heavenly wisdome.

The second action of this heavenly wisdome, is to judge, determine, and give sentence of things, what is to be done, what is not to be done; what is good, and what is evill in practice and behaviour. And here this one thing must be remembred, that the principall point of this wisdome is to determine of true happinesse, whereto the whole life of man ought to be directed: which happinesse is the love and favour of God in Christ. Herein David shewes his heavenly wisdome, farre different from the wisdome of the World, Psal.4.6. Many say, who will shew us any good? there is the worldlings happinesse; But Lord lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us; there is true happinesse: so Paul comming among the wisest of the Gentiles, professeth, that he esteemed to know nothing but Christ, and him crucified: 1 Cor.2.2. for whose excellent knowledge sake, he thought all things to be losse, Philip. 3.8. And the same should be our wisdome; for though a man had all humane learning and policie, yet if he faile in this, rightly to determine of true happinesse, all his wisdome would prove foolishnesse; for [c] the wisdome of this World is foolishnesse with God: and therefore if any man seeme to be wise in this World, let him be a foole, that he may be wise; that is, a foole to the World in esteeming the knowledge of Christ crucified onely true wisdome; and the favour of God in him, true happinesse; that so he may be wise indeed in the sight of God. Another chiefe part of this heavenly wisdome, is a spirituall and godly providence, whereby we fore-cast by all meanes how to compasse and come by true happinesse: herein the power of heavenly wisdome is shewed. And without this, though otherwise a man discerne the right, yet his knowledge and wisdome is imperfect and unprofitable. And thus we see the actions of this heavenly wisdome, whereby we may describe it thus: It is a gift of Gods spirit to them that are in Christ, whereby they are enabled to discerne of things that differ, and to judge and determine what is that true happinesse, whereto the life of man ought to tend; and withall to forecast and provide by what good and lawfull meanes it may bee compassed. And hee whose minde is endued herewith in some measure, hath the single eye.

Now the fruit of this single eye is, to make the whole body light; that is, to bring the whole life in good order, guiding it in the pathes of righteousnesse, and making it to abound in good workes. Prov.8.19,20. My fruit (saith wisdome) is better than fine gold. -- I cause to walke in the way of righteousnesse, and in the mids of the pathes of iudgement. Prov.16.23. The wise heart guideth the mouth wisely, and addeth doctrine vnto his lips.

The use. 1. Considering the minde endued with this wisdome is thus commended; wee must hereby learne, to labour for it in a speciall manner: beside this commendation of it by our Saviour Christ which should be a spurre to provoke us to this dutie, the singular commoditie that redounds hereby to soule and body must move vs to affect it. Now that we may the better obtaine this heavenly wisdome, we must be carefull of these two things especially: First, to get the feare of God into our hearts, which is the beginning of this heavenly wisdome, Psal.111.10. Now this feare of God is a reverend awe of the heart towards God, whereby a man is fearefull to offend, and carefull to please God in all things. And this we shall get, if we receive the word of God with reverence, and apply it to our owne soules when we heare it: trembling thereat when it toucheth our consciences, and humbly submitting our selves unto it without raging or repining; saying, as Hezekiah did to the Prophets reproofe, [d] The word of the Lord is good. Secondly, we must wholly close up our eyes, (the eyes of our minde I meane) and suffer our selves in all things to be over-ruled and ordered by the written Word of God. This was [e] Davids practice: he gave himselfe to continuall meditation in the Word of God: he made it a [f] lanterne to his feet, and a light unto his paths. And hereby he became [g] wiser than his enemies, and got more understanding than all his teachers. Wouldest thou then be truely wise? become a foole to the world, leane not to thine owne wisdome; but make Gods Word thy whole direction.

Secondly, hereby wee are taught to walke wisely in our whole conversation, that so it may appeare we have this single eye: hereto [h] Paul oft exhorteth us. And thus we walke when we practise every action of our life in wisdome, according to these foure rules, which are to be observed in every good action: I. The thing we doe must be just. II. The meanes of effecting it must also be just. III. We must keepe our selves therein, within the compasse and limits of our calling. IV. Wee must doe the thing with an honest, upright, and single heart. And that we may worke wisely according to these foure rules, we must ever have the Word of God, to tell us what is just; what meanes be just; what be the precincts of our calling; and when wee worke with an upright and single heart: so doing, our workes shall be in wisdome, and we shall have the approbation and praise of God.

Thirdly, seeing this single eye of spirituall wisdome, makes our life to shine with righteousnesse, we must learne to season our naturall wit, with this spirituall wisdome. Naturall wisdome is a commendable gift of God, but without this spirituall wisdome it is foolishnesse in the things of God, yea, very corrupt in naturall actions; and therefore wee must joyne therewith this heavenly wisdome, which may season it, and make it holy; and so shall the use of it tend to Gods glory. It is the miserie of this age, that men of excellent parts for naturall wisdome, have no regard to season the same with spirituall wisdome: hereby come many aberrations in matters of great importance, for it is Justice with God to curse their proceedings, that despising the heavenly, leane altogether to their owne wisdome.

Fourthly, seeing spirituall providence in forecasting how to compasse true happinesse, is a speciall part of true heavenly wisdome; wee must become carefull practitioners hereof in our lives, that so we may attaine to true happinesse. When the rich [i] mans ground brought forth much fruit, how provident was he to lay up store for the time to come: yet God calls him but a foole, because he had no regard or forecast to the state of his soule. And the five virgins are therefore called [k] foolish, because they contented themselves with blazing lamps, and had no forecast for oyle in their vessels: and so many at this day content themselves with an outward profession, and doe not provide for the graces of salvation. But though a man had all the wisdome of the world, and by his wit could compasse upon earth what his heart could wish, yet if he faile in providing for true happinesse, all his wisdome is but madnesse: see this in [l] Achitophel, whose counsell for worldly things was like the oracle of God, yet wanting this spirituall wisdome to forecast for true happinesse to his soule, his end was both shamefull and fearefull: for in a discontent, [m] he went and hanged himselfe. Let us therefore practise this wise forecast for true happinesse, and never be well till we get assurance hereof; then doe we shew ourselves truely wise. If we faile in this we faile in all; and therefore like the wise Virgins, let us get oyle in our vessels, the saving graces of Gods spirit in our hearts, that when our bridegroome Jesus Christ shall come, we may enter with him into glory. And thus much of the single eye, with the fruits thereof.

The second point to be handled is the wicked eye, with the fruits thereof; in these words, But if thine eye be wicked, thy whole body shall be darke. The wicked eye is the minde of man, having some light of understanding in it by nature, yet marvellously blinded and darkned by the corruption of sinne through Adams fall.

The wicked eye with the fruits thereof.

And for our better inſtruction herein, we muſt know, that the minde of man by Adams fall receives a twofold blemiſh: firſt, it hath loſt the gift of diſcerning and judging in ſpirituall things, miſtaking evill for good, earthly for heavenly, things to be refuſed, for things to be choſen. This is plaine by our blindneſſe and ignorance in the true knowledge of God, and of our ſelves. Firſt, touching God, howſoever the minde of man by nature know there is a God, yet naturally man will not acknowledge the preſence of God: for if he did, he would not without remorſe or feare commit thoſe ſinnes in Gods ſight, which he is afraid and aſhamed to doe in the ſight of many men. Againe, the minde by nature will not acknowledge Gods particular providence, for in the time of want or diſtreſſe when meanes faile, his heart is dead within him: and the promiſe of helpe from man doth more cheere him, than his hope in God; which ſhewes plainly that hee truſteth more in the creature, than in his Creatour. Thirdly, the minde of man by nature doth not acknowledge Gods juſtice, for naturally man thinkes, that though he ſinne, yet he ſhall eſcape puniſhment, as Deut. 26. 16. Fourthly, though man know God muſt be worſhipped, yet naturally the minde diſcerneth not of Gods right worſhip: herein the foolish heart is full of darkeneſſe, and turneth God into an Idoll, Rom.1.21,22. And in a word, the naturall man perceiveth not the things of God, neither can he know them, becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned, 1 Corinth. 2.14. which ſhewes plainely that herein hee hath a wicked eye.

Secondly, for our ſelves, the minde herein wants the gift of diſcerning: for, I. No man naturally knows the blindneſſe of his owne minde, they thinke themſelves to be wiſe, when in the things of God they be ſtarke fooles. II. Man cannot diſcerne aright of his owne ſinnes, nor ſee the vileneſſe of them naturally, though his conſcience oft accuſe him; for if he did, he would not ſinne as he doth: III. Man naturally doth judge amiſſe of his owne frailtie and mortalitie, for there is no man ſo aged, but he thinkes he may live longer. This Moſes ſaw when he prayed God to teach them ſo to number their dayes, that they might apply their hearts unto wiſdome. IV. Naturall men cannot diſcerne aright of the ſcope and end of their lives: for whereas we ought to aime at the glory of God, and the good of our brethren, to ſerve God in mens good: by nature we little thinke on this, but wholly ſeeke our owne good, and our owne praiſe. V. We cannot naturally diſcerne of our owne true happineſſe; for doe we not meaſure it by outward things, eſteeming the rich and honourable happy, and the poore man miſerable? By all which it is more than evident, that the minde hath loſt the gift of right diſcerning.

The ſecond blemiſh of corruption in the minde is, in reſpect of it ſtubborn ſubjection unto thoſe things which it ſhould rule and direct: for naturally it is ſubject to theſe three unmeet guides: I. to the corrupt will and affections: II. to the wicked temptations of the devill caſt into it, yea, and that ſo farre, that ſuch as the temptation is, ſuch is the minde that is tempted: III. to the World, and the ill examples therein: for naturally men ſway with the times, and thinke the common courſe the ſafeſt. And in this reſpect alſo is it here called a wicked eye.

The fruit of a wicked eye.

Now the fruit of it is, to make the whole body darke; that is, the whole life of man full of diſorder and unrighteouſneſſe. And how ſhould it be otherwiſe, when that which ſhould diſcerne betweene good and evill, and direct accordingly, is diſtalled thereunto.

The uſe. I. Seeing by nature we have this evill eye (for that Chriſt taketh for granted) we muſt labour diligently to diſcerne it in our ſelves, and to finde that naturally we cannot judge aright of God and of our ſelves. This is the firſt ſtep to true knowledge, to diſcerne of our owne naturall blindneſſe: and till we perceive it in our ſelves in ſome meaſure, we know nothing as we ought to know. Alſo when we ſee it, we muſt bewaile our miſerie in this behalfe, that we have a minde ſo corrupt, that it cauſeth diſorder in our whole life: yea, we muſt tremble and feare at this wicked eye. Bodily darkeneſſe cauſeth feare, but farre more dangerous is this ſpirituall darkeneſſe: for hereby the ſoule is kept from the ſight of God under the power of Satan. We therefore diſcerning in our ſelves this wicked eye, muſt follow the counſell of our Saviour Chriſt, Revel.3.18. Buy of me eye-ſalve, that thou mayeſt ſee: that is, we muſt get of him the enlightning of his Spirit, in the holy miniſterie of his Word; for this is that anoiming which teacheth us all things, 1 John 2.27. which when we doe truely receive, then doth our wicked eye become ſingle.

Secondly, hereby we ſee that the courſe of the world, in regard of the ſtate of their mindes, is juſtly to be reproved; for every where both young and old content themſelves with this wicked eye, if they can ſay, there is a God, and this God is to be worſhipped, to be loved, and feared; and that we muſt love our neighbour as our ſelves, and live well, they ſeeke no further: and yet if a man were brought up in the wildernеſſe, he might ſee all this by the light of nature; the wicked eye ſeeth thus much: but we muſt not content our ſelves herewith, for if there be no more, the life is full of darkeneſſe ſtill; and the ſoule may goe to utter darkeneſſe with all this. We therefore muſt remember to get the ſingle eye, elſe wee are no Schollers in the Schoole of Chriſt. Indeed ſome plead, that Preachers can ſay no more in effect but this, Love God above all, and thy neighbour as thy ſelfe: but theſe men know not what they ſay, bleſſing themſelves in their ignorance: they muſt know that grace muſt be put to nature, and ſanctifie it; and ſpirituall knowledge joyned with naturall, or elſe we remaine with the wicked wicked eye. If we have no more but a generall confuſed knowledge in morall points, that ſerves not to ſave us, but to make us without excuſe at the laſt day. Againe, another common fault worthie the reproofe is this, that men content themſelves with naturall reformation; they will grant that God is to be worſhipped, and loved, that we muſt live well, deale juſtly, and love our neighbours: but the blinde eye ſeeth thus much. The meere civill man will goe thus farre, and yet his life is nothing but darkeneſſe: all this reformation is but naturall. We therefore muſt labour for renewed hearts, by the Spirit of God, and reformed lives according to the Goſpel; for howſoever a civill converſation may commend us unto men, yet it will not ſave us in the day of the Lord.

Thirdly, is this evill eye in every one by nature? then beware we be not wiſe in our ſelves, and from your ſelves, in matters of ſalvation; herein the Word of God muſt be our wiſdome; Deut.12.8.--11.-- Ye ſhall not doe every man that which ſeemeth good in his owne eyes--but that which I command you. Farre be it therefore from us to appoint to our ſelves, how we will worſhip God, or how we will be ſaved: and yet ſuch is our blinde preſumption, that we will be our owne maſters in theſe things. The Turke hath his religion, the Jew his, and the Papiſt his, all ſwarving from the truth of God: and yet every one of theſe looke to be ſaved in their religion: each one of theſe have a different manner of worſhipping God, and all ſwarving from the true worſhip: and yet they all perſwade themſelves that God is well pleaſed with their ſervice. And thus it goes with naturall men among us, though otherwiſe ſufficiently wiſe for worldly things; they reſolve upon their owne courſe for the ſalvation of their ſoules, let the preacher ſay what he will: ſome thinke, if they repent at their end, and then commend their ſoules to God, it is ſufficient; others looke to be ſaved by their well-doing, and others by their faith (as they call it:) but in truth, by their owne good meaning, and intent to live well; for what faith have they that know not Gods word and promiſes? Thus by their owne wiſdome will men be ſaved, and hereby the Devill deſtroies many a ſoule: but let God be wiſe, and every man a foole, and let us ſubmit our ſelves in the things of God, wholly to be ruled and guided by his written Word, leſt Jewiſhly and Popiſhly, we going about to ſtabliſh our owne conceits in the matters of ſalvation, doe plunge our ſoules into the pit of deſtruction.

The eye of faith muſt be ſingle.

Fourthly, is the eye of the minde naturally corrupt? then muſt we labour for a better eye; that is, the eye of faith, by which we relie on Gods mercie for our ſalvation, and on his providence for all needfull things in life and death. This eye makes ſupply to that which is wanting to naturall knowledge; hereby wee diſcerne rightly of God, and of our ſelves; this enables us to ſee afarre off: yea, hereby we ſee things invisible. for it is the evidence of things which are not ſeene, Hebr.11.1. hereby Abraham ſaw the day of Chriſt, and was glad, John 8.58. and all the Patriarkes ſaw the promiſe of God afarre off, Hebr.11.13. This will inable us to walke in their ſteps towards the heavenly Citie; and therefore let us get this faith, and ſo becomming children of the promiſe, wee may bee counted for the ſeed. And thus much for the wicked eye.

3. The blinde eye.

The third kinde of eye is the blinde eye, which is ſet out with the fruits thereof, in theſe words; Whereforeif the light that is in thee be darkeneſſe, how great is that darkeneſſe? For the better diſcerning of the ſtate of man with this blinde eye, we muſt ſee what is meant by light, and alſo by darkeneſſe. By light is meant that knowledge of God, of juſtice, and of good and evill, which is in the minde by nature: now though this cannot be quite put out, (for the moſt wicked wretch, and the veriеſt Atheiſt that lives, hath ſome conſcience remaining, which is a worke of this light) yet it may be ſo buried and covered, that no light ſhall appeare, nor any uſe be made of it; and then it is laid to be darkeneſſe: which is the ſtate of thoſe that are given up to a reprobate ſenſe, as when a man denies there is a God, or that the Scriptures be the Word of God, or ſuch like; in theſe men naturall light is become darkeneſſe. And the cauſe of this change in them, is their corrupt will and rebellious affections, which overruling naturall knowledge and conſcience, cauſe men to give themſelves to actuall ſinnes, whereby at length they come to commit ſinne greedily and without remorſe; yea, even againſt conſcience, and the light of nature, and ſo bury them both in ſuch ſort, that they have no more uſe of them, than if they were quite put out.

The fruit of the blinde eye.

Now where the light of nature is thus put out, the fruit of it is moſt palpable darkeneſſe: How great is that darkeneſſe? that is, there is nothing in that mans life, but bruitiſh confuſion in beſtiall actions, of pride, covetouſneſſe, envie, blaſphemie, and unnaturall uncleanneſſe; as Rom.1.27,29, &c.

A motive to conſider our naturall vileneſſe.

The uſe. Conſidering the light of nature may be thus put out, we muſt hereby be admoniſhed; Firſt, to enter into a ſerious conſideration of our owne vileneſſe; for naturally we have in us (even the beſt of us all) ſuch rebellious luſt, and damnable deſires, as unleſſe they be reſtrained, or renewed by grace, will darken, and as good as put out the light of nature. This ſhould make us vile in our owne eyes, that nouriſh ſuch corruptions, and eſteeme of ſinne, which will put out that light which yet Adams fall left in us.

To mortifie corrupt deſires.

Secondly, hereby we are admoniſhed to have ſpeciall care to mortifie our corrupt deſires, and our unruly affections, that elſe will extinguiſh in us the light of nature. Before the fall, the minde ruled and directed the will and affections; but now theſe inferiour powers rule, or rather other over-rule the minde, and utterly pervert the regiment thereof: they caſt a miſt, and a vaile over the eye of the minde that it can ſee nothing in the wayes of righteouſneſſe: and therefore as wee tender the ſilvation of our ſoules, wee muſt renounce our owne naturall wills and corrupt deſires, and ſtrive to bring them into ſubjection unto the Word of God. Many men thinke much to be croſſed of their naturall deſires and delights, but it is happie for the ſoule, when God in his providence doth breake men of their wills: for the will unſubdued carries the whole man headlong into all diſorder. This muſt bee conſidered of them which have knowledge and learning, for unleſſe the will and affections bee ruled by the Word, all knowledge is made fruitleſſe: Out of the heart (ſaith [a] Salomon) come the iſſues of life, if it be kept with watch and ward, and ordered by Gods Word: otherwiſe hence come the iſſues of death, when the reines of the affections are let looſe after the corrupt deſires of nature: and therefore as we reſpect woe or joy, ſo muſt we have regard to our will and deſires.

Thirdly, if the ligit of nature may be turned into darkeneſſe, then may the illumination of the Goſpel be put out and turned into darkneſſe; for the knowledge of the Goſpel is not naturall, and therefore not ſo deeply imprinted in the underſtanding, upon the bare knowledge of it, ſxperience ſheweth this to be true, in all thoſe temporizers which begin in the ſpirit, and end in the fleſh: and the Author to the Hebrewes ſhewes five degrees of Apoſtaſie, by which the illumination of the Goſpel is turned into darkeneſſe, Hebr. 3.12. ſaying, Take heed leſt there be in any of you an evill heart of unbeleefe, &c. where the firſt degree is conſenting unto ſinne, being deceived with the temptation of it. The ſecond is hardneſſe of heart, upon many practices of ſinne. Thirdly, the heart being hardened, becomes unbeleeving, and calls the truth of the Goſpel into queſtion. Fourthly, by unbeleeſe it becomes evill, having a baſe conceit of the Goſpel. Fifthly, this evill heart brings a man to Apoſtaſie, and falling from God, which is the extinguiſhing of the light of the Goſpel. We therefore to prevent this feareſull eſtate, muſt embrace the Goſpel, and practiſe the counſell there ſet downe; even by looking carefully everie one to his owne heart and life, and by mutuall admonition and exhortation one of another, verſ. 13. that ſo the firſt ſtep of this Apoſtaſie, which is the deceitfulneſſe of ſinne, take not place in us.

Fourthly, ſeeing the light of nature may be put out, whether may not true faith, and other ſaving graces be quite loſt? Anſw. There is no grace of God, but conſidered in it ſelfe, it may be loſt; for it is a creature, and ſo is changeable, for nothing is unchangeable in it ſelfe, but the Creatour: but in regard of the promiſe of God, touching the preſervation of ſaving grace unto the end, in ſuch as bee in Chriſt, hence it comes that faith, hope, and charitie cannot be loſt; for the gifts and calling of God, are without repentance in Chriſt. God indeed gave to Adam true and perfect grace, whereby he might have ſtood if he would; but becauſe he decreed to permit the fall, to make a way for his mercie in Chriſt, therefore he left man in the hand of his owne counſell, and ſo he fell from his created integritie: but now in Chriſt God workes both the will and the deed, ſo as hee which doth truely beleeve, [b] is as Mount Zion; which cannot bee removed, but ſtandeth faſt for ever: for he is built upon the [c] rocke Chriſt Jeſus, and ſo can never fall: the gates of hell ſhall not prevaile againſt him: God gives a ſecond grace unto the firſt, and by vertue hereof it becomes unchangeable, though in it ſelfe conſidered, it might be loſt. Againe, I anſwer thus; that as the light of nature is not quite put out, but onely buried, in ſuch ſort as it is without uſe, and ſeemes extinguiſhed; ſo the grace of faith, by the practice of ſinne, may be hid and covered, ſo as it ſhall not appeare for a time: but yet it cannot be quite put out, where it is once truely wrought. And thus much of the bliude eye, with the fruit thereof.

[c] Matth.16.16.

Now to end this place, we muſt remember that the ſcope of Chriſt in theſe two verſes, is to ſhew that the evill and blinde eye of man by nature, whereby he is diſabled to diſcerne rightly of things that differ, is the cauſe why in ſeeking after treaſure, hee leaveth the heavenly, and ſeeketh earthly treaſure onely. And hereby we muſt be admoniſhed to labour for this gift of diſcerning, by the illumination of the Spirit in the Word, as we ſhewed before, that ſo the eye being ſingle, the whole body may be light: that is, ſo ordered, that with peace and comfort we may walke on in the way of life: whereas otherwiſe we walke in darkneſſe, and feare no danger till we fall into it irrecoverably.

v. 24. No man can ſerve two maſters --: for either hee ſhall hate the one, and love the other; or elſe he ſhall leane to the one, and deſpiſe the other. Yee cannot ſerve God and Mammon.

Here Chriſt meeteth with a ſecond objection, which the carnall heart of man might frame againſt the former commandements, v. 19. and 20. for whereas Chriſt had forbidden the treaſuring up of worldly riches, and commanded the ſeeking of heavenly treaſure; ſome man might flatter himſelfe with this perſwaſion, he might ſeeke both, and lay up both treaſures for himſelfe in earth, and in heaven alſo. To this Chriſt anſwers, No: that is impoſſible; and he proves it thus: No man can ſerve two Maſters: But to ſeeke the temporall and earthly treaſures, is to ſerve two maſters: to wit, God and Mammon: and therefore no man can ſeeke them both. The firſt part of this reaſon is fully ſet downe, and proved in the text, by the effect of ſuch ſervice in contrary affections and behavior: for either hee ſhall hate the one, and love the other, &c. The aſſumption and concluſion are neceſſarily implyed in the laſt words, Yee cannot ſerve God and Mammon: wherein Chriſt applies the former argument.

The Expoſition. No man can ſerve two Maſters. This may well be doubted of; for experience ſhewes, that by their mutuall conſent, one Factor may ſerve divers Merchants. Hereto ſome anſwer thus, that it is implied, the maſters muſt be of diverſe and contrary qualities; as when one ſaith, come and doe this; the other ſaith, doe it not: and then no man can ſerve them both: and thus the words containe an holy truth. But yet becauſe no clauſe is expreſſed, implying contrariety in the maſters, therefore I take it, the words muſt bee taken as a common proverb among the Jewes, which Chriſt layes downe for the ground of his reaſon. Now in a Proverb it is not requiſite it ſhould be alwayes true, but for the moſt part, and ordinarily: as Luk.4.24. No Prophet is accepted in his owne countrey: that is, ordinarily. For either he ſhall hate the one that is, the one Maſter commanding him; either diſliking that he ſhould be his Maſter, or diſpleaſed with his commandements: And love the other; that is, the other Maſter in whom hee taketh delight, and is well pleaſed with his commandements. Or elſe he ſhall leane to the one, and deſpiſe the other. Theſe words are an explication of the former, ſhewing how it may appeare, that a ſervant hates one maſter and loves another: namely, his leaning to the one, declares his love unto him: that is, his applying of himſelfe to reſpect his maſters pleaſure, and to doe his commandement. And his deſpiſing the other, declares his hatred, when hee hath no regard to his commandements. Ye cannot ſerve God and Mammon. By Mammon hee meaneth riches, lucre, and gaine: Now he ſaith not, Ye cannot ſerve God and have riches; for Abraham, Jacob and Iob, were very rich, and yet ſerved God ſincerely: but ye cannot ſerve God, and ſerve riches: that is, give your ſelves to ſeeke riches, and ſet your hearts upon them, and ſerve God alſo.

Inſtructions. I What it is to ſerve God.

In the words thus explaned, we may obſerve ſundry inſtructions: Firſt, here Chriſt ſheweth what it is to ſerve God: a point much ſpoken of, but little knowne, and leſſe practiſed. To ſerve God therefore is to love God, and to cleave unto him. Every one will ſay, he loveth God, and ever hath done; but bewareherein of ſpirituall guile, for true love conſiſts not in word and tongue, but in deed, and in truth: and God muſt be loved, not onely as he is a bountifull father, but as he is a Lord and Maſter, and doth command us ſervice. The written Word ſhewes his will and pleaſure, concerning us, what hee requireth at our hands; and if we ſerve him in deed, wee muſt love him in his power of commanding, though he ſhould beſtow no reward upon us. This David ſheweth notably, Pſalm. 119.25. I am thy ſervant, grant mee therefore underſtanding that I may know thy teſtimonies. Againe, if we ſerve God, wee muſt cleave unto him, and thereby teſtifie our love: now what is meant by cleaving unto, is notably expreſſed in the parable of the prodigall ſonne, Luk.15.15. where it is ſaid of him, that having ſpent his portion, hee clave to a citizen of that country; that is, he reſigned and gave himſelfe to his ſervice: So to cleave unto God is to reſigne a mans ſelfe unto Gods ſervice, in obedience to all his commandements, and embracing all his promiſes: not ſuffering himſelfe to be drawne from any part of Gods word, by unbeleefe or diſobedience, though all the world ſhould ſet againſt us. This David alſo profeſſed of himſelfe, ſaying, [a] I have cleaved to thy teſtimonies, O Lord: and [b] I ſhall not be confounded when I have reſpect to all thy commandements. On the contrary, when a man with-drawes himſelfe from God, by diſobedience to his commandements, and by unbeleefe, then he doth hate and deſpiſe him. Indeed the vileſt wretch that lives, is aſhamed with open mouth to profeſſe hatred and deſpite of God, but yet the bad practice in life, bewrayeth the bad affection of the heart: Prov. 14.2. He that is lewd or perverſe in his wayes, deſpiſeth God; and they that live in the breach of his commandements hate [c] him, let them profeſſe in word what they will.

[c] Exod.20.5.

Now the conſideration hereof, ſerveth, Firſt, to diſcover unto us the groſſe blindneſſe and ſuperſtitious ignorance of the world; who thinke that if a man rehearſe the Lords prayer, the Creed, and the ten Commandements, he ſerves God well, let his life be what it will: but here Chriſt teacheth us a further thing; if we will be Gods ſervants, we muſt cleave unto him both in the affections of our heart, and in the actions of obedience in our life. Thus did Abraham, when God ſaid unto him, Thou ſhalt not kill, he kept himſelfe from murther; but when he ſaid, [d] Abraham, kill thy ſonne, he addreſſed himſelfe to doe it, though hee were the ſonne of the promiſe, and the onely ſonne of his old age. Secondly, this ſheweth how Atheiſme abounds in all places at this day: for to hate and deſpiſe God is flat Atheiſme: now they that withdraw their hearts from God, and ſet themſelves to ſeeke the things of this world, neglecting obedience to Gods holy commandements, are here accounted of Chriſt, deſpiſers and haters of God; and the number of ſuch is great in every place. I know ſuch men doe ſcorne to be called Atheiſts, but how they be eſteemed in the world, it skilleth not, till they reforme this wicked practice, they are no better in the ſight of Chriſt

Vſe. 1 The ignorance of the world.

2 Atheiſme aboundes.

Secondly, whereas God and Mammon are here opposed as two masters; hence we learne that Mammon, that is, riches, is a great lord and master in the world; this Christ here takes for granted, and therefore doth forewarne his Disciples of it. But how (will some say) can riches be a God? Ans. Not in themselves, for so they are the good creatures of God, but to the corrupt heart of man, which makes an Idoll of them to it selfe, by setting his love and delight upon them, as on true happinesse, and resting in them more than in the true God: and for this cause is covetousnesse called idolatry, Col.3.5. and the covetous person an Idolater, Ephes.5.5. for looke whereon man sets his heart, that is his Lord and his God, though it be the devill himselfe. Now that men doe thus set up riches in their hearts, as an Idoll, and so become servants and slaves to that which God ordained to serve them, I shew plainly thus: For first, they neglect the worship and service of God for lucre and gaine, and spend more time with greater delight for earthly riches, than they doe for the true treasures of Gods heavenly graces. Secondly, let a man have worldly wealth at will, and he is full of joy and delight, his riches give him true contentment; but if he lose his goods, then vexation and sorrow doth more oppresse him, than all the promises of God in the Bible can comfort him. Thirdly, by transgressing Gods commandements, a man loseth heaven; but who is so grieved for his transgressions, where-by hee incurres this losse, as hee is for a small dammage in some part of his riches? Fourthly, I appeale to mens consciences, whether they be not farre more sharpe and eager set upon the meanes of gaine, than on prayer and other parts of Gods worship, which are the meanes of grace; all which doe argue plainly, that they serve Mammon, and honour riches for their God. So that howsoever by Gods blessing outward Idolatry may bee banished out of our Church, yet we have many Idolatours in our Land; for every covetous worldling sets up the Idoll of wealth and riches in his heart for his lord. And that these Mammonists abound every where, appeares by the common practices of oppression, extortion, and cruelty, in hard dealing towards the poore, by greedy Land-lords and Usurers; as also by the practices of the rich in the time of dearth, for by their hoording up of store, ingrossing of commodities, and enhancing of the price, to the augmenting of their private wealth, they mightily increase Gods wrath upon the poore. Indeed God hath his servants which have him onely for their God: but the number of them is small, in respect of those that set their hearts upon the world, and make Mammon their god.

Here then first behold, the slavish basenesse of a covetous heart: for man was made to be the Lord of Mammon and wealth, and yet through covetousnesse he subjecteth himselfe to become a slave and vassall thereunto. Secondly, hereby let us learne to become faithfull dispensers of worldly riches: and (as Christ saith) to make us friends with this Mammon of iniquity, by good disposing of it to Gods glory in works of mercy; and so shall we retaine our right of creation, whereby God made the creatures to serve us.

Thirdly, Christ opposing God and Mammon, and saying, no man can serve them both, imports plainly, that he that seekes to be rich, setting his heart thereon, forsakes God: I say not that every rich man forsaketh God, for when God giveth abundance to a mans moderate labour and industry in his lawfull calling, hee may lawfully possesse it, using it to Gods glory: but to seeke to be rich, is a denying of God, because to the heart is servant to Mammon, and not to the Lord. This may appeare by their whole behaviour about wealth, whether we consider their getting, or their keeping, or imploying of it; in all which they sinne against God. First, in getting: for God giveth riches to whom he will, and hath not tied himselfe by promise to make any man rich; and therefore hee that resolves with himselfe that he will be rich, cannot make conscience of lying, fraud, injustice, Sabbath-breaking, and such like, when the committing of these things makes for his advantage. Secondly, they sinne in keeping: for he that resolves to be rich, will rather forsake the truth, than his wealth, in time of triall: and for the saving or recovery of his wealth, will not sticke to seeke to blessers, wizards, conjurers, &c. Thirdly, for disposing or imploying; he that resolves to be rich, sinnes therein: for he cannot be drawne to workes of mercy, at least with any cheerfulnesse: and hence it comes that sometimes the poore doe starve before the rich mans doore.

The consideration hereof serves, first, to correct our judgement concerning covetous and worldly minded persons; our censure of them is too mild and gentle, we judge them honest men, only some what hard and neere themselves: but marke Christs sentence upon them, Worldly persons forsake God, and chuse Mammon for their Lord and master: which is a practice of Atheisme, and therefore not to be so lightly passed over as men thinke. Secondly, hereby we see it is a dangerous and unlawfull course, for men to make lawes with themselves, how rich they will be; as to have so many hundred, or thousand pounds in stocke, and so much lands, and rents, &c. for what follows upon this resolution? why surely they must needs give themselves to the compassing of their purpose, and so they fall into manifold snares of Satan, by practices of injustice, lying, fraud, &c. Thirdly, hereby we must be admonished to content our selves with that portion of goods, more or lesse, which God sendeth; knowing that a little is sufficient with Gods blessing upon it: Away with covetousnesse (as the Apostle saith) and be content with that ye have: for he hath said, I will will not faile thee, nor forsake thee.

Fourthly, whereas Christ saith, Yee cannot serve God and Mammon, we learne, that the heart of man must not bee divided betweene God and the world: the one hastes to God, and the other to the world: no, God will have all, or none, herein he will not part stakes with the creature: Prov.23.26. My sonne, give me thy heart.

Vse 2.

The consideration whereof serveth, first, to discover the hypocrisie and spirituall guile of many, who thinke they may live in some one sinne or other, and yet be Gods servants still: this is the conceit of drunkards, adulterers, covetous persons, and such like: for even while they live in these sinnes, they will come to Gods worship, to the Word and Prayer often, and to the Sacraments, at least once a yeare: which they would not doe, but that they thinke God hath respect unto them herein, like to the wicked Jewes, Jer.7.9,10. But they deceive themselves, for no man can serve two masters: while a man lives in any sinne, he is the servant of the devill, hee can never be accepted of God for his servant. Secondly, this shewes that the servant of God is so farre forth delivered from sinne by regeneration, that no sinne reignes in him: for as hee should serve two masters, for every reigning sinne is a Lord and master: Rom.6.16. Know ye not, that to whomsoever you give your selves as servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey, whether it be of sinne unto death, &c. and he that committeth sinne, is the servant of sinne, Joh.8.34. This therfore is a sure ground, that no regenerate person lives in any sinne. Thirdly, hereby every one is taught to consecrate both his soule and body to the Lord, endevouring to serve him with all the powers and parts thereof; for God is our onely Lord and master, and therefore let all that is within us bow the knee to him: Rom.6.21. The servant of God is one freed from sinne unto whom hath his fruit in holines, and the end everlasting life. The Queen of Sheba pronounced Salomons servants happy, that stood before Salomon to heare his wisdome; how much more then are they happy, who in soule and body are Gods servants, who for bounty and wisdome infinitely surpasseth Salomon? He, some will say, I would gladly serve God alone, and I desire I might doe it with all my heart; but the corruption of my nature is such, that it makes me to rebell against the commandements of God, and I cannot doe the good I would, but the evill I would not, that doe I, so as I feare I serve two masters. Ans. This is the state of Gods children in this life; but herewith they must stay themselves: when they faile in obedience, they must consider whether they doe so freely and willingly, or against their wils: If thy heart can truly say, thou doest unwillingly commit sinne, thou wouldest not doe it, and art truly grieved and displeased with thy selfe for it; then bee of good courage, thou doest not serve two masters, for this is the fters, for this is the [illegible] Now though there be in thee two [illegible] and the Spirit, the one hailing thee one way, and the other another; yet while thou striveth against the flesh, desiring and endevouring to be wholly subject to the Spirit, though thou fall often in action, yet in Christ be thy sinnes pardoned and God accepts in thee the will for the deed. Endevour therefore to acquaint thy selfe more and more with the will of thy heavenly master, and seeke to please him in all things, and labour to mortifie the deeds of the flesh by the Spirit, and so shalt thou know God to be thy onely master, and in due time perceive thy selfe come from the bondage of the flesh.

v. 25 Therefore I say unto you, bee not carefull for your life, what yee shall eat, or what yee shall drinke: nor yet for your body, what yee shall put on. Is not the life more worth than meat, and the body than raiment?

Our Saviour Christ having forbidden the practices of covetousnesse, and prevented such objections as the corrupt heart of man might frame to excuse it selfe therein, doth here strike at the very root of covetousnesse, and seekes to remove the cause thereof; to wit, distrustfull and inordinate care for the things of this life, though they bee things necessary, as meat, drinke, and clothing: and in this argument he proceeds to the end of this chapter. Now this verse depends upon the former, as a conclusion inferred upon all that hee had said before concerning covetousnesse from the 19. vers. to this effect: Seeing they that seeke earthly treasures, neglecting the heavenly, doe want the single eye of spirituall wisdome, to discerne of the true treasure, and also are themselves servants unto Mammon; therefore I say unto you my Disciples, bee not carefull (no not for things needfull) immoderately, and in a distrustfull manner. And here againe he meets with another pretence of a covetous minde, wherewith it pleads for the service of Mammon; to wit, that the things they seeke for, are things necessarie, without which they cannot live. Hereto Christ answers, Yea, but I say, you must not seeke, yea not for things needfull to you, immoderately and distrustfully.

Coherence.

The exposition. I say unto you, that is, I, that am your master, upon whom you depend for all heavenly information, and direction in all things needfull both for your soules and bodies, I say unto you: by this hee would prepare them to attention and reverent obsservation of his commandement following, as being a matter of great importance, whereon depends the life of all obedience, in relying on Gods providence: in regard whereof, we also must with all good conscience marke the same. Bee not carefull for your lives, &c. Left we should mistake Christs meaning, wee must know that there be two kinds of care; a godly moderate care, and a distrustfull carking care. The moderate honest care is injoyned us by Gods commandement; Prov. 6. 6. Wisdome sends the sluggard to learne diligence and providence for things needfull, of the little Ant or pismire: and Paul saith, Fathers must lay up for their children, 2 Cor. 12. 14. And he that provideth not for his owne, especially for them of his family, is worse than an Infidell, 1 Tim. 5. 8. So that there is a lawfull care even for the things of this life. Now the practice of it stands in two things: First, in the diligent walking in a mans lawfull calling, dealing uprightly and justly therein with every one, minding only to get things honest and necessary in the sight of all men. Secondly, in leaving the successe and issue of all our labour and endevour to God, for that belongs to him: wee must use the meanes soberly and honestly, and leave the blessing to God. This godly care Moses shewed notably in leading the children of Israel out of Ægypt: for what God commanded him to doe, that hee did; hee goes which way God sends him, although he met with many crosses; and useth the meanes that God cals him unto, leaving the issue to God: as appeares notably at the red Sea, when they were at a wonderfull strait, having the Sea before them, the Ægyptians behinde them, and woods and mountaines on each side; yet being commanded to strike the waters with the rod of God, he shewes notable trust in Gods providence: Feare not, (saith he a) stand still, and behold the salvation of our God. And when Abraham at Gods commandement went to sacrifice his sonne, Isaac askes him, My Father, where is the sacrifice? b Abraham answers with words of faith, My sonne, God will provide. And thus David went to fight against the Philistims to Keilah at Gods commandement, though his owne men discouraged him from it: whereby it is plaine, he relied on God for the issue of the battell. Now this godly moderate care is not here forbidden, which hath respect to obedience in the duty, and for the successe depends upon Gods providence.

The distrustfull care is that whereby men trouble themselves about the issue of their labours; and when they have done the worke, doe not rest therewith, but vex themselves about the successe; not relying on Gods providence for the blessing, but onely on the meanes. This distrustfull care (for our better discerning of it) hath these effects: First, it oppresseth the heart, making it exceeding heavy and pensive for feare of want: where this feare is, there is this distrustfull care: for this argues a man dares not trust God, but would have the successe of his labour out of Gods hand in his owne. Secondly, it alureth and draweth men to use unlawfull meanes to get worldly things, as lying, fraud, injustice in false weights, measures, &c. Thirdly, it makes men weary of Gods worship, it distracts their minds in prayer, and hearing the Word; and (as Christ b saith) it chokes the Word that it brings forth no fruit: for when the minde is wholly set upon the world, there is no respect to the matters of God. And this is that care which is here forbidden, even a distrustfull carking care, which as the Greek word signifies, divides and distracts the minde, by troubling and perplexing it about the issue and successe of our endevours.

The Vse. That which Christ here forbids his Disciples, is the common sin of our age & time, not in a few persons, but in many: for though this distrustfull care be the disease of the heart, yet it shewes it selfe by actions in the life: For first, what is the cause of so little fruit of the Word preached, as may every where be discerned? is not (among many other) this worldly care one speciall cause? This we may see in the parable, Luk. 8. 14. for the seed that light among thornes, which choaked it, is the Word preached to a heart possessed with worldly cares: let these men observe themselves, and they shall finde, that they can neither pray, nor heare the Word, nor meditate therein without manifold distractions from these worldly thoughts. Secondly, there is no trade or calling without his conveiances of craft and deceit, though it doe not appeare so much in one calling as in others; and hard it is to finde them that make conscience hereof, when gain and profit may come therby; which comes from this distrustfull care in mens hearts: whereby they doubt of Gods blessing answerable to their desire, in the use of lawfull meanes onely. But sith Christ forewarnes us of this sin, we must beware it take not place in our hearts: and for the avoiding of it, wee must follow the counsel of the holy Ghost in Scripture, Psal. 37. 5. Commit thy way unto the Lord, and trust in him, and he shall bring it to passe: which is oft commended unto us, Psal. 55. 22. Cast thy burthen upon the Lord, and hee shall nourish thee: and Prov. 16. 3. Rowle thy worke upon the Lord: 1 Pet. 5. 7. Cast all your care on him, for he careth for you. In all which places we have a most worthy instruction to this effect; not exempting men from doing the duties of their calling, but teaching them, that when they have done their endevour, in the diligent, sober, and upright use of meanes, then they must leave the event and issue for good successe to the blessing of God. Thus the trades-man, whose living stands by buying and selling, must be carefull and diligent about his businesse, without deceit or lying; and in so doing referre the successe of his bargaine to the blessing of God: and so must the husbandman plow and sow, and leave caring and harvest to Gods good providence. This is the the Apostles counsell, Phil. 4. 6. Be nothing carefull, that is, after a distrustfull or distracting sort, (as the word signifies) but in all things let your requests be made known to God, with giving of thanks: where it is to be marked, that distrustfull care is opposed to prayer and thanksgiving, as an hinderer thereof, and therefore our care must onely be to use the lawfull meanes moderately for any blessing, and then to pray to God for good successe and blessing, relying wholly thereon, that when it comes we may give him thankes.

How to leave the successe to God.

But some will say, it is hard for flesh and bloud not to be carefull of successe, how then should we be able to leave it wholly to God? Answer. We must lay to our hearts the blessed promises of God, made to them that depend upon his mercy and goodnesse, and labour to live by faith thereon: Psal. 127. 2. It is in vaine for man to rise early, and to be downe late, and to eat the bread of sorrow, (meaning, while hee trusts to himselfe, or in the meanes) but God will surely give rest to his beloved, which serve him, and trust in him, in the use of meanes. Psal. 34. 10. The Lyons doe lacke and suffer hunger, though every poore beast of the field be a prey to his teeth; but they which seeke the Lord shall lacke nothing that is good. If wee had no more promises in the Bible, yet these were sufficient to cause us to rest upon his providence in the sober use of lawfull meanes. Against this must be considered, how we shall rely upon his mercy for the saving of our soules in the time of temptation and houre of death, that dare not trust in his providence for the things of this life. Quest. But what if all things goe crosse wich men, (will some say) may I not then flicke more to the means? Ans. Nay rather cleave the more to God, for if the blessing were in the meanes, men would not be so often crossed: God knoweth what is good for thee, better than thou thy selfe, and therefore rest contented with this providence, though he crosse thine expectation for outward blessings; want is many times better for Gods children than plenty, and affliction than peace and prosperity; as David found, Psal. 119. 67, 71. and therefore God layes it upon them; Did not good Iosias fall before Pharaoh Necho? which he should not have done, but that God would chasten him; for c not regarding the words of Pharaoh Necho, which were of the mouth of God, perswading him not to fight against him and also d that he might be taken from seeing the evil to come: and was not Hezekiahs heart puffed up in the time of peace, insomuch that wrath came upon him, and upon Iudah and Ierusalem. Therfore learne to depend upon Gods providence in the moderate use of lawfull meanes, and whether he give thee blessing, or take them away, blesse his name; for it is good for thee it should be so. And thus much for the maine commandement.

Now further marke in the words, how Christ distinguisheth betweene life and the body; and applieth meat and drinke to life, and raiment to the body: and yet we know, that apparell serves to preserve life also, especially in cold countries. But Christ doth distinguish them for just cause; for though in cold countries, apparell serves to preserve life, as well as meat and drinke doe; yet the first and more generall use of apparell, is another matter; to wit, to hide the shame of nakednesse, which the sinne of Adam brought upon it: Gen. 3. 7. 21. for before their fall, the man and the woman were both naked, and were not ashamed, Gen. 2. 21.

Here then we are to learne, that the proper and maine end of apparell, is for the bodie, to cover the shame of nakednesse that sinne hath brought upon us; which is so great, that if necessity would permit, both hands and face should also bee covered. The consideration whereof, as it shewes their immodesty and want of shame, that lay open the nakednesse of their brests, or other parts of their body, more than need requires; so it teacheth us, never to be proud of our apparell, but rather humbled and abashed when we put it on, or looke upon it, for it is the covet of our shame, and so an ensigne of our sinne: the theefe hath as good cause to be proud of the bolts on his heeles, or of his brand in the hand, or hole in the eare, as wee of our apparell, for as these are badges of misdemeanour, so is apparell a badge of our sinne. And on the other side, that we may have comfort in this ordinance of God for our bodies, wee must labour therein to expresse the graces of God in our hearts; as modesty, sobriety, temperance, frugality, and such like.

1 Reason against immoderate care.

Is not the life more worth than meat, and the body than raiment? Our Saviour Christ having given commandement against the immoderate care for things needfull to naturall life, lest the same should passe away without effect, doth here begin to inforce the same with divers arguments; the first whereof is in these words, taken from the creation, wherein God gives life and the body, which are better than food and raiment; from whence Christ reasons for his providence, thus: The life is better than food, and the body than raiment: but God by creation gives life and body: and therefore will he much more give food and raiment for their preservation. Seeing God gives the greater, we need not to doubt but he will afford the lesse.

Our creation must teach us trust in Gods providence.

In this reason Christ teacheth us, to make right use of our creation; namely, by the consideration of it, to learne confidence in Gods providence for all things needfull to our naturall life: Job 10. 8. Thine hands have made me and fashioned mee, and wilt thou destroy mee? where Iob perswades himselfe of preservation, because God created him; and 1 Pet. 4. 19. Let them that suffer according to the will of God, commend their soules unto him in well-doing, as unto a faithfull creator: because God is a faithfull creator, therefore in death we must rely upon him. Experience teacheth us that every husbandman is carefull to preſerve the worke of A his owne hands, if it lie in his power; why then should we doubt of this in our Creator, who is Almighty.

Matth.6. verſ.26.

v. 26 Behold the fowles of the heaven; for they sowe not, neither reape, nor carrie into the barnes: yet your heavenly father feedeth them. Are yee not much better than they?

These words containe Christs second reason to diſſwade his Diſciples from diſtruſtfull care for things needfull, drawne from the conſideration of his providence over baſer creatures than they were, for needfull proviſion: the reaſon ſtandeth thus:

If God provide for the fowles of heaven, then much more will he provide for you:
But God provideth for the fowles of heaven, and feedeth them: therefore much more will he provide for you.

The firſt part of this reaſon is here confirmed two wayes: Firſt, becauſe the children of God have meanes of proviſion, which the fowles of the heaven want; they sow not, neither reap, &c. Secondly, Gods children are better than fowles, and therefore he will not ſuffer them to lacke, ſith he prouideth for baſer things than they be: both which are ſo ſenſible and familiar, that they may induce any man to depend upon Gods providence, without diſtruſtfull care.

Chriſt in propounding this reaſon, bids us Behold the creatures, that is, take a ſerious view of them, looke upon them withly, and with conſideration, as the word ſignifieth: whereby we may learne, that every childe of God ought ſeriouſly to conſider the workes of God, (for that which we muſt do to the fowles of heaven, we muſt doe to all the workes of his hands) and therein labour to behold the wiſdome, juſtice, goodneſſe, love, mercy, and providence of God. This is Salomons leſſon, Eccleſ.7.13. Behold the workes of God: and Job 36.24. Remember thou magnifie the workes of God which men behold. Why did God make the creatures diſtinctly one after another, in ſix ſeverall dayes, and take a particular view of them all after hee had made them, with approbation of their goodneſſe, and alſo ſanctified the ſeventh day for an holy reſt, both by his owne example and expreſſe commandement? undoubtedly, among other cauſes, this was one, to teach us to conſider diſtinctly of all the works of his hands: and among other holy duties, to meditate on the Sabbath day, on the glorious workes of our Creator. This was Davids practice: for, Pſal. 19. 1, &c. hee reſembles the heavens to a great booke, wherein a man may reade the glory of God: and in the contemplation hereof did he exerciſe himſelfe upon the Sabbath dayes, as we may ſee in the Pſalme which he penned for the Sabbath, Pſal.92.4,5. — I will rejoyce in the workes of thine hand: O Lord, how glorious are thy works? And they which are negligent in this duty, are here called to attendance by our Saviour Chriſt.

But what muſt wee behold in the fowles of heaven? How they neither ſow, nor reape, nor carry into barnes, &c. that is, they uſe not the means of proviſion that man doth, which ſhews they have not that care which man hath. Man may lawfully bee carefull to uſe theſe meanes, for God ordaineth them for mans proviſion: but the fowles of the heaven goe not ſo farre to have care of any meanes. And this privilege of man to the meanes, doth ſtrongly inforce Chriſts diſſwaſion againſt diſtruſtfull care: for the fowles wanting ſuch meanes are free from that care. Queſt. How then are they provided for? Anſw. They expect for food at Gods hand: Job 39. 3. The birds cry unto God, wandring for lacke of meat. Pſalm.104.21. The Lyons roaring after their prey, ſeeke their meat at God. Pſalm. 145. 15. The eyes of all wait upon God, and hee giveth them meat in due ſeaſon. Pſalm.149.7. He giveth to beaſts their food, and to the young ravens that crie. But how can unreaſonable creatures cry to God? Anſ. They doe not uſe prayer as men doe, but yet they are ſaid to cry to God, and to wait on God, becauſe by a naturall inſtinct given them by creation, they ſeeke for that food which God ordaineth for them, and are contented therewith; ſo that by theſe phraſes God would teach us, that they depend upon his providence wholly for proviſion, and reſt contented therewith.

Vnreaſonable creatures more obedient than man.

Here then we are to obſerve, that the unreaſonable creatures, made ſubject to vanitie by the ſinne of man, doe come neerer their firſt eſtate, and better obſerve the order of Nature in their creation, than man doth: for they ſeeke for that which God provideth for them, and when they receive it are content, but man is deeply fallen from the ſtate of his creation, in regard of his depending on Gods providence for temporall things: though he have the uſe of meanes which the fowles of heaven want, yet his heart is full fraught with diſtruſtfull care, whether wee reſpect the getting or imploying of earthly things. This ſheweth that man is more corrupt than other creatures, and more vile and baſe in this behalfe than bruit beaſts: which ſhould humble every one of us deeply under the ſerious conſideration of our ſinnes, that have ſo depraved our nature, that we are more rebellious to the law of our Creator, and more diſtruſtfull in his providence, than the bruit and ſenſleſſe creatures.

And yet our heavenly father feedeth them. In theſe words is touched a forcible reaſon, whereby Chriſt would perſwade his Diſciples, and in them all beleevers, to depend upon Gods

Matth.6. verſ.26,27.

Gods providence without diſtruſtfull care, God (ſaith he) is your father, yea, your heavenly father; and you are his children, therefore depend upon him: for if " earthly fathers will provide and give good things to their children, much more will your heavenly. In this reaſon alſo is touched a meanes and way whereby a man may come to reſt upon Gods providence. In the Word of God there be two kind of promiſes: ſome of everlaſting life and ſalvation by Chriſt: others, of inferiour gifts and bleſſings concerning this life. Now if we would rely on God for temporall bleſſings, we muſt firſt labor to lay hold by faith on his ſpirituall and eternal promiſes; get aſſurance of thine adoption in Chriſt, and labour to know and feele that he is thy heavenly father; and then thou wilt eaſily depend upon his providence for temporall bleſſings: if thou be once perſwaded truly that hee will ſave thy ſoule, how canſt thou diſtruſt him for proviſion for thy body? If a Kings ſonne know his father will make him heire, hee will not doubt but he will afford him food and raiment in the meane time.

" Matth 7.11.

Heaven come to depend upon God. providence.

Feedeth them. That is, the fowles that neither ſow, nor reape, nor carry into barnes. Here wee may obſerve Gods ſpeciall and particular providence: for in reaſon thoſe creatures that make no proviſion in ſummer, ſhould ſtarve in winter, wherein the earth affordeth no ſuch meanes of nouriſhment as it doth in ſummer; and yet experience teacheth, that they are for the moſt part fatter, and fitter for the uſe of man in winter than in ſummer: what argueth this but Gods ſpeciall providence, attending upon the ſilly fowles of heaven, and feeding them in the dead winter? oh then how ſhould any childe of God diſtruſt his providence; will hee feed birds, and neglect his owne children? it cannot be. And yet this muſt not nuzzle an idle perſon, or bolſter him up in the neglect of lawfull ordinary means for his proviſion: for God would have every man to eat his owne bread, deſerving his proviſion by diligence in the duties of ſome lawfull calling: for he that will not labour ſhould not eat. How beit wee may here learne, when all meanes faile (without our default) yet ſtill to rely upon Gods providence: for he feeds the fowles in the dead of winter, and wee are better than they.

Particular providence proved.

Laſtly, is God ſo mercifull to the poore fowls of heaven, to provide for them? then muſt wee that profeſſe our ſelves to bee Gods children ſhew our ſelves to be like to our heavenly father, in exerciſing mercy towards all Gods creatures: God is the Saviour of all men, but eſpecially of them that beleeve. And wee muſt be followers of God as deare children, extending mercy to the poore of mankinde, becauſe they be our owne fleſh: doe good unto all, but ſpecially to them that be of the houſhold of faith. This is needfull to be urged upon our ſoules, for in times of dearth men grind the faces of the poore, by hard bargaining; the rich take advantage of poore mens want, and ſo make themſelves fat by ſucking the bloud of the poore.

A motive to mercifulneſſe.

" 1 Tim. 4.10.

v. 27 Which of you by taking care, is able to adde one cubit to his ſtature?

3. Reaſon againſt diſtruſtfull care.

Here Chriſt propoundeth his third reaſon, againſt diſtruſtfull and carking care for worldly things, from the unprofitableneſſe and vanitie of it in man. The words of this reaſon are propounded by way of queſtion: which kinde of phraſe imports the affirming or denying of the thing ſpoken of with more vehemence. And here it hath the force of a more vehement negation as if Chriſt had ſaid, Undoubtedly not any of you by taking care can adde one cubit to his ſtature. A cubit is a meaſure taken from a part of mans bodie, being the length of the arme from the elbow, to the end of the longeſt finger. Now God in framing mans bodie, brings it from this length in the mothers wombe, by continuall increaſe adding cubit unto cubit, till at laſt it containe many cubits in ſtature, according as hee hath ordained and appointed. And looke how many cubits long God hath ordained everie man to come unto, of that ſtature and talneſſe hee is, and no man by all his wit, skill, and carefull induſtrie can adde one cubit unto his ſtature, for that is the proper worke of the Creator; hee that gives the bodie, appoints the ſtature, and by his providence brings it thereto, by daily increaſe. Now hence Chriſt reaſons thus, from the like; As no man by taking care in all the meanes he can uſe, can augment his ſtature one cubit, hee cannot doe the leaſt thing this way, as P Saint Luke noteth; no more can any man by his diſtruſtfull care better his outward eſtate for things needfull to this life any whit at all: and therefore firſt it is vaine and fruitleſſe to vex our hearts herewith, wee muſt beware of this diſtruſtfull care.

P Luk.12.26.

From this reaſon we may obſerve and gather ſundrie inſtructions: Firſt, that mans labour, care, and induſtrie is altogether vaine and fruitleſſe, without the bleſſing of Gods providence. Pſal.127.1,2. Except the Lord build the houſe, they labour in vaine that build it: Except the Lord keepe the citie, the keeper watcheth in vaine. It is in vaine for you to riſe early, &c. 1 Cor.3.7. Neither is he that planteth any thing, nor he that watereth, (meaning, of themſelves,) but God giveth the increaſe. This point the Lord doth notably expreſſe by Haggai, ſaying, q Ye have ſowen much, and bring in little: — and he that earneth wages putteth it in a bottomleſſe bag. Tee looked for much, and lo, it came to little, and when it came home, I did blow upon it. The conſideration whereof muſt teach us to commend all the ſober care and labour of our lawfull callings to God by prayer for his bleſſing: for it is his bleſſing that maketh rich, Prov. 10. 22. If Paul and Apollos, two moſt worthy q Hagg. 1. 6—9.

Mans labour vaine without Gods bleſſing.

worthy men, could doe nothing of themſelves, what ſhall wee thinke to doe? and when wee finde Gods bleſſing upon our labour, then muſt we give thankes.

Secondly, Hence wee learne that no man can better his outward eſtate in the world, for wealth and dignitie by all his care and diligence, above that which God hath appointed him to come unto: for as God hath determined of mans bodily ſtature, which no man by taking care can adde unto or alter, ſo hath he appointed in his decree what ſhall be mans eſtate, for wealth or povertie, dignitie or diſgrace, which it lies not in the power of man, or any creature to alter: indeed the diligent uſe of lawfull meanes is an argument of Gods bleſſing in outward things, and therefore muſt bee followed and exerciſed in ſobrietie and godlineſſe of thoſe that wait for ſuch bleſſings, becauſe ordinarily God conveyes his bleſſings by ſuch meanes; but yet the ſtate of man depends not on the meanes, but on Gods decree and pleaſure: Pſal. 75. 6, 7. To come to preferment is neither from the Eaſt nor from the Weſt: but God is Iudge: hee maketh high, and hee maketh low: and Prov. 22. 2. The poore and rich meet together, and God is the maker of them both. In regard whereof wee muſt learne to depend upon God in the ſober uſe of lawfull meanes, and to reſt contented with his bleſſing thereupon be it more or leſſe: for whatſoever it is, it is that portion which God hath allotted unto us.

Thirdly, hereby are ſundrie erroneous opinions confuted and overthrown. As firſt, the opinion of them, who thinke that the temporall life of man may bee prolonged by Art, above the period ſet by God in nature: but then there may be addition made by Art to the ſet period of mans ſtature; for the wall and providence of God doth equally rule in them both: the prolonging of mans life is no leſſe an action of the Creator, than the augmenting of mans ſtature. Indeed Art may helpe to preſerve life till it come to the period in nature, but further to prolong it, is beyond the Art and power of man: for Man is not Lord over the ſpirit, to retaine the ſpirit, Eccleſ. 8. 8. God hath herein appointed his bounds which he cannot paſſe, Job 14. 5.

Secondly, the opinion of ſome Magicians and Witches is hereby alſo confuted, who thinke and avouch, that by enchantments they can turne their bodies into the bodies of other creatures, as cats, hares, &c. and alſo make their bodies to paſſe thorow a key-hole, or ſuch like narrow place, but this were to change nature, which is more than to adde to nature, (which yet Chriſt here denies to bee in the power of man,) and therefore it is impoſſible: theſe things are the illuſions of Satan, whereby hee bleares the eyes of ſuch as regard his lying wonders. As for that which is ſaid of [c] Nebuchadnezzar, that hee ſhould be turned into a beaſt, becauſe it is ſaid, he ate graſſe like an oxe: this we muſt know and hold, that the ſubſtance of his ſoule was not changed, neither the ſubſtance of his bodie, nor the ſhape thereof into the ſhape and ſubſtance of a beaſt, but only the hand of God was heavie upon his minde, ſtriking him with brutiſh frenſie and madneſſe, whereupon his behaviour became brutiſh, and he lived among the beaſts of the field.

Thirdly, the opinion of the Alchymiſts is hereby alſo refuted, who pretend that they can turne baſe metalls into better, as braſſe or lead into gold; but this is to change the nature of creatures, which is more than to adde thereto by augmenting their quantitie, which yet Chriſt denies and makes impoſſible to Act in the ſtature of man.

Alchymiſts confuted.

Fourthly the opinion of the Papiſts for their merit of workes is hereby alſo confuted: they teach that by good works a man may merit for himſelfe a greater degree of glorie in Heaven: but conſider, if a man by all that hee can doe, cannot augment his bodily ſtature, nor his outward eſtate in this world (as we have ſhewed;) then much leſſe can he adde unto his eſtate of glorie: if the increaſe of nature be the worke of God, then much more is the gift of grace, and the increaſe of glorie: as therefore hee determines of the ſtature of the bodie, ſo much more may wee reſolve, that the ſtate of the ſoule for glorie is decreed of God, and man cannot adde thereunto. Indeed the more we glorifie God by weldoing on earth, the more is our aſſurance of greater glorie in Heaven, but yet the merit thereof is the worke of Chriſt alone, and our fruition of it the gift of God, according to the good pleaſure of his owne will.

Merits of glorie &c. vanity of mans power in merit. Concil. Trid. ſeſſ. 6. can. 32.

v. 28 And why care ye for rayment? learne how the lillies of the field doe grow: they labour not, neither ſpin:

29 Yet I ſay unto you, that even Salomon in all his glorie was not arrayed like one of theſe.

30 Wherefore if God ſo cloath the graſſe of the field, which is to day, and to morrow is caſt into the oven, ſhall hee not doe much more unto you, O yee of little faith?

In theſe three verſes Chriſt returneth to his former commandement againſt diſtruſtfull care contained in the 25. verſe: and here urgeth one part thereof concerning care for rayment, and and the other for meat and drinke, in the 31. verſe. Now what meaneth Chriſt by this manner of handling this heavenly doctrine, not only to propound it, and to urge it by ſtrong and forcible reaſons, but againe to repeat it, and urge it by peece-meale? Surely, hereby hee declares himſelfe to bee the true Doctor of his Church: for having a weighrie point of doctrine in hand, which the nature of man is unwilling to receive and practiſe, hee doth beſide the propounding and confirming of it, thus urge it by peece-meale, that hereby it may the better take place in our heart, and bee the more effectuall to bring forth obedience in our lives. And this fidelitie muſt everie one ſhew that is to teach the word of God to others: not only Miniſters, though it be their dutie ſpecially, but alſo Maſters and Parents; as Deut. 6. 7. Thou ſhalt whet them upon thy children (as the word ſignifies) that ſo it may more deeply enter into the heart.

Thus much of the manner of proſecuting this argument. Now wee come to the words: And why care you for rayment? This interrogation hath the force of a prohibition; and ſo it is the ſame with this branch of the 25. verſe, Care not for your bodie what you ſhall put on. Now all care for apparell is not here forbidden; for there is a lawfull godly care, whereby men ſeeke and labour uprightly, and in a ſober manner for ſuch apparell as is meet for their callings, and needfull to the health and comfort of their bodies. But the care here forbidden, is an inordinate care for apparell, joyned either with diſtruſt and feare of want, or elſe with a diſcontentedneſſe with that apparell which is meet and neceſſarie. And this is the common ſinne of this age, as the ſundrie bad practices of men and women about apparell, proceeding from this inordinate care, doe evidently declare: as firſt, the affecting of ſuperfluitie and abundance in apparell, and the following of ſtrange and forren faſhions ſo ſoone as they are taken up. Secondly, the wearing of too coſtly apparell, above their abilitie and degree: as when Servants are as fine as their Maſters, Tradeſmen like Gentlemen, and Gentles like Nobles. Thirdly, the ſpending of much time in the curious trimming and attiring of the bodie, which might bee ſpent in better duties. This proceeds from ſome diſlike in Gods workmanſhip, as though hee had not done his part thorowly to their bodies, or they by their curioſitie could make themſelves better.

Inordinate care for apparell.

Now that Chriſt might remove out of mens hearts this inordinate care, he doth here enforce the commandement by a fourth reaſon, taken from his providence over the lillies of the field: and his reaſon is weightie, though the ſubject of it bee meane and ſimple. It may bee framed thus:

4. Reaſon.

If God cloath the lillies of the field, then doubtleſſe he will cloath you:

But God cloathes the lillies of the field:

Therefore much more will he cloath you.

This reaſon is fully ſet downe in theſe three verſes, though the parts be inverted, by reaſon of their amplifications: for firſt, Chriſt propounds to our conſideration the ſubiect matter whence his reaſon is drawen; learne how the lillies of the field doe grow. Where this muſt be marked, that Chriſt ſpeaks of field lillies, which have not the helpe of man, as garden-flowers have. Then he layes downe a proofe of his aſſumption, that God cloathes them, by removing from them the ordinarie meanes of cloathing: They labor not, neither ſpin, v. 28. amplifying this worke of God upon them by a compariſon, wherein he preferres the glorie of them before the glory of Salomon in his princely array, v. 29. And then by way of inference propounds the reaſon, omitting the aſſumption, v. 30. where the firſt part and concluſion are both propounded and amplified, as wee ſhall ſee when wee come to the handling of them: for I will follow the order obſerved by Chriſt.

Vſe of field creatures to inſtruct us.

Learne how the lillies of the field doe grow. Here Chriſt makes the lillies and herbs of the field a ſchoolemaſter unto man, yea, to his owne Diſciples (for he ſpake to them.) And this hee doth for eſpeciall cauſes: Firſt, to teach them and us, that the ſilly creatures in the field doe in their kinde yeeld more obedience unto God than man doth, and that man is more rebellious unto God than they are: hence Iſay calls heaven and earth to hearken to his rebuke of the Jewes for their ingratitude: and the Prophet rebuking Ieroboam for his idolatrie, cries, [b] O Altar, Altar, thus ſaith the Lord: Jeremie rebuking Iechoniah, calls to the earth to heare, Jer. 22. 29. and Ezekiel muſt prophecie to the mountaines, Ezek. 6. 3. By all which they would ſhew, that if theſe unſenſible creatures had reaſon as man hath, they would bee more obedient to the will of their Creator than man is. Secondly, hereby Chriſt would teach his Diſciples and us, that though wee have the creatures, and behold and uſe them daily, yet partly through blindneſſe and ignorance, and partly through negligence, wee doe not diſcerne in them, nor learne from them thoſe good things which wee ought to doe: For the inviſible things of God, that is, his eternall power and Godhead, being conſidered in his works, are ſeene by the creation of the world, Rom. 1. 20. This then is a checke to our dulneſſe and negligence in the things of God: for what ſhall we doe in matters of ſalvation, when in theſe inferiour matters wee may learne of the unſenſible creatures?

But what muſt we learne in the lillies? How they grow. And this is a thing to be marked, for in the winter ſeaſon they lie dead in the earth, as though they were not; they are covered with froſt and ſnow: and yet in the ſpring time and ſummer, they ſpring up with ſtalkes, leaves, and flowers of ſuch glorious colours, as exceedeth the glorie of Salomon in all his royaltie. Hence whence comes this, is it of themselves, or from A man? surely neither; for they are field-lillies; this only comes from the word of creation given out by God, when hee made the creatures, saying, Let the earth bring forth the greene herbs, &c.

from this working and operative word of God, comes the earth to have power and vertue to send out the glorious lillies and everie other herb. Now then (to apply this to the purpose intended by Christ) the same God that by his operative word gives this glorious being everie yeare to field-lillies, hath given out a word of providence touching his servants, that if they trust in him, using lawfull meanes moderately, they shall have raiment sufficient, and all things else that be needfull to this life. Here then is nothing wanting but trust in God in the sober use of ordinarie meanes, for such shall be as sure of raiment by Gods providence, as lillies are to grow & blosſom in the spring-time & summer:
and this were sufficient to perſwade us unto moderate care, though nothing more had been said.

But hee addeth, they labour not, neither spin:
This denial of the use of meanes unto them, whereby they should bee arrayed, as it proves directly that God alone arrayes them with glorious colours; so it strongly enforceth the du-tie of contentation upon us, relying on Gods providence, without distracting care: becauſe beside our title to Gods providence not infer-our to the lillies of the field, we have allowed unto us for our rayment the use of meanes which they want: and therefore howsoever no man, under pretence of depending on Gods providence, may hence take occation to live idly, neglecting the ordinarie lawfull meanes to procure things honeſt and needfull: yet hereby Christ would give assurance to all that trust in him and serve him, that though all meanes should faile them, (so it be not through their default) yet will hee provide things need-full for them.

29. And yet I say unto you, that even Salo- mon in all his glorie, &c. Theſe words containe an amplification of the ſecond part of Christs reaſon, to wit, that God doth not only cloath the lillies, but cloath them in moſt glorious ar- ray, even above the glorie of Salomon in all his royaltie. And this amplification is to be marked, becauſe Salomons glorie was extraordina-rie, by ſpeciall gift from God, above his deſire or expectation, as wee may ſee, 1 King. 3. 12.
And yet Christ faith, that each field-lillie is more gloriouſly arrayed by Gods providence than Salomon was at any time.

This amplification ſerves; firſt, to checke and controll the folly of them that are proud in apparell, and nice and curious in arraying themſelves. This is the common ſinne of this age, wherein for active everie ſort almoſt exceed their abilitie and degree. But why ſhould wee bee proud of any apparell, for when wee have done all wee can to make our ſelves never ſo gay, yet wee come ſhort of the flowers of the field in glorious array? for what cloth or ſilke is ſo white as the lillie? what purple is like the violet? what crimſon or ſcarlet comparable to divers flowers of ſuch colours? Art indeed may doe much, but herein it muſt ſtoope to Nature.
Now if wee cannot come neere the herbs and flowers which we tread under our feet, and caſt into the fornace, why ſhould we be puffed up with any gayneſſe in our apparell?

Secondly, this teacheth us, that all worldly pompe is but vanitie: for in glorie and beautie it comes ſhort of the flower of the field, and yet what is more ſraile and tranſitorie than the flower, that is to day in the field, and to morrow is caſt into the oven? This the Holy Ghoſt would teach us, by comparing the glorie of man
B to the flower of graſſe. 1 Pet. 1. 24. and ſeeing that the faſhion of this worldgoeth away, 1 Cor.
7. 31. wherefore (as the Apoſtle there ſaith) Wee muſt uſe this world as though wee uſed it not:
for Salomon concluſion is true of all earthly things, Vanitie of vanities, all is vanitie, Eccleſ.
1. 2. And yet wee muſt not here imagine that Christ condemnes the glorie of Salomon, though he thus debaſe it below the flower of the field:
for it was the gift of God in extraordinarie favour, 1 King. 3. 13. So that howſoever the word of God condemne pride and curioſitie in attire, and ſuperfluitie therein, yet it alloweth unto Princes, and perſonages of great ſtate, the uſe of gorgeous and coſtly rayment; and therefore Joſeph being advanced to dignitie, was arrayed
C in garments of fine linnen, had a ring on his fin- ger, and a chaine of gold about his necke, Gen.
41. 42. And that which Luke ſaith of Agrippa and Bernice, that they came in with great pompe to heare Paul, Act. 25. 23. may as well be taken in good part, as in evill.

V. 30 Wherefore if God ſo cloath the graſſe of the field, which is to day, and to morrow is caſt into the oven: ſhall he not doe much more unto you, O yee of little faith?

Here Chriſt propounds and applyes this reaſon to his Diſciples and hearers; and in this application enforceth it, by putting a manifeſt difference betweene men and the herbs of the field, preferring man far before them. The pre-heminence of man above the flowers of the field, ſtands in theſe things: firſt, the herbs were made for mans uſe, and not man for them; for beſides other uſes, they ſerve for fuell to the oven, as Chriſt here noteth. Secondly, the herb of the field is to day, and to morrow is not, for being burnt or conſumed, it ceaſeth to be at all:
But it is not ſo with man, for though he be burnt or conſumed, yet he is not brought to nothing, but his being remaineth ſtil I, by reaſon of his immortall ſoule,

Wholly purges it all vanitie.

immortall ſoule, which though it had beginning, yet never ſhall have end. And herein hee far excelleth them: for though herbs and trees live for a time, yet their life ariſeth from the matter whereof they conſiſt, and ſo vaniſheth with it; but the ſoule of man is a different ſubſtance from the bodie, and vaniſheth not, though the bodie periſh. This difference is plaine in the creation: for God commanded d the earth to bring forth herbs and trees with their life and ſubſtance: but when hee created man, though he made his bodie of the duſt of the earth, yet his ſoule came from God: for e hee breathed into his face the breath of life. And herein man excels not only the herbs of the field, but all beaſts and fowles: for though they, beſides life have ſenſe and motion from their B ſoules, yet their ſoules (whether they be qualities or ſubſtances, it here skilleth not) ariſing from the matter whereof their bodies ſubſiſt, are mortall and vaniſh to nothing when the bodie periſheth; ſo as a beaſt burnt up is no beaſt, but a dead man is a man though his bodie bee burnt to nothing, becauſe his ſoule lives for ever; yea, and his bodie, though eaten up of beaſts, or conſumed with fire, by vertue of Gods ordinance, ſhall one day riſe againe, and be re-united to the ſoule: yea, the dead bodies of the elect, by vertue of the covenant of grace, have not only relation to their ſoules, but a ſpirituall union with Chriſt: for f they ſleepe in him, and by his power ſhall one day be raiſed up to glorie. And C this preheminence Chriſt would teach us, when he calleth God, f the God of Abraham, who was dead in regard of his bodie long before; and yet, ſaith hee, God is the God, not of the dead, (that is, which have no being at all) but of the living. Now this preferment of man above the creature, doth greatly inforce the dutie upon him, to depend upon Gods providence without diſtruſtfull care: for if God cloath baſer creatures with glorious array, doubtleſſe he will not ſuffer man his more noble creature to want, as the concluſion following doth declare.

Shall he not doe much more unto you, O yee of little faith? That is, ſhall hee not much more cloath you. Now he amplifieth this concluſion by a reproofe, whereby hee would enforce his reaſon more ſtrongly upon them, ſaying, O yee of little faith. In which reproofe two points are to be conſidered: the perſons reproved, and the cauſe thereof. The perſons are Chriſts choſen Diſciples, whom he doth not here reprove for want of faith ſimply, but for the weakneſſe and ſmall meaſure of it; becauſe their doubting and diſtruſt in Gods providence was greater than their faith.

Here then wee may obſerve a diſtinction of faith in regard of degree and meaſure; to wit, that beſide that full aſſurance, whereby a man ſo reſteth on Gods promiſes, that hee nothing doubteth through unbeleefe, as it is ſaid of A- braham, Rom. 4. 20. there is a weake faith mingled with much doubting, ſuch as was in Chriſts Diſciples at that time. And howſoever that doubting, which is in weake faith, be evill, and here reproved; yet the faith it ſelfe is true faith, and ſuch as brings a man to the ſtate of adoption and of ſalvation: for Chriſt before this reproofe, acknowledged of his Diſciples that they were Gods children, calling God their heavenly Father. If any ſhall ſay or thinke that this weake faith cannot ſave a man, becauſe his unbeleefe being more than his faith, ſhall have more force to condemne him, than his faith to ſave him: I anſwer, That no man is ſaved by his faith, becauſe it is perfect without doubting; but becauſe thereby hee layeth hold on Gods mercie in Chriſt: now a weake faith may doe this truly, though not ſo perfectly, and with ſuch comfort as a ſtrong faith doth: and the doubting and unbeleefe that is in weake faith cannot condemne us, if ſo be wee bewaile our unbeleefe, and uſe meanes diligently to come by a full aſſurance: for by this weake faith we are in Chriſt: and in him all our wants and ſins are pardoned. Which point muſt carefully bee obſerved and remembred, for the ſtay and comfort of their ſoules, that have in them but this weake faith, and are troubled much with di-ſtruſt and doubting. And this is many a true childe of Gods eſtate: for everie one cannot attaine to Abrahams full aſſurance: but bee not diſcouraged, O thou of little faith; thy doubting and diſtruſt may trouble and grieve thee; only labour diligently in the meanes for further increaſe, and by thy weake faith deſire to D lay hold on Chriſt; and ſo ſhalt all thy wants be covered, and thy ſinnes pardoned: for endleſſe is Gods mercie in this behalfe, hee will not breake the bruiſed reed, nor quench the ſmoking flax, Iſa. 42. 3.

II. Point. The cauſe why Chriſt doth thus reprove them for their ſmall faith, is their di- ſtruſt in God for rayment; as if hee ſhould ſay, whereas you doubt whether your heavenly Father will provide ſufficient rayment for you, notwithſtanding you ſee hee arrayes his baſer creatures in glorious manner; even for this cauſe are you to be blamed for ſmall things.

Hereby then wee are to obſerve a ſpeciall point touching the propertie of true ſaving faith; namely, that it doth not only lay hold on the mercie of God for the pardon of ſinne, and life everlaſting in Chriſt; but on his promiſes alſo for temporall bleſſings that concerne this life. Neither muſt this ſeeme ſtraunge to any: and to make it plaine, conſider that the promiſes of God in Scripture are of two ſorts: principall, & inferiour. The principall promiſe is of Chriſt our Redeemer, God and man, and of remiſſion of ſinne, and life everlaſting by him. The inferi- our promiſes are of temporall bleſſings: as food, rayment, health, peace, libertie, &c. and theſe depend upon the maine promiſe of Chriſt, ſo farre forth as they are for our good: for g in Chriſt all the promiſes of God, whether they concerne life eternall, or this temporall life, are yea, and
amen;

A comfort to them that have weake faith.

A propertie of ſaving faith.

Gods promiſes two-fold.

g 2 Cor. 1. 20.

...mon, that is, sure and certaine to Gods children. A And hence it is, that when by true faith a man layes hold on the maine promise of God in Christ, he doth withall apprehend the promises of God for temporall blessings: the heart that faith by faith, God will pardon my sin, and save my soule, will say also by the same faith, God will give mee food and rayment, and all things sufficient for this life. Thus Abraham, l by the same faith whereby hee was justified, beleeved Gods promise, that hee should have a sonne in his old age: and Noah k beleeved Gods promise of his preservation in the Arke, by the same faith whereby he was made heire of righteous- nesse. This point must be observed, and the order remembred, wherein faith layes hold upon the promises; First, it apprehends mercie in Christ, and then providence for this life. Now hence wee learne, that as we looke to bee saved by our faith after death, so we must live by faith in this world: if wee relie upon his mercie for our soules, wee must depend upon his providence for our bodies: how this is done we shall see afterward; for how should wee cast our selves upon Gods mercie for the Kingdome of Heaven, if wee cannot depend upon his providence for food and rayment?

Lastly, hereby wee may try our faith what it is, true or fained, weake or strong: for this Christ here tels us, that the more we are distracted with worldly cares, the lesse is our beleefe in God: for distrustfull care comes from unbe-leefe in Gods providence: and the lesse we trust C in God for temporall things, the lesse doe wee believe eternall mercies, for the same faith layes hold on both: but if we can truly depend upon God for temporall blessings in the sober use of lawfull meanes, then wee shall relie upon his mercie for the salvation of our soules. This triall is not made in prosperitie, for when God sends abundance, every one will trust in him: but when want comes, then is the triall of thy faith;
if then thou relie on God, though meanes faile, thy faith is strong: but if thy heart be oppref-fed with sorrow and feare, and thou make no conscience of unlawfull meanes, to it may supply thy want; then suspect thy selfe, thy faith is weake, or none at all: for the just shall live by faith in all estates.

V. 31 Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or what shall we drinke? or wherewith shall wee bee cloathed?

Here Christ againe repeateth his commandement against distrustfull care given in the 25. verse. The reasons of his repetition be these:
First, to set an edge upon the commandement, that so it may more sharply and deeply enter into their hearts, as we said before. Secondly, to further his Disciples in the practice of faith, for by this often repetition he gives them occasion to meditate and thinke upon the dutie the oftner, whereby their faith must needs be much confirmed: for this we must know for our direction to get and strengthen true faith in our hearts, that a man is not a meere patient in the receiving and strengthening of this grace; it comes not from God to us, as visions did to the Prophets in a dreame in the night, or as the print of the seale is set into the wax, but God workes it in the use of ordinarie meanes. And therefore if wee would have faith wrought or increased in us, we must doe that which by nature we may doe; to wit, heare the word preached and read, we must meditate therein, and labour so to urge the promises of God upon our owne hearts; yea, wee must doe what wee can, to stirre up in our hearts a desire to beleeve, and to strive against doubting and distrust, and therefore must give our selves to prayer, with sighs and groanes to God, for the working of his spirit in our hearts.

Now touching this commandement against distrustfull care, we handled it in the 25. verse, shewing how far our care must goe for things needfull, and where it must stay. It must extend it selfe to the diligent use of lawfull ordinarie meanes to procure things needfull, and there stay; giving place to faith to wait upon Gods providence for the blessing of our ende-yours. The distrustfull care which perplexeth the heart about the successe of our lawfull labours, is that which Christ forbids, and it is that evill sicknesse which infects most mens soules, as they may easily discerne by observing these things: What it is, that oft breakes their sleepe in the nights; what comes first into their thoughts when they awake; and what their mindes runne most upon all the day long; and whereabouts they can take greatest paines, with most delight and least wearinesse. If it bee for the things of this world, then distrustfull care infects their soules, which wee must strive against, and learne to live by faith.

Here only observe how Christ describes this unlawfull care by the effects of it in distrustfull persons, bringing them in, saying, What shall we eat? what shall we drinke? or wherewith shall we be cloathed? And thus indeed they use to complaine, especially when they have great charges and slender meanes, or else doe sustaine any great losses, then, How shall we live? what shall we doe?
and such like speeches of distrust: which Christ here justly reproves, because they blame God for his dealing towards them; as though hee had no care of them, or would not provide things for them. Wee therefore must learne to shut our mouthes against distrustfull thoughts, and beware we murmure not nor complaine of his dealing towards us. When l Aarons two sonnes Nadab and Abihu were both slaine for offering strange fire, Moses tels him it was the ing of the Lord, Isa. 30. 15. In rest and quiet- ence and contentation a man shewes strong confidence in God: so that though Gods dealing ent words and murmuring thoughts, endevou-

V. 32 For after all these things seeke the Gentiles: for your heavenly Father knoweth that yee have need of all these things.

This verse containes Christs fifth and sixth reasons, to dissuade his hearers from distrust-full care. The fifth is drawne from the practice of the Gentiles, and it standeth thus:

That which the Gentiles doe, which know not God, you must not doe (they doing amisse:)
But the Gentiles seeke thus distrustfully for things needfull: Therefore you must not do so.

The words in the originall whereby Christ declareth this behaviour of the Gentiles, bee more emphaticall than our translation doth expresse: for they import that the Gentiles set themselves to seeke, or seek with all their might.
Which must be observed, because it is not a sin simply to seeke things necessary, but wholly to give our selves thereto, that is the sinne; because it proceeds from distrust in God. Quest. Why did the Gentiles thus wholly give themselves to seeke to things necessary? Ans. Because they knew not the true God, nor his providence; they were not acquainted with his Word, as Dauid saith. And this was the state of all the world before Christs comming, the Jewes only excepted, and their fore-fathers, with some few Proselytes, who by conversing with Gods people were converted to true Religion.

This point well observed; first, overthrowes the opinion of universall grace, as a meere devise of mans braine: for if the Gentiles knew not the true God, how should they know the way to life? if God gave them not so much grace, whereby they could depend upon his providence for the things of this life, much lesse did he give them grace to beleeve, and to be saved if they would.

Secondly, this shewes that they who set their hearts upon the world, and give themselves to seeke earthly things, are Gentiles and Pagans; they have not yet attained to this principle of Christianity, to depend upon Gods providence by faith: they see no providence, and so rely onely upon the meanes whereby they sacrifice to their owne paines and industry, and so make themselves their owne God.
This is the state of many among us, who beare the name of Christians, but in deed and practise are as Turkes and Pagans: and this reason alone well weighed, is sufficient to move any Christian heart in a moderate care to seeke earthly things.

Thirdly, marke the ground of this reason;
Christs Disciples had the true God for their God, which the Gentiles had not, and therefore they must differ from the Gentiles in their behaviour. This teacheth us, that in all things Gods children must be unlike the heathen: for In evill things we must forsake them, and in all things that be good we must excell them. The sonne of a Prince will not shew himselfe like a begger in any thing; no more should the childe of God, in any thing conforme himselfe unto the world. O then how worthy doe we walke of our vocation: for the very sinnes of the heathen are rife among us, as uncleannesse, drun-kennesse, slandering, and oppression; nay, many among us exceed the Pagans in mercilesse dealing towards the poore: for they never knew that Christ came for releefe in the person of his poore, and yet many among them were more mercifull, than many now adaies that beare the name of Christians: for doe not the poore sometime die for want of releefe? and doe not many among us make a gaine of Gods judgement upon the poore, selling their commodities deareft, when the poore have greateft want and need? well, if wee will approve our selves to be Gods peculiar ones, let us be ashamed to bee like the heathen in any evill, or not to goe beyond them in that which is good.

3 Christians must in all things be unlike the heathen.

Fifth reason against distrustfull care.

Vse.

For your heavenly Father knoweth that you have need of all these things.

These words containe Christs sixth reason to his Disciples against distrustfull care, drawn from Gods speciall providence over them:
and it also includes an answer to a secret objection against Christs command: for some man might say: If we may not be carefull for things needfull, who shall provide them? Christ here answers: You must not be distrustfully carefull, for you have a Father in Heaven, who knowes whereof you have need, and careth for you. Now looke whereof God takes care in your behalfe, you need not trouble your selves further than the sober use of lawfull meanes: But God your heavenly Father takes notice of your estate, and will provide that which is best for you: and therefore you need not to vex your minds there about.

Sixth reason against distrustfull care.

Vse 1. Universall grace confuted.

2 Worldlings like Pagans.

A most worthy reason, and alone sufficient to drive us from distrustfull care: for this acquainteth us with Gods particular and speciall providence over us, taking notice of our estate whatsoever it is, and disposing it to the best. In regard whereof we must learne contentation in all estates of this life, in sickneſſe, as in health; in trouble, as in peace; and in want as well as in abundance; for whatsoever our estate be, it is according to the good pleasure of our heavenly Father, who is infinite in power and wisdome, both knowing what is best, and able to turne all to our good, as we shall surely find by comfortable experience, if by faith we depend upon him. This David knew well, and therefore saith, [a] Hee will not feare though he walke therow the valley of the shadow of death; why? for thou art with me, thy rod and staffe: that is, thy Spirit, thy Word and providence comfort me. If our hearts were setled in this point, wee should not be impatient in distresse, nor dead hearted in want; nay, it would make us cheerefull in the houre of death: for hereby we should be assured that these estates were better for us than peace, wealth, or life it selfe, because they come by the will of our heavenly Father, who knoweth whereof we have need: and therefore let us labour by faith to be assured of our adoption, that we may know God to be our Father, and then by the same faith wee shall be easily assured, that he will turne all things that befall us to our good.

V. 33 But first seeke the kingdome of God and his righteousnesse, and all these things shall be ministred unto you.

Our Saviour Christ having by six severall arguments dissuaded his Disciples from distrustfull care, doth here shew unto them what care that is which ought alwaies to possesse their hearts; to wit, Care after the kingdome of God, and his righteousnesse. And this care he imposeth upon them by expresse command, saying, First seeke ye the kingdome of God and his righteousnesse: and then urgeth the entertaining of it, by an effectuall reason, and all these things shall be ministred unto you.

The Exposition. There bee two things here injoyned us to seeke; Gods kingdome, and righteousnesse: and of both these Christ saith, First seeke, that is, before all, and above all worldly things, let your principall care and endevour be, to procure these unto your selves. By kingdom of God is here meant, a state and condition of man in this life, whereby in Christ he enjoyes the favour of God, and hath right to everlasting life. This very estate of man is in Scripture called the Kingdome of God, and the kingdome of heaven, because whosoever is in this estate, hath sure right and interest to Gods glory in Heaven, and God here rules in him, as a King ruleth in his Kingdome. The Kingdome of God is onely one, and yet it hath two degrees; the first in grace, and the second in glory. The kingdome of grace is that spirituall regiment which God exerciseth in man, or in his Church, by his Word and Spirit in this life; and it is the first step or entrance into Gods heavenly Kingdome. The Kingdome of glorie is the full full fruition of immediate fellowship with the blessed Trinitie, by meanes of Jesus Christ in the highest heavens after this life. Now both these degrees are here understood by the Kingdome of God. The second thing to bee thus sought for, is his righteousnesse, that is, the righteousnesse of God, and not as some translate it, the righteousnesse thereof, that is, of Gods kingdome; for the words will not beare that translation. And the seeking of Gods righteousnesse is here added for speciall cause: to let us see by way of explication, when wee have obtained for our selves the Kingdome of God: for Gods Kingdome stands in righteousnesse, and then doth God rule in man, when he makes him partaker of his righteousnesse. Now by righteousnesse of God, we must here understand the obedience which Christ our mediatour performed for us in fulfilling the Law, and in his sufferings. This is the very ground-worke and foundation of Gods Kingdome among men: hereof Paul speaketh of, Rom. 1. 17. For by it, that is, the Gospel, the righteousnes of God is revealed from faith to faith: and Rom. 3. 21, 22. Now is the righteousnesse of God made manifest, &c. and 2 Cor. 5. 21. God made him to be sin for us, which knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousnesse of God in him. And it is so called for divers respects; First, because it is freely given us of God to be our righteousnesse in his sight: and man cannot attaine unto it of himselfe by any worke of nature or of grace, without the gift of God. Secondly, because God will accept this obedience of Christ at the day of judgement, for his Elect, as satisfying his justice, and the rigour of the Law, which no righteousnesse of man can doe. Thirdly, because it is the righteousnesse of that person who is God: for Christ is both God and man, and though hee obeyed the Law, and suffered death, as he was man, yet that obedience was performed by that person who was also God. Adams righteousnesse by creation was in himselfe, but hee lost it by his fall: but our righteousnesse is in Christ, out of us; and therefore he is said to [b] be made righteousnesse unto us of God. But how should we get this righteousnesse, seeing it is in Christ? Ans. It is made ours by imputation, for when wee truly repent of our sinnes, and beleeve in Christ, God accepts the obedience of Christ for us, as if wee had perfectly satisfied his justice, and done his will in our owne persons. Now with this imputed righteousnesse, wee must understand and joyne the fruit hereof in us, which is sanctification, or renewed holinesse; whereby we are enabled to walke before God in new obedience, bringing forth the fruits of righterighteousnesse: for there is two are never severed; whom God justifies by the righteousnesse of Christ, them he sanctifies by his Spirit. The full meaning then of Christs commandement here is this; First seeke, &c. that is, above all things in this world, let your principall care be to procure unto your selves the Kingdome of God; that is, that state of grace whereby you may enjoy Gods favour in Christ, being justified by his obedience, and sanctified by his Spirit, whereby you walke in good workes.

The meaning.

All are naturally out of Gods Kingdome.

The use. First, by this commandement of Christ, to seeke Gods Kingdome, we may gather that by nature wee are all out of Gods Kingdome, destitute of the grace and favour of God, and indeed under the power of Satan, and in his kingdome of darknesse. This the holy Ghost shewes in calling Satan, The god of this world, 2 Cor. 4. 4. and The prince of this world, Joh. 12. 31. because all the world naturally are vassals unto him, yeelding him homage in the workes of sinne; and therefore is he called the [c] Prince that ruleth in the aire, that worketh in the children of disobedience. And this naturall misery is justly come upon us: for seeing we refuse to yeeld subjection unto God in his Kingdome, are not we worthily left to the power of Satan, to bee made his slaves and drudges? Now that men live naturally out of Christs Kingdome, may appeare by the course of their lives; for howsoever most men can bee contented to beare the badge of Christ in outward profession, hearing the Word, and receiving the Sacraments; yet in heart and life they doe homage to the Devill, for they pull their necks from the yoke of Christ, and runne with greedinesse to the workes of sinne; they account a strict endevour after morall obedience to be curiositie and precisenesse, and when they bee dehorted from unlawfull gaine, and vaine pleasures, they will not heare, nor consent; whereby in effect they say to God with wicked men in Job, [d] Depart from us, we desire not the knowledge of thy wayes: and with the wicked Citizens, [e] We will not have this man to raigne over us.

Secondly, here Christ would teach us, that our principall care above all other things must be to win for our selves the Kingdome of God: I shall not need to prove this to be our duty, seeing it is the onely thing which Christ here intends to commend unto us, and that by expresse command. But some will aske, how we shall win and get for our selves the Kingdome of God? Ans. We must doe three things for the obtaining of it: First, wee must come to the place where this Kingdome is to be found. Secondly, we must then enter into it. Thirdly, wee must wait for the full possession of it.

For the first: This Kingdome is not to bee found in all places, but there onely where God doth manifest and reveale the same to the sons of men; & that is in the assemblies of the Saints: where the publike ministerie of reconciliation is dispensed; for there God holds out this scepter, and offers himself to bee Lord and King unto men: and therefore David calls this ministerie of the Word, The rod or scepter of Gods power, Psal. 110. 2. and in the parable of the sower, Matth. 13. 19. the Gospell preached is called The word of the Kingdome, because hereby God reveales his Kingdome unto men, and translates them into it, Colos. 1. 13. And for the same cause, in the parable of the field, Matth. 13. 24. is the same ministery of the Gospell called expressely the Kingdome of God. And therefore when the Church demands of Christ, where she shall find him, he bids her follow the steps of the flockes to the tents of the Shepherds: Can. 1. 7. that is, the assemblies of the Saints, to the preaching of Gods ministers: and therefore, if ever we looke to get this Kingdome, wee must diligently frequent the ministery of the Word, and labour to profit by it, because hereby God doth not only reveale, but conveigh his Kingdome unto men.

Secondly, when wee have found this Kingdome, we must seeke to enter into it; for it is not enough to be where it is, or to have it among us, for so the Phariſies had in the time of Christ, Luk. 11. 20. Now wee cannot enter in of our selves without the speciall work of Gods holy spirit: so saith our Saviour Christ, Mat. 18. 3. Except ye be converted, & become as little children, ye cannot enter into the Kingdome of God: where two things are required in him that would enter into this Kingdome; To become as little children, and to be converted. We become as little children in humility and meeknesse, and freedom from pride and disdaine; for we know the child of a Prince will without disdaine associate himselfe in play with a poore mans child: and so wee in confidence of our owne sinnes, must be humbled in our selves, and made base in our owne eyes, laying aside our natural pride, and selfe-love, and disdain of others: for a heart swelling with pride and selfe-love, cannot enter into the strait gate of this Kingdome. Again, we must bee converted and regenerate by the Spirit of God: for [f] Except a man be borne again of water, and of the spirit, he cannot see the Kingdome of God. This conversion is not a change of the substance of the soule, or of the body, or of the faculties or parts thereof, but only of their evill qualities and actions; whereby the image of Satan in sinne and corruption is abolished, and the image of God renued, for knowledge, righteousnesse, and true holinesse both in heart and life. When this worke of regeneration is truly begun in us, then doe we enter into Gods kingdome, even in this life; for herein true Christians deceive themselves, that thinke we enter not before the time of death.

2 Enter into.

[f] Joh. 3. 5.

What conversion is.

Thirdly, wee must wait for the fruition and full possession of it: this wee cannot get before the day of death, and therefore wee must endevour our selves all our life long after our conversion, to keepe faith and a good conscience, walking in righteousnesse and true holinesse before God, and in the practice of love, uprightnesse, and mercy towards our brethren. When the question is, Who shall dwell in Gods Tabernacle, and rest in his holy mountaine; that is, remaine a true member of Gods Church for ever? Psal.15.1. the answer is, v. 2. He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousnesse. Hereby we testifie our selves to be already entred: for Gods Kingdome stands in righteousnesse, Rom.14.17. And thus have Gods children done that have waited for this Kingdome, Mat. 25.4. The wise virgins tooke oile in their vessels to light their lamps when the bridegroom came. And Ioseph of Arimathea, that noble counseller, who waited for the Kingdome of God, was a good man and a just, Luk.23.50,51.

Thus we see the way to get this Kingdome for our selves: now the necessity of our endevour in these duties with all care and diligence appeares by this, that out of this estate, for true interest to this Kingdom, is nothing indeed but wofull misery under the curse of God, and the power of Satan in the kingdome of darknesse: but in the fruition of this Kingdom is true happinesse: here is [g] righteousnesse, peace, and joy in the holy Ghost: yea, [h] joy unspeakable and glorious: for [i] the things that eye hath not seene, eare hath not heard, neither ever entred into the heart of man to think, hath God prepared for them that love him: and they are all to be had in this his Kingdome. Wherefore as wee desire to escape the woe and misery of the Devils kingdome, and to be partakers of the joyes of Heaven; so let us looke unto the performance of the former duties, shewing herein the resolution of the wise Merchant, that parted with all he had to get that pearle of price, Mat.13.46. This Kingdome of God is here set out unto us, like a City with suburbs, and two gates; the suburbs of this City, are those assemblies where the Word of God is truly preached and dispensed; and hereunto come not onely the Elect and godly, but hypocrites and reprobates. The first gate is the true state of grace, whereinto the Elect of God alone doe enter by regeneration; in which estate they continue in this life, going on from one degree of grace unto a greater, with endevour in all things to keep faith and a good conscience both towards God and men, and so wait to enter the gate of glory, which is set open unto them, and they enter in at the houre of death. And therefore let us not deceive our owne soules, as the foolish virgins did with their burning lamps, and content our selves that we come to Church, and live civilly; though these be good things, yet an hypocrite may goe thus farre: all this while we are but in the suburbs of this Kingdome: but if ever we looke for the glory of Heaven, we must in this life enter the state of grace by regeneration, and become new creatures.

Thus much of the commandement. The reason to enforce it, is a gracious and bountifull promise: And all these things shall be ministred unto you. The words are very significant in the originall: for the phrase which Christ useth, is borrowed from bargainers, to this effect: as those who sell Corne, or other things by measure or weight, use to give some over-plus to better the bargaine on the buyers part; even so the Lord promiseth to those that seek his kingdome and righteousnesse, beside the fruition thereof, to give, or cast unto them, as the Word imports, food and raiment, and all things needfull to this life. Quest. How is this true, seeing we reade that Gods children have beene many times destitute of things necessarie; as Paul was oft in hunger and thirst, in fastings, in cold and nakednesse, 2 Cor. 11. 27. and many whom the world was not worthy of, were destitute, afflicted, and tormented, wandring up and downe in sheep-skins, and goats-skins, Heb.11.37. Answ. Christs promise in this place, and all other made of temporall blessings, must be understood with the exception of the crosse; that is, they shall have such and such blessings, unlesse it please God by the want thereof, to correct them for some sinnes, or to exercise their faith in the triall of their patience.

The use. First, by this promise of Christ, we have the most excellent direction of him that is wisdome it selfe, how to order our selves in seeking for all temporall blessings needfull to this life, namely, we must first seeke Gods Kingdome and his righteousnesse, in the performance of those duties that may bring us thereunto; and then all these needfull things for this life, as food and raiment, shall be cast unto us, in the sober use of ordinary meanes. The reason hereof is plaine: for Gods Kingdom is mans chiefe good and happinesse, and all temporal blessings depend thereupon as appurtenances to the principall, as it were intailed thereon; and therefore he that would have these dependants, must get unto himselfe the Kingdome of God, which is the principall. While the arke of the covenant was in Obed-Edoms house, God blessed him and all that hee had, 2 Sam. 6.11. How much more then shall God blesse them that receive his holy Spirit to rule in their heart by grace? for as David saith, the godly man shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water: and whatsoever hee doth shall prosper. By the blessing of God we have had his Kingdome among us for many yeeres in this nation, and God hath given us with it peace and protection with great abundance of temporall blessings. Indeed God hath sundry wayes corrected us, and laid his heavy hand upon us in sundrie judgements; as plague, famine, &c. and often shaken his rod at us in the hand of our enemies, and all because we have not received the word of his Kingdome, nor yeelded obedience to it as we ought; yea, and we may feare the fulnesse of his wrath, unlesse we repent and amend of this sinne especially. But if we would set our selves to seeke this Kingdome, we needed not to feare feare the want of any needfull blessing; for so God promised to his people, to give them abundance of all things, if they would obey his commandements, which are the lawes and statutes of his Kingdome, Deut. 28.1,2,&c.

How poore men may have sufficient.

This point then is to bee observed for our direction in particular. Art thou a poore man, and wouldest have sufficient food and raiment for thy temporall life? then first, set thy heart to seeke Gods Kingdome, follow the Word, and labour therein for regeneration and new obedience; and doubt not, but if thou be upright and diligent in thy lawfull calling, thou shalt finde sufficient for this life. Quest. If this bee the way to get sufficient, how comes it that we have so many beggars that wander up and downe from doore to doore? Answ. They are (for the most part) a cursed generation, which have no regard to Gods ordinances, either for their soules or bodies; they joyne not themselves to any setled congregation for the obtaining of Gods Kingdome, and so this promise belongs not to them: but God suffers them to wander in an idle course all their life long, destitute of this blessing, to eat their owne bread. Againe, art thou a rich man, and wouldest continue in that estate, to thine owne comfort, and for the good of those that depend upon thee? then set thy heart to seeke Gods Kingdome with a speciall care, seeke to plant Religion in thy family, and thou and thine house shall flourish. Art thou a student, and desirest the blessing of God upon thy labours, with all things sufficient to thy state and calling? then first seeke Gods Kingdome and righteousnesse, labour for righteousnesse and true holinesse, and God will lade thee with his blessings. In a word, whatsoever thou art, Magistrate, Minister, Merchant, Tradesman, &c. man or woman, young or old, and desirest Gods blessing for thy selfe, or any that belong unto thee, remember the practice of this dutie, and use the lawfull meanes which God laies before thee in thy calling; and nothing doubt, but though all meanes faile, yet God will send sufficient.

How the rich man may continue so.

Temporall blessings are dependants on Gods kingdome.

Secondly, this promise of temporall blessings upon the faithfull seeking of the Kingdome of God, lets us see that food, raiment, and all things needfull for this life, are appurtenances and dependants on Gods Kingdome; that is, such things as ayre and beside his Kingdome God will give to them that principally seeke his love and favour by the righteousnesse of Christ, and labour for grace and sanctification by his Spirit: for if he have given us Christ, how shall he not with him give us all things also, Rom. 8. 32.

Vse. 1 The preposterous course of worldlings.

The consideration hereof serves for speciall use: 1. To discover unto us the preposterous course that men take in seeking for temporall blessings; for most men generally neglect the maine good, which is Gods Kingdome, and wholly addict themselves to seeke the things of this life: they take little or no thought for the eternall state of their soules, but spend their wit and strength in providing for their bodies: which is nothing else, but to gripe at the shadow, and to let the substance goe. Wherein we shew our selves foolish and simple, like to little children, who are better pleased with the gift of a nut or an apple, than with the promise of rich revenues, or great inheritance. II. This teacheth us with what minde we must seeke the temporall blessings of this life; namely, with the same honest minde where with wee seeke the Kingdome of God, for they are appurtenances thereunto, and depend upon it: and therefore with an upright heart, we must only use lawfull meanes moderately for the getting of them. And when we have them, this may direct us in the right end whereto we must use our temporall blessings; namely, to the furtherance of our selves and others towards the Kingdome of God; so wee honour God with our riches, as Solomon bids vs, Prov. 3. 9. III. This teacheth us, that they which have no right to Gods Kingdome, nor part in Christs righteousnesse, have no good interest into any temporall blessings; as food, raiment, and such like, for they are dependants upon Gods Kingdome and righteousnesse. As for the heathen before Christs comming, and Turks and Pagans, and all profane persons that live in the Church at this day, who both heretofore, and now also, doe enjoy temporall blessings in great abundance: this wee must know, that they have thereto a civill right by Gods permission, so as it is sinne, without good cause to deprive them thereof; but yet of themselves they are but usurpers, in regard of true title and sanctified use before God: for by Adams fall we lost our right and soveraignty in the creatures, and it is only restored and renued in Christ, so as they which have not part in Christ cannot have this true title. This wee must observe, first, to instruct our selves the better in the knowledge of our owne miserable state by nature; for what wretched creatures are wee, that cannot make good claime nor title before God, to the apparell upon our backes nor to the meat we put into our bellies? nay, of our selves we have not right to the breath we draw in at our nostrills. And out of question this is the state of every naturall man, though he benever so great a Monarch in the world, while he is out of Gods Kingdome, wanting righteousnesse and regeneration by Jesus Christ. Secondly, this also must perswade every one of us, to put in practice the former instruction, endevouring above all things to get Gods Kingdome for our selves; for till we have part herein, we can have no found comfort in the use of Gods creatures, which is necessarily seene to our temporall life. This reason alone, if there were no more, should spur us on to all diligence in this duty: what shame and griefe is it to eat our bread in the sight of God, as theeves and usurpers, doe in the sight of men? and therefore let us give no rest unto our ſoules till wee attaine to ſome good aſſurance in this bleſſed eſtate. The way we muſt remember, is by true conversion and regeneration: and we ſhall diſcerne our ſelves to be regenerate by theſe fruits of the Spirit in us; to wit, I. A true touch of conſcience for our ſinnes, both originall and actuall. II. A godly ſorrow and griefe of heart for offending and diſpleaſing God by our tranſgreſſions. III. An earneſt deſire, or true ſpirituall hunger and thirſt after Chriſt and his righteouſneſſe, teſtified by our conſtant and diligent uſe of thoſe meanes the Word, Prayer, and Sacraments, wherein God gives grace and aſſurance of mercy. IV. An unfained turning unto God from all ſinne by new obedience, having a conſtant purpoſe of heart not to ſinne, and a godly endevour in life to pleaſe God in all things. Theſe are the markes of the new creature, who hath true title to Gods kingdome; which we muſt labour to find in our ſelves for our comfort in the uſe of Gods creatures: and if we finde them in us, our title is good, not onely to his creatures, but to his Kingdome, notwithſtanding our owne unworthineſſe by our former iniquities.

The wicked are usurpers in Gods blessings.

IV. In this, that temporall bleſſings are dependants on Gods Kingdome, wee muſt learne contentation and patience in all temporall loſſes whatſoever, though wee loſe friends, goods, lands, libertie, reputation, or life it ſelfe, yet we muſt not bee overwhelmed with ſorrow or griefe; for if we be Gods children, and retaine his favour, the kingdom of heaven remaines ſure unto us: while a mans ſtocke remaines, though ſome appurtenances bee taken from him, hee counts himſelfe well enough; and ſo muſt we in all worldly loſſes, while our title is good to Gods kingdome. Herewith our Saviour Chriſt comforts his Diſciples, Luk. 12. 32. Feare not little flocke, for it is your Fathers pleaſure to give you his Kingdom. Now if God give us that with his favor in Chriſt, we may be ſure he would give us all temporall bleſſings, if he ſaw them to be good for us; For if he have given us Chriſt how ſhall he not with him give us all things alſo?

Thirdly, this promiſe of Chriſt, to give his kingdome to them that ſeeke it, and beſide, to caſt all temporall bleſſings unto them, if they ſeeke his kingdome principally, doth notably commend unto us the bountifull goodneſſe of God; for here we ſee he gives to his children more than they aske or ſeeke. And this bountie of God, Paul expreſſeth as a ground of our praying God: Eph. 3. 20. To him therefore that is able to doe exceeding abundantly above all that we can aske or think, according to the power that worketh in us, be praiſe in the Church, by Ieſus Chriſt: where we muſt obſerve, that he ſpeaks of Gods ability to be bountifull, as brought into action in his children, ſo as he is not only able but willing hereunto: and hereof we have daily experience in the bleſſings of God which we doe enjoy: for when we pray for ſpirituall graces, God gives them unto us, and many temporall bleſſings alſo. This David confeſſeth, Pſal. 21. 3. Thou diddeſt prevent me with thy liberall bleſſings: and Salomon found it to bee true, who asking only a wiſe and understanding heart, received thereupon riches and honour beſides his wiſdome, 1 King. 3. 13. And ſo did Iacob, who asking onely Gods protection with meat to eat, and Clothes to put on; though he went out but with a ſtaffe, yet returned with two bands.

Now the conſideration of this bounty of God muſt teach us theſe duties; Firſt, to beware of all ſinne, whereby we doe offend and diſpleaſe our God, who is ſo gracious and ſo bountifull unto us: if our outward eſtate did depend upon others, we would then be carefull ſo to carrie our ſelves towards them, as that we would not willingly give them any offence, or cauſe of diſlike; how much more ought wee then to ſeeke the continuance of Gods favour towards us by all good behaviour, ſeeing on him depends our whole eſtate both temporall and eternall? Secondly, to truſt God with our lives, health, bodies, and all we have, for food, raiment, and protection, in the ſober uſe of lawfull meanes, for he is a bountifull God. Thirdly, to ſeeke for helpe and ſuccour from God in all diſtreſſe and want, for he is bountifull; he giveth to all men liberally, and reproacheth no man, Jam. 1. 5. and therefore wee muſt bee ready and forward to call upon him, and to make our moane unto him. Fourthly, to love ſo bountifull a God, yea, to enforce our hearts to all duties of love towards him: Salomon ſaith, Every man is a friend to him that giveth gifts, Prov. 19. 6. but none is to bee compared to God for the riches of bounty; and therefore our love to him ſhould abound. Fifthly, to bee thankfull unto God for all the good things wee enjoy; for whatſoever we have comes from his bountie: and therefore wee muſt ſay with David, What ſhall I give unto the Lord, for all his bleſſings I are upon me, Pſal. 116. 12, 13. In a word, we muſt labour continually in heart and life, to walke worthy of the Lord, and to pleaſe him in all things, being fruitfull in all good workes (as the Apoſtle ſaith,) Coloſſ. 1. 10.

v. 34. Care not for the morrow, for the morrow ſhall care for it ſelfe: the day hath enough with his owne griefe.

Here Chriſt the third time repeats his commandement againſt diſtruſtfull care, propounded firſt in the 25. verſe; In which often repetition, he intends to make us more carefull and diligent, both to learne and practiſe the ſame. And hereto he alſo addeth a ſeventh reaſon to enforce and further our obedience, drawne from the daily griefe and trouble which accompanies every day of our life.

The Expoſition. Care not for the morrow: that is, for the time to come. This may ſeeme a ſtrange commandement, tending to patronage ſloth and negligence, but wee muſt know, that there is a double care for the time to come, I. A godly lawfull care. II. A diſtruſtfull and inordinate care. The godly care is that, whereby a man provides for in the time preſent, ſuch things as are needfull in the time to come, and cannot then be provided: this lawfull care wee may obſerve in our Saviour Chriſt; for he had a bag to keepe proviſion for himſelfe and his Diſciples, which Iudas bare, John 12. 29. and when Agabus foretold of a generall famine, the Diſciples provided aforehand, to ſend ſuccour to the brethren which dwelt in Judea, Act. 11. 28, 29. And thus may a tradeſman provide for maintenance while his ſtrength and ſight is good againſt the time of his age, wherein hee may be unable to follow his calling. And thus doe men in fit ſeaſon provide for food and raiment. And we may provide to day, that is, in the time preſent for any needfull thing, when to morrow will not afford it.

The inordinate and diſtruſtfull care for the morrow, is that whereby men vex their minds, and turmoile themſelves, to provide aforehand for ſuch things as may well enough bee had in the time to come: this parti and rents aſunder the minde, as the word ſignifies: and this our Saviour Chriſt forbids. It is indeed the common care of the world, and we may obſerve the practice of it three waies eſpecially: I. When men provide ſo much worldly goods for themſelves, as would ſerve for many families, or for many generations: there be many ſuch gathergoods, which ſcrape together as though they ſhould never die, and they ſcarce know any end of their wealth. This practice our Saviour Chriſt here forbids. If any in a land might ſeeke for ſuperfluitie, it is the King, whom bountie at all times well beſeemeth, and yet God forbad the King over his owne people, to multiply overmuch his horſes and furniture, his ſilver and his gold, Deut. 17. 16, 17. II. When men ſeeke to prevent all loſſes and caſualties, and ſo plot for themſelves, that how ſoever it goe with others, yet they ſhall ſeeke no want: though others ſtarve and goe naked, they ſhall bee full, and well clothed. III. When men provide for to day and to morrow together afore-hand, when as the morrowes proviſion may ſufficiently, ſafely, and ſoone enough be made on it owne owne day: This Chriſt doth chiefly aime at, as croſſing the practice of faith, whereby wee ſhould depend upon his providence.

Theſe words containe Chriſts ſeventh reaſon againſt diſtruſtfull care; the effect whereof is this, every day of mans life hath care enough and griefe ſufficient, through the buſineſſe that falls out thereon and belongs unto it, and therefore we are not to adde thereunto another daies care and griefe, for ſo wee ſhould bring upon our ſelves more care and griefe than needs.

The morrow, that is the time to come, ſhall care for it ſelfe. Here Chriſt anſwers a queſtion which might bee made from the former commandement; for having forbidden care for the morrow, ſome might ſay, How ſhall we doe on the morrow, and the time to come? Chriſt anſwers, This daies care muſt be to day, and to morrowes care to morrow, each day muſt have his owne care: ſuch care as is fit and needfull for the time preſent muſt now be taken, and ſuch things as are now needfull muſt now be ſought for: but ſuch care as is fit to be taken in the time to come, muſt bee put off to his proper time: and things then needfull muſt then bee ſought for, when their fit time falleth out: every time and every day muſt have his proper care alone.

In this reaſon we have a moſt notable rule for the well ordering of our lives: to wit, that every man muſt know the duties of his lawfull calling, and how the diſcharge thereof will yeeld him things neceſſary and convenient from time to time, and ſo accordingly muſt walke therein; that is, doing onely ſuch duties diligently as the preſent time requireth at his hands, for the procuring of things then meet and neceſſary: and ſo proceeding by dependance on Gods providence, in ſuch care and labour as is fitting for the preſent occaſion, time, and ſeaſon: but for time to come leave on Gods providence, reſting in the care thereof till God require it at thy hands. The practice hereof Samuel injoyneth Saul, 1 Sam. 10. 7. when theſe ſignes (which eſtabliſhing thee in the kingdome) ſhall come unto thee, doe as occaſion ſhall ſerve; that is, doe the preſent duties of a King that lie before thee, without troubling and vexing thy ſelfe through feare or care of things to come, till God offer them to thy hand. And this ſhould bee every mans practice in his calling: and ſo ſhould their prefent diligence teſtifie their obedience, and ſeeme them from preſumption, and their reſpiting of future care till time require it, argue their faith in Gods providence: and thus they ſhould neither fooliſhly feed upon uncertaine hopes, nor needleſſly vex themſelves with untimely cares.

The day hath enough with his owne griefe: that is, every day by reaſon of mans ſinnes, hath trouble and griefe enough, through that care & labour for proviſion which God thereon requireth at our hands: and therefore we ſhould let every day content it ſelfe with his owne care, and not adde thereto another daies griefe.

In this branch of the reaſon, Chriſt ſets out the continued miſerie of mans naturall life; Iacob ſaid to Pharaoh, The dayes of my pilgrimage have beene few and evill, Geneſ. 47. 9. And Iob ſaith, Man that is borne of a woman is of ſhort continuance, & full of trouble, Job 14. 1. But

A double providence in man. 1 Godly.

2 Inordinate providence.

Seventh reaſon againſt diſtruſtfull care.

The continued miſery of mans life.

A rule for our life.

But our Saviour Christ here goes beyond them both, saying, Every day of mans life hath griefe enough of his owne. This being well considered, may teach us these things: I. To walke in our callings soberly, without intangling our selves in worldly cares; for the daily discharge of the duties of our callings, will bring sorrow and griefe enough upon us, wee need not to adde thereto by our carking care; for the more we care, the more miserable is our life. II. To labour to withdraw our hearts, and to estrange our affections from delight in things of this naturall life, or in this life it selfe; for it is full of griefe; and therefore we must so walke in our callings, that we may wait for a better life in Heaven, where we shall have freedome from all sorrow and griefe. The good Prophet Eliah was weary of his life, by reason of the miseries of it, through the calamities of the time; and therefore intreateth the Lord to take away his soule, 1 King. 19. 4. And Paul cries out, one while upon the miseries that hee felt through the bodie of death that was in him, Rom. 7. 24. and at another time desires to be dissolved, and to be with Christ, Phil. 1. 23. not simply, but because there was freedome from all sinne, and the miseries thereof. III. Every day to commend our selves in soules and bodies, and all that wee have, morning and evening, to the blessing and protection of God; for each day and night hath griefe enough, by reason of our sinne, which of our selves we cannot undergoe without the helpe of God, when our Saviour Christ was to die upon the crosse, hee commended his soule into his fathers hands, Luk. 23. 46. And none of us have assurance of our continuance in life, but though we be well in the morning, we may be dead in the evening; or alive at night, and dead in the morning; and therefore we must not forget the practice of this duty: David did it in the time of trouble, though he were in health, Psal. 31. 5. and though wee were free from peril of death, yet our daily vexations should move us hereunto; for who can learne any good thing without labour and paine? who can doe a good worke without let or opposition? If we would repent, we are either clogged with corruptions, or overwhelmed with temptations: and if we seeke to walke in new obedience, we have the world, the flesh, and the devill, all endevouring to turne us backe to our old course in sinne. So that if we would either avoid evill, or doe good, or support with some comfort our daily vexations, we must commend our selves, and all ours, into the hands of God every day. And thus much of this reason, and of Christs dehortation from distrustfull care.

CHAP. 7.

V. 1 Judge not, that you be not judged.

2 For with what judgement ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure you mete, it shall bee measured to you againe.

IN these words, and so forward to the end of the fifth verse, is contained the sixth part of this Sermon of our Saviour Christ, concerning Judgement: and it consisteth of three parts: first, a commandement, Iudgenot: then certaine reasons of the commandement, in the words following, to the fifth verse: and thirdly, a remedy of evill and rash judgement in the fifth verse.

Touching the commandement, Judge not. The meaning. This commandement forbids not all kinde of judgement, but must be restrained to unlawfull judgement; for there be foure kinds of lawfull judgement, two whereof bee publike, and two private. Of publike, the first is civill Iudgement, belonging to the Magistrate, who is to inquire into the manners of men, and according to the positive lawes of the countrie to give judgement, either in punishing offenders, or rewarding them that doe well. The second kinde is Ecclesiasticall, belonging principally to the minister, who in the publike dispensation of the word, judgeth mens manners, by reproving and condemning their sinnes, whether they be thoughts, words, or actions. In this sense the unbeleever is said to bee judged, when his thoughts and actions are controlled by the word, 1 Cor. 14. 24. and thus Noah judged and condemned the old world, Hebr. 11. 7. Of private lawfull judgement, the first is private admonition, whereby one man doth in Christian and loving manner, reprehend another for his sinnes, and thereby judgeth him: this is also commanded in the word of God, and therefore it is not here forbidden. The second is just dispraise, when the grosse grosse faults of notorious persons are reproved and condemned for this end alone, that others may take warning thereby: thus Christ judged the Pharises both for life and doctrine before his Disciples, calling them Hypocrites, that said, and did not: and their doctrine leaven: and that most justly and wisely, that his Disciples and others might beware of them: and thus he called Herod a Fox, so discovering his subtilty, for the admonition of others.

Mat. 23. 1, 2, 33. Mar. 12. 6.

Luk. 6 37.

The thing then here forbidden is rash judgement, which one man doth unjustly give of an other; and the reason why wee so understand this place, may be drawne from the third verse, where instance is given of the judgement here forbidden, in a quicke espiall and sharpe censure of small faults in others, not seeing farre grosser and greater in our selves: also S. Luke setting downe this prohibition, Iudge not, expounds it in the next words, by condemne not: which must be understood of rash censure, as is plaine by S. Paul, Rom. 2. 1. In that thou judgest another, thou condemnest thy selfe, because thou dost rashly condemne him of that whereof thou thy selfe art guilty. Now that we may better know the thing forbidden, first I will shew what rash judgement is, and in the second place make knowne the common practices thereof. For the first:

Rash judgement is, when of an evill mind we judge amisse of others, for some evill end. In this description, first observe the root and ground of all rash judgement; to wit, an evill minde, whereby we love our selves too well, and want the love of our neighbour. This we testifie, by being sharpe sighted, to pry into the lives and behaviour of others, and are as blind as beetles to see into our selves: as also by giving our selves exactly to censure other mens sayings and doings, and with delight to heare their faults ripped up; but for our owne courses, we would not have them called into question, nor controlled. Secondly, here note the manner of rash judgement, which is to judge amisse of others: and this they doe which judge of other mens persons and doings without a calling, or urgent necessitie: secondly, which give out sentence of mens doings, but not according to the law of charity, which binds a man to judge and say the best of others alwaies, so farre forth as may stand with good conscience, and the word of God. Thirdly, here note the end of rash judgement; for as it is ill grounded and guided, so it aimes not at the reformation of the partie, nor the detestation of sinne in our selves and others, but it is directed to some wrong end: as first, to testifie the hatred of the partie, and desire of revenge: secondly, to delight our selves with the faults of others: thirdly, to defame our neighbors, and to bring them to an ill name, that our names may beare away the praise without comparison: and lastly, that we may seeme more holy than others, by being much in censuring sinne in others.

The practice of rash judgement consists in two things: first, the evill mind of man prepares matter of wrong judgement: and secondly, gives sentence accordingly of the sayings and doings of men, and likewise of their persons. For the first, the evill minde prepares matter of rash judgement thus; it sets it selfe to prie and inquire narrowly into the lives and behaviour of men, and to see if it can finde any matter in word or action worthy reproofe. Indeed there is a vertue whereby one man doth observe another in his waies, but that is directed to a good end; namely, to rectifie and reforme him in his wants, and to further him when he doth well: but for one man to observe another for this end, to finde out matter of defamation and reproach, is a fault directly forbidden by our Saviour Christ in this place. Secondly, when matter is found, the evill minde accordingly gives censure: this censure is given first of the persons of men; then of their speeches and actions. Rash censure of mens persons is, when a man thinkes otherwise of the person of another, than in conscience, and by Gods word he ought to doe. Example of this wee have in Satan: for when the Lord commended Iob for his fidelitie, Satan tells the Lord, that Iob indeed served the Lord, but it was onely for his owne profit: for (saith he) withdraw thou thy hand from him, and thou shalt see whether hee will not curse thee to thy face: This then we see is a devilish practice, and ought to be far from every one of us. We must remember what an ancient Divine hath taught heretofore, that there are three things exempted from the judgement and censure of men; the Scriptures, the Counsell of God, and the condemnation of any mans person.

The practice of rash judgement consists in two things.

Rash censure of mens persons.

Iob 1. 8, 9, 10, 11.

August. l. 19. confess. 23.

Rash censure of mens behaviours.

Rash censure of mens speeches and actions is given many waies: I. When things are well done, to carpe and cavill at them without any just cause. Thus the profession of Religion at this day, is accounted of many to be but counterfeit holinesse, and the due obedience to the morall Law is mock-named and termed preciselnesse, and the professours thereof called Puritans and Precisians, for this cause onely, that they make conscience of walking in obedience to Gods Law. II. When actions or speeches indifferent, are taken in the worse part. Thus was Davids kindnesse ill accepted of Hanun King of Ammon, when David sent his servants to comfort him after the death of his father: for his Nobles told him and perswaded him, that David sent not unto him, because he honoured his father, (though David undoubtedly sent with an honest and upright heart) but as it were craftily to search out the City, and to spie it out, and to overthrow it. Now hereupon Davids servants were badly intreated, and shamefully sent away: whence grew the warre that ensued betweene them. III. When upon light occasion and uncertaine reports, we suspect and surmise evill of our neighbour: suspitions indeed deed are ſometime good, being conceived on a good ground, and retained for a good end; as to beware of the partie and of his evill: but when they are conceived upon light cauſes, and for ſome ſiniſter reſpect (as the common practice is, upon no good ground to conceive moſt badly) this is raſh judgement. IV. When wee ſee any want in our neighbours ſpeech or behaviour, to make it worſe than it was meant, or than indeed it is. V. When wee ſpread abroad and publiſh the wants of men, to defame them, which might better bee concealed, and in conſcience and charity ought ſo to bee. VI. When wee ſpeake nothing but the truth of another, but yet withall doe inſinuate thereby ſome evill of the partie into the hearts of the hearers. This practice is as peſtilent and dangerous as any of the former. Thus Doeg told Saul of the fact of Ahimelech unto David, how he gave him victuals, & the ſword of Goliah, which was true: but withall he did therein inſinuate, that David and Ahimelech intended conſpiracy againſt Saul. And this telling of the truth in that ſort, coſt the lives of fourſcore and five perſons, that wore the linen Ephod, as we may reade, 1 Sam. 21.7. compared with the 22 chap. v. 9, and 18. VII. When in hearing the Word preached, and ſins reproved in the congregation, ſome hearers miſ-apply the ſame: as for example, the Miniſter reproves the ſinn of ſweating, of drunkenneſſe, or any ſuch ſinne: then ſome one guilty hereof, doth not only ſurmiſe, but alſo breake forth into this ſpeech, Now the preacher meanes me: he ſpeakes this of me: he cenſures my facts and ſpeeches; hereupon followes ſpight and malice againſt the perſon of the Miniſter, and alſo raſh cenſuring and condemning of his miniſterie. They alſo ſinne in this kinde, that apply the reproofes of ſinne to the perſon of others: as when they ſay, Now ſuch a one is touched: there is a good leſſon for ſuch a one if he would learne it: yea, others go further, and ſay, Now the preacher meanes ſuch a man: now he ſpeakes againſt ſuch a man: but this alſo is raſh judgement in hearing of the Word: they miſ-conceive of the purpoſe of the Miniſter: for his manner is not when hee ſtandeth in the roome of God, to rip up the ſecrets and lives of ſome particular hearers; but to deliver the will of God concerning ſuch and ſuch ſinnes unto all: it is the power of the Word, not the minde of the Preacher, that cauſeth it to touch thy conſcience: and therefore every one ought to apply the Word unto his owne heart, and not to lay it upon others, or elſe take it to be ſpoken of himſelfe for his diſgrace: for it is to miſ-apply the Word, and to judge amiſſe of the Preacher: and this is a common ſinne, which is the cauſe why many men reape ſo little profit by the Word preached as they doe. The VIII. practice of raſh judgement is, when in townes and cities ſome perſons are wrongfully reputed and taken for Witches: this is as common a ſinne thorowout the world as any of the former: one man will ſay, Such a one is a Witch, becauſe he in conſcience is ſo perſwaded; and yet the ground of this perſwaſion is nothing but his bare conceit. Another man ſaith, Such a one is a Witch, becauſe a wiſe man or a wiſe woman hath ſo reported of him or her: and yet this teſtimonie is but the teſtimonie of the Devill, who is a lyar, and the father thereof: if hee tell truth, it is with purpoſe to deceive. Againe, another is judged to be a Witch, becauſe comming to a mans houſe to borrow ſomething, and being denied thereof, he tooke it unkindly, and thereupon gave theſe, or ſuch like threatning words; It had bin as good you had lent it mee; or, I will meet with you: and hereupon ſome one in the family fell ſicke, or ſome cattell died, and other things did miſ-carry. It is no queſtion, but Witches be too rife among us, and ought to bee ſought out and ſeverely puniſhed; and there bee lawfull waies of convincing a Witch: but upon theſe bare preſumptions to judge any one to bee a Witch, is an unchriſtian practice of raſh judgement: for why may not the hand of God befall thee in viſiting ſome one in thy family, or in the death of thy cattell, as well as the annoyance of the Witch, after ſome hard ſpeeches of another. A Witch therefore muſt firſt be lawfully convinced, and then judged to be a Witch, and not before. This thing eſpecially Jurers ought to looke unto; elſe if they have but the ordinary diſcretion of common people, to judge one for a Witch upon theſe preſumptions, they may eaſily defile their hands with innocent bloud. Thus much for the ſinne of raſh judgement, and the practices thereof, which are condemned and forbidden in this place.

Now becauſe it is ſo common a ſinne in all places, and with moſt men counted no ſin: for the common talke in all meetings is of other men, and ſelfe-love makes the heart glad to heare other mens faults ripped up, yea, this ſinne will take hold when other ſinnes leave a man, which cauſed Chriſt to forwarne his Diſciples hereof in this place: therefore it is our dutie to labour and ſtrive the more earneſtly to be purged from this evill minde: and preſerved from theſe evill practices of raſh judgement: for which end let us lay to our conſciences the reaſons following: I. The practice of raſh Judgment cannot ſtand with Chriſtian charity: for charity binds a man to walke in love, and love ſuſpecteth not evill, but thinkes the beſt alwaies, and if it be poſſible, thinkes well of all. II. When thou ſeeſt a man ſpeake or practiſe any evill, for which thou beginneſt to thinke hardly of him, then conſider well of thine owne ſelfe, how thou haſt both that and all other ſinnes in thee, if wee regard the roat of ſinne, and therefore doe not raſhly condemne him for his fact, becauſe thou thy ſelfe haſt done the like heretofore; or elſe in time to come maiſt do the like or worſe than hee hath done whom thou now condemneſt. III. Conſider that God the the Father hath committed all judgement unto his Sonne: who now executeth publike judgement by the magiſtrate in the common-wealth, and by the Miniſter in the Church; and private judgement of admonition, and juſt diſpraiſe, by them whom he calleth thereunto: if therefore thou judgeſt another, not being called thereto, thou thruſteſt Chriſt out of his office, and robbeſt him of his honour, which is a grievous ſinne, and cannot be unpuniſhed. IV. Conſider alſo that thou art unable, whatſoever thou art, to judge aright of other mens actions, being ignorant of many circumſtances thereof: for thou knoweſt not with what minde, or to what end the action was done: thou knoweſt not the cauſe why he did it, nor the ſtate of his perſon, nor manner of his temptation thereto: and therefore why judgeſt thou raſhly of him? V. He that gives raſh judgement of another, is worſe than a theefe that ſteales away a mans goods: for hee robs him of his good name, which (as Salomon ſaith) Is to be choſen above great riches, Prov. 22.1. Againe, riches may be reſtored, ſo cannot a mans good name, being once blemiſhed in the hearts of many. Againe, a man may defend himſelfe from a theefe, but no man can ſhunne another mans evill minde, or his bad tongue: nay, the backbiter is worſe than a murtherer, for he killeth three at once; firſt, his owne ſoule in thus ſinning: ſecondly, his neighbour whoſe name he hurteth: and thirdly, the hearer, who receiveth this raſh and unjuſt report: and for this cauſe the ſlanderer is numbred among thoſe that ſhall not inherit the kingdome of God, Pſal. 15.3. 1 Cor. 6. 10. and the Apoſtle chargeth Chriſtians to account of ſuch raylers as of perſons excommunicate, 1 Cor. 5. 11.

Here ſome will ſay; If we may not give our opinion of others freely as we have done; what muſt we doe when we have occaſion to ſpeake of them? Anſw. Thy carriage towards others muſt bee according to theſe rules: I. If thou know any good thing by the partie of whom thou ſpeakeſt, when thou haſt occaſion thinke and ſpeake of that: if thou know evill by him alſo, conceale it from others: and if thou maiſt, admoniſh the party thereof: or elſe tell it to thoſe who have authority to correct his faults; and thus ſhalt thou win thy brother. Some will ſay, I doe indeed ſometime cenſure my brother for his faults, yet onely in deteſtation of his ſinne; I love the party never the worſe; and I onely doe it to ſome private friend that will not tell it againe. Anſ. But this excuſe, and all ſuch like are frivolous: no colour of good intent can excuſe raſh judgement: if thou loveſt him, why doeſt thou make knowne his fault to another, for love covereth a multitude of ſinnes? And if thy conſcience anſwer, it will tell thee that either ill will to the partie cauſeth thee ſo to doe, or ſelfe-love, whereby through his defamation thou thy ſelfe ſeekeſt to be advanced above him in the thoughts of others. In thy cenſuring therefore looke to thine heart, whether malice move thee not the eto: and take heed to the end alſo; for if it riſe from a bad ground, or tend to a wrong end, the whole action is naught. II. Duttie. Wee ought to thinke as well of every man as poſſibly we can, yea, of our enemie and of his actions: for love thinketh not evill; and in the practice of love towards our enemies we become followers of God, Matth. 5.44, 45. III. Duttie. If thou marke thy neighbours life and behaviour, doe it for this end, to withdraw him from ſinne, and to further him in well-doing. Laſtly, in all thy ſocieties and dealings with others, labour either to doe them good, or to receive good from them: and by this meanes thou ſhalt eſchew the ſinne of raſh judgement.

Of ſuſpecting evill of others.

How to judge of others rightly.

1 Rule.

Here two queſtions may bee moved concerning raſh judgement, and that neceſſarily, becauſe ſurmiſes will ariſe upon very ſmall occaſions.

I. Queſt. When may a man doubt or ſuſpect evill of another? Anſ. In all ſuſpition recourſe muſt bee had to the ground thereof, whether it riſe of juſt and ſufficient cauſe or not. A ſufficient cauſe of ſuſpition is that, which in the judgement of wiſe men, being well conſidered with all the circumſtances thereof, is judged ſufficient: and on the other ſide, that is inſufficient, which wiſe men, wel weighing with the circumſtances thereof, do judge inſufficient: if then the cauſe of ſuſpition bee thought inſufficient in the judgement of the wiſe and godly, we muſt ſuſpend our ſuſpition: as thus; ſuppoſe ſome evill is reported abroad of ſuch a man; as that he is a theefe, an adulterer, of ſuch like; yet this ſame riſeth only of ſome one mans report, which becauſe it may proceed from an ill minde on a private grudge, we are not to yeeld thereupon to ſuſpect ill of the partie: this report may well cauſe us to ſearch further into the caſe, and move us to looke unto our ſelves that we be not hurt by him. But if the cauſe be thought ſufficient in the judgement of thoſe that are wiſe and diſcreet, then we may without offence or breach of conſcience, yeeld to ſuſpect and judge evill of another.

II. Queſtion. How may wee give upright judgement of all men with whom we live and have to deale? Anſ. This is as neceſſarie to bee knowne as the former, for as wee are prone to thinke ill, ſo wee are alſo forward in judging raſhly: therefore there are three things required in the judging of others: Firſt, we muſt have recourſe to the cauſe of our judgement: for if the cauſe bee inſufficient, then our judgement is raſh and unlawfull. Before the Lord brought upon the world the confuſion of languages; he is ſaid to goe down among them to ſee their fact, Gen. 11. 6. and before hee deſtroyed Sodome and Gomorrah with fire and brimſtone, hee is ſaid to come downe from Heaven, to ſee whether they had done according to the cry that was come up to the Lord, Gen. 18. 21. whereby the Lord would teach us, that before he enter into judgement with any man, or any people, he first takes good consideration of the fact, which causeth his punishment.

A

Secondly, we must have authority and warrant by calling to give judgement, or else some thing which is answerable thereto, though the judgement be private: as to give admonition or just dispraise; yet without a calling we must not do it: hee that giveth judgement must bee able truly to say, The Lord hath called me thus to doe. The Magistrate, the Minister, the Master, and every Superiour hath authority to judge those that are under him: and for private men in private judgement, though they want this authoritie by calling, yet if they have that which is answerable hereto, that is, the affection of Christian love; so as they can say with Paul, The love of God constraineth mee, then they may judge.

Thirdly, we must alwaies have a good end of our judgement, as well as a good beginning: that is, the reformation and amendment, not the defaming of our brother. And these three concurring in all hard speeches, they cease to be rash and unjust censures. John Baptist calls the Pharisees and Sadduces, a generation of vipers, Matth. 3. 7. our Saviour Christ calls them [a] hypocrites, and painted tombes: and [b] Herod a Fox: the Prophet Esay calls the Princes and people of Iuda and Israel, [c] Princes and people of Sodome: and the Apostle calls the Galatians, Fooles; Gal. 3. 1. and the Cretians, Liars, evill beasts, slow bellies, Tit. 1. 12, 13. All which are hard speeches, but yet no slanders; because they had all of them a calling so to doe: and likewise did this on good ground, and for a good end.

Thus much for the commandement. Now follow two reasons to induce us to make conscience of rash judgement. The former is laid downe in these words: That ye be not judged. And it may be framed thus:

If ye judge, ye shall bee judged of men againe with rash judgement:

But ye cannot abide to bee judged of rashly: and therefore judge not.

The second part is understood, but yet necessarily collected. The conclusion is the commandement it selfe, Judge not.

This reason doth afford unto us two instructions. I. It giveth us a taste and view of our owne naturall pride and selfe-love: for when wee heare God dishonoured by swearing, or our neighbours name defamed by slandering, we are not only not grieved, but oftentimes are the cause thereof, and take great delight therein, especially in hearing other mens faults ripped up to their disgrace: but yet wee can in no sort brooke or suffer our owne good name to be called in question: if our selves be evill spoken of, we are presently filled with malice and envy, and cannot be at rest till we bee requited or revenged: nay, though we be in a good manner admonished of our fault, even in love, and after a friendly sort, yet wee can very hardly brooke it; though the partie admonishing make knowne unto us, that he doth it only for our good, without all purpose of disgrace unto our persons.

How to know and judge rightly of our owne sins.

II. Instruct. Here also our Saviour Christ affordeth unto us a notable way whereby wee may come to the knowledge of our owne sins, and of the hainousnesse thereof. When we behold sinne in our selves, wee hardly judge it to be sinne: we must therefore looke upon our owne sinnes in the person of others, and learne to judge of it in our selves as wee judge of it in others. When we consider of rash judgement in others against our selves, wee count it a vile and grievous sinne, yea, odious and intolerable: and in like sort ought wee to thinke of rash judgement in our selves towards others: and so for every other sinne in our selves, we ought to judge of it, as we doe when we see it in the persons of others against us: otherwise if wee looke onely to our selves, we shall sooth up our selves in sinne, making great sinnes little sinnes, and small sinnes none at all.

v. 2 For with what judgement ye judge, ye shall bee judged: and with what measure you mete, it shall bee measured to you againe.

C

This verse containes a double confirmation of the former reason, drawne from the event. The first, in these words, For with what judgement ye judge, ye shall be judged: as if Christ had said; If ye judge men rashly, then men againe, by the appointment of God in his wisdome and providence, shall accordingly give rash judgement upon you: but if yee judge men righteously, then men againe, by Gods appointment and providence, shall judge well of you: for so I take the words to bee meant of mens judgement by Gods appointment in his providence, and not of Gods judgement immediatly.

A maine cause of personall defamation.

Now in this proofe, First, wee may observe one true and maine cause of that personall defamation which is common in the world, and it is to be found in the person himselfe that is defamed; he hath rashly and unjustly censured others, for which God in his providence, doth most justly cause others to defame him againe: so as men themselves doe most of all wound their owne good names, and by their bad carriage toward others justly cause their owne disgrace. In regard whereof we must learne; first, to set a carefull watch before our mouthes, to keepe the doore of our lips, governing our tongues by the word of God: for when we censure others rashly, we doe procure judgement unto our selves. Secondly, to bee patient under the rash censures and slanders of others. For we must thinke, that wee our selves have heretofore totore done the like to others: and therefore it is justice with God to reward us in the same kinde, wherewith we have wronged others. This is Salomons counsell, Give not thine heart to all the words that men speake, lest thou doe heare thy servant cursing thee: for oftimes also thine heart knoweth that thou likewise hast cursed others.

A

Secondly, in this proofe we may also observe the right way, how to get and keepe a good name: to wit, by judging others with Christian judgement, carrying a charitable opinion of every one, speaking the best of them in all companies, so farre forth as we can with good conscience, and never judging hardly of any, till wee bee indeed lawfully called thereunto, having a good ground for our action, and doing it for a good end: If thou wouldest love long (saith the Prophet) and see good dayes, refraine thy tongue from evill, and thy lips that they speake no guile: that is, speake not evil of any man, though thou know ill by him, till thou be lawfully called thereto.

Thirdly, from the consideration of this providence of God, whereby he ordereth and disposeth, that defamers of others shall be rewarded in their kinde, and that by others; we may gather, that God knowes every unadvised thought of the heart, and every rash censure which we speake or thinke of others; else how could this be true, that rash judgers shall be so rewarded in their kinde, seeing men may conceale their thoughts, and many times their words from the eyes of men. To this purpose Salomon admonisheth, not to curse the King, no not in thy thought, nor the rich man in thy bedchamber: for the fowle of heaven shall carry the voyce, and that which hath wings shall declare the matter. And this must teach us for to make conscience of all our speeches and thoughts that concerne others, yea, then when wee our selves are judged. When David was railed upon by wicked Shimei, hee stayed himselfe with the consideration of this, that God knew it, and appointed Shimei to curse David, 2 Sam. 16. 10.

C

Lastly, here it may bee doubted how God can be cleared from the guilt of rash judgement, seeing in his providence he causeth it by his decree. Answ. Though hee decree it, yet is hee free from the fault thereof: for first, he decrees it not to be the cause thereof himselfe, but to permit it among men, leaving them to be the authors thereof: secondly, hee decrees to dispose of it well, and to order it as a just punishment of the rash judgement of others, and so in no sort is the cause of the evill in rash judgement; howsoever he dispose hereof for the just punishment of offenders in this kinde.

The second confirmation of the first reason is contained in this parable, which tendeth to the same end with the former sentence: And with what measure you mete, it shall be measured to you againe: that is, the Lord hath ordained that men shall be rewarded in their kinde, like for like. Hence wee may observe this rule of Gods justice in the punishment of sinnes namely, to reward men in their kind, punishing them in the same things wherein they offend. David sinned by committing adultery with Bathsheba, the wife of Vriah: and God by way of punishment raised up evill against him out of his own house in the same kinde: for his owne sonne Absalom, defloured his fathers concubines in the sight of all Israel, 2 Sam. 12. 9, 11. and 16. 22. And experience shewes, that blood will have blood; for though the murtherer escape the hands of the civill Judge, yet he terrour and vengeance of God doth ordinarily pursue him to destruction. A notable example hereof wee have in the holy league (as it is called) but indeed the bloudy league; wherein the enemies of Gods grace and truth did confederate themselves to root out true religion, and the professors thereof from off the earth: but the Lord hath rewarded them in their kinde, and turned their owne swords against themselves, causing them to spoile one another; according to the prophecie of Esay, Woe to thee that spoylest, and was not spoyled: and doest wickedly, and they did not wickedly against thee: when thou shalt cease to spoile, thou shalt be spoyled. Ier. 33. 1.

This rewarding justice of God well observed, doth discover unto us, yea, and denounce a fearefull woe, not onely against all those that give out rash judgement of others; but against all usurers and oppressors, who mete out hard measure unto others, even cruelty without mercy: but so shall they be served againe. Gods heavy hand hath heretofore lien fore upon this land for many yeares in dearth and scarcity, which also in some sort hath beene made more grievous upon the poore, by hard hearted rich men, who are like to great fishes that devoure the lesser: for they grinde the faces of the poore, and pluck off their skins from them, and their flesh from the bones, by their wicked covetousnesse; yea, doubles their cruelty cost many a mans life. Some in higher place by inclosing, and racking of rents: others of meaner sort, by ingrossing and with-holding the commodities of the land from the common good til a time of dearth come, wherein (as the Prophet saith) they make the Ephah small, and the Shekel great; that is, sell little for much, lessening the measure, and enhancing the price. And indeed, such a time of dearth is the worldlings day, wherein they do inrich themselves by the spoile of the poore: but they must know that a fearefull woe belongs unto them: for the like mercilesse measure shall be measured to them againe; and when they cease to spoyle, then shall they bee spoyled: for when the hand of God is heavy upon the poore, then no doubt is vengeance preparing for hard hearted rich men, who increase the same. The Lord forbiddeth to trouble the widdow or fatherlesse childe: Exod. 22. 22, 23, &c. for if thou vex and trouble such, and so he call and cry unto mee, I will surely heare sons cry then shall my wrath be kindled, and I will kill you with the sword: and your wives shall be widowes, and your children fatherlesse. This is Gods word, and it must stand. The Lord himselfe foretold that towards the latter day, iniquity should abound, & charity should wax cold: and are not these the times wherof Christ spake? for what power hath the Gospell to withdraw mens hearts from iniquity? and when was there ever lesse charity than is now? well, these are fore-runners of greater judgements; and therefore in the feare of God, let us make conscience of this and all other sinnes, even in consideration of this, that the Lord will pay us home in that kinde wherein we offend.

v. 3 And why seest thou the mote that is in thy brothers eye, & perceivest not the beame that is in thine owne eye?

4. Or how saiest thou to thy brother, Suffer me to cast out the mote out of thine eye, and behold a beam is in thine own eie?

B

These two verses containe a second reason to inforce the former commandement against rash judgement. The meaning of the words is this: Why seest thou] that is, upon what ground, for what cause, with what conscience seest thou. And so in the 4.v. How saiest thou] that is, with what face, with what honesty and conscience saiest thou. So much these interrogations how, and why import. Seest] sight, here is not a light or sudden beholding of the mote, but a seeing with attention, a serious and considerate observation thereof. A mote] the word used in the originall, may as well be translated a straw, or a peece of a straw, as a mote, as it hath beene in former times; for it will beare either translation: yet the word beame, seemes rather to have reference to a straw, than to a mote: but which way soever it be taken, it signifies small and little sinnes, as sinnes of ignorance and infirmity, such as the best Christians doe commit, and cannot be free from in this life. Againe, it signifieth supposed sinnes; such as are not indeed sins before God, but onely in his opinion that giveth rash judgement. And perceivest not] this perceiving is properly an action of the minde, standing in consideration and thinking, which followes after seeing. Thus the world is used, Luk. 12. 27. Consider the lillies of the field; that is, looke upon them, and then consider well thereof in your minde. And, Jam. 1. 23. He that heares the Word, and doth it not, is like unto a man that BEHOLDS his naturall face in a glasse: that is, to one that sees and considers of his shape. So that Christs meaning is, as if hee had said, It may be thou seest, but why doest thou not well weigh and consider with thy selfe of the beame that is in thine owne eye? By beame, is here meant great and notorious reigning sins in mans heart; such as wound the conscience, which are like unto a beame in the eye: which doth not onely blemish, but quite dash out the sight. Some may here aske, in what sense this is spoken, seeing the eye is not capable of a beame? Ans. It is spoken by way of supposition, as if it had bin said; If it were possible that a beame could be in the eye, the rash censurers fault is as a beame in the eye: this kind of speech is usuall in Scripture; If I could speake with tongues of Angels, saith S. Paul, 1 Cor. 13. 1. that is, suppose Angels had tongues, and that I could speake as eloquently as they. The words of the 4. vers. are for substance all one with the former in the 3. The difference betweene them is only this; in the 3. v. Christ speaks only of rash judgement conceived in the mind; but in the 4. he speakes of rash judgement uttered in speech: How saiest thou to thy brother, &c. So that in both verses the words are a parable bearing this sense; with what face, honesty, or conscience, canst thou finde fault with thy brother, either in thought or speech, thou thy selfe being tainted with greater faults and offences? And hence the second reason may bee thus conceived:

He that hath greater faults, must not censure him that hath lesser:

But he that gives rash judgement, hath greater faults than he whom he censureth: And therefore no man ought to use rash judgement.

The proposition or first part is omitted: the Assumption expressly set downe in the 3. and 4. v. whereupon the conclusion follows against rash judgement.

Our words and thoughts must have good ground.

Upon this forme of speech, How seest thou? why saiest thou? that is, with what face and honesty, and upon what ground? we may learne this instruction; that our speeches, yea, our very thoughts must be conceived and uttered upon good ground, and in a good manner. Establish thy thought by counsell, (saith Salomon) and by counsell make war: teaching us to haue direction from the word of God, for the ground and manner of our very thoughts, and for all our affaires. Our Saviour Christ bids us take heed how we heare Gods word: and Salomon would draw us to this heed and attention in prayer also; Be not rash with thy mouth, nor let thy heart be hasty to utter a thing before God: now that which they speake of divine exercises, is in this place by our Saviour inlarged to every thought of the heart, and word of the mouth, that concernes our brother.

D

Further, in these words, Seest thou; that is, with attention and consideration beholdest] our Saviour Christ acquaints us with a common fault wherewith our nature is generally stained and corrupted: to wit, that we are over-sharpe sighted in other mens lives and offences: this appeares in that men can easily discerne small faults faults in others, and cannot see great offences in themselves, nay, when they can finde no fault, yet they will make those faults which indeed be none at all. Example hereof we have in the Scribes and Pharisies, in their censures against our Savior and his Disciples: they themselves were hypocrites tainted with grievous sinnes, and yet they pried to finde motes in Christs eyes: for when he wrought miracles, cured the diseased, and did good unto all, they blamed him as a breaker of the Sabbath day, and as a companion of Publicans and sinners, though he conversed with them for their good: so they blamed his Disciples for eating with unwashen hands, and for plucking up the eares of corne on the Sabbath day, to satisfie their hunger; and for their seldome fasting. This fault was in the Corinthians, who censured Paul and his ministery: for want of eloquence and excellency of words, which was in other Teachers among them, as may appeare by his rebuking of them, 1 Cor. 4. And the Christian brethren among the Romans condemned one another in the observation of dayes and times, and in the use of the creatures of God, Rom. 14. which was nothing else but rash judgement. And this no doubt is a fault which reignes in our congregations, even among the better sort at this day; for deeply is our nature stained with this corruption, and so prone it is to this sinne, that even they which have received true grace, can hardly abstaine from the practices of rash judgement.

The consideration hereof must teach us these duties: First, to take knowledge of this corruption of our nature, and of the want of brotherly love in us; for why should we so soone spie a fault in another, but because we want love and charity to his person? Wee may consider the vilenesse of this practice by resemblance in some brute creatures: for we account most basely of those ravening fowles which delight in nothing but in filthy carrions; and such for all the world are these rash censurers, all their delight is in other mens faults, which makes them so sharpe sighted to spie them out.

Secondly, when we are about to censure any man, we must (in regard of this corruption) suspect our selves, and our speeches, and call our selves backe to a view and consideration of that which we are to speake; for oft-times we see that which we ought not to see, and thereupon speake that which we ought in conscience to conceale. Physicians give this note of a phrensie, to begin to take up strawes: now when the minde lookes not into it selfe, but pries into other mens actions, then no doubt it is not right, but is corrupt and infected with a spirituall phrensie, and therefore the danger of this disease must cause us to looke unto our selves.

Thirdly, here wee may observe a reason of the strange behaviour of men in regard of sinne: for this we may easily perceive, that men with open mouth will condemne those things in others, which they like and approve in themselves: now the cause hereof is, for that the affections doe follow the minde; such as the mind is, such are the affections: and mans mind naturally looketh out ward, not inward, it sees very little faults in others, but will neither see nor condemne the same faults, nor greater in it selfe: nay, rather it causeth man to love those sinnes in himselfe, which he detests in others. And therefore in the amendment of our lives, wee must begin in our owne hearts, and turne the eye of our minde inward, to see our owne sinnes, and labour first to have our hearts touched with sorrow for them, and to hate them first in our selves, and then to proceed to hate them in others. It is a preposterous course, arising from the corruption of Nature, to begin with the hatred and dislike of sinne out of our selves.

Sinnes differing in degree.

11. Doctrine. Further, here in this reason our Saviour Christ makes a difference of sinnes: some are as motes, some as beames: every sinne indeed is death and condemnation, and yet all are not equall, but farre different in degrees: as some men are drowned in the channel and middle of the sea, some by the shore side, which places differ in depth and danger, though all is one in regard of death: some men endure damnation in deeper measure, some in lesser, yet both are condemned. But the Papists abuse these words, and would gather hereon a distinction of sinnes which God doth not allow; to wit, that some sins are venial, which deserve not death, and these are here called motes: some againe are mortall, deserving death, and those are called beames. But the mote and beame are both mortall sins. A mote or a straw may sometime put out the eye, though indeed the beame be more forcible to dash it quite out: and so doe small sinnes wound the conscience, and damne the soule, though greater sinnes doe more deeply wound the conscience, and plunge the same into hell: small and great sinnes, both destroy the soule, though in a different degree: the very mote is deadly sinne, though in nature the beame be more mortall. This distinction they borrowed from former ages, but abusing the Primitive Church from whence they had it: for the ancient Fathers called some sinnes venial, not because they deserved not death, but because they were pardonable in regard of the Church, and did not incurre the censure of excommunication; and those they called mortall or criminall sinnes, which had the censure of excommunication passed against them: so that the Papists abuse both Fathers and Scripture in this distinction.

Bellarm. de remiss. grat. & stat. pec. l. 1. c. 9.

How the Fathers called some sinnes venial.

Thirdly, Christ naming the very eye, and not the face, or other parts of the body, would hereby give us to understand, what is the property and scope of rash judgement; namely, to deface the very intention of his heart of whom censure is given. When David sent his servants to Hanun King of Ammon, to comfort him after his fathers death; the Princes of Ammon told their lord, that Davids ſervants were but ſpies that came to ſearch out his city: thus they judged raſhly of Davids fact, and their intent was to corrupt the honeſt mind of David: perſwading the King that David and his ſervants had another intent and end of their comming than they made known to the King. So that the raſh cenſurer ſeeketh to blemiſh the good minde and conſcience of his brother. And hence wee may well be warned to take notice of our naturall corruption, how that without Gods ſpeciall grace we doe plainly hate our brother; elſe wee would never ſo ſuſpitiouſly prie into his wayes, as to deprave his good meaning. Wee muſt therefore content our ſelves with the ſpeeches and actions of our brother, and take heed how we denle about the eye; that is, with his intent and meaning; that wee muſt leave to God, who only knowes the heart, and for his actions and ſpeeches (if it may be) we muſt alwayes expound them in the better part: if we cannot defend a mans doing, yet we muſt excuſe his meaning: if we cannot excuſe his intent, yet wee muſt think the beſt of his conſcience: if we cannot excuſe his conſcience, yet wee muſt judge it to be but a ſinne of ignorance: if we cannot doe ſo, yet we muſt thinke that it was done in ſome grievous temptation, and that if we our ſelves had beene in like caſe, we ſhould have done far worſe: we know not when God may give grace to men, or when he leaves them to themſelves, and therefore in regard of the mind and conſcience, we muſt comprimit our judgement at all times.

And perceiveſt not that is, though it may be thou ſeeſt it, yet thou doeſt not well conſider of it. Here our Saviour noteth out a ſecond maine fault in mans nature to be thought upon; namely, carnall ſecurity, whereby though in ſome ſmall meaſure men ſee their offences, yet naturally they never think on them heartily and ſeriouſly as they ought to doe; S. Paul ſaith, Awake thou that ſleepeſt, ſignifying, that by nature we lie ſlumbering in ſinne; ſo as though we may ſometime have a little glimmering thereof, yet wee never thorowly behold and conſider them as we ſhould: the Lord himſelfe complains of this ſecurity in ſinne in his owne people: No man ſaith, what have I done? Jer. 8.6. This was the ſinne of the old world; they knew nothing till the flood came, Mat. 24.39. it may be they had now and then ſome conceit thereof, but they thought not ſeriouſly thereon: now as the dayes of Noah were, ſo ſhall be the dayes of the comming of the Son of man, in regard of ſecurity: and theſe are thoſe dayes wherein we now live: for how ſoever we ſometime thinke on our ſins, yet we looke not on them with both eyes, as we doe on our neighbours faults. We muſt here be warned to take heed of this ſin: for it is a fearefull caſe, either not to ſee our ſinnes; or ſeeing them, to paſſe them over without ſerious conſideration. The Apoſtle ſaith, when men ſay, peace, peace, then comes ſudden deſtruction. Now men doe then moſt fearefully cry, peace, peace, unto themſelves, when they either will not ſee their ſinnes, or ſeeing them, doe not well conſider thereof in their hearts. We therefore muſt labour for this grace to have a cleare ſight into our ſinnes: for without that we can never ſorrow according unto God, nor repent unto life as we ought to doe.

Why ſeeſt thou, &c. and how ſayeſt thou to thy brother] in both theſe phraſes conſider how Chriſt would have all thoſe which are to give judgement of the offences of others, to be themſelves without reproofe and blameleſſe: they are no fit perſons to give cenſure of thoſe that bee under them. And therefore the Magiſtrate in the Towne and Common-wealth, the Miniſter in the Church, the maſter in the family, and every ſuperior in his place, muſt labour to be unblameable: for if they be taunted with groſſe ſinnes, they can never thorowly purge them that bee under them. A Miniſter (ſaith Paul) muſt be unreproveable, 1 Tim. 3.2. and ſo likewiſe the Magiſtrate, who is Gods vicegerent, and every governour in his place.

Laſtly, in both verſes obſerve the condition of thoſe that are given to raſh judgement: namely, that of all men they are the worſt: Chriſt maketh them to carry beames in their eyes, when others have but motes or ſtrawes. The man that is given to cenſure others, would ſeeme to be of all men moſt holy: but the truth is, there is none ſo bad as he though he be a Miniſter, yea be hee what he will, nay the better is his place, the worſe is his fault: and the more he is given to this ſinne of cenſuring, the worſe hee is, for the leſſe he ſees his owne ſinnes: nay, let him live unblameably before men, yet hee hath a heart full of pride and ſelfe-love, and full of diſdaine toward his brother. And therefore let us take heed of this ſinne, even when it begins to creepe upon us.

Judges of others ſhould be blameleſſe.

Raſh cenſurers the vileſt perſons.

V. 5 Hypocrite, firſt, caſt out the beame out of thine owne eye: and then ſhalt thou ſee clearely to caſt out the mote out of thy brothers eye.

The remedy of raſh judgement.

This verſe containes a remedy againſt raſh judgement: it depends upon the former verſes as an anſwer to a ſecret objection that might thence ariſe; for whereas Chriſt had ſaid, Iudge not: and why ſeeſt thou a mote in thy brothers eie, &c. ſome man might ſay, belike then it is not lawfull to correct my brother by ſpeech, and by reproofe to ſeeke amendment of his fault. To this Chriſt here anſwers; that hee forbids not brotherly correction and admonition, but the evill, corrupt, and unchriſtian manner of giving admonition and correction; whenas men take a prepoſterous courſe in cenſuring, and doe doe not beginne with themſelves in the firſt place, but with their brethren: as if our Saviour Chriſt had ſaid, Hypocrite, thou haſt greater faults than he whom thou judgeſt: and therefore if thou wilt take a right courſe in thy correction, beginne with thy ſelfe, reforme the great ſinnes that be in thy ſelfe, and then ſhalt thou be fitter and better able to correct and reforme thy brother. So that theſe words containe two parts: 1. the remedy of raſh judgement, Hypocrite, firſt caſte out the beame out of thine owne eye: 2. the fruit hereof, which is true wiſdome, to be able to diſcerne aright of our neighbours fault, and alſo how it is to be cured, in theſe words, and then ſhalt thou ſee clearely to caſt out the mote out of thy brothers eye. Of theſe in order.

How to caſt out a beame out of a mans owne eye.

The remedy againſt raſh judgement is, for a man firſt to beginne with himſelfe, reforming firſt his owne offences: which becauſe it is here propounded by our Saviour Chriſt of ſet purpoſe, as a ſpeciall remedy againſt this ſinne, I will ſtand a little to ſhew how a man may caſt out the beame out of his owne eye. Hereunto foure things are required: 1. A man muſt turne the eye of his mind inward, and caſt his cogitations towards his owne life and conſcience, that ſo he may ſee and know the principall ſins of his owne heart and life. To this purpoſe ſerveth the morall Law, which is as a glaſſe to let us ſee our maine and principall ſinnes, which be the beames in our eyes here meant. And for direction herein, I will note out ſome ſpeciall maine ſinnes, which bein all men naturally; and which every one muſt well conſider of, that will caſt this beame out of his owne eye. The firſt common ſin of all men, is a guiltineſſe in Adams firſt offence; that is, his ſin made ours by relation or imputation: for his eating the forbidden fruit, was no particular or private ſinne, but the ſinne of mans nature: and every one ſinned in Adam, that was to deſcend of him by ordinary generation: for though wee were not borne when Adam ſinned, yet by his ſinne wee ſtand guilty of eternall death before God.

I Maine ſin common to all.

The ſecond common ſinne is a naturall diſpoſition and proneneſſe to every thing that is evill and againſt Gods Law, when occaſion is offered, the ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt not excepted; for the ſame corruption and proneneſſe to evill, which was in them that have committed this ſinne, is in all men naturally; the difference ſtands onely in this, that all doe not fall into it. And this proneneſſe to evill is the ſecond head of originall ſinne.

The third common ſinne is inward Idolatry, this is a moſt heynous ſinne, and may be thus conceived: Every man by nature takes his heart from the true God, and beſtowes it on ſome other thing: now looke whereon a man beſtowes his heart, that thing he makes his God: and by Nature we love our ſelves, our ſinnes, and the world more than God, and yeeld obedience to the devill, rather than to the true God. The like may be ſaid of our fears, joy, and delight, and of our truſt and confidence, all which affections we ſet upon the devill, the world, and iniquity; yea, upon the creature; forſaking the Creator, who is bleſſed for ever: and hee that ſees not this in himſelfe, hath idolatry as yet reigning in his heart.

3 Idolatry of the heart.

The fourth ſin is Hypocriſie, which naturally reigneth in all men, till grace expell it: This hypocriſie it ends in this; when men are about any good thing they are more carefull to pleaſe God in the outward action, than with the ſervice of the heart. Againe, they ſeeke more to pleaſe men than God. And laſtly, they rather endevour to performe the outward duties of the firſt Table, than of the ſecond. This is a huge beame in every mans eie naturally, which each one ought to ſee in himſelfe, as well as the former.

4 Hypocriſie.

The fifth ſinne is pride, not outward in apparell, but ſpirituall inward pride of the heart, which ſtands in this; that a man thinks himſelfe out of Chriſt to have in him ſome naturall goodneſſe, whereby he ſtands in Gods favour, and hath in himſelfe perfect love, and perfect faith: this ſin all men will condemne, and yet it cleaves faſt to every man by nature. The Church of Laodicea, Rev. 2.17. ſaid ſhe was rich, and had need of nothing; whereas indeed ſhe was poore, and blinde, and naked. This inward pride poyſons Gods grace in the heart, it is a maine ſinne, and the common cauſe of raſh judgement.

The ſixth ſinne is that particular ſin or ſins, wherewith every one is moſt aſſaulted; for how ſoever the corruption of nature doth infect all men alike, yet every one that is of yeares ſhall finde himſelfe more troubled with ſome ſinnes than with others, by reaſon that corruption is in part either removed or reſtrained in him. Wherefore every one muſt enter into his owne heart, and there ſearch and ſee what bee thoſe particular ſinnes, which moſt of all prevaile againſt him, troubling his heart, and cauſing him to diſhonour God. Theſe be his beams which keepe Gods grace out of his heart, which we muſt labour to finde out in our ſelves.

II. Duty. After we have ſome ſight of theſe our maine ſinnes, wee muſt in the next place labour to ſee them in our ſelves as beames, and to feele the weight thereof: for commonly we either ſee them not at all in our ſelves, or if wee doe a little perceive them, yet wee ſee them not in their quantity as beames, but rather like motes or ſtrawes. Now we ſhall come to ſee theſe ſinnes in our ſelves as beames in their juſt quantity: firſt, if we compare them with other mens ſinnes, as with Adams firſt ſinne: for doubtleſſe we have many particular ſinnes in our hearts that be as great or greater than Adams ſinne was, conſidered in the fact: and yet by that ſin Adam brought not onely on himſelfe, but on all his poſterity mortality and diſtreſſes, the firſt, and the ſecond death. Againe, wee ſhall come to ſee the grievouſneſſe of our ſinnes, if we conſider them in the punishment thereof; that is, subjection to all woe and misery, yea, and to death it selfe in this life, and also to death eternall after this life, with the devill and his angels: this is the reward of every sinne in it selfe. Thirdly, consider these thy sinnes, as they were laid upon the holy person of our Saviour Christ, for which he endured not onely outward bodily torments on the crosse, but inwardly in soule apprehended the whole wrath of God due unto us for the same, which caused him to sweat water and blond, and to cry My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken mee. This being well weighed, will let us see that our sinnes are no moats, but huge and great beames, such as are able to crush us in peeces, under the heavy wrath of God. Lastly, have recourse to the last commandement, which forbids the very first thoughts and motions in the heart, that bee against our neighbour, and against God, though wee never give consent of will thereto; nay, though wee abhorre the fact it selfe: as when we see our neighbours oxe or his asse, to wish in our hearts, O that this were mine, though wee detest the stealing thereof: now if this first motion bee a sinne deserving damnation, how heynous be the sinnes of our nature, and the transgressions of our life, wherein we have given full consent to rebell against God?

How to perceive the grievouſneſſe of our ſinnes.

Matth. 6. ver. 5.

C

III. Duty. The third thing required to this casting out the beame out of our owne eye, is that which is here intended by our Saviour Christ; namely, to surcease to judge others, and to begin to judge our selves for our owne sins: for if we would judge our selves, wee should not be judged, 1 Cor. 11. 31. Now we doe then judge our selves, when in our owne hearts wee give sentence against our selves, and condemne our selves in regard of our owne sinnes. Thus David judged himselfe, Psalm. 51. 1. Have mercy upon me, O Lord, according to the multitude of thy mercies: as if he should say, Lord, one mercy will not serve the turne, for farre have I plunged my selfe into hell by my grievous sinnes; but in the multitude of thy mercies doe them all away. And in the words following, vers. 2. Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquities, hee confesseth himselfe to be so deeply stained with the filth of sinne, that a little washing will not serve. So when the Lord had spoken unto Iob, and made him see and know himselfe, hee cries out, Behold, I am vile, Iob 39. 27. and againe; Now I abhorre my selfe and repent in dust and ashes, for those things that I have said and done, Chap. 42. 6. In such sort also did the Prodigall sonne judge himselfe, crying out, that he had sinned against heaven, and against his father, and was not worthy to be called his sonne, Luk. 15. 21. The Apostle Paul likewise confesseth against himselfe, that hee was the head of all sinners, 1 Tim. 1. 15. And thus must wee condemne our selves, and say with Daniel in his prayer for the people, chap. 9. 7. Open shame and confusion of face belongs unto us.

D

IV. Duty. After wee have thus judged our selves, we must labour to breake off, and to amend our former evill wayes, endevouring by all meanes that sinne may bee abolished and weakened in us more and more: and this is indeed the removing of the beame out of our owne eyes: that so we may be fitter to censure and reforme others. Of this last dutie the Apostle speaketh, Rom. 14. 13. Let us not judge one another any more, but use your judgement rather in this, that no man put a stumbling blocke before his brother: that is, that he live without offence. These foure duties ought every one to practise: and to move us hereunto, first, let us consider, that it is Gods commandement in this place, that wee should first reforme our owne selves. Secondly, that our state and case is fearefull and miserable, without this reformation; if a man have but a thorne in his finger, he cannot be well till it be plucked out; what case then is he in, that hath a huge beame in his eye, the most tender part of the whole body: that is, hath his heart and conscience pricked with the sting of sinne? and therefore it neerely concernes every one to remove it. Thirdly, we shall never be able to judge aright of our selves, of others, or of the life to come, till we practise this duty: and therefore in the feare of God let us seriously set our selves unto it.

Reforme our wayes.

Motives to all the duties.

Thus much of the remedy it selfe; now follow two circumstances therein further to be considered: I. The party to whom the remedy is given; that is, an Hypocrite: II. When this remedy is to be practised; First, plucke out, &c. For the party: by Hypocrite, we must understand him, that in heart and speech is prone to conceive, and give rash judgement of other mens sayings and actions: and good cause there is why he is so called, for this man hath the sin of hypocrisie reigning in him, he desires to seeme more holy than others, and therfore gives himselfe to censure others, that by debasing of others he may advance himselfe: see this in the hypocriticall Pharisie; I thanke God that I am not as other men, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this Publican. I fast twice in the weeke, &c. Luk. 18. 10, 11. But they must know, that this censuring of others is a fruit of hypocrisie arising out of an hollow heart.

An Hypocrite.

The second circumstance is the time when this duty is to be practised; namely, in the first place, First cast out, &c. Here then wee have a notable direction for the manner and order of giving brotherly correction; It must beginne with a mans owne selfe, and end in a mans neighbour: and by proportion, looke by how much every one is neerer unto us, so much the sooner must hee be corrected and judged. If thou be a private man that art to give censure, first begin with thy selfe; then judge thy kindred; thirdly, thine acquaintance; and last of all, strangers. So a master of a family must first judge himselfe, then his owne family, and after he may judge his friends and neighbours, and last of all, strangers:

A rule for brotherly correction.

Matth. 7. vers. 5.

strangers: and the like must every superiour practise in his place. Now by this order to bee observed in brotherly censure, wee may easily see that the world is farre wide in the practice of this duties for every one thinks well of himselfe, and also of his friends and acquaintance, and therefore spares them and will not censure them; but for strangers, them will he not sticke to reproach and to condemne: but this is a preposterous course, swarving farre from this direction of our Saviour Christ.

Reforming our selves brings spirituall wisdome.

And then shalt thou see cleerely to cast out the mote out of thy brothers eye. This is the fruit of the former remedie; by curing himselfe first, a man comes to see cleerely what his neighbours fault is, and how it is to be cured and amended. Where wee may note, that out of the amendment of our selves, followes a spirituall gift of judgement and wisdome, whereby wee see aright how to reforme our brothers fault. Hence I gather this generall doctrine, that Right wisdome and understanding followes the reformation of our owne hearts and lives. The beginning of wisdome is the feare of the Lord, Psal. 111. 10. that is, true wisdome and good understanding comes from a reverent awe of God, in regard of his Word and Commandement: so Psalm. 119. 100. I was made wiser than the ancient, by keeping thy commandement: first David reformed himselfe, and then hee became exceeding wise. As it is said of 2 Manasses, that when he repented and humbled himselfe, hee knew that the Lord was God: and after Nebuchadnezzer was humbled, his understanding was restored to him, Dan. 4. 22. for, God teacheth the humble his wayes, Psal. 25. 9. The proud man is he that builds up his sins with posts and beames, and such an one the Lord will not teach; but him that plucks downe these posts by amendment of his life, will the Lord instruct in the way that hee should walke. Christ saith to his Disciples, Yee are my friends, if yee keepe my commandements: and so his friends will he make known all things needfull that he hath heard of his Father, Joh. 15. 14, 15. by all which it is plaine, that right judgement followes true reformation of life.

2 Chron. 33. 13.

Meanes to understand Gods word.

Vses. I. Hereby we see how to come to understand the holy Scriptures read or heard; namely, by the amendment of our owne lives: First, reforme thine owne heart and life, and then shalt thou have true judgement given unto thee, to bee able in reading or hearing, to understand Gods word, at least so much thereof, as shall be needfull for thee; and doubtlesse, the cause why most men profit so little in the Scriptures, though they heare and reade them much, is for that they looke not to the reformation of their owne lives and consciences, according to the Word. Prov. 1. 23. Turne you at my correction (saith Wisdome) and I will powre out my minde unto you, and make you understand my words. The Student therefore that must sit himselfe to get true understanding in Gods Word, for the edification of Gods Church, must remember this direction, and labour first to plucke out the beame out of his owne eye, and then shall hee see cleerely to reade with judgement the word of God, and to discerne the true way of everlasting life, for the good of Gods people: but if thou come in thy sinnes, thou readest without profit.

How to know our adoption.

II. Vse. Againe, wouldest thou know thy selfe to be the childe of God? remember then to purge thy heart and life from all sinne, for thence floweth true understanding, and thereupon God will certifie thy conscience of thine election and reconciliation: but if thou suffer thy selfe to lie in sinne, thou maist long wait for this certificate, and never have it.

How to know true religion.

III. Vse. Many men there be that will be of no religion, because there are so many and divers opinions about matters of religion in the world; and therefore till some generall Councell have determined of the truth of religion, they will live as they doe: but these men must know, that they take a wrong course: If they would come to know the truth of religion, they must first reforme their lives; but while they live in sinne, they can never see what is good, what is bad; what is truth, what is falshood in religion, Joh. 7. 17. If any man will doe my Fathers will, (saith Christ) he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speake of my selfe: where he plainly gives us to understand, that true judgement of religion comes from obedience unto God. This is the right way to reforme an Atheist; first, to bring him to obedience. And in a word, whosoever thou art, that wouldest in thy calling, whatsoever it be, please God, and doe good to others; first, purge thine owne heart and life from sinne, and then shalt thou see cleerely wherein thou failest, and how thou art to amend thy fault, and afterward to doe good unto others.

Brotherly correction commanded.

A second generall point. Further, in this remedie our Saviour Christ opposeth brotherly correction, unto rash judgement; and withall, prescribes brotherly correction as a dutie to be practised among Gods people. Touching this point, foure things are to bee considered: I. Who is to correct. II. Who is to bee corrected. III. What is to bee corrected. And IV. In what manner. For the first: the partie that must correct is a brother, that is, any member of Gods Church: so it is said, Then shalt thou see cleerely to put out the mote out of thy brothers eye: and Levit. 19. 17. Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thine heart, but shalt plainly rebuke thy neighbour. and not suffer him to sinne: and Matt. 18. 15. If thy brother sin against thee, that is, doe thee any wrong; or else sin against God, and thou bee privie to it: (for that sinne may bee said to bee against man, whereto hee is privie, though the wrong bee not against him, because there is an offence given unto him:) Then tell him his fault betweene him and thee alone: that is, correct and admonish him privately.

I. Who must correct.

privately. Againe, everie man is bound in conscience to save his brothers soule, which oftimes may be done by brotherly correction; and for want thereof, many times the soule may perish: and therefore it is everie mans dutie to correct his brother; yet with this clause and caution, that just occasion be offered, and time and place observed; for there bee certaine particular exceptions, in which a man is freed from this dutie, and all because there is no just occasion of correction offered: as first, if he be not certaine of the fault committed, for all lawfull correction, is of faults certainely and truly knowen. Secondly, if the partie offending doe repent, for the end of correction is to bring the offender to amendment. Thirdly, if there be no hope of his amendment, Prov. 9. 8. Reproove not a scorner; that is, such an one as mocks thee for thy labour. Fourthly, if it may in better manner, and to better purpose bee performed by others, which for place and abilitie may and will more fitly performe it. But yet out of these cases, if just occasion bee offered, everie one is to performe brotherly correction unto his brother.

A

Here I note one particular instruction; that not only the Minister of Gods word is our Pastor, but even everie brother after a sort is a Pastor, in regard that he must watch over the lives of his brethren for their good and amendment. It is the sinne of our time, that everie one thinks he hath no charge laid on him in regard of his brothers life and estate. This was Cains sinne towards his brother Abel, hee denied himselfe to be his brothers keeper: if any man sinne, the common speech is, What is it to me? let them looke to it whom it concernes. But this ought not to be, one man ought to observe another, and use also brotherly correction for the reformation of faults certainly knowen. This is a dutie of love and mercie, tending to the good of our brother, and to the salvation of his soule: in conscience wee are bound to relieve the bodies of our poore brethren that be in perill and want, much more then are wee bound to looke unto their soules, that they perish not for want of admonition. We must time backe our enemies Oxe or Asse that wandreth, much more our brother from going to perdition.

II. Point. Who is to be corrected? Out of whose eye is the mote to bee taken? to wit, a brother; out of thy brothers eye. By a brother here Christ meaneth not everie neighbour, for that is everie man; but everie one that is a member of that Church, whereof wee are members, and professeth the same religion which wee doe, being admitted into the Church by the same Sacrament of Baptisme, whereby wee are admitted. This is plaine in the exhortation of Christ, Matth. 18. 15. If thy brother sinne against thee, tell him his fault betweene him and thee: and so proceed (if hee heare thee not) till hee come to the censure of the Church: which were in vaine, if the partie were no member of the Church. If any one that is called a brother (saith Saint Paul) bee a fornicatour, covetous, &c. with such an one eat not, 1 Cor. 5. 11. and hee addeth, What have I to doe to judge them that are without? doe yee not judge them that are within? Now here the former order must be observed; that first, a man must correct himselfe, secondly, his family and kinred, next a brother of the same Congregation with him. And if good order be observed, hee may admonish a brother that is a member of another particular Church; but beyond this wee may not goe, though wee must carrie our selves so to them that are without, that by our good conversation wee may winne them to God. And further this is to bee knowen, that in the Church of God, authoritie and dignitie frees no person from brotherly correction; whereupon Paul bids the people of Colossa, to say unto Archippus their Pastor, Take heed to thy ministerie, which thou hast received of the Lord, that thou fulfill it, Colossi. 4. 17. And hence we may learne this dutie; when wee offend in word or deed, wee must submit our selves willingly to brotherly correction; wee must not say, as sometime one of the Israelites that strove with his brother, said unto Moses for reproving him, Who made thee a Iudge and a Ruler over us? but being faultie, we must submit our selves to the correction of our brother, though we be above them in place. It is better to heare the reproofe of a wise man (saith Salomon) than the song of a foole, Eccles. 7. 7. It may bee the song of a foole will more delight us, but sure it is, the wise mans reproofe is far more profitable. This David testified, by desiring that the righteous might smite him; accounting it as a precious balme upon his head, which he would never want: yea, nature it selfe doth teach us this, that it is better to bee reproved even of an enemie, than to bee praised of a friend: according to that of Salomon, Prov. 27. 6. Open rebuke is better than secret love.

Obiect. 1.

Exod. 2. 14.

a Psal. 141. 5.

III. Point. For what is a brother to be admonished or corrected? not only for great offences, but for lesser sins: we must pull out not only beames, but strawes and motes out of his eye: for here lesser sins are as strawes and motes to greater sinnes, which be as beames and posts. The reason why wee must correct our brother for small offences, is because everie great sinne hath his beginning of some little and small sin; and therefore it is a dutie of brotherly correction, to cut off sinne in the head, before it grow out to the full. Thus the Lord dealt with Cain, he reproved him for his wrath and malice against his brother, testified by his sad countenance, before he slue his brother; but Cain not yeelding to the Lords reproofe, came at the last to the grievous sinne of murther.

The matter of reproofe.

3 Gen. 4. 5.

In this third point we may take a view of that heavenly order which Christ hath left in his Church, for the reformation, not only of greater crimes, but of lesser sinnes; for there be many sinnes committed which cannot bee corrected by the sword of the Magistrate, neither yet by the publike censure of the Church; as lying, foolish jesting, and other offences in behaviour and attire; yet these will not Christ permit to be in his Church, and therfore hath provided brotherly correction to cut them off.

IV. Point. How is brotherly correction to be performed? Although the manner of brotherly correction bee not here expresly set downe, yet it is implyed, where it is said, Then shalt thou see cleerely, &c. I will stand a little to shew how this dutie is to bee performed. In brotherly correction these things are required:

The manner how to reprove.

1. Christian wisdome to see cleerely into the fault, and also how it is to bee amended. The Author to the Hebrewes makes it the dutie of everie Christian to observe his brother: not for this end, to upbraid him with his faults; but that hee may rightly discerne thereof, and also know how to correct him. And here comes a common fault to bee reproved, many are forward and hastie to correct their brethren, but yet shall be upon bare rumours and uncertaine grounds; they will not stay till they know the fault thorowly and certainly: whereupon it comes to passe many times, that the reproover beares the blame; for the partie reproved saith, there is no such matter, the thing is otherwise, and so the other becomes a rash censurer.

Heb. 12. 15.

2. In Christian correction, there must be observation of fit circumstances; as time and place; else the good admonition may bee lesse effectuall. Wee shall see the practice of this in the word of God: Abigail observed a fit time to reprove her husband for his churlish answer to Davids servants, and therefore told him not of it till his feast of sheepe-shearing was ended, and the wine gone out of his head.

1 Sam. 25. 36, 37.

3. The manner of our brothers offence must be considered, whether it proceed of humane frailtie, or otherwise; if his fault proceed from humane frailtie, then Pauls lesson may be practised, Gal. 6. 1. Yee that are spirituall restore such an one with the spirit of meeknesse. The phrase there is borrowed from Surgeons, who being to deale with a broken joynt, will handle the same verie tenderly; and so must they bee dealt withall in reproofe, that sinne of humane frailtie. Example of this mildnesse in reproofe wee have in Nathan, who reproved David in a parable, and so brought him to condemne himselfe: and the Apostle Paul reproving the Corinthians in the beginning of the first Epistle, doth include himselfe and Apollos in the same reproofe, as though they had beene guiltie of the same crime, 1 Cor. 4. 6. And giving direction to Timothy how to carrie himselfe in the Church of God, though hee allow him to use rebuke and reproofe, 2 Tim. 4. 2. yet hee bids him, exhort an Elder; therein giving good direction for admonition: if the partie be an Elder, though reproofe be not unlawfull, yet it is not so much exhortation: and the like mildnesse must bee used toward all those that sinne of humane frailtie. But if the offence proceed from wilfulnesse and obstinacie, then the judgements of God must bee denounced against them, to drive them to repentance.

1 Tim. 5. 1.

4. Everie one that is to correct another, must consider himselfe, and his owne estate, knowing that of himselfe hee may fall into the like offence. So Paul bids them that are to seeke the restoring of such as are fallen, to consider themselves, Gal. 6. 1. 5. Brotherly correction must bee delivered with Doctrine and instruction: 2 Tim. 4. 1, 2. I charge thee before God, to reproove, exhort, and rebuke with all long-suffering and doctrine. He that will admonish, must first himselfe bee resolved, that the thing done is a sinne; then he must propound it to the partie, as a sinne out of Gods word; and deliver the reproofe, not in his owne name, but in the name of God; so as hereby the partie may know himselfe to have offended, and also thy, that hee is reproved of God himselfe rather than of man. This ought all superiours to practise, in correcting and admonishing their inferiours; they must not goe thereto in rage, but in long suffering; not rudely, but with Doctrine, that the partie offending may see his fault. And thus much for this dutie of brotherly correction.

v. 6 Give not that which is holy unto dogs: neither cast yee your pearles before swine: lest they tread them under their feet, and turning againe all to rent you.

Hitherto the Evangelist hath set downe the severall heads of Christs Sermon more at large; but from this verse to the end of the Chapter, hee handleth briefly the points which follow. This verse dependeth not upon the former, but herein our Saviour Christ layes downe a new point of instruction, directing his Disciples, and in them all Ministers, unto that Christian discretion which ought to be observed in the dispensation of the word of God. And his direction is here propounded in a prohibition of giving holy things to dogs, or casting pearles before swine: which is enforced by a double reason, lest they tread them, &c.

Now for the better understanding hereof, first I will speake of the words, because they are hard and difficult; and then come to the Doctrines.

In the words foure things are to bee sought out: 1. What is meant by holy things. 2. What is meant by pearles. 3. What is meant by dogs. And 4. What is meant by swine. For the first, by that which is holy, wee must understand, first and properly, the word of God, written in the the bookes of the old and new Testament, in his right and holy use: that is, read, dispensed, and preached: and consequently, by holy things are meant the Sacraments, and Christian admonition. Gods word is called an holy thing for sundrie causes, but principally for these two; first, because it is holy in it selfe: and secondly, in effect and operation. It is holy in it selfe, because it is set apart by God, to be in the Church in stead of his own lively voice unto his people for the revealing and determining of all things to be beleeved and done in his Church. In the old Testament, God himselfe spake by a lively voice unto the Patriarks, and after the giving of the Law, hee gave answer to the High Priest at the Mercie-seat: and yet we are not inferiour to them, though we want that lively voice; for wee have the written Word in stead thereof, which is answerable every way thereunto: for looke what the written Word saith, is as much as if the Lord from Heaven should speake by a lively voice: and so consequently, it is to us in stead of the Arke of God, a pledge of his presence. And thus it is holy in it selfe. Secondly, Gods word is holy in regard of operation; for it is the instrument of the Spirit, set apart by God himselfe, to bee the meanes whereby hee sanctifies and reformes the hearts and lives of his children. And consequently, the Sacraments are holy things, for they are the Word made visible; so likewise is Christian admonition grounded upon Gods word.

From this Doctrine sundrie duties are to be learned; First, we are oft commanded in Gods word, to draw neere unto God, to seeke him, to feare him, and to walke before him in his presence: How shall wee doe these things, seeing God is invisible, and in glorie and majestie is in Heaven? Surely wee must consider the word of God, which is that holy thing set apart by God, to bee in stead of his owne lively voice; and therefore we need not seeke for him that is invisible, but wee must have recourse unto the Word, and labour to have it present with us in our hearts, in our lives and consciences. Enoch walked before God, not only in regard of his infinite majestie, which though it bee invisible, is every where present; but principally in respect of his Word, setting that before him wheresoever he was. When wee are commanded to feare God, wee must know that that is done, not only when wee stand in awe of his glorious Majestie, but principally when wee feare to offend God, commanding us in his Word. The Apostle saith, that the Holy Ghost dwells in our hearts: which must not be thought to bee meant of that infinite substance of the Holy Spirit, but of the dwelling of the Word, which is made effectuall by the Holy Spirit: for faith ever hath relation to the Word, and being beleeved, it dwels in the heart, and makes the Spirit, which works by the same Word present also. In which regard Paul saith, Now I live not, but Christ lives in me, which hee expoundeth after, saying, I live in the faith in the sonne of God: because the word of Christ was present with him, and the grace of faith that lives by that Word.

Secondly, seeing the word of God is of that holinesse, we must learne to use the same publikely or privately with all reverence, carefully sanctifying our selves thereunto. When the people came to receive the Law in Mount Sinai, they were sanctified three dayes before; and the same preparation for substance ought we to make before we heare the word of God: First, we must wash our hands in innocencie, and then compasse the Altar of the Lord: The Word and Sacraments are holy in themselves, but not so to us, out of their holy use; and therefore if wee would reape profit to our selves by them, we must prepare our hearts thereunto.

Thirdly, whereas the Word is unto us the voice of God, and the meanes of sanctification; wee may learne that in the Congregation of Gods people ordinarily, the pure word of God alone ought to be heard, without the mixture of the words of men, be they never so holy: for it is not said of the words of any man, that they are that holy thing. The Lord himselfe alone had the appointment of the making of the holy oyle, which was to anoint the Kings and Priests under the Law: neither might any man adde any thing thereto, though it were never so pure and good, nor make any oyle like unto it: so likewise the trumpets that served for the Tabernacle to assemble the people, the Lord himselfe alone had the appointment of them; and none might use any other, though it were made of most pure gold. Had the Lord this care over his Sanctuarie under the Law, to take the appointment of these things to himselfe alone? and shall we thinke that the trumpet of his holy Word, which now by his appointment soundeth in the Congregation of the Saints, may admit a mixture with the words of men, humane, or divine, be they never so holy? The ancient Church was farre from this mixture; and therefore [a] forbade the publike reading of the Apocrypha, which yet are more excellent bookes than the writings of men, published since the Apostles. But it is said, that they only finde fault with this kinde of preaching, which cannot attaine unto it. I answer, It is no point of the greatest learning to use the sayings of Fathers and Poets in preaching: and they which use it not, refraine therefrom, not because they cannot do it, but because they dare not mingle the sayings of men with the word of God, which is that holy thing, serving in stead of Gods owne glorious voice, in all matters that concerne our faith and obedience, and being the only sufficient instrument of our sanctification; and therefore it were to bee wished, that in the Congregations of the Saints, the pure word of God might sound alone unto Gods people; that as they are begotten alone of this immortall seed, so they might be fed alone with this sincere milke.

a Synod. Laod. cap. 59.

1 Tim. 3. 9.

II. Point. What is meant by pearles? Ans. The wholsome doctrines and instructions of Gods word, contained partly in commandements, and partly in sweet and heavenly promises: so Matth. 12. 46. the Gospell preached is compared to a precious pearle. And further we are to note, that these wholsome instructions are called your pearles, (Christ speaking to his Disciples and other hearers:) now they are so called in two respects: First, in regard of the Apostles and other Ministers their successours; because they are the Lords stewards, to dispense the Word and the doctrine thereof to Gods people. Secondly, in regard of all true beleevers and servants of God, that have care to know and to obey the word of God: for every beleever hath a speciall right unto Gods word above other men: to which purpose the Lord saith, Binde up the testimony, seale up the Law among my Disciples. Isa. 8. 16. that is, commend and commit my Word unto my Disciples; there giving a speciall right and interest unto them in the word of salvation: for they have the true judgement and meaning thereof: they keepe it in their hearts, and expresse the power of it in their lives: they have the use and benefit thereof in every estate in this world, and unto their eternall salvation in Heaven.

From this, that the Doctrines of Gods word are our pearles, first, wee are taught to place all our riches in the word of God, for that is our Jewell, and our principall treasure: of this Salomon saith, Her merchandise are better than merchandise of silver, and the gaine thereof better than gold. In the valuing of this pearle, Davids practice is notable, who made the testimonies of God his heritage, and the verie joy of his heart, Psal. 119. 111. and esteemed them above gold, yea above most fine gold, v. 127.

Secondly, wee must hereby learne to content our selves in all calamities and calamities of this life, with this pearle of the word of God; for though wee lose friends, health, goods, or good name, yet this pearle of good Doctrines and sweet promises is not lost; if that were taken away with the losse of outward commodities, then there were some cause of discomfort: but seeing this jewell remaines with us in all estates, therefore herewith wee must stay and comfort our selves, as David did, counting Gods promises his comfort in trouble. Psal. 119. 50. and his songes in his pilgrimage, v. 54.

Thirdly, this must teach us to use the Doctrines and promises of Gods word, as pearles; wee must locke them up in our hearts, and have them in faithfull keeping in our memories. A man that hath an earthly jewell that is of any worth, will bee verie carefull to locke it up in the fairest cheste he hath; how much more care ought wee to have of these true pearles of heavenly instructions? As the Holy Ghost speaks of Deacons, they must bee such as keepe the mysterie of faith in good conscience: so must everie one of us be carefull keepers of this heavenly pearle. This was Moses practice, Luke 2. 51. shee pondered the sayings of Christ in her heart: and David hid the word of God in his heart, that he might not sinne against the Lord, Psal. 119. 11.

IV. Instruct. The Doctrines and promises in Gods word are the pearles of the Apostles and Ministers; therefore, they above others in all ages and times, ought to have a speciall care, by all good meanes to preserve the purity of doctrine in the Church of God. That is Pauls charge to Timothy, keepe that which is committed unto thee: that is, that wholesome doctrine which thou hast learned of me: and this meerely concerneth Ministers at this day, that as by the good meanes of others, they have received true doctrine, purified from the dregges of Popery, so they should preserve and keepe the same from all taint of corruption to their posterity.

Many cause to preserve purity of doctrine.

1 Tim. 6. 20.

The third and fourth things to be considered, are teaching dogges and swine; where these three points are to be handled: I. What are here properly meant by dogges and swine? II. Who must give judgement of men to be dogges and swine: and III. What they are to be found. For the first: By dogges and swine, we must understand the enemies of Gods word; yet not all enemies, for so every sinner should be a dogge and a swine: but only such as are malicious obstinate enemies, manifestly convicted of their enmity to Gods word and doctrine, of whose amendment there is no hope. And that these are here to be understood, appeares by these reasons: I. From the text it selfe, which describeth them by this, that treading the words of instruction under foot, they doe turne againe, and all to-rend the Teachers thereof: that is, they doe persecute them both by word and deed, in all reproachfull speeches, and cruell actions.

Dogs and swine are obstinate enemies.

II. Reason. In the word of God wee shall finde that Christ and his Apostles preached to dogges (for such are all men by nature;) The Scribes and Pharisies, a generation of Vipers, came to Iohns baptisme unrepelled, though not unreproved: Matth. 3. 6, 7. and Christ himselfe telleth the woman of Canaan, that it was not lawfull to give the childrens bread to dogges: that is, to rude creatures: and yet he sent his Disciples to preach to all nations: and the woman her selfe, by reason of her faith, was received to mercy, and made partaker of the crumbs that fell from the childrens table. Againe, our Saviour Christ preached to the Scribes and Pharisies, even then when he wept over Jerusalem for their impenitency: yea, this is a truth, that because men are naturally dogges and swine, therefore they must have the word of God preached unto them, to purifie and sanctifie them, unlesse they be obstinate and irreperant enemies to the Word, of whom is no hope of recovery. III. Reason. These obstinate enemies here are called dogs and swine, by allusion to unclean beasts under the Law; of which sort were dogs and swine, which were prohibited

Matth. 3. 6, 7.

the Jewes to bee eaten, or offered in sacrifice to God: Christ therefore here by allusion to that ceremony: meanes such persons as are excluded from the holy things of the Lord, and have no right or interest into the Lords Word or Sacraments; such as both in heart and life be uncleane as hogs, and dogs, and will not bee purified. IV. Reason. Paul chargeth Titus, that after once or twice admonition, he should reject an heretike, knowing that such an one is perverted and sinneth, being damned of his owne selfe: that is, sinneth wilfully and obstinately, and in so sinning condemneth himselfe in his owne heart and conscience: and such are meant by dogs and swine in this place.

Now the difference of these two may be this; By dogs are meant obstinate enemies that maliciously revile the ministerie of the Word, the doctrine of God, and the messengers thereof: such a dog was Alexander the Copper-smith, 2 Tim. 4. 14. and such were many of the Iewes become foone after Christs ascention, who reviled the Apostle Paul and Barnabas, and blasphemed the doctrine which they taught, Acts 13. 45. and of this sort are all convicted obstinate heretikes. By swine are meant obstinate enemies that doe contemne the word of God; either because they will not admit reformation of life by it, such as Ahab and Herod were; or because they scorne and mocke at the word of God, as they doe, of whom Peter speakes, that mocke at the promises of Christs second comming.

The second point touching these persons is, who must give iudgement of any man or any people to be dogs and swine: we must know that it is not in the power and libertie of any private man to give judgement of another that hee is a dog or a swine; but it is a publike dutie belonging to the Ministers and Governours of the Church to give judgement in this case. Matth. 18. 17. Before a man must bee reputed as a Publicane, and as an Heathen, the censure of the Church must passe upon his behaviour; and from the judgement of the Church must private men hold others as Publicanes and Heathen. Indeed our Saviour Christ and his Apostles gave this judgement of men particularly and peremptorily; as Paul of Alexander the Copper-smith: but we must understand, what authoritie, and what spirit Christ and his Apostles had; which because wee have not, wee cannot give such judgement upon men. Further, here wee are to know, that judgement upon others is two-fold; Iudgement of certainitie, or iudgement of humane wisdome: The iudgement of certainitie, touching any mans state, belongs only to God, and to them to whom God revealeth the same. The iudgement of humane wisdome is, when the Church of God, in the feare of God, give judgement as truly and as nerely as they can, who is a dog and who is a swine: and this only is the judgement of the Church, which also is conditionall; and namely, till they repent: because they know not the times that God hath appointed for the conversion of sinners. And by this we are taught, to comprimit our judgement of any man, in regard of his finall estate, though hee bee an unrepentant sinner, refusing instruction: for most heinous sinners have beene converted.

Where dogs and swine are to be found.

The third point, where these dogs and swine are to bee found: It is not in the power of any ordinarie Minister, or other man, to determine of any one, that he is a dog or a swine; for in such doe finall impenitencie, and wilfull obstinacie concurre; which wee are not able to say certainely, are come upon any man or woman while they live among us: and yet this may be said with good conscience, that there is in many a fearefull declination to the properties of dogs and swine, even in this age of ours; for many will heare the Word, receive the Sacraments, and professe that they hope to bee saved by Christ; and yet they will raile on his Ministers, and speake against their Ministerie: yea, the times are now, wherein many in open speech will not sticke to revile and condemne those, that have beene the most excellent instruments of Gods mercie in his Church: among many I will name one, M. Iohn Calvin, that worthy instrument of the Gospell, is in the mouthes of many Students condemned as an erroneous person, teaching false and dangerous doctrine. Yea, many there be, that come to the Lords Table, and yet will not brooke reformation of life; they will not bee drawen from their drunkennesse, ignorance, adulterie, and covetousnesse. A third sort there are, that take occasion from Gods word, to live in their sinnes, and to maintaine their wicked lives; as from the doctrine of Gods eternall predestination, because the Scripture teacheth, that Gods decree therein is unchangeable; therefore some say, they will live as they list: others, because the Word saith, we are to be saved by faith alone, therefore they refuse to walke in good workes: and others looke to be saved by Gods mercie alone, and therefore they will not labour either for knowledge, or faith, as they ought to doe: and some, hearing the doctrine of the denialle of our selves, doe say, the word of God is too strait a doctrin, barring men from laughter, and mirth, and other recreations; and therefore they will none of Gods word: now though wee cannot call these men dogs, because we know not what they may be hereafter; yet we may truly say, these be practices of dogs and swine.

And thus wee see what is meant by holy things, by pearles, by dogs, and swine; from whence the meaning of Christ may bee plainly thus set downe: Give not that which is holy, &c. that is, have regard how, and to whom yee dispense the Word and Sacraments, and if any person be openly convicted of obstinate enmitie to your doctrine, to such publish not my Word, bee they dogs in railing, or swine in senselesse contemning and scorning of the same.

The Vses. 1. Hence we may see what course is to be used of Gods Ministers in the preaching and dispensing of his holy word; they must first preach and publish the Word of God to all men without exception, grace must be offered to all, good and bad; then they must observe what fruit and effect the Word hath with them, whether it worke reformation of life in them, or not: and though as yet they see not that fruit thereof to them, yet they must not condemne them as Dogges; but rather wait and pray for their conversion, to see if at any time God will give them repentance, according as Saint Paul chargeth Timothy, 2 Tim. 2. 25. Thirdly, having waited for their conversion, hee must labour to convince their very conscience of the truth, which they in heart and life denie: so as he may say with Paul, If our Gospel be hid, it is hid to them that perish, 2 Cor. 4. 3. but if after all this, they give evident signes of malicious and obstinate enmitie against the Word, storming and railing on the Doctrine of God, and on the Ministers thereof, then are they to be cast out by the Church, and to bee accounted as Dogges, and to be barred from the Word of life till they repent. This was Christs owne practice towards the Jewes: at the first he preached unto them the Gospel of the kingdome by Iohn Baptist, & his owne person, and by his Disciples; but when he saw some of them maliciously obstinate, then he propounded his Doctrine unto them in parables, that they might be hardened in sinne: and after expounded the same privately to his Disciples. The Disciples likewise after the ascension of Christ, preached still unto the Jewes, even when they were persecuted by them: but at length when as they saw that of obstinate malice they oppugned the truth, putting it from them, and judging themselves unworthy eternall life, then they turned to the Gentiles, Acts 13. 46.

Matth. 13. 13.

Now in this that hath beene said, we may note two things: first, the long sildowing and great patience of God, that will not take a former living in the Church condemned, till he have brought him through all the meanes of his conversion, and till he be past hope. Thus he dealt with the old World, expecting their repentance, an hundred and twentie yeares, wherein he then called them by the preaching of Noah, Genes. 6. Secondly, hereby we must learne to moderate our judgements concerning wicked men: a man must not be condemned for a Dog, or for a Swine, till hee give evident signes of obstinate malice, and wilfull contempt of the Word, and untill he doe even convict himselfe to be such an one, by a wilfull contempt of the meanes of his salvation. This serves to shew their rashnesse and indiscretion, that condemne our Church for no Church, and our people for no people of God: judging them for Dogges and Swine, when as they have not yet convicted them of obstinate malice in sinne or error. It will bee said, they have admonished them by writing. I answer, that their owne bookes have more errours in them, than they can hold whom they admonish, and by their writings can be no sufficient conviction.

Secondly, here observe that men become Dogges and Swine, by their wilfull repelling that holy doctrine of God, which should purge them and make them cleane. It is the nature all propertie of a Dogge to returne to his vomit, and of a Swine to his wallowing in the mire, as the Proverbe is; and hereof they can by no meanes be bereaved. And all men by nature returne to the vomit and filth of their sinnes like Dogges and Swine: and they which will by no meanes suffer themselves to bee drawne from their old sinnes, they have these properties of Dogges and Swine: and looke as those beasts were excluded the Lords Tabernacle and Congregation under the Law; so are these men debarred from the Word and Sacraments, and all holy things under the Gospel; they are abomination unto the Lord: see Psal. 56. 6. and Prov. 15. 16. In this regard we are to be admonished, to suffer our selves to be cleansed and reformed by the Word of God. Ye are cleane (saith Christ) by the Word which I have spoken unto you, John 15. 3. where he maketh the Word of God the instrument of our purification: to which effect he saith in his prayer to his Father, Sanctifie them with thy truth, thy Word is truth, John 17. 17. And Saint Peter saith, our soules are purified in obeying the truth by the Spirit, 1 Peter 1. 22. Now wee are by nature Dogges and Swine, inclined to the filth of our owne sinnes, returning thereto with greedinesse, neither can we of our selves be broken of this propertie, but when occasion is offered we doe naturally runne to our old sinnes, as the Swine and Dogges doe to their filth and vomit. In consideration whereof, wee ought to subject our selves to the Word of God, labouring to see and feele our owne uncleannesse, and to crie with David, Wash me throughly from my sinnes: and with Peter, Not my feet only, but my whole body: that it may be said of us, We are cleane through him by Christs word. If we see any uncleannesse in our hearts or lives, we must purge it out by this Word, and returne no more to the filth of our former sinnes. It is the propertie of Christs sheepe to heare his voyce, and to obey the same: let us hereby testifie our selves to be his sheepe, that so we may bee distinguished from Dogges and Swine.

Here it may be demanded, whether we should make confession of our faith before Dogges and Swine. Ans. Yes, if we be called thereunto, we are bound to doe it: Be always ready (saith the Apostle) to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, 1 Pet. 3. 15. And in this place our Saviour Christ speaketh of the preaching and discussing of the word, as a confession. Now in preaching man acknowledge the Word to belong unto their hearers, by their audition: they declare the word to belong unto themselves alone.

Further, here we are to consider divers points concerning Excommunication: First, the foundation thereof. It is an ordinance of God: for all Dogges and Swine by Christs commandement, must be kept from holy things: many that live in the Church, are open blaspheamers of the name of Christ; some others are heretikes, and these lifewise are to be barred from the Word and Sacraments; yea, a man living in the Church, may be worse in practice than an open enemie: of such like the Apostle speaketh, Titus 1.16. They professe that they know God, but by their workes they denie him. And such a one was Ismael, who for mocking Isaac, the sonne of the promise, was cast out of Abrahams family, that is, out of the Church of God, Genes. 21.10,11. for Abrahams family at that time was Gods visible Church.

Secondly, here observe the end of Excommunication, namely, to preserve the holy things of God from pollution, contempt, and prophanation; even the Word, Prayer, and Sacraments, which wilfull enemies would trample upon, as Swine will upon Pearles. And herein we may see the abuse of this ordinance, when it is used for politike and civill respects; especially in the Church of Rome, whereof it is made an instrument of the unjust depoling of Christian Princes, and of exempting their subjects from their due obedience and allegeance.

Thirdly, here our Saviour Christ noteth out the principall persons that are to execute this censure of the Church upon wilfull and obstinate enemies, that bee as Dogges and Swine; namely, they to whom the disposing and keeping of the holy things of God is committed, that is, the lawfull Ministers of the Word and Sacraments: for they must keepe those holy things pure which God hath committed unto them; but that they cannot doe without the exercise of this censure which God hath given unto his Church.

Fourthly, here also we may see, how farre this censure of the Church extendeth against obstinate and willfull enemies: namely, to the debarring of them from the use of the Churches ministerie in the Word, Prayer, and Sacraments. Indeed if the partie be excommunicate for some particular crime, and there be hope of his repentance, because he doth not shew himselfe a Dogge or a Swine, by willfull obstinacy in his sinne and contempt of the Church; then, although he be excluded from Communion with them in the Sacraments and Prayer, yet he may be admitted to the hearing of the Word, because that is a meanes to humble him for his sinne, and to bring him to repentance, which is the end of all Ecclesiasticall censures. And thus much of the prohibition: Now follow the reasons to inforce the same.

Lest they tread them under their feet, and turning again all to-rent you. Here Christ renders a double reason to enforce his prohibition, both drawne from the dangerous events which would ensue by communicating holy things unto Dogges and Swine: for first, they would tread them under their feet: secondly, turning again all-to-rent you.

1 Reason.

For the first: by treading under feet, hee meanes, prophaning and abusing. Now because the holy things of God must not be prophaned and abused, therefore they must not be communicated unto wilfull enemies of the grace of God.

The holy things of God must be kept from contempt.

In this reason see the singular care of our Saviour Christ, to keepe the Scriptures and other holy things of God from prophanation: This care he likewise shewed with great zeale, when he whipt the buyers and sellers out of the Temple, B because they made his fathers house, that holy place, a house of Merchandise, and a denne of Theeves, Matth. 21.12,13. And herein he must be a patterne and example unto us all, to teach us care and zeale in keeping the holy things of God from prophanation: farre must it be from us to doe or speake any thing which may cause the world to speake evill of our holy profession. This is Pauls charge to servants, that they so carrie themselves towards their masters, that the name of God, and his doctrine be not evill spoken of, 1 Tim. 6.1. For want of care herein, was Gods hand heavie upon Davids, for because by his foule falle of adulterie and murther, he had caused the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme, therefore the childe borne unto him must surely die, 2 Sam. 12.14. We must therefore pray (as the a Apostle bids us) that the Word of God may be glorified. This is Christs direction in his prayer, before all things to desire and seeke that b Gods name may be hallowed and glorified: Now Gods Word is his Name, for thereby is hee knowne unto us; yea, his Name is magnified above all things by his Word, Psal. 138.2. Excellent was Davids prayer to this effect, Psal. 119.39. Take away my rebuke which I feare, for thy judgements are good: that is, keepe mee from doing that which may bring rebuke or reproach upon thy Word, or upon thy workes, for they are good. Good King Hezekias is also commended for his care of Gods glory, in that hee forbad his servants to answer to the raying blasphemies of Rabshakeh, D left thereby hee should be provoked to blaspheme the more: as also in that he greatly humbled himselfe before the Lord upon the hearing of it: for he rent his clothes, and put on sackcloth, and spread the raying letter before the Lord; thereby referring the revenge to God himselfe, Chap. 19.1.14.

b Matth. 6.9.

2 Kings 18.36

And turning again all to-rent you. These words containe Christs second reason against communicating holy things to malitious and obstinate enemies, drawne from the perill that may ensue thereupon to his Disciples and Ministers: for these Dogges and Swine are not onely prone to abuse the holy things themselves, but also to annoy and hurt by reviling and persecution cution those that be the messengers of the word unto them.

Mis-framing of speake against persecution.

In this reason Christ sheweth, that it is not onely lawfull, but necessarie, that Gods Ministers should seeke to avoid and shun the malice and rage of obstinate enemies, by all lawfull meanes which may stand with Gods glory and the keeping of a good conscience. Hence he bade his Disciples, when the innocencie of Doves were the ordinance of Serpents; now the serpent is moste wilye and warie to save her selfe from harme.

Matthew 10. 16.

John 10.12. Of flight in persecution.

Object. But it is the propertie of an Hireling, to flie from his flocke when he seeth the wolfe comming: therefore it seemes Gods Ministers may not flie in time of persecution. Ans. To flie in persecution is not alwayes a forsaking of the flocke, but sometimes tends to their greater good: as when persecution is intended directly against the Minister, then he may with good conscience flie for his safetie, in hope of returne for their future good; else Christ would not have said to his disciples, If they persecute you in one citie, flie into another, Matth. 10.23. Yea, not onely the Minister must thus looke to his owne safetie, but his people also must doe what lies in them for his preservation. So did the believers in the Primitive Church for Saint Paul, whose life was sought in Damascus, the Disciples let him downe as a window in a basket through the wall, and he escaped, Acts 9.25. And at Ephesus, when the great tumult was about Diana. Paul would have thrust himselfe in among the people, but the Disciples seeing it would be dangerous unto him, kept him backe, and would not suffer him, Acts 19.30.

V. 7 Aske, and it shall be given you: seeke, and yee shall finde: knocke, and it shall be opened unto you.

The eighth part of Christs Sermon.

In this verse and those which follow unto the twelfth, is laid downe the third part of this chapter, concerning prayer: and it consisteth of two branches: a commandement to pray, and effectuall reasons to perswade us thereto. The commandement is propounded in three severall termes, Aske, seeke, and knocke: each whereof hath his promise annexed thereto, Ye shall have, ye shall finde, and it shall be opened unto you. Now for our better understanding of Christs meaning herein, two rules must be observed. 1. That Christ here speakes not of every kinde of asking in prayer, but of that onely which himselfe commandeth and alloweth: for we may aske and not receive, because we aske amisse, as a S. Iames saith; but he that asketh, according to Christs direction in this place, shall receive.

Foure conditions in acceptable prayer.

Now in all acceptable prayer to God, foure conditions must be observed: 1. We must aske while the time of grace and mercie remaineth: for if the day of grace be once past, we may aske, seeke, and knocke, but all in vaine: this is

As plaine by the five foolish Virgins, who asked and sought for oyle, but found none, yea, they called and knocked, but it was not opened unto them, Matth. 25.8,9,12. Now the time of this life, while God offers mercie unto us in his word, is the acceptable time and the day of grace, 2 Cor. 6.2. and therefore herein must we aske, seeke, and knocke. 11. We must not aske as seemeth good unto our selves, but according to Gods will, and as his word alloweth. The sonnes of Zebede were denied their request, because they asked they knew not what, Matth. 20.22. But this is our assurance that we have to him, that if we aske any thing according to his will, he heareth us, 1 John 5.14. 111. We must aske in faith, that is beleeve that God will grant us those things which we aske according to his will: James 1.5,6. If any man lacke wisdome, let him aske of God, -- but let him aske in faith, and waver not: for the wavering minded man shall receive nothing of God: therefore faith Christ, Whatsoever ye desire in prayer, beleeve that ye shall have it, and it shall be done unto you, Marke 11.24. IV. We must referre the time and manner of Gods accomplishing our requests to his good pleasure. It was the sinne of the Israelites that they limited the holy one of Israel, by prescribing him what they would have for their provision, and when they would have it, Psal. 78.41. wee therefore must wait on God, as David did. Psal. 40.1. I waited patiently for the Lord, and he inclined his eare unto me, and heard me. God deferres the granting of our requests, because he would trie the affections of his children. Cant. 3.1. The Church seeketh Christ, but cannot find him, that is, where and when she will. And indeed herein doe we shew forth faith, when we referre the time and manner of receiving our requests, to the good pleasure of God: for he that beleeveth will not make hast, Isay 28.16.

The second rule to be here remembred concerning prayer, is: That these promises are not made directly to the worke of prayer, but to the person that prayeth; and yet not to him simply, as he doth this good action of prayer, but as he is in Christ, for whose merit sake the promise is accomplished: and therefore Christ here speakes to them, whom he takes for granted to be the true members of his mysticall body, which is his Church. This rule must be remembred for the right understanding of the promises of God concerning prayer; for hereby it is plaine, that our prayer is not the cause of the blessings we receive from God, but onely a way and instrument in and by which God conveyeth his blessings unto his children; for a true prayer is a fruit of our faith in Christ, in whom alone all the promises of God are yea, and amen, that is, sure and certaine unto us.

2 Rule. Gods promise to heare and respect the person in Christ.

Now having found Christs meaning, let us come to such instructions as are to be gathered hence. First, observe that Christ doth not barely propound this Commandement to pray, but repeats the same by a kinde of gra-

2. Degrees of fervencie in prayer

dation in three distinct words, Aske, seeke, and knocke: whereof the latter imports more vehemence than the former. And this he doth to checke the slacknesse and coldnesse of our prayers, and to stirre us up to fervent zeale and diligence in this dutie, both in publike and private. And to move us to godly zeale and diligence in this dutie, consider the reasons following. I. Christs owne example, which in morall duties is a perfect rule: Now though he had little need to pray in respect of himselfe, for he did never sinne, yet how often, and how long, and with what fervencie did he give himselfe to this dutie? he spent whole nights in prayer, Luke 6.12. and in prayer in the garden he sweat water and blood. We have also Moses example, who spent fourtie dayes, and fourtie nights in prayer and fasting for the people, when they had sinned, Deut. 9.18,19. If he were thus fervent in prayer for their sinnes, how earnest would he be for his owne? And Daniel humbled himselfe many dayes, and prayed fervently for his people, Dan. 9.2.4, &c. David prayed seven times a day, and rose up at midnight to give thankes to God, Psal. 119.164.62. And Paul willeth the Romans, that they would strive or wrestle with him by prayer to God, Rom. 15.30. All these are worthy examples unto us; and if we compare our selves with them, we shall see we have much more cause so to doe: for our sinnes abound above theirs, and therefore we had need to pray for the preventing of Gods Judgements which our sinnes call for against us. Also we come farre short of them in grace, and therefore had need to pray for supply thereof against the time of need; for our dayes of peace will not always last, we have enjoyed it long, and therefore must looke for dayes of triall, for the state of Gods Church is interchangeable. II. Reason. All of us must come to deale with God, both in the day of death, and at the day of judgement; at both which times all worldly helps and comforts will forsake us, and by no meanes can we shun that account; therefore it will be good for us while we live, often to set our selves before the Lord, that so we may make our selves familiar and acquainted with him against that day: But if now we estrange our selves from God in regard of this exercise of prayer, then at our end we shall finde the Lord to be strange unto us, and to professe that hee knowes us not, which will be woe unto us. III. Reason. Every good thing we have or stand in need of, comes from the mercie and bountie of God in Christ: and prayer is an ordinarie meanes for the procuring of Gods blessings; wee therefore must give our selves to the faithfull practice of this dutie. Indeed if grace and other blessings were our owne, or from our selves, wee might well spare this labour: But what hast thou (saith Paul to everie Christian) that thou hast not received? bee not therefore secure and idle: for Gods blessings come not when we snort upon our elbowes, but in the use of meanes; and happy are we that may use those meanes: for in asking we receive, in seeking we finde, and in knocking it is opened unto us.

Secondly, our Saviour Christ by trebling this commandement to pray, would give us to consider, that there is some weightie cause we should be instant in this dutie; and that is, in regard of the great miseries, and manifold dangers whereunto we are subject in this life: for as Peter saith, the righteous shall hardly be saved, and no marvell, for we have without us, the devill and all his angels plotting our destruction, and the World a dangerous enemie, whereby the devill workes: within us, we have our owne corrupt hearts, daily drawing us to the practice of sinne, the bane and poyson of our soules. Now what is to be done in this case? surely our onely refuge is, constant and fervent prayer unto God, as Christ here implies by this threefold command: for in all things we must let our requests be made knowne to God, Philip. 4.6. This hath alwayes beene the practice of all the faithfull, as we may see in Gods Booke. But if we had no example, this commandement were sufficient, to perswade us unto this dutie. Also doest thou want any grace of God, as faith, repentance, knowledge, zeale, patience, strength against temptation, or assurance of Gods favour? why, aske, and thou shalt have; seeke, and thou shalt finde. And this must be our course in outward wants, and for temporall blessings, as health, peace, libertie, plentie, &c. Indeed the wicked worldlings seeke to wise men, and wise women in their miseries, but this is to forsake God, and to goe to the Devill: Gods people must goe to their God, Hay 8.19.

Thirdly, the trebling of this commandement in diverse termes must teach us, to be instant and urgent with God in prayer: this is an holy and acceptable importunitie, when the Christian heart gives God no rest: Jerem. 29.12,13. the Lord promiseth to his people, That they shall crie unto him, and goe and pray unto him, and he will heare them: they shall seeke him, and finde him, because they shall seeke him with their whole heart. Hay 62.7. The Lords remembrancers are commanded not to keepe silence, nor to give the Lord any rest. Matth. 15.22. The woman of Canaan is commended, because she will take no answer, nor repulse from our Saviour Christ, till her daughter was cured: and Luke 18.5. The poore widdow by her importunitie prevailed with the unrighteous Judge: which parable Christ propounds, to teach us to be constant and earnest in prayer. We therefore must shake off our naturall coldnesse and negligence in prayer, which is the common sin of the world in regard of this dutie. And we must labour for knowledge both of our owne sinnes and miseries, and of Gods mercies, that so we may pray with understanding, and in zeale and fervencie as Christ here requireth. Alas many pray not at all, and others know not what they aske, though they say the Lords prayer, or some other set forme of prayer.

And

Matth. 7. vers. 7.

And most men that have knowledge, suffer their mindes to wander from God by vaine imaginations: now all comes for lacke of that feeling in prayer, which Christ here requireth.

This much of the Commandement in generall. Now out of the words more particularly we may observe two points: First, where Christ bids us Aske, seeke, knocke, he speakes not particularly to some, but generally to all his servants, so that all must pray; which plainely implies that his best and dearest servants are during this life in want of some grace or blessing. And indeed when God gives most excellent gifts and blessings to his children, yet then hee leaves them in some notable want or triall for their humiliation and provocation to prayer. Paul was taken up into Paradise, and there heard words that cannot possibly be uttered by man in this life: this was a great grace and prerogative: but yet to humble him, lest he should be exalted out of measure, there was given him a pricke in the flesh the messenger of Satan to buffet him: hereby he was brought to pray most earnestly for deliverance, but yet he must rest contented with Gods grace; for God will make perfect his power through the weaknesse of his servants, vers. 8,9. This point must bee observed, to discover to many secure persons their miserable state, who feele no want of grace in themselves, and therefore thinke all is well. But what meanest thou to professe Christ if thou have no need of him nor of his graces? Oh know it, when thou sayest in thine owne heart, thou art rich, and lackest nothing; then thou art poore, and blinde, and miserable, and wretched. And indeed if thou knewest the corruption of thine owne heart, thou wouldest crie out with the Apostle, in respect of thy wants; O miserable man that I am, who shall deliver me from this body of death!

Secondly, Christ saying not onely Aske, but seeke, and knocke; doth hereby imply what is Gods dealing many times with his owne servants: namely, that he forsakes them for a time, and in part, and in some sort hides himselfe, and as it were lockes himselfe from them. Now thus he dealeth for two causes: First, hereby to chastise and correct them for their sinnes: for iniquitie separates betweene God and his people, and their sinnes hide his face from them, Hay 59.2. Secondly, to make triall of his graces in his children, to see whether they delight in his love, to shew them their owne weaknesse, and to move them to cleave unto him more inseparably. By all which we see, it stands us in hand to pray earnestly and continually, for God may forsake us for our sinnes: and he may justly take occasion to trie what we have profited by his Gospel, which we have long enjoyed with abundance of peace.

Thus much of the commandement to earnest prayer: Now Christ inforceth it by two reasons. First, by a promise, infolded in this verse with the commandement, and confirmed in the next. Secondly, by a comparison, ver. 9. For the first, The reason from the promise in this verse may thus be framed:

If they will aske, shall receive; if they that seeke, shall finde; and they that knocke, shall be let in; then doe you aske, seeke, and knocke:

But they that aske, shall receive; they that seeke, shall finde, &c. Therefore doe you aske, seeke, and knocke.

In this reason our Saviour Christ teacheth us, that when we pray to God, we must bring a speciall faith whereby we are assured that the particular things we aske according to Gods will shall be granted us. So Iohn Christ, Marke 11.24. Whatsoever you aske in prayer, believe that ye shall have it, and it shall be done unto you: and James 1.6. Let him aske in faith: for he that doubteth of Gods promise, derogateth the life of the thing he asketh. Now if we must bring this speciall faith, then of necessitie must wee have a speciall knowledge of the will and promise of God for the things we aske: for as without faith wee cannot pray aright, so without knowledge, no faith. And therefore we must be carefull to acquaint our selves with the will and promise of God, that by Gods commandement we may know what to aske, and by faith may also aske in assurance: for if we pray without this knowledge and faith, our prayers are but lip-labour and unprofitable.

Secondly, hence we learne that the Papists erre grossly, which teach that this speciall faith is not necessary in prayer; this is a doctrine of Devils: for we ought to bring in prayer a particular faith to apply to our selves the promise of God concerning that thing which we aske in prayer. But this we can never bring, unlesse we first have a speciall saving faith, whereby we believe our reconciliation with God in Christ: for therefore doe we beleeve that God will grant our particular requests, because by faith wee know our selves to be in Christ, in whom he loveth us; and therefore will make good his promise unto us, as the Apostle saith, This is the assurance that we have in Him, that if we aske any thing according to his will, he heareth us.

Thirdly, hence we learne how to carry our selves in all dangers, troubles, and afflictions; namely, we must fetch our hearts by faith upon the promise of God, who hath said he will not forsake us, but be with us in trouble, and deliver us, Psal. 92.15. This is necessary, for without faith in great afflictions, our owne naturall passions will confound us: Hence Habakkuk, speaking of grievous times of affliction, saith, The just shall live by faith. And this David testified, Psal. 62.1. Yet my soule keepeth silence unto God: of him commeth my salvation. Psal. 23.3. Though I should walke through the valley of the shadow of death, I will feare none evill: for thou Lord art with me, thy rod and thy staffe they comfort me.

Fourthly, this must stirre us up to great diligence in prayer. We being Gods creatures, and our God requiring this service at our hands, ought to pray upon his commandement, though he had made no promise unto us. But now sith he hath made a gracious promise to heare and grant our requests, this must stir us up to all diligence, and alacritie in prayer: see the practise hereof in David, upon Gods promise he incourageth himselfe to pray, 2 Sam.7.27,28,29. Thou, O Lord of hosts, hast revealed unto thy servant that thou wilt build him an house: Therefore now O Lord God (for thou art God, and thy words are true, and thou hast told this goodnesse unto thy servant:) Therefore now let it please thee to blesse the house of thy servant, that it may continue for ever: for thou O Lord God hast spoken it. So Daniel perceiving by the prophecie of Jeremie, the promise of God for the returne of the people from the captivitie, doth set himselfe to most earnest prayer to God, for the accomplishment of that promise, Daniel 9.2,3. And so must we doe in all our wants, first search out Gods promise for the supply thereof, and then goe boldly and diligently to God by prayer in the name of Christ.

v. 8 For whosoever asketh, receiveth; and he that seeketh, findeth; and to him that knocketh, it shall be opened.

Here Christ confirmeth the former reason that was included in the former verse with the commandement to pray. In effect and substance they are all one; onely here the reason is propounded more generally, without limitation to Christs hearers, thus; Whosoever asketh, receiveth; whosoever seeketh, findeth, &c. that is, observing the due conditions of prayer, which Gods Word requireth.

I. Objectt. Here some may see, that God oft heares those that pray without faith; as the cries of the poore, when they curse their oppressours, Exo.22.23. And so the Lord heard the Israelites when they asked Quailes in their lust, Psal.78. 18,27. Ans. True it is, God sometimes grants the requests of those that pray without faith, but his hearing is not in mercie, but in anger and wrath, and is a meanes to execute his judgement upon them. Thus he gave the Israelites a King in his wrath, Hosea 13.11. and so he gave them Quailes, for while the meat was in their mouthes, the wrath of God came upon them. Psal.78.30,31. Thus the Devills had their request granted, to enter into the herd of Swine, Matth.8.31,32. and so God permitted him to afflict Job, Iob 1.12. but all was to his owne shame, to manifest his absolute subjection unto God, that beyond his will he cannot goe, no not to hurt the basest of Gods creatures.

II. Objectt. Ahab prayed and humbled himselfe and was heard, though hee did it onely hypocritically, for feare of punishment, 1 Kings 21.29. Ans. This was a grant of a temporall benefit onely, which God oft gives to hypocrites; but for spirituall blessings which pertaine to salvation in Christ, whereof this Text is principally to be understood, they are not granted to the wicked.

Matth.7.

III. Objectt. Abraham prayed directly against the will of God, for the saving of Sodom, which God was purposed to destroy. Ans. Abraham no doubt had in him a speciall motion to make that prayer, and withall he asked leave of God to pray for them; neither did he pray absolutely, but with submission to Gods will, and so he sinned not, though he obtained not his desire: otherwise, without these cautions hee had done amisse: and we must not make the extraordinary practices of the faithfull, ordinary rules for our imitation. So that Gods promise here is firme, whosoever asketh those blessings of God which he hath promised to give, in that manner which God approveth, shall bee sure to receive.

Genesis 18.

God sure to heare.

The use. In this reason we learne, that God is most ready and willing to heare his children when they pray: Isay 65.1. I was found of them that sought me not, I said behold me, behold me, to a Nation that called not upon my Name: and vers.24. Before they call I will answer, and while they speake I will heare.

Vse. Our God the onely true God.

This then is first a plaine proofe that the Lord whom we worship, is the true God; because he is so able to helpe, and so ready and willing to heare, being neere to all that call upon him in truth. Thus Moses reasoneth with his people to prove that they onely had the true God for their God: Deut.4.7. What Nation is so great unto whom the gods comes so neere unto them, as the Lord our God is neere unto us in all that we call unto him for.

A motive to love God.

Secondly, this must perswade us to love God unfeinedly and heartily, who is so ready and willing to grant our requests in prayer, especially considering we are by nature his enemies. A rare thing it is to see any resemblance of it in the world; and indeed among men this dealing is able to draw love from an enemie, when we shew our selves willing to doe him any good we can: this heaps coales of fire upon his head, to consume his malice, and kindle in him love to us: Oh then, how should Gods gracious bountie and readinesse to heare us, draw our hearts to God in all love and thankfulnesse?

A comfort to the afflicted.

Thirdly, this serves to be a notable stay and comfort to all those that are cast downe in soule with the sight and burthen of their sinnes: for behold, if they aske mercie at Gods hands, they shall have it; if they can call, hee will heare; and if they will but knocke at the doore of his mercie, he is ready to open unto them. Here they use to plead, that they have long called, and cried, and knocked, but they finde no comfort. Answ. O consider the usuall dealing of God with his owne children: for a time he will hide his face, and seeme to locke up his mercie and compassion from them, as we may may see by Davids complaint, Psal.77.7. Will the Lord absteine himselfe for ever, and will he shew no more favour? vers. 8. Is his mercie cleane gone for ever? doth his promise faile for evermore? vers. 9. Hath God forgotten to be mercifull, &c? But his intent herein is to humble them deepely, to make them knocke more earnestly, that they may be more thankfull for Gods mercy when they finde it; and more carefull to keepe themselves from sinne, whereby they may lose againe that assurance. Indeed it is a most heavie crosse, and the deepest griefe that can befall a man, to have the conscience apprehend the wrath of God without any feeling of his favour: yet in this case here is comfort, let this poore soule out of the depth of his horrour cry unto God with David, and out of the belly of the Whale of desperation with Jonas, endevouring against all reeling to lay hold upon the promise of mercie in Christ, and he shall finde the Lord in due time ready to heare and to send comfort, yea, the sweetnesse of his love shall distill most joyfully into his poore soule.

v. 9 For what man is there among you, which if his sonne, aske him bread, would give him a stone?

10 Or if he aske him fish, will he give him a serpent?

11 If yee then, which are evill, can give to your children good gifts, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven, give good things to them that aske him?

C

These words containe a second reason of the former commandement to pray, as also a confirmation of the promise annexed thereunto for assurance to be heard; and it may be framed thus:

D

If earthly parents though they be evill, can give good gifts to their children, when they want them, and aske them at their hands; then much more will your heavenly Father give good gifts to those that aske him:

But earthly parents, though they be evill, will give good gifts to their children:

Therefore much more will your heavenly Father give good things to them that aske him.

This reason standeth in a comparison of inequals, drawne from the lesse to the greater; from the care which is ordinarily seene in naturall parents over their children, to prove undoubtedly the much tenderer care of our heavenly Father over us. And this kinde of reasoning is usuall with God in Scripture: Hos.2.19,23. Can a woman forget her childe, yea but admit she compassion on the sonne of her wombe? Though she, should forget, yet will I not forget thee. Psal.103.13. As a father hath compassion on his children, so hath the Lord compassion on them that feare him. Mal. 3.17. --- and I will spare them as a man spareth his owne sonne that serveth him.

A strong motive of prayer.

In the framing of this reason, beheld a speciall favour of God vouchsafed to godly parents: They may take a taste of Gods love and care over themselves, by the consideration of that naturall care and tender affection they beare towards their owne children. And indeed they may more easily than other, apprehend and apply to themselves the loving favour and tender care of God over them, by the like affections in themselves towards their owne children. Now this favour and privilege God vouchsafeth for speciall cause: First, to invite and invite up those parents, which yet have not tasted of Gods love, to embrace his Word and promises whereby God reveales his love to men, that so they may taste of Gods love towards them, whereof they have in so notable a patterne in their affection towards their owne children. Secondly, to provoke them to labour to have their hearts rooted and grounded in the love of God. And thirdly, that they having experience of Gods love in themselves, may bring their children and posteritie to the fruition of the same love and mercie.

Now to come to the comparison: The first part whereof is this, that it is a naturall propertie in all parents to give good things unto their children. This is a principle binding conscience, that parents should bee carefull of their children; He that provideth not for his owne, (saith the Apostle) especially for them of his family, is worse than an infidell: for infidels doe not put out this light of nature, but provide for their children.

1 Tim.5.8.

Rioteous parents reproved.

Here then those parents are to be blamed, who spend their substance in gaming and riot, and so leave their children and family destitute and in want. Those spend upon their owne lusts, those good things which they should bestow upon their children, and so shew themselves unnaturall; but the Magistrate, who is the publike father, ought to looke unto them, and to restraine them from such disorder.

All such as neglect a strict government in their families.

Secondly, here those idle wives are to be blamed, which for food and raiment will provide and give sufficient to their children, but in the meane while they give them not godly education, in the instruction and information of the Lord, which is a good thing indeed unto the soule: for which the godly in Scripture are commended; as Abraham towards his family, Genes.18.19. and Lois and Eunice towards Timothy, 2 Tim.1.5. who brought him up in faith unfeined.

Lastly,

Matth.7. verse.11.

Thirdly, by this we may see the state of those that kill their owne children, (for so we may read, that some parents have eaten their owne children) namely, they are such as become unnaturall, being in Gods just judgement left unto themselves to be ruled by the Devill, who filleth their hearts with this unnaturall and savage cruelty. Now Christ speakes here of the light of nature not extinguished, and for it is true even among the heathen.

v. 11 If ye then which are evill, &c. Here is the application of the compatison, the ground whereof was laid downe in the two former verses. And by evill he meanes not every sinner, but such as are framed with malice, envie, and self-love, being bent to seeke their owne good onely: for so finde the Master to the envious labourers, Matth. 20.15. Is thine eye evill because I am good? that is, art thou envious because I am bountifull?

In these words Christ gives unto understand, that it is the note of an evill man to be given wholly to seeke his owne good, though otherwise he live civilly; for this is a fruit of evill covetousnesse and self-love. Experience shewes the grievousnesse of this sinne: for thence come the manifold practices of injustice, cruelty, and oppression that be in the world, hence it is that times of dearth are made more heavie upon the poore, than otherwayes Gods hand hath sent them; because the rich seeke their owne good and commodity onely at such times: hence come ingrossing, deceiving, and inclosing to the spoile of the poore. We must therefore beware of this sinfull practice; and on the otherside give our selves to practise goodnesse towards others, fitting our selves to the practise of love, which seeketh not her owne things, but is bountifull, that so wee may shew forth our love to God by well-doing to our brethren; as the Apostle bids us, Galat. 5.13. Doe service one to another by love; and Philip. 2.4. Looke not every man on his owne things, but every man also on the things of other men. This was good King Iosias his practice, for which cause among many particular vertues, all his goodnesse are said to be recorded, 2 Chron. 35.26. And Saint Paul like wise became all things to all men, that he might win some; and though he were free from all men, yet he made himselfe servant unto all men, that he might win the more, 1 Cor. 9.19. --- 22.

You that are evill can give good gifts: that is, bread, fish, and such like, as Luke 11.11,12. Here it is plaine, that an evill man may have some kinde of vertues in him, whereby he may doe some good workes. Quest. How can this be, for an evill man wants faith, and so whatsoever he doth is sinne? Answ. We must know, that the gifts of the Spirit are of two sorts: some are common, whereby the corruption of mans nature is onely restrained and limited, for the maintaining of civill societies, that man with man may live in some order and quietnesse: And hence it was that among the heathen, some were just, some milde, some liberall, &c. All these came from the Spirit, yet not reuning the parties, but onely restraining their naturall wickednesse: And of this sort of gifts is the love and care of parents towards their children, and the love of children towards their parents. And these and such like evill men may have, for they are not sanctifying vertues, but rather shadowes thereof. The second kinde of the gifts of the Spirit are more speciall gifts & graces, whereby the corruption of mans nature is mortified and in some part abolished, and the graces of Gods image are renued in man, whereby they become loving, meeke, just, temperate, &c. which in the regenerate are true Christian vertues, and the exercise hereof is the doing of good works indeed.

How much more shall your heavenly father give good things to them that aske him? These words contains the second part of the compatison, wherein Christ doth amplifie and set out the bountifulnesse of God in his gifts to his children: and S. Luke specifieth these good things, to be the gifts of the holy Ghost, in regard of grace and operation. Luke 11.13.

Here then three points are to be handled; I. Who gives these good things. II. What is given. III. To whom. For the first: the Author of these good things is the Father: for of him, and from him, commeth every good gift, and every perfect giving. Quest. But this gift is the holy Ghost, now the holy Ghost is God, how then can he be given, this seemes to imply inequalitie in the Trinitie, for the person giving, must have power and authoritie over the person given? Answ. We must know, first, that this action of the Father in giving the holy Ghost, is not by vertue of superiour power and authoritie, but by consent; the holy Ghost is freely willing to be given of the Father; for all three persons being one and the same God, must needs have one and the same will, as in all things, so in this gift. Secondly, this giving is not in essence or person, but in regard of operation and grace; as love, joy, peace, &c. in the hearts of Gods children. How the Father gives the holy Ghost.

II. Point. What are these good things given? Answ. The holy Ghost. Quest. Why should the Father give the holy Ghost, and not the holy Ghost as well give the Father, seeing they are equall? Answ. The reason is, because of that order which the divine wisdome manifesteth in the Trinitie; for though all three persons be equall in all properties of the godhead, which is one and the same in them all; yet they are distinct in order, the Father being the first person, the Sonne not the first, but the second; and the holy Ghost not the first person, nor the second, but the third: and hence it is, that the Father gives the sonne, both the father and the sonne give the holy Ghost; yet not in person, but in regard of gifts and operation, and that by free and equall consent, not from superioritie, or by constraint.

III. Point.

Matth.7. verse.11.

III. Point. To whom doth the Father give this gift of the holy Ghost? Answ. To them that aske him. Hence some would gather that man hath free will by nature in his conversion, because he must first aske, and then comes the gift of the holy Ghost. Answ. We must know that by the holy Ghost here is meant, not the beginning of grace, but the increase thereof, and a greater measure of gifts, with a more sensible feeling of them: for this promise is made to Gods children that aske, which none can be, but by the holy Ghost. See this in the Disciples, John 20.22. Christ said to his Disciples, who had true grace before, Receive the holy Ghost: and yet also after that, the holy Ghost came downe upon them in the forme of cloven tongues of fire, Acts 2.3. Now these latter givings, were in regard of greater measure, as it is said, they were filled with the holy Ghost, v. 2. Againe, by them that aske, is not meant every one that uttereth words of request to God; but those that aske in faith, and pray aright by grace: as Rom. 10.14. How can they call on him, in whom they have not beleeved? and Rom. 8.26. We know not what to pray as we ought, but the Spirit helpeth our infirmities -- and maketh request for the Saints according to the will of God, verse. 27. Pelagian. vide Augustin. l. 4 in Iulian. cap. 8.

Use. 1. Hence we learne, that grace is given not to the idle, but to them that use the good meanes ordained of God for the obtaining of grace; as the holy exercises of the Word, in hearing, reading, meditation, and humble and earnest prayer: and therefore, if we would have grace, we must diligently exercise our selves in these meanes; for faith comes by hearing, Rom. 10.17. And Gods children in all ages have used the meanes to get grace: Lament. 5.21. Turne thou me, O Lord, unto thee, and we shall be turned; and David is plentifull in the meanes, whereby hee abounded in grace: Psal. 119.27. Teach me, Lord, the way of thy Statutes: and verse 99. I have had more understanding than all my Teachers, for thy testimonies are my meditation. So Christs Disciples did not onely heare him preach, but desired to be instructed in those things which they knew not: Matth. 13.36. Declare to us the meaning of the parable: also they prayed him to increase their faith, Luke 17.5. Here then we may see the cause of that ignorance and want of grace which abounds in the world; namely, contempt or negligence in the meanes which God hath ordained for the obtaining of grace: for the heart of the negligent is like the field of the sluggard, that hath no corne in it, but is over-growne with briers and thornes. How to get grace. Prov. 24.30,31.

Secondly, this serves for the comfort of those that have as yet but the beginnings of grace, in small and weake measure; they must not be discouraged, for God hath plentie of grace in store: if they can but finde and feele their want of grace, and lament it unto God, using the meanes of the Word and prayer to get supply; here is a promise of the holy Ghost, who is the store-house and fountaine of all grace. A comfort to the weake in grace.

Thirdly, this serves for a good ground to confute sundry errours; as first, the opinion of universall grace, whereby some hold, that every man may be saved if he will; for the promise of the holy Ghost (without which none can be saved) is not universall, but here made with restraint to those that aske according to Gods wil, which none can doe without the Spirit; which must teach us to pray in faith, without which we receive nothing from God, Jam. 1.7. Secondly, this overthroweth the fond conceit of Anabaptists, and Familists, which looke for the Spirit by revelation, and not in the exercise of the Word and prayer. But we must looke to the meanes, in which God gives the Spirit; and out of that meanes, we are more subject to the delusions of Satan, than to the operation of the holy Ghost. Thirdly, this also confuteth the errour of the Church of Rome, who teach, that a man by the good use of the gifts of nature, may come to obtaine the gifts of the holy Ghost. But there is no larger promise than this is in all the Scripture, where the gifts of the holy Ghost are promised to the exercise of the gift of prayer in faith; which we cannot doe by nature but by grace. And besides, when we aske in faith by grace, this is no cause of the gifts of the Spirit which we receive, but onely a discharge of our dutie in the exercise of the meanes which God hath appointed; whereupon followeth the increase of grace, yet no way of our merit, but from Gods free mercie and his bountie. Universall grace confuted. Anabaptists, and Familists. Aquin. 1. 2 q. 112 a. art. 3.

v. 12 Therefore whatsoever ye would that men should doe to you, even so doe ye to them: for this is the Law and the Prophets.

This verse containes the fourth part of this Chapter, concerning equitie and justice. And it consists of two branches; a commandement, Whatsoever ye would, &c. and a reason, for this is the Law and the Prophets. For the first: The meaning. The commandement is propounded in a forme of speech that hath reference to some thing going before; Therefore whatsoever, &c. and yet it seemeth very hard, that it should depend either upon the doctrine of prayer, or of dispensing the word, or of rash judgement. Why then is it said therefore, &c? Some thinke it is to be referred to the doctrine of Justice, which was delivered in the fifth Chapter, but that is scarce probable, because so many different points of Doctrine are handled betweene. Others thinke that it doth not depend of any thing that went before, but that the Word (therefore) doth abound; and this is more probable, for such particles doe sometimes abound: John 1.20. He denied and said, because I am not the Christ: where the word (because) doth abound. Now though The ninth part of Christs Sermon. a Ioh. 1.20.

though the word therefore doe abound, yet it is not without his use, for it imports that the doctrine here delivered is a speciall doctrine, and a maine conclusion inferred upon divers particular duties of Justice before delivered in the whole Sermon.

Whatsoever.] It may seeme that this ought not to be so, for many desire and wish evill unto themselves; as children, that they may have their wills to take their pleasure, and not be held in subjection unto their parents, or held to good education: and so idle persons wish evill unto themselves, for they would not be set a-worke. We are therefore to know that this must not bee understood of evill wishes, but of a will and desire well ordered, either by grace, and according to the written Word; or at least, by the light of natural knowledge, and conscience: so that Christs meaning is this; as if he had said, Whatsoever thing, either by the light of nature, and conscience, or by direction from Gods Word, you would wish that men should doe to you, that doe ye unto them.

The commandement thus explained, containeth two things; I. The thing to be ruled and ordered; namely, our actions to other men: II. The rule it selfe that must order all our sayings and doings towards others; to wit, that desire of justice and equitie, which every man by nature would have others shew to him in all things.

In this commandement our Saviour Christ would let us see a notable propertie of our corrupt nature; namely, that we are forward and diligent to exact justice and equitie at other mens hands towards us, but slacke and backeward to yeeld the same to others againe. In other mens doings towards our selves, we are made able to teach them what they ought to doe; but in our owne dealings toward others, wee are fearce schollers that will learne their dutie: we our selves would be reverenced and commended, but wee hardly doe the like to others.

Secondly, here wee are taught to avoid all practices, whereby we might hurt our neighbour, either in body, goods, or good name; as lying, slandering, usurie, oppression, and such like: this naturall reason might teach us, for wouldest not thou have others to defame, hurt, or oppresse thee? then doe not this to them: for the rule is not, doe as men doe to thee, but doe to others, as thou wouldest have them doe to thee: and it is the corruption of nature, that moves men to seeke their owne advantage and preferment, by the losse and debasing of others.

Thirdly, here we learne, that in common injuries wherein we are wronged by others, we must not requite like for like; but doe good for evill: we must not looke at that which they doe to us, but at that which we would they should doe.

Fourthly, hence we learne, that in matters of commoditie whereabout we deale in the world, we must not onely looke unto our selves, but also seeke the good of our neighbours: it is the manner of men to seeke themselves onely in their affaires, and each man will fall as deere as he can, according to the proverbe, Every man for himselfe, and God for us all: but neither the saying, nor the practice is from God; he would have us according to the law of Nature, to seeke the common good, and to doe as we would be done unto.

Fifthly, this rule of equitie cuts the throate of all those pretences, whereby bad dealing is smoothed over in the world; for ill-minded persons use to colour their doings with these and such like sayings: the gripple feller saith, The thing is mine, may I not make of mine owne what I can: the deceiver saith, he thrusteth his ware on no man: the usurer saith, he bids no man hire his money, but others intreat it of him, and give him thankes; but these pretences are nought, these men follow a crooked line, they ought to see in their owne hearts, whether they would have other men deale so with them: the usurer may pretend he pleasures the poore, but his helpe is no better than his is, that gives a draught of cold water to him that is in a burning feaver, which seemes pleasant at the first, but after turnes to his great annoyance.

Sixthly, would we have all men to shew forth their love unto us? we then must be as carefull to shew forth our love to others, by the practice of all good duties. This is against our nature, but yet being the commandement of Christ, wee must endevour our selves to obey the same.

Lastly, here we have direction how to keepe a good conscience, in all our dealings with men in the world; for such things as are expressed in the word, we must follow the direction thereof: but where we want a particular commandement, there we must order our actions by this generall rule: enter into thy conscience, and there search how thou wouldest have other men deale with thee, and follow that in thy dealings with them: and so shalt thou keepe a good conscience. For want of this, come so many disorders as are in the world; and therefore happie were our times, if men would doe as they would be done to. Thus much for the commandement, now followes the reason.

For this is the Law and the Prophets.] The meaning: By the Law we must understand the five bookes of Moses, which were the first Scripture that ever was written: so Luke the 16.31. They have Moses and the Prophets. By the Prophets we must understand, all the rest of the bookes of the Old Testament, besides the five bookes of Moses, the Prophets being put for the bookes of the Prophets: as Matth. 2. 23. It is written in the Prophets that he shall be called a Nazarite: which testimonie is taken out of the booke of Judges, and it sheweth that the booke of Judges is to be numbred among the bookes of the Prophets: & they are called the Prophets, because because they were written by some Prophet. And how this commandement touching Justice is called the Law and the Prophets, because it is the summe of the Law and Prophets. Yet some may aske how this can be true, seeing this commandement onely concernes things to be practised, and the Law and Prophets besides morall duties, containe matters of faith to be believed? I answer, this commandement must be understood to be the summe of the Law and the Prophets, not for all things, but for that which they prescribe touching this point of justice and equitie, and the practice hereof. To doe as they would be done to, is the fulfilling of that which is set downe in the Law and in the Prophets, touching equitie in all humane actions. Now the meaning being thus opened, the reason standeth thus, being drawne from divine Testimonie:

That which is the summe of the Law and of the Prophets touching equitie, must be done:
But to doe as we would be done to, is the summe of the Law and the Prophets: therefore we must so doe.

From this reason wee may gather a rule whereby to judge concerning the old Testament, what is Scripture, and what is not: all Scripture of the old Testament, is either the Law, or the Prophets; that is, was either penned by Moses, or by some of the Prophets, who were extraordinarily moved and enabled thereunto. And therefore all the bookes from Genesis to Malachi are Canonicall Scripture, because they are written by some of the Prophets. To this purpose Saint Peter saith, 2 Peter 1.19. We have a most sure word of the Prophets, &c. But for the bookes of Apocrypha, they are not Canonicall Scripture, because they were not penned by Moses or any of the Prophets: which is plaine by this, that all of them were first written either in Latine, or in Greeke, and none in Hebrew originally; whereas all the old Prophets sent from God, writ their bookes in the Hebrew, in the language of that people to whom they were sent; save onely that some part of Daniel, Ezra, and Nehemiah were in Chalde, which language the people learned in the captivitie. Secondly, the Prophets could not erre, either in judgement, memorie, or understanding, by reason of the immediate assistance of the holy Ghost: as Acts 15.28. It seemed good to the holy Ghost and to us: and Peter calls their word most sure. But the Authors of the bookes of Apocrypha erred, as may be shewed in them all; Tobit 6. Raphaels counsell for driving away the Devill by the smell of the liver of a fish, is a meere fabulous device; for the Devill is by nature a spirit, and cannot bee affected with such things. The storie of Judith is fabulous, which saith, Nebuchadnezzar was King of Assyria when the people returned from the captivitie, and Joakim was high Priest. In the addition to Hester, Chapter 16.11. Haman is said to be a man of Macedonia; but the true Scripture saith, he was an Agagite, comming of Agag. The Author Ecclesiasticus confesseth his inabilitie in writing these things; but the true Prophets were all sufficient to this worke, and free from errour by the immediate assistance of the holy Ghost. And Chapter 46. 12. that Author writeth, that Samuel prophesied after his death, and shewed unto Saul his death: but the true storie Canonicall saith, God had forsaken Saul, and would answer him, neither by dreames, nor Vrim, nor by Prophets, 1 Sam. 28.6. The booke of Maccabees commendeth one for killing himselfe, which is the most cruell and dangerous murther that can be; and the Author also excuseth his insufficiencie in penning of it, which beseemeth not him that is guided by Gods Spirit. In the Song of the three children it is said, the flame ascended nine and forie cubits above the Furnace; which seemes incredible, especially that still they should then cast in fuell, or approach so neere, as to put any man into it. Likewise in the storie of Susanna it is said, verse 45. that Daniel was a young childe when he executed judgement upon the two false witnesses, which was in the end of Astiages reigne, immediately before the reigne of Cyrus: and verse 64. Daniel by this meanes is said to grow famous: which cannot possibly accord with the true storie of Daniel, neither for his age, nor for his fame and reputation. And the like may be said of the rest: whereby it is plaine, these bookes cannot be Canonicall Scripture. And yet they are not to be rejected, but reverently esteemed of, as the bookes of worthy men.

Here some may say, If Moses and the Prophets comprehend all Scripture that hath divine Testimonie, then the bookes of the new Testament shall not be Scripture, because they were not written by the Prophets. Ans. They were either penned by the Apostles, or by other Apostolike men, and allowed by the Apostles: as Saint Lukes Gospel, and the Acts, were written by Luke a Physitian; and Saint Marke that writ that Gospel, was not an Apostle; yet those bookes were approved by Apostolike authoritie, which is all one as if they had beene written by the Apostles; and the Apostles in speaking and writing were of equall authoritie with the Prophets, having the infallible assistance of the holy Ghost, as well as the Prophets: for Acts 15.28. they say, It seemeth good to the holy Ghost, and to us; and Ephes. 2.20. the Church is said to be built on the foundation of the Prophets and Apostles; where the Apostles are made equall with the Prophets.

II. Point. This reason also doth give us to understand, what was the first Scripture that ever was penned; namely, the bookes of Moses, before which, there was no word of God written, which was for the space of 2400. yeares. It may be asked, what was then the booke of the the warres of the Lord, mentioned Numb. 21.14. and the booke of the Righteous, spoken of by Iosuah, Chap. 10.13. Answ. These were the writings of men, humane stories, like to our bookes of Chronicles. Yet it is said, Jude 14. Enoch the seventh from Adam prophesied. Answ. That prophecie was not penned, but went from hand to hand by word of mouth: and if it were penned, yet it was not done by Enoch himselfe, but by some Jew in his name long after Moses; for it cannot be proved that Enoch ever penned any part of Scripture. Some will aske me, how the people of God did for that space of two thousand and foure hundred yeares, before the Law was written, what guide had they for to know the will of God? Answ. They had the Word of God immediately taught them by word of mouth, from God himselfe; as we may see in the Patriarkes, Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob: and they to whom it was delivered, did also convey the same from man to man by tradition. And because it may seeme strange, how religion could for so long time be preserved pure without writing, we are to know, that before the law was written the Church of God from the beginning, was the most part in one familie onely, as in Adams, Enochs, Noes, Abrahams, &c. whereby it was a more easie thing to preserve Gods Word among them. Againe, those men that first received the Word of God without writing, were of long continuance, living neere to a thousand yeares space, whereby they might better see the Word preserved and continued, without writing, by tradition. Besides, when religion was corrupted, God himselfe restored the puritie thereof, revealing his will againe, and renewing his covenant unto his servants, as he did to Abraham and the rest of the Patriarkes.

Here then behold, how the heads of families preserved Gods Word, and true religion, in the beginning of the world; namely, by teaching it to their posteritie: and from them we may learne, what is the dutie, and ought to be the practice of every governour of a family at this day: they must not thinke themselves discharged, for that the Word is written in the Church, and every man may reade and heare the same: but they must see the same be taught unto their children, and to the rest of their family, that so it may be preserved among them. So God commandeth his people, to teach their children the service of the Passeover, Exod. 12.26,27. and to whet the words of the Law upon their children. Deut. 6.7.

III. Point. In this reason our Saviour takes for granted, that the writings of Moses and of the Prophets are of infallible certaintie; for it is all one as if he had said, this must needs be every mans dutie, to doe as he would be done to: for this is the Law and the Prophets: and so answerable to them, all other bookes of Scripture containe doctrine of infallible truth and certaintie. Here some may aske, how we should be perswaded hereof in our consciences? Answ. By these Arguments, which are all drawne from Scripture it selfe, (for as every Science and Art hath his grounds and principles, so hath the holy Scripture, which is not the Church, but Scripture it selfe.) 1. From the causes: 2. From the effects: 3. From the properties: 4. From signes: 5. From the contraries: 6. From the testimonies that is given hereof.

The first Argument. Among the causes, the chiefe, first and principall is the Author thereof, which is God himselfe: to him doe Scriptures referre themselves, and also shew how God is their Author. In Scripture we read that God spake to Adam, to Enoch, Noe, Abraham, and the rest; and of Christ, the new Testament gives most lively testimonie, making him the Author and subject thereof. Now nothing is fully ascribed to God, but God in time will bring the same to nought; and therefore if Scripture had not beene Gods Word, it would long agon have vanished. Againe, the cause conservant must be considered; the devill by wicked men and heretickes hath laboured to take away Gods Word from mens hearts and hands: but yet it is still preserved in the Church, which argues that it is kept by a greater power than is in all men and all Angels: that is, by the power of God. Thirdly, the pen-men, the instrumentall causes, they were holy men of God, Prophets, and Apostles, who for vertue and pietie farre exceeded other writers: and if they had beene meere polititians, their writings would have shewed it: for the pen-men of holy Scripture, have therein faithfully registred their owne faults, which no politicke person would have done. Againe, consider the matter of holy Scripture, which stands in doctrine, and style; the doctrine of Scripture is the Law and the Gospel: now the Law is set forth in most excellent puirie, nothing therein is against right reason, or common equitie. In the lawes of men are many things found against reason and equitie; they command such things as common reason would condemne, and omit many things which reason and equitie would command. And for the Gospel, in it is set downe doctrine altogether above mans reason; touching Christs incarnation, and mans redemption by his death: and although these things bee above nature, yet wee finde them true, wholesome, and good, in experience of conscience; which also proves that they are the Word of God. Men may devise things above Nature, but they can never be wholesome to the conscience. Further, for the style of Scripture, the phrase is plaine and familiar, and yet in any one speech there is more majestie, than in all the writings of men. Lastly, the end of Scripture proves the same to be Gods Word; for the Scripture sets up Gods worship and mans salvation, and yet gives nothing to men or Angels, but all to the glory of God: but for the writings of men, they doe either directly, or by intimation, ascribe some thing thing to the writers thereof.

II. Argument. From the effects, one worke of Scripture is this; It is against our corrupt nature, crossing and condemning the same; and yet it winneth men to the love thereof, and to obedience thereto: which could not bee unlesse it were the truth of God; for we abhorre and detest the words of men, that bee against our nature. A second effect is this; Gods word serves notably to comfort a man in all distresses whatsoever, even in the very pangs of death, when as no word of any man can doe him the least good, but onely his word, that is the Lord of our soules, and the God of our life.

III. Argument. From the properties of Scripture; the first whereof is Antiquity. The Scriptures of all writings are most ancient, and evermore truth is most ancient: among humane writings, we have none of certainty in the things they record, before the times of Nehemias and Ezra; but the Scripture sets downe things done from the beginning. A second property is mutuall consent; for although the bookes of Scripture were written by divers men, in sundry ages and times, yet all agree within themselves, no contradiction is in Scripture: but the writings of men have not this mutuall consent, no not in the same Author.

IV. Argument. From the signes and miracles thereof. The Doctrine of Scripture teacheth and recordeth true miracles; as the parting of the sea, the staying of the Sunne and Moone, the taking away of barrennesse, and the incarnation of the Sonne of God, a miracle of all miracles; all which being wrought by the power of God, shew that the Scripture which recordeth them, is the infallible truth of God.

V. Argument. From the contraries. Contrary unto the word of God, is the will of the devill, and mans owne corrupt nature; the devill hateth Scripture, and mans sinnefull nature repineth thereat, when it is checked and controlled thereby: now that which is contrary unto these two, must needs bee most holy and true; and that is the word of God.

VI. Argument. From testimony. There be two kindes of testimonies touching Scripture; one of holy Martyrs; who in all ages have sealed the truth thereof with their bloud, preferring the word of God before their owne lives. It will bee said, that Heretickes have dyed for falshood: Answer. There is great difference in their ends; the Martyrs have unspeakeable joy in the Spirit in their torments: but Heretickes have no such joy, but a naturall senselesse blockishnesse, whereby they undergoe these tortures. A second testimony is most principall, and that is the testimony of Gods Spirit; for when men doe beginne to learne and obey the word of God, then the Spirit of God settles their consciences in the perswasion of the truth of Scripture: whereupon it is called the sealing of the Spirit of truth, because it assures a man in conscience of his reconciliation with God; which assurance none can have, till hee be first resolved of the certainty of Scripture, which is the ground thereof.

Question. How may a man finde this seale in himselfe? Answ. When he findes the Scripture imprinted in his heart, as the signe of the seale is in the wax; and his heart is transformed into Scripture, as the wax is into the similitude of the seale; then doth the Spirit out of the holy Scripture, seale up assurance of the truth thereof unto his soule. None other writing of any man hath the like worke in the heart of man; and from these grounds, especially from this last, may wee resolve our selves that the Bible is of most infallible certaintie.

And yet for further resolution, let us see what objections are made against it. I. Object. It is said, that Scripture is against all reason. Answ. This is not true: for the Law is perfect reason, and the Gospell is above reason, not contrary to reason: nay, holding this principle of nature, that God is Almighty, even the Gospell it selfe may stand with reason; as that the Sonne of God should be incarnate, and that by his death we should receive life, which is the summe of the Gospell.

Objections against Scripture answered.

II. Object. There bee fallhoods in Scripture; for the passage thorow the red Sea was no miracle, but might bee done in the ebbing of the Sea, as in other countries there is oft-times passage thorow the Washes. Answer. The Scripture saith, the waters stood as walls on each side of the passage, which could not bee by an ebbe: against, reason sheweth that it could not bee by the naturall course, for their passage over was at the full of the Moone, when all Seas are most full, and doe not ebbe and flow, as they use to doe at other times.

III. Object. The greatest part of the whole world reject the Bible, as Turks and Pagans; and the Jewes care not for the new Testament. Answ. We must reverence Gods worke, in this with-holding his mercy in Christ from some, to whom he denies the meanes, which is his holy Word: for hence it comes that some reject the Bible, because God in his secret, yet most just judgement, with-holds this blessing from them. And therefore though Atheists barke, yet the truth is, Scripture is the word of God.

Popish twofold Scripture.

Vses. 1. Seeing the Word written is the certaine truth of God, we must take heed of being seduced by Popish teachers: who say there be two kinds of Scripture; Inward, and Outward. Inward Scripture is a consent of doctrine written by the holy Ghost in the hearts of all Catholikes, and this (say they) is the right Scripture.

Ambrosius Catharinus, cap. 10. 12.

ture. The outward Scripture is written in paper and parchment, which hath no certain sense, but as the present Church determines thereof. But this is a devillish doctrine, abolishing written Scripture, the true word of God, and setting up the opinions of their owne hearts, making Scripture what themselves will: wee must therefore hold the written Word to bee right Scripture, and the ground of that which is in the heart: for the Word written carries a most certaine sense, being both text and glosse: whereas their inward Scripture varieth as men doe, unlesse it bee grounded on the written Word.

II. Vse. The certainty of Scripture must teach us to beleeve Gods word, and not to feare to rest our selves upon it. The Author of Scripture by his providence preserves his owne word, so as all the men in earth, for substance cannot corrupt the same; and therefore whatsoever it saith, we need not doubt but it is the will of God.

III. Point. From this reason we may also gather the Authority of Canonicall Scripture: for we must doe, as we would be done to, because the Law and the Prophets say so: and hence it followes that the Law and Prophets have an high, soveraigne, and absolute authority. This authority of Scripture stands in two things: I. in power to give judgement. II. in the all-sufficiency thereof, in and of it selfe; and both these are noted here by our Saviour Christ in this reason.

For the first, the power of giving judgement is that whereby Scripture doth fully and absolutely determine of all things needfull to salvation concerning faith and manners: and for this cause the Lawes of God are oft in Scripture called judgements. There be divers judgements ascribed to sundry sorts of persons in Scripture: First, it gives a judgement to every private man. [a] The spirituall man discerneth or judgeth all things: and Saint John [b] bids the beleevers in the Church prove the spirit, that is, trie by judgment the doctrines delivered. Secondly, the Scripture gives judgement to publike persons, as to Pastors, Ministers, and to the Governours of the Church: Let two or three prophesie, and the rest judge: 1 Cor. 14. 29. and the spirit of the Prophets is subject to the Prophets, ver. 32. Thirdly, Judgement is ascribed to the Prophets and Apostles in Scripture: Act. 15. 28. It seemed good to the holy Ghost and to us: and this is an high judgement, which befals not any private man, or any ordinary Minister, or Generall Councell ordinarily, but is peculiar to extraordinary Prophets, that were the pen-men of holy Scripture. And these three kinds of Judgements must be distinguished; the two first kindes are inferiour and ministeriall kindes of judgement, depending on an higher and more soveraigne Judgement: for private men and ordinary Ministers and Councels give Judgement, yet not of themselves, but by their rule, which is the word of God; and this Judgement is nothing else but a Ministery, pronouncing and declaring the meaning of the will of God revealed in his Word. But besides this, there is a soveraigne kinde of Judgement, vouchsafed to the Prophets and Apostles, determining absolutely in matters of faith and conscience, what is to be done, and what is not; and this is the judgement of God himselfe, whereupon the Apostles might say, It seemeth good to the holy Ghost and to us, Act. 15. 28. And that this their judgement is absolute, appeares by Scripture, He that heareth you, heareth me, (saith Christ to his Apostles) and he that refuseth you, refuseth mee, Luk. 10. 16. and Paul delivering the Gospell of Christ to the Galatians, bids them hold them accursed that teacheth them otherwise, Gal. 1. 7. and the promise of sending the Spirit of truth, Joh. 16. 13. was directly intended to the Apostles, and onely in them fully accomplished. For our better conceiving hereof, we have a resemblance of this soveraigne judgement in the Commonwealth: the high Court of Parliament gives judgement of matters in Law, and so doe Lawyers and Judges in common Courts; yet there is great difference betweene these two: the Court of Parliament makes the Law, and determines absolutely in civil matters, without controlement, what must be done, and what not: but the Lawyers make not the Law, but pronounce the meaning of the Law unto me... Now the Scriptures, the Prophets and Apostles, they are like to the Court of Parliament in giving judgement: private men and ordinary Ministers give judgement like unto the Lawyers, which is not absolute, but ministeriall, depending on an higher judgement.

Vses. I. If the Prophets and Apostles have soveraigne power to give absolute judgement in matters of faith and manners; then we must here learne to make choice of a right Judge: for unto one must we appeale in matters of faith & conscience: and this right Judge is Gods word, which we must sticke unto, and to none other. The Commandement is plaine for matters of difficulty that concerne the conscience: Isa. 8. 20. To the Law, and to the testimony: and our Saviour Christ referres us to Scripture for all matters that concerne salvation; Joh. 5. 39. Search the Scripture. If we would know what is true religion, and what is erroneous; what is equity in any matter of conscience, wee must have recourse to Scripture. It will be said; Scripture is an unfit Judge, it cannot speake? I answer, It speakes sufficiently to determine of all matters of faith and conscience: we see in common experience, a man may resolve his friend in matters of doubt, as well by letter, as by word of mouth; why then may not the word of God sent from heaven unto his Church, resolve mens consciences in all matters of doubt for faith and manners? and indeed, let any man come in humilitie, and seriously search the Scripture, and hee shall finde resolution therein for any mat-

Scripture is authenticall.

Three sorts of bookes. 1. Divine.

2. Ecclesiasticall.

Vse 2. By this authority of Scripture in giving soveraigne judgement, wee are taught to take heed of an incompetent Judge, which men for many hundred yeares have set up in their hearts, to rely unto in matters of faith and conscience: and that is, to put the Church in roome of the Word, for soveraigne judgement. The Church of Rome teacheth, that [c] the Church must judge of the Scripture; yea, without Scripture [d] give soveraigne determination in matters of conscience, as having more authority than Scripture, because it gives authority thereunto: but this is the ground of Atheisme, and heresie, and the path-way to Popery: the true Church of God must have the honour of Christs Spouse; but yet the authority of soveraigne judgement must not bee given to her, but onely to the word of God himselfe.

The second part of the authority of Scripture is, that every part of Canonicall Scripture is Authenticall; that is, of sufficient authority of it selfe, though it be not confirmed by any other testimony; for Scripture is the word of God, and the testimony of Scripture is the testimony of God himselfe, than which none can be greater: as Saint John saith, If we receive the testimony of men, the testimony of God is greater, 1 Joh. 5. 9. For the better conceiving of this point, conferre all the bookes that are or ever were together, and thereby it will appeare, that the Scripture is of it selfe Authenticall. There bee three sorts of bookes, Divine, Ecclesiasticall, and Humane: Divine bookes are the bookes of God, penned by the Prophets and Apostles; and they are all the word of God: for whether wee regard the matter of them, or the manner of revealing them, they are all from God; the Prophets and Apostles were onely Gods hands and instruments in penning them, the holy Ghost gave the matter, the order, and the very words: from whence it must needs follow, that they are of all sufficient authority of themselves. Ecclesiasticall bookes, are bookes of divine matters, penned by learned men in the Church; and they are either generall books, or particular: Generall bookes Ecclesiasticall I call those, which were either made or confirmed by the whole Church; as the Creeds of the Apostles, the Nicene, and of Athanasius: and the foure first generall Councels; and these have Catholike allowance, yet not absolute authority, but depending on Scripture. Particular bookes Ecclesiasticall I call the Catechismes and Confessions of particular Churches, made by them, or by particular members thereof; which have not authority of themselves, but from the Scripture, or from generall consent. Now both these kindes of bookes may be called Gods word, so farre forth as they agree with Scripture: and yet they are also the word of men, because they were penned by men, and have both order and stlyle from men: and in this regard, that they were partly mens workes, they are not authenticall of themselves, but depend upon the authority of Scripture. Humane bookes are bookes penned by men, either of the Church, or out of the Church, concerning humane things, as bookes of naturall Philosophy, of Policy, and other Arts: and these are not the bookes of God, but of men alone, having both matter and stlyle from men: many of them containe excellent truths in their kinde, yet gathered onely from experience and common reason; but they have not in them that truth, which is truth according to godlinesse, serving to build up and to binde the conscience, unlesse it be in one case, to stop the mouthes of Atheists and Epicures, and to convince their consciences. And thus by conference of all bookes, wee see that Scripture alone is authenticall in it selfe, and no bookes beside.

3. Humane bookes.

Vses. 1. This teacheth us, that Ministers in the dispensing of Gods word should content themselves with the testimony of Scripture alone; for the end of the Ministery is to worke and confirme faith, and to settle and build up the conscience in the truth of religion, and matters concerning salvation: which no other word can doe, save only the word of God in Scripture, that hath sufficient authority in it selfe, from which conscience cannot appeale: and for which cause our Saviour Christ the true Prophet of the Church, contents himselfe with the testimony of the Law and Prophets alone; and after him his Apostles did the like. See this notably confirmed by Paul, who in his preaching to the Jewes, professed himselfe to have said none other thing than that which the Prophets and Moses said should come. Other writings have their good use in their time and place, but not in the publike Ministery: for authority and testimony from Scripture is authenticall: This the Scripture saith, therefore it is so; but authority from Councels and Fathers, is sophistry: as, Austin saith so, therefore it is so; this is no good reason, for it implies that all that Austin said is true; which indeed is false, hee being as all men are, subject to errour.

2. Vse. This also sheweth, that we cannot beleeve unwritten traditions, though they bee called Apostolical. The Church of Rome intend to deceive us, when they would beareus in hand that halfe of those things which are to be beleeved, are not written in Scripture, but received by tradition: but these traditions we cannot beleeve by a divine faith, howsoever by a common humane faith wee may; for they are contained in the books of Councels and Fathers, which were worthy men, yet subject to errour.

3. Vse. This also sheweth, that we must submit our selves with feare and trembling to the word of God: for it hath absolute authority to judge us, and to convince our conscience in all

IV. Point. Whereas Christ alleageth Moses and the Prophets to confirme his ministery, it may be demanded, whether there be any difference for authority, betweene Christ and the Prophets: for he that alleageth another mans authority, seemes to bee inferiour thereto? I answer, If wee compare Christ and the Prophets, wee must distinguish betweene their doctrine and their persons. The doctrine of Moses and of the Prophets, is equall to the doctrine of Christ two waies; First, in certainty of truth: for it is as undoubtedly true, as if Christ himselfe had taught the same. Secondly, in efficacy and authority for the power of binding conscience: for the doctrine of the Prophets bindes conscience as fully and truly, as if Christ himselfe had spoken it. And yet the person of Christ is above the person of Moses, and of all the Prophets; for hee is the Sonne of God, both God and man, they were men; he is the author of truth, they onely the instruments and penmen thereof: and from hence it comes, that Christs doctrine doth more binde us to obedience, than the doctrine of the Prophets; because the person delivering it, is of more authority and excellency: and for this cause Christ alleageth Moses and the Prophets, not for that his word is inferiour to theirs, but that in regard of our obedience hee might increase the authority of Moses and the Prophets, because a greater measure of obedience is required to Christs word, in regard of the dignity of his person. And this shewes that we now are more bound to obedience under the Gospell, than the people were under the Law: for wee have Christs doctrine, which in regard of his person is of more authority than Moses and the Prophets: see this point plainly laid downe by the Author to the Hebrewes: in the first Chapter he saith, God in times past spake to his Church by the Prophets, but in these last dayes he hath spoken to us by his Son: and in the second chapter, ver. 1. hee layes downe the use of this that now we have Christ for our Teacher; namely, that therefore we ought more abundantly to give heed to the things that we have heard, lest at any time wee let them slip, &c. shewing that our disobedience now shall bee more severely punished.

V. Point. Ignorant people abuse this text, to perswade themselves that preaching is needlesse, because no man can say more than this; Doe as ye would be done to, for this is the summe of the Law and the Prophets. But wee must know, that this is not the summe of all that the Prophets say, but only touching the matter of justice and equity: and indeed that wee may attaine to salvation, more is needfull: for wee must not onely know Gods word in generall, but in particular, seeing that we may faile in the particulars of that which we know in generall. Againe, preaching serves not onely for the removing of ignorance, and the increase of knowledge, but to erect and build up good conscience and honest lives, by the increase of faith, repentance, love of God and man, and of obedience; and this use the most learned and godly man that ever was, may make of the publike Ministery, though dispensed by one that is farre inferiour to him in knowledge and piety.

Lastly, it may be demanded how this can be the summe of the Law and the Prophets, to doe as we would be done to with reason; seeing we are further bound by the Law to performe duties of love and obedience to God. Answ. This rule is the summe of all: for our love to God must be shewed in the practice of the duties of love, justice and mercy towards men: for God is invisible, and it pleaseth him to make himselfe seene in our visible neighbour, requiring that our love to himselfe should be shewed in the workes of mercy, justice, and goodnesse towards men. Men may flatter themselves, and say they love God, but if it bee not shewed in the love of their neighbours, they deceive themselves, there is no love of God in them. And therefore they are deceived that thinke all is well with them, when they come to Church, and receive the Sacraments: for religion stands not in the outward service of God, unlesse it be shewed forth in the duties of justice, love, and mercy, commanded in the second Table: see Jam. 1. 27. Pure religion and undefiled before God, is to visit the fatherlesse and widdowes in their adversity, and to keepe himselfe unspotted of the world.

v. 13 Enter in at the strait gate: for it is the wide gate, and broad way that leadeth to destruction: and many there be which goe in thereat.

Tenth part of Christs Sermon.

These two verses, being the fifth part of this chapter, containe the tenth point of Doctrine in this Sermon of our Saviour Christ: wherein hee exhorteth his hearers and us all effectually, to an earnest care in seeking everlasting life: and withall admonisheth us in the matter of salvation, not to follow the multitude, because most men goe the broad way to destruction.

The words containe two parts. A Commandement, Enter in at the strait gate: and a reason in the words following, for it is the wide gate. Yet for our further edification and instruction, on, I will consider and handle five points, which are here set downe by our Saviour Christ: I. that there be two contrary cities or kingdomes, in one of which every man and woman must abide for ever after this life: and further, that these afford unto men a contrary estate, the one life, the other death and destruction. II. That there are two distinct wayes to these two cities or kingdomes: one leading to destruction; the other leading unto life. III. The condition and property of these two wayes: The way of life is strait and narrow: The way of destruction is broad and wide, and that from the beginning to the end. IV. What men doe in these waies; namely, that many walke in the broad way, and few can finde the strait and narrow way. V. What men ought to doe touching these wayes; namely, passe by the broad way, and enter into and walke in the strait way: which is the scope of Christs exhortation and instruction in this place. Of these in order.

Two distinct places for mens final abode.

For the first: These two cities are two distinct places ordained of God, for the finall and eternall abode of all mankind after this life, according to that which every man hath done in his body. These are termed diversly in Scripture; one, the kingdome of heaven: the other, utter darkenesse, in the chapter following, ver. 11, 12. The one, Abrahams bosome: the other, hell fire. Luk. 16. 23. and in the 21. and 22. Chapters of the Revelation they are notably described, the one is called the city of God; the other, the burning lake: and usually the one is called heaven, the other hell. And as these are distinct places, so they afford unto men two distinct estates: The one life, the other destruction; as it is said, the narrow way leads to life: the broad way to destruction. By life here is meant, a blessed state of man in which he lives in fellowship with God, and hath his heart filled with the unspeakable love and goodnesse of God, and with endlesse joy from Gods immediate presence. And this indeed is the onely true life: our naturall life is but a shadow thereof. By perdition or destruction we are to understand a cursed state of man, in which hee is without all fellowship with God in respect of his favour, mercy, and love; and yet in body, soule, and conscience doth apprehend the bitternesse of Gods wrath and furie for evermore: having no fellowship save onely with the devill and his angels, and damned soules. This is no life, but eternall death, though soule and body live together eternally.

Mens different estate in heaven and hell.

No purgatory.

Vses. I. In that Christ doth here mention but two cities or places, to the one whereof every man must resort after death; wee may gather thereby, that there is no middle place or condition betweene life and destruction. A third place or state the Scripture knoweth not, and therefore there is no place of purging the soules of men after this life, which the Papists call Purgatorie: If there had, the word of God would have revealed it. But the Papists say, it is the upper part of hell neere to the hell of the damned; I answer, If that were so, then there is no salvation for them that are in purgatory; for there is no returning out of hell to heaven, by reason of the great gulfe betweene them, Lu. 16. 26. and they that are in any part of hell are but damned persons.

De Purm. dep. rig. l. 2. c. 6.

Strive to escape hell and gaine heaven.

II. Vse. If there be but two places, and in them two estates only according to that which men have done here on earth, either good or evill; then we must be admonished with all care and conscience to use all good meanes, whereby we may escape the one, and attaine to the other; to be freed from destruction, and to gaine salvation. In the massacre and sacking of a city, in which some are slaine, and some escape alive, every one hath care to shift for himselfe, to save his temporall life: much more then ought wee to provide for eternall life, seeing at the last day wherein the whole world shall be ransacked, every one must undergoe either salvation or destruction: if we had our deserving, we should be confounded every moment; but God in mercy grants unto us length of dayes for this very end, that we should seeke Gods kingdome and life everlasting: and therefore this must be our principall care and study, that wee may be always ready, whensoever we shall be called hence; and the rather, because wee know not when Christ will call us hence, Luk. 12. 40. Bee yee also prepared therefore, for the Sonne of man will come at an houre when yee thinke not.

Two wayes.

III. Point. As there be two diverse estates in two distinct places; so there be two severall wayes that lead thereunto: the one, the way of life, v. 14. the other, the way to destruction, v. 13. First, I will speake of the way of life, and thereby shall see what the way of destruction is; in which regard it stands us all in hand to know what is the way of life. Now none hath better noted it out unto us, than the Prophet Habakuk, cha. 2. v. 4. in these words, But the just shall live by faith: in which place he foretels the afflictions of the Jewes by the Chaldeans: whereupon the Jewes might say, whereby then shall wee stay our selves? he answers, by faith: The just man lives, that is, leadeth his life by faith. Some give this meaning to the Prophet, The just by faith shall have life everlasting: but the Apostle expounderh it otherwise, Gal. 2. 11. So then to walke in the way of life, is to lead our lives by faith in Christ: as Heb. 10. 39.

1. The way of life.

Here two points must be considered: I. What faith that is by which men must live in this world: namely, true justifying faith, the very same by which they are to be saved in the day of the Lord. II. We live by faith (saith Paul) in the Sonne of God, who hath loved me, & given himselfe for me, Gal. 2. 20. where he doth notably expound this text, shewing, that faith in Christ our Redeemer, is that faith whereby we must lead our lives in this world: for they which will be saved by their faith, must first live by their faith: he that believes well, lives well: and that faith will never save the soule, that cannot guide and order the life: many men think it is sufficient to salvation to believe the promise of life; but faith hath a further worke in them that it giveth: for it also causeth them to live thereby. Now a man lives by faith, when hee rests himselfe on God, and suffers himselfe wholly to be led and guided by Gods written word. Example hereof we have in Abraham, Hebr. 11.8. who by faith forsake his owne country, and at Gods Commandement went he knew not whither. More particularly; a Christian mans life is twofold: spirituall, and temporall: both which he must live in this world, for heavenly life beginnes before wee die: and both these kinds of life on earth are preserved by faith. The spirituall life of a Christian is that whereby he hath true fellowship with God: this beginnes in this life; and it stands in reconciliation with God, wherein a man is accepted to the right of eternall life. This reconciliation is life, and it is held by faith: and faith onely in Gods word and promise in Christ alone, is it that makes us lay hold of, receive, and keepe this our reconciliation. Wee must give God this honour, to believe his promise of remission of sinnes, and life everlasting in Christ; and upon our faith, God vouchsafeth unto us remition of sinnes, and life everlasting. Here some may aske, whether every thing that wee believe be made ours, as riches, honour, and such like? Ans. No: but onely that which God promiseth in the Evangelicall covenant of life everlasting, upon our faith. Here also some will say, If this be all, I am well, for I believe Gods promise. But herein many deceive themselves, believing the promise fully. True faith is this: men must seeke the pardon of their sinnes, and in seeking believe it: but they that believe without using the means deceive themselves, seeing God hath joyned his promise to the meanes. Wee offend God deadly, and therefore must daily renue our repentance, and by faith believe the pardon of our daily sinnes.

Further, this spirituall life hath his fruits. It is no dead life; for hee that hath remission of sinnes, lives in Christ, and this life shewes it selfe in the fruits of good workes: as mercie, love, goodnesse: and in every good worke wee must live by faith, for to the doing of any good worke, there is a double faith required: first, a generall faith, whereby wee are perswaded that the worke is allowed and required of God: secondly, a speciall faith, whereby we are perswaded, that the particular worke done is accepted of God. In the acceptation of the worke, God first accepteth the person in Christ, and then the worke in and for the person. Yea, wee are moved to every good worke by faith: for it brings to minde Gods love, mercy, and goodnesse to us: and is moveth us to performe the like duties of love and mercy towards our brethren.

Thirdly, spirituall life is exercised in suffering and undergoing (more or less) by every child of God hath many and grievous assaults, so as the righteous shall scarce be saved: and to all and every one of these, wee must live by faith, and thereby rely on Christ, not on our selves. Example hereof wee have in Christ upon the Crosse, who even then when he felt the wrath of God upon him, and his indignation against him, did yet cry unto him as to his God: My God, my God: and Job in grievous temptation and affliction, said unto the Lord, Lo, though he slay me, yet will I trust in him, Job 13.15. and so must we even then lay hold on Gods mercy, when we feele no comfort in our selves: so did David, when hee felt no comfort, yet hee did cleave to God in his meditation, Psal. 77.7,8, 10,11. In disputations in Schooles, it is a fault to sticke alwaies to the conclusion: yet in this combat with Satan it is no fault, but a good practice of true faith.

Temporall life standes in the practice of some particular calling: and some men be of one calling, some of another; and every one hath, or ought to have for e one lawfull calling or other wherein to lead his temporall life. Now the workes of a mans particular calling, they must be practised by faith, even the duties of the basest calling that is, as of the shepherd. And that a man may doe the duties of his calling in faith, he must first have a grounded conscience that his worke is allowed of God, and accordingly he must doe his worke. Againe, every man in his calling must have a care of his owne life, and of those that belong unto him, to provide for them things necessary, as meat, drinke, and cloathing: and this care must be ruled by faith, that is, a man must use the lawfull meanes to get these things, and yet so as he leave the issue and event unto Gods blessing: wee may provide for necessaries, but wee must goe no further, but use the lawfull ordinary meanes, and sanctifie them by prayer, leaving the blessing unto God, Cast thy workes on God, saith Salomon, Prov. 16.3. and S. Peter bids us cast all our care on God, 1 Pet. 5.7. Lastly, every calling hath his crosses: no life is so quiet that it wanteth all vexations. Now when crosses come upon any man in his calling, then must he beare the same by faith: he must rest on Gods word, and quiet his mind with the good will and pleasure of God. He that believeth (saith the Prophet) shall not make haste, Isa. 28.16. that is, he shall not be carried headlong with a desire to satisfie his owne pleasure and appetite, either in seeking to be freed from evill, or to enjoy some blessing, but shall content himselfe with the good pleasure of God. And thus wee see what it is to live by faith, which is the right way to life eternall.

Vses. I. This sheweth, that a great number are farre wide, which thinke that if they live uprightly among men, then all is well: this honest honest life is verie commendable among men, but it is not sufficient to salvation. It is but a worke of nature, for a man by naturall reason may lead a civill upright life, as many have done among the heathen: but the life that must bring a man to Heaven, must be lead by faith: and therefore they that would walke the way to life, must walke by faith, not by reason only.

II. This also sheweth that they are deceived which live by sense, measuring Gods love and hatred by outward blessings and crosses; and therefore when God takes away the meanes, they will no longer trust on him: but we count it a point of dishonestie, not to trust our honest friend without a pawne: much more than is it a dishonour to God, when we will not relie upon him, without outward pledges of his favour: and therfore we must relie on God when all meanes faile: for no man knoweth love or hatred by all that is before him, Eccles. 9.1.

III. Many that professe religion are deceived, that measure their grace and goodnesse in religion, by feeling in their owne hearts: but wee must not relie thereon, for true faith may be in the heart without inward sense: againe, the Devill may put false comforts many times into a mans heart: the bad man receives the Word with joy, Luk. 8.13. looke to thy faith by Christs word, and thereby judge thy estate, and rest not in thine inward feeling.

IIII. This teacheth us to acquaint our selves with all the commandements of God that be in the Bible; and with all the promises that concerne the pardon of sinnes and life everlasting: for without this knowledge there can be no faith: and therefore wee must abandon all ignorance of these things, and instruct our selves and those that belong unto us in the word of God, that they and wee may live by faith.

V. These are happie dayes of peace and of many temporall blessings wherein we now live: but we must not live alwayes in this peace. God hath begun to set his judgements among us, and if wee doe not repent, wee must looke for further and more grievous judgements, as the losse of his Word, and a sword upon our selves, our friends, and children: what if the dayes come, how must we then live? namely, by faith in the word and promise of God: lay hold on this, and though thou lose friends, goods, and thine owne temporall life, yet hold fast thy spirituall life; by faith cleave unto Christ, and then in the middest of swords and weapons of death, thou shalt walke the way to eternall life. And thus much of the way of life.

The second way is the way to destruction: which is called the way of sinners and of the ungodly, Psal. 1.1,6. This way hath many paths, which tend all to one end, and meet in the same period; and they may all bee reduced to these three heads: I. the way of nature: II. the way of false faith: III. the way of faith and nature joyned both together.

The way of nature is when men live only by the light of nature: of this S. Paul speaks, Act. 14.16. God suffered all the Gentiles to walke in their owne wayes; wherein they were void of God in Christ, and so not under mercie. The way of false faith is somewhat more than the way of nature; but yet it leadeth to destruction, because their faith is false and profession vaine; and this is the way of false religion, whereof there be these three maine and principall at this day, to which all other may be referred: The religion of the Turkes, of the Iewes, and of the Papists. The Turkes in their religion acknowledge Christ for a great Prophet, but not to be God, neither doe they looke for any salvation by him. The Iewes in their religion acknowledge but one God, yet out of Christ: they acknowledge not his incarnation past, but expect it yet to come: they wait for an earthly kingdome: they hold the old Testament only and deny the new. Now both these refuting Christ, have not the Father, and even have no salvation in their religion. The Papists acknowledge much truth formally, but then againe they overturne it: for they hold that generall faith, which the Devils may have: but for that speciall justifying faith, whereby a man is to believe his owne salvation, the remission of his sins, and his owne reconciliation with God in Christ, that they renounce. Again, the Christ of the Papist is no true Christ: for they make him but halfe a Saviour, or not so much; even only an instrument to make men Saviours of themselves; for by his grace they doe worke properly meritorious, and fully worthy of eternall life. They rob him also of his manhood, saying, it is everie where in his quantitie, where matte is said: for they have the selfe same body that was crucified. Also they deny his offices: I. his Kingly office: for they part stakes with him, and give it to the Pope, in saying that he hath power to make lawes which binde the conscience, as Gods Lawes doe. II. his priesthood, because everie Masse-Priest offers Christ anew: and they make Saints intercessours, especially the Virgin Marie. III. his prophetical office, saying the Scriptures are imperfect without tradition; uncertaine without the sense and meaning of the Church: the originall copies are corrupted; and the Church is above them in authoritie.

The third way is the way of faith and nature together: this is the common way wherein most Protestants walke: for we hold the right faith in word; our profession and judgement is right: but yet our lives are lead according to nature. And these three parts are all in the broad way to destruction. And therefore as wee hold true doctrine, and right faith in word, so let us lead our lives accordingly, and resistie the same by our workes, especially in the times of dearth when God layes his hand on the poore, and thereby ties the hearts of the rich.

C. The way of faith and nature.

1. The way of life is narrow.

Matth. 7. verse. 13, 14.

destruction is broad and wide. For the first: The way of life is narrow and straite, from the first entrance to the last passage: why so? First, because the way of life is only one single path: but the way of death is manifold, containing sundrie paths. Secondly, they that walke in the way of life, containe themselves within the bonds and lists of Gods word: for the words of the wise are as nailes and pales to keepe us in, Eccles. 12. 11. Thirdly, in the way to life there are many afflictions and offences, as Acts 14. 22. Through manifold afflictions we must enter into the kingdome of Heaven: and Hos. 2. 6. I will stop thy way with thornes: meaning, that by sharpe afflictions hee would hedge them in the way of obedience. But some may say, why then doth Christ say, his yoke is light, Matth. 11. 30. and S. John, his commandements are not grievous, 1 Joh. 5. 2. and David, I will walke at large or liberie, Psal. 119. 45. I answer: The way is straite and narrow in respect of our nature: but yet broad and easie by his assisting grace and helpe. Heere then we see what course we must take if we meane to come unto Christ, namely, we must tread in this narrow way, and become like unto him in suffering afflictions: for this way he went here on earth, and so entred into his glorie.

The propertie of the way of death is breadth. Now the way of death is broad: first, because the way of sinning is manifold; even as truth is only one, and error manifold. Secondly, they that walk in this way breake out of the bounds of Gods word, and doe not containe themselves therein. Thirdly, herein they meet with few crosses and impediments: as David saith, They are not in trouble as other men: they prosper alway and increase in riches, Psal. 73. 5, &c. 12. And the reason is, because they seeke by all meanes to satisfie their hearts desire, whether by right or wrong: saying with the foole in the Gospell, Soule, soule, take thy rest, live at ease. Luk. 12. 19.

IV. Point. What men doe in these wayes: namely, the greatest part of men walke in the broad way, but few in the narrow way.

Hence we learne sundrie instructions. I. We must not be offended or discouraged when wee see most men live either in a false religion, or in grosse impietie: for the greatest part walke in the broad way. II. Wee must not follow the multitude in matters of religion, but those that follow Christ, the Patriarks, Prophets, and Apostles: for the most goe wide, and the fewest hold the right way of life. III. That universalitie is no marke of a true Church: for the true Church is in the strait way, but therein the smallest number walke. IV. Universall grace is a device of man: for few finde the way of life, and therefore it is laid and unknowen. If it be said, that all might finde it if they would: I answer, they cannot: for the word finding, doth presuppose a seeking: as if Christ had said, though many give themselves to seeke the way of life, yet few they bee that finde it. The like phrase wee have, Matth. 24. 38. In the dayes of Noah they ate and dranke; that is, they gave themselves to eating and drinking. Againe, S. Luke hath it thus, and shall not bee able to finde it: Why then doe not the most finde the way to life? Is it because they seeke it not? No verily: S. Luke denies that: Why then is the way hid to the most, and revealed to few? then Christ teacheth us, because it so pleaseth God, Matth. 11. 25, 26.

V. Point. What must we doe in regard of these two wayes? we must enter, yea, (as S. Luke hath it) strive to enter in at the strait way: and to passe by the broad way. This is the commandement of our Saviour Christ: wherein three things are imployed us: first, that wee must come into this strait way, and chiefly the broad way: secondly, wee must not be discouraged for the straitnesse of the way: and thirdly, wee must strive to enter in.

The first is a necessarie dutie in these times: for wee are like unto Mariners which passe by many pleasant countries, and stately buildings, and doe only behold them afarre off, but not enter into them, nor land upon them. We must therefore cease only to talke of the way of life, and beginne to walke in it. If any shall aske, how we may come to walke in this way: I answer, read Jer. 6. 16. see there a notable lesson: First, we must inquire what is the old way, for the old way is the right way. But where shall we learne out the old way? Answ. In the holy Bible: there shall wee see the way that the Patriarks, Prophets, and Apostles went. Secondly, having found the right way, wee must labour to know all the turnings of it. We must see what things we are to believe and doe, having the mysterie of faith in a good conscience, 1 Tim. 3. 9. Thirdly, we must walke in this way, Jer. 6. 16. for it is not sufficient to know the will of God, and to make profession of religion, but wee must put in practise the things which wee know. And lastly, we must be circumspect to keepe our selves in the right way: Hag. 1. 5. Set your hearts on your wayes: Psal. 119. 59. I considered my wayes, and turned my feet into thy testimonies.

The second charge in this Commandement is, that when we walke in the way to life, the straitnesse of the way must not discourage us from going forward therein. This is the principall point intended by our Saviour Christ in this commandement, even to arme us with courage and perseverance against afflictions, crosses, and temptations, which might dismay and daunt us in this way. And in this charge we are taught sundrie weightie duties to bee practised in the profession of Christs true religion.

I. Dutie. That we are not to give to our selves the libertie of heart which nature desireth in all of us; but we must restraine our selves thereof, and bring our mindes, our thoughts, affections, our wills, speeches, and actions into the straits of the word of God. This restraint of our naturall desire is two-fold: by the Law, and by the Gospell. In the Law every commandement restreth his particular restraint, as wee shall see in their order.

How the Law restraines our naturall desires in the first Commandement.

The first Commandement concernes the having of the true God for our God. By nature we take libertie to our selves to conceive of God at our owne pleasure: for commonly men conceive of God out of the Trinity, and worship the persons one without another: the Jew, the Turke, and all the heathen will not be restrained of this liberty: but the people of God who submit themselves to his word, they by this law are restrained of this naturall desire, and are taught to chuse and have to themselves the true God for their God; and to conceive aright of this God; namely, that hee is one in essence and three in person, and that the persons must be worshipped in the unity of the godhead: for as they are one in nature, so we must unite them in one and the same worship. Againe, by nature wee take liberty to our selves to forget the true God, and in our owne hearts doe set up a false god unto our selves: some make riches their God, some honours, some pleasures: for looke whereon a man bestowes his heart and his affections, as his love, his feare, and confidence, that he makes his god: and hence it comes that some in judgement hold the true God, and yet have a false god unto themselves in their hearts: but the first Commandement restrains us of this liberty also: and it injoynes us to bestow our whole heart, and all our affections on the true God: loving, fearing, and trusting in him above all. Thirdly, our nature is to exalt our selves and to ascribe something unto our selves, esteeming the good things that be in us, as of our selves, and as though they were our owne: whereby we take to our selves something that is proper to God, becomming like to the prodigall child which would have his portion to himselfe severed from his father. With this naturall pride was David puffed up, when he numbred the people. But the first Commandement restraines us of this also, prescribing unto us the duty of inward adoration; which wee performe, first, when we give unto him all the honour that we can, esteeming our selves but dust and ashes, and ascribing unto him all the good that is in us, as from him: secondly, when we subject our selves unto him wholly as to our Creator, and doe submit our hearts, will, and conscience to his holy word: and these be the strait wayes which this commandement prescribes us.

Restraints in the second Commandement.

The second Commandement concernes Gods outward worship: and it puts unto us many restraints. Our nature desires to conceive of God in some forme, and to represent him in some image; but the Lord is a Spirit, and this Commandement injoynes us to worship him in Spirit and truth, and to conceive of him in his workes and properties, restraining our naturall desires of conceiving and representing God. Secondly, it is our nature to performe outward worship unto God only, but for any further thing we would take libertie to our selves; we would give him only the outward bodily worship, as come to Church, heare the Word, pray outwardly, and receive the Sacraments: but the Lord in this commandement gives us charge, that with as great care and conscience, wee would give unto him the inward worship of the heart; for God must bee served with the whole man, our love, and feare, and trust in God, must bee conformable to our outward worship. Further, every man almost can bee content to professe religion, and to performe so much as the Lawes of his countrey require for the service of God; but yet they would take libertie in their callings, to live as they list: but Gods commandement restraines this desire also. Wee must hold religion not only in the Church, but also shew the same in our lives and conversations; and therefore is the second Table joyned with the first, to teach us that we must performe dutie to God in the service of man.

Restraints in the third Commandement.

The third commandement concernes the holy use of the holy things of God, especially of his Word and Sacraments. Now for the outward worke of hearing the Word, and receiving the Sacraments, we are content to performe them; but we would have God thinke himselfe satisfied with the worke done. But this commandement restraines us of this desire, injoyning us not only to use his holy things, but also in an holy manner; that is, with repenting and believing hearts: for they are not holy to us, unlesse wee use them in and by faith and repentance. Againe, wee take libertie to use Gods name in oathes, and specially in vowes, as in baptisme, which wee renue when wee come to the Lords Table: but herein wee ordinarily abuse this his holy name, not having like care to make good our vowes unto God, as we have to make them.

Restraines in the fourth Commandement.

The fourth Commandement concernes the time of God: worship: we our selves would have all times in our owne disposing, and we thinke it hard to bee restrained of any time; but this Commandement restraines us of this desire, binding us in conscience to give one day in seven to the honour of God, in his publike and solemne worship.

Restraines in the fifth Commandement.

The fifth Commandement concernes the giving of honour and reverence to Superiours: and it restraines us of our naturall desire, which is to seeke for, and to take honour unto our selves alone: for this injoyneth us to give honour one to another, especially to them to whom it belongs, as to all superiours in authoritie, in gifts, or age: let this be your honour, saith Paul, to give honour to whom it belongs, Rom. 13. 7.

Restraints in the fifth Commandement.

The sixth Commandement concerneth murther; and it restraineth our naturall desire, which is, upon small occasion, to conceive malice and to beare grudging against our brother, forbidding ding all thoughts, words, deeds, and geſtures, A which tend to the impairing or deſtroying of our neighbours life and perſon.

Matth.7. verſ.13,14.

The ſeventh Commandement concerneth chaſtitie: and it reſtraines mans nature, which deſires to take libertie in uncleannesſe and fornication both of heart and life: and it binds us to abſtaine from all ſpeech, action, or geſture, which tends to the hindrance of our owne, or of our neighbours chaſtitie: for God is holy and pure, and ſo ought our bodies and minds to be, which are temples of his bleſſed Spirit.

The eighth Commandement concerneth our neighbours goods: and it reſtraines our corrupt nature, which deſires to have libertie by all meanes good and bad to inrich our ſelves. And it injoyneth us both in will and word, and in B trafficke alſo, to ſeeke the common good; and the good of thoſe with whom we live. Againe, this alſo reſtraines our nats all deſire of abundance, injoyning us to ſeeke only for neceſſaries, as food and rayment: for we may not ſeeke to be rich, yet if God give us more than things neceſſarie in the labours of our calling, then wee are to bleſſe God for them, and to uſe them to his glorie: this is a ſtrait way to the worldly man, but it muſt ſtand, and we muſt walke in it, if we would enter into life.

The ninth Commandement concernes our neighbours good name: and it reſtraines us of our naturall deſire, which is to conceive and ſpeake unto others, as alſo to receive from others, evill report of our neighbour: and on the contrarie it injoynes us, by all good meanes to C ſeeke to preſerve our neighbours good name and credit.

The tenth Commandement is touching luſt. When as we hurt no man in word or deed, then wee take it for granted, that wee may thinke what we will, no lawes reſtraine thought; that we hold to be free. But this Commandement reſtraines the verie firſt motions of our hearts, which tend to hurt our brothers life, chaſtitie, goods, or good name, though they never come into practice, yea, though we never give conſent of will thereto. And theſe are the reſtraints of the Law, whereto we muſt conforme our ſelves, if we would enter into life.

Now follow the reſtraints of the Goſpell, D which is a part of Gods word touching remiſſion of ſins and ſalvation. By nature wee deſire to ſtand upright and righteous before God by ſome good thing in our ſelves: as the rich man in the Goſpell, hee demands of Chriſt, What good thing ſhall I doe to be ſaved? Againe, it is our nature not to look to be ſaved by any thing out of our ſelves; if we have nothing elſe, our good meaning and good hope muſt ſave us: but the Goſpell reſtraines us of theſe deſires, and injoyneth us to renounce our ſelves in the matter of ſalvation, and all that is in us: and to depend on a righteouſneſſe out of our ſelves in the perſon of Chriſt, which is his obedience and ſuffering. Againe, wee naturally deſire to enjoy Gods mercie by ſenſe and feeling; but the Goſpell reſtraines us of this kinde of aſſurance, which comes by ſenſe and feeling, and injoynes us to hold and keepe Gods mercie by beleeving only, both in life and death, though wee have no ſenſe thereof at all.

Further, the Goſpell renues the Law for the manner of loving: for the Morall Law required that we ſhould love another as wee doe our ſelves, but the Goſpell requires us to love one another as Chriſt loved us; which is a greater meaſure of love than the Law requires. For Chriſt loved us more than himſelfe; for he gave himſelfe for us: and ſo ought wee to love even our enemies. And thus we ſee how the Goſpell alſo reſtraines us from following our owne naturall deſiers, and injoyneth us to walke in the narrow way to life: whereto, as alſo to the reſtraints of the Law, wee muſt apply our ſelves, our thoughts, words, and deeds: ſo doing wee walke in the ſtrait way that leadeth unto life: but if we any way exempt our ſelves according to our naturall deſire from any of theſe reſtraints, wee then walke in the broad way that leadeth to deſtruction.

II. Duie. Seeing we muſt be content with the ſtraitneſſe of the way, we learne, that when God layes any croſſes or afflictions upon us, we muſt not repine or grudge, but beare the ſame with patience, and ſuffer God to breake us of our owne wills, reſting contented in our ſelves with the will of God alone: for this is, grace, and a ſure teſtimony that we walke in the ſtrait way to life.

III. Duie. In the caſe of confeſſion and profeſſion of true religion, when wee be called thereto, we muſt bee content to forſake goods, friends, yea, and life it ſelfe, rather than by enjoying them ſuffer our ſelves to bee driven out of this ſtrait way to life: My life (ſaith Paul) is not deare unto mee, ſo that I may fulfill my courſe with joy, Acts 20. 24.

Laſtly, whoſoever is puffed up with the pride of his owne heart, is too ſtately to ſtoope under the ſtrait doore that leadeth to the way of life: he therefore that would walke in this ſtrait way, muſt caſt away all pride of heart, and humble himſelfe for his owne ſins, making himſelfe nothing in himſelfe: Mat.18.3,4. Except you be converted and become as little children, (who are not proud and hawty) ye cannot enter into the kingdome of heaven: But he that humbleth himſelfe as this little childe, the ſame is the greateſt in the kingdome of heaven.

The third charge given us by our Saviour Chriſt concerning the ſtrait way of life, is noted by Saint Luke; that wee muſt ſtrive to enter into it. From whence wee are taught, that our principall care muſt bee above all things to come into the way of life everlaſting: ſo much the word ſtriving imports. It is ſaid, that when John firſt preached, the kingdome of heaven ſuffered violence, and the violent tooke it by force: that is, there was ſuch forwardneſſe neſſe and zeale in them that heard John preach, A to procure to themſelves the kingdome of Heaven, that they ſtrove moſt earneſtly to get in. David ſware unto the Lord, and vowed a vow unto the mightie God of Iacob, that he would not enter into the Tabernacle of his houſe, nor come upon his bed, nor ſuffer his eyes to ſleepe, till hee had found a place for Gods Arke: where hee with the reſt of his people might come and pray vnto the Lord, and receive anſwer from him againe. Now looke what zeale was in them that heard John, and what care was in David for the outward place of Gods worſhip, the like muſt bee in everie one of us for the obtaining of reconciliation and life everlaſting.

Pſal 132 2.3.4.5.

Vſes. I. Hereby many that live in the Church of God may juſtly be reproved: for a number there be that though they may partake of the Word and Sacraments, yet are moſt negligent of their ſalvation, uſing no meanes to obtaine reconciliation with God, and to come by life everlaſting: and this they do profeſſe, that they will leave all to God, relying wholly on his mercie without uſing any meanes on their parts to attaine thereto. But theſe men ſinne moſt grievouſly, and are their owne deadly enemies: for they ought to conſider this Commandement, which condemneth their ſecuritie, and ſtraitly injoynes everie one, to ſtrive to come into the ſtrait way, and to walke therein.

And becauſe this duie is ſo neceſſarie, I will uſe ſome reaſons to perſwade them hereto.

I. Conſider this, when the Philiſtims were aſſembled, and had Sampſon in the midſt among them to make them ſport, if they had knowen what hee was about to doe, when hee leaned to the pillars of the houſe where they ſate, they would have preaſed to the doores and windowes, and there have ſtriven to have got out, becauſe of the imminent danger that was unto their bodily lives: well, all thoſe perſons that are cold in their profeſſion, and careleſſe of religion, they have the wrath of God hanging over their heads; and while they walke thus diſſolutely in the broad way, their condemnation ſleepeth not, but makes poſt-haſte upon them: and if they continue and goe forward in this careleſſe courſe, they ſhall as certainely periſh in Gods wrath, as the Philiſtims did by the hand of Sampſon: and therefore as they deſire to ſcape damnation, ſo let them bee carefull to caſt off this damnable ſecuritie.

C

II. Reaſon. If an Angell from Heaven ſhould come and aſſure us from God, that life everlaſting did belong unto us; oh wee would count it a bleſſed meſſage: well, looke when we turne from the broad way, and walke in the ſtrait way of life, wee have as good ſecuritie of our ſalvation, as if an Angell from Heaven ſhould certifie us thereof: for true repentance is an infallible note of a childe of God, to whom belongs the kingdome of Heaven. The conſideration whereof ought to ſtirre up all careleſſe perſons to returne from their evill wayes, and to ſtrive to come into this ſtrait way, and to walke therein unto the end.

And yet to induce them further to this dutie, I will ſeeke to take from them thoſe excuſes which they make to themſelves: Firſt, they ſay, God is mercifull; and therefore they will relie theron, and take no further care for their ſoules. Anſ. God indeed is mercifull: but his mercie is only found of them that ſtrive to enter in at the ſtrait gate; as for thoſe that walke in the broad way, it belongs not to them: Deut. 26.19, 20. And if the righteous ſcarcely be ſaved, where ſhall the ungodly appeare, 1 Pet.4.18. Secondly, they ſay, at leaſt in heart, that it is the eaſieſt matter in the world to come by life everlaſting: if they can call on God when they are dying, all is well: and therefore they will not lend their outward eares to heare, nor apply their minides to conceive and learne that which they may doe by nature: and if they doe come to the congregation, yet it is for cuſtome or for feare of puniſhment, not for conſcience. But theſe men deceive themſelves: they conſider not what Peter ſaith, that the righteous ſhall hardly be ſaved: and what S. Luke addeth to this exhortation of Chriſt, that Many ſhall ſeeke to enter into the doore of life, and ſhall not be able; becauſe they neglected the time of grace, and uſed not good meanes in due ſeaſon. Thirdly, they make this common objection, that either they are elect or reprobate: if they be elect, then let them live as they liſt, they ſhall be ſaved: but if God have eternally rejected them, though they live never ſo religiouſly, yet they ſhall bee condemned: and many deceive themſelves with this reaſon. But they muſt know, that they judge amiſſe of Gods decree, and the wickedneſſe of this reaſon may appeare by the like: God hath decreed the certaine terme of everie mans life in this world, as well as his future eſtate after this life. Now if any man hereupon ſhould reaſon thus; If God have decreed that I ſhall live longer, then I ſhall ſurely live: if he have decreed that I ſhall live no longer, then I ſhall ſurely die, for Gods decree muſt ſtand; and therefore I will neither eat, nor drinke, nor ſleepe, nor uſe meanes to preſerve my life: if any ſhould thus doe upon this ground, would not all men judge him to be a murtherer of himſelfe? And ſurely, he is no leſſe a murtherer of his ſoule, that upon Gods predeſtination, will take occaſion of libertie, to live as he liſt; for Gods decree of the end includes the ordinarie meanes that bring thereto. Againe, they are to know, that there is a double will of God; his revealed will made knowen in his Word, and his ſecret or unrevealed will, whereby hee hath determined with himſelfe what ſhall be the eternall eſtate of everie perſon, which is not knowen unto us ordinarily, but by the event. The revealed will of God muſt bee the rule of our obedience, and according to it muſt we frame and ſquare our lives; but his ſecret will wee muſt honour and reverence, not making any rules from it, whereby to frame our lives. Now these persons they leave the written Word, and betake themselves to his unrevealed will, and out of it will make rules how they will live; but herein they sinne greatly, in framing to themselves new rules, leaving his Word, whereby they should order and guide their lives. Thirdly, I answer that this reason hath in it a plaine falshood: for they that are predestinate to life, are chosen to live a godly life, in faith, repentance, and obedience, that they might be like to the image of his Sonne, Rom. 8. 29. And indeed it is impossible, that hee which lives in wickednesse all his life long, and so dies, should bee saved: as also that hee which lives a godly life unto the end, should be condemned: for God hath decreed the meanes, as well as the end.

II. Vse. This charge of Christ, for striving to enter in at the strait doore, correcteth also a second sort of men, which are of the better sort; for commonly the best men are too carelesse in regard of this dutie of striving: and it may bee said of us, as Christ said of the Church of Laodicea, Revel. 3. 15. We are neither hot nor cold: we strive not to goe one before another in holy duties, worldly cares and pleasures doe dull us and make us faint in this dutie of striving. But wee must take heed of securitie, and revive our obedience to this commandement, making this our principall care, to come to life eternall: and all worldly care must come under this; for consider the fearefull judgement that hangs over such as are slacke in this dutie; it is destruction as well as to those that are prophane: because thou art neither hot nor cold, I will spue thee out of my mouth; for seeing that God continues his Gospell unto us, wee ought answerably to increase in knowledge, in faith, and in all obedience. David professeth, that his heart brake in sunder for the desire that hee had to Gods judgements alway, Psal. 119. 20. We commonly spead our wit and strength about worldly affaires, in matter of commoditie and delight: but Davids practice ought to bee a patterne unto us; for our chiefest strife must be to attaine eternall life.

v. 15 Beware of false Prophets, which come to you in sheepes cloathing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves.

From this verse to the twentieth is contained the sixth part of this Chapter, and the eleventh part of Christs Sermon, concerning the discerning and avoiding of false Prophets. And it hath an excellent dependance on the former point of exhortation; for having given commandement to walke in the strait way, now like a carefull guide hee forewarnes us of the principall impediments in this way, which be false Prophets and Seducers, who are like Theeves and Pyrats to hinder us in this way. Touching them three things are here set downe by Christ; First, a commandement, to beware of them: Secondly, the danger that comes by them; they come in sheepes cloathing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves: And thirdly, the meanes whereby to judge and discerne of them; from the 16. verse to the 20.

For the commandement: Beware of false Prophets: that is, of false Teachers. In a false Teacher two things are required; First, hee must maintaine some errour that overturnes true faith and religion: for everie erroneous opinion which a man holds, will not make him a false Prophet, but only a fundamentall errour. Secondly, besides the holding of some damnable errour in his owne heart, a false Prophet must also be a Seducer, such an one as labors to make a faction, withdrawing men from true religion, and from true faith, and perswading them both in private and publikely, to receive his errour. And that both these are required to make a false Prophet, the Scripture is plaine; There shall be false teachers among you (saith S. Peter) which privily shall bring in damnable heresies, 2 Pet. 2. 1. There is the first propertie: and for the second, that they must bee seducers, Christ himselfe teacheth us, Matth. 24. 24. There shall come false Christs, and false Prophets, and shall shew great signes and wonders, so as if it were possible, they should deceive the very elect. And of both these properties joyntly S. Paul speaketh, Rom. 16. 17. I beseech you brethren, marke them diligently which cause division and offences, contrarie to the doctrine which yee have received, and avoid them; for they that are such, serve not the Lord, but their owne bellies, and with faire speech and flattering deceive the hearts of the simple. So then Christs meaning in this commandement is this; You shall bee troubled with many false Prophets, which shall bring in damnable doctrines amongst you, and withall labour to seduce you from the truth, and therefore take heed of them.

And these two notes must wee marke in a false Teacher, to distinguish him from a Schismatike, and from an Hypocrite; for everie false Teacher is a Schismatike, but everie Schismatike is not a false Teacher. If wee would have examples of false Teachers, behold the Iesuites and Romish Priests, for they come among us, and bring false doctrine, with intent to deceive and seduce our people. Such likewise are the Family of love, and such were the Arrians in time past, that denied the Godhead of Christ: as for others that hold private errours, not raising the foundation, nor seeking to seduce others, they may bee Hypocrites, Schismatikes, and bad Christians, but they are not false Prophets. Thus much for the meaning of the commandement.

The Vses. 1. By this cavent Christ would teach us, that the Devill shewes his exceeding great malice against Gods Church & people in these last times of the world; he suborns false Teachers

Matth. 7. vers. 15.

Teachers to bring in damnable doctrine, and moves them to seduce men from true Religion. This thing Christ did plainly foretell, Mat. 24. 24. and Saint Paul chargeth the Elders of Ephesus to take heed unto themselves, and to their flockes: for I know (saith he) that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flocke. Moreover, of your owne selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw Disciples after them. And Saint Peter foretells of the like, as wee heard before, 2 Pet. 2. 1. The truth hereof is verified by experience; for in the first foure hundred yeares after Christ, which were the prime and chiefest times of the Church, there arose fourescore and eight severall kinds of false Prophets, which seduced men from the faith and true Religion, and prevailed greatly. And no doubt in the end of the world, Satan will now shew his malice as great against the Church as hee did then: and therefore Christ bids, Take heed of them. And for this cause, when wee see men that professe Religion, fall away to heresie, and be corrupted, seeking also to seduce others, wee must not much marvell at it, or be thereby discouraged; but rather watch more carefully, for the Devill will sturre up false prophets daily to deceive the Church of God.

II. Instruction. From this commandement wee may also see that wee are feeble, full of weaknesse in the faith, so as a little thing will easily make us forsake our faith and true Religion; if this were not so, what should we need this exhortation? Who was more couragious and forward in profession than Peter? and yet the voice of a silly damosell made him deny his Master, and to forsweare his faith and religion. The Galatians received the Gospell so gladly from Paul at the first, that he professeth, They would have plucked out their owne eyes to have done him good; and yet when he writ unto them, he wonders they were so soone fallen to another Gospell, receiving the doctrine of justification by works. Yea, this he weth, that we have itching eares, whereby we will readily and willingly receive wholsome doctrine for a time, but soone after desire new doctrine againe; like unto the Jewes, who for a while delighted in the light of Iohns ministery, Joh. 5. 35. and to the old Israelites, who liked Manna at the first, but after a while were wearie of it, and complained that their foode dried away, whereupon they lusted after the flesh-pots of Ægypt againe. So wee at the first did willingly receive the Gospel of Christ: but now many wax wearie with it, and beginne to like of Popish doctrine, preferring their corrupt writers, before those that have beene the restorers of true Religion unto us.

III. Instruct. We must labour to maintaine faith and good conscience, and not suffer our lives to bee devoure there-from: by Gods mercy we have had the Gospell of truth among us a long time, and doe still enjoy it; for which we have great cause to praise the name of God, and in this regard we must labor to be constant in holding it, yea, to live and die with it. This is the principall point which Christ here aimes at, and therefore we must carefully learne it: and for this purpose let us remember these particular directions which follow: First, that God having restored unto us true Religion, doth require wee should love it as the chiefest treasure that ever this kingdome enjoyed. Wicked Ahab could not abide [a] Elias and [b] Michaiah Gods Prophets, but hated them; for which cause God left him to himselfe, and suffered him to be seduced by foure hundred false Prophets of Baal, and thereby brought him to destruction. And the Apostle speaking of the kingdome of Antichrist, saith, that God therein gives men up to strong illusions, that they should believe lies, because they have not loved the truth, 2 Thess. 2. 10, 11. Now this love we must shew by our obedience in duties of piety to God, and in the exercise of justice and mercy towards our brethren, else God will translate his Gospell from us, and give it to a Nation that will bring forth the fruits thereof.

A second rule to be observed for the maintaining of true religion is this: that Ministers especially, and those that intend that calling, should highly esteeme, and reverently account of those men and their writings, which by Gods mercy have beene the meanes to restore unto us pure religion: for though they were men subject to error, and in some things might slip, yet they were the worthy instruments of Gods mercy, for the planting of his Gospell among us, which since their time hath beene sealed with the blouds of many Martyrs, in England, Germany, and elsewhere: in which regard, though wee must onely depend on the pure Word of God for certainty of truth, yet we are to give much unto them, and to be followers of them for the substance of Religion, wherein they doe most soundly consent in one truth. This I note, because they begin to be in disgrace with many, and corrupt Popish writers are farre better accounted of.

Thirdly, if any among us doubt of any peine in Religion, let him doe these two things for his resolution, which are the ordinary meanes to know the truth; First, let him search the holy Scriptures diligently, not by private studie onely, but by conference with the godly. Secondly, let him in true humility of heart pray unto God for the illumination of his Spirit, whereby he may in minde rightly conceive of the truth, embrace it by faith in his heart, and honour it by obedience in his life: thus doing constantly, and in sinceritie, he shall be sure to be preserved from error, both finall and fundamentall, and in due time shall know the truth: for the promise is, Aske, and ye shall have: seeke, and ye shall finde, ver. 12. and S. Iames saith, If any man lacke wisdome necessary for his salvation, let him aske of God, using with all other lawfull meanes to come thereby, and it shall be given unto him. Hereto may be added this good help for satisfaction in this case of doubting: namely, to have recourse to the generall confessions of reformed Churches, which may be had in that notable booke, The Harmonie of Confessions: for although private men may erre, as also particular Churches, not onely severally, but joyntly in some things in this world; yet the generall consent of reformed Churches, may be a good direction to the knowledge of the truth, and a good perswasion to constancy therein.

Fourthly, we must keepe a good conscience, if we would preserve the truth and purity of religion; for faith and good conscience goe alwaies together: whereupon S. Paul perswading Timothy to this duty, bids him have faith and a good conscience, which some having put away, and as concerning faith have made shipwracke, 1 Tim. 1. 19. where a good conscience is resembled to a ship, which saileth over the sea of this world, being laden with faith; that is, with true religion, and other spirituall graces needfull to salvation. Now if the ship of our conscience bee crasie and unsound, then is our faith and salvation in great danger: and therefore wee must endevour in all things to have a cleare conscience, both towards God and towards men.

IV. Instruct. This commandement of our Saviour Christ, to beware of false Prophets, doth barre the Church of God, and every member thereof, from conversing with false Prophets, after they bee convicted to bee such. It was Eves fault to admit conference with the Devill in the serpent, and all of us feele the smart thereof at this day. It was Pauls counsell to the Romans, to marke them diligently which caused division and offences among them, contrary to the doctrine which they had learned, and to avoid them: and Saint John plainly forbids this society with them, 2 Epist. ver. 10. Receive not him into thine house, neither bid him God speed, that comes to teach you, and brings not this doctrine: yea, though we (saith Paul) or an Angel from heaven teach you otherwise than that which we have preached unto you, hold him accursed, Galat. 1. 8. In the histories of the Church it is recorded, that S. John would not wash himselfe in the same bath, wherein Cerinthus an heretike was washing himselfe, nor abide under the same roofe, but leaped out, and perswaded others so to doe. And indeed by Eves example we may see the danger of conference with false prophets; for the same evill spirit speakes in them.

Now this shewes, first, that the practice of many students is dangerous, and against this commandement, who take delight in Popish Commentaries and Postils, ascribing to them more learning and judgement, than can bee found in those writers that were the restorers of true religion unto vs: and hence it is, that they labour more in them than in the Scripture it selfe, or in other sound writers thereupon. But if there be any false prophet at this day, it is the Papist, and their writings are dangerous to bee read of those that are not well grounded in the truth; for by reading we have a kind of familiarity with them, and indeed many sucke out of them at unawares, much venome in weightie points of doctrine and religion. We ought rather to doe with them, as the believers of Ephesus did with their books of curious arts; namely, bring them out and burne them, than take such delight in them: albeit this must be granted, it is both lawfull and necessary for the defence of the truth, that men of sound judgement and piety doe labour in them.

Secondly, hence also it may appeare, that it cannot be but a great hinderance to true religion, that heretical books may be publikely sold to any one that will buy them, without due consideration whether the partie have gifts to discerne of truth from falshood: in the Popish Church they are more carefull, they permit not a man to reade an heretikes booke (as they call us Protestants) without leave, and that under a great penaltie, which is severely inflicted upon offenders that way.

V. Instruct. This commandement also sheweth, that it is not lawfull to grant to any man, or to any people, the liberty of their owne conscience in the matters of religion, permitting them to professe what religion they will; for how should false prophets bee avoided, when every man may freely professe what he will in religion? All governours therefore must follow the practice of good King Iosias, who assembled all Iuda, and caused all his people to heare the Word of the Lord, and to stand to that religion which the booke of God made knowne unto them, 2 Chro. 34. 32.

V. Doctr. Wee have from this commandement, an answer to the false charge of the Church of Rome, who accuse us of schisme and apostacy because we separate from their church. But we must know, that the schisme and apostacie is there where the cause of departing is; which indeed is not in us, who doe no more herein but obey this commandement of Christ: the cause is in them who are become false prophets, whom we must avoid.

Here yet two questions may be demanded: I. whether a false Prophet may be put to death, seeing Christ bids onely to beware of them? Answer. Christ here speakes to his Apostles, and to other of his auditors, that were private men, whose duty raught no further; but yet the truth is, that a false prophet being judicially convicted, is to be put to death: the word of God elsewhere is plaine, Levit. 24. 14. there is both a commandement and a practice, Every blasphemer must die. This wicked Iezabel knew well, who under pretence of blasphemy, caused Naboth to bee put to death: and hereupon the Jewes sought to put Christ to death.

Dan. 3. 29.

Yea, Nabuchadnezzar an heathen King, having but a taste of this, that the God of Israel was the true God, made this law, that whosoever blasphemed the God of Israel should die. And it stands with equity; for he that reviles his lawfull Prince must die, and that justly; how much more then ought he to die that blasphemes the living God, who is King of Kings? Now every false prophet is a blasphemer; for his opinions are blasphemies against the truth of God: and therefore hee ought to die. The expresse will of God herein is manifest, Deut. 13. beginning. A Prophet comes and workes miracles, and foewes signes that come to passe, yet if hee thereupon entice the people to idolatry, hee must be slaine: and this is one way whereby the civill Magistrate must helpe the people to avoid a false Prophet.

Why God suffers false Prophets.

II. Quest. Why doth God then suffer such to live in his Church as doe seduce men? Ans. For two causes; First, that such as hold the truth in sincerity may be knowne, 1 Cor. 11. 19. Secondly, for the punishment of the wicked and ungodly, who receive not the love of the truth; to sedvce them by strong illusions, and to cause them to beleeve lies.

2 Thess. 2. 11, 12.

Danger of false Prophets.

The second point; The danger of false Prophets: they come in sheeps clothing, but inwardly are ravening wolves. In these words Christ alludeth to the practice of false prophets in former times, who counterfeited the true Prophets in their attire: for the ancient Prophets were usually cloathed in rough and course attire. Elias in regard of his garments, is called an hairie man, 2 King. 1. 8. and John Baptist had his garment of camels haire, Mar. 3. 4. And the false prophets did counterfeit the true Prophets in their attire for this end; that they might the more easily deceive the people, as is most plaine, Zach. 13. 4. where the Lord saith of false Prophets, That they shall weare a rough garment to deceive: for when they wore such course attire, made either of sheepe skinnes, or sheepes wooll, wherewith the true Prophets were usually cloathed, they sought hereby to perswade the people, that they had the hearts of the true Prophets; when as indeed they were full fraught with damnable errors. Now Christs meaning in this allusion, is to shew that false prophets have plausible pretences for their damnable doctrine, and therefore are the more dangerous. Yet that wee may the better perceive the danger of false Prophets, I will a little stand to describe their cloathing; that is, their pretences of deceit. They may bee reduced to seven heads: the first is allegation of Scripture, which they will as often use as the true Prophet; and hereby they blinde the eyes of many. But the truth is, that in alleaging Scripture, they deprave and change the sense, and either adde to, or detract from the words, following rightly their master Satan, Matth. 4. 6. who alleaged Scripture to Christ, but left out the principall point where to the promise was made: namely, walking in his waies. And thus deale the Papists at this day, sometimes they mangle the Text, and alter the sense, sometime they leave the Scripture, and goe to traditions, to Councels and Fathers. This also is the practice of the Familie of love, and of the Anabaptists, who turne the naturall sense of Scripture into mysticall allegories.

Satan pretences of false Prophets. 1. Allegation of Scripture.

The second cloake or pretence, is the depth of their learning. Revel. 2. 24. the heresie of the Nicolaitans was by themselves called profound learning, but by the holy Ghost, the deepenesse of Satan. So play the Papists at this day, for sundry points of their religion: for they hold, that because the Church in the Apostles time was weake in knowledge, and feeble in faith, therefore the Apostles omitted sundry deepe points, especially concerning the Masse, which yet the Church receiving by tradition, doth now teach plainly and fully. But though they match these doctrines of the Church with the holy Scripture, yet wee need not to trouble our selves therewith; for in the writings of the Prophets and Apostles all things necessarie to salvation are made knowne, and we must not receive any doctrine that cannot be confirmed thence: and therefore in the parable, Luk. 16. 3. Abraham preferres Moses and the Prophets, before visions and revelations from the dead.

2 Deepe learning.

Rhem. on Heb. 5. sect. 1.

The third cloake and pretence. To assume to themselves the persons and titles of most worthy men: 2 Cor. 11. 13. Paul speakes of such deceivers that tooke to them the name of the Apostles of Christ, therein following their master Satan, who can transforme himselfe into an angel of light. See this in the Papists, especially in the Pope, who will be Christs Vicar, Peters successor, and the servant of servants. The doctors call themselves Seraphicall and Angelicall doctors, & the Church of Rome must be the true Church: but all this is but counterfeit deceit, for succession in place only, from Peter, and from Christ himselfe, is no certaine note of truth. The Scribes and Pharisies had their succession from Aaron, appointed by God, and yet Christ bids his Disciples take heed of the leaven of their doctrine, Mat. 16. 12. and calls them The blinde leaders of the blinde. Succession then in true doctrine is the only and sure note of true religion.

Conc. Trid. sess. 4. decr. 1.

3 Goodly titles.

The fourth cloake or pretence is forged and counterfeit humilitie: this Paul notes in false Apostles among the Colossians; First, they would not worship God directly, but in and by the Angels: Secondly, they used much bodily exercise, afflicting their own bodies: and thirdly, their worship was will-worship, devised by themselves. If we would have a lively example hereof, beheld the Romish Priests; they come to God in the mediation of Saints: their whole religion stands in bodily exercises, so as many of their orders are famous for their whippings, and such like trumperie; and their worship of God is will-worship, devised by men.

4 Fained humility. Colos. 2. 18. and 23.

The fift pretence is working miracles: hereby they

they labour to confirme their doctrine, 2 Theſ. 2.9. The comming of Antichriſt that man of ſinne is with ſignes and lying wonders, through Satans working, and of ſuch God forwarnes his people, Deut. 13. that they ſhould not bee drawne to idolatry for a miracle: for either they be falſe miracles, and lying wonders, or if they be true miracles (as God may ſuffer ſuch to be wrought by falſe Prophets, for the plague and puniſhment of the unthankfull world) yet their end is to deceive, and to draw men into errour from the truth. Wee have ordinary experience of this pretence among the Romiſh Prieſts, who by forcerie caſt out Devils, and cure ſtrange diſeaſes, and ſo delude the ſimple: but this muſt not draw us from the truth. A miraculous worke truly done, is not a ſufficient warrant of a doctrine in religion; for true and ſound doctrine may want this confirmation, Joh. 10.41. and falſe doctrine may have it, as Deut. 13.1,2,&c.

The ſixth pretence is faire ſpeeches and bleſſings, pretending the good and ſalvation of thoſe to whom they come: ſee this, Rom. 16.18. With faire ſpeech and flattering (ſaith Paul of falſe Apoſtles) they deceive the hearts of the ſimple: ſo dealt Satan with Eve, he made ſhew that he had ſome good thing to tell her, whereby their ſtate might be bettered, but it turned to theirs and our deſtruction. So did the foure hundred falſe Prophets of Baal, contrary to the true Prophet Michaiah, propheſie good ſucceſſe to Ahab in his war againſt the Aramites; but his hearkning to them coſt him his life. And ſo dealt Hanani with the Jewes, when they were beſieged by the King of Babels armie, contrary to Jeremies counſell: he propheſied peace and ſafety, but it turned both to his owne, and to their deſtruction, Jer. 28.1,2, &c.

The ſeventh pretence is boldneſſe and conſtancy in ſuffering for their opinions: for a man in obſtinacy may live and die for errour, as well as the childe of God may doe for the truth. Conſtancy in opinion is no ſure note whereby to judge a true Prophet; for many Heretikes have ſuffered death conſidently, for the maintenance of their damnable hereſies.

Thus we ſee the pretences of falſe Prophets: now hereto we muſt adde this ſecond point, to wit, that for all this they be but wolves, becauſe by their damnable doctrine they ſeeke to poiſon and corrupt the ſoules of ſimple men. If it bee ſaid, they have no ſuch intent, they themſelves thinke it to be the truth: I anſwer, that may be true in ſome, but this cleareth them not from being wolves: for the Devill that hath deluded them, who is their Lord and maſter, doth by them dangerouſly delude and deceive the ſimple.

The Vſe. I. Conſidering this danger of falſe Prophets, we muſt practiſe Chriſts leſſon, Mat. 10.16. Be ſimple as Doves, that is, be innocent and harmeleſſe, thinking evill of none, neither intending evill or offence to any, in thought, word, or deed: and yet we muſt be wiſe as ſerpents, who have great ſubtilty in ſaving and defending their head from harme: ſo muſt every one that lookes to be ſaved, labour for ſo much wiſdome, whereby hee may preſerve himſelfe from the hurt of falſe Prophets. Now the beginning of this wiſdome is to feare God in his Word, beleeving his promiſes, and obeying his commandements. The true feare of God is not without knowledge; and therefore every one muſt labour to be inſtructed in the principles of Religion: for without knowledge wee cannot feare God, and ſo ſhall want true wiſdome to eſchew falſe Prophets.

We muſt preſerve the purity of the truth.

II. In that the falſe teacher by ſo many faire ſhewes, ſeeke to bring in falſe doctrine, it is every mans dutie in his place to labour to preſerve wholſome doctrine, and the puritie of true religion. This duty is neceſſary: for wee muſt be as forward for the truth, as the enemie is for falſhood, and do as much for God, as they doe for the devill. Againe, no poiſon is more deadly to the body, than falſe doctrine is to the ſoule; therefore ſeeing God hath long bleſſed us with his truth, let us eſteeme it above all outward bleſſings, and by ſeeking to preſerve the purity thereof, ſhew our ſelves thankfull to God for the ſame.

v. 16 Yee ſhall know them by their fruits; doe men gather grapes of thornes, or figs of thiſtles?

This verſe, and thoſe which follow to the 21. containe the third point which Chriſt layeth downe concerning falſe Prophets; namely, the meanes whereby we may diſcerne and judge of them. And herein he obſerveth this order; Firſt, he gives us a notable rule to direct us in judging of falſe Prophets, Ye ſhall know them by their fruits. Secondly, he explaines the ſame rule by a ſimilitude drawne from trees, Doe men gather grapes of thornes, &c.

For the rule, that we may underſtand it the better, wee are to ſearch what is meant by the fruits of falſe prophets. A falſe prophet muſt be conſidered two waies; Firſt, as he is a man taking upon him the name & profeſſion of Chriſt, for ſo falſe prophets uſe to doe: and ſecondly, as he is a falſe prophet: in both theſe reſpects he hath his fruits. As hee is a man taking upon him the profeſſion of Chriſts Religion, he may bring forth many outward duties of externall obedience unto the morall law; but theſe fruits are not here meant: for a falſe prophet may diſſemble much, and goe farre in the outward duties of Religion, ſo as he cannot bee diſcerned by his generall profeſſion, or by the workes of his civill converſation. There bee other fruits which come from him as he is a falſe prophet, and by them muſt he bediſcerned: theſe therefore are to be conſidered. Now we ſhall know them them the better, by ſearching out the fruits of a true Prophet, as hee is a man of God appointed to teach Gods people.

Fruits of a true Prophet.

The fruits of a true Prophet be principally three: I. He teacheth and preacheth in the name of God, by vertue of calling from God, and otherwiſe dares not preſume to teach: Rom. 10.14. How ſhall he teach unleſſe he be ſent: and the Author to the Hebrewes ſaith, Chriſt tooke not the honour of being the high Prieſt and Prophet of the Church to himſelfe, but was called thereto by his Father, Heb. 5.5. And this ſtands with reaſon, for every true Prophet and teacher ſtands in Gods roome, and is Gods Ambaſſadour to deliver his will to his people: which thing none can doe, but he whom God calleth and ſendeth for that purpoſe. Yet the calling of Prophets and teachers by God is diverſe. Some are called by voice from God immediatly, as were Abraham, Moſes, and Samuel: and all the Apoſtles in the new Teſtament by the immediate voice of Chriſt: for Paul was called by the voice of Chriſt from Heaven, Act. 9.4, 5, 6. Againe, others have their calling from God, by the ſpeciall meſſage of ſome Angell, or ſome men. Thus was Aaron called by Moſes; Eliſha by Elias; and Philip by an Angell, to preach to the Eunuch, Act. 8.26. Thirdly, others be called by the inſtinct and motion of Gods Spirit: ſo Act. 8. Philip was by ordinary calling a Deacon, but by extraordinary inſtinct he became an Evangelift, and a Preacher of the Goſpell, for the building of Gods Church. Theſe three kinds of calling men into the miniſtery were extraordinary, and are now ceaſed, and not to be looked for: neither are they to be regarded which ſay they are thus called at this day. A fourth way whereby God now calleth Prophets and Teachers into his Church, is by his Church: for God hath given to particular Churches, a particular miniſteriall power and ſervice, whereby they may deſigne a place unto the Teacher, and alſo make manifeſt that God hath called him. Now this authority is but miniſteriall, to deſigne and manifeſt whom God hath called, for the principall calling is from God: for Act. 20.18. the Elders of the Church of Epheſus, are ſaid to bee made overſeers by the holy Ghoſt: when as they were deſigned thereto by men. And by one of theſe foure waies are all true Prophets and Teachers called.

God calleth Prophets diverſly.

How the reſtorers of Religion from Popery were called.

Here ſome may demand, what kinde of calling had they, who were the firſt reſtorers of true religion unto us in this our age, for they were by profeſſion, either popiſh Prieſts, or Schoole-doctors. I anſwer: their calling was partly ordinary, and partly extraordinary: for in the miniſtery of a Prophet there bee two things; his office, and the uſing or exerciſe of his office. Our firſt Miniſters that reſtored the truth unto us, had but an ordinary office, being either Readers in Schooles, or publike preachers; alſo they had their outward calling thereto from the Church of Rome; ſo as if there be any part of good calling in that Church, then was their calling good: which may ſerve to ſtop the mouthes of all Papiſts that carpe at our Church, as though our Miniſters had no calling. But for the uſing of their office, they were extraordinarily raiſed and ſtirred up to doe that which they did, in regard of the manifold abuſes wherewith the miniſterie of the Church was generally corrupted in their time: for God gave unto them grace and knowledge to diſcerne to teach, and to maintaine the right and true uſe of the miniſterie. And that they were thus extraordinarily ſtirred up by God, may appeare by the extraordinarie gifts and graces wherewith they were endued: for God that hath alwaies a care over his Church, when hee ſaw the ſame ſo fearefully corrupted by Antichriſt, did ſtirre up theſe men to reforme the ſame: and beſides their ſingular gifts of knowledge and wiſdome, he gave them extrordinarie graces of true piety, whereby they were inabled to ſeale and confirme with their owne bloud, the truth of that doctrine which they did profeſſe and teach, which was an evident argument they were called of God.

Now oppoſite to this, wee muſt make the firſt note of a falſe Prophet: namely to come on his owne head, and to preach not being ſent. And by this marke are falſe Prophets noted, Jer. 14.14. I have not ſent them, neither did I command them--yet they propheſie in my name. And no leſſe doe theſe words of Chriſt import, when he ſaith here, they come unto you, that is, of themſelves, without a calling from God, though they pretend a calling, which is one of their cloakes: and therefore by Saint Iude, verſe 4. they are ſaid to creepe into the Church: as alſo, Act. 20.29. grievous wolves ſhall enter in among you, without calling from God, or from the Church.

1. Note of a falſe Prophet.

Here ſome may aske, how ſhall we judge of ſuch, and know that they have no calling? Anſ. For this purpoſe, I adde a ſecond note of a true Prophet, which is the moſt principall, and it ſtandeth in the right and wholſome handling of the Scriptures of God. This is the proper fruit of a true Prophet, 1 Cor. 14.3. He that propheſies, ſpeaketh unto men edification, exhortation, and comfort: and 2 Tim. 2.15. Shew thy ſelf a good workeman, by dividing the Word of God aright: and 2 Tim. 3.16,17. the Scripture uſed in teaching, convincing, correcting, and inſtructing unto right eouſneſſe, ſerves to make a man fit to every good worke of a Prophet. Now this wholſome handling of the Word ſtands in two things; in a right interpretation and opening of the true ſenſe of Scripture, and in a due and found collection of wholſome doctrine from the ſame, for the edifying of the Church both in ſound judgement and Chriſtian life.

2. Note of a true Prophet.

On the contrary, the ſecond fruit of a falſe Prophet is, to deliver and maintaine corrupt doctrine, contrary to the wholſome doctrine of holy Scripture: and by this principally he is to be knowne for a false Prophet, that intruderh himselfe. For the better conceiving of this note we must know, that in the doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles, there are two things principally to bee considered; the scope, and the parts thereof: the scope of all their doctrin tends to maintaine Christ Jesus God and man, the alone perfect Saviour of the Church. And indeed, hee which teacheth any doctrine tending to overthrow Christ, either in regard of his natures, or of his offices, the same is a false Prophet: 1 Joh. 4.3. Every spirit that confesseth not that Iesus is come in the flesh, is not of God. The parts of Propheticall and Apostolike doctrine, are the commandements of the Law, and the promises of the Gospel, and he which overturnes either directly, or by just consequent, any commandement of the Law, or article of faith, must needs be a false Prophet: so that a false Prophet must be tried by the analogie of faith, comprised in the articles of the Apostles Creed, and in the Decalogue, which containes the summe of all the doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles; and he which goeth against them, is a false Prophet.

The third fruit of a true Prophet, is noted by our Saviour Christ, namely, in his ministery to seeke Gods glory, Joh. 7.18. Where also he noteth out a false Prophet, who in teaching and preaching seeketh not Gods glorie, but his owne. The same note doth Paul give, Phil. 3. 19. calling them earthly minded, seeking their owne honour, wealth, and glory, and not the things of God: and They serve not the Lord, but their owne bellies.

Thus we see the notes of a false Prophet, among which the second is the principall whereby he is to be tried: as we may see plainly, Deu. 13. 4. If a false Prophet come, and worke a true signe, yet he must die, if by his false doctrine hee seeke to withdraw Gods people from the true God. So when the Jewes asked Christ, by what authority he did those things: that is, what warrant and calling he had to doe as he did; he answers them by another question, touching Johns ministerie; thereby shewing, that that which hee did was warranted by the testimony of John; and Johns testimony was true, because his calling was from God: and his calling bee justifies, bicause his doctrine (signified by his baptisme) was from God. So Gal. 1.8. He which teacheth otherwise than they had learned out of the Prophets from the Apostles, let him be accursed, though he were an Angel from heaven. And thus much for the meaning of this rule.

Vses 1. From this rule wee have to answer the Papists, and all popish persons, who use to plead in defence of their Religion, after this sort; If our Religion bee false, shew us the time when it was corrupted, the man that corrupted it, and the manner how it was corrupted: for once we had the pure religion. We might answer them by the like, that a man might say as well of a Ship that is sunke on the Sea, that it is not sunke, because no man can tell where, and when, and by what meanes it tooke water. But yet further wee have here to answer; that though we knew not when their Religion was corrupted, and by whom, yet seeing their teachers and people have in them, and among them, the necessarie fruits of Antichristian Prophets and people, we can thereby assure ourselves they are corrupt: and though wee cannot see the shadow of the Sunne move, yet we may perceive that it doth move. Now by their fruits it is cleare they are corrupt; for they reverse the doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles, both in the commandements of the Law, and in the Articles of faith. First, they disannull the first Commandement, by making to themselves other Gods beside the true God; for they [a] pray unto Saints, and therein acknowledge a divine propertie in them, and also give unto them the honour due to God alone, and so set up unto themselves the creature in the roome of the Creator. The second they reverse by worshipping [b] God himselfe, and dead men, in images, and Christ himselfe in the Crucifix; yea, in a peece of [c] bread, wherein they match the greatest idolatrie among the heathen: and the best learned among them teach, that the Rood, the [d] Crosse, and Crucifix, are to be worshipped with the same worship wherewith Christ himselfe is worshipped. In the sixth Commandement touching murther, they condemne the killing one of another; but yet if a Priest come from the Pope, and kill a Protestant Prince, the Lords anointed King or Queene, that is not onely no sinne, but a [e] most notable, rare, and memorable worke. Against the seventh Commandement they maintaine [f] the vow of single life necessarie in their religious orders; whereby, as also by their sines, they cause all filthinesse and abomination to abound amongst them. And for the tenth Commandement, they say [g] that concupiscence after baptisme is no sinne properly. In the Articles of faith they overturne those that concerne Christ, making him no Saviour, but a divine instrument whereby we save our selves; for they [h] make merits good works done by Gods grace, after the first justification, truly and properly meritorious, and fully worthy of everlasting life. And his offices they have parted from him; his kingly and propheticall offices, betweene him and the Pope: and his Priesthood betweene him and every Popish Priest, as we have shewed before: so that by these fruits wee plainly see their Apostacie, which is enough, though wee know not when and by whom it came.

2 Vse. Here also wee have to answer such among our selves as renounce our Church, as being no true Church of Christ; because say they, wee doe want true Ministers, and so have not a right Ministerie among us. But hence wee answer, that wee have the true Church of God, and our Ministers bee the the true Ministers of God: for proofe hereof; our Ministers have the outward calling of the Church of England: they say indeed, our calling is nought, because they have no power from God to call, in whose hands it is. But to omit that question for this time, sufficient approbation of our Ministry may be had from the fruits of our Ministers, as they are Ministers; for to leave the fruits of their lives, as insufficient meanes to judge them by, our Ministers teach through Gods blessing, the true and wholsome doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles, and are allotted and called hereto by the governours of the Church, and accepted of their people, whose obedience to the faith is the seale of their Ministery: and this is sufficient to confirme the calling of our Ministers; if it had not, Christ would not have said, Ye shall know them by their fruits.

The people ought to bee able to judge of teachers.

1. Vse. Whereas Christ saith, Ye shall know them, speaking to all his hearers, he takes it for granted, that every believer may bee able to judge of false Prophets: and therefore every one in the Church of God ought to labour for so much knowledge, whereby hee may bee able to know a Teacher by his fruits and doctrine. This then sheweth, that every one ought to know the summe of true Religion, comprised in the Articles of faith, and in the commandements of the Law, both for their true meaning, and right and profitable use unto themselves: which thing I note, because I know many deceive themselves herein, thinking that God will excuse them for their want of knowledge, because they are not book-learned. But let us consider, we have every one this care, to be able to judge of meats which concerne our bodies, which be wholsome, and which not; should wee not then have much more care of our soules, to be able to discerne of doctrines in Religion, which be either the poison, or salvation of our soules?

We may use the ministery of wicked livers.

4. Vse. Whereas wholsome doctrine out of Scripture is a note of a true Prophet, it teacheth us that we may lawfully use the Ministerie of those men, whose lives and conversations be evill and offensive, if so be their doctrine bee found and good. The Disciples of our Saviour Christ must not doe according to the waies of the Scribes and Phaisies, but yet they must heare them when they sit in Moses chaire: that is, when they teach Moses doctrine. And Paul is glad when Christ is truely preached, though it bee not in sinceritie of affection, but of envie. When the Disciples saw a man that was not called by any speciall calling to follow Christ as themselves were, and cast out Devils in the name of Christ, they thought it intolerable, and therefore forbade him; but Christ said, Forbid him not, for he that is not against us, is with us. And the like may be said of them that preach wholsome doctrine, though their lives be still offensive: for in doctrine they bee with Christ, and so faire forth must bee approved.

Mark 3. 13.

Luk. 7. 49.

Againe, consider that the vertue and effectie of the Word and Sacraments administred by men, is not from the Minister, but from God: a letter is not the worse because it is brought by an unhonest or unfaithfull carrier. Neither doth the evill conscience of the Minister defile the good conscience of the honest hearer, and worthie receiver. This must be remembred, because many take offence at the life of the Minister, so as they will not heare his doctrine, if his conversation be scandalous.

The maine duty of students in Divinity.

V. In that a Prophet is to be knowne by his fruits, and the maine fruit of a true Prophet stands in the good handling of Gods word for the edification and salvation of his hearers; hence the children of the Prophets, and those that are set apart for the Ministry of the Word are taught, that they must make this the maine and principall end of all their studies, to bee able to bring forth the fruits of a true Prophet: that is, to interpret aright the word of God, and thence to gather out wholsome doctrines and uses for the edification of Gods people. And for the enforcing of this dutie let us consider, first, that it is Gods commandement so to doe: 1 Cor. 14. 1. Seeke for spirituall gifts, but specially to prophesie. Againe, the greatest skill of a Prophet stands in the true expounding and right dividing of Scripture, so as it may become food for mens soules. 2 Tim. 2. 15. Shew thy selfe a workeman that needeth not to bee ashamed, in dividing the Word of truth aright. And lastly, this true fruit of a Minister serves to build up Christs Kingdome, to beat downe the kingdome of sinne, and to feed the soules of men with the food of everlasting life. It will be said, this course is good among the common people; but this is not the learning which is required in the handling of the Word in the schooles of the Prophets. I answer, It is the greatest learning that can be in a Minister to be able thus to divide the word of God aright: it goes beyond the gift of tongues and miracles, 1 Cor. 14. 1, 2. I deny not but that it is a part of learning used of the learned, to take a Text of Scripture, and to make a scholasticall discourse upon the same. But yet the worke of a Prophet stands rather in expounding Scripture by Scripture, and in dividing the same aright; giving thereout wholsome doctrine for the edifying of the people of God that heare. In former times when the studie of Scripture was neglected, men betooke themselves to expound the writings of men, and so prophecie was banished, and all sound knowledge in the truth of God: and hence arose diversitie of opinions, and multitudes of foolish questions. And so will it bee with us, if prophecie faile: for to leave the right handling of Scripture, is the way to bring in all errour and barbarisme in religion.

What commends a Minister.

VI. Every Minister of the Gospel is hereby taught, that he ought to bee answerable to his calling, walking worthy of the same: for a good Minister is knowne by his good fruits, and there-

Matth. 7. verse. 16, &c.

therefore he must be faithfull in performing all those duties which his calling doth binde him unto. The titles and calling of a Minister bee high and excellent, but yet they will not commend any man for good, unlesse he bring forth the fruits of a Minister in a faithfull discharge of his ministeriall duties.

Lastly, hence we must learne, not to take offence though the Minister failes in his life and conversation, yea, though there be contentions in the ministery about matters of Doctrine: for these are not the fruits of the ministery which is Gods ordinance, but of sinfull men who bewray their imperfections in this holy calling.

Thus much of the Rule. Now followes the proofe and explication thereof, by a comparison drawne from nature in these words, vers. 16. Doe men gather grapes of thornes, or figs of thistles: verse 17. So every good tree bringeth forth good fruit, and a corrupt tree bringeth forth evill fruit. verse 18. A good tree cannot, &c. The comparison standeth thus; As a tree is knowne of every one by his fruit, so is a Prophet by his teaching. More particularly, As a good tree brings forth good fruit, and cannot bring forth evill fruit: and as an evill tree brings forth evill fruit, and cannot bring forth good fruit: even so a true Prophet teacheth wholsome doctrine, and cannot teach false doctrine: and a false prophet teacheth false doctrine, and cannot teach true doctrine.

Touching this similitude: first, observe in generall from the ground of this comparison, that our Saviour Christ here makes two kinde of trees: a good tree, and an evill tree: by an evill tree meaning that which in regard of any fruit is as a rotten tree, as is the briar, the thorne and thistle: for though they live and grow, yet they are void of good fruit, and so are called evill. Now here it may bee well demanded, whence this difference of trees doth come, for all were good by creation, Gen. 1. 31. God saw all that he had made, and loe it was very good. Answ. Whether thornes or thistles were created of God I will not now dispute: it is not certaine that they were: but now it is plaine there remaines this difference among plants; some are good, some are bad; the goodnesse that is in some comes from Gods blessing, but the badnesse and barrennesse of others comes from the curse of God upon the earth, and upon all creatures for the sinne of our first parents, as we may see, Gen. 3. 17, 18. The earth is cursed for thy sake: thornes also and thistles shall it bring forth unto thee. And by this we may see the grievousnes of our mother-sinne, it hath made the earth barren and cursed, and many a goodly plant to become fruitlesse and unprofitable: and therefore when wee behold these things in the world, we must take occasion hereof to consider our owne sinne, and blame our selves and not the creatures, for they were curssed for our sakes.

Now more particularly: This comparison is here specially applied unto Prophets: but if we compare this place with S. Luke, chap. 6. 44. and 45. we shall see the holy Ghost there restraineth not this saying to the Prophets alone, but inlargeth the same unto other men, saying, A good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth good things, and an evill man out of the evill treasure of his heart bringeth forth evill. Now by comparing these together, wee may see that this comparison reacheth both unto Prophets and to all other men: from whence we may gather these instructions:

The state of the unregenerate.

I. What we are to conceive and thinke of a man that is not regenerate: wee are all by nature branches of the wilde olive, and therefore as a thorne cannot bring forth a grape, nor a thistle figs; no more can a man unregenerate bring forth a good worke. And this wee may more plainely conceive, if wee consider a little the workes of man: they may all be reduced to three heads: some are evill, as workes forbidden of God; some are things indifferent, being neither forbidden nor commanded; and some are good workes, as outward duties of the morall law. Now for evill works, they cannot possible be good in any man. For workes indifferent, as eating, drinking, buying, selling, &c. they are sinnes, not in themselves, but in him that useth them being out of Christ: and for the outward duties of the morall Law, as civill justice, liberalitie, and such like, they are good workes in themselves, because God requireth them, but yet in the unregenerate they are sinnes: To the pure all things are pure: but to them that are defiled and unbeleeving is nothing pure, Tit. 1. 15. and Without faith it is impossible to please God. Heb. 11. 6. It will be said, that liberality, chastity, &c. be the good gifts of God. Answ. That is true, and they be good workes as they are given and commanded of God: but as they are received and used of the naturall man, they are sinnes: for hee failes from the right use of those actions; both for the beginning of them, (for they proceed not in him from a pure heart, a good conscience, and faith unfeined) and also in the end; he doth them not for the glory of God simply, but withall he aimes at his owne praise and reputation, or some such sinister respect.

The greatnesse of originall sinne.

The use of this Doctrine is this: I. it teacheth us to consider and acknowledge the greatnesse of our originall sinne. Our naturall corruption is most grievous and fearefull; it makes us to sinne in whatsoever things we doe, though in themselves they bee things indifferent, or else good workes.

Saving grace is not in vertuall, B. Iforn. degrat. Iob. & subiect. 2 c5. Gab. Biel. lib. 2. dist. 27. dub. 4.

II. This overthrowes the conceit of popish writers, which teach that God gives to all men an universall common grace, or helpe sufficient, by which they may bee saved if they will: And for them which want the meanes of the Word of God, they say, that if they use that common grace of nature well, God will give them further grace whereby they may come to salvation. But here wee see, a naturall man having a good gift of God cannot of himselfe use it well; the best things he doth, though they be good in themselves, yet they bee sinnes in him.

Matth. 7. verse. 19. 20.

The misery of the unregenerate.

III. Here also we may see what a miserable case we are in, while we remaine unregenerate: for we can doe nothing but sinne: we bee like to thornes and thistles, which either bring forth no fruit, or else bad fruit: and therefore we must labour to become new plants in Christs Orchard, being ingrafted into him by faith, and made new creatures by regeneration, having beleeving hearts and good consciences, that so we may bring forth good fruits unto the praise and glory of God.

Good workes fol low justification.

IV. Wee may hence learne a generall rule touching righteous man; namely, that a man must first be truly justified and sanctified before he can doe a good worke: first, a tree must have the sap and nature of a good tree, and then it brings forth good fruits, and not before. And this overturnes a point of naturall and Popish religion, that a man may be justified and saved by his good workes: but that which followes cannot be a cause of that which went before: the fruit cannot make the tree to be good; but onely declare and manifest that it is good; from whence it comes that the fruit is good; and so good workes they proceed from justification. They say justification is twofold: one, whereby a man of an evill man is made a good man; the second, whereby of a good man one is made better: the first they say is of workes, but the second justification is of grace. Answ. But this is false: for the fruit makes not the tree a better tree, but if the tree increase in goodnesse, it proceeds from some other cause, not from the fruit thereof.

v. 19 Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewne downe and cast into the fire.

20 Therefore by their fruits shall ye know them.

These words containe a conclusion gathered from the former similitude, which is here also continued; wherein is set downe a grievous threatning of eternall damnation, the deserved punishment of all false prophets. As if Christ had said, looke as in an orchard every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewne downe, and cast into the fire to bee burnt: so in the Church of God the false prophet shall not always be reputed for a true Prophet, but at the length shall bee discovered, cut off from the Church, and condemned. A like to this is that saying of our Saviour Christ, Every branch which beareth not fruit in mee is taken away, cast forth, and withereth, and men gather it, and cast them into the fire and they burne. And S. Peter saith, Their damnation sleepeth not, 2 Pet. 2. 3.

Comfort against false prophets.

The Vse. I. This serves to comfort Gods children in regard of false prophets; for though Gods Church bee troubled with them for a time, yet it shall not alwaies be so: the time will come wherein they must bee cast out, and receive their due and deserved destruction. And this especially must be remembred, to stay and comfort our hearts in regard of the popish religion, which doth most of all molest and trouble us: first, because it is naturall, and so readily embraced: secondly, many among us doe much affect it: and thirdly, it is maintained by mighty Monarchs. But yet for all that it must downe, for it is a plant which God never set nor planted, Matth. 15. 13. and the chiefe upholders of it shall be destroyed.

Matth 25 42, 43.

II. Vse. This teacheth us to eschew and shun false teachers: and therefore doth Christ adde this exhortation, Matth. 15. 14. Let them alone, they are the blinde leaders of the blinde: and Revel. 18. 4. Come out of her (that is, spirituall Babylon which is Rome) my people, for if you partake with her in her sinnes, ye shall suffer of her punishments.

Duties of him that would discover a false prophet.

III. Vse. The words of this threatning being further applied unto all men, (as they are in S. Luke) doe teach us, that it is not sufficient for us to abstaine from committing grosse sins, and to doe no man harme, but beside eschewing evill we must doe good. In the last judgement, the sentence of condemnation shall bee pronounced against the wicked, not for robbing the poore, but for not relieving of them, and for not visiting and clothing them. Which doth notably confute that vaine opinion of many ignorant people, who thinke, that if they live an innocent and harmelesse life, God will hold them excused, and save them; but the tree that brings not forth good fruit must be burnt.

Verse. 20. Therefore by their fruits ye shall know them. Here Christ repeats againe the Rule he delivered in the 16. verse, which shewes, that it is a speciall rule to be observed of us all: for there is no idle word in Scripture, neither any thing repeated in vaine. The meaning thereof we have heard, and the meanes whereby a false prophet may be discovered, with the uses thereof: among which wee shewed that every true beleever in Gods Church may be able to discover a false prophet, whereto these three caveats must be added: I. the partie that would discover a false prophet, must humble himselfe before God, and have an heart in some sore emptied of all pride and selfe-love: for The Lord will teach the humble his wayes, Psal. 25. 9. yea, he doth exalt the humble and meeke, Luke 1. 52. and in all things the humbled heart is preferred with the Lord. II. The party humbled must yeeld himselfe to obey the will of God. If any man do my fathers will, he shall know of my doctrine whether it be of God, Joh. 7. 17. and Dauid professeth of himselfe, that hee was wiser than his teachers, and understood more than the ancient, because he kept Gods commandements, Psal. 119.99,100. III. Hee must pray unto the Lord, and aske wisdome in faith and in humility, and the Lord will give it unto him, Jam. 1. 5. If any man lacke wisdome, let him aske of God who giveth liberally. Yet some will say, it is an hard matter to discerne a false prophet: I answer, we have ordinarily this capacity, when wee reade or heare read the last will and testament of our Ancestors, wee are able to conceive and judge of the meaning thereof: well, our Lord Jesus hath left with us his will and testament in the holy Scriptures; which concerning morall duties, and matters of faith necessary to salvation, is so plaine, that it may be understood of the simplest, else Christ would never have sent the Jewes to the Scriptures for the certaine knowledge of the Messias. Which notably discovers the fraudulent dealing of the Romish teachers, who in matters of controversie in Religion, send us for resolution to the Church, calling it the stay and pillar whereto wee must leane in all doubts of doctrines. The Church I grant is to be reverenced, but yet we must not build our faith upon the doctrine of men. Our Saviour Christ sent the Jewes unto the Scriptures: and hereby the Bereans tried Pauls doctrine, and are commended. And indeed, though men be never so unlearned, yet if they come in humility to search the Scripture, and in obedience unto God, praying for knowledge, they may be able by Gods Word to discerne of false teachers.

v. 21 Not every one that saith vnto mee, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdome of Heaven, but he that doth my fathers will which is in heaven.

From this verse to the 24. is contained an other portion of Christs Sermon, being the seventh part of this Chapter; wherein he intreateth of the state of those that professe his holy name in his Church here on earth. And his maine scope and drift herein, is to shew that men must not content themselves to professe religion outwardly, but therewith they must joyne true godlines and sincere obedience. This point is as weighitie and of as great importance as any of the former, respecting the maine point of mans salvation: and it containeth two parts; a maine conclusion in this verse: and a proofe and explanation of one part thereof, ver. 22, 23. The conclusion it selfe hath two parts: 1. that some men professing the name of Christ shall not be saved, which part is afterward explaned and confirmed: the 2. part is this, that some professors of religion shall be saved. which is not only propounded, but the parties also are plainly described.

The first part is a most fearefull sentence against many that live in the Church, that notwithstanding their profession of the name of Christ, yet they shall never be saved. And this is most true, being spoken by him that hath the power of life and of death, who is also the God of truth that cannot lie, saying, Not every one that saith, Lord, Lord, that is, that professeth God to be his God, shall enter into the kingdome of heaven. There be two kind of professors in the Church of God that shall never be saved: the first are grosse hypocrites, which professe Christ with their mouth, and yet in heart and life they renounce him: of this sort is, first the common Atheist, who only for feare of the Magistrates Lawes professeth Religion: secondly, the Epicure, that is, such an one who beares Christs name for fashions sake, and yet his belly and pleasure is his god: thirdly, the worldling, who spends the strength of bodie and minde, and all he hath, on the world for earthly things: Now none of all these, if they thus live and die, can be saved. The second sort are more close hypocrites, which professe the name of Christ in some truth, and have in them some good gifts of God, by reason whereof both before men and in their owne conceit, they are reputed members of the Church; and yet for all this they are indeed but hypocrites, which shall never be saved.

And that wee may somewhat discerne of them, I will note the gifts which they may have, whereby they may come to professe Christ truly: they may be reduced to five heads: The first, is the spirit of bondage to feare, Rom. 8. 15. This is a certaine gift of God whereby a man doth discerne the right meaning, and judiciall use of the Law in himselfe, concerning sinne and the punishment thereof; (for though a man by nature know somthing of the law, yet he knowes not all, nor the right use thereof;) now by reason of this knowledge, he sees himselfe in bondage, and in regard thereof doth feare; from whence may proceed many good things, as griefe for sinne, confession and humiliation for the same, and prayer for pardon. Thus wicked Pharaoh confessed the righteousnes of God, and that he and his people had sinned, Exod. 9. 27. And so did Ahab at the heavie message of God by Eliah, 1 King 21. 27. He rent his clothes, and put sackcloth upon him, and fasted, and lay in sackcloth. So Judas when he saw that Christ was condemned, he repented of his fact, being grieved for it, and ashamed to looke any man in the face; and also confessed the same before God and men, Matth. 27. 3,4. A second gift which a close hypocrite may have, is faith; as had Simon Magus: for he beleeved, and was baptized, Act. 8. 13. neither was it a false and dissembling faith altogether, but in some sort a true, though not a living faith: for he beleeved, and yet was in the gall of bitternesse. So Joh. 2. 23. it is said, Certaine beleeved in Christ, but he durst not commit himselfe unto them. And that we be not deceived herein, we must know that this faith of an hypocrite hath in it three things; knowledge of the truth, approbation thereof with assent unto it, and a kinde of perswasion that Christ is his redeemer. Of the second degree of this faith wee have example, 2 Pet. 2. 18. where some are said to be beguiled with wantonnesse through fleshly lusts, who had cleave escaped from them that be wrapt in error: that is, in idolatry. And of the third degree we have example in the same chap. vers. 1. where some false prophets are said to deny Christ that bought them; because for a time they professed themselves to bee redeemed, and were also perswaded in a generall sort that hee had bought them: yet herein they failed, that they did not truly apprehend the merit of Christ, and apply it effectually unto themselves. The third gift of a close hypocrite is a taste of Gods favour: Heb. 6. 5. it is said of some that fall quite away, That they were inlightned by Gods Spirit, and had a taste of the good Word of God, and of the powers of the world to come, though they were never fed nor filled therewith. The fourth gift is good affections; good (I say) not in them, but in their kinde, and so far forth as we can judge: they have joy in the good things of God: Luk. 8. 13. They that are on the stones are they which when they have heard, receive the Word with joy. They have zeale for Gods glory, as had Iehu, 2 King. 10. 16. and yet hee departed not from the sins of his forefathers, v. 31. Thirdly, they have reverence to Gods Ministers, as Herod to John Baptist, Mark. 6. 20. Herod knowing John to be a just and holy man, feared and reverenced him. The fifth gift is an outward reformation of life: the stony ground receives the seed with joy, and brings forth some fruit, but it lasteth not: of such it is said, Heb. 10. 29. They trod under foot the Sonne of God, and count the blood of the Testament an unholy thing wherewith they were sanctified: that is, according to their profession and perswasion. And thus wee see what kinde of gifts an hypocrite may have, and yet never be saved.

Vses. 1. The consideration whereof must move us to looke unto our selves, that we have better things in us than these are: for here wee see wee may goe on to perdition, carrying the profession of Christ in our mouthes. And the rather is this to bee considered of us, because many looke to be saved who come short of Simon Magus in knowledge, and of Saul, Ahab, and Judas in humility; yea, and for faith, farre short of the Devill himselfe, who is said to beleeve and tremble: but how canst thou looke to bee saved, that in regard of grace, commest short of those which are now condemned?

Secondly, hence wee must learne to suspect our selves, and call our selves to a reckoning about our faith and obedience, and we must not flatter our selves herein: for these things beforenamed will not save us: many have had faith in some truth for some degrees thereof, and also good affections and other gifts; as wee have seene, who are yet for all this condemned.

Thirdly, seeing there be two sorts of men in the Church that shall be condemned, the one whereof have many worthy gifts; this must move us not to rest in these things, but to labour and strive to have our hearts rooted and grounded in the love of God in Christ, and to become new creatures in righteousnesse and true holinesse; and then shall we be as the wise virgins having the oyle of grace in the vessels of our hearts, which will never be quenched till we come into the marriage-chamber with our Bridegroome Christ Jesus.

The second part of the conclusion laid downe by our Saviour Christ is this, That some men professing the name of Christ in the Church of God shall be saved. And these persons are here described unto us by their effect or action, to wit, The doing of the will of the father. And because this is an infallible note of them that shall be saved, I will briefly shew what it is to doe the Fathers will. The Scriptures best expound themselves, Joh. 6. 40. This is the will of him that sent me, that every one that hath seene the Son, and beleeveth in him, should have everlasting life. 1 Thess. 4. 3, 4, &c. This is the will of God, even your sanctification: and that you should abstaine from fornication; and that every one should know how to possesse his vessell in holinesse and honour,--that no man oppresse or defraud his brother, &c. These two places of Scripture laid together, shew that the doing of the Fathers will standeth in three things, in faith, in repentance, and new obedience: faith is directly expressed in the place of Iohn. and repentance, which is a fruit of faith, as also new obedience, the fruit of them both, in the words of the Apostle Paul: for by Sanctification is meant repentance, and new obedience by the duties following:

For the first; in true saving faith there are three things required: Knowledge, assent, and application. By Knowledge I meane the right conceiving of the necessarie Doctrines of true religion, especially of those which concerne Christ our Redeemer. Assent is, when a man knowing this doctrine, doth further approve of the same as wholsome doctrine, and the truth of God, directing us aright unto salvation. Application is, when we conceive in our hearts a true perswation of Gods mercy towards us particularly, in the free pardon of all our sins, and for the salvation of our soules: example of this particular applying wee have in the Apostle Paul, Gal. 2. 20. who professeth thus, Now live not I, but Christ liveth in me, and the life that I now live is by faith in the Son of God: which what that is, he sheweth after, saying, Who hath loved me, and given himselfe for me: and without this particular application, neither knowledge nor assent can save us. In the sixth of John Christ propounds himselfe unto us as the bread of life, and water of life: now wee know that food, unleſſe it be received, will not nourish the body: even ſo unleſſe wee doe by the hand of faith particularly receive and apply Chriſt unto our ſelves, all our knowledge and aſſent will be as food uneaten and undigeſted. It may bee ſaid that hypocrites have knowledge, aſſent, and a perſwaſion of Gods favour, and therefore this is not a ſure note of doing the Fathers will. I anſwer, an hypocrite (as Simon Magus) may have true knowledge of Gods Word, and give aſſent thereunto, and in regard of both theſe have true faith in ſome degree; yea, he may conceive a perſwaſion of Gods mercy in the pardon of his ſinnes, though falſly in preſumption upon falſe grounds and inſufficient. Now that a man may differne the truth of his faith and perſwaſion of Gods mercy, from that which is in hypocriſie, hee is to obſerve therein three things: the beginning of his faith, the fruits and the conſtancie thereof. The beginning of true faith, is hearing the Word of God preached, eſpecially the Goſpel: the Law going before as an occaſion or preparing-means, whereby a man comes to ſee his ſinnes and his miſerie thereby, and thereupon to deſire reconciliation with God in the pardon of them; and hearing the promiſes of mercy, to deſire faith whereby he may embrace the ſame, labouring againſt unbeleefe. This, though it be not a lively faith, yet it is the beginning of true faith, and no hypocrite hath the ſame ſoundly wrought in him. The fruit of true faith is a change of the whole man both in heart and life; making the heart contrary to it ſelfe, in moderating the naturall affections and paſſions thereof, and keeping them in compaſſe of true obedience, and cauſing a man in every eſtate to reſt contented with the will of God, as Iſay ſaith, He that beleeveth ſhall not make haſte. Thirdly, conſtancy in true faith is knowne by this, when a man relies wholly on God, even then when hee feeles no taſte of his mercy, but hath all tokens of his diſpleaſure. Every man will beleeve when he hath preſent ſignes and pledges of Gods loving favour, but true faith being the evidence of things hoped for, will make a man beleeve above hope as Abraham did: and being the ſubſiſting of things not ſeene, will cauſe a man to beleeve when he ſees no tokens of Gods mercy: and indeed, hee that lets goe the hold of Gods mercy when he is in diſtreſſe, may aſſure himſelfe he never had true faith: for the juſt ſhall live by faith in all eſtates, and will with Iob, truſt in God though he kill them.

The ſecond worke wherein conſiſteth the doing of the Fathers will, is to repent of our ſinnes: and this is a fruit of faith. In true repentance there be two things; the beginning, and the nature of it: The beginning of it is a godly ſorrow, when a man is grieved properly and directly, becauſe by his ſinne he hath offended God, who hath bin unto him ſo long a Father in Chriſt. This conſiſth repentance unto ſalvation not to be repented of, 2 Cor. 7. 10. and it ariſeth not ſo much from the feare of puniſhment, as from the conſideration of Gods mercy, making a man diſpleaſed with himſelfe for offending ſo loving a God, who hath beene ſo gracious and bountifull unto him in Chriſt. The nature of repentance ſtands in the change of the minde: when any perſon laies aſide the purpoſe of ſinning, and by Gods bleſſing and grace taketh to himſelfe a new purpoſe never to ſinne more. This is properly to repent, and if this be in truth, hence will follow the change of the will, of the affections, and of all the actions of the life.

The nature of repentance.

It may be ſaid, that an hypocrite may repent as Iudas did, Matth. 27. 3. and therefore this is not a good note of doing Gods will. Anſw. Iudas did repent: hee was indeed grieved for his fact, wiſhing with all his heart that it had never beene done: but this was nothing, his ſorrow was onely worldly, ſtinging death, as the Apoſtle calls it, 2 Corinth. 7. 10. ariſing from the horrour and feare of puniſhment, not from conſideration of Gods mercie: it was without true hatred of ſinne committed, without hope of mercy, or purpoſe to glorifie God by new obedience, and ſo was no true repentance.

New obedience.

The third worke wherein conſiſteth the doing of Gods will, is new obedience: and it is the fruit of both the former, whereby a man being indued with faith and repentance, doth according to the meaſure of grace received, endevour himſelfe to yeeld obedience to all Gods commandements, from all the powers and parts both of his ſoule and his bodie: and this I call new, becauſe it is a renuing of that in man, whereto he was perfectly enabled by creation. But here it will bee ſaid, that many who ſhall never be ſaved, have attained to reformation of life; and therefore this is not a true and ſufficient note of him that ſhall be ſaved. Anſw. True it is, many hypocrites have reformation of life, but yet they faile two waies; Firſt, their reformation is onely outward not inward, their thoughts, wills, and affections, ſtill remaine wicked and corrupt. Secondly, their obedience is partiall, onely to ſome of Gods Commandments, not to all: ſo Herod, hee would heare Iohn gladly, and doe many things, but yet hee would not leave his brothers wife. But true obedience, which proceedeth from true faith, hath theſe heads and branches; Firſt, the partie muſt prove what is the good will of God. Rom. 12. 2. Secondly, he muſt reſtraine his life from outward offence, which tend to the diſhonour of God, and ſcandall of the Church, 1 Theſſ. 5. 22. 1 Pet. 2. 11, 12. Thirdly, he muſt mortifie the inward corruptions of his owne heart. Fourthly, he muſt labour to conceive new motions agreeable to the will of God, and thence bring forth and practiſe good duties; ſo performing both outward and inward obedience unto God: and by theſe may a man differne

Branches of new obedience.

How to become cheerfull doers of the will of God.

the truth of his obedience: and thus wee ſee what profeſſors they be which ſhall be ſaved.

Vſes. 1. Now conſidering that ſalvation is promiſed to them that bee doers of Gods will, we muſt hereby bee exhorted to become more cheerefull in doing Gods will by faith, repentance, and new obedience: and to further us in this duty we muſt uſe theſe helpes: I. We muſt labour for a true perſwaſion of Gods mercy in the pardon of our ſinnes, and for the ſalvation of our ſoules: this being truly conceived, will urge a man to true obedience, whereby he may ſhew himſelfe thankefull to God for ſo great a mercie. II. Wee muſt conſider that wee are the Temples of the holy Ghoſt, which is a wonderfull dignity to a ſinnefull man: and in regard hereof, wee muſt ſtirre up our ſelves ſo to live, that we make not ſad the Spirit of God which dwelleth in us. III. Wee muſt conſider the bleſſings of God beſtowed upon us both in ſoule and body one by one: and this will move us to love God, which love we ſhall ſhew in keeping his commandements: for this is the love of God, that we keepe his commandements, 1 Joh. 5. 3. IV. Let us conſider the threatnings of God againſt ſinne, and his judgements upon them that live in ſinne, for every place is full of Gods judgements; and theſe will helpe to reſtraine our corruptions that they breake not forth into action. V. We muſt meditate on the word of God, and uſe fervent prayer unto God for his grace: for by this meanes David did notably ſtirre up himſelfe to faith, repentance, and new obedience, as wee may ſee at large in the 119. Pſalme.

We muſt goe beyond hypocrites in grace.

II. Vſe. In that many having faith, and repentance, and outward reformation of life in ſome degrees, ſhall never be ſaved, wee muſt labour to goe beyond all hypocrites in theſe graces: in faith we muſt not conteur our ſelves with a generall perſwaſion of Gods mercy, but wee muſt labour to conceive the ſame to be true and ſound touching the remiſſion of our ſinnes, and the ſalvation of our ſoules: we muſt looke that it have a ſound beginning, good fruits, and ſtedfaſt continuance; and for repentance, wee muſt labour to ſee that our ſorrow ariſe from the conſideration of the goodneſſe of God whom wee have offended; and that it breed in us a change of our mindes in the purpoſe of not ſinning: whereto muſt bee conformable the will and affections, and the whole man. And for new obedience, we muſt be as carefull in mind, will, and affections, as in the outward actions of our life to doe the will of God; and that in all Gods commandements.

III. Vſe. Many there bee that thinke their caſe good, becauſe they live a civill honeſt life, without wronging others openly or wittingly, which thing indeed is commendable; but yet farre ſhort of that which is required for ſalvation; therefore they muſt not truſt to theſe broken ſtaves of outward and common honeſty, though they bee good things in their kinde: for many there be that ſhall never come in heaven, which have had farre more in them than theſe things are: and therefore whatſoever theſe perſons be they muſt not reſt, till they finde ſome portion of true grace in their hearts, by vertue whereof they may plainly ſee themſelves gone beyond all hypocrites in the things that concerne ſalvation.

> V. 22 Many will ſay unto mee in that day, Lord, Lord, have wee not by thy Name propheſied? and by thy Name caſt out devils? and by thy name done many great works?
> 23 And then will I profeſſe to them, I never knew you: depart from me ye that worke iniquity.

In theſe two verſes Chriſt returnes to explane and confirme the firſt concluſion of the former verſe, concerning thoſe profeſſors that ſhall not be ſaved. The words containe two parts: Firſt, a deſcription of the perſons by their behaviour, v. 22. Secondly, a declaration of their condemnation, v. 23. For the firſt; theſe profeſſors are deſcribed by three arguments: I. by their number, many: II. by the time which they ſhall plead thus for themſelves, and ſtand on their profeſſion of ſervice done to Chriſt; in that day: that is, in that great and terrible day of the laſt judgement: III. by their gifts and qualities wherewith they were indued, have we not in thy name propheſied? and by thy name caſt out devils, &c?

Of the number that ſhall bee condemned.

For the firſt: the number of profeſſors which ſhall not be ſaved is great: For many (ſaith Chriſt) ſhall ſay unto me. Indeed wee are not able to ſay how many they bee which ſhall not be ſaved, for that is a thing proper to God: and yet the Scripture teacheth us that the number of thoſe which ſhall be condemned, is greater than the number of thoſe which ſhall be ſaved: for beſides that the greateſt part of the world in former times did never heare of Chriſt, here it is plaine that among the profeſſors of the name of Chriſt, many ſhall be condemned: and v. 13. Many walke in the broad way to deſtruction, few in the narrow.

Whereby wee are taught, firſt, that we muſt not frame our lives according to the example of the multitude, to live and doe as the moſt doe, becauſe the moſt ſhall be condemned: but we muſt ſtrive to enter in at the ſtrait gate, and to be of that little flocke unto whom the kingdome of heaven is promiſed.

Secondly, hence wee learne, not to content our selves to live as most men and women doe that professe the name of Christ, but wee must labour to goe beyond the multitude in regard of the truth of our faith and repentance. It was not sufficient for the wise virgins to beare the name of virgins, to have lamps burning, and to goe forth to meet the bridegroome: for all these things did the foolish virgins also; but one thing more they had, which was the oyle of grace, whereby they were enlightened to goe with the Bridegroome into his chamber; which the foolish virgins lacking, were shut out of the doores and not admitted to come in, Matth. 25.

The second argument whereby these reprobate professors are disturbed, is the circumstance of time when they shall thus plead for themselves, why they should not be condemned, to wit, at the last day when they shall come to bee arraigned at the tribunall seat of Gods judgement. This is a point of great weight and moment, worthy all observation; that men not onely in this life and in death, but even at the last day should thus plead for themselves.

Hence wee learne, that many professing service to Christ, shall conceive in their mindes a perswation that they are the true servants and children of God: they shall live and die in this perswation; and yet for all this at the last judgement, they shall receive the sentence of condemnation. A thing deeply to be weighed of every one: And the consideration of it ought to teach us all to take heed of spirituall pride and selfe-love, whereby men flatter and deceive themselves in their estate, over-weening the good things they have, and fastly thinking that they have that blessing of God which indeed they have not. This must move us not onely to labour to be purged of this pride, but also teach us to suspect the worst of our selves, and to judge our selves severely in regard of unbeleefe and hollownesse of heart: for this will bee a meanes to make us escape the judgement of condemnation at the last day, which Christ shall pronounce against many of those that thinke themselves to be his servants.

Further, observe where Christ saith, in that day, he singleth out the day of judgement as a most terrible day. And saying, they shall say unto mee, hee makes himselfe the Judge of all the world in that day; and further pointing out their particular pleading for themselves, he gives us to understand that he is very God, who knoweth long before, not onely the speeches and actions, but the very secret thoughts and imaginations of all men that have beene, that are, or shall be, from the beginning to the end of the world.

These things laid together and well considered, must stirre up in our hearts a speciall dury, which the Apostle had learned, 2 Cor. 5. 11. Knowing therefore the terrour of the Lord: that is, not only in judgement to conceive, but also in heart and affection to bee perswaded of the terrible fearefulnesse of the last judgement; and in this regard not to content our selves with the gift of knowledge, and with an outward profession, but to labour for soundnesse and sincerity of faith, of repentance, and new obedience, both in heart and life. This was Pauls practice, in regard of the resurrection to this judgement, He endeavoured himselfe to have alwayes a cleare conscience toward God, and toward man, Act. 24. 16. And this duty is most necessary: for such is our ignorance and unbeleefe, that wee little regard the terrour of this day, but either thinke it shall not come, or though it doe, we shall scape well enough.

The third argument here used, is drawne from the gifts and qualities of the persons which make this plea for themselves: they are such as have propheſied in the name of Christ, cast out devils, and done many great works in his name. To propheſie here signifieth to teach the people of God, by expounding the Scripture, and applying the same to the consciences for their edification: and this office is called prophecie, to grace and commend the office of a Minister, because it was the principall duty of the Prophets themselves, thus to handle the word of God for the instruction and edification of Gods people, how soever at some time they did foretell unto Gods people things to come. And therfore he which hath this office, and dischargeth the same with good conscience, doth a worke no lesse honourable, than did the ancient holy Prophets.

By thy name. The name of Christ here signifieth two things: 1. appointment and commandement from Christ: men that preach the word of God, being rightly called thereunto, teach and preach in the name of Christ: for these whom the Church calleth lawfully, Christ himselfe calleth, and they preach by vertue of his name. Secondly, it signifieth to preach in the roome and stead of Christ, to preach that which Christ would preach, and in that manner also which Christ would use: 2 Cor. 5. 20. We are embassadours for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us, &c. And here wee may see a difference among the kindes of teaching which God requireth of men. Masters teach their servants; parents teach their children; and one neighbour and friend another: but all these differ from the teaching of the Minister: for he teacheth being called by Christ, and in stead of Christ: but the master teacheth not by like vertue, but onely by the right of mastership: the father by vertue of fatherhood, and one friend another by vertue of brotherly charity. And this sheweth the dignity of the calling of a Minister, and the weight of his office: no master, no father, or ordinary professor hath the like.

Cast out devils, and done very great workes. For the better understanding hereof, wee must intreat something of the working of miracles:

Matth. 7. verse 22.

What a miracle is.

God alone can worke miracles.

How men worke miracles.

What it is to propheſie.

What it is to propheſie in Christs name.

Miracles now ceased.

Excellent gifts without love are nothing.

cles: and first, we are to see what a miracle is. A miracle is not onely a strange worke done, but such a worke as is above the strength of all creatures, and beyond the whole power of created nature; for it is done by the power of God himselfe immediately, which is above the strength of all creatures: such a worke was the staying of the Sunne, Josh. 10. 12. and the going backward of the shadow of the dyall, 2 King. 20. 11. Secondly, the Lord God alone is the author of a miracle, who created heaven and earth; as Davids faith, Thou art great, and doest wonderous things, thou art God alone, Psalm. 86. 10. No Angel, nor other creature in heaven or earth, no not the manhood of Christ, though exalted above all creatures, is able to worke a miracle. How then will some say, doe these men plead their working of miracles? Anſw. Not as authors, but as instruments and ministers whom the Lord used in the working of them; for men worke miracles by believing, on this manner: First, they receive a speciall instinct and inward motion, that God will use them as instruments in the working of a miracle, if they pray unto him, and command the worke to be done; upon this instinct, they beleeve that if they pray to God and command in his name, it shall be done: and lastly, they pray, and command according to this instinct, and so the thing they beleeved is done. And thus is this speech to be understood, Have wee not cast out devils, &c? that is, thou hast put an extraordinary instinct into our minds, that if we prayed unto thee, and commanded the devils in thy name to depart, it should be done: this we have beleeved, and accordingly practised, and so have cast out devils, and done many great wonders by thy name. This gift of miracles doth not now befall the Church of God; all that the Church now hath (for ought I see) is the gift of prayer, joyned with fasting, which also must be conditionall, depending on Gods glory, the good of Gods Church, and of the party troubled: they may not pray absolutely for this worke of casting out devils, or for the doing of such like miracles, much lesse may they now give peremptory command for the being of them. If it be said, that Gods Church hath all needfull gifts, as well now as in former times: I answer, it hath all gifts needfull to their salvation, and therefore prayer in the Church serves now either to deliver the party troubled, or else to procure as good a blessing as deliverance is, which is patience and repentance. And thus wee see what manner of persons they bee that shall say Lord, Lord, and make apologie for themselves at the last day, and yet bee damned; namely, some that have been excellent preachers of the Word, and some that have had extraordinary power to cast out devils: and lastly, others that have wrought many strange cures and miracles by faith in Christs name.

Now hence we learne, first, that most excellent gifts will not availe to the salvation of any man or woman, unlesse they have true faith, sincere repentance, and new obedience, whereby they doe the will of God: for what an excellent gift is it to be able to teach and preach the word of God? what a rare thing is it to have heard Christ himselfe preach, and to have given him entertainment? and yet neither of these can save a man: Christ saith here, the apologie of preaching shall doe men no good, and the privilege of eating and drinking with Christ, and of hearing him teach in their streets, will nothing availe; Christ will say, I never knew you, Luk. 13. 26, 27. It is likewise an excellent earthly privilege to be allied unto Christ: and yet Christ preferreth spirituall kindred by faith and obedience farre before it, saying to one that told him his mother and his brethren stood without, desiring to speake with him, Who (saith he) is my mother? and who are my brethren? and pointing to his Disciples, hee said, Behold my mother and my brethren: for whosoever shall doe my Fathers will, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother. And with reverence it may be truly said of the Virgin Mary, that how soever it was a wonderfull privilege unto her to be the mother of Christ Jesus, yet if shee had not as well borne him in her heart by faith, as shee did in her body, she had never beene saved; and therefore Paul saith, Though we had knowne Christ after the flesh, yet henceforth know we him no more: but if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature, 2 Cor. 5. 16. and in Christ neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision, but faith which worketh by love, Gal. 5. 6.

Mat. 12. 47, 48, 49, 50.

Augustin. lib. de virginit.

The consideration whereof, must move us all to labour to become new creatures, and to get the graces of Gods children who are regenerate, even true faith, true repentance, and new obedience, and not to rest in other gifts though they be most excellent.

Againe, Students that have a great measure of knowledge and other excellent parts, as memory, languages, &c. must learne, not to be puffed up therewith, (for knowledge puffeth up, 1 Cor. 8. 1.) but withall to get the saving graces before named: for without a repentant and beleeving heart, all the gifts they have will never save them: nay, rather they must bee abased thereby, for without true saving faith, all other gifts be but as so many milstones, to presse them deeper into the pit of destruction.

Secondly, here note, that many learned preachers, who have soundly handled the word of God for the conversion of others, shall yet themselves be condemned, like to the Carpenters that built Noahs Arke, and yet were drowned in the flood. The consideration whereof, must teach all Ministers, according to the counsell of the Apostle, Act. 20. 28. To take heed, first, unto themselves, and then to their flocke: so Paul bids Timothy, Take heed unto thy selfe and unto learning, continue therein: for in doing this, thou shalt both save thy selfe, and them that heare thee, 1 Tim.4.16. Secondly, to bee followers of Paul in the practice of mortification, who did beat downe his body, and bring it into subjection, lest by any meanes after hee had preached to others, he himselfe should be a reprobate, 2 Cor.9.27. Thirdly, the people of God are here also taught their duty: for seeing this fearefull judgement shall befall some Ministers of the Word, that notwithstanding their preaching, they shall be condemned; therefore Gods people must not rest upon the example of their Ministers lives, but cleave fast unto that wholesome doctrine, which they gather soundly and directly out of the word of God: his life and practice is no sure rule to follow, further than it agreeth with the word of God: and therefore Paul saith, Be followers of me, as I follow Christ, 1 Cor.11.1. But the Word is a true rule and square, and as many as walke according to this rule, peace shall be upon them and mercy, Galat. 6.16.

Fourthly, seeing some workers of miracles must also be condemned, this teacheth us not to trust them which bring unto us doctrines, because they are confirmed by wonders; for such as worke wonders may deceive themselves in the matter of their owne salvation, and therefore much more may they deceive us in this or that particular point of doctrine. Whereas therefore sundry points of Popery, as Purgatorie, Pilgrimages, invocation of Saints, and such like, are avouched to bee confirmed by miracles, (which no doubt were but forgeries, and lying wonders) yet let it be granted that they were true miracles, that proveth not that wee should beleeve them, because the word of God doth not confirme the same unto us; for beside that which is revealed and recorded in Scripture, we must receive no doctrine in religion, be it never so miraculously confirmed.

verse. 23. And then will I professe to them I never knew you: depart from me yee workers of iniquity. Here Christ setteth downe the just condemnation of those men which make an apologie for themselves at the day of judgement, and wonder at their condemnation: and with all he answereth them in that wherein they shal plead for themselves. The words containe three parts: I. a profession made by Christ to these men, that he never knew them. II. a commandement of Christ unto them, Depart from me: and III. a reason of the commandement, Ye workers of iniquity. For the profession of Christ; Then, that is, in the day of Judgement, at that time when men shall wonder at their condemnation; making apologies of their service to God; even then, saith Christ, will I professe, &c. In this phrase Christ alludeth to the fact of these hypocrites, for they professed the name of Christ, and did plead service done unto him; as if hee should say, Many in that day which have professed my name in the world, shall plead their service done to mee: but I will make another profession unto them, that is, I will make it

A cleere and manifest unto all the world, that I never knew them, and that their profession of me was in vaine.

The words of Christs profession are of great weight and moment, containing some difficultie in regard of the sense, which must bee searched out. The knowledge of God whereby he knowes his creatures is twofold; Generall and Speciall. Gods generall knowledge is that whereby hee understands and sees all things, both past, present, and to come: and in regard of this it is said, All things are naked and open before his eyes with whom we have to do, Heb. 4.13. And by vertue of this, Christ here foretelleth what shall be the apologie of some wicked men at the last day. And in regard of this generall knowledge, all men are knowne unto God, and the most secret actions of wicked wretches: Jer.32.19. His eyes are open unto all the wayes of the sonnes of men, to give unto them according to their wayes, and according to the fruit of their workes. The speciall knowledge of God, is that whereby hee acknowledgeth, approveth, and accepteth of his creature to be his, vouchsafing unto it his speciall favour: now this inlargeth not it selfe to all and every man (for some there be, on whom he will shew his favour, and of them it is said, The Lord knoweth the way of the righteous, Psam.1.6. others there be on whom he will not shew forth his mercie, and of them it is said, The way of the wicked shall perish. Which opposition sheweth what is meant by Gods knowledge of the godly. So likewise, Rom.11.2. Will the Lord destroy his people whom hee knew before? that is, whom hee approved and loved: and of this speciall knowledge hee speaketh in this place. Never. This word excludeth all time, as if he should say, I doe not now, neither ever did approve and accept you for mine owne; yea, even in that time when you professed me, preached, and wrought wonders in my name even then I say, I did not accept and approve of you.

From this forme of confession wee are to learne sundry points of doctrine: First, hereby is plainly confuted and overthrowne the opinion of some Protestants, who hold that Christ shed his bloud for all and every man without exception, and that in regard of Gods purpose and will he died for all men; for Cain as well as for Abel, for Judas as well as for Peter, and for them which shall bee condemned, as well as for them which shall be saved. But marke what Christ saith here to them that shall be condemned, I never knew you, nor approved of you for mine. But if Christ died effectually for all and every man in the world without exception, then he bought all and every man without exception, with the price of his bloud; and if that, then every one without exception is Christs; and those which are truly his, Christ will undoubtedly acknowledge for his owne. But here we see Christ will not acknowledge all and Gods knowledge of his creatures.

1. Generall.

2. Speciall.

Universall redemption confuted.

God deales not harshly in denying redemption to some.

and every man to be his, and therefore undoubtedly hee did not purchase by the price of his bloud, all and every man to be his without exception. I deny not, but that Christ died for all men in the sense of Scripture; but the word of God never saith, that on Gods part, and in regard of the purpose of his will, Christ died for every man without exception. And whereas it is thought to be an hard speech, to say that God would have some particular men deprived of grace and redemption by Christ, let us well consider this one thing, and it will not seeme strange, no not in mans reason. God created man in his owne image, in righteousnesse, and true holinesse, and he gave unto him a blessed estate in an earthly Paradise, and that not onely for himselfe, but for all his posterity: for whatsoever he received by creation, hee received not onely for himselfe, but for his posterity, being then a publike man, and bearing the person of whole mankinde, both in the state of his innocency, and in his fall: whereupon Adam falling from that happy estate, all mankind being in him, fell with him, and so lost Gods image, and that good estate which they enjoyed by creation in Adam. Now consider this well, if God had never indued man with grace, nor given him meanes to come by happinesse, and yet had excluded him from all meanes of grace and happinesse, this indeed might have seemed hard; but considering that by creation hee gave man happinesse, and likewise ability to persevere in the same, if he would; is it any marvell, seeing all men have of themselves lost their owne felicity, that some should bee deprived of it for ever? nay, rather it is a wonder that all are not condemned which come of Adam: for God in his justice without all cruelty might have condemned every man: and indeed it is his endlesse mercy, that he hath given Christ to be a Saviour unto some, and that any are made partakers of this salvation by Jesus Christ.

Gods election and reprobation proved.

Secondly, Christ here saith of some, I never knew you yet speaking of others he saith, I know my sheepe, Joh.10.14. and againe, I know whom I have chosen, Joh. 13.18. and Paul saith, The Lord knoweth who are his, 2 Tim. 2.19. Now from these places we may gather, that there is an eternall worke of God, whereby he puts a difference and distinction betweene man and man, angell and angell, acknowledging some to bee his owne, and denying the same of others. If God himselfe had not avouched this in the Word, no man might have taught it; but being here plainly propounded, it is with all reverence to bee acknowledged and received: and that it may be the better conceived, two points are here to be handled: First, upon what ground and reason God doth know some to be his, and doth not know nor acknowledge others for his owne. Secondly, what is the fruit of this knowledge of God in man. For the first, why God should know some to be his, and not others, no other reason can be given, but Gods good pleasure alone: Matth. 11. 25. Christ setteth downe this distinction betweene man and man, saying, that he Father hath hid the mysteries of the kingdome of heaven from some, and revealed the same to other: now what is the cause hereof? It is even so, O Father, (saith he) because it so pleaseth thee. So, Rom.9.v.13. and 18. in Iacob and Esau Paul shewes this distinction of mankind, I have loved Iacob, and hated Esau, saith the Lord: neither did this difference come from their workes, either good or evill: for this difference God put betweene them, before either of them had done good or evill: but it is wholly ascribed to the will of God, who will have mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth. This must not seeme strange unto us: we permit unto men to use their owne discretion in their owne affaires, and this is a sufficient reason to stop any mans mouth; Is it mine owne, may I not doe with mine owne what I will? Againe, in Princes Proclamations we shall meet our selves to this clause, (It is our pleasure,) so likewise, a man having a flocke of sheepe, may send some of them to the slatting for the slaughter, and others keepe for breed; this God permitteth unto man; and it is not counted crueltie amongst men: now if wee give this liberty unto man over the creature, why should we not much more give it to the Creator himselfe over man, seeing the basest and least creature is something in regard of man, but man is nothing unto God? and therefore though these mysteries cannot be comprehended by reason, yet even in reason we may see some resemblance of the truth and equity of them, which must move us with reverence to submit our selves unto the soverainge will and pleasure of God herein.

The ground of Gods predestination.

Foreseene workes are not the ground of Gods decree.

Upon this ground of difference and distinction betweene man and man, we may well be admonished to beware of the errour of some Divines, who thus define of Gods will touching mans estate; They say it is the first will of God, that every man in the world should be saved, if they would, and therefore (say they) hee ministers unto them all helpes both of nature and grace, whereby they may repent and beleeve if they will. And having laid downe this his first will, he then (say they) foresees that some men will not beleeve, nor persevere in the faith: and hereupon it is (in their conceit) that hee will not know some men for his owne. Againe, foreseeing that others will beleeve and persevere in faith, them hee knowes and acknowledgeth to be his; dealing herein like unto a good father that hath many sonnes, who would have them all to doe well, and to have each one a good portion; but seeing that some will not become frugall and obedient, hee changeth his minde, and doth disinherit them: or like unto a good Prince, who would have all his subjects to doe well; but seeing some to be

be rebels, hee is of another minde, and willeth their death. Anſw. But this opinion is a meere invention of mans braine; for whereas they ſay, that God by a ſecond act of his will acknowledgeth ſome for his owne, and not others: upon the foreſight of their faith and unbeleefe, whereas by his firſt will he would have all men to be ſaved, it is not true; for the firſt will of God is, to know ſome, and not to know others; the ground whereof is his good pleaſure alone, and no foreſeene workes in them. And therefore it cannot be that hee ſhould will all men to be ſaved equally, Cain as well as Abel, Iudas as well as Peter. Againe, their opinion confutes it ſelfe: for God foreſeemes faith and unbeleefe, becauſe he hath decreed the ſame, and his decree depends upon his owne will alone: and therefore unleſſe wee make the ſame thing in the ſame reſpect, both the cauſe and the effect, we cannot make foreſeene workes the ground of difference betweene man and man. Then their compariſons are not fit: a father would have all his children to doe well, and to enjoy his portion: true, and more than that, he would make all his children to doe well, if it lay in his power; neither would he diſinherit any, if it lay in his power to make them good: the change of his purpoſe is in diſinheriting his ſonne, and ariſeth from the impotency of his will, that cannot doe that he would. And the ſame muſt bee ſaid of the will of Princes toward their ſubjects: but if there ſhould bee ſuch a will in God to have all men ſaved, if he could ſave them; then undoubtedly all men ſhould be ſaved, for who hath reſiſted his will? nay, whatſoever the Lord willeth, that doth hee in heaven, in earth, and every where, Pſal. 115. 3.

A ſecond point to bee conſidered in the diſtinction of men, whereby God knoweth ſome to be his, and doth not acknowledge ſome others for his, is the fruit of this knowledge of God. It is an effectuall and powerfull knowledge, working mutuall and ſtrange effects in mans heart, towards God; for from this, that God knoweth ſome to be his, there followeth another knowledge in mans heart, whereby he knoweth God to be his God. So Chriſt ſaith, Joh. 10. 14. I know my ſheepe, and am knowne of mine. Looke as the Sun caſts downe his beames upon us, by meanes whereof we againe ſee the body of the Sunne; even ſo the knowledge of God, whereby hee knoweth us for his, worketh in our hearts a knowledge of God in us, whereby we know him for our God. So Gal. 4. 9. Seeing yee know God, or rather are knowne of God: ſo that the knowledge of God, whereby he knoweth us to be his, is the ground of our knowledge of him to be our God. Againe, in this knowledge of God, whereby he knoweth the elect, is contained his love towards them; for hee knoweth and accepteth of man, and therefore loveth him: and this brings forth in man love to God againe. We love God, becauſe he hath loved us firſt. 1 Joh. 4. 19. So likewiſe God by his knowledge chuſeth us to be his peculiar people: and hence comes our chuſing of God to be our God; for looke as the ſeale ſets a print in the wax like unto it ſelfe, ſo the knowledge of God bringeth forth ſuch fruits in us to God-ward, as therewith God beareth and manifeſteth towards us.

On the other ſide, there be ſome whom God never knew, and the fruits hereof in them, be the fruits of juſtice; God not knowing them, they know not God: and the fruits of this knowledge, as love, and giving their hearts unto God, they have not. Indeed the ſinnes which men commit, come not from this, that God knoweth them not, but from the corrupt will of man: and yet theſe wants of knowledge, of love, and faith to God, as they are puniſhments, come from this, that God doth not know, nor acknowledge men for his.

Now whereas this knowledge of God is powerfull in his Elect, to produce from them true knowledge, affiance, and love of God againe; wee are to be admoniſhed to labour to feele in our hearts theſe graces, which are the impreſſions and fruits of Gods knowledge of us, that by them we may be able to ſay, I know God to be my God, and Chriſt my Redeemer. Let us therefore labour to know God aright, and to love God in Chriſt, and in his members, by true love; and to chuſe the true God to be our God, beſtowing our hearts and affections on him: for by theſe graces we ſhall know certainly that God knoweth us, loveth, and chuſeth us for his ſonnes and daughters in Chriſt: becauſe theſe graces in us are the proper fruits of the knowledge and love of God towards us: even as wee may know the Princes broad ſeale by the forme of it in wax, though wee never ſee the ſeale itſelfe. And on the contrary, we muſt take heed of that heavy judgement of God, whereby men goe on without knowledge, love, and affiance in God; for theſe are frarefull tokens of his wrath, befalling thoſe whom hee never knew.

The Vſe. 1. Whereas God knoweth ſome men for his owne, and will not acknowledge the ſame of others, and that onely upon his will and pleaſure, we may ſee here a wonderfull and unſearchable myſtery; which firſt of all ought to ſtirre us up, not to plead with God, but in an holy reverence to wonder at, and to admire his unſpeakable power and ſoveraignty over his creature: Rom. 11. 32. God hath ſhut up all under unbeleefe, that he might have mercy on all, ſaith the Apoſtle. Now he doth not reaſon the caſe further, but there ſtayeth himſelfe, with an admiration of Gods wonderfull power and wiſdome, crying out, O the deepneſſe of the riches, both of the wiſdome and knowledge of God, how unſearchable are his judgements, and his wayes paſt finding out! ver. 33. 2. This muſt ſtrike our hearts with feare and trembling towards God in regard of his judgements: the Apoſtle Paul ſpeaking to the Gentiles of Gods ancient ancient people, ſaith, The Iewes are cut off through unbeleefe, and thou ſtandeſt by faith; and thereupon makes this uſe to the Gentiles. Be not high minded but feare, Rom. 11. 20. 2. Hence wee are taught, not to ſooth up our ſelves (as uſually we doe) on hope of mercie in the death of Chriſt, without ſome ground hereof through true grace; but rather with feare and trembling, ſo long as wee have time, to labour in the meanes of ſalvation, which is Gods word, prayer, Sacraments, to be come true members of Chriſt, becauſe wee may deceive our ſelves with a vaine profeſſion: for though Gods mercie bee endleſſe in it ſelfe, yet it admits reſtraint to us-ward; and indeed ſhall never bee extended to all, nay not to many that in their life time made full account thereof in their vaine perſwations.

The reprobate never had true faith.

A third point here to bee obſerved is this; that ſuch as profeſſed Chriſts name here on earth, and yet after ſhall be condemned, never had true faith, nor true repentance, ſound love, nor hope; they might have ſome kinde of faith, I confeſſe, and many other excellent gifts; but if they had had true faith, thereby they ſhould have pleaſed God, and beene approved of Chriſt, and ſo at ſome time alſo, have beene accepted and acknowledged of him for his owne. For this wee muſt learne and hold as the truth of God, that where true faith, love, and hope are truly wrought, there they remaine for ever, at leaſt in the root: they may ſeeme for a time to be loſt, but yet never can bee quite extinct, For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance, Rom. 11. 29.

Fourthly, here it is plaine, that thoſe whom Chriſt will not ſave, hee never knew; hence it followes, that whom he knowes to be his, them hee will know to bee his for ever. This point muſt be remembred, becauſe it is the true foundation and ground of the ſalvation of mens ſoules: we are ſaid to be ſaved by faith, and by the word of God, yet only as by meanes, not as cauſes: but the only cauſe of our ſalvation, and of the meanes that brings us thereto, is this knowledge of God, whereby he accepteth and approveth us to be his owne.

Elect never fall away.

Hence wee may gather, that thoſe who are elect unto ſalvation, ſhall never periſh; for whom God once knowes to bee his, them hee knowes to be his for ever: and therefore Matt. 24. 24. it is made a thing impoſſible that the elect ſhould periſh: and the Apoſtle takes it for granted, that the election of God is unchangeable, Rom. 9. 11. remaining ever, according to his purpoſe. This knowledge of God, is that foundation which remaineth ſure, 2 Tim. 2. 19. The firſt grace of all is Gods favour, chuſing ſome men to be his of his meere good will; and this firſt grace, to whomſoever it is vouchſafed, remaineth for ever, admitting no change nor alteration, nor interruption. This doctrine muſt be underſtood, as the ſtay of our faith, and a ſure foundation of ſound comfort in any diſtreſſe: for true beleevers in time of affliction finde in themſelves much unbeleefe, and great proneneſſe to fall away from God. Yet here they have a ſure ſtay whereon to reſt, they muſt goe out of themſelves, and faſten their faith on Gods election, knowing hence, that though they be fraile and ſubject to fall away of themſelves, yet their ſalvation remaines ſtill grounded on the knowledge and election of God. So the Apoſtle Paul comforts himſelfe and the godly, Rom. 8. 32, 33. It is God that juſtifies, who ſhall condemne? and verſe 35. Who ſhall ſever us from the love of God in Chriſt, whereby he loveth us? And indeed, if a man have received true aſſurance of Gods favour, though but once in all his life; yet by that one light hee may aſſure himſelfe of his ſalvation upon this ground, that Gods love is unchangeable, though ever after he live in temptation; For whom God loveth, he loveth to the end, Joh. 13. 1.

Depart from me.] This is Chriſts commandement to thoſe whom hee never knew, though they profeſſed his name; and it is a moſt fearefull commandement, being all one with that, Matth. 25. 41. Goe yee curſed into everlaſting fire.

A motive to know and love God.

Now hence we may gather, that the ſecond death is properly a ſeparation from the comfortable fellowſhip of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt; and withall, a ſenſe and feeling of Gods wrath in that ſeparation. This appeares by the contrarie, for life everlaſting ſtands in fellowſhip with God the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghoſt. Now here a queſtion may bee asked, concerning the ſuffering of Chriſt; for our doctrine is; that hee ſuffered the ſecond death: whether then was he ſevered from God in his ſuffering? Anſwer. Chriſt our Saviour on the croſſe ſtood in our roome and ſtead, hee bare upon him the ſinnes of his elect, and for ſubſtance, the whole puniſhment due to the ſame, which was both the firſt and ſecond death: but yet concerning the ſuffering of the ſecond death, there remaines ſome difficultie. Touching it therefore wee muſt hold this ground, that our Saviour Chriſt ſuffered the ſecond death, ſo farre forth as the ſuffering thereof might ſtand with the union of his two natures, and with the holineſſe and dignitie of his perſon: and here theſe caveats muſt be marked:

How Chriſt ſuffered the ſecond death.

I. Caveat. That in his manhood hee endured a verie true ſeparation from the Godhead, and from his Father: yet not in regard of ſubſiſting and being, but of ſenſe and feeling only: and therefore hee cried, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken mee? having for a time no ſenſe of Gods favour, but only the feeling of his wrath and diſpleaſure.

II. Caveat. In his paſſion he did indure the ſorrowes of the ſecond death; he did not die the ſecond death, for then hee ſhould have beene overcome and utterly ſeparated from his father in ſubſiſting and being: but he ſuffered the ſecond death, and in ſuffering overcame it; as a man may be at the point of death, and feele the paines of the first death, and yet recover.

III. Caveat. Christ endured the paines of the damned, yet not in that manner which the damned doe; for hee endured them on the crosse, they in the place of the damned; Christ suffered them for a while, they endure them for ever; Christ suffered the second death, yet so as it prevailed not against him; but the damned are overwhelmed of it, it prevailes over them, and causeth them to blaspheme God: now their blasphemie increaseth their sinne, and their sinne causeth their torments to bee multiplied for ever. This Doctrine is suitable to the word of God, and to reason: for in mans reason, the death of the body could not bee a remedie to such persons as are condemned to a double death both of bodie and soule.

Vses. 1. Seeing the second death is a separation of man from God for ever, wee must labour in this life to have some true fellowship with God the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghost: that having it once, wee may enjoy the same for ever. This fellowship we shall come unto in the right use of the Word and Sacraments, and Prayer; for in the Word and Sacraments God condescends to speake unto us, and to deale familiarly with us, and in Prayer wee talke with God.

II. Vse. Note also to whom this commandement is spoken, Depart from me, namely, to such as come neere unto God with their lips, but yet keepe their hearts farre from him: in consideration whereof wee must not content our selves to professe the name of Christ outwardly, but wee must draw neere to God with all our affections, our love, joy, feare, and confidence, and yeeld obedience to his commandements; so shall wee escape this fearefull commandement of finall departure from him.

Yee workers of iniquitie.] This is the reason of the commandement: for the better understanding whereof this question must bee handled: How these men, that make such profession, can bee called workers of iniquitie: many of whom undoubtedly, lived in a civil & unblameable life outwardly, and could not bee charged with any horrible capitall sinnes. Anſ. There bee many great sinnes for which men may bee called workers of iniquitie, and be as vile in the sight of God as the murtherer and adulterer, though for outward life they be unblameable: as first hypocriſie, which is proper to the professors of religion, when as they content themselves to hold religion outwardly, but yet doe not bring their hearts, nor conforme their lives to their outward profession. Secondly, to professe love and worship to God, and yet not to performe duties of love and mercie unto men: for wee must love and serve God in the workes of brotherly love. Thirdly, to have the heart addicted to this or that sinne or sinnes; whether secret or open, in regard of the world, it skilleth not: for this is to bee a worker of iniquitie in Gods sight, when the heart taketh a settled delight in any sinne. And they are not so called because their iniquitie is always outward and seene to the world. Lastly, all the sinnes of the first Table, especially the sinnes against the two first Commandements, as not to know God, nor to love God, or to trust in him above all, not to worship him in heart and life together; these are all works of iniquitie, greater than the sinnes of the second Table in their kinde: and in regard of these also, professours are called workers of iniquitie.

Christ marketh the most secret sinn.

Vses. 1. Whereas Christ calleth those professours, workers of iniquitie, whose profession covered their sinnes from mens sight; wee may note, that Christ is a veric strict observer of mens wayes, even of the most secret sinnes, which appeare not to the world: though men may bee deceived by professours in this world, yet Christ cannot bee deceived, but at the last day of judgement hee will finde them out what they be. Many deceive themselves with a perswasion of mercie, because Christ is a Saviour, and so presume to goe on in sinne; but they must know, that Christ is also a severe Judge, who doth straitly observe mens sinnes, and will condemne the workers of iniquitie, as well as pardon them that repent: and therefore we must not flatter our selves to live in sinne, because hee is a Saviour; but rather feare to sinne, because he is a severe Judge against all iniquitie.

How Christ esteemes a godly life.

II. This shewes that Christ preferres an honest and godly life above most worthy gifts, even before the gifts of Prophecie and Miracles; and therefore our principall care must bee, to frame our hearts and lives to true obedience unto our God in all his Commandements.

A strong motive to repentance.

III. This must stirre us up to true and unfained repentance. If wee have not yet repented, it must move us to begin it: if wee have repented, we must doe it more; for Christ will pronounce a fearefull sentence of condemnation upon many professours, because they live in sin, though they have prophesied in his name, and cast out Devils, and done many great workes; yet because they have beene in heart addicted to some sinnes, hee shall say unto them at the last day, Depart from mee, and, Goe yee cursed into everlasting fire. The horrour whereof, seeing Christ hath so long before made it knowen unto us, ought to move us to humble our selves, to turne unto God, and to breake off the course of our sinnes, even in the purpose of our hearts. And if wee will not now tremble and turne, the day will come when wee shall heare a fearefull commandement, and obey it, and not bee able to turne from it: but if wee shall now turne to God by true repentance and new obedience, wee shall in that day heare the blessed voice of absolution upon our selves, when as the fearefull sentence of condemnation shall be pronounced upon others.

IV. Whereas many men shall be condemned,

Purge the heart from a purpose of sinning.

ned, because in heart they have beene addicted to some open or secret sinnes, wee must in the feare of God labour to purge our hearts from all sinne, so as wee bee not addicted to any one sinne, with purpose to live therein: yea, wee must labour to turne our selves from every evill way, from sinnes in thought, in affections, in behaviour and actions. The purpose of our heart must be, not to live in any one sinne, so as if we fall, wee may yet truly say, it was against our purpose and intent: and therefore we must labour to be renued in the spirit of our minds, even in the most secret part of our soules. It is not enough to leave sinne when it leaves us, by reason of weaknesse, or want of opportunitie: thus doth many an aged man, who having lived in lewdnesse and lust all his youth, doth at length, by reason of weaknesse in old age, leave those sinnes in practice; but yet his heart is still addicted to them, and therefore even then, when hee cannot goe without a staffe, will hee take great delight in rehearsing and remembring the trickes of his youth. Now this man hath no repentance: for his delight in the remembrance of sinne past, is all one before God, as if he had lived still in the practice thereof: our prayer therefore must be with David, to the Lord continually, that hee would incline our hearts unto his commandements, and not to covetousnesse, or any other sinne, Psal. 119. 36.

v. 24 Whosoever then heareth of mee these words, and doth the same, I will liken him to a wise man which hath builded his house on a rocke, 25 And the raine fell, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house, and it fell not: for it was grounded on a rocke.

Conclusion of Christs Sermon.

After the delivery of many notable instructions in this Sermon of our Saviour Christ, wherby hee hath sufficiently shewed himselfe to bee the true Prophet and Doctor of his Church: in this verse, and those which follow, to the 28. he comes to lay downe the conclusion of this excellent Sermon, wherein hee doth stirre up his hearers to a notable dutie; namely, that they should not make light account of his Doctrine, contenting themselves barely to heare, reade, or to learne the same; but further, to goe about the practice thereof in their lives and conversations. And for the effecting hereof, hee layes downe here at large, the fruit of true obedience to the Word. In this conclusion are these points contained: I. A maine dutie to be done of all his hearers; that is, to heare and doe the words of Christ: Whosoever heareth these my words, and doth the same. II. The propertie of this dutie; it is a note of great wisdome: I will liken him to a wise man, &c. III. The fruit of this dutie: Safetie and securitie against all perils of bodie and soule, in the 25. verse: all which are amplified by their contraries, in the 26. and 27. verses, as we shall see in their place.

The duties of every good hearer.

The first point is the maine dutie of every good hearer, namely, to joyne practice with knowledge of the word of Christ. This dutie is oft urged upon us by the Holy Ghost, Rom. 2. 13. Not the hearers of the Law, but the doers thereof shall be justified before God: And Saint James stands long on this dutie, Jam. 1. 22. Be yee doers of the Word, and not hearers only, deceiving your owne soules: which after he enforceth both by the vanitie of hearing without doing, v. 23, 24. and by the blessing that accompanies obedient hearing, v. 25. and Luk. 11. 27, 28. when a woman in admiration at Christs Doctrine, pronounced her blessed that bare him; Christ answered, Nay, rather blessed are they that heare the word of God, and keepe it. And in the Parable of the Sower, Matth. 13. there are foure kindes of hearers, three bad, and one only good, who doe heare, know, receive, embrace the word of God, and withall bring forth fruit plentifully. And naturall reason may perswade us of the weight of this dutie; for the best learning that men have in humane things is to little, or of no use, without practice: much lesse can divine Doctrine then profit a man without obedience be joyned therewith.

Vse. The consideration hereof must move us to pray to God the Father in the name of Christ, that he would vouchsafe his Spirit unto us, whereby our hearts might be inclined, disposed and bent to an unfained love and obedience of Gods precepts, delivered in his holy Word, because it is our dutie to live in the practice of that wee heare. Yea, wee must pray so to performe obedience in our life, that our consciences may not only not accuse us, but also excuse us before God in regard thereof; or at least, in regard of our true endevour and desire to obey. This dutie being practised, will minister true comfort unto us in time of distresse, yea, in the fearefull case of death it selfe. Hereby did good King Hezekias comfort himselfe at his death, that he had walked before the Lord with an upright and perfect heart, Isay 38. And the word of God is plaine for this comfort, If our hearts condemne us not, then wee have boldnesse towards God, 1 Joh. 3. 21. allwayes provided, we have a good understanding of our dutie to God, for an ignorant conscience will falsly excuse.

Conscience hearing wants understan.

II. Point. The propertie of this dutie. It is a part of great wisdome, for he that heareth and obeyeth, is the only wise man; I will liken him (saith Christ) unto a wise man. This point is likewise with care to bee remembred, that the hearing and doing of the word of God, is a speciall part of true wisdome: this is notably verefied in the 32. Psalme, which is intituled Davids learning; and indeed it is a notable Psalme of learning, containing the summe of all religion; which David bringeth to these two heads, his repentance and new obedience. So Deut. 4. 6. the peoples obedience to Gods commandements, is counted by Moses their wisdome: and for this cause hee there saith, They shall bee counted the wisest people under Heaven, because they served and obeyed the true God: to which purpose it is said, The feare of God is the beginning of wisdome, a good understanding have all they that doe thereafter, Psal. 111. 10.

Hence we learne these instructions: 1. All Superiours, Magistrates, Masters, and Parents, are bound to go before their inferiours in wisdome, as they are above them in authoritie; and therefore considering obedience is true wisdome, everie Superiour ought to goe before his inferiours in obedience to Gods Commandements: for this only is true wisdome, without which all other wisdome is but folly and madnesse.

2. Hence all Students that professe themselves to seeke for wisdome and learning, are taught especially to give themselves to learne and obey the will & Commandements of God; for this is true wisdome, both before God and man. And it is a great blemish and disgrace for any man of knowledge, to lead a loose & dissolute life; this argues their want of Gods feare, which is the verie ground of true wisdome.

3. This gives a good caveat to ignorant persons, who perswade themselves they may continue in their ignorance, because they are not book-learned; but they deceive themselves, for obedience is true wisdome; and therefore they must labour for so much knowledge as will bring them to this wisdome here commended.

Now to come more specially to this true wisdome, we must search out wherein it lieth. This is expressed in these words, which hath builded his house on a rocke: which S. Luke setteth downe more largely, chap. 6. 48. saying, he digged deepe, and laid his foundation on a rocke. In which words, three parts of this wisdome are propounded: 1. to dig deepe: 2. to make choice of a rocke for a foundation: and 3. to build thereon. The builder is the professour of the name of Christ; and this digging deepe to finde out a sit foundation, signifieth thus much; that hee that would make sure his owne salvation, must come to a deepe search and examination of his owne corrupt heart, that hee may know the iniquitie thereof: as also hee must renounce himselfe and his pleasures; and whatsoever may hinder him in this building hee must cast out: for without this deepe search and ransacking of the heart, there can bee no sure foundation laid, nor certaintie of salvation attained.

The second point of this wisdome, is to chuse a foundation to lay our salvation upon; and that is the rocke Christ Jesus himself, true God and man, hee is the chiefe corner-stone, on which the whole building is coupled, Ephes. 2. 20, 21. Neither is there salvation in any other: for among men there is given no other name under Heaven, by which wee must be saved, than Christ Jesus only, Acts 4. 12. and no other foundation can any man lay, than that which is already laid, which is Jesus Christ, 1 Cor. 3. 11. Christ is the rocke and corner-stone, and true Christians are living stones built upon him, 1 Pet. 2. 5. As for our works, they are fruits, but no part of this foundation, unlesse to them that build on the sand, like foolish builders.

Thirdly, having found a good foundation we must build thereon. Our soules and our salvation must be builded on Christ. This is done by our faith in Christ: for as mutuall love joynes one man unto another; so true faith makes us one with Christ: Eph. 3. 17. the Holy Ghost saith, that Christ doth dwell in our hearts by faith: and Psal. 125. 1. He that trusts in the Lord, is as mount Sion that cannot be removed. Yet here two cavets must bee remembred; 1. That Christ is a rocke, yet not everie way that man frames in his owne heart, but only so as hee hath offered himselfe in the promise of the Gospell, which is the word of the covenant of grace. And for this cause wee must labour that this word of Gods grace may bee rooted and grounded in our hearts by faith: for it is all one to beleeve in Christ, and to beleeve the Word that reveales Christ unto us, so faith our Saviour, He that refuseth me, and receiveth not my Word, hath one that judgeth him, Joh. 12. 48. And, If yee abide in me, and my words abide in you, Joh. 15. 7. Wee therefore must be like the good ground: for as it receives and keepes the good seed, so doth the good heart receive and keepe the word of grace, which being rooted in our hearts keepes us united unto Christ, and therefore it is called the ingraffed word, Jam. 1. 21. which being mingled with faith in our hearts is profitable, for it knits us fast to Christ, and makes us grow up in him unto perfection. II. Caveat. We must set all the maine affections of our heart on Christ: for hereby must we shew forth our faith. We must so esteeme and love Christ, as that in regard of him we count all things losse, and dung, with the Apostle; yea, we must so delight in Christ, that we desire him wholly, and receive nothing into our hearts but Christ alone. Thomas desired but to put his finger into his side, but we must goe further, and desire to have our soules washed in the blood that issued thence, and to have our hearts possessed by his Spirit, whom hee giveth to his Church.

Vse. Seeing Christ Jesus is the rocke of our salvation, our dutie is to have our hearts rooted and founded on Christ. They which be as the stony ground, heare and receive the Word, and it takes some rooting in them, and brings forth some fruit: but as the rooting is not deepe, so the fruit is never ripe, and therefore when heat commeth, it withereth: so it is with professors; a man may be one in name, and bring forth some fruit of the Word which hee heares, and yet be deceived in the matter of his Elvation, because he is not rooted and founded in Christ. This is the point which Paul stands much upon in sundrie of his Epistles: for shew of grace will not serve the turne. Indeed in these happie dayes of peace any grace makes a man seeme to be a Christian: but when the parching heat of persecution comes, unlesse we be thorowly rooted in Christ, wee shall never continue to the end, nor bring forth fruit with patience.

III. Point. The fruit of this true obedience, in which men by faith build themselves on Christ Jesus, is securitie and safetie against all temptations of the Devill, the flesh, and the world: meant by the standing of the house that was built upon the rocke, notwithstanding the falling of the raine, the beating of the floods, and the blowing of the winds, vers. 25. A most notable fruit which nothing else but true obedience can procure unto us: wealth cannot minister this comfortable securitie; nay, the more wealth, oftimes the more trouble; and unto many, riches are the causes of a fearefull downefall. No strength of man, nor power of any Princes can procure this safetie, and yet Christ vouchsafeth the same to them that heare his Word and keepe it.

The consideration hereof, must move us to bee most willing and readie to performe obedience to that holy word of God, which wee reade and heare: for such a benefit comes by it, as no creature in the world can procure besides: and the rather wee must inure our selves hereto, because our sinnes deserve an end of these happie dayes of peace, and we may justly looke for the black dayes of persecution, which when they come will surely bee our ruine, unlesse in these dayes of peace we heare the Word and doe it.

Secondly, from this fruit of true obedience wee may gather, that hee which once hath true faith in Christ rooted in his heart, shall never lose the same either wholly or finally, but shall continue therein unto the end, and enjoy the fruit thereof for ever. For by faith a man is truly built on Christ, as on a most sure foundation, so as neither temptations nor persecutions can drive him off: though they may assault and shake him, yet they can never throw him down: but if a man might quite lose his faith, then might hee bee beaten downe that is built on Christ, which thing this Text denieth.

Lastly, this teacheth us, that he that is built on Christ by faith, must looke for fearefull trials and temptations: for hee is like an house built on the sea banke, against which wind, and raine, and waves, doe all beat and rage. Gods children must not looke to goe to Heaven in ease, but they must wait for trials and temptations comming hand in hand, as wind and raine, and wind and wave commonly doe: and therefore the more carefull and earnestly must wee labour, to bee surely grounded on Christ, that though they assault us, yet they may not throw us downe.

v. 26 But whosoever heareth these my words, and doth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which hath builded his house upon the sand:

27 And the raine fell, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house, and it fell, and the fall thereof was great.

In these verses our Saviour Christ layeth downe foure other points contrarie to the former, belonging to an evill hearer. The I. is the fault and bad practice of an evill hearer; to heare Christs words, and not to doe the same: II. the propertie of this vice: it is a point of extreme folly: III. the practice of this folly: in building upon the sands: IV. the fruit and issue of this building: fearefull ruine and destruction. Of these in order.

I. Point. The practice of a bad hearer, from which Christ would terrifie all men in this place is, To heare, and not to doe. This is no small fault. The ground that receiveth seed and raine, both in measure and season, and yet bringeth forth either bad fruit, or none at all, is by all men condemned for bad ground; the Apostle saith, it is neere unto cursing, whose end is to be burned, Heb. 6. 8. The waters that come and issue from under the threshold of the Sanctuarie, Ezek. 47. 1. whereby is meant the word of God, when they come into any ground they are of this nature, if they make it not fruitfull they turne it into barrennesse, vers. 11. A subject that knowes his Princes will, and doth it not, is indeed no better than a Rebell: how much more then is hee that heares the Word and Doctrine of salvation by Christ, and yet makes no conscience to doe the same, to bee judged for bad and barren ground, yea, for a Rebell against God himselfe. 1 Sam. 15. 23. Samuel telleth Saul, that rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and transgression is wickednesse and idolatrie: And the reason is plaine, for they that submit themselves to heare Gods word, are sundrie wayes bound to performe obedience. First, by the law of creation, as they are Gods creatures. Secondly, by the law of redemption, as they are Christs servants, bought by his most pretious bloud. Thirdly, in regard of their Adoption, Adoption, as they are, or at leaſt hold themſelves to be his children in Chriſt: and fourthly, in regard of his mercifull providence whereof wee have daily experience: in regard of all theſe wee ought by way of thankfulneſſe, to ſhew our ſelves obedient unto his Word. And therefore he that heares the word of God, and will not doe the ſame, ſinneth grievouſly againſt God, which in it kinde God hateth as the ſinne of witchcraft. Now this ſinne of diſobedience is a common ſinne: Wee are all hearers, but where almoſt is the man that anſwerably is a doer? Men content themſelves with the bare action of hearing, like unto the Papiſts, who thinke God is well ſerved with the worke done: but the principall thing wee omit, which is the treaſuring up of Gods word in our hearts, that upon juſt occaſion wee might practiſe the ſame: yea, which yet is more lamentable, men are ſo farre from yeelding conſcionable obedience to the Word, that the endevour thereunto is commonly judged ſuperfluous niceneſſe and curious preciſeneſſe: but this ſinne of hearing and not doing, will bring many fearefull judgements upon us, unleſſe by true repentance it bee cut off.

A

II. Point. The propertie of this bad practice. It is a point of great folly: He that heareth and doth not, ſhall be likened unto a fooliſh man. This the Author of all wiſdom Chriſt himſelfe avoucheth: and the Holy Ghoſt by S. Iames doth notably deſcribe this part of folly; They that be hearers and not doers, deceive themſelves, being like unto a man that beholdeth his naturall face in a glaſſe: either to ſpie out ſome ſpot, or diſcerne his owne countenance; but when he hath conſidered himſelfe, he goeth his way, and forgetteth immediately what manner of one he was.

Againe, this folly will further appeare in this: if a man ſhould ſhew forth great parts of wiſdome in ſundrie things pertaining to his bodie, and yet faile in the maine point of all, everie man would count his wiſdome but folly: Now ſuch are all they that heare the word of God, and doe it not: they ſhew ſome parts of wiſdome in comming to heare, and in ſeeking to underſtand: and yet if they come not to practiſe, they faile in the maine point of their ſalvation, which indeed ought to bee ſought for in the firſt place.

D

I. By this we may ſee how to correct and reforme our fooliſh conceit wee have of men in the world. Wee thinke of thoſe that have worldly wiſſome to bee able to goe beyond others in the greater affaires of this life, that they are the only men, deſerving beſt place of government both in Church & Common-wealth: But we muſt know, that theſe men, though they have never ſo good heads for the things of this life, yet if they faile in the knowledge of this dutie to God, or in the practice thereof, are here by our Saviour Chriſt noted with the brand of folly. The rich man in the Goſpell had notable foreceaſt for the augmenting of his wealth: when his ſubſtance increaſed, hee could pull downe his barnes and make them greater, but yet becauſe hee failed in the maine point of his ſalvation, he is noted for a rich foole, Luk. 12.20. And therefore in all ſorts and eſtates of men, he is the wiſeſt, who hath grace to know, and anſwerably to obey the will of God.

A motive to obedience.

II. This muſt excite us to a carefull endevour after true obedience to God in all his commaudements. Wee all deſire to bee freed from the reproach of folly among men, and wee take it for a great diſgrace to bee counted fooles: well, if we would avoid this ignominie indeed, let us bee willing to heare, and carefull to obey the word of Chriſt, both in thought, word, and deed: otherwiſe, let men judge as they liſt, God will account us fooles.

III. Point. The practice of this folly, which conſiſts in this; that he builds his houſe upon the ſands: whereby is ſignified another thing concerning the ſoule; namely, to build our ſalvation upon inſufficient foundation; and that doth everie hearer of Gods word that makes not conſcience of obedience: for profeſſion is as it were the erecting or rearing of an houſe: and the not performing obedience withall, is the ſetting of this houſe upon the ſands. There be three ſorts of men that thus build upon the ſands: I. The Papiſt that will be juſtified and ſaved by Chriſt: but yet withall hee muſt have works of grace to concurre for the increaſe of his juſtification, and for the accompliſhment of his ſalvation. Now this is to build upon the ſands, when wee joyne workes with Chriſt in the matter of ſalvation: for though Chriſt be a ſure rocke in himſelfe, yet if we will fortifie him by our works, we fall from this rocke into perdition, and our foundation is no better than ſand. Gal. 5.2. Behold I Paul ſay unto you, that if you be circumciſed, Chriſt ſhall profit you nothing: and v.4. Yee are fallen from Chriſt, whoſoever will be juſtified by the Law: In which places the Apoſtle labors to overthrow the opinion of the Galatians learned of the falſe Apoſtles, which was, to joyne works with Chriſt in the matter of juſtification: Rom. 9. 22. Chriſt became unto the Iewes a rocke of offence, when as they would be ſaved by the works of the Law.

Who build on the ſands. I. Papiſts. Concil. trid. ſeſſ. 6. cap. 9. 10. 16.

A ſecond ſort that build upon the ſands, are the common Proteſtants; by whom I meane ſuch as beare the name of Chriſtians, and yet reſt themſelves contented and ſatisfied with their civill lives; thinking, that becauſe they abſtaine from outward evill and groſſe ſins, and doe no man wrong, therefore God will hold them excuſed: whereupon they profeſſe religion more for obedience to the lawes of men, than for conſcience to God. But this will not ſerve the turne, theſe men though they profeſſe Chriſt outwardly, yet in deed they denie him: for by their courſe (though it may be they thinke not ſo) they will needs become ſaviours, and ſo Chriſts unto themſelves: which thing they doe, when as they ſtay themſelves on their owne owne civill life. The Scribes and Phariſees for outward actions were very godly, and many of them lived unblameable: but yet Chriſt ſaith to his diſciples, Matth. 5.20. Except your righteouſneſſe exceed the righteouſneſſe of the Scribes and Phariſees, ye cannot enter into the kingdome of heaven. And Paul goes ſomewhat further, ſpeaking of himſelfe when he was an Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 4.4. I know nothing by my ſelfe, and yet am I not thereby juſtified. This was a notable thing, for a man to walke ſo uprightly in his calling, that his owne ſanctified conſcience could not accuſe him of any offence therein, either againſt God or man; and yet this is nothing in the matter of juſtification, wherein the righteouſneſſe of the whole law muſt bee fulfilled, which cannot be done by the obedience of ſanctification, which is not perfect in this life: and therefore Paul deſires, not to be found of God therein, Philip. 3.9. much leſſe by civill righteouſneſſe, which conſiſting onely in outward behaviour, may be in thoſe that never have the ſpirit of grace to renue their ſoules, as the Apoſtle witneſſeth of the Gentiles, that ſome of them doe by nature the things contained in the Law: that is, outwardly: But without the ſpirit they are none of Chriſts, for he that hath not the Spirit of God is none of his, Rom. 8.9. neither can poſſibly enter into the kingdome of God: for except a man be borne againe of water, and of the holy Spirit, that is, be regenerate by the holy Ghoſt, he cannot enter into the kingdome of God.

John 3.5.

3 The more forward Proteſtant.

The third ſort of thoſe that build upon the ſand, is the Proteſtant that is more forward in religion than the former: I meane ſuch as doe heare the word of God ordinarily, and receive it with joy, bringing forth ſome good fruit thereof. It had beene hard, I muſt confeſſe, to have called ſuch men fooliſh builders, without good warrant out of the Word. But Jeſus Chriſt hath revealed them to be ſuch as build upon the ſand: for in the parable of the Sower, Luke 8.13. They that receive the ſeed in ſtonie ground, are they which heare the Word, and incontinently with joy receive it: but they have no roots, which for a while beleeve, there is ſome fruit, but in time of temptation they goe away: of ſuch S. Iohn ſpeaketh, John 6.66. From that time many of his diſciples went backe, and walked no more with him. They were his followers, and heard him gladly, or elſe they ſhould never have beene called his Diſciples, but their going backe doth plainely, diſcover their ſandie foundation: of ſuch alſo he ſpeaketh in his Epiſtle, They went out from us, but they were not of us: for a time they profeſſed Chriſt, and ſo were among the faithfull, but when trouble and perſecution came, becauſe of the Word, then they went away, wanting true humilitie and ſound faith, whereby they ſhould have beene built upon Chriſt; which want in time of peace they could not eſpie.

1 John 2.19.

Vſes. I. Seeing that men which heare and receive the word of God with joy, may build on a ſandie foundation, we muſt not content our ſelves herewith, but further pray to God for this one bleſſing, that he would write his word in our hearts by the finger of his Spirit, as he writ the Law on tables of ſtone in Mount Sina: for our hearts are deceitfull, as the Prophet ſpeaketh, and in the time of peace will counterfeit grace, which in time of triall will vaniſh away as the Miſt before the Sunne. Now God hath promiſed this bleſſing to his Church in the new Teſtament, Jere. 31.33. After theſe dayes, ſaith the Lord, I will put my Law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts: and Chap. 32.40. I will put my feare in their hearts, that they ſhall not depart from me. This therefore we muſt pray for, that the word which we heare may enable us to obedience in the time of peace, and arme and ſtrengthen us againſt temptation in the day of triall, and ſo become the power of God to our ſalvation.

Jerem. 17 9.

II. This muſt move us to looke unto the deceitfulneſſe of our hearts. The caſe is weighтie, reſpecting the eternall ſtate of our ſoules, and yet through ſpirituall guile may we eaſily deceive our ſelves herein: for who would not thinke himſelfe to be in a good caſe, when he doth receive the word with joy, and bring forth ſome fruits thereof? This indeed is a good ſtep towards grace, but if we goe no further we deceive our ſelves, this will not ſerve our turne in the time of triall: as yet we are but thoſe who receive the ſeed on ſtonie ground: the graces which we make ſhew of, will be like the graſſe on the houſe top, which withereth in the blade before it ſhoote forth. Wherefore wee muſt looke well to our ſoules, that in our profeſſion we carrie a true heart toward God, and keepe a good conſcience in our ſelves. And for this cauſe muſt ſee that we be throughly humbled in our ſelves for our ſinnes, that we truſt not in our ſelves, but in God, and make his mercie in Chriſt to be our chiefe treaſure. Alſo we muſt remember that we are not our owne, but Gods: for he hath bought us, and ſo we muſt not take libertie to diſpoſe of our ſelves as we liſt, but muſt ſubject our ſelves wholly to his bleſſed will in all things. And becauſe he hath revealed his will in his holy Word, according to which he would have us to frame our lives, we muſt endevour to prove and trie what is the good will of God and acceptable, and let the obedience of our lives expreſſe our faith in God, and reverence towards his word: And if thus we make God in Chriſt our joy and feare in the dayes of peace, we ſhall be ſure to finde him the Rocke of our ſalvation in the time of triall.

III. Seeing men may receive the word with joy, and bring forth ſome fruit, and yet build upon the ſand, we muſt not content our ſelves with this, that we know Chriſt to be a Saviour, and doe embrace true religion in profeſſion: but we muſt labour for the power of this knowledge in our ſelves, that we may know Chriſt to be our Saviour, and may feele the power of his death to mortifie ſinne in us, and the vertue of his reſurrection, surrection, to raise and build us up to newnesse of life: for knowledge in the braine will not save the soule: saving knowledge in religion is experimentall: and he that is truly founded upon Christ, feeles the power and efficacie of his death and resurrection, effectually causing the death of sinne, and the life of grace, which both appeare by new obedience.

IV. Point. The effect and fruit of bad hearing; that is, fearefull ruine and destruction, resembled by the ruine of building on the sands: verse 27. The raine fell, the floods came, and the wind blew, and beat upon that house, &c. where two things are to be noted: First, the cause of this fearefull ruine, The falling of the raine, and the beating of the floods and winds: Secondly, the qualitie of this ruine; it is great and fearefull, The house fell, and the fall thereof was great.

For the first: Floods, and wind, and raine, doe here betoken trialls and temptations, which are here said to befall the professours of the name of Christ. Whence we learne, that every one that doth professe true religion must looke for a day of temptation and triall. It is Gods will that whosoever taketh upon him the profession of his Name, should be tried and proved what he is. Thus he permitted Adam presently after his creation, to be tempted and tried by Satan; the smart whereof we all feele unto this day: and God gave Abraham a commandement of triall, when he bade him take his onely sonne Isaac whom he loved, and offer him up for a burnt offering in mount Moriah, Genes. 22.1,2. So he left Hezekias to himselfe to trie him, and to make knowne what was in his heart, when the Embassadours of the Princes of Babel came unto him, to inquire of the wonder which God had done in the land. 2 Chron. 32.31. And Iohn Baptists saith of Christ, that he hath his fanne in his hand, to sift and trie the good come from chaffe, Matth. 3. 12. And Christ tells Peter that the devill sought to winnow the Disciples as wheat, Luke 22.31. And for the triall of his faith and patience, God gave Iob and all that he had into Satans hands, except his life, Job 1.12. and 2.6. And Christ tells the Church of Smyrna, Revel. 1.10. The devill shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried, and ye shall have affliction ten dayes. And S. Peter makes it a thing requisite, that the faith of Gods servants should be tried by affliction, as gold is tried in the fire, 1 Peter 1.7.

Vse. We now have by Gods mercie true religion maintained and professed among us, and are freed from the bondage of the Turke, Jew, and Papists, in regard of their Idolatries and superstitions. These are inestimable blessings, which we must labour to walke worthy of, and therefore must stand fast in our profession, and quit our selves like men in the maintenance of true religion, not suffering our selves to be deprived of it by any adversarie power: for times will come when we must be assaulted: the floods, wind, and raine of trialls and temptations will beat upon the house of our profession: for God hath so dealt with his dearest servants, and we may not looke to goe free: Now without a good foundation we shall not keepe our standing: we must therefore in this happie time of peace and truth, which is to us the day of grace and mercie, seriously labour to have our hearts indued with some good measure of lasting grace, as of sincere love, sound hope, and faith unfeined, which as good gold may abide the firie triall of afflictions. This is Pauls counsell to the Colossians, Chap. 2.6,7. Seeing you have received Christ Iesus the Lord, walke in him: that is, goe on forward in the same profession: but how? rooted and built in him, and stablished in the faith, as ye have beene taught, abounding therein with thanksgiving. And when he had told the Ephesians of the mightie spirituall enemies that they must wrestle with, for the keeping of faith and a good conscience: he bids them take unto themselves the whole armour of God, and put it on, that they may be able to resist and stand in the evill day, that is, the day of triall. In earthly kingdomes every prudent and wel-governing state, will have munition in store, and men in readinesse for their defence against an enemie: and surely in Gods kingdome every one that doth professe the truth, should labour to be furnished with sound grace, that they may be able to fight for the maintenance of the faith. If an householder knew that theeves would come upon him, he would not be taken unprovided: well, we are taught that trialls will come, and therefore let us not be unprepared.

Ephes. 6.12.

The second point in this effect is the qualitie of this ruine and fall; it is great and fearefull: It fell, and the fall thereof was great. The thing resembled hereby is most fearefull, to wit, that such professours of religion as in the dayes of peace did not joyne practice with their profession, shall fall away in the time of triall, and come to most fearefull perdition: this is the principall point that Christ here aimes at, whereby he intends to terrifie men from dissembled profession. And the consideration of it must worke effectually in our hearts: for we by Gods mercie and blessing, have had the light of the Gospel for many yeares together, in such measure as never was in this land before: so as in regard of the meanes it may be said of us, as Christ said of Capernaum, that we are exalted up to heaven, Matth. 11.23. The true light now shineth, and in that regard, blessed are our eyes for they see, and our eares for they heare. But yet though the most among us be hearers, where is our obedience? we have indeed the blazing lampe of outward profession, but where is the oyle of grace? Alas, some among us grow to be peremptorie and flat Atheists, denying God that made them, and making but a mocke of Jesus Christ: others, not a few, under the name of religion, roote their hearts in the world, some in profits, and some in pleasures, and none of these almost regard religion: others professe religion, and yet live in grosse sinnes, as swearing, drunkennesse, uncleannesse, &c. making no conscience of grosse impietie in their lives: so that if we looke into the generall state of our people, we shall see that religion is professed, but not obeyed: nay, obedience is counted precisenesse, and so reproached; but we must know that in the end this prophaning of religion will soone turne all Gods blessings temporall and spirituall, into fearefull curses both of body and soule. If ever any thing bring ruine upon us, it will be the contempt of Gods word professed: and therefore let us in the feare of God endevour our selves not onely to know and heare the Word of God, but to turne unto God from all sinne, and especially in regard of this sinne of disobedience to the Word of God.

Danger of hypocrisie.

Lastly, Christ notes the qualitie of this fall to be exceeding great, to shew unto us the great danger of hypocrisie: for there is great difference betweene these three sorts of men: a sinner that makes no profession of religion, an hypocrite that makes a great shew of pietie in profession, and a true believer, whose life and conversation is answerable to his profession. For a true professour may fall into sinne very fearefully, as Peter and David did, and yet recover againe. Also he that is a most notorious sinner, as Manasses was, may be converted and repent. But when a professour that is an hypocrite in religion is tried, he falls quite from Christ, and makes a apostasie from his profession: and in this regard his fall is called great. And therefore seeing professours may thus fearefully fall away; let us in the feare of God, labour in some truth of heart to yeeld obedience to that we heare.

v. 28 And it came to passe when Iesus had ended these words, the people were astonied at his doctrine.

29 For he taught as one having authoritie, and not as the Scribes.

These two verses containe the issue and event of this Sermon of our Saviour Christ in his hearers. And in them wee may observe two points: First, the good fruit that came of this Sermon, verse 28. Secondly, the cause and reason thereof, verse 29. The fruit was the astonishing of the people: which S. Matthew sets out by three circumstances: I. Of the time, when it appeared, to wit, after the Sermon was ended: II. Of the persons in whom it was wrought, the people, that is, the multitude: III. Of the matter whereat they were astonished, namely, at the doctrine of Christ.

The Majestie of Christs ministerie.

Touching this astonishing of the people, in it many things are to bee observed. I. That though the person of our Saviour Christ were lowly and base, yet his doctrine in preaching was of great force in the minds of his hearers, for it did amaze and astonish them. This caused the officers that were sent to take him to returne without him, alleaging the majestie of his doctrine for the reason of their fact, Never man spake as this man did, John 7.46. and when the governours came with a band of men to apprehend him, so soone as he did but tell them he was the Christ, they went backward, and fell to the ground, John 18.6.

This sheweth unto us, that the voice and sentence of Christ given at the last day of Judgement, will be most fearefull and terrible. For if his words were thus powerfull in his base estate of humilitie, what force will they then have, when he shall come in glory and majestie in the clouds, accompanied with thousands of Angels, when as his sight shall be so terrible, that men shall call to the mountaines to fall upon them, and to the rockes to grind them in peeces, if it were possible? well, let the consideration hereof move us to be obedient to his voice in the ministerie of his Word; otherwise, will we nill we, we shall one day be subject to that fearefull voice of condemnation, Goe ye cursed into everlasting fire.

Astonishment at the word not a signe of conversion.

II. Doctrine. This astonishment of the people argues some feare and reverence in them towards Christ, which is some commendation unto them: and yet it proves not the truth and soundnesse of their faith and conversion, (though no doubt many that heard him were hereby converted:) for a man may be amazed at Christs doctrine, and yet not be converted thereby: Luke 4.22. the people of Capernaum did marvellously affect the doctrine of our Saviour Christ, admiring it, and yet they beleeved not in him, but tooke exceptions against him, because he was sonne to Ioseph the Carpenter. Pharaoh, Saul, and Ahab, when they were reproved by Moses, Samuel, and Eliah, they were oftentimes much amazed and confounded in themselves: and yet they did never truly turne from their sinnes: And in this place, I take it, this astonishment of the people is recorded, rather for the commendation of Christs ministerie, than to note out the faith and conversion of the people.

This we are to observe for speciall cause: for it is the ordinarie manner of the most of our hearers, to marke more or lesse what is spoken, to approve the doctrine, and to speake well of the minister, which bee good things in their kinde: but yet this is not enough: we must further labour to receive the word by faith, to repent of our sinnes, and to conforme our hearts and lives unto the word: Luke 11.27. when a woman through admiration at Christs doctrine, pronounced her blessed that bare him, and the paps that gave him sucke; Christ tooke occasion thence to give unto her and the rest of the hearers this lesson: nay, rather blessed are they that heare the word of God and doe it. Acts 2.37.

at the first Sermon of Peter after the giving of the holy Ghost, the people were greatly amazed at his doctrine, and being pricked in conscience, cried, men and brethren, what shall we doe? now Peter differs them not to stand still in this astonishment, but labours further to bring them to true faith and repentance, and to have the same by baptisme confirmed unto them, saying, Amend your lives, and be baptized, ver. 38. And so dealt Paul with the Jaylor that would have killed himselfe upon the sudden sight of the prison doore being open; for after he was truly humbled he brought him to beleeve.

It may be here demanded, why our Saviour Christ at this Sermon did no more to the most of his hearers, but caused them to wonder, when as the Apostles converted many thousands at some one Sermon: and after brought the whole body of the Gentiles to the faith. Ans. No doubt he was able to have converted them all, and we may perswade our selves here were many converted, though it be not recorded, and though indeed the most were onely astonished. But this came so to passe that his promise made to his Disciples might be verified, John 14.12. which was, that they should doe greater workes than Christ did; whereof this questionlesse was one, to convert moe in their ministerie than Christ did. And the causes hereof were two: I. That our Saviour Christ might shew himselfe willing to undergoe that base estate of a servant wherein he was borne and continued till his exaltation; therefore he was content to restraine the power of his God-head even from his ministerie, untill he were exalted into glory: II. That he might make it manifest in his Apostles times, that being ascended he did not onely sit at the right hand of his father, that is, rule as a King over all in his princely office; but also that he did indeed governe his Church by his Word and Spirit: and this reason Christ addeth, John 14.12. to prove that his disciples should doe greater workes than he did, because he went unto his Father, there to rule and governe his Church.

It may yet further be asked, why Christ did not convert them all, seeing he was able being true and very God. Ans. No doubt (as hath beene said) many were here converted, yet not all, because Christ was now the minister of circumcision, (as the Apostle speaketh) that is, though in regard of his person he were the Prophet of the whole Catholike Church, yet at this time in this action he was preacher onely to the Church of the Jewes: in which regard he performed this dutie as man onely, and so could doe no more but deliver his Fathers will unto them, and shew himselfe willing to convert them. And in this manner he speakes unto Jerusalem, Matth. 22.37. O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how often would I have gathered thy children, as a Hen gathereth her chickens: I would, but ye would not: that is, as the minister of circumcision in mine owne person, and as God in the ministerie of my Prophets. Thus much of the astonishment it selfe. Now follow the circumstances whereby it is amplified and set out, and they are three:

The first circumstance is the time when they were astonished, namely, when the Sermon was ended. No doubt they were amazed in the time of his delivery: but yet they were silent all that while, and shewed no signes of their affection till the Sermon was ended. And this good order ought to be observed of all Gods people in the publike ministerie of the word. In the building of the materiall Temple, there was no noise or knocking heard, so much as of an hammer: whereby was signified that in the assemblies of the Saints, where Gods spirituall temple is building, there should be the like heavenly order observed; men should heare with quietnesse and silence, and shew their affections afterward.

Silence in the holy assemblies of the Church.

Secondly, we are here taught to labour not onely to be affected in the act of hearing while the doctrine is delivered, but to treasure it up in our hearts, that we may afterward be affected with it, as this multitude was.

The second circumstance here noted, is the persons who were thus astonied: to wit, the people or the multitude: for after the Sermon was ended they gathered themselves into companies, and made knowne one to another the affections of their hearts toward Christs doctrine. Hence we may gather, that our Saviour Christ delivered his doctrine plainely, unto the conscience of the meanest, and to the capacitie of the simplest; else they could not thereby have beene brought to wonder. And this is a president for all Ministers to follow in the dispensation of the word: so did Paul, 2 Corinth. 4.2,3. in such plainenesse deliver the Word of God, that if it were hid, he saith, it was hid to them which perish.

Christ preached plainely.

The third circumstance is the object of their astonishment; that is, his Doctrine: They were astonied at his doctrine. This teacheth us, that the word of God must be so delivered, that the Doctrine it selfe may affect the hearers. It is a carnall thing for a man so to preach, as the consideration of his wit, of his memorie, of his eloquence, of his great reading, may affect the hearers: many worthy parts (no doubt) were in our Saviour Christ, for which he might well be admired; and yet in the dispensation of his word, he labours by his doctrine onely to affect his hearers: and so must all they doe that will be followers of Christ.

Carnall preaching.

II. Point. Thus much for the fruit of Christs Sermon: Now follows the cause thereof, which is Christs authoritie in teaching, ver. 29. For he taught as one having authority, not as the Scribes. This authoritie in Christs ministerie was caused from three things: I. From the matter of his Sermon. II. From the manner of his delivery. III. From the things that accompanied his teaching.

The authoritie of Christs ministerie.

Causes of it.

I. The matter of his Sermon was the incomparable parable excellencie of heavenly doctrine; thus much his enemies the Scribes that came to tempt him, did confesse, Marke 12.14. Master, thou art true, and teachest the way of God truely. And this was long before confirmed by Moses, who delivered the promise of Christ unto the people, into whose mouth God would put his word, Deut. 18.18. and John 7.16. Christ confesseth, that his doctrine was not his owne, but his Fathers that sent him.

I. The matter.

II. The manner of his teaching was heavenly: and this shewed it selfe in sundrie things: For, I. Christ taught in his owne name as a Lord of his doctrine, and not as a messenger or interpreter thereof, as the Prophets were. II. His speech and delivery was with speciall grace: Luke 4.22. The people wondered at the gracious words that proceeded out of his mouth, wherein he expressed his humilitie, his meeknesse, love, mercie, and compassion, plainely shewing by his speech that he was induced with all gifts of the Spirit above measure: in this regard it is said, Isay 50.4. God gave him (that is, Christ) the tongue of the learned, to be able to speake a word in due season, for the comfort and appeasing of a distressed conscience; which no man but Christ is able to doe. III. As he delivered the word vocally unto the outward eare, so he was able by the power of his God-head, to make his hearers to give attendance, and to receive and beleeve that which he taught. And lastly, his zeale for his Fathers glory, and his earnest desire to bring the soules of men unto salvation, which were principall ends of his ministerie, did also adde grace and authoritie thereto.

II. The manner of his teaching.

III. The things that went with his doctrine did also cause authoritie in his ministerie; and these were two: I. Miracles; as curing the sicke, and casting out devils; which did greatly confirme his doctrine unto his hearers: Marke 7.37. when he had cured one that was both deafe and dumbe, the people were beyond measure astonished. II. An unblameable life; for he was Jesus Christ the righteous, who performed all things that the law required, fulfilling the will of God in suffering, and suffering in his obedience.

III. Things accompanying his ministerie.

Further, note the phrase, in the originall it is said here, He was teaching; that is, it was his usuall manner and custome, thus to preach with authoritie. Herein Christ is a notable president unto us for sundrie duties.

Ministers must maintaine the credit of their ministerie.

First, hereby every minister of Gods word is taught to maintaine the credit of his ministerie, and so preserve the same from contempt; especially in his owne place, and in his owne person: though Christ were here in a meane and base estate, yet he would not suffer his calling to be contemned, but gets grace thereunto. And Paul charged Timothie, to see that no man despise his youth, 1 Tim. 4.12. and to Titus he gives the like commandement, Titus 2.15. These things speake, exhort, reprove, with all authoritie. See that no man despise thee. Now in the example of Christ, we shall see how this is done not by outward pompe and estate, or by earthly meanes; but by truth and soundnesse of doctrine, by zeale for Gods glory, and for the good of mens soules, and by an unblameable life.

Secondly, hence all Gods ministers (if they will be followers of Christ) must, learne not onely to teach sound and heavenly doctrine, but to observe therein a divine and spirituall manner of teaching: 1 Corinth. 2. ver. 4. and 13. Paul saith, his preaching was not in humane wisdome, but in the plaine evidence of the Spirit; comparing spirituall things with spirituall things: which is then done, when the people may acknowledge the grace of God in the teacher. And it is said of the ignorant man, who is rebuked of the Prophets, 1 Corin. 14.25. He falls downe on his face, and saith plainely, God is in you indeed. There is great difference to be made betweene discoursing in Philosophie, which may be done by humane wit, and preaching in divinitie. He that can discourse well in Philosophie, cannot thereupon presently preach and dispense the word of God aright; for preaching is a spirituall dutie, which cannot be performed by naturall gifts onely. The Prophet Isay must have his tongue touched with a cole from Gods Altar, before he could speake and utter Gods Word unto the people: and Paul the most famous of the Apostles, desireth in all his Epistles, to be prayed for, that his mouth might be opened: whereby he doth signifie, that to deliver wholesome doctrine in spirituall manner, for the glorie of God, and the good of his people, is a great matter, and cannot by naturall gifts be attained unto. And indeed this is that teaching which saves the soule, and affects the heart of him that belongs to God: which is the thing that every minister of Gods Word ought to labour for.

Right manner of preaching.

Isay 6.6,7.

Thirdly, seeing Christ in his preaching doth maintaine the authoritie of his ministerie, every man in his place is taught to maintaine and preserve the dignitie of his profession. We are all of us by our profession Christians, and by baptisme the soules and daughters of God; now our dutie is to walke worthy this our calling, and to take heed we bring it not into contempt. It is a most heinous wickednesse for any man to bring a slander upon the name and religion of God; and yet nothing is more frequent in this our age: for men will needs be Christians in profession, and therefore will receive the sacraments, which be the highest top-stales of all profession: and yet in their lives they are prophane, and live as they list; yea, and if others will not joyne with them in their wickednesse, they will not spare to scorne and revile them. But herein they sinne fearefully, in dishonouring their profession: and therefore they charge others with hypocrisie, that endevour in some truth to be answerable to their profession, yet they themselves practise most grosse hypocrisie, when as they will beare the name of Christians in profes-on, and communicate with the Lord his holy ordinances, and yet make no conscience of sinne, but scorne those that doe. Ephes. 4.1. Paul prayed for the Ephesians, that they might walke worthy the vocation whereto they were called: and Titus 2.7. he exhorts Titus hereunto, that in all things hee should shew himselfe an ensample of good workes, with uncorrupt doctrine, with gravitie, and integritie, &c. Yea verse 10. hee requires servants to shew such faithfulnesse in their service, that they may adorne the doctrine of God.

And not as the Scribes.] For first, they failed in the matter; they delivered not the doctrine of God, but the traditions of men about washings and tythings. Secondly, they failed in the manner; they taught coldly, and without zeale. Thirdly, they failed in the end; they taught in pride and ambition, seeking themselves, and not Gods glory. But Christ, as we have seene, taught farre otherwise; and although he misliked their preaching, both for matter, manner and end, yet he vouchsafed to heare them, or else how could he have reproved these things in them? Which shewes that Christ would not separate himselfe from their assemblies, whose doctrine he disliked, with the deliverie thereof. And therefore no man ought to sever himselfe from the Church of England, for some wants that be therein: We have the true doctrine of Christ preached among us by Gods blessing, and though there be corruptions in manners among us, yea, and though they could justly finde fault with our doctrine; yet so long as we hold Christ, no man ought to sever himselfe from our Church. And thus much for this Sermon.

Separation from our Church unlawfull.

A CLOVD OF Faithfull Witneſſes: LEADING TO THE Heavenly Canaan.

OR,

A COMMENTARIE UPON THE Eleventh Chapter to the Hebrewes, preached in Cambridge by that godly and judicious Divine, Mr. W. PERKINS.

Long expected and deſired; and therefore publiſhed at the requeſt of his Executors, by WIL. CRASHAW, and TH. PIERSON, Preachers of Gods Word: who heard him preach it, and wrote it from his mouth.

TO THE NOBLE AND VERTVOVS GENTLEMEN,

Sir IOHN SHEAFFIELD, Knight:
AND
Mr. OLIVER St. IOHN:

Sonnes and Heires to the Right Honourable EDMVND Lord SHEAFFIELD, Lord President of the North:
And OLIVER Lord St. IOHN, Baron of Bletsho:
Grace and Peace.

THe gracious promises of God (Honourable and most worthy Gentlemen) made to the holy Patriarks, touching the Land of Canaan, were singular comfort to the beleeving Israelites, in their bondage of Ægypt. And the renewing of the same by the hand of Moses (whose words God confirmed by so many miracles) must needs augment their joy abundantly, although their bonds at that time increased. But the pledge of Gods presence in the cloudie pillar, whereby he led them in the wildernesse both night and day, did so farre exceed all the promises for the matter of consolation, that even Moses himselfe desired rather to bee detained from the promised Land, than deprived of the comfort of that his presence in the way: If thy presence (saith he) goe not before us, bid us not depart hence. Now, these being ensamples unto us, and evident types of our estate who live under the Gospell, shew apparantly, that howsoever Beleevers be greatly cheered in their spirituall travell, by the gracious promises which God in Christ hath made unto them; yet this their joy is much increased, by the view of those that have gone before them in the way of faith; who are unto them as a Cloud of witnesses, or a cloudie Pillar. For, howsoever the truth of God be the only ground of sound consolation: yet because wee are akin to Thomas, and will not beleeve unlesse we see and feele; therefore it is, that by the example of Beleevers (wherein is some sensible evidence of the comfort of Gods truth) we are farre more cheered, than by the promise it selfe alone.

Exod. 33. 15.

1 Cor. 10. 6.

Here then behold what great cause we have to cast our eyes upon this Cloud of witnesses; which the Holy Ghost hath erected as a pledge of his presence, and a direction to all those that shall follow their steps in the practice of faith, till the worlds end. Shall Moses affect that Cloud so much, which led them only the way to a temporall inheritance: and shall not wee much more bee ravished with delight in this cloud which leads us to the Kingdome of Heaven? In all estates the just must live by faith: For, we walke by faith, and not by sight. And what is the hope and happinesse of a Christian man, but to receive at last the salvation of our soules, which is the end of our faith, and period of this walke. But any faith will not support us herein: some begin in the Spirit, who end in the Flesh; going out with Paul for a while, but at length returne with Demas to the world, neither can they doe otherwise: for, Apostasie is the Catastrophe of Hypocrisie. Hee that would deceive in his profession, is usually deceived of his salvation.

Wherefore this shall be our wisdome, to see to our soules, that our faith (as the beloved Apostle said of love) be not in word, and tongue, but in deed, and in truth. And for our better direction in trying the truth of our faith, wee have here many notable presidents in this Cloud of witnesses: consisting of most worthy Beleevers in all ages before Christs incarnation: all which shewed the life of faith by their works; and we in them may see how to put our faith in practice. Now, the rather must we attend hereunto, because in all estates we must practise faith. For, without faith it is impossible to please God. And what estate of life can possible befall us, wherein we have not a lively patterne and fore-runner, leading us the way to Heaven, within the compasse of this Cloud? Art thou a King or Magistrate? Behold David, Hezekias, and the Iudges: Art thou a Courtier? Looke on Moses: Art thou a martiall man? Behold Sampson, Dauid, Iosiah. Here is Enoch, Noe, and the Prophets for Ministers: the Patriarchs for Fathers: Sara and the Shunamite for mothers: Isaac and Ioseph for children: Here is Abel for Shepherds, and Rahab for victuallers: Here are some that lived in honour, in peace, and plentie, some in want, and some in sicknesse: but most of all in persecution; because therein is the greatest triall of faith. So that, which way soever we turne us, if we walke by faith, wee have here some faithfull witnesse to goe before us. And to cleare their steps the better to our sight, that so we may follow hard towards the marke without wandring, wee have here a notable light in this learned Commentarie; which, we must confesse, is much obscured, for lacke of the refining hand of the godly Author himselfe: but now, seeing that shining light is quenched, use this our Lampe: it is fed with such oyle as we received in the Lords Sanctuarie, from that Olive Tree, whence many an one did fill his vessell. And being importuned to expose the same for the common good, we have presumed to place it under the shelter of your Honourable names; beseeching God it may helpe to guide our feet in the way of peace.

The religious presidents of your Honourable Parents (Right Noble and hopefull Gentlemen) must perswade you much to be sound, and constant in the faith: for declining in religion, brings a staine of honour, and decay of temporall portion. But labour you to increase in grace, and trust the Lord with your outward greatnesse. Honour him, and he will honour you: delight in him, and he will give you your holy hearts desire; his faithfulnesse will bee your shield, to the griefe of those that envie your happinesse. But, beware of bad example, and evill counsell, which are the haire and poison of younger yeares. Walke with God like Enoch; use the world as Abraham did; and follow Moses in the matters of delight, forsaking them when they become the pleasures of sinne. So shall you obtaine good report, and your memories shall be blessed with your Posterities, like these faithfull Witnesses. Novemb. 10. 1608.

Yours in the Lord to be commanded,

William Crashaw,
Thomas Pierson.

A COMMENTARIE UPON THE ELEVENTH CHAPTER OF THE EPISTLE to the Hebrewes.

VERSE 1.

Now Faith is the ground of things which are hoped for: and the evidence of things not seene.

CONcerning Faith, two points are necessary to be knowne of every Christian; the doctrine, and the practice of it: the whole doctrine of faith (being grounded and gathered out of the word of God) is comprised in the Creed, commonly called the Apostles Creed: which being already by us expounded, it followeth in order (next after the doctrine) to lay downe also the practice of faith: for which purpose wee have chosen this 11. chap. to the Hebrewes, as being a portion of Scripture, wherein the said practice of faith is most excellently and at large set downe.

This chapter depends on the former thus: We may reade in the former chapter, that many Jewes having received the faith, and given their names to Christ, did afterward fall away, therefore towards the end of the Chapter, there is added a notable exhortation tending to perswade the Hebrewes to persevere in faith unto the end, as also to suffer patiently what-ever shall befall them in the profession of it: and to urge the exhortation there are divers reasons, not needfull to bee alleaged: for they concerne not the present purpose.

Now, in this chapter hee continues the same exhortation: and the whole Chapter (as I take it) is nothing else in substance, but one reason to urge the former exhortation to perseverance in faith; and the reason is drawne from the excellency of faith: for this chapter doth divers wayes set downe what an excellent gift of God faith is: his whole scope therefore is manifest to be nothing else, but to urge them to persevere and continue in that faith, proved at large to bee so excellent a thing: and indeed hee could not bring a better argument to move them to love and hold fast their faith, than by perswading them of the excellency of it. For common reason bids us not onely chuse, but hold fast that that is excellent.

Out of this coherence wee may learne in a word, that perseverance in faith is a matter not of ordinary necessity, nor of meane excellency, to the urging whereof the author of this Epistle, useth so large and so forcible an exhortation; insomuch as, whereas ordinary exhortations occupy the roome of one or some few verses, this is continued through divers chapters.

The parts of this whole chapter are two:

1. A generall description of Faith, from the 1. v. to the 4.

2. An illustration or declaration of that description, by a large rehearsall of manifold examples of ancient and worthy men in the old Testament, from the 4. v. to the end. Of these two in order:

The description of Faith consists of three actions or effects of faith, set downe in three severall verses:

The first effect in the first vers. Faith makes things which are not (but onely are hoped for) after a sort to subsist, and to be present with the beleever.

The second is in the 2. v. Faith makes a beleever approved of God.

The third in the 3. v. Faith makes a man understand and beleeve things incredible to sense and reason.

Of these in order.

Now faith is the ground of things which are hoped for: and the evidence of things which are not seene.

This first ver. containes the first effect in the description of faith, wherein first let us see the true meaning of the words: secondly, what instructions they doe naturally yeeld unto us. For the meaning, we must examine the words severally. Now faith]

Faith in the word of God, is specially of three sorts; Historicall, Miraculous, Justifying or saving faith.

1. Histo-

The description of faith.

1. Historicall faith is not onely a knowledge of the Word, but an assent of the heart to the truth of it: and this faith is generall not only to all men, good and bad, but even to the devils themselves: Jam. 2. 19. Thou beleevest there is one God, thou dost well: the devils also beleeve it, and tremble. Now hee that will beleeve out of the Scripture there is one God, hee will beleeve historically any thing in the Scripture.

2. Miraculous, or the faith of miracles: which is, An inward perswasion of the heart, wrought by some speciall instinct of the holy Ghost in some man, whereby hee is truly perswaded, that God will use him as his instrument for the working of some miracles: this also is generall, both to elect and reprobate, Judas had it with the rest of the Apostles.

3. Saving (commonly called justifying) faith, which is, A speciall perswasion wrought by the holy Ghost in the heart of those that are effectually called, concerning their reconciliation and salvation by Christ.

Of these three sorts of faith, the third is principally meant in this place. And although in the description, and over all the chapter, there are some things that agree to other faith than it: yet I say the generall scope in this chapter, is principally of that faith that saves a man. It becomes us therefore to learne carefully the instructions that concerne the practice of this faith, for it is no lesse than saving faith.

Secondly, it is said; This faith is the ground or substance; for the Word signifieth both. The meaning is: things hoped for, as yet are not, and so have no being nor substance: Now faith that beleeves the promises, and applyeth them, that faith gives to those things which yet are not (after a sort) a substance or subsistence in the heart of the beleever: so that that thing which never had, nor yet hath a being in it selfe, by this faith hath a being in the heart of the beleever; this I take to bee the true meaning.

Thirdly, it followeth of what things this faith is the ground or substance: namely, of things hoped for, and things not seene. And these bee of two sorts: either in regard of the Fathers of the old Testament alone, or of them and us both.

Of the first sort were these two: 1. The incarnation of Christ. 2. The publishing of the Gospell, both to Jew and Gentile in a glorious manner: both these were hoped for of them, but we have seene them: to them they had a being onely in faith, to us a being in themselves.

Now unto the Fathers of the old Testament, their faith gave these two things a being in their hearts and soules, though they came not to passe many hundreth yeares after.

There are other things which we hope for as well as they, which are to come, and not seene in respect of us both; and they be six:

1. Justification, standing in the remission of sinnes.

2. Sanctification in this life.

3. The perfection and accomplishment of our sanctification after this life.

4. The Resurrection of the body, and reuniting it with the soule.

5. Glorification of body and soule.

6. Life everlasting, and glory with God in heaven.

These they saw not with the eye of the body, neither doe we; yet they hoped for them, and so doe we: they had no being in themselves to them, neither have they as yet to us: but this true saving faith gave to them, gives to us, and will give to every beleever, whilest the world lasteth, such a certaine assurance of them that they seeme present unto us, and wee seeme presently to enjoy them: we cannot enjoy any of them fully; but saving Faith hath this power, to give them all a present being in our hearts, and us such a reall possession of them, as greatly delighteth a Christian soule: insomuch as the feeling of the sweetnesse of this glory, though it be to come, overwhelmeth the feeling of a worldly misery, though it be present.

Fourthly, it is added, And the evidence]

This word signifieth and teacheth us two things concerning faith:

1. Faith is an evidence, &c. that is, Faith so convinceth the mind, understanding, and judgement, as that it cannot but must needs, yea, it compelleth it by force of reasons unanswerable to beleeve the promises of God certainly.

2. It is an evidence: that is, whereas life everlasting and all other things hoped for, are invisible, and were never seene of any beleever, since the world beganne: this saving faith hath this power and property, to take that thing in it selfe invisible, and never yet seene, and so lively to represent it to the heart of the beleever, and to the eye of his minde, as that after a sort he presently seeth and enjoyeth that invisible thing, and rejoyceth in that sight, and enjoying of it: and so the judgement is not onely convinced, that such a thing shall come to passe, though it be yet to come; but the mind (as farre as Gods word hath revealed, and as it is able,) conceives of that thing, as being really present to the view of it.

Let one example serve for all: Life everlasting is a thing hoped for: now Faith, not only by infallible arguments grounded upon the word and promise of God, convinceth a mans judgement, that it shall come to passe, (insomuch as he dare say, that he knoweth certainly, there is life everlasting, as that hee liveth and moveth) but this Faith also (as much as Gods word hath revealed, and as farre forth as the minde of man is able to conceive of it,) so representeth this life everlasting to the eye of the soule, as that the soule doth seeme to apprehend and enjoy this life everlasting: yea, and often in such measure, as that hee contemneth the world, and all the present felicitie of it, in comparison of that measure of the joyes joyes thereof, which faith representeth to his soule: and thus faith makes that present which is absent: and makes that manifest and visible, which in it selfe is invisible: invisible to the eyes of the body, it makes visible to the eye of the soule; the sight of which eye is both given and continued, and daily sharpened by saving faith. And thus faith is a most excellent evidence of things not seene. So then the whole summe of this first effect, is briefly thus much: whereas things to be beleeved, as perfection of sanctification, resurrection, glorification, &c. are not yet seene, neither can be, in that they are not yet come to passe; yet if a man have grace certainly to beleeve the promises of God, these things shall have a being to his soule: in that both his judgement knoweth assuredly they shall come to passe, and his soule in most lively and joyfull representations, seemeth to enjoy them.

Hitherto of the meaning of the first effect.

Now in the second place, let us see what instructions this first effect thus unfolded doth minister unto us.

First, whereas faith gives a substance and being to things that are not, we learne that the fathers in the old Testament that lived before the incarnation of Christ, were truly partakers of the body and bloud of Christ.

If any alleage that this is strange, considering that Christ had then no body and bloud, neither had he any untill the Incarnation; and how then could they receive that which then was not?

I grant it is true, they then had no being, and yet the Fathers received them: but how can this be? I answer, by the wonderfull power of saving faith, which makes things that are not in nature, to have in some sort a being and subsistence: and so was Christ (though he was to come) present to the beleevers of the old time. For, Apoc. 13. 8. Christ is a Lambe slaine from the beginning of the world: that is, slaine as well then as now: and that not onely in the counsell and decree of God, whereby hee is borne and slaine in all times and places; not onely in regard of the eternall power, efficacie, and merit of his death; but also even in respect of the heart of the beleever, whose faith makes that, that is locally absent, after a sort truly and really present: even so also is Christ a Lambe slaine from the beginning of the world.

See a plaine demonstration hereof in Joh. 8. 56. Abraham saw me (saith Christ) and rejoyced: How could this be, when as Christ was not borne of a thousand yeares after? Ans. This could not be in reason, but it was indeed to Abrahams faith: whereby he saw Christ more lively, and more to his joy and consolation, so many hundred yeares after he was, than many which lived in Christs time, and saw him, and heard him, and conversed with him: for they living with him, yet were as good as absent from him, because they beleeved not in him: And Abraham, though Christ was farre from him, yet by his faith was present with him. Againe, 1 Cor. 10. 3. the ancient beleeving Israelites ate the same spiritu all bread, and drank the same spirituall rocke, and that rocke was Christ: How could they eat and drinke Christ so long before he was? I answer, they did it by reason of that wonderfull power of faith, which makes a thing absent present to the beleever: by that faith they received Christ, as lively, as effectually, as much to their profit and comfort, as we doe since his comming.

If any man aske, how could their faith apprehend that, that then was not? I answer, by giving them interest and title to it: and so the fathers are said by faith to have received Christ, because their faith gave them right and title in Christ, and in their hearts they felt the efficacie of his death and resurrection, whereby they died to sinne, and were renewed in holinesse, as well as we are now by the same efficacie.

Secondly, whereas faith makes things absent, present;

Here they are confuted, that teach that the Lords Supper is no Sacrament, unlesse the body and bloud of Christ be either truly turned into the bread and wine, or at least bee in or about the bread; and that so he is locally present, and must locally and substantially be received: and this (say they) is the most comfortable receiving of Christ: for what comfort is it to receive one absent? but these men know not this notable prerogative of true faith, Faith gives being to things which are not, and makes things present which are absent: they therefore that will have Christ locally present, they take this noble prerogative from faith: for here is nothing absent, which faith should make present: wee need not goe in this Sacrament to require a corporall presence: it is sufficient if we have true faith; for that makes him present much more comfortably, than it might be his bodily presence would be unto us.

If any man aske how this can be? I answer, The faith of the receiver knoweth best; and yet reason can say something in this case: for suppose a man looke earnestly upon a starre; there are many thousand miles betwixt his eye and the starre, yet the starre and his eye are so united together, as that the starre is after a sort present to his eye. So if we regard locall distance, we are as farre from Christ as earth is from heaven: but if we regard the nature of Faith which is to reach it selfe to Christ, where ever he be, in that regard Christ is present: and why should not this be so? for if the bodily eye, so feeble and weake, can reach so far as to a starre, and joyne it to it selfe, and so make it present; why should not much more the piercing eye of the soule reach up to Christ, and make him present to this comfortable feeling of it selfe?

Thirdly, here wee learne how to behave our selves

tokens in a strange temptation, whereby God useth to exercise his children. The Lord after that he hath received his children into his favour, continueth not alwayes to manifest that favour unto them; but oftentimes puls backe the feeling of it for a time, that afterward, hee may shew it againe in more comfortable manner unto them, and that they may afterward more sensibly feele it, and more earnestly love it, and more carefully labour to keepe it, when they have it.

Now for the time of this eclipse of the favour of God, hee not onely darkeneth his love, but makes them feele also such a measure of his wrath, as that they will often thinke themselves castawayes from the favour of God. David and Iob were often exercised with this temptation, as appeareth by their most lamentable and bitter complaints: yea, David doubts not, Psal. 77. 9. to challenge the Lord, that hee hath forgotten to be gracious, and hath shut up his loving kindnesse in displeasure. And Iob, chap. 13. 26. complaines to the Lord, that hee writeth bitter things against him, and makes him to possesse the sinnes of his youth; words, as it may seeme, of men forsaken of God: and indeed so for that time they thought of themselves. If it please the Lord thus to deale with us, so as wee feele nothing else but his wrath wrastling with our consciences, neither can thinke otherwise by present feeling, but that God hath forsaken us; what should we doe in this pittifull case? should we despaire, as reason would bid us? no, but take this course; Call to minde Gods mercifull promises, and his ancient former love; and cast thy selfe upon that love, though thou canst not feele it: when thou hast most cause to despaire, then labour against it: when thou hast no reason to beleeve, then beleeve with all thy power. For, remember the power and prerogative of thy faith: it beleeves not things that are, and manifestly appeare, so much as such things that are not, and have no being. So then, when Gods favour seemes to bee lost, and have no being to thee, then is Gods favour a fit object for thy faith, which beleeves those things that are not. Let all the devils in hell set themselves against thy poore soule, and if thou holdest fast this faith, they cannot all make thee sinke under it: for when the devill saith, Thou hast lost Gods favour; by faith a man answereth, though Gods favour be lost unto my feeling, yet to my faith it is not: My faith gives it a being, and so long (say what thou wilt) I will never feare that it is lost. When God puls backe his favour, and fights against thee with his wrath, doe as Jacob did, Gen. 32. 27. 29. wrastle with God, though thou have but one legge: that is, though thou have but one little sparke of faith, fight with that little faith, lay hold by it on God, and let him not go until he hath blessed thee, in turning againe unto thee his favourable countenance: and say with Job, 13. even in the very heat of thy temptation, O Lord, though thou kill me, yet will I trust in thee for everlasting life: yea, and though Gods anger should seeme to encrease, yet for all that take faster hold, and faint not; for faith will never faile thee: it will restore Gods love when it seemes lost; it will set it before thine eyes, when it seemes to behid. For marke well but this one reason: faith will give life everlasting a being, and make it present to thy soule, which indeed yet never had being to thee; how much more can it give a being to Gods favour, and make it present to thy soule, which once had, and indeed hath still a being, and was never lost indeed, but onely to a mans feeling? Thus, true faith is able to answer this temptation, whether it come in life, or in the pangs of death.

Fourthly, whereas faith is called an evidence; hence wee learne, that the nature of faith stands not in doubting, but in certainty and assurance. The Romish doubting of the essence of faith, is as contrary to true faith, as darknesse to light: for faith is an evidence of things hoped for, that is, it convinceth the judgement by unfallible arguments; knowing as certainly the truth of the promises, and for the things hoped for, as that God is God. But Rome will needs joyne faith and doubting, which indeed fight like fire and water, and can never agree together in every respect, but one will in the end destroy the other.

Object. But it seemeth, doubting is a part, or at least a companion of faith, for we doubt as well as beleeve: and who is so faithfull as doubteth not? Ans. We doe so: but what then? wee should not; for God commands us to beleeve, and not to doubt: therefore to beleeve, because it is commanded of God, is a vertue: and if it be a vertue, then to doubt is a vice; faith and doubting are both in a good man, but faith is a worke of grace and of the Spirit; doubting is a worke of the flesh, and a peece of the corruption of the old man.

Fifthly, if faith be a substance of things hoped for, much more is it a substance to the beleever: if it give those things a being which are out of him, much more doth it give a permanent being unto the beleever himselfe, strengthening him to stand and continue in all assaults. So Heb. 11. 1. Faith is thee, whereby a beleever is sustained and upholden: so that indeed we may fitly say, Faith is the spirituall substance, and the spirituall strength of a Christian man: and according to the measure of his faith, such is the measure of his spirituall strength.

This consideration hath divers comfortable uses, but especially two: 1. When any of us are out of the reach of a temptation, so long are wee confident of our owne strength: but when wee are assaulted by the devill, the world, and our owne flesh, then we shall finde, that to resist is an harder matter than we dreamed of: for, as possible as it is for water to burne, or fire to put out it selfe: so possible is it for us of our selves to resist sinne, insomuch, as it is a thousand to one, but that at every assault our nature yeelds. Now if it be so hard to rule over one sinne, how shall we doe against that sea of temptations, that overwhelmeth a Christian life? this doctrine teacheth thee how; namely, to sticke to thy faith, and it will doe it for thee: for if it be the substance of the things thou hopest for, which yet never were; much more will it yeeld unto thee spirituall strength and substance, to make thee stand in all temptations. When thou art tempted, then call to minde Gods promises, beleeve them, that is, apply them to thy selfe, and be resolved that they were made, and shall be performed even to thee: then though thou have no more power of thy selfe, than fire hath to cease to burne; yet whilest thou doest thus, thou shalt feele thy soule spiritually strengthened against all temptations: and feeling the experience of this, denie them thine owne strength, and magnifie the power that God hath given unto true faith.

Againe, though now we are most of us quiet under our owne vines and figge-trees, yet we know not how soone the hand of the Lord may be upon any of us, in povertie, sicknesse, imprisonment, banishment, losses, famine, or how it pleaseth him; how shall a poore Christian stand and buckle himselfe to beare these? I answer, true saving faith, resting on the Word of God, and beleeving the promises, not formally, but truly, will put such substantiall spirituall strength into him, as that at first, though he bow under it, yet shall he be able to recover himselfe againe, and buckle himselfe to goe forward in his profession, and shall follow Christ manfully with this his cresse: This wonderfull power hath God given to saving faith, both to resist temptations, and to undergoe all crosses.

And thus much of the first action or effect of faith: the second followeth.

VERSE 2.

For by it our Elders were well reported of.

THis v. containeth the second effect of saving faith: which is, that faith is a means whereby a beleever is approved of God. This verse hath speciall relation to the fifth verse: for that that is said here of all the Elders in generall, is there affirmed specially of Enoch: namely, that he was reported of to have pleased God.

Let us first search the true meaning of the words.

Elders. That is, all such men as living under the old Testament, beleeved in Christ: amongst which (though all be understood) yet some were more excellent in faith and obedience than others, and so more honourable, and of higher estimation with God and men: and of them it is specially to be understood.

Now concerning these Elders it is further said that they were well reported of: hereby are meant three things:

1. That God approved, and allowed of them:
2. That God did approve of them, because of their faith in the Messias.
3. That God gave a testimonie, and declared that he approved of them.

For the first, it may be asked, How were they approved of God?

Ans. Christ the sonne of God is he, in whom the Father is well pleased. Now they beleeving in Christ, their sins were laid on him, and made his by imputation: and contrariwise his holinesse, obedience, and satisfaction, were imputed to them, and by the same imputation made theirs: Now that being theirs, God being so well pleased with Christ, could not but also for Christs sake approve of them. If this seeme hard unto any, I make it plaine by this comparison: Looke as Iacob a yonger brother, puts on Esaus garment, the elder brother, and in it was taken for Esau, and obtained his fathers blessing and patrimonie, which by himselfe he could not have got; even so we are as younger brethren, Christ is our elder brother, we have no right nor title to our fathers blessing, nor to the kingdome of heaven: we must put on the robe of perfect righteousnesse, which is the garment of Christ, our elder brother: we, standing clothed with it, purchase our fathers favour, and with his favour his blessing, and his blessing is the right and title to everlasting life. And thus by Christ they were approved.

Secondly, for what were they approved? The text saith, By faith; not because faith is an action of a sanctified minde, and a good grace of God: for so are humilitie, love, feare of God (all which are graces of the sanctifying spirit, as faith is:) but because it is a worthy instrument in the heart of the beleever, which apprehends, and applyeth to the soule that righteousnes of Christ, by which he is justified: thus it being the hand and instrument of their justification, by it (it is said) they were approved.

3. The text addeth, that God did not only approve of them, but that he testified and made it manifest to all the world that he did so.

And this testimonie God gave them { 1. In his Word. 2. In their owne consciences.

The truth of the first is manifest, in that not onely in this chapter, but often also in the old Testament, God hath made such honourable mention, and given such honourable titles unto many of these Elders, calling Abraham the friend of God, 2 Chron. 20. 7. and David a man after Gods owne heart, 1 Sam. 13. 14. and them all, his anointed and deare chosen children, Psa. 105. 15. Thus God hath testified of them in his Word.

2. God testified it to their owne consciences,

The definition of faith.

The description of faith.

to that he gave them his spirit, inwardly to A assure their consciences that he did accept them in the Messias to come: and thus these Elders commended to posterie both outward to all the world, and inward in their conscience, that God in Christ approved and loved them: to the same is plaine the use hereof manifold.

1. In that it is said these Elders were approved by faith: here we learne what is the old and ancient way, the right and straight way (that is, in no by-wayes) to life everlasting: namely, this onely, To relie on the mercie of God in Christ for pardon of sinne; this is the way wherein all the ancient Elders walked to heaven; this is the way that God hath opened and made unto his Court: it is the Kings high way, the beaten way, common to every one B that knowes how to walke in it; and deceived none that ever went in it; and beside which, there is no other. Seeing then, God hath consecrated, and our Elders have trode this way before us, let us follow them; that so we may attaine that kingdome whereto it hath brought them.

If any yet doubt whether this be the way or no: the spirit of God puts it out of doubt, Esay 30. 21. by affirming peremptorily, This is the way: Secondly, bidding us therefore walke in the same: This is the way, walke in it. Our Elders obeyed this commandement of the spirit: and, walking in this way, found the end of it, everlasting life. If we would attaine the same end of the journey, we must walke the same C way.

But the world will say, this is a needlesse exhortation, for we walke this way, we deny our selves, and looke to be approved of God onely by Christ: that is strange to see how men deceive themselves. Can a man walke in a way, and not leave markes and steps behind him; even so he that walkes in this way, follow him, and you shall see steps of his continuall dying unto sinne, and living unto holinesse, insomuch that a man that followeth him, and marketh the course of his life in this way, may evidently say, See where he hath cast off, and left behind him this and that sin: see where he hath taken up, and carried with him these and those vertues and graces of God: Marke, here is a print of his D faith, here is a print of his hope, here are prints of his love. And may a child of God be followed and traced all the way to heaven, even untill he come to his death, which is the gate of heaven? How mightily then are they deceived, which thinke they have walked all their lives in this way, and yet there is not one step to be seene: for assuredly this way is so beaten and trodden, that no man ever trode in it since the world began, but he left behinde him manifest and visible steps, that all men that would looke at him, might see, he had gone that way. As therefore we all desire to come to heaven, and as wee professe wee walke in the way thither; so let us be as carefull to leave behinde us our steps; namely, tokens and prints of our faith, our hope, and love: which if we do, then marke the excellent use of those steps. 1. They testifie unto all that see them, that we walked the right way to heaven: and secondly, they will serve for markes and directions for them that shall walke in the same way after us. By the 1. we shall leave an honourable testimonie of our selves behinde us: by the 2. we shall move others to magnifie Gods name, to whom our steps have beene markes and directions, helps, and furtherances in the way to heaven.

Secondly, for what were these Elders approved? for their faith: for nothing else. Amongst these Elders Sampson was wonderfull in strength: Salomon in wisdome: Iosua in courage: Moses in learning: many of them, in the honour and pompe of the world, in beautie, riches, and other externall gifts, and the most of them all in long life; yet not for one or all of these are any of them said to be regarded of God: but it is plainely said, that for their faith God did approve them. Here then learne what is the thing amongst all things that must make us acceptable unto God: even this, To denie our selves, and to rest upon the mercie of God in Christ; this will doe it and nothing else. Hast thou strength? so had Coltar as well as Sampson: hast thou beautie? so had Absalom as well or more than Davids: hast thou wisdome? so had Achitophel (though not like Salomon, yet) above ordinarie men: hast thou riches? Iob was richer than Iacob: hast thou lived long? so did Cainc, and Ismael as well as Isaac: hast thou many children? so had Ahab as well as Ezechias: hast thou learning (the glorie of nature?) so had the Aegyptians as well as Moses; for there Moses learned it. All these thou maist have, and yet be a reprobate person in the sight of God: so farre from being approved of God, as that hee will not vouchsafe (unlesse it be in his anger) once to regard or looke at thee: hast thou therefore any of those outward gifts? It is not to be contemned, it hath his use; thanke God for it and use it well; and use it so as by it thou may be approved amongst men: but stand not to it before God: for though it be wisdome, or learning, or never so excellent a gift, it cannot purchase the favour and acceptation of God; but true faith is able to please God both in this life and especially at the day of Judgement.

This doctrine first confuteth the errour of some grosse Papists, who hold and write that many Philosophers for their good use of the light of Nature, for their deepnesse in learning, and for their civill lives are now Saints in heaven: a most manifest and shamefull untruth, and here as manifestly confuted: for was Salomon not accepted for all his wisdome, and shall Socrates? was Moses not accepted for all his learning, how then should Aristotle? if faith made all of them accepted, and nothing but faith; how is it possible they should be accepted which never heard of faith? nay I say more: A If many a man which liveth in the Church, as deepe (it may be) in humane learning as they, and of great knowledge also in the whole doctrine of Religion (which they never knew) and yet could not, nor ever shall be accepted of God, onely for want of this saving faith; How absurd it is to imagine salvation for them, which neither had sparke of faith, nor knowledge of Christ? Let us then hold, that as there is no name whereby to be saved, but only the name of Christ: so no meanes to be saved by that Christ, but only faith, even that faith, for which these Elders were accepted of God.

The description of faith.

Act. 4. 12

Secondly, this excellencie of faith above all other gifts, shewes the vanitie of the world; so carefull and earnest in seeking honour, riches, B credit, wisdome, learning, (all which can but make them esteemed and approved to the world) and so careleſse and negligent in getting true faith, which will both approve a man unto the world, and make him honourable in the eyes of the Lord God.

Thirdly, by this doctrine, the Popish doctrine is justly condemned, which teacheth that a man is justified by his works, and that faith is not the most excellent of Gods graces. Here we are taught other divinity: for, that for which a man is accepted, by that he is justified: but for their faith only were they accepted: therefore justification is onely by faith. Againe, that which makes a man accepted of God, that must needs be the most excellent thing of all. For C
God which is goodnesse it selfe, regardeth that that is the best: but God esteemed them onely for their faith: therefore it is the chiefe of all graces of God, in regard of making a man accepted of God.

Fourthly, here is a patterne and president for Gods children, how to bestow and measure out their love and estimation in the world. God loued Salomon more for his faith, than for all his glory and wisdome; and esteemed more of Moses for his faith, than for all his learning. So deale thou with thy wife, thy childe, thy servant, thy friend, and with all men. Hast thou a wife never so beautifull, loving, honest, and thriftie; never so toward and obedient a child; a most wise and trusty servant; a friend for faithfulnesse like thine owne soule? these are indeed much to be esteemed; yet thinke not thy selfe in a paradise, when thou hast such: for there is a greater matter behinde, than all these. Looke therefore further: Is thy wife, thy childe, thy servant, thy friend indued with saving faith? that is worth more than all the rest: that is it that makes them beloved of God. Let that therefore make them best beloved of thee: and that which makes them so honourable before God, let that make them most honourable and most esteemed of thee: So in all men, love that in a man best which God loveth; and so thou shalt be sure not to lose thy love. Esteeme of a man, not as the world esteemeth, nor according to his strength, beautie, high place, outward gifts: but as God esteemeth him, namely, according to the measure of saving faith, which thou seest in him; for is not that worthy of thy love, which hath purchased the love of the Lord God himselfe?

Fifthly, here is comfort for all such servants of God, as having true faith, yet are in base estimation for worldly respects; some are poore, some in base callings, some deformed in body, some of meane gifts, many in great distresse and miserie all their lives; most of them some way or other contemptible in the world: Yet let not this discomfort any childe of God: but let them consider what it is that makes them approved of God: not beautie, strength, riches, wisdome, learning (all these perish in the using) but true faith: if then thou hast that, thou hast more than all the rest. If thou hast all them, they could but make thee esteemed in the world: but having true faith, thou art esteemed of God; and what matter then who esteemes thee, and who not? This crosseth the corrupt censure of the world, who more esteeme a man for his outward gifts and glory of riches or learning, than for saving graces. Let Gods children when they are abased, contemned, mocked, and kept from all place and preferment in the world, let them I say, appeale from their unjust judgement to the judgement of God, and be comforted in this, that though they want all things (without them) that should make them C esteemed in the world, yet they have that (within them) for which God will esteeme, approve, and acknowledge them both in this world, and in the world to come. And they have that that will stand by them, when strength and beauty are vanished, when learning, and riches, and honour are all ended with the world.

Thus much of the second doctrine.

3. In that our Elders by faith obtained a good report; Here we learne the readiest and surest way to get a good name. A good name is a good gift of God; Eccl. 7. 3. It is a precious ointment: it is a thing that all men would have: These Elders had it, and they have laid us down a platforme how to get it, and it is this; 1. Get into favour with God, please him, that is, confesse thy sinnes, bewaile them, get pardon, set the promises of God in Christ before thee, beleeve them, apply them to thy selfe as thy owne, be perswaded in thy conscience that Christ did all for thee, and that he hath purchased thy acceptation with God.

Thus when thou art assured that God approves of thee, God can easily give thee a comfortable testimonie in thine owne conscience, and he can move the hearts of all men to thinke well, and open their mouthes to speake well of thee; for he hath the hearts of all men in his hand. And therefore those that are in his favour, he can bend the hearts of all men to approve them; yet this must be understood with some cautions:

1. God will not procure his children a good name amongst all men: for then they should be cursed: for, Luk. 6. 26. Cursed are yee when all men speake well of you: But the Lord meaneth, that they shall be accepted, and have a good name with the most and with the best. For indeed, a good name (as all other graces of God) cannot be perfect in this life: but they shall have such a good name, as in this world shall continue and increase, and in the world to come be without all blot: for sinne is the disgrace of a man, therefore when sinne is abolished, good name is perfect.

2. God will not procure all his children a good name, nor alwaies: for, a good name is of the same nature with other externall gifts of God: sometime they are good to a man, sometime hurtfull: to some men good, to others hurtfull. Every one therefore that hath true faith, may not absolutely assure himselfe of a good name: but as farre forth as God shall see it best for his owne glorie, and his good.

3. The good name that God will give his children, stands not so much in outward commendation, and speaking well of a man, as in the inward approbation of the consciences of men. They must therefore be content sometime to be abused, mocked, slandered, and yet notwithstanding they have a good name in the chiefe respect: for they whose mouthes doe abuse and condemne them, their very consciences doe approve them.

Out of all these the point is manifest, that God will procure his children a good name in this world, as farre forth as it is a blessing, and not a curse: and that because they are approved of him, and by faith justified in his sight: for so to be is the onely way to get a good name. For in reason it stands thus; that those who are in estimation, and good name with the Lord himselfe, much more will God make them esteemed, and give them a good name with men like themselves. Hence we learne, first, that the common course of the world to get a good name, is fond, and wicked, and to no purpose: They labour for riches, preferments, honour, wisdome, and learning, by them to get estimation in the world: yea, many abuse these blessings in vaine ostentation, to increase their credit and name with men: and in the meane time saving faith is never remembred, which must procure them a good name with God. This is a wrong course: first, we must labour to be approved of God; and then after the good name with God, followeth the good name in the world. He therefore that labours for favour with men, and neglects the favour of God; he may get a good name, but it shall prove a rotten name in the end. Prov. 10. 7. The memorialls of the just shall be blessed, but the name of the wicked shall rot. The good name of the wicked is rotten: 1. Because it is lothsome and stinking in the face of God, though it be never so glorious in the world. 2. Because it will not

A last the wearing out, but in the end vanisheth and comes to nothing, unlesse (as a rotting thing leaves some corruption behinde it, so) their good name in the end being vanished, leaves infamie behinde it. And this is the name which commonly is gotten in the world, because men first seeke not a good name with God: but that good name which is obtained by faith, will stand and continue all a mans life, and at his death leave behinde it a sweet perfume, and abideth for ever in the world to come.

Secondly, this maintaines the excellencie of our religion against Atheists, and all enemies of it, which esteem and call it a base and contemptible religion, and of which can follow no credit nor estimation. But see, their malice is here controled: our religion is a most glorious and excellent profession, it is the high way to get true credit and estimation: it makes a man honourable in the sight of God and men: for by it our Elders obtained a good report, which continueth fresh to this day.

B In the fourth place, were they well reported of for their faith? therefore their faith was not hid in their hearts, but manifested in their lives: for, the world cannot see nor commend them for their faith, but for the practice of faith. Here it is plaine that men must not be content to keepe their faith close in their hearts, but they must exercise the fruits of it in the world; and then both these together will make a man truly commendable. Thy faith approves thee unto God; but the practice of it is that that honours thee, and thy profession in the world.

Lastly, in that faith was that which approved our Elders unto God; here is a store-house of comforts, for all true professors of this faith.

C Art thou poore? thy faith doth make thee rich in God.

Art thou simple and of meane reach? thy faith is true wisdome before God.

Art thou any way deformed? faith makes thee beautifull unto God.

Art thou weake, feeble, or sicke? thy faith doth make thee strong in God.

D Art thou base in the world, and of no account? thy faith makes thee honourable in the sight of God & his holy Angels. Thus thou art poore, and foolish, and deformed, and sicke, and base in the world, but marke how God hath recompensed thee; he hath given thee faith, whereby thou art rich, and beautifull, and wise, and strong, and honourable in heaven with God: say therefore with David, the lot is fallen unto thee in a fure ground, and thou hast a goodly heritage, namely, thy faith which thou wouldest not change for all the glory of the world. Faith is the true riches, the sound strength, the lasting beautie, the true wisdome, the true honour of a Christian man: therefore take thy selfe 10000. times more beholden unto God, than if hee had given thee uncertaine riches, the crafty crafty (and yet foolish) wisdome, the decaying strength, the vanishing beauty, the transitorie honour of this world.

If thou hast true faith, thou art sure to have enemies: 1. The wicked of the world will never brooke thee, but openly or privatly hate and hurt thee. Then the Devil is thy sworne enemy: how canst thou deale with so powerful an enemie, and all his wicked instruments? Here is found comfort: if thou hast faith, thou hast God thy friend: labour therefore for this true faith, and then care not for the Devill, and all his power. Night and day, sleeping and waking, by land and sea thou art safe and secure, the Devill cannot hurt thee, thy faith makes thee accepted of God, and brings thee within the compasse of his protection. The same little sparke of faith, which is in so narrow a compasse as thy heart, is stronger than all the power and malice of Sathan. As for the malice which his instruments, wicked men in this world, shew against thee in mocks and abuses, much lesse care for them: for their nature is to speake evill, and cannot doe otherwise: looke not therefore at them, but looke up into heaven by the eye of thy soule, where thy faith makes thee beloved and approved of God himselfe, and honourable in the presence of his holy Angels.

And thus much of the second action or effect of faith, the third followeth.

VERSE 3.

Through faith wee understand that the world was ordained by the Word of God, so that the things which wee see, are not made of things which did appeare.

In this verse is contained the third action or effect of faith, namely this; Faith makes a man to understand things beyond the reach of mans reason. This third effect is set out in these words, by the instance of a notable example; namely, of the Creation of the world; 1. By the Word of God. 2. Of nothing: both which, that we may the better understand, let us consider of the words as they lie in order.

Through faith] 1. By faith in this place (as I take it) is not meant that saving faith, which justifies a man before God; but a generall faith, whereby a man embraceth Christian religion: or whereby a man beleeveth the Word of God in the doctrine of the Law and the Gospell, to be true. My reason is, because a man that never had justifying, and saving faith, and is no member of the catholike Church, nor childe of God, may have this gift, To beleeve that God by his Word made the world of nothing. Therefore, I thinke that this is an action of a generall, and

A not of saving faith.

We understand] That is, whereas there are many things beyond the reach of reason, and therefore by reason cannot be apprehended or understood, yet by vertue of this faith a man is brought to understand them, and to beleeve them to bee true.

Now then whereas generall faith brings understanding of many things which reason cannot reach unto; here such as be students in humane learning, and which labour to attaine to the deepenesse and perfection of it, are taught, with their travell in humane studies, to have care to joyne faith and knowledge of religion. For there are many things which our understanding by reason cannot conceive, and many truths which Philosophy cannot reach unto; nay, many also which it denies: but faith is able to perswade and demonstrate them all, and it enlightens the minde, and rectifies the judgement, and of a deepe reach in the greatest matters: but, separate faith from humane knowledge, and hee will stumble at many truths, though he had the wit of all the Philosophers in his owne head: For example, that God should make the world of nothing: that it should have beginning and ending: that God should be eternal, and not the world: that mans soule being created, is immortall: these and many other truths, reason cannot see, and therefore Philosophy will not admit: but joyne faith to it, and then that crooked understanding is rectified and made to beleeve it. It is therefore good counsell, to joyne both these together. Religion hinders not humane learning, as some fondly thinke; but is a furtherance and helpe, or rather the perfection of humane learning, perswading, and proving, and convincing that, which humane learning cannot. And thus we see how faith makes us to understand.

B But what doth it make us to understand? the text saith, That the world was ordained, &c. Amongst many expositions we may most safely set downe and approve this; God by his Word or commandement hath ordained, that is, made in good order; the ages, that is, the world, and all in it; and all this he did by his Word, and (which is more strange than that) made them of nothing. This is a wonderfull thing: reason conceives it not, but disputes against it: Philosophy grants it not, but writes against it: but marke the privilege of this faith, it makes a man beleeve it, and shewes him also how it is.

C Now for our better perceiving the excellencie of this power of faith, here are foure points set downe: 1. What was created: The worlds.

2. In what manner: Ordained. 3. By what meanes: By Gods Word. 4. Of what matter: Of nothing. Of these in order.

The first point is, What was made? The text answereth, The worlds. The Word signifieth in the originall, Ages: and so it is also taken, Heb. 1. 2. God made the worlds or ages by Christ: by this word then he meaneth these two things: First, times and seasons, which are ordinarie creatures of God, as well as other: for amongst other creatures (Gen. 1.) are recorded also times and seasons to be Gods creatures. Secondly, he understandeth the World also, and all in it: and so it is truly translated. For with good reason may the word ages signifie the world, because the world and all in it had their beginning in time, have their continuance in time, and shall have their end in time againe. Time begun them, time continues them, and time shall end them: and so the world is every way measured by the compasse of time: and therefore it pleaseth the holy Ghost to terme the world, and all in it, Ages or times.

Now whereas it is said, Ages, that is, times and seasons were ordained of God; we learne, that if time be a creature or an ordinance of God (created for so great purposes, as to be the measure of all things) to take heed of abusing so excellent an ordinance: if thou hast spent it well, spend it still better. Time is so good a thing, it cannot be spent well enough. But hast thou mis-spent time (that is, abused it) take S. Pauls counsell, Ephes. 5. 16. Redeeme the time: that is, seeing what is past cannot be recall'd, then recompence the losse of it, by the well bestowing of time to come. Spend every houre well; and that thou mayst doe so, bee alwaies either doing good to other, or receiving good from other; doe either, and time is well spent. And take heed thou bee not of the number of those that often say, they cannot tell how to drive away time: and therefore they devise many toyes, and conceits, and vaine pleasures, yea, many wicked and unlawfull delights: and all to shift off (as they say) and deceive the time. It is wonderfull to see, that the wicked, whose time of joy is only in this world, should seeke to hasten it, and make it seeme shorter; yet so it is, the Devill blinding them: but howsoever it is, seeme it shorter or longer, that same one sin of mis-spending their time, shall condemne them, if they had no more: for if account must be given for every idle word, a fearefull account remaines to be made for so many idle houres. Let us then be very carefull in the use of this good ordinance of God, and never devise how to passe away time: for there is no man that is a profitable member in the place where he is, that can finde one houre so idle, that he knowes not how to imploy it, either in receiving or doing some good.

Were ordained]

The second point, in this example, is the manner. Did God make a perfect or an imperfect world? The text answereth, it was ordained. The word signifieth thus much; God framed the Ages, that is, all creatures, visible and invisible, in a most excellent, perfect, and absolute order. As in campe every man keeps his ranke and order, and no man goeth out of his standing appointed him: So every creature hath his due place, and his proper use assigned him of God: so that the workmanship of the world in every creature, and in every respect was absolute: and thus (ordained) is as much as perfectly made. And the whole world was as the perfect body of a man, where every member, bone, joynt, veine, and sinew, is in his proper place, and nothing out of square.

Object. Was every thing created in his order and due place? Whence then come so many disorders in the world? The Devill hath his kingdome, authoritie, lawes and subjects; he rules in the wicked. Now can there be any order in Sathans kingdome? Againe, whence are so many alterations and subversions of kingdomes; so many warres, so much effusion of bloud? The Gospel is transported from Country to Country: civill dissentions in Cities and private families; betwixt man and man; betwixt man and some creatures: betwixt creature and creatures, yea, hatred often unto the death: yea, often hatred betwixt creatures of the same kinde. All these being so, where then is that excellent order wherein they were created?

Answer: the state of all creatures is changed, from that wherein they were created, by the fall of our first parents. God made no disorder, He saw every thing that he had made, and loe it was very good: therefore it was in a most perfect order: For orderly comlinesse is a part of the goodnesse of a thing: but disorder is the effect of sin: it entred with sinne, and it is both a companion and a reward of sinne. Had we continued in our innocence, all creatures had continued in their excellent order: but when we had broken the perfect order, that God had appointed us; immediately all creatures broke that order wherein they were afore both towards us, and one amongst another. Whil'st we obeyed God, all creatures obeyed us: but when we shooke off the yoke of obedience unto God, and rebelled against him, then they became disobedient unto us. Whil'st we loved God, all creatures loved and reverenced us: but whenwe fell to hate the Lord, then began they to hate us, and not before. If therefore thou seest any disobedience and hatred in the creatures towards thee, any disorder and vanitie amongst themselves, thanke thy selfe for it, thou broughtest it into the world with thy sinne.

This being so, we are hence taught, when wee see any disorder in any creature, not to blame the Lord nor the creature, but to turne backe to our selves, to take notice of our owne sinnes and corruptions, and to acknowledge this was not so at the first, but our sinne was the cause cause of it; and therefore be humbled and ashamed of our selves, that wee should confound that excellent order which God made, and all creatures (but for us) would have kept till this day: but the common practice in contrarie, as I will prove in particulars.

Gen. 3. 15. and 3. 21.

God made mans body pure and holy, and therefore it had no need to bee covered: but with sinne came shame, and thence came it that God gave us apparell to cover that shame that sin had brought upon us: so oft therefore as a man puts on his apparel, he should be humbled and asshamed by it: and thinke thus with himselfe, This was not so at the first; Adams body was glorious: whence came this ignominie and shame, which we must cover with apparell? it came from my sin; therefore so often as a man puts it on, so oft should he be quite asshamed of himselfe, which hath brought this shame upon himselfe; so as now he must needs have a cloake to cover his shame. But doe men make this end of their apparell? nay, rather they make it a banner to display their pride and vanity; and so farre are many from being asshamed of it, as that they are contrariwise proud of it. But this is as abominable, and curfed, and senselesse a pride, as if the prisoner should be proud of his bolts and fetters, which are signes of his middemeanor: for, what is thy apparell (make the best of it) it is but a beautifull cloake of thy filthie shame: then, as bolts and fetters are burdenous, and shamefull, though they be of gold: so is the cloake of thy shame, thy apparell, though it be silke, silver, or gold: for we should not be asshamed only of ordinarie apparell, or base, but euen of the most gorgeous; knowing that once we had a glorie of our owne, farre above all the glory of apparell: and the ignominie that sin hath brought upon us, is greater than this glorie of apparell can take away.

Here I denie not the use of gorgeous apparell, to those to whom it belongs: But I say to the rich men, (who, by their abilitie) to men in authority, who (by their place and calling) may weare costly apparell: yea, and to Princes, who may lawfully weare silke, silver, gold, and the most excellent ornaments of precious stones, or whatsoever: to all them, I say, God hath granted you the use of these; but withall bee not proud of them, for you once had a glorie greater than these, but lost it by sinne: and sinne brought a shame, which these cannot hide. For though thy apparell hide it from the world, yet can it not from God: onely faith can cover it from God: therefore glorie in nothing but thy faith, be asshamed of thy apparell: yea, of thy robes and costly ornaments. And know further, that whereas thy body by sinne is become so vile, a meaner cover and baser apparell were fit for it. And therefore know, that whereas God hath given thee use of costly apparell, and precious ornaments, he gives them not to honour thy body, but the place thou art in: and to adorne that part of his owne Image, which hee hath set in thee by thy calling. And know lastly, that if thou hadst kept that order, wherin God at thy creation (as the text saith) ordained thee: thy naturall glorie would more have adorned thee and the place thou bearest, than all this accidentall and artificiall glorie can: and therefore glorie not so much for the one, as be asshamed for the losse of the other; and let thy apparell teach thee this lesson.

Thirdly, many men take much delight in some kinde of meat; some in varietie of meats; and some so love their bellie, as they care not how many creatures, or kinde of creatures doe die, for their belly sake: this is to be considered. For I take it a great fault, for men either to be too lavish and careleſse, how many creatures they cause to die, or (though they eat but one kinde) to doe it without all use or further consideration. For, marke whence comes this, that man cannot now live, or not so well; but his life must be the death of other creatures, his nourishment and preservation, the destruction of other creatures. At the beginning before sinne was, this was not so: no creature did either serve to cloath or feed Adam: but this came with sinne; sinne brought this vanitie upon creatures, to die for the feeding and cloathing of man: and had we stood without sin, no creature should have lost his life to be our meat. I take it therefore the dutie of a man to make great use of his meat in this regard. And first, for the meat that he loves best, let him be humbled for his sinne: knowing that if he had not sinned, hee should have had much more sweetnesse in other meat, which notwithstanding should not have cost any creature his life. And secondly, for variety be not too lavish, nor too riotous: consider every dish is the death of a creature of Gods creation: consideragaine, whence comes this, that creatures must die to feed thee; not from the creation, creatures were not made to that end: Innocencie would have preserved all creatures to more excellent ends.

Sinne it was, and thy sinne that destroyes so many creatures for the belly of man: it is a vanitie come upon creatures for mans sinne, that they must die for mans meat. The death therefore of every creature, should be a corasive to a mans heart: when he seeth it, it should touch him to the quicke, and make him say, This creature dieth not for it selfe, but for me; not for it owne fault, but for mine. Miserable sinner that I am, if I had right, I should rather die than it. God made it once for a better end, but my sin hath brought it to this corruption. If this consideration tooke place, men would not eat their ordinarie fare with so little use: nor at extraordinarie occasions be so careleſse how much they spend, and how many creatures they cause to die.

But you will say, God hath given us libertie in meats: differences of meats are taken away in Christ, and God hath given us use of his creatures, not onely for necessitie, but more liberall use even for greater delight and comfort. And wee, I grant all this and more too, to a man that hath faith. I grant, feasts and bankets are lawfull for some men on some occasions: I take not away any mans liberty in meats: God hath granted it, and man ought not to take it away. I onely wish that when we eat, wee also would make this use of it: and that we would not too riotously abuse that libertie that God hath given us for diversity of meats: faith gives leave and libertie to eat; yet faith denies not a man to make a holy use of his eating, for his owne humiliation, but rather commands it.

A

Fourthly, we see in the world, that creatures not onely die for mans feeding, but one creature feeds on another, and one creature destroyeth another to eat him. The Hawke preyeth on divers kindes of birds: the Fox feedeth on tame birds: the Wolfe on the Lambe: greater fishes devoure the lesse: Dogs will eat divers kindes of creatures, if they can come by them. These things are manifest, and some of them be common sports in the world.

B

Now whence comes this fearefull disorder in nature, that one creature should devoure another? came it from the creation? was the world ordained in this state, that one creature should eat up another? the greater feed upon the lesse? no: but sin brought this confusion, and sinne caused this pitifull massacre of all creatures one by another. Let us therefore at these sights be humbled for our sinne, which caused so fearefull a disorder: when thou seest thy Hawk flie so fiercely and so cruelly murder a silly bird: thy Hound, the Hart, Hare, or Conie; then, as God hath given thee leave in good order, measure, and manner, thus to deale with the creatures, and therefore thou mayst take delight in it: so, withall make this use of it; whence comes this? it was not so from the beginning: When sinne was not in the world, these would all have lodged in one cage and cabbin, and one never have offered to have eaten another: my sinne caused this jarre, and this disorder betwixt these two creatures. This should humble a man, because of his sinne, and restraine his life from too much libertie, and his affection from too much delight in these kinde of pastimes.

C

Againe, when we see the crueltie of the Fox, the Wolfe, the Beare, toward the sheepe and other creatures; blame not too much the crueltie of the beasts: for this was not in them at their creation; but thy sinne made them thus cruell one against another. Turne then into thy selfe, and be ashamed of it: and blame not so much the crueltie in them, as thine owne sinne which caused it in them.

Againe, some creatures are unperfect, some in parts of their body, some in some senses: and some are lothsome and ugly to behold: and some are venemous, and hurtfull to the world. When thou seest it, consider whence it is this. They were not thus created: for God ordained that is, made all creatures in perfect order: but this comes from thy sinne; enter into thy selfe, and acknowledge this, and be humbled for it, and doe not so much contemne this creature for his imperfection, nor loath him for his deformitie, nor hate him for his venome; as contemne and loath, and hate thine owne sinnes which were the cause of all these.

Lastly, some take great delight in faire buildings, and make no use of them but for delight and pleasure: but if they consider well, they have no such cause: it was not so at the creation. Adam in his innocencie had a more sumptuous Palace ordained for him; namely, the Paradise of heaven and earth; and yet trees were not cut in peeces, nor the earth had her stones rent out of her bowels, for the building of it. Thy sin it was that destroyed this Palace; and sinne hath caused the necessitie of these buildings: How then canst thou glorie in thy buildings; Wilt thou glorie in thy shame? Canst thou be proud of these, when thy sinne bereft thee of a better? as therefore thy house is a comfort, strength, securitie, and delight unto thee: so adde this one use also; let it in this consideration be a cause to humble thee for thy sinne.

The disorder that sinne hath brought into the world, might be shewed in more particulars: but these may suffice, being those of whom we have most common use, and therefore doe most commonly abuse.

To conclude this point, I say unto all men: Doest thou see what disorder is now in the world, in thy apparell, meat, recreations, buildings? Seest thou the confusion, vanity, corruption of all creatures: the variance, dissention, and hatred of creatures amongst themselves? Canst thou see all this, and either not regard it at all, or take delight in it? This is a cursed and abominable delight. If a rich man should consume all his wealth, or throw it all on heapes, and then desperately set his house on fire, hath he any cause of joy to see this? If he sit still at this, you will say he is senseless: but if he laugh at it, he is mad: So God created man rich in all blessings, put him into the palace of the world: garnished this house of the world with exceeding beauty: his meat, his apparell, his recreation, his house were all excellent and glorious; he made all other creatures, amongst which there was nothing but concord, love, agreement, uniformity, comelinesse, and good order: now man by sinne fell, and by his fall, not onely spent all his riches (that is, defaced the glorie of his owne estate:) but also set his house (that is the world) on fire: that is, defaced the beauty of heaven and earth: brought confusion, corruption, vanitie, deformity, imperfection, and monstrous disorder on all creatures; set all the world together by the eares, all creatures; set all the world together by the eares, and one creature at variance and deadly hate with other: so that one creature doth fight, teare, wound, destroy, and eat up another. O cursed and damnable sinne of man, that hath so shamefully disordered that heavenly order, wherein God created all things at the beginning! and miserable men are we, which can sit still and see this, and not be moved: but if we rejoyce and delight in it; certainly, then a spirituall madnesse hath bewitched our soules. Let us therefore stir up our selves, and looke about us; and seeing all the world on a fire about us, namely, flaming in contention, hatred, and all disorder: let us for our parts seeke to quench it: which because we cannot, therefore lament and bewaile it: but much more lament and be humbled for our sinne, which kindled this fire of disorder in the world.

Hitherto of the manner of the Creation.

By the Word of God]

The third point is, by what meanes? The text answereth; the world was ordained in that excellent order, by the Word of God. By this word is meant, 1. not any vocall word, as if the Lord should speake unto the creatures: nor secondly, the substantiall word of the Father, the second person: although I confesse that by him were made all things. Yet, I take it, it is not so meant in this place: but rather as Moses doth, Gen. 1. when he saith, that in the creation God said: It is in both places a comparison taken from a Prince, who bids his servants doe this, and they doe it presently. The Lord in this place is like a Prince, he hath his word, whereby he commanded the world to be made. That word, I take it, is his will: for Gods willing of any thing, is an effectuall commanding of it to be done: yea, it is the doing of it: for his willing of a thing to be, is more than all the commandements of all men in the world. For if he doe but will it, the thing is done what ever it be: whereas all the world may command, and yet it is no neerer. From hence, I take it, this is manifest to be the surest sense for this place; God willed the being of all creatures, and according as he willed, they presently were: and that his will was his word here mentioned.

Heb. 11.3.

B

Here then first marke a speciall point, that sets out the glorie of the Creator: he used no labour, no motion, no paines, no servants, no meanes as men doe. He onely spake the word, and they were made: he commanded, and they were created. Psalm. 148. 5. This shewes how glorious a God he is, and his power how omnipotent it is, who at his owne will and word produced such a glorious frame of heaven and earth, so many thousand sorts and kindes of creatures in their order and due place. David most seriously considered of this, when hee made the 104. Psalme, as appeareth if we read it. Wee ought also so deeply to meditate of this his glorious power, manifested in this miraculous creation, as that we (seeing it) may acknowledge with the Psalmist, Psalm. 115.3. Our God sitteth in heaven, and doth whatsoever he will.

C

2. Did the Lord make all things by his word? learne we then for our instruction thus much: Ever when wee see what is Gods will concerning our selves in any great crosse or affliction whatsoever, let us subject our selves to it and beare it, because it comes from so mightie a God, as whom there is no resisting. For see, he that commanded all the world to be, and it presently was so, and nothing could disobey; then if he command any crosse to cease upon thee, will thou resist him? nay, rather take Saint Peters holy counsell, 1 Pet. 5.5. Humble thy self therefore under this so mightie hand of God, that he may exalt thee in due time. If thou then see his crosse comming towards thee, meet it, receive it with both hands, beare it with both shoulders: if he will humble thee, resist not thou: for when againe he pleaseth to exalt thee, all the Devils in hell are not able to resist him.

It followeth; So that the things which we see, are not made of things which did appeare.]

The fourth and last point, is the matter whereof the world was made: The text saith, The things that we see, that is, all the world were made of things never seene: that is, of a flat nothing, which here is said not to bee seene, or not to appeare; because how can that appeare or be seene, which is not? So the meaning is, when there was nothing in the world, then God made the world to be. This is the strangest thing of all in this fourth effect: For it is not so strange that the world should be made in that excellent order; or that God should make it by his Word; as that he should make it of nothing. Reason denies it, Philosophy disputes against it as absurd, and never will yeeld unto it: but here is the power of faith manifest; for it makes us beleeve and know it is so.

Hence we learne, 1. If hee created the world of nothing, then he can preserve us also by nothing, that is, without meanes, or by weake meanes, or contrarie to meanes; he that did the one, can doe the other, for the same reason is of both. This is a speciall point of our religion, Not to tie Gods providence unto meanes. Men use never to acknowledge it but with meanes; but that is no worke of faith: But we ought not onely to see Gods providence, when we see no meanes; but even when other meanes are against us, then to see it, is a point of faith: and that is our dutie, though it be hard. Give men health, wealth, libertie, peace, let them be guarded about with Gods blessings; then they will magnifie the providence of God: but take these away, and lay upon them penurie, sicknesse, or any crosse, then they rage and raile, and distrust, yea blaspheme, and say, No providence, no God. And thus God is beholding to the meanes, for else men would flatly deme him. But this argues the want of faith. For had we that faith in us, whereby we beleeve stedfastly, that God made all the world without meanes, that faith would also perswade us, that he can preserve us being made, though meanes be wanting, or though they be against us. This we may make use of, whether we be in necessitie, and would be relieved; or in any perill, and would be succoured: or in what extreme tie soever, when meanes doe faile us.

Secondly, if he made all things of nothing, then he is able also, in respect of his promises made in Christ, To call such things that are not, as though they were, Rom. 4. 17. As, a man by nature is the childe of wrath, and of the Devil: he is able to make him a servant of God, and childe of grace.

This may teach us, 1. Not to despaire of any mans salvation, though he seeme almost past all grace: for God can make any thing of nothing, and therefore can put grace into that heart, wherein afore was none.

And 2. this is a comfort to all them which through weaknesse of faith, cannot perswade themselves of their election. For suppose thou be full of wants and imperfections, and hast a rebellious and froward heart: What then? Remember God made thee once a creature, of nothing; he can now againe make thee a new creature of nothing: he created thee without meanes; he can save thee, though never so many meanes doe serve to be against thee.

And thus much of these three effects of faith; and consequently,

Of the first part of this Chapter, containing a description of faith in generall.

Abels Faith.

Verse 2.

By faith Abel offered unto God a greater sacrifice than Caine: by which he obtained witnesse that he was righteous; God testifying of his gifts: by which faith he also being dead yet speaketh.

THe second part of the Chapter containeth an illustration and proofe of the former description, by a rehearsall of the most excellent patternes and ensamples of faith, which flourished in the Church of the Old Testament.

These examples be of two sorts: 1. Such as are set downe severally one by one, from the 4. ver. to the 32. 2. Such as are set downe joyntly many together, from thence to the end.

The examples set downe severally are of two sorts: 1. Such as were the natural Israelites, and borne members of the Church visible. 2. Such as were not naturally members, but strangers from the Church of God, till they were called extraordinarily.

Examples of such as were members of the visible Church, are also of two sorts: 1. Such as lived about the flood: or, 2. after the flood.

First, of such as lived afore, or about the time of the flood, there be three faithfull men, whose faith is here recorded: 1. Abel, and 2. Enoch before: 3. Noe, both before and after. All these three in order.

The excellent and most worthy examples, are all grounded on some place of the old Testament, and are continued from the beginning of the world, almost to Christs incarnation: for he beginneth with Abel, which is so neere the beginning, that he was the second good man that lived in the world: yea, and the first of all that had this true faith, as the onely meanes of his salvation. For, as for Adam, he afore his fall had not this faith, neither should it have saved him: but when the first meanes failed him, then came this faith as the second and more effectuall meanes of his salvation: but Abel was never in possibilitie to be saved by any thing, but by this faith. And therefore Abels faith hath the first place of commendation, and that in this verse.

Abels faith is here commended for three things: 1. In that he offered by it a greater sacrifice than Caine. 2. By it hee obtained testimonie with God. 3. By it dead Abel yet speaketh.

The first effect of Abels faith is thus set downe by the holy Ghost, By faith Abel offered unto God a greater sacrifice than Caine.

The ordinarie Exposition of these words, is this; That Caine and Abel comming to offer, there was no difference in the matter of their sacrifice, but onely in the manner of offering, in that Abel offered by faith, and so did not Caine.

This exposition though it be good, yet it fits not the scope of this place, nor the fourth of Gen. The right sense therefore seemes to be this; Abel having faith, this faith moved him to testifie his thankfull heart to God. This he did by offering unto God the best and costliest sacrifice that he could: namely, the first fruits and fattest of his sheepe; Whereas unbeleeving Caine, having no love to testifie unto God, brought onely of the fruit of his ground: not of the best as Abel did: but whatsoever came first to hand. This being the true meaning of the whole: let us come to the particular points laid downe in this effect, and they are three:

1. That

1. That Caine and Abel offered, that is, served God.

2. That they offered Sacrifices.

3. That Abel offered a better than Caine.

The first point containes their service in generall: the second, their service in particular: the third, the difference of their service; wherein especially will appeare the excellencie of Abels faith.

First, Abel and Caine, the two first brethren in the world, offered sacrifice to the true God. How learned they this? for they had no Scripture, it was penned many yeares after; namely, by Moses first of all. I answer, when their Parents Adam and Eve had fallen, God gave them (of his infinite goodnesse) a covenant of grace, that the seed of the woman should breake the serpents head, Genes. 3. 15. wee doubt not but our first parents received this covenant, and beleeved the promise; and this their faith taught them how to worship the true God aright.

You will say; thus Adam and Eve learned of God; but how came this to Caine and Abel? I answer, when they had beene thus instructed of God, Adam as a faithfull servant of God, taught the same religion, and delivered the same doctrine to his children: and by it they were taught, what, to whom, and in what manner to offer sacrifice. And thus they did it neither by Scripture, nor revelation, nor their owne invention, but by the instruction of their Parents.

Hence let all Parents learne a lesson of Adam, the first Parent that was in the world; namely, to procure the good of their children: he nurtured his children excellently: 1. Hee provided for them till they came to age. 2. Then he left them not, but appointed them their callings; for one was an husbandman, and the other a shepherd. 3. Not thus onely, but he taught them to worship the true God, both in their callings, and in the practice of religion, and therefore he taught them to offer sacrifice in way of thankfulnesse unto God: all this did Adam.

So must thou doe with the children which God hath given thee. 1. Provide for them carefully till they be of age, take heed, they miscarrie not any way for want of things needfull. 2. So bring them up, as that they may be apt to live in some godly calling whereby to doe good in his Church; and that calling thou must appoint them, according to the fitnesse of their gifts. Adam appointed them not both one calling, but diverse callings, according to the diversitie of their gifts: and thou must see it be a lawfull and honest calling, for so are both these. Then 3. (the greatest matter of all these) teach them religion, and the true manner of fearing and worshipping God; that as by the two first, thy child may live well in this world, so by this he may be made an heire of the kingdome of heaven.

Adam was the first father, and father of us all; let all then follow him in this practice: and if we follow him in one, follow him in both. Divers will be as carefull for their bodies and for their callings as Adam was, but how few are as carefull to teach them religion for the preferment of their soules to life eternall? but parents must have care of both these: else they shall answer for their child at the day of judgement: and though he perish in his owne sinne, yet his blood will God require at the Fathers hands. For God made him a father in his room, and he discharged not the duty of a father unto their childe.

Secondly, in that Caine offered as well as Abel; hence we learne divers instructions.

1. It is a common opinion, that if a man walke duly and truly in his calling, doing no man harme, but giving everie man his owne, and so doe all his life long, God will receive him, and save his soule: but the truth is this: If men doe thus, it is good and commendable and they must be exhorted to continue: but if they stand upon this for salvation, they cast away their soules. For marke here, Caine was a man that walked in an honest calling; and more than that, he tooke paines, and laboured in it (which all men doe not that have honest callings:) And more than all these, when Abel offered, he came and worshipped God also; and he did outwardly in such sort, as no man could blame him, but onely God that saw his heart: and for all this, yet he is a wicked Caine, and that is all that the Word of God gives him, 1 Ioh. 3. 12. Then it is manifest, that to walke in a mans calling justly and uprightly, doing no man harme, will not serve the turne. Caine did it, and yet was accursed; we must then goe further than Caine, else we shall goe with Caine to the place where he is.

Reason not with thy selfe, I worke hard, and follow my calling, I hurt no man: thus could Caine reason, and yet but cursed Caine. Thou must then beside these, get that that Caine did not; Learne in thy conscience to see and feele thy sinne, to be grieved for it, so as thou maist say; my sicknesse, my povertie, my crosses grieve me, but nothing so much as mine owne sinnes, these trouble mee above all, and this griefe swalloweth up all the rest. And there is another thing which I seek above all, not gold, silver, or promotion; but reconciliation with my God, and his favour in Jesus Christ: If thou hast these two, then thou goest beyond Caine. then shalt thou stand before God with Abel and be accepted. Remember these two, humiliation for sinne, and desire of reconciliation: these two is the summe of religion. If thou hast these, thou art blessed with Abel, if not, cursed with Caine, how soever thou livest in the world. If thou say, Caine killed his brother, and so would not I doe for all the world, I will doe no man hurt in bodie nor goods: This will not serve: for it is said, that God had no respect to Cain afore he killed his brother, even when he offered his sacrifice: and therefore this dutie is most necessarie, and there is no shifting it off.

2. Cain offered as well as Abel; yea, Cain offered afore Abel, as it is manifest in Gen. 4. 3. And yet Abels sacrifice was better when it came to the proofe, and was accepted, and not Cains which came first. Hence we learne, that a man may be more forward than many other in many outward duties of religion, and yet not be accepted of God: another may not be so forward to the dutie, and yet when he comes, be better accepted. Whence comes this? what? is forwardnesse in good duties a fault? Nothing lesse: but hence it is, he that outwardly is most forward, may come in hypocrisie and without faith; the want whereof makes his forwardnesse nothing worth. Many such have we in our Church: great frequenters of places and exercises of religion; and yet they come but as Cain did, or it may be in worse intents. Thy forwardnesse is to be commended, but take this with thee also; Care not so much to be first at the Sermon, or to be there oftner than other, as to goe with true faith, repentance and a heart hungring for grace: if not, boast not inthy forwardnesse, Cains offered afore Abel, and yet not accepted; and so there may come an Abel after thee, and bring faith with him, and be accepted, when thou with thy hypocriticall forwardnesse shalt be rejected, as Cains was.

Thirdly, did Cains offer as well as Abel? Hence we learne, that the Church militant is a mixt and compounded companie of men: not of one sort, but true beleevers and hypocrites mingled together: as here in the very infancie of the Church, there was Cain worshipping in shew, as well as Abel that worshipped in truth. So was it in the infancie, so in her perpetuall growth, and so shall it be in the last age of the Church: the good shall never be quite separated from the bad, untill Christ himselfe doe it at the last judgement. Goats shall alwaies bee mingled among the sheepe, till Christ the great shepherd doe separate them himselfe. Matth. 25. 32. And he that imagineth a perfect separation till then, imagineth a fancie in his braine, and such a Church as cannot bee found upon the earth.

This being so, let no man therefore be afraid to joyne himselfe to the visible Church; neither let any that are in it, goe out of it, because the bad are mingled with the good; for so it hath beene alwaies, and ever will be: he then that will goe out of a Church, because there be hypocrites in it, must goe out of the world: for such a Church is not found, but triumphant in heaven.

Fourthly, in that Cain and Abel offered, hence we learne, that the church of God which truly professeth his name, hath beene ever since the beginning of the world. For this Church was in the household of Adam, when there was no more but it in the world: for sacrifice to God is a signe of the Church: yea, and beside the sacrifice, they had a place appointed where Adam and his familie came together to worship God; For, so much Cain intimateth, Gen. 4. 14. and 16. Cain went out from the presence of the Lord, that is, not onely out of his favour and protection, but from the place of his solemne service, and where he wonted to manifest his speciall presence to his children serving him: and therefore Caine, as being excommunicate, complaines (vers. 14.) because he must leave it. Thus the Church hath beene from the beginning, and therefore is truly called Catholike.

The Papists abuse this place notoriously; for whereas the Church hath beene so ancient, they argue therefore it is above the Scripture: yea, and that we could not know it to be Scripture, but by the ancient testimonie of the Church.

We must know the Scripture is two wayes to be considered: first, as it was written and penned by holy men, and so it is later than the Church: for Moses was the first pen-man of Scripture: but secondly, as it is the Word of God, the substance, sense, and truth thereof is much more ancient than the Church; yea, without the word of God, there can be no Church: For, without faith is no Church (because the church is a companie of beleevers,) and without the word is no faith; therefore no word, no faith; no faith, no Church. So then the Scripture was afore the Church, but penned after.

Thus we see that Caine and Abel offered.

Now secondly, what offered they? sacrifices. Sacrifices were used in the worship of God for two ends: 1. When a sacrifice was offered, especially of beasts, when a man saw the bloud of the beasts powred out, it put him in minde of his own sins, and the desert of them, and taught him to say thus: Even as this creature is here slaine, and his bloud distills and drops away; so my sins deserve that my bloud should bee shed, and my soule be drenched in hell for ever. This creature can die but one death, for it sinneth not; but my sinnes deserve both the first and second death.

Secondly, sacrifices served to put them in minde of the Messias to come; and the slaying of the beasts shewed them how the Messias should shed his bloud, and give his life for the sinnes of the people. These are the two principall ends of sacrifices, and for these two ends did Caine and Abel offer: Caine in hypocrisie and for fashion sake; Abel in truth, conscience, and sinceritie.

As it was in the old sacrifices, so is it in our Sacraments of the new Testament: whereof the sacrifices were all types: in Baptisme, sprinkling of the water serves to shew us how filthily wee are defiled with our owne sinnes.

2. It signifies the sprinkling of the bloud of Christ

Christ upon the heart of a sinner, for his sanctification from sinne.

3 In the Supper, the breaking of the bread signifies, 1. how we should be broken in humiliation for our sinnes: and 2. powring out of the wine, how our bloud as it were should bee shed, and powred out for our sinnes, if wee had not that we deserve. And secondly, they represent unto us, how the bodie of Christ was broken, and his bloud powred out for our sinnes: which he was content to suffer under the wrath of his Father, for our sakes: so that wee see, both the sacrifices and Sacraments of the old, as also of the new Testament, all aimed at these two ends; to shew us our sinnes, and our misery by sinne; and to foretell or represent our reconciliation by Christ. Which being so, our lesson is this:

We have all received those two Sacraments: the first once, the second often. Now if they have beene duly received of us, they ought to have this double use unto us: 1. To cause us to make a search of our owne sinnes, and of our misery by sinne; and seeing it, to be cast downe and humbled, considering how corrupt our hearts are, and how wicked our lives. And secondly, when this is so, then to make us seeke for reconciliation with God by faith in Christ, to make us desire it, love it, and pray for it, above all things in the world. Abel not onely offred, but offred so, as that it put him in minde of his sinne, and of his redemption, by the death of the Messias to come. So wee must not onely outwardly receive the Sacraments; but so receive, as that wee may see and be humbled for our sinne, and seeke to bee reconciled to God in Christ.

Such use also ought wee to make of hearing the word, and not to be content with bare hearing of it, or to get a generall knowledge out of it: but it must give us a speciall sight of our owne estate by sinne: and urge us forward to seeke the favour of God in Christ. Religion stands not in hearing the Word, and receiving the Sacraments with the congregation, though it bee done never so often, and never so formally: But so to heare and so to receive, as that they may worke in us those two things: and that is the pith and life of religion. And whosoever he be that professeth religion, and sheweth not the fruit of it in these two, that mans profession is in vaine, and it will goe for no payment at the day of judgement.

Thus wee see they offered, and what they offered. It followeth: A greater sacrifice than Caine.

The third and last point is the difference of these sacrifices. For although Caine offered as well as Abel and offered sacrifice as well as Abel: yet was there a difference in their sacrifices; for Abels was better than Caines. This is the chiefe point: for this sets downe what was that excellencie of his faith, for which hee is here commended. Abel is not commended for offering, by his faith; for so did Caine that had no faithinner for offering sacrifice, by his faith: for so did Caine that had no faith: but hee was clear by his faith hee offered a better sa rifice than Caine could.

The holy Ghost cals Abels sacrifice better or greater sacrifice, because Abel brought the best and fattest of his sheepe, and so he knew of the most cost he could; as supposing that he would have bestowed more cost, had he known how to have done it. Yet the Text gives us he had, would give more if hee had it. And hee that doth the best he can in any thing, it is certaine he would doe better if hee could. Caine contrariwise brought not the best of his fruits, but either the worst, or whatsoever came first to hand: as thinking that whatsoever hee brought, was good enough: and therefore worthily is Abel said to have offered a better sacrifice than Caine.

And further, this holy practice of Abel came to be a law written, even one of the commandements of the Ceremoniall law; namely, that the first borne should be offered to God, Exod. 34. 19. And the first fruits of the corne, Levit. 23. 10, &c. And that nothing that was lame, blinde, maimed, or had any blemish at all should be offred to the Lord. Deut. 15. 21. Abel here did even that which these lawes commanded: and these lawes commanded the same that he did. Thus God vouchsafed to honour his servant Abel, for his obedient and loyall heart; even to make his practice the ground and beginning of one of his owne lawes: that so the Israelites in all their generations, might in their daily practices remember this worthy deed of their Abel to his perpetuall honour.

Now for us the truth is, this law binders us not: for it was a ceremony, and is ended in Christ. Yet the equity and life of it reacheth even to us; namely, it teacheth us what we ought give any thing unto God, to give the best we have. This is the equity of these lawes ceremoniall, which commanded them to give to the Lord their first borne, and their first fruits, and the fattest of their cattell: and so much reacheth doe still binde us. Now from this rule we are taught divers duties:

1 To the Parent. Hast thou many children and wilt thou give some to the Lord? namely, to serve him in the ministery? The practice of the world is to make the eldest a Gentleman, the next a Lawyer, the next a Marchant: the chaf is the youngest, or least regarded, or that is in some infirmity in wit, or deformitie in bodie. Never of all thy children thou findest fittest in gifts and graces of body and mind, whom thou lovest best, and most esteemest, bee is fittest for the Lord, and the Lord is most worthy of him: consecrate him to the Lord, for his service in the ministery.

2 To the young man. Hee being in the strength and ripenesse of wit, senses, memorie, capacity, and in the best of his age: he tells I will take my pleasure now I am fittest for it: I will repent at the end of my dayes, and that is a fitter time. This is a vile policy of the Devill, to dishonour God, and to cast away their Creator. What a griefe is it to give the devill his youngest yeares, the strength of his body and wit, and to bring his withered old age unto God? nay, be sure, God will not accept thy rotten sacrifice of old age, but rather give thee up to the devill, that he may have thee altogether, which hath had the best: then follow rather Salomons counsell, Eccles. 12.1. who bids thee Remember thy Creator in the dayes of thy youth: Remember Abels sacrifice, it was of the best. So thou hast no sacrifice but thy selfe to offer: offer then the best: thy young yeares is the best time, give them unto God.

3 To all Christians. Abel offered the best: it teacheth us all, if wee will professe and serve God, not to doe it by the halfes; or for shew and fashion like, or negligently, as not caring how. Thus to doe is but to offer the sacrifice of Cain, and that makes the most professors go away with their service unaccepted as Caines was: for God will have all or none, he is worthy to have no partner: he must be served with all the heart, with soule and body, so that a man must consecrate himselfe wholly unto him, 2 King. 20.25. It is the speciall commendation of good King Iosias, that he turned to the Lord with all his heart, and soule, and might: and for that, he is preferred afore all Kings afore or after him: not that Iosias could fulfill the law perfectly, as it required: but it is meant of the endevour of his heart and life, by which he strave with all his might to serve God as well as hee could: his example is ours.

Wee professe religion, wee must looke that our hearts affect it: we professe a turning from sinne, we must take heed it be not formall, and from the lips, but from the heart. So when wee prætise any duties of religion, whether we pray or heare the Word, or receive the Sacraments, (this is the sacrifice that we can offer) wee must not do them coldly and carelesly; but with zealous affection and resolution from the heart. Otherwise, if we serve God for fashion sake, and our hearts are on the world, and our own lusts, wee offer the sacrifice of cursed Cain: and wee with our form of religion shall goe to him. But let us offer the sacrifice of Abel: that is, though it bee never so little, yet let it bee the best wee can, and all wee can, and God will accept us as hee did Abel. And thus the Parent should give God his best childe: the young man his best yeares: every man his best part, which is his heart. And thus wee follow the steps of holy Abel, who offered to God the best sacrifice hee had. This was the fruit of his faith: even so that Parent, that young man, that Professour that hath true faith, will doe so likewise.

Hitherto of the first effect of Abels faith: It followeth, By the which hee obtained witnesse that hee was righteous.

This is the second effect of Abels faith, whereby it is commended 2. For the meaning. By faith he means saving faith, which makes a man just before God, and no other. For whereas he had said before, that by faith our Elders had obtained a good report. Hee proves that generall, by this example of Abel; therefore that saving faith which was meant there, is also meant here.

These words set downe two benefits which Abel had by his saving faith: First, hee was just by it. Secondly, God testified that he was so.

For the first; Abels faith made him just and righteous, not because his faith was an excellent quality of that vertue in it selfe, as to make him just; but because it was an instrument whereby hee apprehended and applyed to himselfe the righteousnesse of the Messiah to come, whereby hee might stand just before God. This was his righteousnesse, which he had by faith: for hee trusted not to any holinesse of his own, though (it is out of question) hee knew hee was the sonne of man who once was perfectly righteous: but the trust and confidence of his heart was in the righteousnesse of that blessed Seed, which God had promised, should breake the Serpents head. This promise hee knowing, believed it, applyed it to himselfe, and this faith made him righteous.

Here we learne a worthy lesson of Christianity; namely, that the true and the undoubted way to heaven, is a holy and lively faith in Jesus Christ: for this faith makes a man righteous, and that righteousnesse opens him the gate of heaven. To this end (saith the Apostle) Being justified by faith, wee have peace with God: but by whom? through our Lord Iesus Christ.

For the use of this doctrine, wee must renew our former exhortation, which indeed cannot bee too often pressed to the conscience. There is none of us so vile, none so prophane, but wee desire salvation. If wee doe, then wee must tread the beaten way to it. For wee are not borne heires of it: neither can wee come thither by chance: but there is a way that must be taken, and that way is but one: all other are misleading by-wayes. Againe, that way must be taken in this life; else, it is too late. Now this way is to bee a just and righteous man. With this never man failed: and without this, never man attained to salvation: for, No unclean thing can come into the kingdom of heaven. Never was man justified there, which was not just before: and that must here bee begun, which in heaven is to be perfected. In this life therefore wee must seeke to bee just. Now, our good workes will not serve to make us just: for they are all unable to indure the triall of Gods justice. And if wee stand to them, and they prove not not able to satisfie Gods justice; then, in stead of saving us they will condemne us. Therefore with Abel, let us goe out of our selves, denie our selves, and cleave onely to Christs righteousnesse, in life and death: this is the way that never will deceive us.

Rom. 5.1.

But some will say, We walke in this way. I answer, He that walketh in a way, may be traced by his steps: so then, shew your steps of holinesse, of devotion, of charitie, &c. these must shew your faith: leave these steps behind you and then your faith is good. Thus did holy Abel: beleeve thou it, acknowledge it, and follow thou after him: and renounce all by-paths which the Papists, or thy owne braine imagineth. Let this one doctrine sinke into thy heart in stead of many, and let not the Devill strake it out. For if thou walke in this way, my soule for thine it will bring thee to heaven: if not, at the last day this doctrin will condemne thee, because it shewed thee this way, and thou wouldest not walke in it.

Secondly, observe: He saith, Abel was approved and accepted of God. How proves he that? Because his worke pleased God: as who say, his workes cannot please God, unlesse his person doe: therefore in that his workes doe, thence he concludeth that his person did: it is the reason of the holy Ghost, and therefore infallible.

In the framing of this reason, the holy Ghost teacheth us a great point of our religion: namely, that first a mans person must please God afore his actions can. And after the person, then the actions. This is plaine in these words: for it is said, he first obtained witnesse that he was righteous himselfe, and then God testified of his gifts: So likewise more plainely, Gen. 4.4. God had respect first to Abel, and then to his offering: So that the truth is manifest, No work pleaseth God afore the worker doe. This being so, hath excellent uses:

First, it overthroweth a maine pillar of Romish religion; Iustification by workes. For how can a man be justified by his workes, when he himselfe must be just afore the workes can be? Unlesse he be just, his works be wicked: if they be wicked afore his person be just, how can they then justifie him? And if the person be once just, what needs it then to be againe justified by works? Good workes make not a man good, but a good man makes a worke good: and shall that worke that a man made good, returne againe and make the man good? 1. That is absurd in reason: And 2. it is needlesse: For the man is good already; else the worke could not have beene good. We may therefore say, workes are rather justified by the person of a man, than his person by the workes; and it is a most vaine thing to looke for Justification from that, which thou thy selfe must first justifie afore it be just: if we had no other reasons against justification by workes but this, this were sufficient.

Secondly, hence we learne, that till a man be called, and his person justified and sanctified, all that ever he doth is sinne. 1. His common actions, his eating, drinking, sleeping, walking, talking, are all sinnes. Yea 2. the workes of his calling and his labour in the same, though never so just, equall and upright. 3. Further, his civill vertues, namely, the practice of civill vertues: his outward gravitie, meeknesse, sobrietie, temperance, quietnesse, uprightnesse, and all outward conformity, are all sins. Yea, more than all this, his best actions, namely, his practising of the parts of Gods worship, or his deeds of charitie, his prayer, his hearing the word, his receiving of the sacraments, his giving of almes; they are all sins unto him, if he have not a beleeving and penitent heart: yea, such sinnes as shall condemne him, if he had no other. Obiect. This should seeme strange divinitie, that the most holy actions, as prayer, &c. should be damnable sins. I answer, they are in themselves holy and good, and as farre forth as God hath commanded them; yet in the doer they are sinnes, because he doth them from a foule and unholy heart: for the same action may be holy in it selfe, and in regard of God the author of it, and yet a sinne in him that is the doer of it. As cleere water, pure in the fountain, is corrupted or poisoned by running thorow a filthie and polluted channell; so are even the best actions, sinnes: as even the preaching of the Word to a Minister, whose heart is not cleansed by faith, and his person accepted of God; it is a sin unto him, and (if he repent not) shall be his condemnation. Caine sinned not onely in hating and murthering his brother, in lying and dissembling with God; but Caine sinned also even in offering sacrifice. And Abels sacrifice had beene a damnable sin, but that his person was justified before God. And the reason of all this is good: for nothing in the worke is able to make an action acceptable to God, but only the acceptation of the person by Christ. This being so, it stands us every one in hand to look to our selves; and to labour above all things for faith and repentance: that to our persons may be accepted righteous before God, and thereby our actions accepted also. If it be a miserable thing, that all thy actions, even holy actions should be sinnes, then labour to be justified; for that onely can make thy works accepted: if not, then though thou labour never so much to be approved in the world, and set never so glorious a shew upon thy works to the eyes of men, they are all abominable sinnes in the sight of God: and at the day of judgement they shal goe for no better. Preach and teach all thy life long; nay, give thy life to die for religion: give all thy goods to the poore, deprive thy selfe of all delights: build Churches, Colleges, bridges, highwayes, &c. and there may come a poore shepherd, and for his keeping of his sheepe be accepted, when thou with all this pompe of outward ward holinesse, maieth be rejected. And why this? only because he had faith, and thou hast none; his person was justified before God, and thine is not. Therefore let this be my counsell, from Abel: Labour not so much to worke glorious workes; as that which thou doest, doe it in faith. Faith makes the meanest worke accepted; and want of faith makes the most glorious worke rejected: for so saith the text, Abel must be accepted, else his sacrifice is not. Thus we see Abel was just, and God so accounted him. The second point is, That God gave testimony he was so: In these words,

God giving testimonie.]

What testimonie it was that God gave of Abel and his gift, it is not expressed in the word; and so it is not certaine: but it is very likely, that when he and Cain offred, God in speciall mercy sent fire from heaven and burnt up Abels sacrifice, but not Cains: for so it pleased the Lord often afterward when he would shew that he accepted any man, or his worke, he answered them by fire from heaven. So he burnt up the sacrifice that Aaron offered, Levit. 9. 24. So he answered Salomon, 2 Chron. 7. 1. And so Elias, 2 Kings 18. 28. And so it is likely that he gave this testimonie that he accepted Abel and his offering. This was a great prerogative that Abel and the Fathers in the old testament had. We have not this, but we have a greater, for we have that that is the substance, and truth, and bodie of this: For we have also the fire of God, that is, his spirit comes downe into our hearts every day, not visibly but spiritually, and burnes up in the heart of a beleever his sinnes and corruptions, and lights the light of true faith, that shall never be put out.

The use hereof is this; As no sacrifice in the old law pleased God, but such as was burnt by fire from heaven, sent downe either then or afore: so our sacrifices of the new Testament (that is, our invocation of Gods name, our sacrifice of praise, our duties of religion, our workes of mercie and love,) never please God, unlesse they proceed from an heart purged by the fire of Gods spirit, that is, from a beleeving and repentant heart: both which are kindled and lighted, and daily continued by that fire of Gods spirit. Therefore it is, that Paul saith, 1 Tim. 1. 4. That love must come out of a pure heart, and good conscience, and faith unfained. The duties of religion, and works of love comming from this purged heart, ascend into the presence of God, as a smoake of most acceptable sacrifices, and are as a sweet perfume in the nostrils of the Lord.

Now, of what did God thus testifie? Of his gift.

It may here be asked at the first: how can Abel give a gift to God: hath the Lord need of any thing; and are not all things his? I answer, God is soveraigne Lord of heaven and earth, and all creatures: yet hath he so given his creatures unto man to use, as that they becom mans owne, and so he may esteeme and use them: and being mans, a man may in token of his thankfulnesse returne them againe to God: especially, seeing God accepts them being so offered, as most free gifts

This sheweth us, first, the wonderfull mercie of God; that whereas we can offer him nothing but his owne, he vouchsafeth to accept a gift offered of his owne, even as though we had of our owne to offer.

2. See here a difference betwixt the sacrifices of the old, and sacraments of the new Testament. In their sacrifices they gave something to God, and therefore they are called gifts: in our sacraments we receive daily grace from God.

3. In that the sacrifices of the old Law are called gifts, we must know that it is typicall, and hath excellent significations unto us:

1. It signifieth that the Messias should be given of God freely, for the salvation of his elect: and that Christ the Messias should willingly give himselfe to be a Redeemer.

2. It signifieth that every man that lookes for salvation by Christ, must give himselfe to God and all that is in him. So Paul exhorteth, Rom. 6. 13. Give your selves unto God, and your members weapons of righteousnesse. When we give any thing to a man, we make him Lord of it. If we then give our soules and bodies to the Lord, we must give them so, as that they may obey and serve him, and be ruled by him, and serve for his glorie, howsoever he shall use them. We professe religion; and make great shewes; but to give our selves in obedience to God, is the life of religion. But contrary is the course of the world. For, most professors are given up to sin and Sathan: their bodies given to drinking, gaming, uncleanesse, injustice; their soules to envying, hatred, malice, revenge, lust, pride, selfe-love: God hath nothing except it be a face: but that will not serve the turne: he will have all, bodie and soule; for he made all, and he redeemed all. We goe against equitie: Christ gave his body and soule for us: why should we not give ours againe to him? Againe, this gift is not as other gifts; for here all the profit redounds to the giver: the glorie indeed is his, but the gaine and profit is our own. Why then should we withhold our selves from God? it argueth, we know not feele not, what Christ hath given us: for if we did, if we had ten thousand lives, we would thinke them all too little for him.

And thus much of the first and second effect of Abels faith; the third followeth.

By which Abel being dead, yet speaketh.

The 3. effect, whereby Abels faith is commended, is laid downe in these words. Concerning the meaning whereof there is some difference, which is briefly to be examined. Some thinke the words should be thus translated, By which also Abel being dead, is yet spoke of; making the meaning to be, that by his faith he obtained a good name to all posteritie: but it seemes this cannot stand, for two causes: First, because that is alreadie affirmed of Abel and all the rest, in the second verse, that through faith they had obtained a good report: which therefore might seeme needlesse so soone to be repeated againe. Secondly, for that afterwards Christs bloud and Abels being compared together, it is not said that Christs bloud is better spoken of than Abels, but that it speaketh better things than Abels did. Therefore the words are rightly translated.

Now for the true sense of them, it is likely the holy Ghost here hath relation to the storie whence it is taken; where, upon Cains murther God saith to him, The voice of thy brothers bloud crieth to me from the earth: and why crieth it? Namely, for vengeance against so monstrous a murder: and crieth to all men to behold it, and to abharre the like: and so after a sort he continueth to speake, to this day. So that the words, in the true and full sense of them, doe import these two points:

1. That Abel spake when he was dead.
2. That in a sort Abel still speaketh.

For the First: Abel spake and cried when he was dead: but how? not with a vocall speech; but the phrase is figurative, and imports thus much, as if the Lord had said to Cain: thou hast killed thy brother closely, and it may be hast hid him in the sand, or buried him, and thinkest no man knoweth of it: but thou must know Cain, this thy fact is evident to me, as if Abel had told me; I know thou killedst him: and if thou wonder how I know. I tell thee his bloud told me; for it cried in my eares, and yet it crieth out against thee: for though Abel be dead, his bloud yet speaketh. As this is true of Abels, so of all mens bloud: and as of bloud, so of all other oppressions, though done by never so great men. Murders, oppressions, and all wrongs done to Gods children, they crie to God against the oppressors, though the poore oppressed men date scarce name them; they need not, for their bloud doth; yea, even their very teares cannot be shed, but God takes them up, and puts them in his bottle, and will know who shed them. Thus bloud crieth against them that shed it, yea, teares crie against them that cause them. This affordeth us a double instruction: First, here it is apparent that God seeth and knoweth the sins of men, though the men be never so mightie, or their sins never so secret. For though men convey them never so closely, and labour to hide them with all the meanes that the wit of man can devise: yet the very dead creatures crie out, and doe proclaime the sins and sinners in the eares of God, as fully as the voices of living men, can discover any thing unto men. Privy oppressions, and goods gotten by deepe deceipt, he bid to the world: But the stone out of the wall shall crie, and the beame out of the timber shall answer it: Woe be to him that buildeth his house with bloud: and erecteth a Citie by iniquitie: as though he had said, God knoweth every stone and every peece of timber in their stately houses, which they have gotten by deceit or oppressing of the poore. Privy conspiracies, and plots of treason are laid against Princes and Magistrates; and often in so secret manner, as in mans reason it not possible to be discovered. But God hath many wayes to finde them out, and they never escape his privie search: and therefore the holy Ghost adviseth, Curse not the King, nor in thy thought, nor the great ones in thy bed-chamber: for the foule of the heaven shall carrie thy voice, and that which hath wings shall declare the matter. So that whatsoever is plotted never so privily, or conspired in the secret closets of ungodly men, God knowes it, and hath meanes enough to disclose it to the world. And in our daily experience God magnifieth himselfe mightily in revealing murders. For, bring the murtherer before the dead corps, and usually it bleedeth, or giveth some other testimonie, whereby it speaketh even as Abels bloud did, This is the murtherer. Nay more: for Abels bloud spake to God, but here even to men also.

And of this it is hard to give any reason at all, but the secret and immediate hand of God, thereby shewing himselfe to know all secret sins, and to be able to disclose them by strange meanes.

The use of this doctrine is, to feare all men from sinning, though they thinke it possible to conceale their sins from the world: for this is one of the strongest and commonest encouragements that men take to live in a sin, if they thinke it likely to be concealed. But here they see how false a ground that is. For if they can conceale it from men, yet can they not from God: and if God know it, then can he reveale it to the world when it pleaseth him.

Againe, whereas Abels bloud cried when he was dead: it teacheth us, that God hath a care of Abel both living and dead: for it were nothing to say his bloud cried, if God heard not that cry. But it is apparent he heard it, for he revenged it, and punished Cain when Abel was dead: and could not revenge it himselfe. And this care God had not over Abel alone, but over all his children: and as the Psalmist saith, Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his Saints: that which is vile & of no regard in the world, is precious with God. Tyrants make havocke of the Church, and kill them up by heaps: but God records up every one, and will not faile to revenge it, when they are dead: For if God have bottles for the teares of his servants; surely much more hath he bottles for their bloud.

The use whereof is to teach us to all extremities of danger or distresse, to learne patience: yea, though we be sure to die, yet (as Christ saith) To possesse our soules with patience: For we have one will heare the cause, and revenge our quarrell when we are gone: So that if we be patient we loose nothing: but if we be impatient we get nothing. Let us therefore hold our tongues: for, the wrong done to us crieth loud enough to God for revenge, who will heare it as assuredly as he did Abels. And thus we see how Abel spake then, even after he was dead.

The second point is, He speakes also yet; and that three waies:

First, his faith yet speaketh, because it admonisheth all men every where, who either heare or read this storie, to become such as Abel was, namely, true worshippers of the true God; for in Abels example, it provokes all men to be like him, because it affureth them of the same regard and reward with God that Abel had: and so Abels faith is a never-dying Preacher to all ages of the Church.

Here we learne, that the holy Examples of Gods children are reall teaching, and loud preaching to other men.

For there is a double teaching, namely, in { word, or deed.

It belongs to the Minister to teach in word; and to all men to teach by their deeds, and good examples: and if the minister teach not thus also, it is the worse both for him and his hearers.

It sufficeth not for him to teach by vocall Sermons, that is, by good doctrine; but withall by reall Sermons, that is, by good life. His faith, his zeale, his patience, his mercie, and all other his vertues must speake, and crie, and call to other men to be like to him; which if he practise carefully in his life as Abel did, then shall his vertues speake for him to posteritie when he is dead.

Againe, Abel though dead, may be said to speake, because howsoever his bodie be dead, yet in soule and spirit he liveth with God in heaven. And thus the word speaketh may bee understood, because it is here opposed to dieth: by which he being dead yet speaketh: that is, being dead in bodie, yet liveth in soule; which life with God was obtained unto by his true and saving faith.

Thirdly, he may be said to speake yet, as all other Gods Martyrs are said to crie in the Revelation, from under the altar, How long Lord, holy and true, doest thou not avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? As this is true of all Martyrs, so especially of Abel the first Martyr of all: which words are not spoken, neither by him nor them vocally with utterance of voice: but it is so said, to signifie what fervent desire the servants of God have in heaven, of the full manifestation of Gods glorie in their bodies, and of an utter abolishment of sinne in the whole world: Which their desire, they doubtlesse utter to God in a more excellent manner, than in this world we can utter any thing with our voice: and thus Abel speakes yet, and shall speake till the worlds end.

Hitherto of the first Example, the example of Abel.

The second is of Henoch in these words.

By faith Henoch was translated, that he should not see death, neither was he found, for God tooke him away: for before hee was translated, hee was reported of that hee had pleased God, &c.

THe second example of faith is taken also out of the old world before the flood; and it is of Henoch the seventh from Adam: to whom, strange and miraculous things befell by reason of his faith. Let the meaning of the words be first examined.

By faith]

That is, by his confidence in the Messias, or his saving faith, he was taken away.

Taken away]

This is, from earth to heaven, not by an ordinarie worke, but miraculously; it is evident by the next words.

That he should not see death]

That is, that he should not feele death, nor any dissolution of soule and bodie: and therefore his taking away was miraculous. For to be taken away by death is an ordinary worke; but to be taken away, and yet not die, that is miraculous and extraordinary: & such was Henochs.

So then the substance of these words is thus much: Henoch having this grace from God, to beleeve stedfastly in the Messias to come, was likewise honoured with this high prerogative, to be taken into heaven, without tasting of death, and to the end that he might not die. Thus we have the meaning.

Now concerning this translation of Henoch, there are two opinions:

Some thinke he was translated in soule onely, and not in bodie: and they say he died in the translation, so as his soule was onely taken up into heaven, and his bodie slept in the earth. Though this appeares false at the first sight, yet let us see their reasons, and what they can say for themselves.

The first reason is this, No mortall bodie unglorified can enter into heaven: but there is no mention of his glorification: therefore his bodie could not come in heaven.

Answer. It is certaine it was glorified ere it came in heaven. If they replie, it is not mentioned: I answer, it follow eth not, that therefore it was not: for every circumstance of every action is not mentioned. For many circumstances of actions must necessarily be supposed, & such an one was this. Againe, the glorification of his bodie is here plainely enough implied where it is said, he was translated, that he should not see death. Now if his bodie saw not death, it was made immortall, which is a speciall part of glorification.

Their second reason: Christ was the first that ever entred into heaven both in bodie and soule; and for proofe thereof, they bring Saint Paul where he saith, Christ is the first fruits of them that sleepe.

Ans. True indeed of them that sleepe, that is, of all that die: for Christ entred into heaven both in bodie and soule first of all them: but Henoch never died; as the text here avoucheth: therefore that place hinders not, but Henoch might be in heaven in his bodie, before Christs humane flesh ascended thither.

Thirdly, they argue out of Saint John: No man hath ascended into heaven, but he that descended; the sonne of man which is in heaven. But, say they, this sonne of man is not Henoch, but Christ: therefore none but Christ ascended bodily into heaven.

Ans. That place is not meant of corporall ascending, but of understanding mysticall and heavenly things: no man ascendeth to the full knowledge of heavenly mysteries, but Christ alone, who descended from the bosome of his father.

And thus wee see, this opinion hath no strength of argument to rest upon: but we may safely hold (notwithstanding any thing that can be said against it) that Henoch was translated both in bodie and soule. And if any man yet doubt, how he could be taken up in bodie before he was glorified; we are to know, though he died not, yet his body was changed, as those men shall be, which shall be found alive at the last day.

The second opinion is, that Henoch was taken up in soule and bodie into Paradise, (some say, the heavenly, but the most the earthly Paradise) and their lives in his mortall and corruptible body, and must afore the last day come againe in his body with Elias, and fight against Antichrist: and when by their doctrine they have overcome him, he shall by violence kill them, and so they shall die Martyrs: And this is the generall received opinion of the most Papists. But it is a meere conceit, and a dreame, and there is no ground for it: but good argument against it.

For first, as for the earthly Paradise, it was defaced by the flood; nor doe we read that ever man was in it but Adam. And some of their owne fables tell us that Seth went to the gates of Paradise, when his father Adam was sicke, to get some Physicke out of Paradise for his father, but he could not get in: Nor doe we finde any mention of it afterwards. So that it is likely in all reason, that it was defaced by the universall flood.

And if they meane, he was translated into the heavenly Paradise: I answer, thither can no uncleane thing come: but a mortall body is uncleane: and themselves say, he was taken away in his mortall body, and in it shall come againe and die. Therefore Henoch having a mortall and unglorified body, cannot be in the highest heavens; into which nothing can enter which is not glorified and made immortall.

If they alleage Ecclesiast. 44.16. Enoch pleased God, and was translated into Paradise, &c.

I answer: we need not call in question the authoritie of the booke, nor answer that it is not in the Canon of faith. For the text is corrupted wilfully by some that shewed themselves in the latine too bold with the text, both there and else-where: for in the greeke originall, there is no such matter as Paradise, but the words are these; Enoch pleased God and was translated for an example of repentance to the generations. And thus we see this opinion is every way erroneous, and hath no shadow of reason in it, nor for it.

Seeing therefore both these opinions are to be refuted, let us in few words set downe the true and Orthodoxall judgement of the Church, out of the Scriptures in the old and new Testament. And it is this; That this holy man, by Gods speciall favour to him, was assumed into heaven both bodie and soule; his soule being perfectly sanctified, and his bodie glorified in the instant of his translation: and there he remaineth in glorie, expecting the generall resurrection, and the full glorification of all Gods elect.

Out of this translation of Henoch, we may learne;

First, that there is a life everlasting prepared of God for his children, wherein they shall live for ever both in soule and bodie; for hereof hath God given us most evident testimonies, both here in Enoch, and afterward in Elias: Elias a Jew, Enoch none: Enoch in the first world, Elias in the second: Enoch before the flood, Elias after: Enoch uncircumcised, Elias circumcised: Enoch married, Elias unmarried: and both were assumed into heaven in soule and bodie, and are there to this day, and tarrie for us till the end of the world; assuring us that our soules live for ever: and that our bodies, though they die, shall rise againe to life. Here therefore we have a notable ground for that last (but not least) article of our faith, where we professe to beleeve life everlasting.

Secondly, in this example we learne, that God is not tied to the order of Nature. The order which God established and set downe concerning all men after Adams fall is this, Dust thou art, & to dust thou shalt returne. By vertue of this decree, all men are to die, as sure as they once lived; and when that time appointed by God is come, all the world cannot save one man, but accordingly die he must. But here not withstanding we see, God that tied man to this order, is not tied himselfe. Enoch and Elias are exempted, they die not, their bodies never turned to dust; such is the power of God over the order of Nature, in all aturall actions.

Thirdly, whereas the Papists hold, that all the the Fathers who died before Christ, were in Limbus. (a place out of heaven) and came not in heaven till Christ fetcht them thence, and carried them with him at his ascension; Here we learne it is most false and forged. For here we see, Henoch, and afterwards Elias were in heaven both in bodie and soule, many hundred yeares before Christs Incarnation: whereby (as also by many other evidences that might be brought) it is apparent that Limbus Patrum is nothing but a device of that heretical Church of Rome.

Hitherto hath the holy Ghost avouched the translation of Henoch. Now he proveth substantially, that he was taken away.

Neither was he found, for God had taken him away.

And for his proofe, he first layeth downe his ground: then hee thereupon frameth his argument, consisting of diverse degrees of demonstration.

The ground is the plaine and evident testimonie of the old Testament in Genesis; where the words are these; Henoch was not found, or not seene, for God tooke him away. Against this ground, being the very words of the old Testament, no man can take exception. And here in a word, let us all marke the high and soveraigne authoritie of Gods Word, which even the holy Ghost himselfe vouchsafeth to alleage for the confirmation of his owne words. It had beene sufficient that the holy Ghost here affirmed Enoch to be taken away: but we see hee proves it out of the old Testament; so also did the Apostles, and Christ himselfe all their doctrine.

Let this teach all men to give due reverence to the holy Scripture: let teachers alleage them, let hearers receive them farre above all humane testimonies, seeing the holy Ghost himselfe vouchsafeth to confirme his owne words by the authoritie thereof.

Secondly, having laid this ground, the holy Ghost frames his argument, to prove that Henoch was taken away by faith: and it consisteth of many degrees of evidence.

For before the was taken away, he was reported of that he had pleased God.

But without faith it is impossible to please God.

The degrees of the argument are these;

1. God himselfe tooke Henoch away.
2. Before he was taken away, he pleased God.
3. But without faith no man can please God.

Therefore Henoch by faith was taken away.

The first degree, That Henoch was taken away, and was not found any more in this world hath beene sufficiently spoken of alreadie.

The second degree is, that afore he was taken away, he pleased God: which is not barely affirmed, but it is further added, that he was reported of, or hee recei ved testimonie, that he pleased God.

Now, this report or testimonie is taken out of the storie of Genesis, where it is affirmed of Enoch, that he walked with Gods which walking with God is an assured testimonie that he pleased God; for (as the Prophet Amos saith) Can two walke together unlesse they be agreed? therefore in as much as Henoch walked with God, it is proofe sufficient, that, he pleased God: and because he pleased God, therefore God tooke him away. So that here are two distinct points in the second degree; First, that Henoch pleased God: Secondly, that there is a report or a testimonie given of him, that he did please God.

First, in that Henoch, before he was taken away, pleased God: let us learne, that whosoever lookes to have his soule translated into heaven at his death, and both bodie and soule at the resurrection; must before-hand in this life learne to please God: they must seeke to please God, not when the time of translation is come, but before, as here it is said Henoch did.

If any man demand, How shall I please God? My answer is this: Adam pleased God by keeping the Law: but now that is past, that power is lost: we must now please God by direction from the Gospel; namely, by faith in Christ, and true repentance, together with a holy life; (which must necessarily accompanie true faith and repentance) thus God is pleased. And this must we not deferre till our death; but doe it in our lives: nor can we looke to be inheritours of the kingdome of glorie as now Henoch is, unles before-hand we be in the kingdome of grace, by pleasing God as Henoch did. It is inexcusable to see men not care for salvation till death, and then they begin to please God: but alas, God will not be so pleased. They begin to learne how to please God, when they have so long displeased him, as there is then feare they can never please him: but that man liveth and dieth with comfort, of whom it may be said as here of Henoch, before he was taken away he pleased God.

Againe, whereas he came not in heaven till he pleased God; this discovers the madnesse of sinfull men, who will looke for heaven and yet will leave no sin, but flatter themselves therein. But let all impenitent men here take knowledge that they come not in heaven till they please God: let them therefore cease pleasing themselves, and their corruptions, by living in sin, and learne to please God by an holy life.

And further: in this point marke how nothing brought Henoch to heaven, but his pleasing of God. He was rich, for he was one of the greatest on the earth: he was royally descended, for he was the seventh from Adam in the blessed line: he was learned, for he had the six first Patriarks to teach him, six such Tutors as never man had; and it is likely hee had a comely, strong, and active bodie. But see, all these brought him not to heaven: no, he pleased God, and was therefore taken away.

Let this teach us not to rest in wealth, beautie, strength, honour, humane learning, nor all these put together, without the feare of God: for some of them may please thy selfe, and some may please other men; but God must be pleased afore thou come in heaven, if thou wert as good as Henoch. Therefore unto all thy outward blessings adde this, To please God by faith and repentance. Then as thy pleasing of men may make thee happy in this world; so thy pleasing of God shall translate thee from earth to heaven.

Thus we see, Henoch before he was translated, pleased God.

Secondly, as hee pleased God, and else could not have beene translated; so it is added, that he was so reported of, or there was such a testimonie of him. That proofe or testimonie is here concealed; but it is recorded in the storie of Genesis, where it is said, Henoch walked with God: which as we heard before, was an assured testimonie that God was well pleased with him.

But what is this, he walked with God: how can a man bee said to walke with God? The meaning is, That Henoch lived a godly, righteous, and innocent life in this world: for to live in holinesse and righteousnesse is to walke with God. And further, his heart was possessed of two perswasions or resolutions, which were the inducements drawing him to this holy life.

First, that he was alwaies in Gods presence, and that God is alwaies readie to dispose of all things to his good.

Againe, that God did see, trie, and discerne all his words and deeds, yea, his cogitations and thoughts, and the whole course of his life. These were the holy resolutions of Henoch, and these made him lead an holy life.

This lesson is worth learning, and this example worthy to be followed of us all: our dutie is with Henoch, to walke with God in this life, if we purpose to live with God in heaven: and we walke with God by leading holy and unblameable lives, in holinesse towards God, and righteousnesse towards man. But if we thinke this hard to doe, we must labour to be resolved on these grounds: First, that God and his providence is ever present with us, to dispose of us alwaies to his glorie, and of all other things to our good.

Secondly, that as we are in Gods presence; so God seeth us, and all our thoughts, words, and works, bargaines, and dealings, and will judge them all.

When these two perswasions possesse our hearts, it cannot be but we shall live godly, and feare to offend God: for as a childe is dutifull and obedient in his Fathers presence; so when a man is perswaded he is in Gods presence, it cannot but make him dutifull. When a man is perswaded that God seeth him, hee will take heed what he doth; and that God heareth him, he will temper his tongue; and that God beholdeth all his dealings in the world, he will take heed how he borroweth, lendeth, buieth, or selleth, and what he doth in all his actions: and the very cause of all carelessnesse in these and all other duties in the world, is, because men are perswaded God seeth them not.

To urge us therefore to this excellent durie; we have, First, Gods commandement: Walke before me, and be upright, saith God to Abraham, and in him to all the children of his faith. Gen. 17. 1

Againe, we have the examples of Gods children, who are renowned for the obedience of this Commandement; Henoch here, after him Abraham, and after him David, who testifieth of himselfe, I will walke before God in the land of the living. Psal. 116. 9.

Thirdly, as it is both commanded by precept, and practised by example; so the proofe of it is most comfortable to all that practise it: for it will make them prosper in all they goe about. For, as he that is alwaies in the Kings presence and companie, cannot but be in his favour, and therefore cannot but succeed well in all his affaires; so he that walkes with God, cannot but prosper in whatsoever he sets his heart and hand unto. Blessed Abraham found this most true, when he assured his servant whom he sent to provide Isaac a wife, in a long and doubtfull, and dangerous journey; The Lord before whom I walke, shall send his Angell with thee, and prosper thy journey: and even so may every childe of God say with confidence, The Lord, before whom I walke, will send his Angel with me, and prosper me in my proceedings. Gen. 24. 40.

Fourthly, this walking with God, is a good meanes to make a man beare the crosse with patience. For if hee bee perswaded that God seeth how wrongfully he is persecuted or oppressed, and that Gods providence is alwaies present, so as no affliction can come unto him, but by his appointment: and againe that his providence disposeth of all things to his good, how can he but receive with patience that portion of afflictions which God shall lay upon him? For as he that walkes with the King, who dare offer him wrong? so he that walkes with God, what evill can touch him? This is Iosephs argument to his brethren, when they were discomforted, and feared he would punish them after their Fathers death: Feare not, (saith he) for am not I under God? as though he had said, Doe not I walke in Gods presence? and acknowledge my selfe under his power? and that God, when you thought evill against mee, disposed it to good: where the ground of Iosephs reason is, that he walking with God, his afflictions turned to his good.

Lastly, this is a meanes to bring a man to make conscience of all sinne, in thought, word, and deed, and in all his dealings, when he perswades himselfe to walk in the presence of God. When Ioseph was allured to sin by his mistresse, his answer was, How shall I commit this great wickednesse, and so strange unto God. The bridle that restrained him, was the feare of that God in whose presence he walked. And because hee walked with God, he would not walke with her in her wicked way: and because he kept a holy companie with God, therefore hee would not keepe her company, nor be allured by her temptations.

So then seeing this way of walking with God, is every way so excellent and so profitable, let us learne it not in judgement and knowledge onely, to be able to talke of it (which is soone learned:) but in conscience and practice (as dutifull children doe before their Parents, so) let us in a heavenly awe and child-like reverence walke before God, labouring for a true perswasion of his presence and providence, to bee alwaies over us, and our whole lives. The want hereof is the cause of all sinne: And if we doe then walke with God, and so please him, as Henoch here did, then shall we be sure (though not after the same manner that Henoch was, yet) in soule first, and afterward in soule and bodie both, to be translated into eternall life. But if we will not walke this way with Henoch in this life, let us never looke to live in heaven with him: but assure our selves, that as the way of holinesse is the way to glorie, so the way of wickednesse is the way to eternall perdition. And thus much of the second degree.

But without faith it is impossible to please God.]

These words containe the third degree, or the third part of the reason. And this degree consists of a generall Maxime or Canon of Divinity: and the holy Ghost first layeth it down: and then, because it is one of the weightiest principles in religion, he proveth it substantially in the words following. In the Canon it selfe let us first examine the meaning, and then unfold the manifold use of it.

Without faith]

By faith is meant here the same faith as afore: namely, true saving faith in the Messias. And without this saving faith:

It is impossible to please God.

Impossible, how? not in regard of the absolute, infinite and indeterminable power of God, which hath no limits, but his owne will: but in regard of that order of the causes and meanes of salvation set downe by God in his Word: which is this;

1. Man by sinne hath displeased God.

2. God must be pleased againe, else a man cannot be saved.

3. He that will please God, must please him in Christ the Mediator, else he cannot: therefore he that will please God, and be saved, must needs beleeve in Christ. And thus by this order it is impossible. We denie not, but in regard of Gods absolute power, he could save a man without faith; as he can lighten the world without the Sunne. But as (if he keepe that order of nature, which his owne wisdome hath appointed) it is impossible to give light to the world without the Sunne: so if he keepe that order for salvation, which his owne Justice hath appointed) it is impossible to please God without faith in Christ. So then the meaning is laid downe: and now appeares the strength and force of the holy Ghosts argument;

He that will be saved, & come to heaven, must first please God: but without faith it is impossible to please God; Therefore without faith no man can be saved nor come in heaven: and by consequent, therefore Henoch being to go unto heaven, needs he must have it taken away by faith.

Now the use of this Canon, rightly understood, is manifold and of great profit.

First, here we learne that faith is simply and absolutely necessarie to salvation, and most necessarie of all other gifts and graces of God whatsoever. And though many be required, yet among t all holy graces this is the principall, and more necessarie in some respects, than any other. For howsoever hope, and love, and zeale, and many other graces of God are required, to make the state of a Christian complcat; and though they all have their severall commendations in the Word: yet of none of them all is it laid in the whole Scripture, as it is here of faith, that without it, it is impossible to please God. And no marvell, for it is the root and ground of all other graces, and gives them their life and being: for therefore doth a man feare God, therefore doth he love God, therefore is he zealous for Gods glorie, because he beleeveth that God loveth him in Christ the Redeemer.

Now then if faith be thus necessarie, then it followeth, that those that live in ignorance, and so have no found faith, but a foolish presumption, are in a miserable case: for how-ever they may flatter themselves with conceits of their devotions, and good meanings, and good intents; it is faith, with which they must please God, and nothing can without it. It stands them therefore in hand to lay off ignorance and presumption, and labour for a found and saving faith, and that will bring them to the favour of God.

And againe, as for such as have received grace to beleeve, seeing faith is of such necessitie, and that they having faith must needs have knowledge, they therefore must looke and examine by their knowledge, whether their faith be a found faith or no: for herein many that have knowledge deceive themselves, and think they have true faith when they have not. Now if any man would know, whether his faith be found and saving, or no: it is knowne by this: If it purifie the heart: for so saith S. Peter, That God by faith did purifie the hearts of the profane and filthie Gentiles. If then thy faith doe not purifie thy heart, and cleanse thy life, and cause thee to abound in good workes, it is no found nor saving faith, it is but a generall faith, it is but an historical knowledge, and cannot save the soule:

Act. 15. 9.

soule: he therefore that upon examination of his heart and life, findeth his faith to be such, let him not content himselfe, but turne his generall faith into a saving faith, which in this world will purifie his heart, and at the last day will save his soule. And this must every man the rather doe, because what knowledge, or what other gifts of God soever any man hath, without faith in Christ all are nothing: for it is faith that seasoneth them all, and makes both them and the person himselfe to please God.

Secondly, if it be impossible without faith to please God, then here we see the fond and foolish hypocrisie of the world, who will please God by other meanes; some thinke if they be glorious in the world, either for their wealth, or their wit, or their honour, or their authoritie, or their learning, they presently bring themselves into a soules Paradise; and because the world makes account of them, and they please themselves, therefore they thinke it certaine they must needs please God. But alas, though all the world admire them, and they be never so farre in love with themselves, He that sits in heaven laugheth them to scorne. For, not all the pompe and glorie, nor all the millions and mountaines of gold in the world can please the Lord, for one of the least of their many thousand sins, wherewith they have provoked him. Let these men aske Nebuchadnezzar, if his pompous pride: or Achitophel, if his active head and craftie wits: or Absalom, if his golden locks: or Iesabel, if her painted face and courtly attire: or Nabal, if his flockes of sheepe: or the Philosophers, if their naturall learning: if all of these, or any of these did ever please God: Nay alas, they have all found and felt, that without faith it is impossible to please God.

Thirdly, it is the opinion not of the Turkes alone in his Alcaron, but of many other as ill, that every man shall be saved by his owne religion, if he be devout therein; be he Turke, Iew, or Christian, Papist, or Protestant, but this is a ground and rule of Atheisme, and appeares here to be most false, for no salvation without pleasing of God, and without faith it is impossible to please God: therefore no religion can save a man, but that which teacheth a man rightly to beleeve in Christ, and consequently to please God. But every religion teacheth not to beleeve in Christ; some not at all, and some not aright; and therefore it is impossible for such a religion to save a man. Againe, be a man what he can be, unlesse he be within the covenant of grace, he cannot be saved: but he cannot bee within the covenant, but by faith, therefore no man can be saved by any meanes, but by true faith: nor in any religion, but that which teacheth true faith.

Here therefore not onely Turkes and Iewes are excluded; but this also sheweth many Papists, and many carnall gospellers in our Church, how short they come of that religion, which must save their soules. For this is the conceit of the most men, that if they doe some good workes, which carrie a faire shew to the world, as liberalitie to learning, or charitie to the poore: straight they thinke they have leave to live as they list, and God is bound to forgive their sinnes, and to give them heaven: and this they imagine, though they know not what it is to beleeve in Christ, or to repent of their sinnes. One of this religion came to the Prophet Micha in his dayes, and asked him this question, (uttering that plainely which all such men thinke in their hearts; Wherewithall shall I come before the Lord, and bow my selfe before the high God? Shall I come before him with thousands of Rammes, and ten thousand rivers of oyle? He makes the question, and would faine make answer himselfe: nay, he goeth further, and offers more, Shall I give my first borne for my transgression, and the fruit of my bodie for the sin of my soule? But the Prophet answers him, shewing him his follie, and how little God doth regard such workes, without a contrite heart; He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good, and what the Lord requireth of thee: Surely to do justly, to love mercie, to humble thy self, and to walke with thy God. Marke how that answer fits this example of Henoch: He pleased God, hee walked with God, and was taken away: So, answereth the Prophet, if thou wouldest please thy God, and come to heaven by his favour; never stand upon thousands of Rammes, and rivers of oyle, upon thy gay and glorious workes: but humble thy self, and walke with thy God. No walking with God (saith Micha) no pleasing of God: what is it but all one, as if he had said without faith it is impossible to please God? Here then is no disallowance of good workes, but of workes without faith, and true repentance: which though they be never so faire and flourishing, yet it is impossible, that without faith they should please God.

Mic 6, 7, 8.

Hereby it is also manifest, that all the vertues of the Heathen, and the works of such men as either know not Christ: or knowing him, acknowledge him not their onely Saviour: or acknowledging him, doe not truly believe in him with such a faith as purifieth the heart; are nothing else, but as the Fathers call them, splendida peccata, gilded and glistering drosse, and beautifull deformities. And how-ever this seemes harsh, yet it must needs be true, seeing without faith it is impossible to please God.

And here also the vanitie of some Popish Writers appeares, who presumptuously make some Philosophers Saints: when as they should first have shewed that they believed in Christ; and then we would beleeve and teach it as willingly as they: but else, if they had had all true learning, and all the morall vertues in the world; this must stand for a truth, Without faith it is impossible to please God.

Lastly, here wee learne, that the Word of God registred in the holy Scriptures, doth containe in it sufficient direction for all the actions and duties of a mans life: for without faith no man can please God. And if no man, then no mans actions can please God which are not of faith: for whatsoever is not of faith, is sinne, Rom. 14. 23.

and

If therefore mens actions must proceed from faith, then consequently must they have their ground and warrant from the word: for faith and the word are relatives, and the one depends upon the other: no faith, no word to binde: no word, no faith to believe. But all actions that please God, must be done in faith; therfore all action that please God, have some ground and direction in the Word of God, without which Word of God there can be no faith. And this is true, not onely in holy actions, but even in the common actions of mens lives, and lawfull callings. This is a principle, which we must firmely believe and receive. And beside this argument here, it is also proved by the evident testimonies of the holy Ghost. S. Paul to Timothy; All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable to teach, to improve, to correction, to instruct in righteousnesse, that the man of God may be absolute, and made perfect unto all good workes. How can the sufficiencie of Scripture be more sufficiently in words expressed? Againe, Every creature and ordinance of God is good, &c. For it is sanctified by the Word of God and prayer. Now if the Scripture make a Christian perfect in all good workes, how can it be, but it give him sufficient direction for all his workes? And if every action be sanctified by the word, how can that be but the word hath warrancy and direction for every action and duty, which may fall out in the course of a Christian life? And upon these grounds we have good reason to be resolved of this truth.

But now if any man aske how this can be, for the Scriptures were written long agoe, and the stories are of particular men, nations, and times, and the Commandements are knowne to be but ten; how then can the Scriptures yeeld sufficient directions for every mans particular actions? I answer, the Scripture gives directions for all actions two wayes: either by Rules; or by Examples: Rules are of two sorts Generall, or particular. Particular rules for particular callings are many: for Kings, they must read Gods booke, and not have many wives, nor gather too much silver and gold: They must be wise and learned; and kisse the sonne of God Christ Iesus, and many other: for Ministers they must be apt to teach, watchfull, sober, not young schollers, and many other: and so consequently the most of the callings that are in the common-wealth, have their particular directions in plaine rules.

Generall rules are first the ten Commandements, which are directions for all sorts of men in all times, what to be done, what not to bee done in all actions towards God and men; and besides, in the new Testament there are some few rules, which are generall directions for all men in all ages: As, Whatsoever you would that men should doe to you, doe you the same unto them. Againe, whether you eat or drinke, or whatsoever you doe doe all to the glorie of God. Againe, Let all things be done to edifying, and without offence of thy brother. Againe, Let all your workes be done in love. Lastly, let no man seeke his owne (alone,) but every man another wealth. Now there is no action in the world, nor any duty to be done of a Christian man, be he publike or private person, be it publike or private action, be it towards God or man; but if he have not a particular direction, yet it falls within the compasse of some of these rules: and by the tenour of some of these, he may frame his worke in such manner as shall be pleasing to God, and comfortable to himselfe.

Secondly, besides rules, there are Examples, which are speciall directions: and they are either of God, or good men. Extraordinarie examples of God, namely, such as he did in extraordinarie times, or upon extraordinarie occasions, they concerne us not; for these he did by the power and prerogative of the Godhead: as bidding of Abraham sacrifice his sonne, bidding the Israelites spoile the Aegyptians, and such like. But the ordinarie workes of Gods wisdome in his creatures, of his justice towards sinners, of his mercie towards his children, of his care and providence towards all, are excellent rules of direction for us. Hence wee have these rules; Bee yee holy, for I am holy: Bee yee mercifull, as your Father is heavenly mercifull. Luk. 6. 36.

So for the actions of Christ, who was God and man: the miraculous actions of his power, which argued his Godhead, as his walking upon the water, and such like, are no directions for us. Nor againe, his actions and works done as he was Mediatour, as his fasting forty dayes, his passion and his merits, these are no directions for us to doe the like: But, as the first give us instruction; so these procure us justification.

But the third sort of his actions done by him as a man, or as a Jew borne, they are both our instruction and imitation, and they are good directions for our actions: as, his obedience, his zeale, his patience, his humilitie, and all other vertues. Concerning all which he saith himselfe to us, Learne of me, for I am humble and lowly. And againe, when he had washed his Apostles feet, he bade them learne of him to love one another: For, saith he, I have given you example that you should doe even as I have done to you. These his examples are rules of direction to all men in the like case.

Now as for the examples of men, as the examples of wicked men are every way to be eschewed, so good men are to be followed; for whatsoever is written, is written for our learning. Rom. 15. 4. And so for them we are to know, that their examples or actions, contrarie to the word, are therefore to be avoided, because they be contrarie: as Noahs drunkennesse, Lots incest, Davids adulterie, and many other his infirmities, and such like. Such as are directly agreeable unto the word of God, are to be embraced and received as direction. For our lives, not for their owne sake, but because they are agreeable to the Word. But as for such as are neither commanded nor forbidden; and being done, yea neither allowed nor disallowed: these being done by godly men, and such who for their faith were approved of God, against which no exception can be taken in the Word, they be as rules and directions to us in the like cases. Now there is no action that can fall out in the life of a Christian man, for which he is not out of the Scripture either a rule or example to follow, which is as good as a rule unto him. And thus we see how the Scripture affords directions for all our actions. In the demonstration whereof, we have stood the longer, because it is a principle of great moment. The use hereof is double. First, wee must therefore in all the actions of our lives and callings, take consultation with the word of God, and for our direction therein, wee must search for either generall or particular rules, or at least for examples of godly men in like cases. And without the warrant and direction of some of these, we are by no means to enter into any thing, or to doe any worke. If wee doe, then wee cannot cleere our selves from sinne in so doing: for wee sinne, because we please not God in doing that action: we please not God, because we have no faith for the doing of it: we have no faith, because we have no warrant nor ground in the word for it. Therefore what ever a man presumeth to doe without some warrant in the word for his direction, he sinnes in so doing.

Secondly, here Ministers must learne their duty: for if no action can possibly please God that is done without faith, nor can be done in faith without warrant from the Word, then must they bee Gods mouth unto the people, to be able to tell them what is lawfull, what is unlawfull by the word: that so their people may perform their actions in faith, and consequently please God.

Now having laid downe this Rule, because it is a principle of so great moment, the holy Ghost in the next words proceeds to the proofe of it.

For he that commeth to God, must believe that God is, and that he is a rewarder of them that seeke him. These words are a proofe of the former rule, and the reason standes thus;

He that commeth to God, must needs believe:
But He that pleaseth GOD, commeth to God.
Therefore He that pleaseth God, must needs believe: and so without faith it is impossible to please God.

He that commeth to God]

To come to God in the Scriptures, but especially in this example, is to labour to have fellowship with God in Christ: as is manifest in three places more. In the fourth Chapter, we are bidden to goe boldly to the throne of grace, and in the seventh, Christ is able perfectly to save them to the uttermost that by him come to God, and in the tenth, we are called to draw neere with a true heart in assurance of faith. Out of all which places it appeares, that to come to God is to have fellowship with God by Christ. And the reason why that phrase is often used in the Hebrewes, for that many of them having received the profession of Christ, after were forsooke him again, and fell from his religion, and by renouncing Christ fell away from God. Therefore he exhorted them to take heede lest there bee in any of them an evill heart, and unfaithfull to depart from the living God. Chap. 3. 12. Now, by the contrary, If to renounce Christ is to fall or goe away from God: then we may gather, that to come to God, is to cleave to Christ, and to God by Christ. So then the meaning is, He that will have any fellowship with God in Christ, He must believe.

What must he believe? Two things.

1 That God is. 2. That he is a rewarder of them that seeke him.

He must first believe that God is;

That is, not so much that there is a God, for that we are taught by the very light of nature: but that this God, whom in Christ he labours to know, and come neere, is the true & only God.

This is a notable point in Christian religion to beleeve, that God is God indeed: not a fiction, a shadow, or imaginarie God, but God indeed: for it is the scope of the first Commandement, that God gave in mankinde. If any man object, There is no man that knowes God, but confesseth God to be God: no man was so mad as ever to thinke otherwise:

I answer, to beleeve the true God to bee God indeed, is a matter of great difficulte. For though a man by nature thinke there is a God, yet doe we not by nature thinke the true God to be God. Nay, by nature every man is an Atheist, and denieth in his heart the true Godes to be God, and doth impugne the first Commandement above all other. And this may truly and fitely be affirmed of all men that ever came of Adam (Christ alone excepted) that by nature they are Atheists; and it may be proved thus.

By nature, though we know and beleeve there is a God, yet the corruption of our nature is such, as we frame and faine him to our selves to be such a one as we please: for wee deny in our hearts his power, his providence and his justice. But to take away these three from him, is to deny the true God to be God indeed.

First, men by nature deny Gods power: For men would be ashamed to do many things in the presence of any man, even the basest in the world: which when they are out of mens sights, and yet in Gods presence, they commit carelesly and boldly. I speake not of naturall actions, which are lawfull: & yet in many whereof there is none to great shame, as men naturally refuse to doe them before others: but I meane superfluities, which not for any naturall vncomelinesse, but even for their sinfulnesse and vglinesse, becomes they are hainous sinnes, men would feare to doe it as a man were peeuish. Seeing then men feare not, nor shame not to doe them though they be in Gods presence; it followeth, that therefore they naturally imagine, that God were not present: for if they were perswaded, they would not commit them, though they esteemed God no better than a man.

Secondly, men by nature deny Gods power, thus: When a man offends a Magistrate by breaking any law which may deserve death, or some great punishment, he is sore afraid; and all his care is, how hee may escape his punishing hand. But let a man offend God never so much by breaking carelesly all his holy commandements, he neuer feares at all, nor trembles at the punishment belonging vnto them. How can this be? but that howsoever he grants there is a God, yet hee is not perswaded that God hath power to revenge the contempt of his lawes, and therefore hee never feares nor shrinks at the remembrance of him, nor feeth at all from his revenging hand, but ploddeth on in sinne without feare.

Thirdly, men by nature denieth Gods justice: for the Iudice of God is to winke at sinne in no man, but to condemne and punish it in her. Howeuer he findeth it, by inflicting the curses of the Law vpon it. But man denieth this justice: for though hee sinne against Gods law, and his conscience tell him of it; yet hee perswades himselfe, there is no curse nor punishment due for it, at least that he shall escape it: nay, though hee see never so many before him punished for the same sin, (yet our nature is so blinde and so corrupt) he thinkes for all that, it shall not light on him. And it is lamentable, yet most true, that the God of the ignorant men is a meere Idol, a God made all of mercy, and which hath no justice in him at all, and their sins they carelesly lay all on Christ, and say God is mercifull: and in this conceit they care not how ignorantly, how loosly, how prophanely they live; and their hearts never have a reverent and vvefull thought of the justice of God.

There are the pitifull imaginations that all men by nature have of God. All these may bee proved by evident Scripture: The first, in the Psalme, where David brings in the wicked, saying to themselves, God hath forgotten, hee hides his face, he will never regard. The second, by the blasphemy of Rabshaketh, who uttered with his tongue, that which all mens hearts vseth by nature, when God can deliver vou out of my hand. The third Esay proves apparently, where he tells us that the wicked say: we have made a covenant with death, and with hell we are at agreement, when the scourge runneth over, and passe thereby, it shall not come at us.

Thus both Scripture and plaine demonstrations prove this to bee true, That every man by nature denieth Gods presence power and justice; and therefore is by nature a plaine Atheist, not beleeving that God is God indeed. Now furthermore, there are foure sorts of people that put in practice this Atheisme.

First, such as are not ashamed to say openly, Is there a God, or no? and dare dispute the question, and at last avouch there is none; but that all matters concerning God and his worship, are nothing but devices of politike men, to keepe simple men in awe, and to make fooles faine; but these themselves are fooles of all fools, and the devill devised that impious conceit, to keep them in miserable blindnesse. There have beene such fooles in all ages, yet in old time David saith, These fooles did but say in their hearts: but now the fooles of these last and rotten ages are ripe in their folly, and they dare say with their mouths, There is no God. These are Monsters in nature, and devils incarnate, worse than the devill himselfe; for hee in judgement never was an Atheist. These are to bee marked and hated worse than Toads and Adders: and if such a one can be convicted by any lawfull evidence, if ever Heretike or Traytor deserved death, such a one deserves tenne deaths; as being a Traytor to God, to Mankinde, and to Nature her selfe. And though these wretches say, there is no God, yet make they a God of themselves, sacrificing all their affections to their pleasure, and their profit.

The second sort are such, as acknowledg and worship a God, but a false god. These have beene in all countreyes, and in most ages, as Histories doe shew: some worshipping the Sunne, some the Moone, some starres, some beasts, birds, fishes; some dead Idols of wood, or stone, or metall. And of this sort, and no better, are some in these Churches, where the true God is worshipped: the Apostle saith, Covetousnesse is Idolatry; for if a mans heart bee set wholly on riches, then the wedge of gold is his god. And to other, whose affections are all on pleasure, their belly is their god. Let these men hold in judgement as they can, their practice I am sure proclaimes Atheisme.

The third sort are such as acknowledge and worship the true God, but in a false manner: and of these there are 3 principall sorts; first, Turkes: Secondly, Iewes; who hold the true God, but deny the Trinity of persons, and the deity of Christ. Thirdly, the true Papist holds in word one God, and the Trinity of persons, as we doe: but looke at their doctrine, and (if their words have any naturall meaning) they deny it: for if the second person be true Christ, then hath hee two natures, Godhead and Manhood: but by their famed Transubstantiation, they quite take away the truth of the Manhood. And againe, Christ hath three offices; hee is the true King, Priest, and Prophet of his Church: and if hee be not so hee is not Christ: But the Papists doctrine in plaine words, and necessary consequence denieth them all, as hath beene often proved proved unto their shame, and published to the world: and they never yet to this day could or durst answer it: for if they doe they shall soone either heare us againe, or else we will recant it. But till then it appeares, that their God is by their doctrine not the true God, but an Idol: for hee that denieth the Sonne, denieth the Father also, as saith S. Iohn.

The fourth sort of Atheists are such as acknowledge and worship the true God, and worship him in true manner, for the outward worship; but in their lives and deeds deny him. And these are not to bee sought for in Turkie, or Iury, or Italy: for all Churches are full of such Protestant-Atheists. Italy may have more Atheists in judgement than we: but these hypocrites and Atheists in life, are here also; those tares wee have amongst our corne. Of these speakes the Apostle, that they professe to know God, but deny him in their workes. Let this seeme no wonder, that such men be called Atheists; for the Apostle saith plainely, He that careth not for his family, is worse than an Infidell: whereby it appeares, a man may bee a professor of the Gospell, or a Christian in profession, and an Infidell or Atheist in his practice: and it is certaine, let any man professe what he will, if his life be naught, his religion is a false religion in him.

Now then, to shut up this point with the use thereof: If this be true, that there are so many sorts of Atheists, that almost the world is full, and that wee are all so by nature: then, first let us see how hard a matter it is to beleeve in God aright; and if no man come to God, but hee that beleeveth God aright, then we see it is no marvell, though so few come to God. Let us therefore goe to God by earnest praier, to give us his spirit to worke true faith in our hearts, and to make us of a true beleefe. And secondly, seeing men may bee Christians in profession, and Atheists in practice; let us all look narrowly to our selves, and joine with our profession, Conscience and obedience: for else the more we know God, the worse wee are. It may please God after to give us better mindes; but as yet wee are no better than deniers of God: and though we come neere God in profession and in his outward service, yet indeed wee are farre from him, because wee want that true faith, which must professe God, not in judgement alone, but in practice; and that will bring us neere unto God, for he that commeth to God, must beleeve that God is. And thus much for the first thing to be beleeved, by him that will come to God and please him.

The second is,

And that he is a rewarder of them that seeke him.]

It is a notable sentence, and one of the most comfortable in the book of God: and containes the second thing to be beleeved. The parts are naturally two:

1. How a man doth seeke God.

2. How God rewards them that seeke him.

For the first: a man truly seeketh God, by doing foure actions:

First, a man must forsake himselfe, goe out of himselfe, and as it were lose himselfe in his owne judgement, when hee intends to seeke God. If any aske how that may be? I answer, Thus: A man must labour to see his sinnes fully and distinctly, and in sight therof be cast down in himselfe, as a man is, when he seeth his debts then let him looke into himselfe, and see if hee can finde in himselfe any abilitie to pay those debts, or any meanes in the world to satisfie Gods justice, and purchase pardon. And if upon due examination hee finde none at all, no not the least, nor any thing in himselfe, but an accusing, and raging conscience; let him then fall out of all love with himselfe, nay hate and abhorre himselfe and his owne basenesse: and lastly, let him despaire of his owne salvation in or from himselfe: and thus doing, he forsakes himselfe, denieth himselfe, and even loseth himself. And thus necessarily must hee doe to himselfe, that will set his heart to seeke the Lord. For God will bee found of none that hope to finde helpe at any hand but his: they therefore that seeke God, but will seeke themselves too, doe justly lose both God and themselves.

Secondly, hee that will seeke God aright (when hee hath lost himselfe) must hunger in his heart and soule, not after wealth and honours, ease, or pleasures; but after the favour and mercy of God in Christ, for the forgivenesse of his sinnes: and one drop of Christs bloud to wash away the guilt and staine of his defiled and sinfull soule, must be dearer to him than all the pomp and glory of tenne worlds. Looke how a hungry soule hungers after meat, and a faintie soule thirsteth after drinke; so must his soule hunger after Gods mercy, and thirst for Christs bloud: and these are necessary: For as a man that undertakes a long journey, must bee provided of meat and drinke; so hee that undertakes the journey to goe seeke the Lord, must have this provision for the diet of his poore soule, Gods mercies, and Christs merits: and hee that seekes, without a soule-hunging after these, may seeke long and finde nothing.

Thirdly, if he will truly seeke God, he must not goe in every path: but take the true and living way, which Christ hath consecrated by his bloud: nor take any guide, but trust to Christs spirit alone to bee his guide: nor make many mediators or messengers to God, but make Christ alone to God the Father. Wee must therefore goe to him, and yeeld up our selves to bee taught and guided by him, and leave our suit to be preferred by him: wee must not looke to come to God, by running on pilgimages to this or that Saints picture, or bones: or to our Lady of Loretto. Many have sought God in these, but who ever found him?

Nay, alas thou maist lodge in her forged Tabernacle at Loretto all thy life, and lie in bed for all that, when thou art dead: and maist kille all the Saints pictures, and bones, and haire, and all their reliques in Spaine and Italy, and all cannot get thee one sight of Gods favourable countenance. Nor againe, must wee looke to come to God by our good workes, though we are to doe them: they are good markes in the way, and good evidences of a right way; but they cannot open heaven, and let thee in. And therefore when thou hast done all thou canst, thou must forsake them all in matter of justification and comming to God. Onely thou must goe to God by Christ, and cleave to him alone; he is the doore, the way, the truth, the life: and certainly never man found God, that sought him not in Christ alone. And when Popish devices and distinctions have done all they can, men will bee found liars, and Christ to speake truth, saying, No man commeth to the Father but by me.

Lastly, when all these are done, then must thou believe that God is become thy mercifull Father in Christ, and is reconciled unto thee in him: for there is no feare, but if thou seeke God in Christ, thou shalt finde him: and when thou hast done the three former things, thou maiest safely, and assuredly beleeve, that thou hast truly sought God. And after all these, if thou have not lome and lively faith, thou doest not seeke God. For as it is impossible without faith to please God; so is it impossible without faith to finde God. Thus if a man lose himselfe, long after Gods mercie, take Christ alone for his guide and mediator, and stedfastly beleeve his reconciliation with God by Christ, then hee seekes God aright: and to this seeking, belongs a reward and blessing. Now then if this bee to seeke God, here is some light given to a great question, Whether the Church of Rome be a true Church, and their doctrine truly Catholique, or erroneous and failing in fundamental points? For answer; Can that be a true Church, which doth not bring her children to seeke God? or that Catholike doctrine, which teacheth not her children to seeke God the right way? but sends them into 1000. by-waies? Surely if this be to seeke God, then search all the Popish doctors, and almost all their writers, and see whether a man be not taught to seeke God quite in another walke. Which way of theirs, whether it ordinarily bring the seekers to God or no, we leave to Gods mercifull judgement. But for our selves, as wee see wee have the true and living way, the sure and infallible way, by Christ to God, by the Sonne to the Father; let us rejoice in the comfort of so rich a mercey, and be thankefull to the Lord for revealing himselfe unto us, and opening unto us the true way to him, and to his glory. And thus much for the first point, how we must seeke God.

The second is, how he is a rewarder of them that seeke him: I answer, God rewards them that seeke him.

First, by offering himselfe graciously to bee found of them that seeke him: for hee never hides himselfe, nor turnes away from the soule that seeketh him; but rather turnes to him, and meets him that comes to him: he is that good Father, which saw the prodigall sonne afarre off, and met him, and received him, Luke 16. Yea, rather it is true, that hee is found of them that sought him not, than ever sought by any that found him not. And hereby God much magnifieth his grace and mercy to mankinde, in being so assuredly found when men seeke him. For in this world it is not so; All men seeke the face of the Prince, saith Salomon: true, but all men finde it not. No: Accesse to great men is not so easie: they and their favour are so inclosed, that men may long seeke afore they finde either them or it: but God here is not so inclosed, as hee will not be seene nor spoke to; hee is found of them that seeke him. And as hereby he honoureth himselfe, so he highly rewardeth his servants: for there is no greater contentment to a subject, than to perceive his service pleaseth his Prince, nor greater joy than to finde his gracious favour when they seeke it.

Let then this practice of the great God of heaven, first of all, teach the great Ones of this world to bee willing to be found when they are sought unto: thereby shall they honour themselves, and cheere up the hearts of their people, who seeke unto them. And againe, it may be a rich comfort to the poore ones of this earth: who when they see they must long looke, and wait, and pray, and pay, and seeke the face and favour of great men, and cannot finde; may then remember, yet they have a God, who will not shut the doore upon them, will not turne away, will not keepe secret, will not feare them away with a rough answer, or a fowre looke, but hath this honourable and princely grace, He will be found of them that seeke him.

Secondly, he rewardeth them that seeke him by bestowing his love and favour on them: not onely hee, but his favour shall bee found of all that seeke him. It is Gods favour that Gods children seeke, and his favour they shall be sure to finde. This is no small reward unto them: for in this world a man thinkes he hath enough, if hee have the Princes favour: and therefore it was the common phrase in old time, Let mee finde grace or favour in the eyes of my Lord the King. So speake Gods children unto the Lord. It is not wealth, nor honours wee seeke for at Gods hand; but let us finde favour in the eyes of the Lord our God: and so they doe, what ever they finde in this world.

Thirdly, he rewardeth them not with his naked favour, but with the most gracious testimonies thereof that can be: which are two; Forgivenesse of their sinnes, and eternall life and glory with himselfe. This is all a Prince can doe to his subject, who hath offended him; To forgive him the fault, and remit the punishment: and to advance him to honour. This doth the Lord to all that seeke him: hee forgiveth them the debt they owe him, whereby life, and soule, and all was forfeited to him, and giveth them also life everlasting. So plentifull a reward is given them from that God, and whose wayes they are come to trust.

Fourthly, hee rewardeth them with the beginnings of heaven and happinesse even in this world, A good conscience and joy in the holy Ghost: the comfort whereof is more, even in the bitterest affliction, than all the pleasures and contentments in the world.

Lastly, with the appurtenances of heaven, and of eternall life: namely, the good blessings of this life, a competent portion whereof God giveth his children in this world, as tokens of his favour, and as rewards of their service, and seeking him.

Now as this place doth aime at all these rewards; so principally and directly the holy Ghost meaneth eternall life: as though hee had said, Hee that commeth to God, must stedfastly believe that God is able, and most willing forever to give all that come to him with a better reward than this world can yeeld, even with eternall life and glory for his sonnes sake.

But then will some object; God rewardeth us, therefore we merit, therefore good workes deserve.

I answer, this place indeed is grossly abused by the Papists for that purpose: but wee are to know, the truth is farre otherwise; for God rewardeth men for two causes: First, for his promise sake, and that is for his owne sake, for it was his owne goodnesse that made him promise, and no former debt hee owed to man. Againe, hee rewardeth our good workes, not for our merits, (for they are nothing, but of death and curses) but for Christs and his merits: for their worthinesse are our good workes rewarded. So then here are two causes of Gods rewarding, and yet mans merits are neither of both: and so the argument is nought, That God rewardeth, therefore we merit: for God doth it for other causes. Thus these spiders gather poison out of this flower, but let us sucke the honey: for this notable sentence hath excellent use:

First, that God is a rewarder of them that seeke him: not of them that seeke him not. Who seek not God? Wicked and ungodly men seeke him not, but rather seeke to avoid him, and his service: this sentence therefore is heavie against them. For when they heare it, their conscience answereth, but we seeke not God; Therefore we can look for no reward from him. Doest thou seeke the world? then must the world be thy rewarder. Doest thou seeke to please thy lusts? then must thou reward thy selfe. And if thou wilt please the devill by living in sinne, then must he be thy paymaster: alas! pittifull and fearefull will these rewards be.

Againe, if God reward none but them that seeke him: here appeares the reason why so many Papists die in our religion, and (with us) cleave to Christs merits alone, when they come to die; because their conscience then tels them, that by their pilgrimages, reliques, will-worships, and many more of their courses (ordinarie in Popery) they did never seeke God, but themselves and their owne honour, gaine, and credit; and full well know they that there is no reward due for such service: and therefore by their practice they make it a true saying, that it is good living a Papist but dying a Protestant.

Secondly, if God bee a rewarder of them that seeke him, then wee see it is not in vaine which the Apostle saith; It is not in vaine to serve God, 1 Cor. 15. 58. for God is a rewarder of them that seeke and serve him. Therefore the Atheist and prophane men of this world (who say, It is in vaine to serve God; and what profit is there that we have kept his Commandements?) are here convinced to be lyars against the truth.

Then seeing it is so, let this admonish us all to seeke and serve God, in all truth and sincerity, knowing we serve him who will regard it. Nothing more encourageth a man to serve his Lord and King, than to see that his paines are regarded, and his service rewarded: nor more discourageth a man than the contrary. It is therefore God did ever forget any that served him, let us bestow service else-where, and thinke him unworthy to be sought to: but if contrariwise, he never forgot, nor deceived, nor disappointed any that served him; then is he most worthy to have the service both of our soules and bodies. David indeed once said; In vaine have I cleansed my heart, and washed my hands in innocency. But hee was then in a strong temptation, as himselfe there confesseth: but afterwards when he went into the Sanctuary of God, and searched the truth of the matter, hee confesseth hee was deceived. And therefore as in the first verse he had acknowledged, that God was good to Israel, so in the last hee concludeth, that it is good for him to draw neere unto God: and so though the temptation was very vehement, yet as faith appeared in the beginning, so it had victory in the end, and testified, that God is good to all that seeke him. Another time also (for he was a man of many sorrowes and temptations) being in some great distresse, his corruption so prevailed that he said, All men are lyars: Whatsoever Samuel, or God, or Nathan, and other Prophets have told me of Gods love, and mercie, and of his promises, and providence, and fatherly care; I see it is all false and nothing so. Now surely if David, or all the Kings in the world can prove this, then God is not worthy to bee sought after: but great men thinke they may say any thing, especially when they are moved, as David here was. But when David entred into himselfe, and considered the words he had so presumptuously uttered; upon better advice he confesseth; and writes it up for all posterities to Gods glory and his owne shame, that it was in passion, I said in my feare all men are liars: This hee said in his haste, or in his feare: but upon advice, in the next verse he confesseth Gods benefits were so many and so great to him, as he cannot tell what to render to the Lord for them. And in another place he crieth out in admiration; O how great is thy goodnesse which thou hast laid up for them that feare thee, and put their trust in thee, even before the sonnes of men!

A

Wee see then, that merciful promise of Christ is ever made good, Seeke and you shall finde, Matth. 7.7. None ever sought God, but found: We may seek our own pleasures and live loosely, and bee deceived, and heare that fearefull question, What profit have yee of these things? Rom. 6.21. What reward but shame and sorrow? but if we seeke God aright, we never lose our labour. Let us therefore seeke God, let the hand of our hearts knocke at Gods mercy gate in Christ, and we shall not goe away without a reward. The prodigall child fled from his Father, spent all, and lost his favour: but he no sooner said, I will returne and humble my selfe to my Father: but he found him, and won his fathers favour againe. So let us but offer our selves to God, (God understandeth our thoughts long before) hee will meet us, and receive us, and give vs a reward.

B

Thirdly, as God rewardeth them that seeke him, so all that seeke him: None misse him, all find that seek. Great ones have not accesse, and the poore kept out; but all received as they come: no difference; but the more carefully any seeke, the more welcome are they. Here let Princes and great men learn their duties at God, by whose grace and permission they are what they are.

First, let them thinke it unbeseeming their greatnesse, to let any serve them without a reward: and a shame to their honour, not to let well-deserving subjects finde their favour. Let them not daint their hearts by not regarding them, and their paines: but let them encourage them to serve them, by looking at them, by good countenances, and good speeches, and by rewarding every one according to his worth. All great men should esteeme this, as one of the pearles of their Crownes, to have it said of them, Such a one is a rewarder of them that serve him.

Againe, let them learne to dispense their favour, according to reason, and not affection onely. God is indifferent and equall to all that seeke him, so let Princes be: for that is true honour and justice to reward each one as hee deserves. And that hee may finde the best, who doth best, this will make every one strive, who should be first, and forwardest, in all serviceable duties.

Further, this must teach them not to despise them that are under them in this world; for howsoever the state of this world requires that difference of persons, else it cannot stand: it is nothing so with God, nor in the world to come. For there the subject, the servant, the poore man, may challenge his part in Gods favour as well as the best: nay, whosoever seeketh the most carefully, shall finde the best reward.

Moreover, here is a comfort to the poore, and the meaner sort of men, who are appointed by God to bee underlings in this world: Seeke they favour here and finde it not? worke they here and doe their duties, and are not rewarded? Let them learne to seek God, who will assuredly both regard what they doe, and abundantly reward it.

Fourthly, seeing God is a rewarder of them that seek him: here is a comfortable encouragement against two great impediments, which hinder many a man from serving God.

First, to seeke God is but a matter of mockerie to prophane men; for let a man set his face to Ierusalem, there are presently Samaritanes, which for that cause will hate and mocke him: Let a man set his heart to seeke God, by hearing the word more carefully, praying to God instructing his family, or keeping the Sabbath more carefully than afore, and forthwith hee is the laughing stocke, and the by-word to prophane men: but loe, here is comfort; The God whom thou seekest will reward thee, and that so richly, that thou wilt thinke thy selfe well recompented, both for thy service, and their mockes. In this world men care not who thinke or speak evill of them, so the Prince like them: and shall it not encourage us to seeke God, though the world mock us? seeing so doing we please God, and so farre doth please him, as he will highly reward us? Those therfore, that fall from religion for those mockers, it appears they seeke not to please God, but men.

Secondly, for a man that is a Magistrate or a Minister, to doe his duty carefully, is the high way to undergoe a burthen of contempt and hatred: insomuch as many good men are afraid to be either Magistrates or Ministers: for first, wicked men must needs hate them, because the one is to rebuke, and the other to punish their faults. And againe, even good men are too respectlesse of them that are in these places, and for the most part neither yeeld them that reverence, nor reward, that is due unto them; but oftentimes a man for all his paines and care taken for Church or common-wealth, is recompensed with hatred, envy, grudges, evill words, and slanderous reports. In this case, the comfort is this, that though a man bee in the world neither regarded, nor rewarded, as his desert is, yet the Lord seeth what he doth, and is a plentifull rewarder of all that seeke and serve him: and therefore especially of them, who not onely themselves serve him in his chiefe places of service, but also doe winne many other to seeke and serve God.

Fifthly, if God be a rewarder of them that seek him, him, then doubtlesse he is a revenger of them that hate him: for he that can mightily reward his followers, can also mightily be revenged of his enemies. These two are the two parts of a Kings power, to be able highly to advance his friends, and mightily to punish his enemies: therefore principally this belongs to the King of Kings. This seatence therefore is a thunderbolt of a most fearefull threatning against all impenitent sinners; assuring them, that if they persist to prophane Gods holy name by their careles sinning against him, they shall be sure to finde and feele him a powerfull revenger of them that hate him. Thus he promiseth himselfe, Deut. 32. 40, 41, 42. I lift up my hand to heaven, and I say, I live for ever. If I whet my glittering sword, and my hand take hold on judgement, I will execute vengeance on my enemies, and reward them that hate mee. Where also note how the same phrase is used: for here the Apostle saith, God is a rewarder of them that seeke him: So in Deuter. A rewarder of them that hate him. If any object how these two can stand together; for a man had as good hate him, as seeke him, if the same reward belong to both: I answer; A reward, but not the same belongs unto them. Theeves and murderers are justly rewarded, when they die for their facts: and the King rewards a good servant, when he advanceth him to honour. They that seeke God are rewarded with mercies and favours above their desert: they that hate God, are rewarded with vengeance and torments, according to their desert: and this shall all wicked men, and enemies of God, be as sure to finde, as ever any that sought God, obtained mercie.

C

But worldly men will say, we hate not God, we are no Iewes nor Turkes, we are christened, and come to the Church, according to the law, as good subjects should doe. I answer; neither doe Turkes nor Iewes hate God, if this be all: for they denie not the Godhead, but acknowledge it, and are circumcised, and live more strictly in their devotions than most Christians. Here is therefore more required, or else wee shall make them also good friends with God: But a man may hate God, and be neither Turke nor Iew; he may acknowledge Christ and the Trinitie, and yet hate God. For, as Christ saith, He that is not with me, is against me; and he that gathereth not with me, scatereth: So is it here; He that seeketh not, serveth not, and loveth not God, hateth God: for there is no man can know God, but must needs either for his mercies love him, or else hate him for his justice against sinne and sinners. Againe, Christ bids us, If you love me keepe my commandements. If then to keepe Gods commandements be a signe of one that loves God, it is a signe that one loves not God, when he hath no care to keepe them. By which two places, it appeares, that whosoever makes not conscience of sinne, is Gods enemie, and that God so reputes him: therefore let this feare every man from living carelesly in his sinne, and drive him to true repentance: for else let him assure himselfe, God is not so plentifull a rewarder of them that seeke him, but he is as powerfull a revenger upon those that hate him.

D

Lastly, if God bee a rewarder of them that seeke him, wee learne the great difference betwixt Gods service and the Devils. The Devils servants are fed with faire words, but get nothing, the Devill is able to give them nothing: but Gods servants (as we see here) are plentifully rewarded. God is a rewarder of them that seeke him: but the Devil is a deceiver of them that serve him. But will some say, There is none so mad to be the Devils servants. I answer: He that doth any mans worke, is either his servant or his slave: but every sinfull wicked man doth the Devils worke: for sinne is the Devils worke; therefore all impenitent sinners are the Devils servants. It is Christs argument to the Jews: You are of your Father the Devill, for the workes of your Father you will doe: murthers and lies are his workes, you live in these sinnes, and doe these workes; therefore you are his servants. Joh. 8. 41. 44.

Again, the holy Ghost teacheth us, that whosoever committeth sinne (and liveth therein without repentance,) the same is the servant of sinne. Now sinne is but the baird or broker to the Devill: they that are the servants of sinne, sinne preferres them to the Devill, and so they become his servants: therefore whosoever is the servant of sinne, is by that meanes the slave and servant of the Devill also. Which if it be true, it will fall out upon the reckoning, that the Devil hath more servants in the world than God hath: which is so much the more lamentable, inasmuch as he deludeth all his servants, and is not able to reward them, nor to give them any good thing. Rom. 6. 20,

But will some say, this is nothing so; for contrariwise, who have the honours, pleasures, and wealth of this life, who have hearts ease and the world at will, but such men? I answer: True, it is commonly so; but have they these from Sathan? No, not the least of them all, but all from God: for every man is Gods childe by creation, and some by grace: to every one of his children he ordaines and gives a portion: but to his children by grace a double portion; both here, and in heaven. The wicked men, they will not feare nor serve him; therefore they have no part nor portion in heaven, but here they have it: So saith David; there are some men, which are men of this world, and have their portion in this life: these mens bellies God filleth with his hidden treasures, they and their children have enough, and leave the rest for their children after them. Where it is manifest, that wicked men have their parts and portions of Gods blessings in this world, and that all their wealth and pleasures are granted them by and from God, as their portion; reserving the principall part of the portion of his children Psal. 17. 14.

for a better life. Therefore all the good things of this life, which Divers receyved, and all wicked men doe receive in this life, are not any rewards of Sathan, but gifts of God: so unworthie a master is the Devill to serve. Indeed hee will promise his poore slaves any thing, but can performe nothing, but will lie unto them and deceive them. He told Christ confidently, when he let him see the glorie and greatnesse of this world, All this is mine, and I give it to whom I will: but he was a liar from the beginning, and so he is here. He lied to the first Adam, and no marvell, that he dare avouch so fond and loud a lie in the presence of the second Adam, Iesus Christ. He promised the first Adam to make him God, and here the second Adam to make him King and Lord of all the world, and the glory of it: but he performed both alike, he deceived the first, and so had the second also, if he had trusted him. Nor did ever any trust him, but he deceived him, (I meane even for the base things of this life;) witnesse else all his witches, (his most devoted and professed servants of all other) if ever he made any one of them wealthie: all ages are not able to shew one. Whereas, on the other side, there was never man that served God, but had a competent measure of comforts for this life (and some abundance) and yet all that is but the first fruits and beginnings of that reward which is laid up for them in another world. Which being true, is it not a strange and lamentable case, to see men (for all this) debase themselves to this base and slavish service of Satan, and to refuse this high and honourable service of almighty God? A common servant in this world hath more wit: he, if he can heare of a better service, a Master who gives better wages, and who better preferres his servants, will leave his old Master, and make meanes to get the other. And shall not we be as wise both for soule and bodie, as they for the bodie alone? Shall they leave a man for a man, and shall not we leave the Devill for God?

Let us therefore abandon the base service of Sathan, who neither can, nor will reward them that serve him; put away so ill a Master who hath not so much as meat and drinke to give us (for we have even that from God: but of his owne, he hath nothing to give us, save in this world sorrow, and shame, and an ill conscience; and in the world to come, the torments of hell with himselfe:) and let us all seeke the blessed service of God. If we know not how to attaine it, goe to Christ by hearty confession of thy sinnes, and earnest prayer, and he will preferre thee to God his Father: for never was any denied, that with a good and true heart, offered himselfe to Gods service. Then shall we feele and finde what a blessed thing it is to be Gods servant: of whom it was ever true, which the holy Ghost here saith, and is and ever shall be, that He is an honourable rewarder of them that seeke him.

And thus we have (in some part) the meaning and use of this notable sentence: wherein we have stood the longer, because it is one of the most excellent principles of all Practicall Divinitie.

Now put all together, and we shall see how it proves Henoch to be taken away by faith; which is the first ground, and the maine matter of all this example, and of these two verses.

God is a rewarder of all his children that seeke him by faith: therefore it is faith by which Gods children please God: and therefore holy Henoch who was taken up by God from earth to heaven, both pleased God by faith, and by faith was taken away.

And thus much for the commendation of Henochs faith, and consequently the examples of such, as lived in the first world before the flood.

Now followeth the example of Noah, who lived in both worlds, both before and after the flood.

NOAHS Faith.

VERSE 7.

By Faith, Noah being warned of God of the things which were as yet not seene, moved with reverence, prepared the Arke to the saving of his houshold: through the which Arke he condemned the world, and was made heire of the righteousnesse which is by faith.

IN this verse is contained the third example, and the last in order of those who lived afore the floud, in the first and old world; namely, of the renowned Patriarke Noah, the tenth from Adam. 3. Example of Noah.

Of whom and whose faith, great and glorious things are spoken in this verse; and that in a high and excellent stile, full of majestie, and divine eloquence.

Concerning Noahs faith, two points are laid downe; first, the ground of his faith: secondly, the commendation of it.

The ground of his faith, was a speciall revelation from God, in these words; Noah being warned of God. The things revealed, whereof God warned him, are laid downe two wayes: first generally, to be things as yet not seene; then particularly three in number:

1. Gods Iudgement upon the sinfull world, that he was purposed to destroy it by water.

2. Gods mercie on Noah, that he would save him, and his family.

3. That he would save him by an Arke, and therefore he must make one: and these be the things whereof Noah was warned of God.

His faith is commended by three worthy effects or operations in him. 1. It moved him into reverence, or a reverent regard of the warning sent him from God. II. It made him prepare the Arke: of which Arke there are set downe two ends: 1. It saved his houshold. 2. It condemned the world. III. It made him heire of the righteousnesse, which is by faith.

This, I take it, is the true resolution of these words: and they containe many excellent things concerning his faith.

By faith Noah being warned of God, of the things which were as yet not seene;]

By faith, that is, by a generall and historicall faith, and also by a true and saving faith in the Messias to come; Noah being warned of God of the just Iudgement he purposed to bring upon the world, by an universall flood; and of his mercifull providence to him and his family, that he would save them by an Arke, (all which things were then to come, and therefore unseene) he believed these forewarnings of God: and therefore, in reverence to this message from God, he prepared the Arke, and thereby saved his houshold, and condemned the wicked world. And so his faith, by all these appearing to bee a true and lively faith, did make him a just and righteous man in Gods sight. This is the summe and substance of Noahs example: let us speake of the severall parts in order.

The first point is the ground of his faith, A warning or an answer from God. For, he being a righteous man in that wicked age, wherein all the world welted in wickednesse, and walking before God in great holinesse, when no man cared for religion, he had this speciall favour from God, that when he purposed to destroy the world for their sinne, he first of all revealed to righteous Noah that purpose of his. So that these words have reference to the revelation which Noah had from God, in the 6. of Genesis. For this message came not from God by any Prophet (for we know none in those evill dayes, except Noah himselfe) but either by the Ministerie of an Angel, or else by immediate revelation from God himselfe: and this favour he received from God, not for any cause in the world, but because hee was an holy and righteous man.

From hence, we may learne divers excellent instructions:

A First, whereas God maketh choice of Noah, to reveale unto him his counsell, and his judgements to come, we learne, that this is a prerogative which God bestowed on such as feare him: he revealeth his counsels to them in a speciall manner, whether they bee purposes of Iudgements upon his enemies, or of mercies unto his Church. Thus dealt he with Abraham, Gen. 18. 19. Shall I (saith God) hide from Abraham the thing that I will doe? which thing was the destruction of Sodome, and her sisters. And so when the Sodomites lived in wanton carelessenesse, and put farre from them the evill day, then Abraham knew from God their destruction was at hand. And as in that, so it is generally true in all his great workes: that the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secrets to his servants the Prophets, Amos 3. 7. Now this is not a prerogative of Prophets alone, or of such as were extraordinarie men as Abraham was: but the secrets of the Lord are among st such as feare him, Psal. 25. 14. All that feare the holy name of God, are Gods friends, and of his Counsell: and therefore not Abraham only is called the friend of God, Iam. 2. 23. but of all true beleevers, saith Christ, Ioh. 15. 14, 15. You are my friends, if you doe what I command you: hence-forth I call you not servants, but friends: for the servant knoweth not what his Master doth: but all things that I have heard of my Father, have I made knowne unto you. As if he had said; I will communicate and impart my secrets unto you, as one friend doth unto another, as farre as shall bee fit for you to know. And the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 2. 15. A faithfull and a holy man discerneth into the deepe Counsels of God: which are revealed unto them, as much as concerneth their salvations, and sometimes more; as here unto Noah, who was fore-warned of God, of things then not seene.

B This prerogative of Gods children is to bee understood with some cautions:

First, that this is more proper to Prophets, and holy ministers of God, than to ordinarie Christians.

Secondly, that it was more ordinarie in the old Testament, than now in the dayes of the Gospell. If any object, Then the state of the Church afore Christ, was better than it is now under Christ; I answer: not so for first, we are recompensed by having the Scriptures perfect, and compleat, which they had not: & by having the substance of their shadowes, and the performance of their promises: in which respects our state is farre more excellent than theirs. And secondly, for this particular, I answer, they indeed had more ordinarie revelation of matters personall and private, and not directly touching salvation: but of such things as are generall, and doe necessarily concerne salvation; we in the time of the new Testament, have more evident demonstration, and more full revelation, than they had afore Christ. For example: particular cular mercies to some faithfull men, or particular judgements on Gods enemies, whether particular men or whole kingdomes, were after revealed to godly men, in those dayes (as here to Noah:) But salvation by the Messias, and the manner how the Messias should save his Church, is more fully and plainely revealed now, than in those dayes.

Out of which consideration ariseth the third caution; which is, that revelations of Gods will, to be expected now under the Gospell, are ordinarily nothing else, but these; the true meaning of Scripture, and a discerning of true Scripture from forged, of true Sacraments from supposed, of true doctrine from false, of true Pastors from false prophets. These and such like, as farre forth as they are necessarie to salvation, all true and faithfull beleevers (which out of an humbled heart, by devout prayer doe seeke it at Gods hand) are sure to have revealed unto them from God. But as for other purposes of God, of personall and particular matters, or what shall be his blessings, or what his judgements to these and these men, families, cities, or kingdomes: or when, or how he will change States, or translate Kingdomes; or by what extraordinarie meanes he will have his Gospell propagated, or a declining Church or State upholden; these we are not to expect, nor easily to beleeve any that shall say, such things are revealed unto them. And yet we tie not the Lord in such strait bonds, but that he may sometime extraordinarily reveale his purpose therein, to some of his selected servants: yet provided that that revelation be examined and allowed of the Church. But as for such things as concerne immediately the salvation of our soules, Gods Spirit doth most comfortably reveale them unto us, in our prayers, in his word, and in his Sacraments: of all which, it is most true, that the secrets of God are amongst them that feare him.

The use of this doctrine is double; for instruction, and for exhortation. For our instruction, here we learne how to answer the Church of Rome. They aske us, how doe we know true religion from erroneous; or true Scripture, or Sacraments from forged? We answer, first, by it selfe, by light and sense of the excellencie thereof; as we know gold from brasse, or silver from lead. But what if the brasse or tinne bee gilded over? I then answer secondly, wee can know gold from brasse, or silver from tinne by the sound and smell, and hardnesse to endure, and by the operation: so there is a spirituall sound of the Scriptures, in the eares of a Christian, a spirituall comfort and taste in true religion, a spirituall operation (in holy mens hearts) of the true Sacraments. But what if false Prophets come in sheeps cloathing, and by lying wonders, seeme to give the same sound, taste, smell, vertue, and operation unto their forgeries, or at least challenge it, and say, that theirs is true? I answer laitly, then we know true Religion, true Scripture, true Sacraments, true Prophets, true Doctrines from false, by a holy and supernaturall revelation from Gods spirit; which by evident and powerfull demonstration, assureth us what is true, and what is false, for the substance of salvation. And this spirit is given to all, that in true humilitie doe seeke it, in holy prairr, and in a holy & frequent use of Gods word and Sacraments; and to none else. And surely if the Papists were as well acquainted with the spirit of God, as they are with their own forged revelations, they would never denie it. By force of this testimonie a Christian man knoweth, as assuredly as that God is God, that the Pope, as now he is, and as he exerciseth his place and power, cannot be the true Vicar of Christ; and that Popetie, as it is now established by the Councell of Trent, and taught by the most learned of their side, cannot be the true religion, nor the safest way to heaven. And when question is, what is the meaning of this place, There is one God, and one Mediatour betwixt God and man, the man Christ Iesus, if all the world should say the contrarie, a Christian man will know and beleeve there are no more mediatours to God but Christ: or of that place, that Christ was offered for our sins once for all; that there is no sacrifice can purchase us pardon, but his; let Papists colour the matter by unsound distinctions as much as they can; and the same might be shewed in divers other points and places. And if any aske how this can be: I answer; Noah was warned of God of things not seene: so Gods children are warned and assured of God, of such things as concerne their salvation, though they be things beyond sense and reason: Gods secrets are belong unto them.

The use of exhortation is, that if God warne his children of his will, and reveale his secrets to them, this should move and excite us to become truly and indeed Gods servants: for we serve not a Lord that is strange and austere unto us; that will not give us a good looke, or a faire word may, he is so farre from that, that he calls us to his holy Counsell, and makes us know his secrets, and communicates his owne selfe unto us by his blessed Spirit; and by that Spirit revealeth unto us many excellent mysteries of salvation, which the carnall and prophane men of the world never dreame of.

In the second place, let us observe, that Noah being thus warned of God in this particular matter (as he had beene formerly warned and taught of salvation by a Messias to come) beleeveth not onely the generall promise of salvation, but also this particular promise of his preservation and deliverance. Out of which his practice, we may learne two things:

First, that faith is a supernaturall worke of God in those mens hearts that have it. That it is a worke of God, it appeareth in that it alwaies acknowledgeth and beleeveth Gods Word: that it is supernaturall, it appeareth in that it apprehendeth and beleeveth whatsoever Gods Word deliv reth, be it never so incredible to reason or sense. But how doth God worke this faith? By his word: for as God is the author and worker of faith, so God hath appointed a meanes whereby he workes it, and that is his Words which Word of God is the only ordinarie outward meanes to worke faith. And that Word of God is two wayes to be considered: either as revealed by God himselfe (as to Noah here,) or else being written by God, is either preached by his Ministers, or read by a man selfe in want of preaching: and these are all one, and are all meanes ordained of God to worke faith: and that not onely to beginne it where it is wanting, but to augment it where it is begun.

Which being so, it must teach us all, not onely with speciall care and reverence to heare the Word, by whomsoever it is preached; but also to heare it read: yea, to reade it our selves with all diligence. So doing, it will worke out, and make perfect in us that holy faith, which will make us blessed in our selves, and accepted of God as it did Noah in this place.

Secondly, here we learne what is the whole Object of faith; or what is all that that faith beleeveth; namely, nothing but Gods Word, and all and every Word of God. So that faith hath two objects, differing not in nature, but in degree; principall, and inferiour. The principall object of true faith, is the promise of salvation by Christ. The inferiour object thereof are all other particular promises, of safety, deliverance, providence, helpe, assistance, comfort, or what other benefit soever is made either to the whole Church, and so inclusively to any particular man; or which are personally made unto him. For saving faith beleeveth not onely the grand promise of salvation, but all other promises either of spirituall or corporall blessings, which are subordinate to the great promise, and doe depend of it, and are therefore apprehended by the same faith. So Noah here had already apprehended the maine promise of salvation by the Messiah, and had hid it in his heart: and afterward when this particular promise of his deliverance was made, by the same faith hee laid hold on it also. And it is good reason that faith should doe so: for if it apprehend the greater promise, then no marvell though it take hold of all other inferiour promises, which are but dependances upon the principall.

By this that hath beene said, it appeareth, that we are wrongfully charged by them, who say, we teach that saving faith beleeveth onely salvation by Christ, or apprehendeth onely the promise of salvation in Christ: for we say and teach, It apprehendeth also other particular promises, and even the promises of outward and temporall blessings; as appeareth in this example of Noah.

Lastly, in that Noah a faithfull man, is here warned of God of the dangers ensuing, that so he may avoid them; we may learne the loving care that God hath over them, who have a care to feare and serve him. Thus dealt he with his children in all ages, for their comfort and preservation, to encourage all men to serve God in truth and uprightnesse, as here Noah doth: for so doing they may assure themselves of Gods care and providence over them, even then, when his wrath smoketh against the sinners of the world: and that furthermore in all exigents and extremities, he will teach them, either from his word, or by the counsell of some others of his children, or else by his owne secret inspiration, what they are to doe, and what course to take, for their safetie and deliverance.

How often shall a Christian man finde in the course of his life, that God put into his minde, to answer thus and thus, or to fore-see this or that; by which his so doing, he escaped some great danger: so that (though not in the same manner as Noah was) all faithfull men doe daily finde, that they are warned by God of such things as doe concerne them.

But what were those things where of Noah was warned from God? The text saith, Of the things that were as yet not seene.

This hath not relation to the time, when the holy Ghost wrote these words, but when God gave the warning to Noah: for then they were not seene, but were to come: for they were not performed for many yeares after, as shall appeare in the particulars.

Particularly they were these three: First, the great and just wrath, which God had conceived against the sinfull world, for the universall corruption and generall sinfulnesse thereof. Noah was a Preacher of righteousnesse to that wicked age; and as S. Peter saith, (1 Epist. 3. 11.) the very spirit of Christ preached in him: but they contemned both him, and the spirit by which he spake, and made mocke of him, and all his holy admonitions, and solaced themselves in all their sinnefull pleasures, without feare or respect of God or man, pleasing themselves in their owne defiled wayes, and promising to themselves, safetie and security. But behold, this Noah, whom they esteemed a base and contemptible man, unworthy of their company; to him is revealed how shore their time is, and that they must be cut off in the midst of their jollitie. Gods children whom wicked men do thunke and speake of with great contempt, doe know full well the miserable state of such men, and the fearefull dangers hanging over them; when the wicked men themselves are farre from thinking of any such matter.

The second thing, which God revealed to Noah, was, that he would save him & his family from perishing by the waters, which he would bring upon the world. His faith was not in vaine: God rewarded it with a singular preservation. Thus dealt he alwaies with his children, delivering Lot out of Sodome, Gen. 19. Rahab out of Iericho;

Jericho: Joshua 6.22. The Kenites from the Amalekites, 1 Sam.15, and here Noah out of that generall destruction. And this God aforehand reveales unto him, for his greater comfort and securitie: that when signes and strange tokens did foretell and shew, that still the destruction was nearer and nearer; still Noah might comfort himselfe in the assurance of that mercifull promise which God had made him of his deliverance, and of his familie also for his sake.

The third thing revealed to him, was the mean es whereby he should be saved from the univer sall flood; namely, by an Arke, which for hi⁵ more assurance he is bid to make himselfe; that so at every stroke he gave, he might remember this mercifull promise of his God unto him. For as every stroke in the making of the Arke, was a loud sounding Sermon unto that sinfull generation, to call them to repentance: so was it also an assurance unto Noah of his deliverance. Of which Arke, and of Noahs obedience in making it, wee shall hereafter speake at large. And thus much concerning the ground of Noahs faith, which was a warning or revelation from God.

Now followeth a second point: namely, the commendation of his faith, or a description of the excellencie thereof by divers and singular effects.

Moved with reverence]

The first effect of his faith is, It moved him with reverence, or a reverent feare of that God that spake to him, and of his justice towards sinne and sinners, and of his mercie toward him.

In this effect we are to consider two points: 1. The ground of this reverence. 2. The occasions or motives of it.

The ground whence this reverence sprang, was his true and saving faith: for the holy Ghost first tells us of Noahs faith, and afterwards of this reverent feare he had of God, and his great workes.

Where we learne, that whosoever is endued with saving faith, is alsó touched with feare and reverence at the consideration of God, and his glorious works; whether they be works of his power, his wisdome, his mercie, or his justice, or of all together.

For the first; David could not see the works of Gods power in the creation, Psalm. 8. But when he looked up and beheld the heavens, the workes of Gods hands, the Moone and the starres which he had ordained; he forthwith fell into a reverence and admiration of Gods mercie to man, for whom and whosoule he made them all.

For the second; the same David could not enter into consideration of Gods wisdome, in the admirable frame of mans bodie, Psalm.139. 13, &c. but he presently falls into a reverence and admiration thereof in most excellent and pithie words: Thine hands have framed me and fashioned me, give me understanding that I may learne thy commandements. I will praise

A thee, for I am fearefully and wonderfully made. Marvellous are thy workes, and that my soule knoweth right well: My bones are not hid from thee, though I was made in a secret place, yet thy eyes did see my substance, when I was without forme, and in thy booke were all my members written, which in continuance were fashioned, though there were none of them before. How deere therefore are thy counsells to me, O God! Thus we see how this holy King, cannot content himselfe with any termes, to expresse his religious and reverent conceit of Gods majestie.

For the third; Gods mercifull workes to his Church and children, have alwayes beene considered of by good men with great reverence: And, What shall I give unto the Lord, saith David, for all his benefits powred on me? Ps.116.12.

B But especially, the Judgements of God have beene alwayes entertained of Gods children with much reverence and admiration. Blessed David saith; My flesh trembleth for feare of thee, and I am afraid of thy judgements, Ps.119.120. How would this noble King have trembled & beene afraid, if he had beene a private man? And how glorious is God, and his works of judgements, whereat even Kings themselves doe tremble? And the Prophet Habacuk saith, that when hee but heard of Gods judgements to come, his belly trembled, his lips stooke, rottennes entred into his bones, Habac.3.16. And thus Noah here, hearing of Gods just wrath against the sinfull world, and of his purpose to overthrow C all living flesh by water, was moved with great feare and reverence at this mighty worke of God: and from the view of this his great and just judgement, his faith made him arise to a more earnest consideration of the Majestie of God. By al which, it is more than apparant, that true faith (wheresoever it is) worketh a holy feare and reverent estimation of God, and of his works, and of God in and by his works: whereby on the contrarie side, it followeth, that therefore to thinke basely or ordinarily of God, to thinke scornefully of his workes, or to deny his power, and his hand, in the great workes, either of mercy or judgement done in the world, is an argument of a profane heart, and wanting D true faith.

The use of this doctrine discovers the profanenesse, and the great want of faith, that ordinarily is in the world. And that appeares by two evidences: the first, is to mens owne consciences; the other, is to the view and sight of all the world.

First, men may see in themselves a profane heart and void of faith, by this evidence. For, doth a man in his heart thinke basely of God, his power, his justice, or his mercies? Doth he either doubt of them? or granting them, doth hee thinke of them without feare and amazement? Then assuredly his heart is void of true faith, and farre from the life and power of religion. For assuredly, where God is knowne and beleeved, there that mans heart (though he be a King) a King) cannot once thinke of God, without a reverence of his Majestie, and an admiration at his greatnesse, and his owne basenesse: therefore the want of this, argueth a want of true religion and true faith in mens hearts.

Secondly, this profanenesse discovers it selfe to the world, by want of reverence to Gods workes. Let the Lord send unseasonable weather, or famines, or plagues, or any strange signes in heaven or in earth; forthwith they are but fooles that cry out, Behold the finger of God, the hand of God. No, this is nature, and is produced by naturall causes. Ill weather comes from the starres; famines from ill weather, and mens covetousnesse; Plagues from famines, or from ill aires, or else by apparant infection from an other place. But cannot Nature and naturall B means have their place, unlesse they have Gods place? God overthroweth not them, why should they overthrow God? Yet thus it is in the world, and thus God is robbed of his glory: and hee is but a simple fellow, which is moved with reverence at sight of such things, or begins to magnifie Gods power and justice in them. This is too apparant to be denied: for have wee not now as great causes of feare as may bee? Noah heard of water; and wee heare that fire is to destroy the world, and yet where is he that is moved with reverence, as Noah was; and yet Noah could say, The flood shall not bee these 120. yeares: but who can say and prove that this world shall not be destroyed by fire within these 120. yeares? And till the flood came, they had doubtlesse many other plagues, which were forerunners of the generall destruction; all which as they came, moved Noah unto reverence: and so wee in this life, doe see the great workes of Gods judgements, upon men, upon families, upon townes, upon countreyes, and whole kingdomes, and we feele his heavy hand in many sharpe strokes; but who and where are they whose hearts feare God the more, and doe tremble in the consideration of his Judgements. Nay alas, amongst many it is but a matter of mockery so to doe. This is not the fault of our religion, but the want of it: for if men truly knew and beleeved in God, they could not thinke nor speake of God, nor looke at his workes, but with feare and reverence. For as our feare of God is, so is our faith: little feare of God, little faith: and no feare at all, no faith at all. Let therefore all men shew their religion by their feare of God, and let every Christian acknowledge God in his workes. England hath beene faulty hereis in one point specially. Wee have had great plagues, which have taken away many thousands in short time wherein God hath shewed himselfe mighty against our sinnes: but Gods hand would not be seene nor acknowledged, but onely nature and naturall causes. But let England take heed, that God send not a plague so generall and so grievous, that even the most prophane men, (even the sorcerers of Egypt if they were here) do

A acknowledge that it is the finger of God; and so give God that due reverence, which in his ordinary visitation he hath not. Thus wee see the ground whence this reverence in Noah sprang; namely, his faith.

Now let us see the occasions or considerations in Noahs heart, that made him feare. The ground whereupon he feared, was true faith: for else he had not beene capable of any feare or reverence of God: but the occasions which stirred up this feare in him, were some things else.

Now if wee looke to humane reasons, Noah had no cause at all to feare as hee did. For first, the Judgement was farre off, 120. yeares after: and common reason saith, it is folly to feare any thing so farre off; but it is time enough to feare when it is neere at hand. Againe, hee was one single man, and the world was full of wise and mighty men; they all heard of it, yet none of them feared; therefore their example might prevaile with him, to keepe him from feare, and to make him secure and careleſse with the rest: for examples are strong, especially when they are so generall.

Thirdly, the strangenes of the judgmẽt threatned, was such as might drive any man in reason from fearing it at all. For first, who would ever beleeve, that God would drowne all the world with water? Such a thing never had beene, and therefore how could it bee? And againe, If all should bee drowned, who would chinke that Noah should escape, and none but he? C

These three conſiderations, being weighed in the ballance of mans reason, would have kept Noah from fearing, or beleeving this word of God. But behold the power of faith: it goeth beyond all humane reach, fixeth it selfe fast on Gods word: and therefore hee not onely beleeveth it, but hath furthermore his heart possessed with a great reverence of Gods Majesty upon this message. And there were three motives stirring him up unto this reverence:

First, the consideration of Gods strange Judgement upon the sinfull world; to see that his wrath was so provoked, that he should bring so unwonted a plague; so strange both for the nature of it; a flood of water to drowne men: whereas generally all men can avoid the vio- D lence of that element: and for the measure of it, so great, as it should drowne all the world, and destroy all men.

Now that which this Judgement of God wrought in Noah, the same effect should Gods Judgements worke in us: namely, they should move us with reverence. For as Christ saith, Our dayes are like Noahs: As it was in the dayes of Noah; so shall the dayes bee before the comming of Christ. (Matthew 24. 37.) These dayes are as wicked, men are as covetous, as cruell, as malicious, as voluptuous, and yet as secure as they then were; as full of sinne, and yet as dead in sinne as they were then. Therfore Noah looked for a flood 120. years after: & who can tell whether our world shall last so long a time or no? at least we may safely say (whatsoever the world doth) there is no man liveth, but within farre lesse time than 120. yeares, is assured to bee overthrowne to hell by a flood of Gods wrath at his death, unlesse in the meane time hee repent: and yet alas, where is hee that is moved with reverence at the consideration hereof? The wicked man may escape the water of a flood: but hee cannot escape the fire of hell, hee cannot escape death, hee cannot escape the last Judgement. These are to come, yet they are sure: why then doe not men feare as Noah did? he feared 120. yeares before it came. Wee can indeed tremble a little at a present Judgement: as when fire breakes out, when waters overflow, when the plague destroyeth, or when famine confumes: but to tremble at a Judgement threatned, though it bee a farre off, this is the worke of true faith. This was in Noah, and wrought in him a reverence: and so would in us, if it were in us. When men cry fire, fire, we stirre, we run, we tremble: but God crieth in his Word, the fire of hell, the fire of his wrath; and we care not, we stirre not, we leave not our sinnes, wee are not moved with reverence, as Noah was: therefore it is more than manifest, that holy faith is wanting in the world, which Noah had.

The second motive, stirring up this reverence in him, was the consideration of Gods wonderfull mercy to him and his family, in saving them. This mercy seemed so wonderfull to him, both for that hee knew it was undeserved (knowing himselfe a sinfull man, and therefore not able to merit Gods favour and being privy to himselfe of his owne manifold imperfections) and also unexpected, for he thought not to have beene spared alone in an universall destruction: therfore hee wondred with reverence at so great a mercy. Thus Gods mercies doe not onely win a mans heart to love God, but even to feare him with much reverence: this David proveth, Psal. 130.4. There is mercy with thee, O Lord, that thou maist be feared: as though he had said; Thy great mercies to thy children, O Lord, doe make them conceive a reverent estimation of thee. This made David cry out in a holy passion; How excellent are thy mercies, O Lord!

And as Gods children wonder at the excellencies of Gods mercies unto them, so also at their owne basenesse and unworthinesse. Thus doth holy David, 2 Sam. 7.18. (who as he was a man of much faith, so was he full of excellent meditations, and reverent speeches of God, (which are the true effects of faith) when God had set him in his Kingdome, he saith, Who am I, O Lord, and what is my house, that thou hast brought me hither? And 1 Chron. 29.14. But who am I, saith hee, and what is my people, that we should offer thus unto the Lord? and doubtlesse even so said Noah blessed soule often unto the Lord, and to it selfe, who am I, O Lord, and what is my family, that wee should bee chosen out of so many thousands, and be saved when all the world perisheth?

Let us apply this to our Church and State. If any Nation have cause to say thus, it is England. God hath delivered us out of the thraldome of spirituall Ægypt, and led us out: not by a Moses, but first by a childe, then by a woman, and given us his Gospell, more fully, and freely, and quietly, than any kingdome so great in the world; and still delivereth us from the cursed plots of the Pope, and tyrannous invasions of the Spaniard, who thought to have marked us in the foreheads with the brand of infamy, and to have done to us as they have done to other nations whom they have conquered: but God from heaven fought for us, and overthrew them in their owne devices: yea, the Lord put his hooke in his nosthrils, & his bridle in his lips, and carried him back againe with shame and reproach. We are unworthie of such a mercie, if our soules doe not often say unto God: O Lord, what are we, and what is our people, that thou shouldest be so wonderfull in thy mercies unto us?

And particularly this must teach every Christian to be a careful observer of the favours and mercies that God vouchsafeth to his soule and body, to him or his: and the consideration of them must make him daily be moved with reverence, and reverent thoughts of Gods Majestie; and still as the Lord is more and more mercifull unto him, to beare still the more feare and reverence unto him for the same.

The last motive of this Reverence in Noah, was the consideration of Gods power and wisdome, both in the Judgement upon the world, and in the mercy upon him: for first, in the Judgement it was wonderfull, that God would choose so weak an element as water, to destroy and vanquish the huge Gyants of those dayes: but therein appeared first Gods power, that by so weake meanes can cast downe his enemies: And againe, his wisdome; that as an universall wickednesse had polluted the whole world, so a flood of water should wash the whole world. Secondly, the mercy was also wonderfull, that God should chuse to save Noah by so strange a meanes as an Arke, which should swim on the waters. For Noah thought, if the Lord will save me, he will either take me up into heaven, (as he did Henoch a little before,) or else make mee build a house upon the top of the highest mountaine. But the Lord will save him by no such meanes, but by an Arke: wherein appeared first, Gods power that would save him by so weake a meanes, as might seeme rather to destroy him. For Noah must lye and swim in the middest of the waters, and yet be saved from the waters: and the Arke must save him; which in all reason, if the tempests had cast it against the hard rockes and mountaines, or upon the strong castles and houses of the mighty gyants, would have beene broken in peeces: and so it had, but that God himselfe was the Master and Pilot in that voyage.

And

And secondly, Gods wisdome shone cleerely in this meanes; because God would have him saved not in such sort, as the world might not see it (as it would have beene, if he had been taken up into Heaven, or into the aire:) but would have him saved in an Arke; that so all the wicked men, as they were a dying in the water, or expecting death upon the tops of the hils, might see him live and bee saved, to their more torment, and to their greater shame, who would not beleeve Gods word, as hee did. For as the wicked in hell are more tormented to see the godly in the joyes of heaven: so doubtlesse were the wicked of that age, to see Noah saved before their eyes. The view of this power and wisdome of God herein, made Noah give great reverence to Gods Majestie.

And no lesse ought it to worke in the hearts of all true hearted Englishmen, and faithfull Christians. For did not the Lord restore and establish the Gospell to our nation, by a child, and by a woman; and in her time when all other Princes were against her (contrary to the rules of policie?) and did not God in our late deliverance, overthrow our enemies, not so much by the power of man, as by his owne hand? Did not he fight from heaven? Did not the starres and the winds in their courses fight against that Sisera of Spaine? Let us therefore with blessed Noah stand amazed to see Gods mercies, and with reverence and feare magnifie his great and glorious name.

And thus we have the three motives that moved in Noah this Reverence of God: the consideration first of his great Indgement on the sinfull world: 2. Of his great Mercy in saving him: 3. Of his admirable power and wisdome shewed both in the judgement, and in the mercie.

Hitherto of the first effect. It followeth,

Prepared the Arke.]

The 2. effect of Noahs faith, whereby it is commended, is, that hee upon a commandement received from God (as we heard before) doth make and build an Arke, wherein to save himselfe and his family. Concerning this Arke, much might bee spoken out of the booke of Gen. But it is not to our purpose: which is no more in this Chapter, but to shew the obedience and practice of faith, and therein the excellencie of it. Now the point here to bee spoken of, is not the matter, nor the measure, nor the proportion, nor the fashion, nor the uses of the Arke; all which in the 6. Chapter of Genesis, are fully described: but the action and obedience of Noah in preparing it, as God bad him: whereof the holy Ghost (in Gen. 6.22.) saith, Noah did according to all that God had commanded him, even so did he.

Now in this action of Noahs faith, divers points of great moment are to bee considered:

First, why did God bid Noah make an Arke 120. yeares before the flood, when hee might have built it in three or foure yeares?

The answer is, God did it for divers causes: some respecting the sinfull world, as that they might have longer time and more warnings to repent; every stroke of the Arke, during these 120. yeares, being a loud Sermon of repentance unto them. Againe, that they might bee without excuse, if they amended not: and lastly, that their iniquities might bee full, and their sinnes ripe for vengeance. But of all these, wee will not speak, because they concerne not Noah, of whose faith wee are onely to speake: let us therefore touch onely those causes which concerne Noah. And in regard of him, the Lord did thus, that he might trie his faith and patience, and exercise other graces of holinesse in him. Thus God dealeth with his servants always: hee exerciseth them many and strange wayes in this world. He led the Israelites in the desarts of Arabia fourty yeares; whereas a man may travell from Ramesses in Egypt, to any part of Canaan, in fourty dayes: and this God did to humble them, and try them, and to know what was in their heart, Deut. 8.2.

God promised Abraham a sonne, in whom all the nations of the earth should be blessed, (Gen. 12.3.) But hee performed it not till 30. yeares after, (Genes. 21.2.) Hee gave David the kingdome of Israel, and annointed him by Samuel, 1 Sam. 16.13. But hee attained it not of many yeares after; and in the meane time, was persecuted and hunted by Saul, as a flea in a mans bosome; or as a Partridge in the mountaines. 1 Sam. 24.15. and 26.20. And thus God exercised him both in that and other his promises: as hee saith, Psal. 40.1. In waiting I waited on the Lord: and Psal. 119.82. Mine eyes faile for waiting for thy promise. O, when wilt thou comfort me? Thus God dealt with them, and thus in some measure hee deales with all his children, to humble and to trie them, and to know what is in their hearts; for that, in these cases, men doe always shew themselves, and their dispositions. When men enjoy all things at their will and wish; who cannot make a faire profession? but where men are long deferred, and kept from that is promised, and they expect, and are so long crossed in their expectations, then they appeare in their owne colours.

And as God dealt with them, so will he one way or other doe with us: if we be his servants, hee will at some time of our life or other, lay some such affliction upon us, as may try us, and our faith, and our patience, and our humility. For if wee be hypocrites, and have no true graces, but only a shew; this will discover it: and if wee have true and found faith, and patience; this will make them shine like orient pearles in their true and perfect beauty.

Secondly, as God bade Noah build an Arke so long time before any need of it; so hee did, without denying or gaine-saying. So saith the story (in Genesis,) He did according to all that God commanded him. And thus the holy Ghost faith here, Hee being warned of God, by faith prepared the Arke. Where wee learne, That where true faith is, there followeth true obedience to every Commandement of God: insomuch as a godly beleeving man no sooner heareth any dutie to bee commanded of God, but hee thinkes his soule and conscience is tyed to obedience: and this is the nature of true faith. And it is as impossible to bee otherwise, as it is for fire having fewell not to burne. Acts 15.9. Faith purifieth the heart; namely, from careleſſe disobedience to Gods word: for if from any corruption at all, then from it especially, because it is most contrary to the pureneſſe of true faith.

This being so, sheweth us, not any fault in our religion (as the Papists slander us,) but the want of our religion, and the want of true faith in the world: for there is almost no obedience to Gods commandement. For first, Turkes and Jewes acknowledge not the Scriptures: and the Papists have set aside Gods commandements, to set up their owne. And few Protestants have the feeling of the power of true religion, and nothing indeed but a bare profession: but it must be a feeling of the power of it, which produceth true obedience. And alas, wee see men obey not Gods Commandements. God saith, Sweare not by my name vainely: keepe my Sabbath. Where is there a man of many that feareth to breake these; Alas, there are more mockers of such as would keepe them, than carefull and conscionable keepers of them. How truly said Christ, When the sonne of man commeth, shall hee finde faith on the earth? It is likely therefore, these be the dayes, wherein we may wait for the comming of Christ: for the generall want of obedience, sheweth the generall want of faith.

But this obedience of Noah is better to bee considered of: for it was very excellent and extraordinary; there being many hinderances that might have stopped him in the course of his obedience, and have perswaded him never to have gone about the making of the Arke.

As first, the great quantity of the Arke amounting to many thousand Cubits; a worke of huge labour, and great charge.

Againe, the length of his labour, to last 120. yeares. It is a tedious thing, and troublesome to mans nature, to be ever in doing, and never to have done.

Thirdly, the building of it was a matter of much mockery to the world: for it signified; 1. the destroying of the whole world; 2. the saving of himself. These things were taunted at by the worldly wise men of that sinfullage, and he was loudly laught at by many a man, to thinke all the world should perish; but much more, if all perished, to imagine, that he and his should be delivered.

Lastly, the building of the Arke was a harsh thing to nature, and naturall reason, in many respects; for,

First, that all the world should be destroyed, seemed not possible to bee, because it never had beene.

Secondly, it seemed not likely that Gods mercy should be so wholly swallowed up of his justice.

Thirdly, they must live in the Arke, as in a close prison, without comfort of light or fresh aire, and amongst beasts of al sorts, and that for a long time, he knew not how long. Now reason would tell him, he had better die with men than live with beasts; and better die a freeman and at liberty, than live a prisoner; and better die with company, than live alone: And that if God had purposed to save him, he could have used other meanes, and more easie, more direct, and more safe than this; that therefore his deliverance was to be doubted of. And lastly, reason would say: I may make my selfe a gazing and mocking stocke to the world for 120. yeares; and it may bee then Gods purpose will be altred, and no flood will come; or if it come, I goe into the Arke, and it chance to breake against the mountaines, so that I perish with the rest, than am I worst of al, who perish notwithstanding all my labour; therefore I had better let it alone, and take my venture with the rest of the world.

These doubtlesse, and many such naturall considerations came into his minde, and stood up as so many impediments of his faith. But behold the power of true faith, in the heart of a holy man: It overgoeth all doubts, it breaketh through all difficulties, to obey the will and word of God. Yea, it gives a man wings, with which to flye over all carnall objections. Thus wee see it here in Noah, and afterward shall as cleerely see it in Abraham, and other holy men.

The use of this doctrine discovereth the weakeneſſe of many mens faith: for if the doctrine of the Gospel go currant with our naturall affections, or seeme plausible to our natures, we doe formally obey it: But if it crosse our affections, or goe beyond our reason, or controll our naturall dispositions, then wee spurne against it, we call it into question, we are offended at it, and deny our obedience. Here wants the faith of Noah, which carried him beyond the compasse of nature, and reach of reason, and made him beleeve and doe that which neither nature could allow, nor reason like of, and which would be displeasing to his naturall affections. Let us therefore learne to practise true faith, by beleeving forth with what God shall say unto us, without asking advice, or hearing the objections of flesh and bloud. God threatned in times past the overthrow of the great Monarchies of the Assyrians, Caldeans, Persians, Grecians, Romans: reason did make doubts how it could be, but faith beleeved it, and it is done. God in latter times threatned the fall of Abbies, and dispersing of Monkes, for their wickednesse. It seemed impossible to reason:

reason: yet faith in some beleeved it, and it came to passe.

God now threatneth the ruine of Babylon, and the full revelation of Antichrist, and the overthrow of the new found Hierarchy of the Iesuites, which glitter so in worldly glory, and in outward strength: this seemes hard to bring to passe: but let faith beleeve it, for it is Gods word, and shall be fulfilled in his season. God hath said, that our bodies shall rise againe even these bodies which are burned to ashes, or eaten of beasts, or fishes, or turned to dust in the earth. This is a wonder to nature, an amazement to reason: but faith will beleeve it, and shall finde it true, for God hath said it.

God saith, Christ is in the Sacrament truly and really present to the soule of a Christian. Carnall sences deny this, and naturall reason knoweth not how; but aske with the Capernaits, How can hee give us his flesh to eat? But faith beleeveth it, and knoweth how; though to outward sence it cannot be expressed. And it was a holy & divine speech used by holy Martyrs, who being asked how Christ could bee eaten in the Sacrament, and not with the teeth, answered; Master let me know how. God saith, Wicked men though they flourish never so, are miserable; and good men are blessed above all other. Reason and worldly experience say this is false: but true faith beleeves it, and findes it true; for never did any childe of God desire to change his estate with the mightiest or wealthiest wicked man in the world. God saith, He that will follow Christ, must deny himselfe, and his owne desires, and follow Christ in bitternesse and affliction. Nature saith, This is a hard lesson: who can beare it? But faith beleeves it, yeelds to it, and endevours the practice of it, because God hath so commanded. Such is the power and excellencie of true faith.

Fourthly and lastly, out of this action and obedience of Noah, marke a speciall lesson. God had revealed to him, that hee would save him and his family, and assured him he should not perish. Yet for all this, he makes an Arke: whereupon it followeth, that Noah, though he knew God would save him, yet was perswaded hee must use the meanes, or else should not be saved. Hee might have said to himselfe, God hath said, and bound himselfe by covenant, he will save me; nowif I make not the Arke, yet his Word is his Word, and he will stand to it. His will cannot be altered: though I be false, he will bee true; though I doe not that I should doe, yet hee will doe what belongs to him: therefore I will spare my labour and cost of making the Arke; especially seeing it is a matter of so much mockery, and so ridiculous to reason. But Noah is of another minde: he willnot sever Gods word from his meanes, hee dependeth on Gods word for his safety, but not on his bare word without the meanes.

Whence we learne, that though a man bee certaine of his salvation, and that hee is to use the meanes of salvation, and that not onely, though hee bee certaine in the certainty of faith, but though hee could be assured from God himselfe by immediate revelation. For if God should say to a man by his name, thou shalt be saved: It is no more, than here was said to Noah for his deliverance. For to him said God, I will destroy all flesh: but with thee I will make my covenant, and thou shalt be delivered: yet for all that, Noah judgeth, that if hee use not the meanes, if he make not an Arke, hee is to looke for no deliverance: this was Noahs divinity.

Contrary both to the divinity and practice of some in this age: who say, If I shall be saved, I may live as I list: and though I live as I list, yet if in the end I can say, Lord have mercy on me, I am safe enough. But Noah would not trust his body on such conditions, though they be so preimmynous as to trust their soules. Let such men be assured, God in his decree hath tied the end and the meanes together. Let not therefore man separate what God hath joyned together: he that doth, let him looke for no more salvation, if hee use not the meanes, than Noah would have done for safety, if hee had made no Arke. And thus wee see the second effect of his faith. It followeth;

To the saving of his household.]

Now this second effect of preparing, is further inlarged by a particular enumeration of the ends or purposes, why the Arke was made; namely, both of Gods Commandement, and his obedience in making it.

1 By it he saved his household.

2 Hereby he condemned the world.

The first end which both God had in commanding, and Noah in making the Arke, was the saving of his household: that is, himselfe, and all that belonged to him; which were his wife, his three sonnes, and their wives, Gen. 7.7.

But first of all, it may seeme wonderful, how this Arke should save him and his household in this generall destruction. For it was a great and huge vessell resembling a ship: yet so farre unlike, as it is rather called an Arke. It must flote above the water, it must be laden with a heavie burthen; and yet without sayle or to stay her, without mast to poise her, without stearne to guide and move her, without Master to governe her. For Noah was partly an husbandman, and partly a Preacher: and though he had much learning, yet the use of sayling was not then found out: and therefore in all reason this Arke would bee carried on hils and rockes, by the violence of the Tempests, and so flie in peeces. Yet, for all this, it saved him, even when heaven and earth seemed to runne together, so vehement was the raine) even then it saved him and his. How came this to passe? Even because Gods providence and his hand was with it: He was the Master and the Steeres-man. For as God himselfe shut the doore of the Arke upon him, when he was in, and made it fast after him, that no water might enter (which was impossible for Noah himselfe to have done.) Gen. 7. 16. So doubtlesse the same God that had vouchsafed to be his Pastor, was also his proper ma preserver, and the Master of the Arke during that voyage. And from hence came it to passe, that the Arke saved him, which otherwise in reason it could never have done.

Here we learne, first, the speciall and extraordinary presence and providence of God over his children in great distresses and extremities. His providence is over all his workes, for he forgets nothing that he hath made: but the speciall eye of his providence watcheth over his children, as a master of a family hath an eie over his meanest servants, yea, over his very cattell: but his eare night and day is for his children. And as God overlocketh all his children alwayes, so principally his providence sheweth it selfe, when they are in the deepest dangers, or in the greatest want of naturall helps. When Daniel was cast into the Lions den, God was there with him, and shut their mouthes. Dan. 6. 22. When the three children were cast into the fiery furnace. God was with them and tooke away the naturall force from the fire: Dan. 3. 27. When the Israelites were to passe thorow the sea or elſe die, (a hard shift) God was with them and made the sea give place to his children, and stand like two walls on either side them, Exod. 14. 22. When they were to wander thorow the wide wildernesse, thorow so many dangers and discomforts as Deserts doe afford, Christ was with them, and waited upon them with his continuall comfort and assistance, 1 Corin. 10. 4. And so when Noah was to go into the Arke, and (being in) must have the doore shut, and closed upon him; his case was pitifull. For doe it himselfe hee could not; it both being so bigge that Elephants and Camels must enter in at it; and though hee could have pulled it to, yet being within, hee could never have sufficiently closed it from the water: Nor would any other of the wicked world doe it for him: they did not owe him so much love or service, but rather mocke him, and laught at him: as first, for making the Arke, so now for entring in, when he knew not how to have it closed. How should he doe? himselfe could not, others would not: God himselfe with his owne hand shut it for him. And after, when hee was in, and was in danger to be throwne upon the rockes, and to bee split in peeces on the hills, and had no Anchor, no sterne, no Pilot, no Master; God himselfe was with him, and was all in all unto him. The eye of his love, and the hand of his power was over him, and to the Ark saved him and his houshold. Such is the providence of God over his, when they are in the deepest distresses, and most determine of all worldly comforts.

The use of this doctrine ministreth comfort unto Gods children: who as they are sure of many crosses to fall upon them; so are they sure also of a speciall care of God over them, even in their greatest extremities. And this may

A Gods children (who serve him in the true obedience of faith) ever assure themselves of, that the Lord doth never forget, nor forsake them in any of their troubles: but will bee ever ready with his mercifull hand, to defend them from dangers, to provide for them in necessities, and to comfort them in distresses, when they know not in the world how to doe. Elisha had an army of men sent against him, to take him: How should one man escape from a whole army? his man cried, Alas, Master what shall we doe? He answered his man, and bade him, feare not, there were more for him than against him; that is, more Angels (though they were unseene) for him, than there were men in the army against him. And so when no man would shut the doore for Noah, there were Angels enough ready sent from God to doe it for him: and when all wicked men wished he might perish with the Arke he had made, and assured themselves hee would perish, having no such helpes as ships require; then the holy Angels, or rather God himselfe, supplied all such wants unto him: and so when themselves perished, they saw him and his houshold saved by that Arke. And no lesse care hath God over his Church and children to this day. And though he worketh not visible miracles for them, yet they feele and finde that he is oftentimes mighty and wonderfull in preserving them, in providing for them, in assisting them, and in comforting them, when else without that providence of his, they know they had miscaried.

C Againe, whereas God himselfe vouchsafeth in Noahs danger to be the Master and Pilot of this Arke, that so it may save him and his houshold: wee learne the antiquitie and dignitie of the trade of Mariners, Saylors, and Masters of ships. The antiquitie: For wee see it is as old as Noah, as old as the second world, even 4000. yeares old. The dignity is great; for God himselfe was both the first author, and the first practiser of it. The author and first deviser: For Noah made not this Arke of his owne head, but (as wee heard before) hee was warned of God to doe it. And hee was the first practiser, for God himselfe performed all those services unto Noah in the Arke: else it had never saved him.

D This being so, It is the more griefe to see that worthy calling so abused, and debased as it is; the most of them that practise it being profane, ungodly, and dissolute men. Such men should remember, God made the first ship, and God was the first Master, and the first Mariner, the first Pilot, the first governour of a ship: and they should labour to be like him. This is one of those few callings, which may say, God himselfe was the first deviser and practiser of it. All callings cannot say so; why then should they so farre forget whom they succeed? Indeed upon the seas and in distresses, they will make some profession of religion: but let them come a-shore; what swearing, what whoring, what drunkennesse amongst them? But let them be afraid afraid to be so prophane, which hold the place, which once God himselfe held: or elſe let them know they are unworthy of so good a calling.

And thus we see the reason, and the meanes how the Arke could save him and his houshold; namely, because God did governe it.

In the next place, observe the end and use of the Arke. It was to save this holy man and his houshold. Learne here that Gods servants in common calamities have safety: For God himselfe giveth them security, and provideth deliverance. Thus was it ever. When God proceedeth in judgement against Heresie, or the sinnes thereof: he marketh the godly in their forheads; namely, such as mourne and cry for the abhominations which are done against God, Ezech. 9. 4.

B When Sodome must be destroyed, righteous Lot and his family must be drawne out; nay, the Angell can do nothing till he be safe, Gen. 19. 16. 22. When the destroying Angell went over the land of Ægypt, and destroyed the first borne in every house of the Ægyptians, (the Israelities dwelling among them) he past over all the Israelites, whose doores were sprinkled with the bloud of the Paschall Lambe, Exod. 12. 13. And even so he whose heart and soule is sprinkled with the bloud of Jesus Christ the Lambe of God, no calamity can doe him hurt; nay, when others are smitten he shall be delivered.

The use of this doctrine is to our Church and State: We have by Gods mercie long enjoyed C Peace and the Gospell; and both under a gracious government: and with these many other blessings. Yet speake truth, and the sinnes of our time call for a flood, as in Noahs time: and sure a flood of tribulation must come one way or other. For this was always the state of Gods Church; now peace, now persecution. Peace abused causeth trouble and calamities. Therefore as we have so long had peace and ease, so assuredly looke for a flood: what it will be or when, knoweth no man; onely hee who will send it, the righteous and Almightie God. How then shall we doe, when the flood of tribulation is upon us; There is no way but one. Believe in Christ Jesus; settle thy heart in true faith: repent of thy sins: get Gods favour and D forgivenesse: and then when the flood comes, Gods providence shall afford thee (one way or other) an Arke of safetie and deliverance. Sprinkle thy soule now with Christs bloud by faith and true repentance: and the destroying Angell of Gods wrath, shall passe over thee and thy houshold.

Thirdly, observe the largenesse of Gods bounty. Not onely Noah shall be saved, but with him his houshold also. Why the Lord did so, there be divers reasons:

First, for the Propagation and multiplication of the world after the flood. If any object, Noah and his wife might have served for that end: I answer, they were old; for hee was

A 600. yeares old, when the flood came: and though he lived 300. yeares after the flood, (Gen. 9. 28.) yet reade wee not of any children that he had. If any further object, The first world was begun, and multiplyed by one alone, Adam and Eve, and no more why should there bee so many for the beginning of the second world? I answer: God doth in the beginning, to shew that all mankinde is of one bloud, (Acts 17. 26.) and that in regard of bodie or birth, there is no difference or inequality betwixt man and man: which although there bee even in the second beginning. For, though the world was multiplyed by three brethren, Shem, Cham, and Japhet: yet those three were not strangers, but all joines to one man Noah: so that as at first by Adam and Eve, so after from Noah and his wife came all men in the world. But in the beginning of the second world, there must needs bee more lines than one: because now the blessed seed was promised, whose B and kindred must needs bee kept from all other until his incarnation. And there was more cause now why the should be speedily replenished then at the ginning. For, first the earth had some glory beauty left it after the first curse; so that it still a most pleasant and delightfull habitation to Adam and Eve. But now by the second curse in the flood, all her beauty was gone, and all her glory was overmuch spoyled, and decayed: so that it had beene a miserable habitation for Noah and his wife, if they had beene without company. Secondly, the earth being much defaced, and the vertue of it almost quite perished by the flood, had now more need to bee recovered by the hands and helps of many mens labours. And to this purpose the Scripture saith, Gen. 9. 19. and 10. 32. that the earth was divided amongst the three sonnes of Noah. And they lived not all together, but overspread the earth. And lest the beasts, which then were many, should overgrow the world, therefore God would have the world speedily replenished; and to that end Noah and his wife had never a servant in the Arke, but onely such as should have children: their three sons and their wives. And thus the multiplication of mankind C is the first cause, why God saved Noahs children.

The second cause: It is likely that as himselfe was a righteous man, so they of his family were more orderly and religious, than others of that wicked Age; for good men make conscience of teaching their families as Abraham, Gen. 18. 18. And seeing Noah is commended for a just and good man, doubtlesse, hee did carefully instruct his houshold: and therefore it is to be supposed, that all, or the most of them were holy and righteous persons fearing God.

Thirdly, though all of them were not righteous yet they were all of the family of righteous Noah: and therefore for fellowship sake saved; all being his children, or his childrens wives. For, the righteous man procureth blessings not to himselfe alone, but on all that belong unto him, dwell with him or are in his company. At Abrahams request, had there bin but ten righteous men in Sodome, all had beene spared for their sakes (Gen. 18. 32.) When Ioseph dwelt in Egypt all Putiphars house, and all in it (though he were a heathen man) were blessed for Iosephs take; (Gen. 39. 5.) When Lot was delivered out of Sodomes destruction, the Angels asked him, Hast thou any sonnes in law? that they might have beene saved for his sake, (Gen. 19. 12.) When Paul and 276. soules with him suffered ship-wracke, and were all in present danger of drowning, God saved Paul, and for his sake all the rest: God gave him the lives of all that were with him in the ship, Act. 27. 24. And so here Noahs children, and their wives, are spared for Noahs sake.

Let this encourage all men to serve God in truth and uprightnesse; seeing thereby they shall not make themselves alone blessed, but bring downe Gods blessing even on their children, children and posterities: yea, the very places where, and the people with whom they dwel, shall fare the better for them. And thus we see the causes and reasons, why not Noah alone, but even his household were also saved.

In the fourth place, let us observe how the holy Ghost saith, that Noah built the Arke; not for the saving of himselfe, but of his household; and it is so said for two causes:

First, to shew that Noah, though he were the head and governour, yet was one of the household; for in the word household, himselfe is comprehended. Masters and Fathers, though they be governours, yet must thinke themselves members of the household; so will they have more care thereof, when they esteeme themselves members of the bodie, and parts of the whole.

Secondly, to teach us what care Noah had for his family; even so great, as he prepared the Arke to save them withall. Here is an Example of a worthy Master of a household; and yet all this was but for a temporal deliverance. Now if he was so carefull for their bodily safetie, how much more was he to save them from hell and damnation, which he knew to be an eternall destruction of both soule and bodie. Therefore doubtles, as he was a diligent Preacher of righteousnesse to that sinfull world; so principally a diligent Preacher, and Prayer, and Catechiser of his owne family; that so he might make them Gods servants, and deliver them from the eternall fire of hell.

Noahs example is to be a patterne to all Parents and Fathers of families, to teach them care not onely for the bodies, and bodily welfare of their families, but especially for their soules and spirituall welfare. And if they be bound by all bonds of nature and religion, to provide for the bodies of their children; let reason judge, A how much more streightly they are tied to looke to their soules. But S. Paul saith, He that provideth not temporall things necessarie for his family, is worse than an Infidell, 1 Tim. 5. 8. Then what is he who provideth nothing for their soules? Surely, his case is extremely fearefull. Therefore when thou hast provided meat, apparell, a calling, and marriage, house and livings for thy child; thinke not thou hast done, and so maist turne them off. The world may take them thus: but God will not take them so at thy hands. No, the greater dutie remaines behind; thou must provide for their soules, that they may know God, and feare his name. Thou must with Abraham, (Gen. 18. 19.) teach thy family, that they may walke in the wayes of God: B I know Abraham, saith God, that he will doe it. And surely God will know all such as doe so. By doing thus, men shall make their houses Churches of God, as here Noahs was: and it would be farre better with our Church and State, if men did so: Ministers in the Church, and Iustices in the Country should have much lesse to doe, if Masters of families would doe their duties.

But to goe further; let us see more particularly what this household was, that was thus saved by the Arke.

First, it was a family of foure men and foure women: not men or women alone; but both, and consisting of as many women as men. Thus God would have one sex to love another, and one C to thinke themselves beholden to the other: the beginning of the first would was by one man and one woman: of the second, by foure men and foure women; but alwaies equall. And here also God would teach men not to contemne the other, though the weaker sex: for God saved as many of them from the universall flood, as he did men.

Secondly, how many were they in all? but eight persons. Of the whole world no more were saved. A miserable spectacle. See what sinne can doe. It can bring many millions to eight persons in a short time. See what it is to offend God. Let us not then glorie in our multitudes, but glorie in this, that we know and serve God: D for otherwise, if our sinnes cry out to him against us, he can easily make us few enough.

Thirdly, what were these eight persons? not one servant amongst them all; there were none but Noah and his wife, his three sonnes and their wives. It it marvellous, that here were none of Noahs servants. Som think he had none, and that the simplicitie of those dayes required no attendance, but that each one was servant to himselfe. And they seeme to gather it out of Gen. 7. 1. where God biddeth Noah, Enter thou and all thine house into the Arke: And when they entred, they are recounted in the seventh verse, to be none but himselfe, his wife, and his children: therefore say they, in Noahs house, there were no servats. But why might not Noah have servants, as well as Abraham and Lot had?

had? doubtlesse he had. But behold a wonderfull matter: Noahs owne servants would not beleeve his preaching, but chose rather to live loosely with the world, and perish with it, than to live godly with their Master, and be saved with him. This was and will be true in all ages, that in a wicked age, or in a wicked towne, a Master shall not be able to governe his owne servants: but the streame of common wickednesse, and ill examples of other men doth draw them from the obedience of their Masters. They can readily alleage for themselves, wee will not be used more hardly than other men are; we will not bee tied to our houres, and bound to so many exercises, wee will doe as others doe. Thus would Noahs servants doe, and perished with the world. So hard a thing is it for a good man to have good servants in such times or places where wickednesse reigneth.

And thus we have seene in some sort, How the Arke saved Noah, and his household, and what this household of his was.

Now besides this end and use of the Arke, we are further to know; that whereas this saving of them was but a corporall deliverance from a temporall death, this Arke hath also a spirituall use, which we may not omit: for as many of Noahs family as were true beleevers, it was a meanes to save them another way, even to save their soules: for it taught them many things.

First, it was an assurance of Gods love unto their soules: for if he were so carefull to save their bodies from the flood, they thereby assured themselves, he would be as good unto their soules, which they knew to be farre more precious and excellent.

Secondly, it shewed them how to be saved. For as they saw no safetie, nothing but present death out of the Arke: So it taught them, that out of Gods Church, and out of Gods favour, no salvation could be expected; and so it taught them to labour to be in Gods favour, and members of his true Church.

Thirdly, they saw they were saved from the flood, by faith and obedience. For first Noah believed Gods word, that the flood should come; then he obeyed Gods commandement, and made the Arke as he was commanded. And thus he and his, by beleeving and obeying, were saved through the Arke: and without these, the Arke could not have saved them. This taught them more particularly how to be saved; namely, by beleeving God, and obeying God, and else no salvation. For when they saw their bodies could not be saved without them; it assured them much lesse could their soules be saved without faith and obedience.

Lastly, this deliverance by the Arke was a pawn unto them from God, assuring them of salvation, if they beleeved in the Messias. For, seeing God so fully performed his promise unto them for their bodily deliverance upon their beleeving: they thereby might assure themselves, he would performe his promise of salvation unto A them, upon their faith and true obedience. Moreover it strengthened their faith. For, when ever after any promise of God was made unto them, or any Word of God came unto them, they then remembred Gods mercie and faithfulnesse unto them in their deliverance by the Arke: and therefore beleeved.

Unto these and many other spirituall uses, did the Arke serve unto Noah, and to his household, as many of them as were beleevers.

But what is this to us? Indeed, the Arke served them for a temporall deliverance, it saved their lives; therefore they also had reason to make spirituall use of it: But it saved not us, it served us to no use corporall; therefore how can we make any spirituall use of it?

I answer: though we had no corporall use of the Arke, yet there ariseth an excellent spirituall B use out of the consideration of it.

The Arke of Noah and our baptisme, are figures correspondent one to the other: that, that Noahs Arke was to them, Baptisme is to us. Thus teacheth S. Peter 1.3.20,21. To the Arke of Noah, the figure which now saveth us, even Baptisme agreeth. The same that S. Paul here ascribeth to the Arke, S. Peter ascribeth to Baptisme. The Arke saved them, Baptisme saveth us. Now the resemblance betwixt these two figures, hath two branches:

First, as it was necessary for them that should be saved in the flood, to be in the Arke; and out of the Arke no possibilitie to escape: So is it for them that will have their soules saved, to be C in Christ, and of his Church; they must be mysticall members of Christ, and visible members of his Church; and out of Christ and his Church, no possibilitie of salvation. That this is true for Christ) Saint Peter proveth apparantly, Acts 4.12. Among men there is no name given under heaven, whereby to be saved, but the name of Iesus Christ; neither is there salvation in any other.

And that this is true, for the Church, hee also proveth, Act. 2.47. The Lord added to the Church daily such as should be saved. See how such as are to be saved must joine themselves to the Church, when they see where it is: and all this is signified and taught in Baptisme. For the D outward use of Baptisme makes us members of the visible Church, and the inward and powerful use of Baptisme makes us members of Christ himselfe.

The use and consideration hereof, should make us all more carefull to be true members of Christ, and of his Church, by making not only a bare profession of religion; but by seeking to be incorporate into Christ by faith and true repentance: for this must save us when nothing can. As they that were out of the Arke, no gold nor silver could buy out their safety, no lands nor living, no houses nor buildings, no hils nor mountaines, nothing in the world, nor the whole world it selfe could save them; but being out of the Arke, they all perished;

shed: So if a man be out of Christ, and out of his Church, no gold nor silver, no honour nor glorie, no wit nor policie, no estimation nor authoritie, no friends nor favour, no wisdome nor learning, no hils of happinesse, nor mountaines of gold can save his soule; but he must perish in the flood of Gods eternall wrath. For as it proved folly to them that trusted to their high houses, or catcht hold on the hils, if they were out of the Arke: so will it prove much greater folly to them that shall trust to any meanes of salvation, if they be out of Christ. And contrariwise, as they that were in the Arke were sure to be saved, do the waters, winds, and weathers, stormes and tempests all they could; and so that still, the more the waters rose, the Arke rose also, & was ever higher than they; and the higher it was carried by the violence of the waters, the safer it was from the danger of hils and rockes: and so in the middest of danger they were out of danger; and were saved in the midst of the water: So he that is once truly in Christ, is sure of salvation, nothing can hinder it; floods of calamities may assault him and humble him, but they hurt not his salvation: he is in the Arke, he is in Christ: nay, the gates of hell shall not overthrow him: but thorow all the waves of the devils malice, and thorow all tempests of temptations, the blessed Arke of Christs love and merits shall carrie him up, and at last shall convey him to salvation; this is the blessed assurance of all them that are truly baptized into Christ. But as for such as out of their prophanenesse, either care not to be in Christ, or contemne Baptisme: let them assure themselves, they be out of the Arke, and they perish certainely. This is the first part of the resemblance.

The second is this: Noah's bodie going into the Arke, he seemed therein a dead man, going into a grave or tombe to be buried: for he was buried in the Arke, and the Arke in the waters, and he deprived of the fresh aire and gladsome light; yet by Gods appointment, it was the meanes to save Noah, which in all reason, seemed to be his grave; and if Noah will be saved he must goe into this grave. So they that will escape hell and damnation by Christ, the true Arke of holinesse, must be buried and mortified in their flesh and fleshly lusts; and there is no way to come to life everlasting but this. For thy soule cannot live, whilest thy sins, the old man, that is, thy corruptions doe live; but they must die, and be buried, and then thy soule liveth: and whilest they live, thy soule is dead, and far from the life of grace, which is in Christ Jesus. All this is affirmed at large, in Rom. 6. 3, 4. where we may see apparantly, that we must by baptisme die with Christ, and be buried with him, else we cannot be saved by him: our corruptions, our sins, which are the old man must die and be buried; that the new man, that is, the grace and holinesse of Christ, may live in us and our soules by it: and he that thus dieth not, never lives; and he that thus is not buried, never riseth to true life. Thus mortification of sinne is the way to heaven, and death the way to life eternall: and he that is not thus mortified in his corruptions, let him never looke to be quickened to grace or glorie.

If this be so, we may then see what a miserable world we now live in, wherin mortification of sinne is a thing unknowne: not a man of many that can tell what it is: nay grace is dead, and holines is mortified, and I feare buried also: but the old man reignes, corruption lives, and sinne flourisheth. Mortifying of Christ by our sinnes is common: but mortifying of sinne is seldome seene. For Christ is betraied, crucified, and killed in a sort by the sinnes of men. What a fearefull change is this? Christ should live in us, and wee endevour to crucifie him againe: sinne should be crucified, but it liveth in us. But if we will have Christ to save us, then must we mortifie the body of our sin: For he that will live when he is dead, must die whilst he is alive. And he that will be saved by his baptisme, must looke that baptisme work this effect in him, To make him die, and be buried with Christ, that afterwards he may rise and reigne with Christ. And then shall Baptisme save us, as the Arke saved faithfull Noah, and his household. And thus much for the first end and use of the Arke: the second followeth.

By the which he condemned the world.] Here is the second end, why Noah prepared the Arke; To the condemnation of the world that then was. For, by it (not by his faith, as some would reade it) hee condemned that wicked generation, both to a temporall destruction of their bodies, and to an eternall judgement in hell.

In the words, there are two points to be considered. 1. Who are condemned? The world. 2. Whereby? By Noahs Arke.

For the first, it may be asked, what is meant by the world? S. Peter answereth (2 Epist. 2. 5.) The world of the ungodly: that is, that generation of sinfull men, who lived in the dayes of Noah, whom also in the 1 Epist. 3. 20. he calleth disobedient: and their more particular sins are disclosed and recorded by Moses. Gen. 6. 4, 5. to be monstrous abuse of holy marriage, unnaturall lusts, cruelties, and oppressions: an utter neglect of Gods service, and Sabbaths: and an extreme prophanenesse, and dissolutenesse in everie kinde. And this corruption was not private or personall: but universall, through all estates, sexes and ages. This world of the ungodly, this whole race of wicked and disobedient men were condemned: but how was that world condemned by Noah? Thus: God vouchsafed them 120. yeares to repent in & appointed Noah to preach unto them, during that time, to call them to repentance. But they believed not God, nor Noah, but continued in their disobedience, and grew in their ungodlines: therefore when that time was expired, God performed his Word spoken by Noah, brought the flood upon them, destroyed them all, and condemned in hell as many of them as died in impenitencie and unbeleefe. And thus that wicked world was condemned, according as Noah in his Ministerie had foretold them.

Here we may learne;

First, what the world of this age is to looke for, unlesse there be repentance. For, to speake out of our selves in this Nation; Have not wee had the Gospel 30. yeares and more? and with peace, and much prosperitie? Have not we had a goodly time given us to repent? What is our duetie, but with reverence to see and acknowledge this goodnesse of God, to take hold of this mercifull opportunitie, this time of grace, and this day of salvation? If we doe not, and make no account of the Gospell, what can we looke for, but to be condemned, as that world was? Looke at the meanes and opportunities, which these daies afford; and they be as golden dayes, as ever were since Christ, or as ever can be expected, till his comming againe. But looke at the profanenesse and carnality, and securitie of this age (even over all Christendome) and this is the Iron age, these be the evill dayes; and so evill that nothing can be expected, but a river of brimstone, and a flood of fire to purge it.

The dayes of the comming of the Son of Man (which I take to be these dayes) shall be like (saith Christ, Matth. 24. 37.) unto the dayes of Noah. And surely, in security and prophanenesse, they are like; and therefore in all reason they must be like in punishment. We must therefore take warning by them, and shake off this securitie which possesseth all mens hearts, and wait for the Lord in watching and prayer, and thinke every day may be the last day of this world; at least the last day of our lives: and let us prepare for it, and live in the expectation of it. Otherwise if our sinfulnesse grow on a little further; nothing can we looke for, but to be condemned in an universall judgement, as that world was. Let us therefore betake our selves to a more serious serving of God: that the Lord when he commeth, may finde us so doing.

Secondly, in that the whole world that then was, was thus destroyed and condemned, and (as we heard afore) only Noah and his household saved; we learne, that it is not good, nor safe to follow the multitude. Noah was here a man alone, he held and beleeved against all the world, and yet his judgement and his beleefe was true, and all the worlds false: and (accordingly) he saved when they were all condemned.

It is marvell therefore the Church of Rome should so much stand upon numbers and multitudes, for the grasing of their religion: For it ever was, and ever will be a weake argument. If multitudes might ever have beene alleaged; then unto Noah especially, to whom it might have beene said, Who art thou that pretendest to be wiser than all men? and to know more than all the world? Thou that hast a faith by thy selfe, and hast no man to feare thee company; thinke not that all Adams posterity, all the children of holy Henoch, and Methusalem are all deceived, but thy selfe alone? Would not these and such like objections have discouraged any man? Yet behold the force of faith, Noah had Gods Word for it, and therefore beleeveth against all the world, and is commended to all ages for this faith. It is therefore but a vain flourish of the Papists, to presse us to much with their multitudes, and universalitie, and consent, and antiquitie, and succession, and continuance. For all this is worth nothing, as long as they first prove not, that that doctrine or opinion which these multitudes hold, hath his ground from Gods Word: till then, all the other is vanity. For it is better with Noah, to have Gods plaine Word of his side, than to beleeve otherwise with all the world; which was here deceived and condemned, when Noah alone beleeved Gods Word, and was saved.

And thus we see who were condemned; the world. To end this point, one question may not unprofitably be here moved:

Whether was all the world, that is, all the men in that world condemned or no? The words seeme to imply that all but Noah were: and yet it may seeme strange, that of so many millions none should repent but he and if they repented, why were they not saved? I answer: The world of that wicked age was condemned two wayes:

First, with a corporall destruction, and so they were all condemned without exception. No high houses, no hils, no devices of man could save them. For the waters rose 15. cubits above the tops of the highest mountaines under heaven, Gen. 7. 20. And so though till then, divers of them lived by flying to the hils: yet that being their last refuge, and being thus taken from them, then all flesh perished that moved upon the earth, and every man and every thing that drew the breath of life. For so saith the Storie, Gen. 7. 21, 22. And it is but vaine to imagine, that any of them could bee saved upon the Arke: for first, it was so made with a ridge in the top (as is most probably thought) that no man could stand upon it, much lesse make any stay, in that violent tossing by tempests. Again, if they could, yet could they not have lived to long for want of food; the waters being (almost) a yeare upon the earth. And thus it is most certaine, they all without exception were destroyed with bodily destruction.

But secondly, they were condemned to an eternall destruction in hell; and therefore S. Peter, 1. 3. 18. saith, They spirits are now in prison, who were disobedient in the dayes of Noah. Now all the question is, whether were they all condemned or no? I answer: For ought that we certainely know out of the Scripture, they were all condemned. Yet in the judgement of charitie, we are not so to thinke: and the rather, because there are many probable conjectures, that some of them repented. For howsoever many many of them beleeved not Noah, judging that he spake of his owne head: yet it is more than likely, that when they saw it begin to raine extraordinarily; at least, when they saw themselves driven to the tops of the hils, and there looked hourely for death; that then divers of the posteritie of Henoch and Methusalem, and Lamech, were ashamed of their former unbeleefe, and then turned to God in faith and in repentance. And doubtlesse this is the only or the principall cause, why God brought the flood in fortie dayes, which he could have done in foure houres; that so men might have time to repent, Gen. 7.

But it will be said, if any repented, why then were they not saved? I answer; because they repented not in time, when they were called by Noahs preaching. Repentance is never too late, to save the soule from hell: but it may be too late to save the bodie from a temporall judgement. And this, I take it, is that that we may safely hold: for it seemes too hard to condemne all the posterity of Methusalem, Henoch, Lamech, and other holy patriarches (who as the Text saith, begat sons and daughters) and to thinke that none of them repented, when they saw the flood come indeed, as Noah had said. It cannot bee, but they heard their Fathers preach: and why might not that preaching worke upon their hearts, when the judgement came, though afore it did not? But why then did not God record in the Scripture, neither their repentance, nor salvation, but hath left it so doubtfull.

I answer: for the very same, for which hee would not record Adams nor Salomons: all for this cause, that he might teach all men to the worlds end, what a fearefull thing it is to disobey his commandement as Adam did: or to defer repentance when they are called by Gods word, as these men did. Therefore to feare us from the like, though afterwards they repented; it pleased God not to record it, but to leave it doubtfull.

This question being thus discussed, yeelds us two strong motives to repentance:

First, for if we repent not betimes, our state then is fearefull and doubtfull, though not desperate; as we see here the salvation even of Methusalems children is doubtfull: for they repented not when they were called, but deferred it, till the judgement came. So if we defer our repentance till our deaths, there is great question of our salvation: but let us repent, when we are called by Gods word, and then it is out of question, then there is no doubt of our salvation.

Secondly, if we repent betime, wee shall escape the temporall Judgement which God sends upon the world for sinne. If not, but deferre repentance till the Judgement come, wee may then by it save our soules, but our bodies shall perish in the universall Judgement. If the children of Henoch and Methusalem, which were neere a kinne unto Noah, had repented at Noahs preaching, they had beene saved with Noah: they did not. But when the flood came indeed, then doubtlesse they beleeved with Noah; and wished themselves in the arke with him: but it was too late, they saved their soules, but were drowned with the rest. So assuredly, when God threateneth any Judgement on our church or Nation, they that beleeve and repent betime, shall escape it. But they that will live in wantonnesse with the world, and not repent till God begin to strike: if then they doe when the flood is come (though salvation cannot bee denied to repentance whensoever) yet let them assure themselves, they shal beare their part with the world in the punishment, as they did partake with them in their sinnes. Let then these two considerations move us all to turne to God by timely repentance: then shall we be sure to escape both the eternall and temporall judgment, and not bee condemned, as here this world of the ungodly was. And thus wee see who were condemned;

The world.]

The second point is, wherby were they condemned? The Text saith only, by which he condemned, &c. Whereupon some would understand faith, and reade it thus; by which faith he condemned the world. Which though it be true (for the faith of holy men condemnes the unbeleeving and misbeleeving world,) yet is it not proper in this place, where the Arke is described by the uses of it: which are two, whereof this is one: And (besides the Greeke construction doth well beare it) the Judgement of almost all interpreters referres it to the Arke. And further in all reason; that that saved him and his household, condemned the world also: but the Arke is said to have saved them; therefore by is he condemned the world. Neither is this any derogation, but a commendation of faith: for by faith he made that Arke, which Arke condemned the world. Now by the Arke, Noah condemned the world two wayes;

1. By his obedience in building it.
2. By his preaching in building it.

For the first, God bad Noah build an Arke, so great, and to such an use, as in all reason no man would have done it. Yet Noah by the power of his faith beleeved Gods word, and obeyed, and therefore builded the Arke. This faith and obedience of Noah to this Commandement of God, condemned the unbeleeving and disobedient world, and made them without excuse. So saith Christ; The Ninevites, who beleeved at the preaching of Jonas, shall rise in judgement against the Jewes, and condemne them, because they repented not at Christs preaching. And the Queene of Sheba, who came so farre to heare Salomon, shall condemne them, who then would not heare Christ, Matth. 12. 42, 43.

Even so, Noahs obedience shall condemne the. For Noah being told of a miraculous thing, and beleeving it, and being commanded to unreasonable a thing, as the making of the Arke, and obeying, shall condemn that wicked world, who would not beleeve Gods ordinary promises; nor obey his ordinary and most holy commandements. And as the Saints are said to condemne the world, 1 Cor. 6. 2. by being witnesses against them, and approvers of Gods just sentence: so Noahs faith and faith condemned that world. And thus we see it is apparant, that the obedience, and godly examples of good men do condemne the world.

The use whereof, is to encourage us all to embrace Christian religion, and not be dawned by the fooles, or other evil behaviours of prophane men, which cannot abide the Gospel. For hee that walketh in the way of holinesse, and keepeth good conscience in the midst of a wicked generation, if his godlinesse do not overcome their evill, and convert them, it shall more condemnate their wickednesse, and condemn them. Our Church is full of mockers, and they discourage many from Christ and religion: but let them know, this will be the end of it, their obedience whom they contemne and laugh at, will be their condemnation. And thus Noah by his obedience in building the Arke, condemned the world.

Secondly, so did he also by his preaching, as he builded it. For the building of the Arke, was a part of his prophetical ministery.

The Prophets preached two waies; in word, and in action. For beside their verball preaching, and delivering of Gods word, they preached in their lives and actions; especially in such actions as were extraordinary. And such was Noahs building of the Arke: it was an actuall preaching: yea, every stroke upon the Arke, was a loud Sermon to the eyes and eares of that wicked world. For by making it, he signified some should bee saved, and the rest drowned: namely, all that would beleeve and repent, should bee saved in it: and all that would not, should (out of it) be drowned: and because they beleeved not this, therefore by it he condemned them. From this ground we may learne;

First, that a man may bee a true and sincere Minister, lawfully called by God & his church, and yet not turne many unto God, for by his Ministery bring many to repentance. For here Noah, a Prophet called immediately, yet in 120. yeares preaching both in word and action, he cannot turne one to faith and repentance. A most fearefull thing, if we well consider it, that both by preaching and making the Arke, hee should not turne one of the sonnes of Lamech, Methuselah, or Henoch, to beleeve him: but that they should all rather choose to be misled in the generall vanity of that wicked world, than to serve God with Noah. This was a most discomfortable thing unto him as could be, yet this hath been the case and lot of many holy Prophets. Esay must goe and preach unto them, and yet his doctrine must harden their hearts, and bring vtter ruine. Esay 6. 10. And Ezechiel must goe and speake, and yet it is told afore hand, they will not hearke him nor repent. Ezek. 3. 4-7. And when Saint Paul himselfe preached unto the Jewes at Rome some beleeved not, Act. 28. 24. There is nothing will more discourage a man, and cast downe his heart, than to see that his labours are not onely in vaine, but doe take a contrary effect; that whereas they were bestowed to have saved them, they are meanes of their deeper condemnation. Therefore as when their labours bring men to God, they may greatly rejoyce, and account those people, as Saint Paul did the Thessalonians, his crowne, his joy, his glory: So when they doe no good (as Noah here) but that men are worse and worse; this must humble and abase them in themselves, and let them know that power and vertue is not in them, but God. So Ia. 5. Paul to the ungodly and impenitent among the Corinthians; I feare, saith he, when I come, my God abase me amongst you, and I shall mourne many of them which have sinned and not repented. And surely, this or nothing will abase a Minister, and minister matter of great humiliation yea not so, but as still there is matter of true comfort and contentment, unto all godly and faithfull Teachers. For whether they labour bee the savour of life unto life, or of death unto death, unto thy hearers; it is to God a sweet savour in Christ.

Againe, wee may here learne, that these who are condemned before God, have their condemnation by the preaching of the word: The secrets of all the world, saith the Apostle, shall be judged by Iesus Christ, according to the Gospell, and here the preaching of Noah, and his actuall preaching by preparing the Arke condemneth the world. Such is the power and might of the Ministerie of GODS Word, upon all that resist it.

Which being so, should teach all men when they come to heare Gods Word, to submit themselves to the power of it, to obey it, & become penitent: for otherwise so many Sermons as a man heareth, so many indictments are presented to God against him. And if at the last day there were no devils to accuse, their bils of indictements would both accuse and condemn him. And this Judgement is begun in this life, as their consciences doe often tell them, and is accomplished at the last day: for there is no dallying with Gods word: it is not a toy, it kils, it is the fire, which if it cannot soften, it hardens. Let then all impenitent men, make conscience to obey Gods word: for if now they abuse it it will be even with them, both here and in another world. For as the very same Arke, which saved Noah and his household, condemned the world: so the same word of God, which beleeved and obeyed by godly men, is their salvation; disobeyed, and resisted by ungodly men, shall be their condemnation.

And thus much for the two ends, why Noah prepared the Arke, and cost so much labour, that second effect of Noahs faith. It followeth,

And was made heire of the righteousnesse which is by faith.

Here is the third and last effect, whereby the excellency of Noahs faith is commended. It made him an heire, and that not of the world: (for so he was besids) but of that that the world could not yeeld; of righteousnesse, and that of the best of all, even of that righteousnesse, which is by faith. These words have relation to that testimony, which God gave of Noah in Genesis, 6. 9. Noah was a just and upright man, and walked with God. Now that which is spoken there more generally, is here particularly opened and unfolded; he was just or righteous: how? he was righteous by the righteousnesse of faith: so that these words are a Commentary unto the other.

But because that that is here affirmed of Noah, is a most glorious thing: his faith made him an heire, (that is, made him that was heire of all the earth, a better heire) therefore these words are to be well weighed. For their full opening, three points are to be considered:

1. What is the righteousnesse here spoken of.
2. Why it is called the righteousnesse of faith, or by faith.
3. How Noah was made heire of it by his faith.

For the first: That righteousnesse by which Noah and all holy men, are to stand righteous before God, is not a righteousnesse of any nature, but such a one as is appointed of God for that purpose. That wee may know it the more distinctly, wee must examine the severall kindes thereof.

Righteousnesse is of two sorts: Created, Uncreated.

Uncreated is that which is in God, and hath no beginning nor ending: no means, nor measure. Of this speaketh the Prophet, Psalm. 119. 137. Righteous are thou, O Lord. This cannot make any man righteous; for two reasons:

First, for the Godhead and it are all one: It is in God essentially. A man is one thing, and his righteousnesse is another: but God and his righteousnesse are all one: and therefore it is as impossible for any man to have this righteousnesse, as it is to be God.

Secondly, it is infinite, and mans soule a finite creature, and therfore not capable of any thing that is infinite; and consequently, not of the unmeasurable righteousnesse which is in the Godhead. Therefore this wee must leave unto God, as proper to the Deity.

Created righteousnesse is that which God frameth in the reasonable Creature, Men and Angels. Of Angels we are not to speake, though theirs and mans differed not much in nature at their creations.

Created righteousnesse of man is of two sorts, Legall, or Evangelicall.

Legall righteousnesse is that which the morall Law prescribeth.

Evangelicall, that which the Gospel hath revealed.

Of Legall righteousnesse I finde there are three sorts spoken of;

1. One that is a perfect
2. One that is a civil } righteousnesse.
3. One that is an inward

Perfect righteousnesse Legall is the perfect fulfilling of the Law in a mans owne selfe. And by this shall no man living bee justified before God: for no man, since the fall of Adam, is able perfectly to fulfill the Law. If any can, then shall hee be righteous by it but none did, nor ever can; therefore no man shall stand righteous by perfect Legall righteousnesse in himselfe. Some will object: But a regenerate man may: for he is restored by grace; therefore though by Adams fall a man is disabled, yet by regeneration he is inabled to fulfill the Law perfectly.

I answer: It were so, if they were perfectly sanctified in their regeneration: but they are sanctified but in part, and it is not perfect untill death. Object. 1 Thess. 5. 23. Wee are sanctified throughout, spirit, soule, and body. If all those, what then remaines unsanctified? therefore our sanctification is perfect. I answer: It is perfect in parts, but not in measure nor degree. As a child is a perfect man in all the parts of a man, but not in the quantity of any part: So a childe of God is perfectly sanctified in all parts, but not in the measure of any part, untill flesh, and mortality, and corruption have an end.

Secondly, some may object: The virgin Mary sinned not. I answer: so teacheth the Church of Rome, that she never sinned, that her life was free from sin actuall, and her conception from sinne originall. But so taught neither the Scripture, nor Gods Church: but contrariwise, it is more than manifest, shee was a sinner. For first, she confesseth her soule rejoiced in God her Saviour: but if shee were no sinner, shee stood in need of no Saviour. Againe, shee died: but if shee had not sinned, shee should in justice not have died. For death entred by sinne: and where no sinne is, there death is not due. Thus no man can bee righteous by the perfect righteousnesse of the Law, in himselfe.

Secondly, there is a civil righteousnesse, and that is, when a man in his outward actions is conformable to the Law, especially to the commandements of the second Table: For example; he is free from the outward actions of murther, adultery, or theevery, and such like: or he can refrain his anger, and overcome his passions that they shall not breake out to open violence: to the view of the world: and for the first table, he comes to the Church, and professeth religion. All this is a civil righteousnesse, and by this can no man be justified, nor made righteous. For first, it is not a perfit, but a most imperfit righteousnesse, and therefore cannot justifie. It is so imperfect, that it is as good as none at all in Gods sight: for it is but an outward, and constrained, and dissembled obedience, and wants the inward and true obedience of the heart and soule.

Secondly, it cannot make a man righteous: for wicked men have it which are unrighteous, and cannot be saved. Haman hated Mordecay in his heart: yea, his heart boyled in malice against him: yet the story saith; That nevertheless he refrained himself till he came home; Hest. 5. 10. And therefore Christ saith, that except our righteousnesse exceed the righteousnesse of the Scribes and Pharisees, wee cannot enter into the kingdome of heaven, Mat. 5. 20. Now what was theirs but an outward civil righteousnesse, whereby they kept the Law, onely in outward actions? as appeareth, in that Christ afterward in the same chapter, expounding the Law, doth reduce it to the inward, which is to his full and proper sense: So then, yet wee have not found that Righteousnesse, which may make a man righteous.

Thirdly, there is a righteousnesse, called the inward righteousnesse, of a Christian man, which is this: A man having repented, and his sinnes being forgiven, hee is by the holy Ghost sanctified inwardly, in his soule, and all the parts and powers of it. This sanctification is called inward righteousnesse. Now the Church of Rome saith, A man may be justified by this. But it is not so, as appeares by these reasons; First, this righteousnesse is in this life imperfect; and that is proved by the Apostle, where hee saith We doe here know but in part; 1 Corinth. 13. 12. Therefore our understanding is but in part regenerate: and as it, so consequently all other parts or powers of our soule, are but in part regenerate: and in them all, we are partly spirit, and partly flesh, Galat. 5. 17. Therefore if our sanctification be imperfect, it cannot justifie us. Againe, this righteousnesse is mingled with sinne and unrighteousnesse: and from this mixture, comes the combat betwixt the flesh and the Spirit (spoken of, Gal. 5. 17.) For these two are contrary one to the other.

If it bee mingled with sinne, then it cannot make us righteous: no, nor the workes of grace that come from it, though God in mercy reward them. And though as S. Iames saith, They justification of faith, & makes us just before men. Jam. 2. 21. yet can they not justifie us before Gods justice; nor at the barre of the last Judgement will they passe for paiment. Saint Paul saith, 1 Corinth. 4. 4. I know nothing by my selfe, yet am I not thereby justified; that is, I have so walked in my calling, since I was an Apostle and Minister of the Gospell, as I am not privy nor guilty to my selfe of any negligence therein. If he dare not stand to that, to be justified by it, who dare take hold, when he refuseth? Againe, no man can doe any perfect good workes, unlesse he be perfectly just: For how can perfection come out of imperfection? But no man can be perfitly just in this sinfull body: as is proved in the first reason; therefore his workes here in this life cannot be such, as may make him righteous.

But it may be objected: Though our works have some defects in them, yet Gods mercy accepts them for righteous and just; and therefore they may justifie us. I answer: As Gods mercy accepts them, so must his Justice be satisfied also; but they being imperfect, cannot satisfie his Justice: for Gods infinite Just ce requires perfect satisfaction. But as for our best workes, as they are done by us, weigh them in the ballance of Gods justice, and they are so light, as they deserve damnation: yet in Gods mercy in Christ, their defects are covered, and they are reputed good workes, and are rewarded: but wee incroach upon Gods mercy, and abuse his Justice, if therefore we imagine they should deserve Gods mercy, or be able to justifie us in his sight. Thus then seeing Legall righteousnesse faileth us, let us come to Evangelicall.

Evangelicall righteousnesse is that that is revealed in the Gospel, and should never have been revealed, if that of the Law could have saved us. But when it (not by defect in it, but default in ourselves) could not, then God in mercy afordeth us another in the Gospell.

Evangelicall righteousnesse is that, that is in Christ Jesus; his it is, that must make a man righteous before God: But this Christ was an extraordinary person, consisting of two natures, God-head and Man-hood. And accordingly, hee hath a double Righteousnesse in his holy person:

First, as he is God, hee hath in his nature the righteousnesse of God, and that is uncreated, and infinite; and therefore incommunicable: and so none is, nor can be righteous by it.

Secondly, there is in Christ a righteousnesse of his humanity: and this, though it bee finite and created, yet is it beyond measure in comparison of the righteousnesse of man or Angel: So saith S. Joh. 3. 34. God giveth not him the Spirit by measure.

This righteousnesse of Christ, as man or Mediator, consisteth in two things:

1. In the purity of his nature.
2. In the perfection of his obedience.

The first branch of our Mediators righteousnesse, is the holinesse of his humanity; which was perfectly sanctified in his conception, by the powerfull operation of the God-head: and this was done at the first instant of his conception in the virgins wombe. From this purity of nature proceeded his obedience, which was as perfect, as his nature was pure: and so pure a nature made a plaine way to perfect obedience. And therefore as his conception was free from sinne originall, so was his whole life from the least sinne actuall.

Now the mediators obedience was double; Active, and Passive.

And both these hee performed in his owne person.

His Passive obedience was his passion, or suffering.

Noahs faith.

fering of whatsoever the Justice of God had inflicted on man for sinne, whether for soule or body.

The active obedience of the Mediators person, was his perfect fulfilling of the morall law, in all duties to God or man, in thought, word, or deed; and all this for us in our stead and on our behalfe. And here is true righteousnesse, for where the nature of any person is perfectly pure, and the obedience perfect, the righteousnesse of that person is perfect. And I say all this was done by him for us: hee suffered all that wee should have suffered, and suffered not: hee did that which we should have done, and did not. And this is that Righteousnesse, by which a sinner is made righteous before God. For seeing by all cannot, it is this that must. And now wee have found that righteousnesse, by which Noah and all holy men were made and counted righteous; namely, that that is resident in the holy person of Iesus Christ the Mediator.

And yet this is above and beyond all reason, that one should be justified by anothers righteousnesse: and the doctrine, though it be of God, and grounded never so strongly on Gods word, yet hath it enemies, and is mightily oppugned by the Church of Rome. Therefore let us first prove it: and then answer the objections to the contrary. We prove it thus;

First, from plaine Scripture, 2 Corinth. 5. 24. Hee that knew no sinne, was made sinne for us; that wee might bee made the righteousnesse of God in him. What can be said plainer? he was made sin for us, and wee righteousnesse by him. Therefore as Christ was no sinner in his owne person, but our sinnes were laid upon him, and so he was made a sinner by our sinnes; so though wee bee not righteous in our owne persons, yet having Christs righteousnesse imputed to us, wee are made righteous by his righteousnesse.

Againe, the righteousnesse that must save us must be the righteousnesse of man and God: as in the forenamed places is said, that we might bee made the righteousnesse of God in Christ. But no mans owne righteousnesse can make him the righteousnesse of God, nor can Gods righteousnesse be the righteousnesse of man: therefore it remaineth, that onely Christ, being both God and man, hath in him that righteousnesse, which may make a man the righteousnesse of God.

Thirdly, the Scripture saith, Christ is the end of the Law to all that beleeve, Rom. 10. 3. The end of the Law: that is, not the taker away, or abrogater of the Law, but the fulfiller of it: as the abrogater of the Ceremoniall, so the fulfiller of the morall law. If he fulfilled the Law, for whom was it? not for himselfe. For as the Messias was not slain for himselfe, Dan. 9. 26. So hee obeyed not the Law for himselfe. For whom then? For all that beleeve. Therefore Christ doing it for them, they fulfill the Law in Christ: and so Christ by doing, and they by beleeving in him that doth it, do fulfil the Law. Now if it be not amisse to say, We do in Christ fulfill the Law: no more it is to say, we are made righteous by Christs righteousnesse: though it be his, and not ours, but only by faith.

Let us then see (in the second place) what the Church of Rome object against it. They first object thus:

As a man cannot bee wise by another mans wisdome, nor rich by another mans riches, nor strong by another mans strength: so can he not bee righteous by another mans righteousnesse.

I answer: The comparison is not alike. For one man hath no propriety in another mans wisdome, strength, or riches: but wee have a right and propriety in Christs righteousnesse. Againe, the wisdome of one man cannot bee the wisdome of another; because they are two persons, fully and equally distinct: but it is not so betwixt Christ and a sinner: for every beleever is spiritually, and yet truly and really conjoined to Christ, and they make one mysticall body; Christ being the head, and every true beleever being a member of that body: and therefore, that which is his righteousnesse may be also truly ours. His, because it is in him; and ours, because we are knit to him. For by reason of this mysticall union betwixt him and us, all blessings of salvation in him, as in the head, are diffused into us, as his members or branches; and yet are as properly stil in him, as is the beame in the head of a man. And thus, though in tenet and reason this cannot bee, yet by faith and Gods spirit, the righteousnesse of Christ is made ours.

Secondly, they object. If this be so, then God justifieth wicked men; but God will not doe so: it is against the nature of his holinesse and Justice. And againe, he that justifieth the wicked, is abhominable to God, Prov. 17. 15. therefore God will not doe so himselfe.

Wee answer: The ground is good, but the collection is untrue. God will not justifie a wicked man, that is true: but that therefore a man cannot be justified by Christs righteousnesse is false. For God doth not justifie him that lieth resting in his former sinnes, and weltring in his old corruptions; but him that beleeveth in Christ, and repenteth of his sinnes. And that man in his faith is justified, and in his repentance sanctified, and so hee is made a new man: yea, as S. Paul saith, he that is in Christ, is a new creature: 2 Corinth. 5. 17. For as it is in the first conversion, God turneth not favorably no man to justifie his will; but first makes him willing by his owne worke alone, and then converteth and loveth him with his owne free will, working together with Gods grace: So is it in the Worke of Justification: God justifieth no wicked man, but makes him first just and righteous in and by Christ, and then accounts him so. But then (will some say) the sinner hath no righteousnesse but that of Christs; and that is in heaven, and not not in himselfe: therefore hee hath none in his owne person: how then can hee be any thing, but a wicked man still? I answer: that is not true, that is first affirmed. The beleeving sinner hath more righteousnesse than that that is in Christ. That which justifieth him, is in Christs person; but the sinner, when he is justified, is also sanctified, by the mighty worke of Gods grace: and so he is made a holy man, and doth good and holy workes, because he is in Christ, though his sanctification be imperfect. To this end, Faith S. Peter. Acts 15. 9. Faith purifieth a mans heart: for it is impossible a man should beleeve, and so be justified, but hee must also be sanctified in his heart and life. Thus a sinner is justified by Christs righteousnesse, inherent in Christ himselfe: and sanctified by Christs righteousnesse, diffused from Christ into the sinner. And therefore his Justification is perfect: because that that justifieth him, is still in Christ: but his sanctification imperfect, because that that sanctifieth us, is in our selves: the one imputed to us, the other infused and inherent.

Againe, I answer, that if wee take it in the tente of Scripture, it is true, that God justifieth a wicked man. For S. Paul saith, Rom. 4. 5. To him that worketh not, but beleeveth in him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted to him for righteousnesse. See, God justifieth the ungodly: but how? even as we heard before; not him that is ungodly after, but afore he be justified: him that by nature, and in himselfe is ungodly, God justifieth by working in him faith and repentance: by which, of an ungodly man hee is made a man justified and sanctified.

Their last objection is; If a sinner be righteous by Christs righteousnesse, then Christ is a sinner by his sinne: for there is the same reason of both. But Christ is no sinner, but the holy of holyest; and S. Paul saith, Hee knew no sinne, 2 Cor. 5. 21. and himselfe for himselfe challengeth his enemies, which of you can reprove mee of sinne? If then our sinnes cannot make him a sinner, no more can his righteousnesse make us righteous.

I answer: Here wee grant all, if they speake the words of the Scripture, in the sense of the Scripture: for Christ was a true and reputed sinner, in the sight of Gods justice, as hee that becomes surety for another is a debter in his roome, or as he that undertakes for a man, bodie for bodie, must answer for him, his owne body for his: so in all reason and justice, Christ though he had no sinnes of his owne, yet being our surety, and undertaking for us, and standing in our stead, our sinnes are justly accounted his. And as for these places, and many more like, they are all understood of personall sinnes: from all which, and the least contagion thereof, hee was perfectly free. And therefore the same place that saith, Hee knew no sinnes, (that is, in and for his owne person, knew not what sinne was,) saith also, that for us and in our stead, hee was made even sinne it selfe, that wee might bee made the righteousnesse of God in him. Thus Christ, in himselfe more righteous than all men and Angels, in our stead is a reputed sinner: and by the same reason we (most unrighteous in our selves) are clothed with Christs righteousnesse, and thereby are reputed righteous. And as Christ, (though no sinner in himselfe) by being a sinner in our stead, and having our sinnes imputed unto him, became subject to the wrath of God, and bare it even to death it selfe; so we, though not righteous of our selves, yet having Christs righteousnesse imputed unto us, are made therby partakers of Gods love: and for the worthinesse of that righteousnesse of his, so made ours, shall be glorified in heaven. And thus now at last wee have found that true, and that onely righteousnesse, which can make a man as it did Noah, righteous in Gods sight. Now it remaines to make use of it.

First, here we learne how foulely our nature is defiled with sinne, and stained with corruption: the staine whereof cannot be washed away with all the water in the world: no, nor with the bloud of all creatures: no, nor covered with the righteousnesse of all men and Angels, but onely with the righteousnesse of God. And that Sonne of God also, if he will apply that righteousnesse unto us, and make it effectuall, must become man, and live, and die, and rise again for us. A marvellous thing is it, and worthy of our often consideration; that all the Angels and men in the world, cannot make one sinner righteous; but that Gods sonne must needs doe it: And that our sinnes are so hideous, as that nothing can hide the filthinesse thereof, from the eyes of Gods justice, but onely the glorious mercy seat of Christs righteousnesse. This may therfore teach us, how to esteeme of our selves, and our owne natures.

Furthermore: See here the great goodnesse of God to man. God put perfect legall righteousnesse in Adams heart in his creation; he received it for himselfe and us, and lost it for himselfe and us. God in mercy purposing to restore man, thus by himselfe lost and cast away gives him another, and a better righteousnesse than before. But because he saw man was so ill a keeper of his owne jewels; hee trusts not him with it, but sets that righteousnesse in the person of Jesus Christ, and commits it to him to keepe. Who as hee truly knowes the full value and excellency thereof, and as he dearely loves us; so hee will most safely keepe it for us, and cloath us with it in his Fathers presence at the last day. A point of unspeakable comfort to Gods children, to consider that their salvation is not in their owne keeping, where it might againe bee lost; but in a safe hand, where they shall bee sure to finde and have it, when they have most need of it: and to remember that their righteousnesse being in Christ, they cannot lose it. For though they sinne, and so lose often the comfort of a good conscience for a time: yet they then lose not their righteousnesse, which is then in Christ; and to consider, that when in this world they sustain losses or injuries, or lose all they have upon earth; that yet their righteousnesse (the riches of their soule) is then in heaven full safe in Christs keeping, and shall never bee lost. This should make us learne to know Christ more and more, and to give him the love and affections of our very hearts, that so we may be able to say with blessed Paul, 2 Tim. 1. 12. I know whom I have believed, and I am perswaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day.

Lastly, if there be such a communion betwixt Christ and a believer, that our sinnes are made his, and his righteousnesse made ours; this may teach us patience, and minister us comfort in all outward afflictions, or inward temptations; because it is certaine all our sufferings are his, and hee is touched with all the wrongs done to us. When hee was in heaven, he cals to Saul, Acts 9. 4. Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? and at the last day, Matth. 25. 45. Whatsoever either good or evil was done to any of his children, hee saith, was done to himselfe: and accordingly it shall be rewarded as done to him.

And thus we have taught that true righteousnesse, which justifies a sinner, and made Noah righteous: and we see the use of that worthy doctrine. And in this first point wee have the longer insisted, because it is one of the fundamentall points of Christian religion.

Hitherto of the first point, namely, what that righteousnesse is, which is here spoken of.

The second point to bee considered in these words is, that this righteousnesse is that righteousnesse, which is by faith.

It is so called, because faith is the proper instrument created in the soule of man by the holy Ghost, to apprehend that righteousnesse, which is in the person of Christ; nor can it bee any wayes else either apprehended or applyed: and therefore it is worthily called that righteousnesse which is by faith: that is, which by faith is made a mans owne, or whereunto a man hath title by his faith. Here therefore two points offer themselves to our observation:

1. That true faith apprehends properly this true righteousnesse.

2. That only faith can doe it.

For the first, it is proved by apparant evidences of Scripture: S. Paul tels the Galatians (3. 14.) They received the promise of the Spirit by faith. And S. John saith, that as many as received Christ, to them he gave power to be called the sonnes of God. And left any man should thinke that to receive Christ, is not to believe in Christ: he addeth, even to as many as believe in his name. John 1. 12. and therefore faith is fitly compared to a hand that takes hold on a garment, and applyeth it to the body, being naked: or to a beggers hand that takes or receives a Kings almes: so faith in a mans soule takes hold on Christs righteousnesse, (which is the mercifull and liberall almes of the King of heaven) and applyeth it to the poore and naked soule of the believer.

If any man aske, how can faith apply Christ to the believer? I answer: as a man, being in his corrupt nature, hath nothing to doe with Christ; so contrariwise, when the holy Ghost hath wrought faith in his heart by a supernaturall operation: then wee are to know, that as faith is the proper instrument to apprehend Christ; so is Christ and his righteousnesse the proper object for faith to worke upon. For though it apprehend and apply all other promises which God makes to our soules or bodies; yet most properly and principally, and in the first place, it apprehends the promise of salvation, and the righteousnesse of Christ. Now for the particular manner, how faith doth thus; we are to know, that though it be spirituall and invisible, and not so easily expressed to sense, yet is it done as properly by faith, as a garment is by the hand taken and applyed to the body, or a plaister to a sore.

If any aske further; But when may a man know, whether his faith have apprehended and applyed Christs righteousnesse to his soule, or no?

I answer: when hee beleeveth particularly, that Christs righteousnesse is his righteousnesse, and hath reconciled him to God, and absolved him in Gods presence, then doth faith worke his true and proper worke: for this cannot bee done but by faith; and where faith is, this must needs be done.

The second point is, that faith alone, and no other vertue, nor spirituall power in mans soule is able to doe this. And this may bee proved by comparing it with all the principal vertues of the soule; for amongst all there are none that may come into comparison with faith, but hope and love: both which, especially love, have their severall and speciall excellencies: yet have neither of them, nor both of them this vertue to apprehend and apply Christs righteousnesse. This property of love, nor to exercise it selfe, and with it selfe to carry many passions or affections of the heart, and to place them upon the thing that is loved: yet cannot love bee said properly to apprehend Christ: for he must needs be apprehended, before he can be loved. And the proper action of hope is to wait and expect for a blessing to come: so hope waits for salvation, but properly apprehends it not. For salvation must first bee believed, and then hoped or expected; so saith Jeremies, Lament. 3. 26. It is good both to trust and to wait for the salvation of the Lord: to trust, that is, to believe assuredly it will come (there is the action of faith) and to wait till it doe come (that is the action of hope.) Thus wee see the severall natures, and actions of these two worthy vertues. But the proper action of faith is, to apprehend and lay hold on Christ, and his righteousnesse, and to apply them to a mans owne soule: and and that being done, then come Love and Hope, and do their duties: And so, though love last longer than faith doth, yet faith is afore love, and makes the way for it.

To conclude this second point: Faith is a hand to take hold on Christ and his benefits: Love is a hand to give out tokens of faith both to God and man: For (1 Cor. 13. 5.) Love seeketh not her owne, but others good: namely, the good of them that are loved. Hope is an eye looking out, and waiting for the good things promised. So that, as faith is the hand of the soule; so love is the hand, and hope is the eye of faith; Love the hand whereby it worketh, and Hope the eye whereby it waiteth and looketh for the performance of such things, as faith hath apprehended and beleeved. If the Church of Rome thinke this any wrong to this holy vertue of love, to be the hand of faith; let them know it is not ours, it is the doctrine of the Apostle, where he saith, Faith worketh by love. If faith worke by it then surely love is the hand of faith. Thus faith worketh by love, waiteth by hope, but beleeveth by it selfe.

And for this cause, the righteousnesse, that makes us righteous before God, is rather called the righteousnes of faith, than of any other Christian vertue, or grace of the spirit. And for the same cause is it, that often in Saint Pauls Epistles, it is called by the same name, as, Philip. 3. 9.

The third and last point concerning Noahs faith is, that Noah was made heire of this righteousnesse.

A speciall commendation of his faith: It made him heire of true and saving righteousnesse: that is, it gave him a true title unto it, and made him heire-apparant of that glorie, which it affureth every one that apprehends it by this true faith: and so he was made as certainly, and as truly partaker of it, as the young Prince is affured of his Crowne and Kingdome at his time; or the heire of his Fathers lands.

Here two most worthie doctrines doe offer themselves to our view:

1. The excellencie of faith.

2. The excellencie of a Christian mans estate.

The excellencie of faith appeares thus: It makes an holy man assured and certaine of his salvation by Christ Jesus. The Church of Rome saith it is presumption in any man to thinke so, unlesse he have an extraordinary revelation: but wee learne from the Scripture, if a man have true faith, that is able to assure him of salvation. For faith makes him an heire of true righteousnesse, and of salvation thereby. Now we know, the heire is most sure and certaine of his inheritance; what ever he gets or loseth, he is sure of that. But this righteousnes and salvation by it, is his inheritance; therefore thee may bee, and is by faith assured of it. The Papists therefore doe wrong unto this doctrine, and derogate from the dignitie of true faith: But this is their custome, they will extoll any thing, rather than that which the holy Scripture so much extolleth; namely, true faith. For, if they knew what it is truly to know Christ, and to beleeve in him by that faith, which worketh by love, they would then know, that faith makes a man heire of happinesse, and therefore most assured of it.

Secondly, here we may see the excellencie of a Christian mans estate: hee is not naked, nor destitute of comfort; but is heire of a glorious inheritance, by means of his faith: and a Christian mans inheritance, is Christs righteousnesse. Out of which, we learne;

First, that no man by any good works done by or in himselfe, can merit true and satisfying righteousnesse. The Pharisiticall Papists teach it; but their conceit is here overthrowne, by the doctrine of the holy Ghost. For living righteousnesse is his inheritance: which we know, is alwaies gotten by the Father, and descends from the Father to the Sonne, as a free token of his love. And it were scornefull and absurd, to see a Sonne offer to buy his inheritance of his father; it being against the nature of an inheritance to come any other wayes, but by free gift from the Father to the Son: therefore our righteousnesse that must save us, being as we see here our inheritance: let us resolve of it, we cannot buy nor merit it.

Againe, here is sure and solide comfort against all the griefes, and crosses and losses of this world: Gods children must needs have their portion of afflictions in this life. But here is their comfort, they may lose their goods, livings, possessions, their good names, their healths, their lives; but their inheritance standeth sure and firme, and cannot bee lost. Let them therefore here learne, not to grieve out of measure: for a holy man may say thus to himselfe, and that most truly: My father may forsake me nee for my faults, and chastise mee for my sinnes; but I am sure he will not disinherite me: for I am heire, by faith, of Christs righteousnesse; and I may lose many things, but I shall not lose that.

Thirdly, and lastly, here must Gods children learne their duties. They are heires to a godly and glorious inheritance; and Christs righteousnesse is their inheritance, therefore they must learne to set and settle all their affections on this inheritance. For, there is nothing in the world more worthy to be affected, than a sure inheritance.

Wee must therefore first labour above all worldly things for this inheritance; namely, to be made partakers of this righteousnesse. This is that pearle, which we having found, must sell all we have to buy it. And when we have gotten it, we must care to keepe it, and therefore must lay it up in our very hearts and soules; and keeping it, we must rejoyce and delight in it above the world, and all the pleasures of it.

This is the glorious portion which our God and Father leaveth us as his children: what should all the care of our hearts be, but to preserve it? Naboth had a Vineyard, that came to him from his father by rich inheritance: Ahab the King would give him money, or a better vineyard for it; but Naboth would not: Nay (saith he) God forbid I should sell my Fathers inheritance, 1 King. 21. 3. &c. If he made such account of an earthly inheritance, what should we of the heavenly? if he of a poore vineyard, what should we of the glorie of heaven? If he denied the King, to sell it for a better, should not we denie the Devill, to leave our part in Christ and his righteousnesse, for the world, or any thing that he can promise us? In all such temptations our answer should be; God forbid I should sell away my inheritance, which my God and Father give mee. Thus did blessed Paul, who esteemed the world, and all in it dung and drosse, that he might winne Christ, and be made partaker of this righteousnesse. So must wee (if we will bee worthy of this inheritance) prize and value it above this world, and thinke basely of all the pompe and pleasures of this world, in comparison of it: and rather be content to lose the world, than to leave it.

And lastly, when we have it, and are thus carefull to preserve it; where should our content, joy and delight be, but in this our inheritance? So doth the heire: nothing so rejoyceth him, as to thinke of his inheritance. Here therefore the madnesse of carnall men is discovered, who rejoyce exceedingly in the honours, profits, and pleasures of this life (as swine in their bellies) and never goe further: But alas, this is not their inheritance, if they looke to have their soules saved. Therefore herein they shew themselves void of all grace, and of all hope of a better world. For if they had, they would rejoyce in it, and not in the vaine and transitorie delights of this world, which perish in the using, and are lost with more torment and vexation, than they were kept with delight. We must learne then to use this world, as though we used it not, 1 Cor. 7. 31. And if the Lord vouchsafe us any portion of pleasures in this world, wee must take it thankfully, as above our inheritance (and must therefore use it lawfully and soberly;) but have our hearts, and the joy of them upon our inheritance, which is in heaven, whereof we are made heires by faith; and wherein we are made heires with this blessed Noah, who was made heire of that righteousnesse, which is of faith.

And thus have we heard the most glorious commendation of Noahs faith: and of Noah by his faith, and of all the examples before the flood.

Now follow the second sort of Examples, namely, such as lived in the second world, after he flood.

They are all of two sorts: either such as lived afore the giving of the Law, or after.

Afore the giving of the Law, here are many: A whereof, as of all the other kinds, some are men, some women.

Abrahams faith.

The first of those blessed men after the flood, whose faith is here renowned, is Abraham that great Father: of whom, and whose faith, because he was a Father of so many faithfull, more is spoken than of any one.

ABRAHAMS Faith.

VERSE 8.

By faith Abraham, when hee was called, obeyed God, to goe out into a place, which hee should afterward receive for inheritance: and hee went out, not knowing whither hee should goe.

B

C Concerning holy Abraham, here are more examples than one recorded, and his faith is renowned many wayes: more verses are spent of him, than of some five others. And the reason is, because his faith was more excellent than any others that followed him. In which regard, he is called the Father of the faithfull, oftentimes in the new Testament, especially in the Epistles to the Romans and Galatians.

The first example of his faith (and the fourth in order of the whole) is of his leaving his owne native countrey, and how at Gods commandement he went he knew not whither; onely he knew God called him, and therefore he would goe: wherein appeared a most worthy faith.

Now concerning this his faith and obedience, the Text layeth downe two points:

D 1. The cause or ground thereof; which was Gods calling: he was called of God.

2. The fruit or effect of his faith; he hearkned and obeyed. And this his obedience is amplified by divers particulars:

1. The matter of it; he went out of his countrey.

2. The end; to take possession of a countrey, which hee should not enjoy of a long time.

3. The manner; hee went out, not knowing whither hee should goe.

The first point is the cause or ground of Abrahams faith in this action, and is laid downe in the first words:

By

By faith Abraham, when he was called.] A

This storie is taken out of Gen. 12. The cause of Abrahams faith, is Gods calling. Gods calling is an action of God, whereby he appointeth a man to some certaine condition, or state of life, in this world, or after this life. And in this regard, God is compared to a Generall in the field, which assigneth every Souldier his standing and dutie: so doth God appoint every man his place and dutie in the Church.

Concerning these callings, let us see the meanes how he calleth, and the severall states whereto he calleth men. For the meanes or manner; God calleth men two wayes: immediately, or by meanes.

Sometime immediately by himselfe and his owne voice: as, the extraordinarie Prophets in the old Testament, and the Apostles in the new. So saith S. Paul of himselfe, he was called to be an Apostle, not of men, nor by men, but by Iesus Christ, and God the Father, Gal. 1. 1.

Sometime mediatly by men directed by himselfe, and furnished, or inabled for that dutie: and so were called the ordinarie Prophets, and Priests of the old; and the Evangelists, Pastors, and Doctors of the new Testament. The first was extraordinary; this is ordinary: the first is for an unbeleeving, or misbeleeving people; the second is for an ordinarie and established Church. Now, of these two wayes, God called Abraham immediatly by himselfe from heaven. Gen. 12. 1

Secondly, for the estates of life whereunto God calleth men, they are three: Generall, Particular, Personall.

Gods generall calling is, whereby he calleth all men to repentance by the Gospell, and so to life eternall. Of this speaks the Apostle, Rom. 8. 30. Whom God predestinated, them also he called: and Rom. 11. 29. The calling of God is without repentance. Hereby he cals men in this life to the state of grace, and to the state of glory in heaven; and this is to all.

His particular calling is, when he calleth and assigneth men to some particular estate and dutie, in Family, Church, or Commonwealth: as when a man is called to be a Magistrate, Minister, master of a family, lawyer, physitian, &c.

Thirdly, God calleth some men to some private personall duty, which he deligneth not to others, but to be done by them alone. Such a calling had he assigned him, that would needs be perfect; Goe sell all that thou hast, &c. Matth. 19. 21

Now the calling of Abraham in this place, is to be referred to this third kinde. For it was a private and personall calling, to leave his country, his kinred, his lands, his possessions, and to goe seeke another: and to be the Father of the faithfull, and to receive the covenant: and this duty belongs to none, but who shall personally, and by name be called unto it.

Yet all these three callings may concurre in one, as here in him. For he was called to be a Christian (for the generall) and a governour of a great family (for the particular calling:) but that, that is in this place and chiefly, is their extraordinarie and personall calling, to leave his countrey. And in it wee are to consider three circumstances: 1. Who was called: 2. When: 3. How he was called.

For the first: Abraham was called, the sonne of Terah: but neither his father Terah, nor his brother Nahor were called, but Abraham only.

But it may worthily be demanded, why God should not call his father and his kynred: there can be no other answer but this: that the Apostle giveth, Rom. 9. 17. God hath mercie on whom he will, and whom he hardeth he doth whom he will. He calleth Isaac, and refuseth Ismael: loveth Iacob, and hateth Esau: taketh Abel, and leaveth Cain: even because he will, and for no cause that wee know. But why then cals he Abraham, and not his kinred? Is not this partialitie? I answer: he is tied to none, he might refuse all: therefore the marvell is, that he cals any. But why some and not other, why Abraham and not his kindred, no reason can be given: for Gods judgements are wonderfull. But as that is impossible with man, is possible with God: so that is injustice or partiality with man, is justice with God. And it is extreme folly, and intolerable presumption for us to weigh Gods actions in the balance of our shallow reason. Matth. 19.

For the second: But when was Abraham called? for the time, there are two circumstances worth the observation: First, Abraham was called to this dignitie, when he lived in idolatrie with his fathers. So saith Iosh. 24. 2. Your fathers dwelt beyond the flood in old time, even Terah the Father of Abraham and of Nahor, and served other gods. If Abraham was still a worshipper of God, when he was an idolater, then it was apparant, he had not purchased Gods favour by his workes. Where wee learne, that the whole worke of a mans salvation, is to be ascribed to Gods meere mercy: who (as the Prophet saith) was found of them that sought him not, Esa. 65. 1. Abraham never dreamed of the true God, nor of any new covenant of grace and salvation, when God called him. And so, when Paul was going armed with bloudie furie, and his furie armed with commissions and authority against the Saints, then God from heaven called him; and of a persecuter, made him the principall instrument of his glorie, Act. 9. 2, &c. Therefore (to apply this to our selves) if God have vouchsafed us the same grace, and taken us to be his people, and made a covenant of salvation with us, which in former times have beene strangers of the Gentiles; we must learne here to see whence this favour is, and therefore to ascribe nothing to our selves, but give all the glory to God. Gen. 12. 1 C

And particularly, for every one of us: if God have been so mercifull to any of us, as when we were popish or superstitious with our parents, or kindred, to open our eyes and bring us home to his holy truth: or when we were tred in wickednesse and sensualitie with the prophane world, to touch our hearts: and to call us to grace and sanctification: let us often remember and freely acknowledge this his undeserved mercie, and say with the holy Prophet, Vnto thee belongeth mercy, but vnto vs open shame.

Secondly, for the time when Abraham was called: It was when he was 75. yeares of age, or there-abouts, as is manifest in the Storie, Gen. 12.4. therefore we see that God for a long time let him lie in his blindnesse, and idolatry ere he called him. It is more than likely, that Abraham in that meane time lived civilly, and followed learning and other civil courses: and in that time, it is likely he attained to that measure of knowledge in Astronomie, and other learning, for which, he is renowned in old Writers: But this was the first time that he was called to know and serve the true God in his true service.

Here we learne, that though a man persevere in his sinnes, for a long time, and passe his best yeares in vanity without repentance, and thereby be in a grievous and fearefull estate; yet true beleevers, and men penitent, must not therefore judge them cast-awayes. For Gods mercie cals a man in his old age, and toucheth the heart when it pleaseth him. Christ in the Parable calls some at the 11. houre, Matth. 20.6. and so God calleth men to grace in their old age. We must therefore spare these sharpe and unsavourie censures, which some unadvisedly cast upon such men; for charity thinketh not evill, 1 Corinth. 13.5. where it may thinke or suppose any possibilitie of good: but contrariwise pray for them, and hope of their conversions, because we know, that at what time soever a sinner repents of his sinne, God will forgive him.

And yet for all this, men must not presume to live carelessly in their sins, for that is desperately to tempt God: but must follow the holy Counsell of Salomon, Eccles. 12.1. To remember their Creator in the dayes of their youth: and to turne unto God, when they have meanes, lest God take away the means, and with the means his favour from them. Abraham was not called, till he was old; but when he was called, he hearkened and obeyed: So must thou when God cals thee by afflictions, or by his word, then answer and obey as Abraham did; or else Abrahams calling in his old age, will be little comfort to thee. Thus much for the time.

Thirdly, for the manner of his calling, it is laid downe in the Storie of Genesis, to be in an earnest kinde of Counsell, Goe out, saith God, from thy kinred, and from thy Fathers house, unto the land that I will shew thee: Where it is to be observed, he saith not barely Goe, or come forth; but hee ampifieth, and urgeth it with many words and circumstances.

If any aske why God did so, when he might have given the commandement in one word? I answer, the reason is, that Abraham might have cause more seriously to consider of Gods calling, and to imprint it more deeply in his heart; lest at the first brunt hee should have obeyed, and afterward have shrunke backe. For it is doubtlesse, that this calling was harsh to reason, and therefore it were dangerous hee would have started backe after some triall of these difficulties he must passe thorow, if hee had had but a bare call, and commandement to goe. But when God saith to him, Goe out of thy native Country, let it not stay thee, that thou wast borne there; nor hinder thee, that thy kinred dwels there: but leave all and come with me: forsake all, and trust me, follow me into the land that I will shew thee: I take thee from one, but I will give thee another. When God, I say, useth all these, and it may be, many more like words to Abraham, it is apparant he would have him furnished with strength and resolution, to goe thorow with his calling, after hee had once made entrance into it.

Out of which practice of God, we learne this Instruction; that God would have no man enter upon any calling or dutie, with a fearefull and faint heart, nor with a doubtfull minde; but with a strong and settled resolution to goe thorow-stitch with it, and not to relent and repent in the midst. And for this end, God would have all men afore they enter, seriously to consider the place or duty they are to undertake; for the Lord had rather a man should refuse at the first, than having entred to looke backe againe; and it is great folly for men, hastily and suddenly, or humorously to cast themselves upon any calling, and then upon triall and experience of the dangers and difficulties thereof, to bee wearie, and wish they had never done it. Men in this world are generally wiser in matters of the world: if a man be to build a house, he will not forth-with set upon building such a house as his humour desireth, but will first of all sit downe and count the cost, and then his owne abilitie, to see if the one will countervaile the other, else he never begins it. So saith Christ, (the wisdome of God) of the wisdome of this world: and the like also he saith for warre, that no Prince wil fight with his enemy on unequall termes, but will know himselfe able to sustaine the encounter, Luk. 14.28,31.

So the calling of a Christian, is to professe the Gospell of Christ. As the Magistrates is to defend it, the Ministers to teach it, so all mens to professe it: now it is as impossible to build without cost, or to fight without power of men, as to professe Christ in any calling, either generall or particular, without crosses. Wee must therefore consider first, what our calling and profession will cost us: it is sure to cost us a dangering of our credits and estimation in the world; it may bee our goods, our liberties; it may bee our lives themselves. Againe, what enemies wee have to encounter in this spirituall warrefare, the devill, death, hell, sin, corruption, and the crafty malice of wicked men: all these we are sure to meet withall.

Were

Abrahams faith.

Heb. 11. 8.

Abrahams faith.

were it not then folly for a man to undertake this profession, and not to consider thus much aforehand? the want of this is cause, why some put their hands to the plough, and after shrinke away, and make themselves ridiculous to their enemies corporall and spirituall.

And for particular callings, the case even standeth so also. Some men thinke the calling of a Magistrate, a place of honour: and therefore ambitiously plot and desire to raise themselves into authoritie; never remembring the burthen, and trouble they are sure to finde. Which when they feele to bee too heavie for their lazie shoulders to beare with ease, they sowly fall to plaine carelessnesse, and neglect all doing good in their places, and wish they had never bought honour so deere.

So others thinke the Ministerie nothing, but a place of ease, exemption, and preferment. And in these conceits, rush presumptuously and rashly into that holy state, never thinking aforehand of that great charge of soules they are to take, nor of that heavy account they are to make for them; nor of the hatred, and contempt, and extreme disgraces they are sure to finde, if they doe their duties with conscience. And therefore (when upon experience they finde it so to be) they either fall to carnall courses with the world, and neglect their duties, (that by these two meanes they may please the world) or else they continue in their duties, with much grieefe and vexation, wishing they had chosen rather any calling, than the Ministerie: and by either of both, doe expose themselves to shame and much rebuke. Whereas contrariwise, hee that aforehand casts his account what it will cost him to be a Minister, what he must undertake, what he must lose, what he is sure to finde, is so settled and resolved aforehand, as hee goeth thorow all dangers and contempts, with comfort, courage, and contentment. Let us therefore all learne by this practice of God, when we thinke to enter upon any such dutie, to reason with our selves, as God did with Abraham, what wee are to forsake, and what wee are to meet withall. So shall wee not afterward repent us, but goe on with much assurance, as Abraham did.

This point I have the more inlarged, because it is of speciall use in Christian life.

Thus much of the cause of Abrahams faith, Gods calling, and all the circumstances therein.

The second point, is the excellencie and commendation thereof, commended by the fruits and effects: It made him yeeld to this calling of God. And this obedience of his faith, is spoken of two wayes:

1. It is laid downe generally; He obeyed God.
2. It is further commended by divers particulars, which we shall see in their places.

Obeyed God.]

Here is the obedience of Abrahams faith, laid down in one generall word: He obeyed; that is, when God called him to leave his Countrey, kindred, and friends, he yeelded against reason, because God bade him. When God told him he would carry him into another land, he believed it, and left a certaine for an uncertaine, a profession for an expectation, here was the power and excellencie of his faith appearing in this obedience. From hence we learne two instructions:

First, seeing Abraham is the Father of the faithfull, Rom. 4.11. and our glorie is to be children of faithfull Abraham;

Therefore we must all learne, as good children to follow our Father, in framing our lives according to Gods calling: when God calleth us to any state of life, then to obey; and when not God, but the world or our owne corrupt humours call us, then not to obey. For, to obey the first is the obedience of faith; but to obey the second is the obedience of our corruption. Therefore against this practice of holy Abraham, two sorts of men doe offend, and thereby shew themselves children unlike their Father Abraham.

First, such men as being called by God to some functions or duties, will not obey: for examples, wee have too many. To some, God saith, Leave thy private care, which is for none but thy selfe: be a Magistrate, and undertake the publike care of the common-wealth: but they, as though they were born for themselves, will not imploy themselves in publike service.

To some God saith, Leave thy ease, and thy care of worldly credit, and undertake the teaching of my people, and care not for the contempt of that calling, so thou maist save soules: but their carnall credit is more deare unto them than Abraham kinred is to him; they will not forsake them.

These and all that doe so, may make what shew they will: but they are not children of Abraham, seeing they want his faith: and they want his faith, because they faile in his obedience: they must therefore learne to yeeld when God calleth, and not to stand upon such base allegations of worldly matters: when Abraham left Country and kinred to obey God.

Secondly, such men as respect not Gods calling, but looke what the swinge of their natures or the course of the wicked world carrie them unto, they presently yeeld and obey, not regarding whether it bee Gods calling or no. Three sorts of men are most faulty in this kind:

First, such as are content to grow in wealth, either by oppression, as usurie or extortion; or by craft and dissembling, or by any other such indirect course, whereby their brother is hurt; looking onely at gaine, but not regarding whence it comes.

Secondly, such as live by dicing, carding, or by playes and Enterludes, thinking any trade lawfull that brings in wealth, or that gets money; never caring whether God allow the calling or no.

Thirdly, such as live in no calling, but spend their time in eating, drinking, sleeping, and sporting, because because they have livings of their owne, and lands left by their parents.

All these and all such like, doe obey indeed: but whereunto? not unto Gods calling: for else, hee never exhibited to these courses, but hath often recalled them from it; therefore this is the obedience not of faith, but of corruption, and of the world, which is a plaine disobedience unto God. For, as the wisdome of the flesh, or the world is foolishnesse with God, Rom. 8. so obedience to the flesh or the world, is disobedience and rebellion against God.

All such men must know that they are not the children of Abraham, because they are not children of his faith. Nor can they bee heires of his faith, because they practise not his obedience for Gods calling, and no other rule for our lives must Christians men admit. When hee calleth, they must obey: and when he calls not, or allowes not a course of gaining, or a trade of life, (though all the world allowed it) we must not follow it: this will honour them and their profession before God. Abrahams faith justifieth him before God, but his obedience justifieth his faith: Obedience, saith Samuel, 1 Sam. 25. 22, 23. is better then sacrifice: but disobedience is as the sinne of witchcraft. Therefore let all Christians approve their faith by their obedience, hanging on Gods mouth, and attending on Gods calling, for directions of their whole life: and resolve with David, Psal. 119. 105. Thy Word is a lanthorne to my feet, and a light to my paths. When Kings may not live, but by the light of Gods calling and Gods Word; it is shamefull presumption, for ordinary men to frame their lives by lights of their owne making.

B

In the second place out of Abrahams obedience, let us marke, By what meanes obeyed he? by faith. Learne here the true nature of true faith: it brings forth true obedience where ever it is: and therefore Christian obedience is called the obedience of faith, Rom. 1. 5. And these two cannot be separated, no more than light from the sunne, or heat from fire. For as the sunne naturally and necessarily gives light, and the fire heat; no lesse doth true faith yeeld true obedience to Gods Commandements. Which being so, it reacheth us, for the use,

First, how our Church and doctrine are slandered by the Papists who please themselves in saying, We looke to be saved by sole faith, and without workes. For we teach, that though a man be justified without respect to his workes, yet no man was ever justified; whose faith did not bring forth good and holy workes: and we teach, that none is heire of Abrahams faith, which is not allowed his obedience. Therefore God will reward their lying tongue.

Secondly, this teacheth us, that Abrahams faith is rare in these dayes. Many make profession of Abrahams religion, but it seemes they are as far deceived as the Jewes were, Joh. 8. 9. They would have Abrahams children, because they were of his flesh: and men now will bee so, because they are of his profession; but both are farre wide, for we must be children of faithfull Abraham. But if we will be like him in faith, we must be like him in obedience also: when God calls us to any duty, we must forsake our owne natures, and denie our owne affections, and crosse our owne corruptions, to follow Gods calling, and to doe our duties. So shall we bee true children of Abraham, when we are like our Father in his best vertues. Thus we see his obedience layed downe generally.

Particularly, In his Obedience there are laid downe three points:

1. The matter } Call which are laid
2. The end } downe directly in the
3. The manner } Text.

For the matter of his obedience, it followeth in these words: To goe out into a place, &c.

The particular matter wherein Abrahams obedience consisted, was this; At Gods commandement he went out of his owne country into another: for one which he should inherit, he left that which he did inherit.

Here many points of good instruction may be learned:

First, see here the power and strength of true faith; It was a wonderfull hard thing for Abraham to doe.

For first, he was well stricken in yeares, 75. yeares old. Young men delight to be stirring: but men growne into yeares, doe love to settle themselves as birds in their nests: and it is grievous unto them to thinke of removing, or taking long journies.

Secondly, he must leave his owne Country, where he was bred, borne, and brought up: which all men generally doe love by nature.

Thirdly, he must leave his goods, and lands, and livings, which no doubt were great: for having lived so long in his native Countrey, and being borne as he was, his estate doubtlesse was very great.

Fourthly, he must leave his acquaintance, with which he had lived all his life-time, his own kindred, and must goe live amongst strangers. These foure considerations were so many hindrances to this obedience, and strong temptations, to make him have looked backward: but such is the power of his faith, he is commanded of God, therefore he obeyeth and goeth out.

The use is, to teach us what a faith we have. For, if we measure all Gods Commandements by our naturall affections, our faith is but a shadow and hypocrisie: but if we conferre not with flesh & bloud, but rest, and rely on Gods word, and give absolute obedience to his commandements, then our faith is such as Abrahams was.

In the next place: Some may marvell, why the Lord should command him so hard a matter, and lay so great a commandement upon him, as to leave his Country, and kindred, which seemed unreasonable; and his journey, which was unnaturall.

I answer: the reason is, not that God delighteth in unreasonable or unnaturall courses, or in laying heavy burthens upon his children. But he did it for good and holy ends: as,

A

First; to prove Abraham, and to see what was in him. As a friend is not tried in ordinary, but in great matters; so it is knowne, who is Gods friend in matters of difficultie. Hereby, therefore God made the faith and obedience of his servant, to shine more gloriously.

Againe, to breake the corruption of his heart: for our wicked natures love peace, and ease, and welfare, and hearts desire: but God will crosse those courses, and send us troubles many wayes, that so hee may pull downe the heighth of our corruptions, and humble us to his owne hand.

The use is to teach us to make true use of our afflictions, and of those many hard crosses that must fall upon us in our course of serving God; namely, to know that they are sent from God, not as a hard-hearted or cruel Judge; but as a wise and merciful Father, who wisheth our good, and who wil so blesse unto us the hardest and heaviest crosses, that befall us in our lives (if we receive them in patience and faith) that we shall say with David, Psal. 119. 71. It is good for us that we have beene in trouble: for thereby wee have learned to know God, and our selves better.

Thirdly, whereas Abraham at Gods commandement goeth out of his own country into another we learne, that it is not unlawfull for a Christian man, to goe out of his owne country, and travell into another, and there to abide for some, or for a long time: provided, his causes be good and just, as namely, these which follow;

C

First, if he have a particular commandement of God: as here Abraham had.

Secondly, if he have a lawfull calling of the Church or State, whereof he is a member: as if hee bee sent to a generall Councell: or bee sent as Ambassador, either to stay for a time, or to stay there as Leiger.

Thirdly, if it be for the safety of his life in a good cause. So Moses, Exod. 2. 14, 15. fled into the Land of Midian, and there stayed when Pharaoh sought his life: And Christ himselfe fled with his father & mother into Ægypt; from the fury of Herod, Matth. 1. The like may bee said for them, that to preserve their liberty, fly from the cruelty of their creditors, who will not take honest and reasonable satisfaction, of a surety for another man; or of a childe for the Fathers debts: But in no case for them, who travell in purpose to defeat their Creditors, or thereby to deliver themselves from payment of their due debts, being able to pay. Of both these wee have example in David, and his followers. David himselfe was faine to flie for his life from Sauls unjust cruelty, and therefore went and dweit amongst the Philistims, 1 Sam. 27. 1, 2. and 1 Sam. 22. 2. there came to David such as were in trouble, & in debt, & these were with him in his travel, and perfections. Now doubtlesse had they beene ungodly men (who had not cared how they came into debt, nor how they paid it) David would never have beene their Prince; as the Text saith he was.

Fourthly, if it be for the maintenance of pure religion, and keeping a good conscience. This hath Christs warranty, Matthew 10. 23. when they persecute you in one citty, flie into another. For this cause many of our fore-fathers, in the former age, were faine to flie into Germany, Switzerland, and to Geneva. And for these causes divers of other Nations doe repaire to this Nation, and are here entertained.

Fifthly, if it be for the getting, or increasing of any good learning, and lawfull knowledge; especially divine knowledge for matter of religion. Thus the Queene of Saba went out of the inmost parts of Africa, to Jerusalem in Asia, to see and heare Salomon: 2 King. 10. and for that cause, she is highly commended by Christ himselfe, Matth. 12. 42. Thus may young men travell for learning or the tongues, especially such as intend thereby to fit themselves for publ: lic service, so it be with safety of religion, and securitie of conscience.

Sixthly, if it bee for the practice of a mans lawfull calling, as for trafficke; and thus Merchants may, and doe lawfully travell in all nations, and have their factors there resident, provided they lose not their soules, to gaine for their bodies: their travelling is allowed by Christ in the Parable, where hee saith, The Kingdome of heaven is like a Merchant man that seeketh goodly pearles, Matth. 13. 45.

Seventhly, if it be to receive and take possession of any goods or lands, lawfully descended or fallen unto a man in another Nation, as sometime it doth: This seemes to bee allowed by Christ in the Parable, where hee saith, A certaine Nobleman went into a far country, to receive for himselfe a kingdome, and so to come again. Luke 19. 12.

In a word; if it be upon any good and sufficient cause, allowable in good reason, & not contrary to any part of Gods word. But as for such as leave their Countries, and travell into other:

Either upon levities, to see strange sights and fashions: Or being malefactors, flye from their due punishment: Or being in debt, goe away to deceive their Creditors: Or being vaine-glorious, to make themselves knowne: Or being at enmity, to fight combats, or to kill their enemy;

All these and all such like, can have no comfort in their travels: for they send themselves, God sent them not; they are out of Gods protection, because they goe without his warrant. And as many of them as goe away to escape the hand of the Magistrate, let them bee assured they shall not escape the hand of God.

In the fourth place, here is a comfort for all such as are banished from their owne native Countries, for God and his Gospels sake. For, here Abraham the Prince of Patriarchs, was a banished man, and lived in a strange Countrey, the greater part of all his life. Let such men therefore take patiently what God hath given them: for it is not their misery or mishap alone, but hath been common to Gods children in all ages. Againe, Christ himselfe pronounceth them blessed, who suffer persecution for righteousnesse sake: for though they bee exiles from their owne kingdome, or toiled up and downe the kingdomes of the earth, yet theirs is the kingdome of heaven, Matth. 5. 10.

Lastly, though this commandement was personally directed to Abraham, and concernes not us as it did him: yet it hath his force and use even to us. For, though wee are not to goe out of our Countrey, and leave our livings and habitations: yet we must doe that that is proportionable hereunto. That which is commanded to Salomons wife, is to all Christians; Hearken, O daughter, and consider, melne thine eare, forget thine owne kindred, and thy fathers house: so shall the King take pleasure in thy beauty. This wife of Salomon is the soule of every Christian, the spouse of Christ, the true Salomon, who by nature is daughter to heathen Pharaoh, that is, to sinne, corruption, and wrath: but being married to Christ, must forget her owne kindred and fathers house, that is, their owne nature and naturall affections, and carnall desires: and then shall Christ our King, and spirituall husband, take pleasure in us, and rejoice to doe us good. And this is the chiefe travelling of all, and most acceptable to God, when a man goeth out of himselfe, and denieth his owne desires to obey God, and to serve Iesus Christ.

Thus wee see the matter of his obedience. Now followeth the end.

Which he should after receive for inheritance.

The second particular in his obedience is the end, why hee went out of his owne Countrey, to inherit another, that is, the land of Canaan, called elsewhere the Land of Promise, because God promised it unto him, and to his seed. Now Abraham at Gods Commandement, went out of his owne native Countrey into this place, to inherit it, and to take possession of it.

But it may be objected, Hee inherited it not: yea, furthermore Stephen saith, Acts 7. 4. God brought him in, but gave him no inheritance in it, no not the breadth of a foot.

I answer, though Abraham did not inherit it personally himselfe, yet he may be said to inherit it two wayes:

1. Sacramentally, or Mystically:
2. In his posterity.

First, Sacramentally thus; the land of Canaan is to be understood, not onely as a Country of Asia, fruitfull and fertill, and plentifull of all good things, wherein the onely visible Church was contained till Christs comming. But further, as a Type of the heavenly Canaan, where the triumphant Church reignes in glory with God. And thus Abraham did in his owne person inherit it: for he was translated from this world, after his death, into the glory of heaven. And in that respect, the glory of heaven is rather called the bosome of Abraham, Luke 16. than of any other the Patriarchs, both for the excellency of his faith, as also for that the promise of inheriting the land of Canaan, was first of all (personally) made to him: which because he enjoyed not, hee was recompenced with the fruition of the true Canaan.

From hence, wee learne a notable doctrine; That God in performing of his promises, giveth not oftentimes the very particular thing promised, but something equivalent, or proportionable to it, or else better. Thus in the fifth commandement, obedient children are promised by God long life, as a reward for honouring their Parents. Now when he takes them away in their best age, as he did Iosiah, 2 Kin. 22. 20. he giveth them eternall life; which is not onely proportionable, but farre exceeding the thing promised: So here, he promiseth Abraham the land of Canaan; but when it comes to the performance, he gives him a better, even the true Canaan, the Kingdome of heaven.

The use hereof, is to teach us wisdome for the true discerning of Gods mercifull performance of his promises: for he performeth them not alwayes one way unto his children: sometime hee giveth the particular thing promised, as unto the children of Israel, their deliverance out of Ægypt: unto Hezekiah, the restoring of his health, and such like. Sometime hee giveth not it, but something which shall be as good, or better unto his children: as when they are in some great danger, and crave deliverance, or in some necessity, and have promise of supply. God oftentimes delivereth them not, but gives them patience, and feeling of his favour in such sort, as is many degrees more comfortable unto them. And herein God heareth their prayers, and performeth his promise to them, to their full contentation.

Secondly, Abraham inherited Canaan in his posterity. For though God promised it to himselfe, when hee was 75. yeares old, Genes. 12. 4. and to him and to his seed, Gen. 15. 7. yet neither hee, nor his immediate seed enjoyed it, but his posterity the Israelites 430. yeares after the promise, as S. Paul proveth, Galat. 3. 17. And so Abraham inherited it in his posterity, which is a part of him; and they inherited it many hundreth yeares, even untill the comming of Christ.

As afore wee learned, that God in the performance of his promises, giveth not alwayes the thing promised: so here let us learne that he doth not alwayes performe them to the same parties, and yet most truly performeth them. If therefore God doth not to our selves, nor in our times accomplish his promises, or prophecies, we must not be impatient, but waite in patience. For as the Prophet saith, The vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the last it shall breake and not lie: though it tary, waite for it; it shall surely come, and shall not stay, Hab. 2. 3. To this end David also most divinely saith, Psal. 97. 11. Light is sowen for the righteous, and joy for the upright in heart. See, light and joy belongs unto them: but how? It is sowen, that is, it is in hope and expectation, and not alwaies in fruition. Therefore as the husbandman casts his seed into the earth, and is content to stay almost a full yeare without it, or any profit of it, and yet is patient all that while, because he is sure it will come, and bring increase with it: So must we wait patiently on the Lord, and know that whatsoever he hath promised, wee or ours after us, shall be sure to enjoy it. And though wee doe not, what great matter is it, if our children doe? For, we know, that oftentimes the Father soweth, and dieth ere the harvest, and so the sonne reapeth. So for Gods great and gracious promises, which are sowen unto the Fathers; if themselves doe not, their children are sure to reape the comfortable harvest of performance. And thus we see how Abraham inherited the land of Canaan, which is called the land of Promise, because it was so long, and so often promised to so many great Patriarkes.

In the second place, it is to bee observed, when God promised this unto Abraham: even then when the land of Canaan was possessed by many mighty Kings: So that it may be here further doubted, how Abraham could take any comfort in this promise, seeing it was at that day held by almost 40. Kings greater and lesse, as wee may see in Iosh. Chap. 10. 11, 12. and further, The people were many, and strong: the Cities were well walled, and full of huge Gyants, Numb. 13. 28, 29. Yet for all this, he not onely beleeves and obeyeth; but as God promised, so hee went to it, and took possession, and dyed in this faith, that God would performe his promise, and that his posterity should inherit it all, as afterward indeed they did, even from Moses to Christ. If it be asked how this could bee: the answer is, That Abraham knew that God was King of Kings, and had the world, and Kingdomes of the world in his hand and disposition: and therefore assured himselfe, that hee could bring to passe what he had promised, and make good his word, notwithstanding all such impediments to the contrary. And as he beleeved, it came to passe; his posterity came to it, entred as conquerors, upon this gift of God: and by the power of God, so amazed all these Kings and their people, as some submitted, as the Gibeonites; and they that did not, were all slaine, and their Countreys conquered, as we may reade at large in the book of Iosua: all the stories wherof are briefly comprehended by David in few words, where he saith, Wee have heard with our eares, our fathers have told us, how thou O Lord, drove out the heathen with thy hand, and planted them in: how thou destroyed the people, and made them grow, Psal. 44. 1, 2.

Out of which, we learne two instructions:

First, that the change of States, and alteration of Kingdomes or commonwealths, are in Gods hand: and that he can turne them one way, or other, as it pleaseth him. To this purpose, saith David, in the fore-named Psalme, They inherited not the land by their owne sword, neither did their owne arme save them: but thy right hand, and thy arme, and the light of thy countenance, because thou didst favour them.

This must teach us to pray earnestly, in our daily prayers, for the good estate of this Kingdome, wherein wee live; and of that worthy Prince and Queene, under whose government we have beene so long, and so liberally blessed. For the welfare and prosperity, the certainty and security of it and her, is not in our policy, might, munition, ships: nor in the strength of our navie, nor in the power of our armour, nor in the chivalry of our people, nor in the wisdome of our Councell (though for all these we are a people honoured of our friends, and feared of our enemies:) but in the mighty hand of our God, who (as David saith) beareth rule over the kingdomes of the earth, and giveth them to whomsoever he will, Dan. 4. 22.
